India has put forward a solution. Her own standard of values is signified by the status in society given to the various classes of people. The lowest are the parasites whose existence depends on the destruction of others. Economic Imperialism is of this order. Then come the predatory creatures who consume without production. To be "drunk like a lord" cannot be an ideal with us. The aristocrats belong to this group. The next in order is the economic group—the Vaishyas. But money does not occupy the pivotal place. The upper two groups are public servants, the Kshatriyas to look after the people's needs and the Brahmins to be the custodians of culture. With this standard of values India reached out to the remotest parts of the world carrying light and learning. This was a cultural penetration which led to peace and harmony amongst nations.

Under this scheme of things, self-indulgence was not the goal of life. When we emphasize indulgences the order is based on pleasures and rights. This ultimately leads to conflict and violence. If, on the other hand, we emphasize duties, life comes under the control of self-discipline and our wants are restricted. This is the basis of civilization. We have to give the highest place in society to the service of the needy. By so doing we eschew violence and our influence over others is based, not on fear, but on the appreciation of our service. This is the power India had once and can have even today. It is one of mutual regard and respect and will lead to the fusion of cultures and world peace.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

FROM RUBBISH TO GOLD

Having settled down to a kisan's life for the purpose of understanding the problems of the villager, I have come to one definite conclusion, and that is that manure-making is one of the most important things we have got to tackle. The ordinary peasant makes no effort to prepare manure. Cow-dung and small amount of rubbish are just thrown in a heap without any attempt to mix them together. The heap may be in a pit or on the level ground. During the monsoon it is left exposed to the rain and rots to some extent, after which it is scattered (and that unevenly) on the fields. In this way the minimum results are obtained from the material at hand.

The absence of manure in Indian villages is always ascribed to the fact that the major portion of the cow-dung is used for fuel. But even without drawing on the fuel supply, double the cow-dung could be collected to what is at present gathered up for manure. Much of it gets trampled into the ground under the feet of the tethered cattle, and still more is left about on the grazing grounds. If all this were saved, and the rubbish which eternally lies about in the farm-yards and village lanes were regularly gathered up and the two mixed properly together, more than double the present quantity of manure would be produced, and its quality would be far superior.

To tackle the production of this farm-yard manure is a more urgent job than the setting up of big factories for manufacturing artificial fertilizers. Artificial manure needs big outlay in capital, machinery and experts, and for a long time it will reach only a very limited number of our seven lakhs of villages. It also requires careful application, whereas the farm-yard manure needs no outlay of any kind. The materials are lying there waiting to be gathered up, the peasant with his ordinary tools can do all the work and throughout the world farm-yard manure is acknowledged as the all round best and safest.

In Kisan Ashram I have started experiments in the simplest possible methods of manure making.

I am not yet able to give exact figures and timings as the work is in its initial stages, but the procedure I am at present trying out is on the following lines: A shallow pit is dug 2 ft. deep, 22 ft. long, and 10 ft. broad, (the length and breadth can be varied according to the daily amount of stuff to be handled). Each day grass, leaves and other light rubbish is collected and heaped near the edge of the pit; cow-dung and horse droppings are collected and heaped separately next to the rubbish. At the end of the day rubbish is spread in a thin layer over a little less than half the bottom of the pit, and on top of that a thin layer of dung, broken up and sprinkled by hand. Thus one layer on top of another is spread according to the amount of material collected during the day. The last layer is always rubbish so as to protect the dung from sun and wind. Every third day water is poured on the layers sufficient to saturate them. When the half pit is full, the manure is covered with a thin layer of earth and left for six to eight weeks, after which it is drawn to the other half of the pit. Care is taken to cut away the layers in thin vertical slices. When the manure is laid out thus in the other half of the pit, it is again saturated with water and covered with earth. After another six to eight weeks the manure is examined, and, if it is sufficiently disintegrated, it is removed from the pit, piled on the ground and covered over with earth, ready for use when needed, otherwise it is drawn once more across the pit as described above. During the rains a roof should be put over the pit.

It will be difficult enough to induce the peasant to do even this much in his present untrained mental state. Anything more complicated would probably fail. But this method gives promise of being quite efficacious.

For obtaining full statistics in this kind of work variations in the method of production should be tried out, and two or three years of crop results should be studied. But I have put the matter forward without waiting to show these statistics, because all those of us who are interested in such work should be co-operating in our efforts and sharing our ideas and reports of results. As soon as the new Provincial Governments begin to function, this is a matter which their Agricultural Departments should take up without delay, and it is for us to be ready to come to their assistance with these simple, practical methods.

One reads of simple indigenous methods of manure-making in China where, from time immemorial they seem to have practised the art. And one hears also that the Chinese peasant gets four times the yield from his soil to what the Indian peasant does. At the same time the villages in China are swept clean, because everything in the way of rubbish is put into the manure pit. Here in India our villages are littered with debris from one year's end to another. All this rubbish can be turned into gold if we will but use it in the right way.

Kisan Ashram, Bahadrapad,

14-2-46

MIRABEHN

HARIJAN

March 10

1946

CONFLICT OF IDEAS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"She was unable to understand Gandhiji calling upon R. I. N. ratings to resign if their condition was humiliating. If they did that they would have to give up their only means of livelihood. Moreover, they were fighting for principles. If they resigned now there would be hundreds in these days of unemployment to take their places who would be subject to the same discrimination and treatment and the R. I. N. ratings would not have achieved anything. It simply does not lie in the mouth of Congressmen who were themselves going to the legislatures to ask the ratings to give up their jobs. It does not help the cause of the country at all."

Every one of the statements quoted above from Arunabehn's press interview is contrary to the views generally held by or attributed to Congressmen. Whether she really holds or does not hold the views put into her mouth is irrelevant here. For the moment it is enough to examine them on their merits and to show that they are wholly inconsistent with Congress resolutions.

The first principle of non-violent action as propounded in the Congress resolution of 1920 at its special session in Calcutta under the late Lala Lajpatrai is that of non-cooperation with everything humiliating. It must be remembered that the R. I. N. was founded not for the benefit of the ruled. The men went with their eyes open. Discrimination stares one in the face. It cannot be avoided if one enters the service which is frankly organized to keep India under subjection. One may, one ought to, try to mend the conditions. That is possible only up to a point. That cannot be achieved through mutiny. Mutiny may conceivably succeed but the success can only avail the mutineers and their kin, not the whole of India. And the lesson would be a bad inheritance. Discipline will be at least as necessary under Swaraj as it is now. India under successful mutineers would be cut up into warring factions exhausted by internecine strife.

India of the Congress has made little headway in the appreciation of the fight for Swaraj, if it is true that hundreds would take their places if the present ratings resigned in pursuance of their campaign against humiliation. Can we have Swaraj for the masses if we are so degraded that hundreds of us are ready to swallow humiliation even to the extent of taking the places of humiliated fellow-men? The very thought is unworthy of Congressmen and that too at the moment when Swaraj is believed to be within sight.

Those who hold that enlistment in the R. I. N. is their only means of livelihood must have a very poor opinion of them. A soldier's is a hard life. He is disciplined to work in co-operation and trained to work with the pickaxe and the spade. Such a one will disdain to think that apart from soldiering he has no means of livelihood. We have a poor opinion of soldiers, if we think that they cannot earn their bread by the sweat of the brow. A labourer is any day worthy of his hire. What is, however, true is that a soldier out of his calling will lack the glamour and the amenities provided for him. We have wasted precious twentyfive years if we have not yet stripped the profession of killing and destroying of the thick coat of varnish that has covered it for so long.

Aruna Asaf Ali has been reported to have said that the ratings would have gained nothing by resigning. Well, they would have gained honour and dignity if they had manfully given up their job and taught the citizens of Bombay the way to save honour and dignity, and they would have spared Bombay the senseless destruction of life, property and very precious foodstuffs. Surely this would have been an achievement not quite beneath notice.

The last statement in the reported interview is surely a confusion of thought. Congressmen going to the legislatures for conserving the honour and liberty of the country is not the same as ratings serving for their livelihood with the possibility of being used against their own countrymen and their liberty. Congressmen who go to the legislatures are representatives elected by their voters and they go even if it is only to prevent those from going who will misrepresent the voters. Going to the legislatures may be altogether bad, but there can be no such comparison as has been just adverted to.

Poona, 3-3-'46

WEEKLY LETTER

FRUITS OF VIOLENCE

"Look at Italy," said Gandhiji the other day to a friend who would have independence at all costs. "Garibaldi was a great man. He brought deliverance to Italy. And Mussolini did make her look great. But where is she today? Look at Japan, look at Germany. The very violence which brought them to the pinnacle of power has razed them to the ground. And has not the atom bomb proved the futility of all violence? And yet we are crazy enough to think that we can win Swaraj by breaking a few skulls and destroying property which, after all is said and done, is our own." Needless to say that all these happenings have filled him with unspeakable anguish. But he is an irrepressible optimist. "I am sure, out of this orgy of violence the people will learn the lesson of non-violence," he remarked. The sense of oppression and misery that he feels at what is happening is so great that only his unquenchable faith in the God of Truth and Non-violence could sustain him.

THE STARK REALITY

Drums and music and the display of banners serve in the army to camouflage the horror and bestiality of war. Let not patriotic sentiment blind us to the stark realities of the Bombay happenings. Here is an eye witness' account of what took place in one part of Bombay on the 22nd February:

"Bombay is the scene of a death dance today." I have just returned from our hospital. Never have I seen such carnage and bloodshed. One used to read in books about 'rivers of blood'. Well, I have seen that sight with my own eyes this time. Bodies of the dead and wounded, Hindus and Muslims, ranging from old men and women to two-year old infants are lying pell-mell in our casualty office. Every student in our hostel and the entire nursing staff had their hands more than full. Could not something be done to stop this senseless orgy involving the murder of so many innocents? The bowels of some have gushed out. Others have received bullet wounds in the chest. Amputation of hands and feet had to be done in the case of still others. The sight of it makes one shudder. It is now nearly 9 p. m.. Things have quietened down somewhat. There was firing in the street before our college at about six in the evening. A male nurse who worked in our hospital has been wounded. British soldiers go on firing indiscriminately from moving lorries.

"I was assisting in the operation theatre. The combined odour of blood and dead bodies nearly made me feel giddy. One hears tales of popular rowdyism too. The actual rowdies however seem to escape scot-free. . . .

"I have once again been to our hospital from where I have just returned. The number of the dead has mounted to 56. The condition of many more is serious."

THE BETTER WAY

Several army men have been to Gandhiji's camp during the week to seek advice. One of them saw Gandhiji. He was deeply agitated. The men were getting desperate, he said. Would Gandhiji ask them to lie low and swallow all the humiliations and injustice?

"No," replied Gandhiji. "But, as you know, I stand for unadulterated non-violent action and open means. I abhor secrecy."

The visitor felt puzzled. What place could non-violence have in the fighting ranks as a means of redress, he wondered.

"I laid down a programme of non-violent action in my 7th of August '42 speech in the A. I. C. C. for looking and organizing the highest non-violence and self-sacrifice that the country was capable of," remarked Gandhiji. "I told in that speech what the press should do, what the students should do, what the princes should do, what the Government servants should do, and lastly what the Indian soldiers should do. If all of them had done their part as suggested by me, it would have had a staggering effect. That programme can still be acted upon. The soldiers should declare that they will do soldiering not for their bellies but to make India free and to keep her free. I do not want them to be disloyal to the Government in whose pay they are, for, if they are disloyal to the present Government today, by the same token they may be disloyal to the national government tomorrow. But it is no disloyalty for a soldier to go and tell his superiors that he will be their man only so long as they stand for his country's freedom and that he would never bear arms to crush the liberty of his own people. If as a result of their declaration they were disbanded, cashiered or even court-martialled, they should not mind. Thereby they would light a spark which not all the armaments at the disposal of any power would be able to put out and before long the entire Indian Army would be filled with the spirit of patriotism without having to shed blood. If, on the contrary, they resorted to indiscipline and violence or rowdyism they would alienate all sympathy and provide the authorities an excuse to teach them a lesson."

"My brain was muddled, when I came here," replied the visitor. "I now see things more clearly. You have saved us from a big mistake. We shall take no precipitate or thoughtless step."

STRAWS IN THE WIND

Typical of the deep heart-searching that is going on in the mind of many a Britisher at present is the following from the letter of an army man to Gandhiji:

"Many of us, conscripted soldiers, have the welfare of your country at heart. So much so, that we have taken the only opportunity we have, to show practically, our feelings. This has been in the form of letters to our members of Parliament in which we have stressed the urgency for an immediate all out action towards the solution of the problem that is with us today. So far as we are able to make recommendations we have said that the only solution is immediate handing over of your country to you, its people, and a request that you be asked to use every available means to implement the very right 'Quit India' proposal.

"Another point I raised with my M. P. was this. What is my position as a soldier of H. M. Forces, if I am called upon to take up arms against people I love? I intimated that I should refuse to do so, as I shall if ever anyone is so misguided as to issue an order to that effect. I also asked that suitable steps should be taken to see that our position was clarified. We did not come into this army to fight an imperialist war, and I for one won't.

"There is impatience—and rightly so—and the outbreaks of rioting are signs of it. Such outbreaks I feel sure are ill advised and will do nothing but alienate sympathy from the rightness of the cause. I sincerely hope that reason and forbearance will be brought to bear on those responsible so that no general precipitation of mob rule will ensue.

"I may have exceeded any rights I have in writing as I have done, but if there is attendant risk, I am quite prepared for it. I do, at least, feel I have expressed honestly what I feel as a man with some humanity in my heart. Also, it may help you to know that you have many of us, here, and in England, wishing you god-speed. . . . There seems so very little one can do alone in a practical way to help, but wherever this is possible, I should be only too pleased to identify myself with anybody militating towards a speedy and peaceful end to problems, which though not of my making, are here I feel, because of us, and so in some measure I admit responsibility for them."

Poona, 3-3-'46

PYARELAL

WHAT, AFTER FINISHING STUDIES?

( By M. K. Gandhi )

Q. A student has seriously posed this question: "What am I to do after finishing my studies?"

A. We are today a subject race and our educational system has been devised to serve the interests of our rulers. But even as the most selfish person is obliged to hold out some lure to those whom he is out to exploit, so a number of temptations for studying in their institutions have been brought into being by the rulers. Moreover, all members of Government are not alike. There are some liberal minded among them who will consider the problem of education on merits. Therefore, there is no doubt some good even in the present system. But the prevailing education is willy-nilly put to wrong use, i. e., it is looked upon as a means of earning money and position.

The ancient aphorism, 'Education is that which liberates', is as true today as it was before. Education here does not mean mere spiritual knowledge nor does liberation signify only spiritual liberation after death. Knowledge includes all training that is useful for the service of mankind and liberation means freedom from all manner of servitude even in the present life. Servitude is of two kinds: slavery to domination from outside and to one's own artificial needs. The knowledge acquired in the pursuit of this ideal alone constitutes true study.

Realizing that a form of education devised by foreign rulers could only be calculated to subserve their interests, the Congress accepted in 1920, among other things, the principle of the boycott of all Governmental educational institutions. But that era seems to be over. The demand for entrance to Government institutions and those imparting education on similar lines is increasing faster than the number of such schools and colleges. The ranks of examinees are ever swelling. In spite of this hypnotic spell, however, I hold that true education is what I have defined.

A student who is superficially attracted by the educational ideal set forth by me and leaves his studies is liable to repent of his action later. I have, therefore, suggested a safer course. While continuing his studies in the institution which he has joined he should ever keep before him the ideal of service set forth by me and use his studies with a view to serve that ideal, never for making money. Moreover, he should try to make up the lack in the present education by application of his leisure hours to the ideal. He will, therefore, avail himself to the utmost of whatever opportunity offers for taking part in the constructive programme.

Poona, 1-3-'46

( From Harijanbandhu )

NOTICE

Agents will please note that it is not open to them to charge more than the published price for copies of Harijan, and a breach of the rule will lead to the cancellation of their agency. Purchasers are requested to co-operate by refusing to pay more than the published price, and to report to us if extra price is asked for.

A specimen copy will be supplied on receipt of postal stamps worth three annas.

MANAGER

WAYS AND MEANS

Ever since Gandhiji has turned his own and public attention to finding out ways and means of averting the food crisis which faces the country, suggestions have been pouring in on him. Many of these he has already embodied in his statements to the press and articles in 'Harijan'. Here are some more that merit the attention of the authorities where the remedy lies in their hands and of the general public so far as practical co-operation on their part is concerned.

1. Lakhs of acres of fertile black cotton soil — 4 lakhs in Guntur, 6 lakhs in Krishna and Godavari districts, 10 lakhs in the Circars, 20 lakhs in other parts — are being used for the growing of Virginia tobacco. Inasmuch as tobacco and its use is to be condemned as harmful for man, it is a golden opportunity for the owners of these lands to give up its cultivation or restrict it and devote these fertile areas to growing food and fodder crops.

2. The shelled and dried cocoanut, commonly known as copra is extensively used for commercial purposes for manufacturing toilet articles such as cocoanut and other scented oils, soaps etc.. Copra may be preserved for a long time without any difficulty and may be used as a supplementary nutritive diet. It contains a high percentage of good quality vegetable fat as well as minerals and vitamins. The main producing areas are Cochin and Travancore and there are, of course, big interests behind the cocoanut oil industry.

3. A Poona friend sends two samples of jowar. 'A' is which the villagers harvested in their fields last season and which was taken away from them under the compulsory levy scheme by Government officials, the producer being paid at the rate of Rs. 6/- per Bengal maund of 40 seers. 'B' is of what these same villagers who were compulsorily dispossessed of their produce of 'A' a few months before are now compelled, in order to avoid starvation, to take at Rs. 10/- per maund! This, if true, is a glaring example of the inefficiency, shortsightedness and utter indifference of the official world to the needs and welfare of the poor. Surely local needs should be assessed accurately before exporting a single grain of foodstuffs from any area.

4. From Bihar a friend draws Gandhiji's attention to mahura which is an edible commodity but which is also largely used for the manufacture of country liquor. If this latter use were to be drastically cut down, mahura could not only supplement the food ration of the villager but would also "cause compulsory saving by labour (in most cases amounting to 25% of their total earnings) and thereby enable them to purchase more milk, vegetables, eggs, etc.". Mahura can also be utilized for replacing a good portion of the grain consumed by cattle.

5. The manufacture of alcoholic drinks prepared from grains should be stopped immediately.

6. The supply of rice and maize to starch factories should be stopped or curtailed for the time being.

7. A Punjab friend opines that in wheat-growing districts several hundred maunds of unripe wheat crop is daily being consumed by cattle in the shape of green fodder. 200-300 maunds of this unripe wheat would amount to 5000-7500 maunds of grain if allowed to ripen. The friend suggests a scale of rationing of grains for cattle as for men and substitution for cattle of more green fodder in the shape of shattala, sarson, green vegetables and grass.

8. The manufacture of cakes, biscuits, pastries, fancy breads, sweetmeats, etc. in hotels and restaurants is a matter that needs investigation and curtailment.

9. Ceremonial feasts and parties must be stopped.

10. The question of rice has already been touched on by Shri Pyarelal but bears repetition. A correspondent from Dinajpur writes that 30,000 maunds of broken rice are lying and being wasted in the mills there. It may not be sold in the market, whereas, if released, it could feed thousands of hungry mouths. The writer suggests that an inquiry should be held to reveal how much rice Bengal produces, how much is purchased by Government from the mills and what use is made of it, how much broken rice is lying all over the province and whether Government will allow this to be handed over to a food distribution committee specially appointed for the purpose.

11. Professor Ranga fears that while every effort has been made to assure rations of food to the urban people, very little, if any, thought has been given to assure similar rations for the rural areas. He suggests:

(a) Sufficient remuneration to the peasant for food crops so as to wean him from cultivating commercial crops. The peasant is being starved of clothing, kerosene oil, fuel and other oils. Remunerative prices for foodgrains without the mediation of middlemen would alleviate his distress. Consumers' goods should be made available to him on a system of rationing and a systematic and equitable exchange of agricultural produce for these should be worked out and enforced.

(b) Adequate supply to him at reasonable rates of agricultural implements.

(c) Healthy competition between householders, kisans and villages as to the maximum per capita production and minimum per capita consumption. Those who produce more may be paid more and may have a greater supply of consumers' goods allotted to them.

(d) Every scrap of unoccupied but cultivable land may be placed at the disposal of individual landless peasants or their co-operative societies on condition that they grow only food crops.

(e) Foodgrain producers should be persuaded to keep only their annual requirements with them, the remainder to be put at the disposal of village panchayats who will see what is needed by non-foodgrain producers and landless labourers and wisely store and distribute the same.

(f) All surplus foodgrains should be at the disposal of district authorities for distribution elsewhere.

There should be a procurement, distribution and rationing authority entrusted with the important task of equitably distributing available foodstuffs.

(g) Rural folk must be persuaded to postpone marriages and other ceremonials, or, at any rate, minimize consumption and wastage of food on such occasions by celebrating them in a communal manner.

(h) Communal feeding centres for artisans and others at low prices will minimize food wastage.

(i) Grain storage may have to be built up for every fifty villages or every taluk in order to ensure timely and adequate supplies of foodgrains to any villages in that or in neighbouring areas whenever a sudden food shortage occurs.

(j) Iron must be placed at the disposal of every taluk and village panchayat and iron bands for carts must be given priority so that bullock carts may be at the disposal of the food distribution and procurement authorities for transport purposes.

(k) Military motor lorries must be requisitioned for transport whenever necessary and railway authorities must be prepared to run special trains when urgently needed to do so.

(l) Rural folk need a more liberal allowance of food than townsmen.

(m) Wastage of water must be stopped and wells sunk wherever needed. Repairs of existing tanks and wells should be the duty of Government.

(n) Forest and other green leaf manure has to be gathered, conserved and transported where required. Freight rates for such transportation should be lowered. The supply of manure to kisans is an important one and should be given to panchayats or kisan organizations for equitable distribution.

(o) Cultivation of root crops which can be raised three or four times in the year should be encouraged.

(p) Paddy must be husked by hand and thus the quantity of rice can be increased by at least 10%.

(q) If provincial and district authorities were to take up the task of allowing their grain and pulses to germinate in the scientific manner it may be possible to increase the total quantity of nourishment that can be got of foodgrains by 15 to 25%.

12. Cattle rearing must be encouraged. A friend from Guntur writes that while his is a district famous for good milch cattle such as the Ongole cow, good breeds are being exported daily for military and slaughter purposes.

13. The use of the military, in particular those who are being now demobilized, has been recommended for various types of service in the present crisis. A correspondent says that there is a wide and fertile rice growing valley running from Kalyan to Karjat. Thousands of acres of good land bordering ample water flowing into the sea lies uncultivated from November to June. The water could easily be canalized or wells dug further afield. Obviously rice growers are too poor to do this, but if crops can be grown without detriment to the paddy, why should not Government put several regiments of Indian engineers or other troops on to this task?

This is probably applicable to many other portions of this vast land.

14. Finally, there is the usual and universal complaint against hoarding and black-marketing. The best way to eliminate the black market is for the rich to abstain from going there. Will they? Violence is in the very air we breathe today. But violence does not consist only of murder, loot, arson and destruction of property. Greed, selfishness, exploitation, bribery and corruption are subtler and therefore more potent forms of violence. Mob fury abates or can be controlled by superior violence but the latter continue as a canker and eat into the very vitals of society. This can be eliminated by a vigorous public opinion and a true appraisal of moral values.

Poona, 2-3-'46

A. K.

WHOSE NEED?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The institution of domestic servants is an old one. But the attitude of master towards servant has changed from time to time. Some regard servants as members of the family whereas others look upon them as slaves or chattels. Between these two extreme views may be summed up the attitude of society in general towards servants. Nowadays servants are in great demand everywhere. They have become conscious of their value and naturally demand their own conditions of pay and service. This would be proper if it were invariably coupled with a proper understanding and performance of their duty. In that event they would cease to be servants and would earn for themselves the status of members of the family. The belief in the efficacy of violence is, however, in the air. How then can servants properly win the status of members of their masters' families? That is a question that may well be asked.

I hold that a man who desires the co-operation of and wishes to co-operate with others should not be dependent on servants. If anyone has to have one at a time of scarcity of servants, he will have to pay what is demanded and accept all other conditions with the result that he will, instead of being master, become the servant of his employee. This is good for neither the master nor the servant. But if what an individual seeks is not slavery but the co-operation of a fellow being he will not only serve himself but also him whose co-operation he needs. Through the extension of this principle a man's family will become coterminous with the world and his attitude towards his fellow beings will also undergo a corresponding change. There is no other way of reaching the desired consummation.

He who wants to act on this principle will be content to start with small beginnings. In spite of a man's ability to command the co-operation of thousands he must have sufficient self-restraint and self-respect in him to enable him to stand alone. Such a person will never dream of looking on any person as his menial and try to keep him under subjugation. In fact he will forget altogether that he is master of his servants and will try his best to bring them to his level. In other words he should be content to do without what others cannot have.

Poona, 1-3-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

EXAMINATIONS IN HINDUSTANI

Sjt. S. N. Agarwal, Secretary, Hindustani Prachar Sabha, Wardha, has made the following announcement:

The Hindustani Prachar Sabha has decided to conduct examinations in Hindustani. The final degree examination will be held by the Central Organization at Wardha. The preliminary examinations will be conducted by the Provincial Organizations. The provinces of Gujarat and Bombay have already commenced holding these examinations. The Central Organization will also conduct examinations for the non-Hindustani speaking provinces, barring these two and the four South Indian provinces.

The date for the next examinations has been fixed for 25th September 1946. The syllabuses and the rules for these examinations can be had from the Hindustani Prachar Sabha, Wardha. Those who want centres for the Hindustani Prachar examinations to be opened at a particular place should write to the Examinations Secretary, Hindustani Prachar Sabha, Wardha and obtain from him the written forms and other information relating to the opening of such centres.

It is hoped that all lovers of Rashtrabhasha, men as well as women, will avail themselves in their numbers of the opportunity of taking these examinations.

CONTENTS	PAGE
TO AGENTS ... J. DESAI	33
NON-VIOLENT INDIA AS
WORLD POWER ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	34
FROM RUBBISH TO GOLD ... MIRABEHN	35
CONFLICT OF IDEAS ... M. K. GANDHI	36
WEEKLY LETTER ... PYARELAL	36
WHAT, AFTER FINISHING
STUDIES? ... M. K. GANDHI	38
WAYS AND MEANS ... A. K.	38
WHOSE NEED? ... M. K. GANDHI	40
EXAMINATIONS IN
HINDUSTANI ... S. N. AGARWAL	40
NOTES:
A USEFUL PAMPHLET ... M. K. G.	33
HELPFUL SUGGESTIONS ... M. K. G.	33
UTILIZATION OF
AVAILABLE POWER ... M. K. G.	33

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 6]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, MARCH 17, 1946

[ TWO ANNAS

HIGH-HANDEDNESS EXPOSED

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The Bombay High Court has just delivered an illuminating judgment, allowing two habeas corpus applications of H. K. Shah and B. E. Sathe against detention orders extended from time to time. Chief Justice Stone and Justice Lokur have delivered a considered judgment setting at liberty the two applicants who were evidently illegally detained and might have remained under detention but for the fact that Advocate Purushottam Trikumdas assisted them to bring their cases before the Bombay High Court. I have just time to give below the few important extracts from the judgment.

After observing that the two affidavits filed by Mr. Simms, Home Secretary, Government of Bombay in relation to the two accused cannot be distinguished from each other except for the numbers at the tops, the learned judges go on to say: "In the case of Mr. Sathe, there is no suggestion in the reasons given that he assisted or supported any underground organization or organized anything underground, though it is suggested that, he assisted the activities of an organization, the object of which was to commit acts of sabotage, and even if it is to be presumed that such an organization would work underground, the very fact that these two affidavits of Mr. Simms are in identical terms, though they deal with the circumstances of two different cases, demonstrates a very casual approach to the grave responsibilities and duties, which devolve on every government servant charged with these wide powers of detention without trial.

"In Gokhale's case a full bench of this High Court had occasion to comment upon detention orders being made on cyclostile forms inappropriate to the facts of the particular case and it now appears that unless checked, the era of the cyclostiled affidavits is about to dawn. Even passing over such irregular features in Mr. Simms' affidavits as referring to an affidavit without stating whose affidavit it is he refers to, his affidavit does not even state that all the circumstances of the petitioner's case were fully considered before the extension orders of the 7th January, 1946, were made."

Commenting upon the further affidavit of Mr. Simms which he filed after declining to attend the court in order to submit himself to cross-examination the judges observe: "That is a very remarkable document for any one to file who has been given an opportunity by the court to attend the court in order to give viva voce evidence. It is even more remarkable by its omission than by what it says, for it leaves unchallenged the affidavits for the 22nd February of the two petitioners filed in answer to Mr. Simms' two affidavits which are in identical terms, and which the last affidavit seeks to amend." Referring to the extension orders, the learned judges go on to observe, "But once the original order has run its course, the legislature has provided certain safeguards for the protection of the persons detained. Before the six months expired, the person detained will have received the notice giving him the grounds for his detention, and he may have a representation under section 7. The extension order itself has to be made within thirty days immediately preceding the expiry of the previous order, and lastly, there is added to subjective satisfaction an objective test that the detaining authority shall have further considered all the circumstances of the case. In our opinion emphasis is to be placed on the word 'all' and the question at once arises what is the nature of all the circumstances which have to be considered. That must be a question of law."

Holding that the defence plea that the detaining authority had not considered all the circumstances of the case the judges observe:

"Mr. Purushottam Trikumdas advanced various heads of circumstances which he submits it is obligatory for the detaining authority to consider. In our opinion it is clear that such circumstances must include:

(1) A consideration of the matters and things which the detenu did or was suspected of doing when the original order was made.

(2) These matters and things must be considered in conjunction with and in the high light of the present state of affairs. That is to say, the state of affairs existing in India at the date when the proposed extension order is to be made.

(3) A consideration of any representation which the person detained may have made under section 7(4) had consideration of the person detained since his detention and the present state of his health.

"Turning again to the circumstances of the two cases before us, having given the whole position our careful consideration we are not prepared to accept the affidavits of Mr. Simms filed on either of these petitions as affording any reliable answer to the assertion of the petitioners that all the circumstances of their cases have not been considered in the light of the state of affairs current in India on the 7th January, 1946. On that date as the petitioners point out there was no successful prosecution of a war for the mass movement to hinder and the various committees of the Congress previously unlawful, had been legalized and the members of the Working Committee of the Congress Party and its leader had been released from detention. These are all circumstances which already ought to have been considered before the renewal orders of the 7th January, 1946 were made."

The judges then draw attention to the fact that Mr. Simms did not state that H. E. the Governor had considered the papers and agreed to the extension orders of 7-1-46 being made. The judges say: "It is extremely significant that His Excellency did not consider and agree to the making of these extension orders though he had considered and agreed to the making of all the orders in both the cases in 1944 and 1945. If he had done so when the orders of the 7th January, 1946 were made, it is inconceivable that Mr. Simms should not have stated that most important fact, which is bound to inspire confidence that any order which has been so considered and agreed to has been made after due care, attention and consideration." Therefore they hold that the two petitioners have "successfully challenged the two extension orders of the 7th of January as not being validly made, because, having regard to the facts stated by the petitioners it is impossible to come to the conclusion that the detaining authority complied with the objective test of having considered all the circumstances of the petitioners' cases. . . . That being so it is our clear duty to order their immediate release."

In my opinion the released men are entitled to damages for illegal detention. This, however, may be debatable. But there can be no doubt that all persons similarly detained, no matter in which province, should immediately be discharged without a doubt. There is no danger of the government being overturned by reason of the discharges.

Bombay, 13-3-'46

CONSTRUCTIVE WORK AND SAMAGRA GRAMASEVA

On the 29th of January Gandhiji was asked a few questions in the Constructive Workers' Conference at Madras. Two of those questions and their answers are given below:

Q. Can a worker who has taken up one item of constructive work dabble in others? Is it right for him to do so? If so how?

A. Constructive programme as it stands today is comprised of 18 items. The spinning wheel as the symbol of non-violence occupies the central place. So every worker must spin and know all about spinning. Supposing a worker takes up paper making as his main occupation and has to find his livelihood also through it, he won't have much time left for other things. But he will be able to render some other service to the villagers besides that which he renders through the spinning wheel and paper making. For instance, he can work for improving the sanitation of the place and render advice about the care of the sick when he cannot take up full responsibility for nursing them.

Supposing another worker decides to concentrate on the spinning wheel only and to find his livelihood also through that, he can do so. I have no doubt in my mind that the wheel can serve as the instrument of earning one's livelihood and at the same time enable the worker to render useful service to his neighbours. The thing is that every worker should decide for himself what will be his main activity besides the spinning wheel and what will be his subsidiary activities. Whatever he does, he should do intelligently and with knowledge. Thus, in order to ply the wheel intelligently, he should know all the processes that precede and succeed spinning. He should have full knowledge of the activities that he wishes to concentrate upon and have a general working knowledge about other items of the constructive programme. A student of astronomy cannot know astronomy without some knowledge of science in general. Similarly a worker cannot afford to be utterly ignorant about other items of constructive work.

Q. Please explain the meaning of Samagra Gramaseva of your conception. How can we fit ourselves for that?

A. The 18-fold Constructive Programme, includes Samagra Gramaseva. A Samagra Gramasevak must know everybody living in the village and render them such service as he can. That does not mean that the worker will be able to do everything single-handed. He will show them the way of helping themselves and procure for them such help and materials as they require. He will train up his own helpers. He will so win over the villagers that they will seek and follow his advice. Supposing I go and settle down in a village with a ghani (village oil press), I won't be an ordinary ghanchi (oil presser), earning 15-20 rupees a month. I will be a Mahatma ghanchi. I have used the word 'Mahatma' in fun but what I mean to say is that as a ghanchi I will become a model for the villagers to follow. I will be a ghanchi who knows the Gita and the Quran. I will be learned enough to teach their children. I may not be able to do so for lack of time. The villagers will come to me and ask me: "Please make arrangements for our children's education." I will tell them: "I can find you a teacher but you will have to bear the expenses." And they will be prepared to do so most willingly. I will teach them spinning and when they come and ask me for the services of a weaver, I will find them a weaver on the same terms as I found them a teacher. And the weaver will teach them how to weave their own cloth. I will inculcate in them the importance of hygiene and sanitation and when they come and ask me for a sweeper I will tell them: "I will be your sweeper and I will train you all in the job." This is my conception of Samagra Gramaseva. You may tell me that I will never find a ghanchi of this description in this age. Then I will say that we cannot hope to improve our villages in this age. Take the example of a ghanchi in Russia. After all the man who runs an oil mill is a ghanchi. He has money but his strength does not lie in his money. Real strength lies in knowledge. True knowledge gives a moral standing and moral strength. Everyone seeks the advice of such a man. Take the instance of Vinoba. He is a good ghanchi. You all know what he does and you can all follow his example according to your capacity.

(From Harijansevak)

S. N.

GANDHIJI'S PRESS STATEMENTS

I

The following letter from Gandhiji to the P. S. V. of 21-2-'46 and the latter's reply dated 29-2-'46 are released to the press by Gandhiji with the consent of His Excellency the Viceroy.

"Here are a few more suggestions to meet the food situation which have been sent me by friends.

"The Indian Army should be given this unique opportunity of doing constructive work. They can be moved about easily. They could therefore be sent to all such places where wells need to be dug most urgently.

"Regarding additional foods, fish has been mentioned. Fish abounds in the seas around the coast of India. The war is over; there are innumerable small and medium-sized vessels which were used for doing patrol and guard duties along our shores for the last five years. The R. I. N. could arrange about staffing these, with the Department of Fisheries giving all assistance. If everything and anything can be done during a war — why not a peace time war effort? Dry fish does even now form part of the normal diet of a great number of people who are very poor — that is when it is available and they can afford to buy it.

"All public gardens should immediately by law be made to start growing vegetables. Squads of army personnel should be put to work here too. People requiring extra labour to transform their ground or garden should also be able to obtain free help through this channel.

"The distribution of food should be through Co-operative Societies or similar organizations.

"All food parcels to friends or relatives in Britain or elsewhere abroad should be stopped as also the export of ground-nuts, oils, oil cakes, etc..

"All stocks of food-stuffs in the hands of the military should be released forthwith and no distinction should be made between military and civil ranks. In this connection I draw His Excellency's attention to the following A. P. I. message published in the Amrita Bazar Patrika of 11-2-'46.

Dacca, Feb. 8

It is learnt that huge quantities of decomposed alla are being destroyed for the last few days by throwing them into the river Shitalaksha at Narayanganj.

"The campaign against despondency and for growing more food will avail nothing, unless bribery which is going on as never before is stopped and honesty and straight dealing begin to pervade the Government ranks and the Public."

"Thank you for your letter of the 21st February making suggestions to meet the food situation. His Excellency, to whom I have shown your letter, is grateful to you for writing, and will have the various proposals examined where this has not been done already.

"2. Only a day or two ago His Excellency suggested to the Commander-in-Chief that it might be possible for the R.I.N. to assist with fishing. Recent events may make this difficult, but meanwhile His Excellency has initiated enquiries about the possibility of importing dried fish from Canada and Newfoundland, and also about the securing of suitable vessels and equipment so as to make a start with developing on modern lines the fisheries industry. Already the Army is doing a good deal in the Grow More Food campaign and is releasing machinery for digging wells, levelling ground, etc..

"3. In Delhi a considerable part of the Central Vista is to be ploughed up and the gardens of bungalows are to be used for growing vegetables on a larger scale. The sending of food parcels to friends or relatives outside India has been ordered to be stopped and an urgent examination is being undertaken of the question of exporting groundnuts, oil cakes, etc..

"4. Bribery and corruption is admitted to be one of the worst enemies of efficient food administration. This is also one of the most difficult to defeat. The detailed implementing of the controls is mainly in the hands of Provincial Governments, and perhaps the new Ministries may be able to achieve results in this direction."

Poona, 6-3-'46

II

Letters and wires continue to come to me seeking my aid in saving General Avari's life which seems now to be sinking. I know Gen. Avari. He is a lovable worker. But I know too that he is often improperly obstinate. The present occasion is a case in point. If a man however popular and great he may be, takes up an improper cause and fasts in defence of the impropriety, it is the duty of his friends (among whom I count myself), fellow workers and relatives to let him die rather than that an improper cause should triumph so that he may live. Fairest means cease to be fair when the end sought is unfair. Let me say once more where Gen. Avari's end is improper and unfair. He may be wholly right in his statement that a great wrong has been perpetrated by the Central Parliamentary Board of the Congress. But who can right the wrong? Not Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel as Gen. Avari tells me he can. He is but an individual, Sardar though he is. He has pronounced the decision of the Board. A judge cannot review his own judgment. The Sardar is out of the picture. The Central Board cannot, must not, review its own judgment. It has no authority. No institution can act capriciously in a well managed democracy. Gen. Avari and his friends have the right of appeal or review by the Working Committee, then the A. I. C. C., finally the Congress. This procedure may appear to him too long. It is not, unless he is fighting for an individual or individuals and not for a principle as he assures me he is doing. Time always runs in favour of the defence of a principle. If the general session of the Congress which is the highest tribunal for vindicating justice decides against Gen. Avari, he has to submit to its verdict. The Congress is the Panchayat. Like the king it can do no wrong. This is merely a necessary and legitimate conception for guidance in the observance of an infallible duty. In truth, however, decisions of human organizations in all climes have been sometimes found to be wrong. So it may be in the case under discussion. Then, but not till then, will Gen. Avari have in theory the right, if he chooses to exercise it, to stir public conscience into action by a fast to the finish. In practice, it will be ludicrous. For the principle behind such action can only euphemistically be so called. In democracy even pure men may unconsciously give wrong decisions. The remedy is more and purer education, greater awakening of the public and in such quickened atmosphere the rise of a number of public workers whose sole duty will be to speak, write and act so as to serve as bright examples for the public.

Now I hope the friends of Gen. Avari will understand me when I say that those who wrongly support him and his fast and thus encourage him will hasten Gen. Avari's death, not those who will not swerve from well-recognized canons of justice even for the sake of saving the life of an erring friend. Let justice triumph though the heavens weep.

Poona, 7-3-'46

HARIJAN

March 17

1946

MY CONFESSION AND CURE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

It is plain to me as it has become to some of my friends that I am incorrigible. I can learn only by my mistakes. I have just discovered myself making a mistake which I should never have made.

I have known Dr. Dinshah Mehta for a long time. He has dedicated his life solely to nature cure of his conception. His one ambition is to see a full-fledged nature cure university established in India. A university worth the name must be predominantly for the prevention and cure of the diseases of the poor villagers of India. No such university exists in the world. The Institutes in the West are designed more for the rich than the poor.

I feel that I know the method of nature cure for the villagers of India. Therefore I should at once have known that nature cure for the villagers could not be attempted in Poona city. But a Trust was made. Very sober Jehangirji Patel permitted himself to be a co-trustee with Dr. Mehta and me and I hastened to Poona to run for the poor, Dr. Mehta's erstwhile clinic which was designed for the rich. I suggested some drastic changes but last Monday the knowledge dawned upon me that I was a fool to think that I could ever hope to make an institute for the poor in a town. I realized that if I cared for the ailing poor I must go to them and not expect them to come to me. This is true of ordinary medicinal treatment. It is much more so of nature cure. How is a villager coming to Poona to understand and carry out my instructions to apply mud poultices, take sun cure, hip and friction sitz baths or certain foods cooked conservatively? He would expect me to give him a powder or a potion to swallow and be done with it. Nature cure connotes a way of life which has to be learnt; it is not a drug cure as we understand it. The treatment to be efficacious can, therefore, only take place in or near a man's cottage or house. It demands from its physician sympathy and patience and knowledge of human nature. When he has successfully practised in this manner in a village, or villages, when enough men and women have understood the secret of nature cure, a nucleus for a nature cure university is founded. It should not have required eleven days' special stay in the Institute to discover this simple truth that I did not need a huge building and all its attendant paraphernalia for my purpose. I do not know whether to laugh or weep over my folly. I laughed at it and made haste to undo the blunder. This confession completes the reparation.

I should like the reader to draw the moral that he should never take anything for gospel truth even if it comes from a Mahatma unless it appeals to both his head and heart. In the present case my folly is so patent that even if it had continued for some time very few, if any would have succumbed to it. The real villagers would not have come for relief to this Institute. But if the discovery had come too late it would have blasted my reputation for I would have lost in my own estimation. Nothing hurts a man more than the loss of self-respect. I do not know that now I deserve the confidence of my fellowmen. If I lose it I know that I shall have deserved the loss. To complete the story I must tell the reader that not a pice of the money earmarked for the poor ailing villagers has been spent on this abortive enterprise. What shape the present Institute will now take and where and how poor men's nature cure will be tried is no part of this confession. The result of the initial mistake must not, however, be an abandonment of the new pursuit that I have taken up in the so-called evening of my life. It must, on the contrary, be a clearer and more vigorous pursuit of the ideal of nature cure for the millions if such a thing is at all practicable. Possible it certainly is.

Poona, 6-3-'46

To Patients

Letters are being received in large numbers from patients wanting to be admitted to the Nature Cure Clinic at Poona. Let me inform them that no such facility exists at present. The standard of cleanliness that was intended to be introduced into the institution has not been reached. Work for the village people has not yet been started. So long as the preliminary adaptations are not complete nothing can be done. The patients have therefore to wait. Dr. Dinsha Mehta's Nature Cure Clinic at Bombay is no doubt there. He may open branches at Poona and Sinhadgad also. But since he has undertaken heavy responsibility in connection with the Nature Cure Trust all this may take time. For private patients the scale of his fees will continue as before.

Bombay, 12-3-'46

M. K. G.

NOTICE

Intimation of a change of address to be effective for the week should be received by Thursday. The subscriber number should always be given.

MANAGER

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. How can a person in the military do constructive work?

A. A military man who has any grit in him can take up spinning together with the anterior and posterior processes. He can go in for paper making or any other village craft during his leisure hours. Army men have plenty of leisure when they are not fighting. Even when there is fighting all are not engaged in it though they have to stand by ready. Thus they can learn all those activities which are being conducted for the freedom of India. They should learn the national language in the two scripts. All this study must be coupled with a burning love of freedom and the courage to stand true to one's conviction and to act accordingly even if one is left alone. In no way does this conflict with military discipline. I do not believe in indulging in indiscipline especially in military service. Nor is there any room in my scheme of things for secret activity. Adherence to these principles is the only correct course for an individual or a people.

Q. It is supposed to be a sign of ill breeding not to leave some food on one's plate after finishing a meal. The contrary is supposed to be the correct thing to do.

A. It passes my comprehension how such action can be tolerated, especially in the face of the threatened famine. I do not know the reason for this practice and it would be waste of time to enquire into it. I consider it to be a sign of vulgarity and lack of perspective to have more on one's plate than one requires. In the present time no one is really entitled to full meals. Waste would be a sign of callousness. On the other hand, I consider it good breeding and discrimination to leave one's plate clean of leavings. It saves too the time of those who wash up. It is thoughtful and correct before beginning a meal to remove what one considers excess from one's plate on to a clean plate. Hosts should be discriminating and have enough delicate regard to find out what their guests require in the way of food and then give them no more than what they want.

Q. Writing letters in blood and using blood for auspicious marks is becoming almost a fashion. Ought it not to be stopped?

A. To my mind this is a revolting practice. It causes no hurt to take a little blood from oneself. In these days, in particular, blood letting can be performed without the slightest pain or inconvenience. If too much is taken from him the donor experiences weakness. But to write or sign letters in one's own blood is neither bravery nor does it connote any sacrifice or suffering. It is nothing more or less than criminal folly and ought to be abjured. Not only that. It is a duty to stop it. The easiest way is for all leaders not to countenance such a vulgar and uncivilized practice.

Poona, 6-3-46

(From Harijanbandhu)

SATYAGRAHA IN FACE OF HOOLIGANISM

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A friend has gently posed the question as to what a Satyagrahi should do to prevent looting by goondas. If he had understood the secret of Satyagraha he would not have put it.

To lay down one's life, even alone, for what one considers to be right, is the very core of Satyagraha. More, no man can do. If a man is armed with a sword he might lop off a few heads but ultimately he must surrender to superior force or else die fighting. The sword of the Satyagrahi is love and the unshakable firmness that comes from it. He will regard as brothers the hundreds of goondas that confront him and instead of trying to kill them he will choose to die at their hands and thereby live.

This is straight and simple. But how can a solitary Satyagrahi succeed in the midst of a huge population? Hundreds of hooligans were let loose on the city of Bombay for arson and loot. A solitary Satyagrahi will be like a drop in the ocean. Thus argues the correspondent.

My reply is that a Satyagrahi may never run away from danger, irrespective of whether he is alone or in the company of many. He will have fully performed his duty if he dies fighting. The same holds good in armed warfare. It applies with greater force in Satyagraha. Moreover, the sacrifice of one will evoke the sacrifice of many and may possibly produce big results. There is always this possibility. But one must scrupulously avoid the temptation of a desire for results.

I believe that every man and woman should learn the art of self-defence in this age. This is done through arms in the West. Every adult man is conscripted for army training for a definite period. The training for Satyagraha is meant for all, irrespective of age or sex. The more important part of the training here is mental, not physical. There can be no compulsion in mental training. The surrounding atmosphere no doubt acts on the mind but that cannot justify compulsion.

It follows that shopkeepers, traders, mill-hands, labourers, farmers, clerks, in short, everyone ought to consider it his or her duty to get the necessary training in Satyagraha.

Satyagraha is always superior to armed resistance. This can only be effectively proved by demonstration, not by argument. It is the weapon that adorns the strong. It can never adorn the weak. By weak is meant the weak in mind and spirit, not in body. That limitation is a quality to be prized and not a defect to be deplored.

One ought also to understand one of its other limitations. It can never be used to defend a wrong cause.

Satyagraha brigades can be organized in every village and in every block of buildings in the cities. Each brigade should be composed of those persons who are well-known to the organizers. In this respect Satyagraha differs from armed defence. For the latter the State impresses the service of everybody. For a Satyagraha brigade only those are eligible who believe in ahimsa and satya. Therefore, an intimate knowledge of the persons enlisted is necessary for the organizers.

Poona, 6-3-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

FURTHER SUGGESTIONS FOR COMBATING FOOD SCARCITY

1. A friend from the South writes that the policy of the Madras Government is beneficial to neither producer nor consumer for the reason that middlemen take enormous profits at the cost of both. The District Collector appoints wholesale dealers who in turn appoint their own agents. For example, an agent purchases paddy at X village at Rs. 5-9-10 per maund of 32 Madras measures. This is taken to the wholesale dealer's godown four miles away. The same paddy is then returned to where it was produced and sold at Rs. 0-3-5 per Madras measure. The difference between cost and sale prices per maund is Rs. 1-3-6, 21.7% above cost price. All this after deducting cost of transport goes into the middleman's pocket. This difference also contributes to hoarding and the creation of a black market. The ryot can easily sell at a price lower than the retail sale price and still get more than what the agent gives him. The consumer too could purchase cheaper from the ryot than from the ration shop.

Of course when the paddy purchased is sold as rice the middleman's profit is still higher. Why, in any event, should not the consumer have paddy which he can himself easily convert into rice by hand-pounding? Apart from physical and material gain this would also afford bran for his cattle. The friend therefore suggests the following remedies:

(a) Paddy to be stocked in godowns in the villages. After enough has been stocked for local needs the remainder may be sent direct to where it is needed.

(b) Ration to be distributed in the form of paddy.

(c) Paddy to be distributed at cost price. Cost of procurement and distribution to be subsidized by the Government.

(d) Ration to be doubled in the case of agricultural labourers or any labourers doing hard manual labour.

2. A friend from Bengal suggests that jute growing should be curtailed to meet local needs. It absorbs a great area of cultivable lands which should be used for staple foods.

3. Another friend writes that there is a great deal of grain stocked in some of the States. After meeting local needs they should be asked to co-operate with British India and send the surplus to needy places. A strict watch should be kept so that grain stuffs wherever stocked may not be lost by rotting nor used for profiteering.

4. Every help should be afforded to poor agriculturists in the matter of implements of agriculture. To improve these and supply them at cheap rates to farmers is the duty of the State.

5. A Punjab friend writes that price control, instead of helping the poor man is helping to raise prices and create a black market. He says that gram in the Punjab bazars today is selling at Rs. 18/- per maund and that too is available through dubious channels. If control were removed, the price would come down. There is plenty of wheat in the Punjab which is getting black and there is adulteration of flour which is hard to get even at Rs. 13/- or 14/- per maund.

6. Many persons write that every advantage should be taken of the coming mango crop which promises to be a bumper one. Mangoes have good nutritive value for human beings.

7. Oil cakes from ground-nut, rape and other seeds can be easily processed into a highly nutritious food for man. This food can be used for making bread and if mixed with an equal part of wheat atta can make chapatis also. If more kerosene oil is imported more seeds would be available for the poor to eat.

8. Since food is above politics and parties there should be a special Food Cabinet at the Centre with trusted representatives of the people. This would perhaps be a potent factor in helping to get rid of corruption.

9. The majority of well-to-do people eat too much. They should be educated to realize that health and strength are not dependent on the large amount one eats. In fact it is the other way round.

10. A plea for soya bean has also been made on the ground that it contains protein, fat and carbohydrate value. One part soya bean to three parts wheat gives standard nutrition. If it could be added to the daily wheat ration the latter could be reduced to 9 oz. The writer urges its immediate importation and encouragement for its growth here.

11. Famine conditions offer a golden opportunity for teaching villagers the value of co-operation in all departments of life. But the teaching must be imparted by those who really love the villagers and will become one with them and see that everything is done honestly.

12. A friend who knows writes:

"Regarding the food situation, I have been talking to some young army officers. They are keen and anxious to do all that they can. What they want is a short course in agriculture, and precise instructions as to what they have to do. It would be necessary to attach some agricultural experts with these engineer corps. They have got quite a good amount of equipment in the shape of tractors, jeeps and bull-dozers, but they must not be expected to produce ploughs. They must be provided with these materials. The army has to be directed by those who know their job. Unfortunately, however, the direction at the centre is exceedingly weak, and wholly without vision. It is good that the Viceroy has taken the matter in his hands, but the Executive which has to handle this vast problem has not yet been organized. The problem in terms of arithmetic is something as follows:

"Our total production of cereals is 60 million tons per annum, out of which 18 millions come in the market. The official estimate of the deficit is 6 million tons — or a third of the entire quantity of grain, which is marketed throughout a year—an enormous quantity to deal with in terms of transport alone. The problem is of an alarming magnitude, if it is considered that the principal areas requiring immediate help are South Bombay, and the entire Madras Presidency, including Mysore and Travancore. There is a possibility of getting 3 to 4 million tons of grains from abroad, but it would be quite impossible to handle even a quarter of these imports at our ports on the West and South-East coasts. There is neither storage nor facilities for handling the traffic at the ports, or on the rail-road. There is a very considerable danger of people starving, and grain rotting at the ports, or lying unloaded in the ships, simply because the problem has not been worked out in detail. A fully loaded goods train means only 50 wagons, and a train load of 1,000 tons at a time. The time for loading such a goods train is anything upto 3 to 5 days, if the necessary siding and labour are available. Add to this the time required for unloading and transit between two points, and you get the measure of the time lag. If we receive three million tons of imports, it would mean 3,000 special goods trains; at least half of them during the first 150 days, or 10 per day—quite an impossible feat even under the best of circumstances. How on earth we are going to manage this with the limiting factor of the Western ports, and the resources of the railway lines operating only in Southern India? We shall need very much more than what the available railway transport and road transport in the hands of the public as well as the army can do. Unfortunately, nobody either here or in the Central Government has even thought in these concrete terms. I sometimes fear that it is quite impossible to make the Government realize the magnitude of the danger that threatens this country not only this year, but the year after, for the immediate quantity that we want for our existing population is 7 million tons of more production, and 14 millions in 1953 for a population of 45 crores. We cannot, therefore, live on the prospects of charity from abroad, even if it materializes regularly in future.

"The only sovereign remedy is, as Gandhiji has said, self-help, which must be translated into concrete measures to step up our production and to increase the mobility in transit and the effectiveness of storage. The waste, as a result of faulty storing and insect disease, which runs into a very big total, could and should be largely eliminated. The trouble, however, is that the services have got into a rut, and even the Viceroy trying to stir it up cannot succeed, unless the details of the organization are worked out with the completest co-operation between the official machinery and the public organizations. I do hope therefore, that the change at the centre will take place soon, at any rate, in food, for otherwise we are in again for very bad times indeed. The help from abroad might expose our utter inefficiency, unless the executive responsible for working out the plans wakes up in time, and of this there is no sign whatever."

Poona, 10-3-'46

A.K.

TWO REMARKABLE EXPERIMENTS

The question sometimes arises in planning a programme of social uplift as to what should be considered primary and given priority. Dr. G. T. Wrench, M. D., in his book The Wheel of Health describes some remarkable experiments which furnish an indictment of building new and sanitary houses and of organizing physical drill as prior to food in a policy of health. The first experiment was conducted in Stockton-on-Tees.

Stockton-on-Tees is an ancient market town. Its population in 1931 was 67,722. Of the population 40 per cent of the males between fourteen and sixty-five were unemployed. Some seven or eight years back, the Stockton Town Council launched a vigorous slum clearing programme. A vigorous policy of better housing was launched. That gave Dr. G. C. M. Gonigle, Medical Officer of Health of Stockton-on-Tees, an opportunity to conduct a unique series of statistical observations proving conclusively the vital primary claim of food.

As a result of a survey of housing newly taken in 1919, the largest section of the town scheduled as an 'unhealthy area' was dubbed as 'Number 1 area'. It was decided to demolish part of Number 1 and transfer its inhabitants to a 'new up-to-date municipal estate, agreeably named Mount Pleasant'. In 1927, 152 families comprising 710 individuals were transferred to Mount Pleasant, leaving behind in Number 1 area 289 families with a total of 1,298 individuals.

Here was as striking a contrast between two sets of conditions as one could imagine between conditions new and old, of good housing and slum. "Naturally everyone thought the transfer to Mount Pleasant would result in a betterment." But an amazing thing happened. It was found that "the health of the inhabitants of Mount Pleasant instead of improving or at least remaining stationary actually began to deteriorate, whereas that of the families and people left behind in the slums did not". The standardized death rate of the first five years following upon the transfer was 33 per 1,000; that of the unchanged slum 22 per 1,000. The rate for Mount Pleasant Estate was 33.55 per 1,000. This was the more surprising in view of the fact that "it represented an increase of 46 per cent over the mean standardized rates for the same individuals in the previous quinquennium". It was "a real increase and beyond the probable extent of fortuitous variation."

What was the explanation? Better housing? "Had something better proved something worse?" It sounded absurd. Dr. G. C. M. Gonigle solved the riddle. From a comparative analysis of the family budgets before and after the change he showed that in the slums the people had rents which averaged 4 sh. 8 d. a week per family. In 1928 on the Mount Pleasant Estate the rent was 9 sh. a week and by 1932 it had risen to 9 sh. 3½ d. per week or double the original rate. Consequently less was spent on food. Particularly, it was found in the case of unemployed of both areas that the food per man per week in the Mount Pleasant Estate cost 34.7 pence, that in the unchanged slum 45.6 pence. The conclusion was that "in making housing and sanitation better first money was withdrawn from the individual's primary need—food". The deterioration of food led to the deterioration of health in spite of the compensating factors in the form of better housing and sanitation in the second case.

The second experiment is similar. It is of particular importance to those who are interested in the education of children. It shows how "food takes primary place to exercise and physical drill". It was reported by McCollum and Simmonds that fortytwo out of eightyfour negro children in a "kindly but impoverished institution", were as an experiment, given one quart of milk daily, in addition to the customary institutional food. Between these children and the children who were not given milk, there was not only a difference of growth and health "but of desire of exercise". The non-milk children were "apathetic and very tractable. . . . Those on the milk-fed group, on the other hand, soon caused annoyance to their teachers by their restlessness and activity." To this may be added the following from the League of Nations Report on the Problem of Nutrition, Volume I. "A pint of milk daily added to what was considered a good diet in an institutional boarding school was followed by the usual increased growth and decreased illness, and it was particularly noted that the children were more highly spirited and irrepressible."

Remarks Dr. Wrench commenting on this: "The irrepressible activity which good food provides is willingly poured out by the child or man into the many channels that are ready for it. Whether it be as work or play, exercise or drill, sports or sheer necessity, the well-nourished body is glad of the opportunity of activity." To give drill and exercise priority would be to put the horse before the cart. Proper and adequate nourishment is the first step in the education of the child.

PYARELAL

PERSECUTION OF HARIJANS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Shri Parikshitlal Mazumdar writes:

"There was high mortality due to some epidemic in a village in Wadhwan State, Kathiawad. The superstition of the villagers ascribed this misfortune to Harijans and they began to intimidate the Bhangi families. The latter fled from the village through fright. Harijan workers, as soon as they learnt of the incident, approached the State authorities to take immediate steps to protect the Bhangis and did their level best to dispel the superstition from the minds of the ignorant villagers. The State acted promptly and the families returned. This year Kathiawad Harijans have had to suffer more than usual because of the outbreak of disease among cattle. These poor folk have to pay dearly for the superstition of the villagers."

The only remedy for this kind of superstition is the spread of correct knowledge. The reason for its existence in Kathiawad seems to be that the reform movement has not yet touched the villages there. Workers must make herculean efforts to remedy this defect. But wherefrom are such workers to come? Even those already working in Kathiawad fight shy of going to the villages. And even if they go, one can well imagine the immense difficulty of the task confronting them. Man's endeavour at its highest consists in continuing to perform one's duty undeterred by difficulties. The Kathiawad incident must be taken to heart. Both the State and the people understood their duty and took prompt and firm measures in the instance quoted and the difficulty was surmounted for the time being. If this example were to be widely followed it would cut at the very root of superstition. And that would be true education.

Poona, 6-3-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

Hindu and Mussalman Tea etc.

Hindu and Mussalman tea is sold at railway stations. Separate arrangements for meals for the two communities are sometimes made and none seem to be there for Harijans. All this is a sign of our pitiable condition and constitutes a blot on British administration. One can understand their not interfering in religious matters but for them to allow separate arrangements for tea, water etc. for the two communities is to set the seal of approval on separatism. Railways and railway travelling offer a golden opportunity which could be used for social reform and for educating the public in sanitation and hygiene, good manners and communal unity. Instead, however, an utter neglect of and indifference to these desiderata are shown. Railway travel serves to strengthen rather than mitigate evil customs and bad habits. First and second class passengers are pampered, luxurious habits encouraged. Third class passengers on whom the railway revenues largely depend are denied even elementary amenities and exposed to all kinds of hardship. In either case weakness is exploited. And when, in addition to this, separatism and untouchability are recognized by the Railway authorities, it is the very limit. If any passenger wishes to impose restrictions on himself he is at liberty to do so at his own expense and suffer, may be, even hunger and thirst. But let him not demand special facilities for himself from Railway authorities.

That vegetarians and non-vegetarians should be catered for is another matter. That is already being done.

Poona, 7-3-'46

(From Harijansevak)

M. K. G.

CONTENTS	PAGE
HIGH-HANDEDNESS EXPOSED ... M. K. GANDHI	41
CONSTRUCTIVE WORK AND SAMAGRA GRAMASEVA ... S. N.	42
GANDHIJ'S PRESS STATEMENTS ...	43
MY CONFESSION AND CURE ... M. K. GANDHI	44
QUESTION BOX ... M. K. GANDHI	45
SATYAGRAHA IN FACE OF HOOLIGANISM ... M. K. GANDHI	45
FURTHER SUGGESTIONS FOR COMBATING FOOD SCARCITY ... A. K.	46
TWO REMARKABLE EXPERIMENTS ... PYARELAL	47
PERSECUTION OF HARIJANS ... M. K. GANDHI	48
NOTES:
TO PATIENTS ... M. K. G.	44
HINDU AND MUSSALMAN TEA ETC. ... M. K. G.	48

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad
 Subscription Rates—INLAND: One year. Rs. 6, six months, Rs. 3. FOREIGN: One year. Rs. 8 or 14 sh, or $ 3.

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 7]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, MARCH 24, 1946

[ TWO ANNAS

Notes

Why for Harijans?

Q "The Harijans are specially favoured by the Government. Special facilities are provided on an extensive scale for their education, employment and advancement. Why should you again seek our help on their behalf? There are equally poor and even poorer people among the Savarnas. Why don't you work for their betterment?"

A. This is a curious question. It is no wonder that Harijans are favoured by the Government. Whatever the reason, the fact is not to be deplored, if the favour really does them good. All Government favours do not. The motive behind seems to me to divide them from the so-called touchables. The reason lies with the latter. If touchables had not misbehaved themselves, there would have been no division possible. And even though the Congress has been championing them all these years, have the Savarna Hindu masses improved their manners? The answer has to be 'no' even though there has been considerable improvement. The Congress influence is most powerful for ending foreign rule. It is weak on social matters. Therefore, without entering into an unholy competition with the foreign Government, it is necessary for the reformers to do their duty by the Harijans until the bar sinister is completely removed. As for the Savarna poor, there are many to look after them. Some go to the extent even of spoonfeeding them.

Bombay, 16-3-'46

Shocking if True

The Joint Secretary of the Gujarat Harijan Sevak Sangh, Shri Hemantkumar, writes that apart from Karadi nowhere are temples open to Harijans and nowhere may they use public wells.

If this is true, I may say it is a good thing that I have been unable to go to Bardoli. How can those Gujaratis who do not look upon Harijans as part and parcel of themselves, who do not permit them to draw water from public wells nor enter temples for the worship of God, who even attribute epidemics to Harijans and are prepared to beat them for practices which superstition attributes to them, how can they welcome me? Or what value can their welcome hold for me?

I have long since counted myself as a bhangi in my speech, in my actions and above all in mind and spirit. Anyone who looks upon them with contempt does the same to me. Indeed I hold it an honour to be among the despised Harijans and among them bhangis. Any welcome to me under the circumstances would be tantamount to an insult.

Therefore, I make this request to Gujaratis that they atone for the grievous wrong they continue to do to fellow human beings. I shall consider their repentance adequate when they admit Harijans into their fold and only then will I consider them capable of maintaining Swaraj. I do hope that the people of Bardoli Taluka will understand and respond to my message in a special manner.

Bombay, 11-3-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

Thoughtlessness

"You are aware that pari passu with the growth of popular outbreaks the lawlessness of the military is also becoming more and more brutal. You have condemned the hooliganism of the masses but you say nothing about the brutality of the military."

This is a specimen of thoughtlessness. People have no right to commit excesses whereas the military is the very embodiment of madness. Condemnation of military madness would be meaningless when the very institution of the army is condemned. But criticism of their conduct becomes necessary as a warning to the Government. There is a time and occasion for everything. It would be out of place when condemning popular excesses.

What is the duty of a Satyagrahi General? Should he reform his own army or that of the opponent? If he reforms his own the power of the opposing force is sterilized. If the process continues over a sufficiently long period the opponent is ipso facto completely transformed. The critic's remarks can only be meant for me. Others have already condemned military excesses. In my opinion we have not as yet got sufficient material to judge them. I expect that this is being prepared. The duty of the people, however, is to turn the searchlight inwards. Too much brooding over the wrongs of others is apt to lead one imperceptibly to act likewise. It would then be a case of the pot calling the kettle black.

Bombay, 15-3-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

M. K. G.

WORKING COMMITTEE RESOLUTIONS

The following is the text of the four resolutions of the Working Committee passed on 15th and 16th March, 1946, at Bombay.

I

RESOLUTION ON FOOD

Whereas the war and its after-effects have already created a serious food situation which has been materially aggravated by the failure of rains in many parts of India, with the result that the country is faced with both a food and a cloth famine, it is essential that the policy of the Government and the people should be one at this time of crisis. Hunger makes no distinction between high and low, Hindu and Muslim, or any other. But the real burden of suffering, however, will inevitably fall on the poor. In the circumstances, the Working Committee would like to make its policy clear.

The first thing in these difficult times is for the people not to lose heart. Everyone should realize his personal duty and perform it to the best of his ability, believing that if everyone acts likewise India will be able to save thousands of poor lives. Every villager and townsman should, therefore, do the best he can for his neighbour and for himself.

Everyone who possesses any land should in the shortest time grow such foodstuffs on it as he can. Cultivable land lying waste should speedily be brought under the plough and every facility should be given for this purpose by the State. After fulfilling his own minimum requirements from his produce, he should make the remainder available for others who may be in need.

Preference should be given to food crops over money crops wherever practicable.

People should sink ordinary wells and dig tanks wherever there is scarcity of water and all facilities for this purpose should be given by the State and local bodies.

It is the duty of the rich today to live simply and divert their energy and wealth towards productive and constructive activities for the relief of distress.

Every effort should be made to secure supplies from abroad, but we should not feel helpless in any case. On the contrary, we must produce all we can in India and be prepared to face all emergencies with the resources available. It must be remembered that even the receipt of additional imports or the raising of additional crops will not serve the purpose in view unless the supplies reach the starving places in time and are equitably distributed there.

All food should be economically used and expenditure on occasions of marriages and other ceremonies must be avoided.

Processes of canning and preservation of fruit should be encouraged and widely adopted so that full use may be made of all available fruit and no part thereof may be wasted.

It is the duty of the State to put all their available resources of manpower, technical skill and mechanical appliances, whether civil or military, for growing, preserving and transporting food wherever necessary. All exports of cereals, foodstuffs, oilseeds, oilcakes, groundnuts, oil and other edibles should be absolutely prohibited.

The State should sink deep wells and adopt other means of water supply wherever necessary. Demobilized and discharged personnel from the defence services, including the I. N. A. should be utilized for increasing the production of foodstuffs.

The Committee expects the nation to make all necessary sacrifices for relieving distress in the country and for making successful any reasonable schemes of rationing and procurement, any measures for checking hoarding, blackmarketing and corruption that may have to be taken on hand.

It is clear that just as it is the duty of the public to co-operate in all helpful ways, it is the primary duty of the Government to understand and fulfil the essential needs of the people. Measures for meeting the serious situation cannot be fully successful and effective unless power vests in the people.

So far as want of cloth is concerned, it is the duty of the State and the people alike to render every assistance to the villagers in order to enable them to produce by their own effort enough Khadi in the villages. The State should provide facilities for cotton-growing or cotton itself, and instruments of production and instructors where necessary.

Congress committees and Congressmen are advised to help in every way to give effect to the recommendations in this resolution.

II

RESOLUTION ON THE INTERNATIONAL SITUATION

The Working Committee have noted with grave concern the growing tension in the international situation resulting in open recrimination between the great Powers and attempts on their part to secure or hold on to colonial areas and vantage points and create satellite States, which may lead to possible future conflicts. The war that has recently ended has, in spite of the professions made during the course of it, neither ended the imperialist domination of subject countries nor the era of power politics. The old imperialism still continues and in addition new types of imperialism are growing. The recent UNO Conference in London is startling evidence of the fact that instead of a new order of free and united nations evolving, there is disunity among the leading nations and lack of freedom over vast areas. Oil is still the lure of imperial domination, and security and preservation of the so-called life-lines of empty or strategic outposts are made the excuses for expansion as well as retention of colonial areas. This continuation of the old and discredited policy which has led already to two disastrous world wars is likely to result in yet another war on a more colossal and destructive scale.

It is evident that peace and freedom cannot grow out of these seeds of continuing conflict and war. Imperialist policy has to be discarded not only in the interests of subject nations, but also to rid the world of the peril that might overwhelm humanity. It has thus become urgently necessary to end foreign domination over the countries of Asia and Africa, and for foreign armies to be withdrawn from all such countries, and notably from Indonesia, Manchuria, Indo-China, Iran and Egypt. India still remains the crux of the problem of Asian freedom and on the independence of India depends the freedom of many countries and the peace of the world.

III

RESOLUTION ON SOUTH AFRICA

The Working Committee of the Indian National Congress are of opinion that the disabilities of the Indian settlers in South Africa constitute a blot on humanity and a slur on the civilization of the West. As the submission to His Excellency the Viceroy of the Indian Deputation from South Africa shows, the disabilities are an unbroken tale of progressive prejudice against Asiatics defined as "any Turk and any member of a race or tribe whose national home is in Asia but which does not include any member of the Jewish or the Syrian race or a person belonging to the race or class known as the Cape Malay", and of broken promises and declarations. A civilization that requires for its protection a series of legal enactments imposing political and economic restrictions on coloured and Asiatic peoples must contain seeds of future wars and its own destruction.

The Committee are of opinion that the contemplated breach of trade relations between India and the Union of South Africa is the mildest step that the Government of India could have taken. The Committee would ask the Government of India forthwith to withdraw their High Commissioner, if the Union Government would not suspend the proposed legislation, pending the convening of a Round Table Conference between the two governments to consider the whole policy of the Union Government against non-White peoples of the earth.

The Committee are painfully surprised to find Field Marshal Smuts, the Premier of the Union, dismissing, on the untenable plea of regarding the proposed anti-Asiatic bill as a domestic affair, the right of the Indian Government and, by parity of reasoning, of the other Allied Powers, of friendly intervention. The Committee hold that at this time of the day it is not open to any State, however powerful it may be, to refuse to listen to the public opinion of the world as voiced through its different States with reference to any legislation regarded by them as of an inhuman character or as amounting to a slur on the self-respect of the races comprising such a State.

The Committee venture to advise the victorious Allies to take notice of the contemplated action of the Government of South Africa inasmuch as the late war would have been fought in vain if now the persistence by the Union Government of South Africa in the bar sinister against Asiatic races and coloured people inhabiting that sub-continent is maintained.

To the Indian Deputation from South Africa the Committee would say that whilst they (the Committee) and, indeed, the whole of India, irrespective of parties or communities, are with them in their just struggle and would lend them all the moral weight they can, they should realize that the brunt of the unequal struggle will have to be borne by them, and the Committee feel assured that the Indians in South Africa will worthily carry out the example set by them years ago of vindicating their self-respect and that of the Motherland by the noble rule of self-suffering.

The Committee would, however, faint hope, even at the eleventh hour, that in the place of the indefensible law of the jungle, which the policy as revealed by the contemplated legislation enunciates, the Government of the Union of South Africa and its White settlers would listen to reason and the appeal of the moral law by which mankind lives.

IV

RESOLUTION ON THE RECENT DISTURBANCES

The Working Committee of the Indian National Congress are of opinion that the recent disturbances created by the people in Bombay, Delhi, Calcutta and other places were in every way harmful and were an obstacle in the way of the Congress. These included arson and incendiarism whether of private shops or public places, looting, especially destruction of foodstuffs, frightening pedestrians, compelling people to shout slogans, compelling Europeans to remove their hats and otherwise molesting them. All these acts were manifestly against the policy of non-violence adopted by the Congress and were derogatory to national dignity. Whilst there is nothing but unmixed condemnation of popular frenzy, this Committee, without prejudging the military action taken in order to deal with the recent outburst of violence, are of opinion that the popular belief, generally and justly, has been that such action has been taken in excess of necessity and in order to strike terror in the hearts of the people and that therefore the military have bulletted passers-by or even innocent people, men, women or children standing in their own galleries. Any such action, at the present moment, instead of cowering down the populace, has the effect of infuriating it. The Committee, therefore, ask the Government to institute an inquiry into the military action taken in the various places and hope that the inquiry will be open and public and will have on it representatives with judicial qualifications and enjoying public confidence. At the same time the Committee hope that the people will observe restraint befitting the Congress and help the conference between the Cabinet Mission and the representatives of the people to carry on their work in a calm atmosphere.

Leprosy in Poona

In Poona is a group of leprosy patients and their children who have rented out tin-huts in a slum called Kathadikhana and live together as a colony. They live by begging. Some patients who were either thrown out of Khondwa Leper Home or came away from it started living together. They attracted to their group other patients who drifted into Poona, until today it is an interprovincial colony 85 strong (37 men, 31 women and 17 children). Some of them especially the women, reveal a story of desertion by their own families. They present a miserable sight of derelict and debased humanity. But I found amongst them an impressive fellowship and mutual helpfulness.

I fully realize the difficulties that will attend any efforts to give this group a more reasonable existence. It must be difficult to manage them, but they tell me they are willing to be helped. The fact that they have come together impresses me deeply. I see in their condition a call which we may not ignore. In proportion to the difficulty of the task should be our attraction to it. They should be helped to live better and their children should be saved from disease and destitution. Poona is a city of great traditions of social service and will it be too much to expect that this sacred spot of India hallowed with the memory of Ranade, Gokhale, Tilak, Devadhar and a host of other eminent social servants would rid itself of this malignant growth by providing these patients a place where they will find not only relief but work and at least partial self-support?

Bombay, 2-3-'46

T. N. JAGDISAN

HARIJAN

March 24

1946

INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Course of events has raised the question of South Africa Whiteman's policy to the highest level. Unseen it holds the seeds of a world war. The threatened land and franchise bill which has brought the South African Indian Delegation to India, though superficially it affects the Indians of Natal and Transvaal, is in effect a challenge to Asia and by implication to the Negro races. India in her present exalted mood can view it in no other way. Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru is Indian to the core but being also an internationalist he has made us used to looking at everything in the international light instead of the parochial. India, weak physically and materially but strong ethically and numerically, has proclaimed from the housetops that her independence would be a threat to no one and no nation, but will be a help to noble effort throughout the world and a promise of relief to all its exploited peoples. Therefore, India regards the contemplated measure of the Union of South Africa as an insult and challenge to them.

The Indian Deputation see in the present measure not merely an assault on Indian property rights but also on their status as free men. They do not want merely to exist in South Africa. They need not have sent the deputation all the way to India for that purpose. They want to be in South Africa as equals of the European settlers of South Africa. They know that today they are not. But they must stop deterioration and hence move forward. In that forward march India will help of course. Indeed, all the moral forces will be at their call. The brunt, however, will have to be borne by them. They rediscovered the force of Truth (Satyagraha) and that will be their only and ultimate source of power. Time for it is not yet. Let us hope, it will never come. They have to try to gather together on their side all the moral forces of the world. They will have to clear the ground of all the weeds, all sordidness, all personal ambition which always and everywhere creeps in, if sleepless vigilance is not kept on the watch-tower. Imagine the plight of a poor barque sailing when the beacon light in front has gone out.

They must be prepared for accidents and consequent suffering. If they are in earnest and hardy enough to brave the worst, they are bound to come out the best in the end.

What about the Whites of South Africa? They invited the Indians in the first instance. If they had thought the invitees would always be like slaves or that they would not be followed by their free brethren, they (the Whites) were soon undeceived.

Does real superiority require outside props in the shape of legislation? Will they not see that every such will of protection weakens them, ultimately rendering them effeminate? The lesson of history ought to teach them that might is not right. Right only is might. Field Marshal Smuts is a great soldier-statesman. Will he not perceive that he will be taking the Whitemen of South Africa down the precipice, if he persists in the policy underlying his measure? Let him take counsel with the Allies to whose victory on the battlefield he contributed not a little. He will surely throw away its fruits if he persists in his plan of protecting the civilization of the West by artificial means.

Poona, 18-3-'46

"A TEMPLE TO GANDHIJI"

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Under this strange heading I read a newspaper cutting sent by a correspondent to the effect that a temple has been erected where my image is being worshipped. This I consider to be a gross form of idolatry. The person who erected the temple has wasted his resources by misusing them, the villagers who are drawn there are misled and I am being insulted in that the whole of my life has been caricatured in that temple. The meaning that I have given to worship is distorted. Worship of the Charkha lies in plying it for a living or as a sacrifice for ushering in Swaraj. Gita is worshipped not by parrot-like recitation but by following its teaching. Recitation is good and proper only as an aid to action according to its teaching. A man is worshipped only to the extent that he is followed, not in his weaknesses but in his strength. Hinduism is degraded when it is brought down to the level of the worship of the image of a living being. No man can be said to be good before his death. After death too he is good for the person who believes him to have possessed certain qualities attributed to him. As a matter of fact, God alone knows a man's heart. Hence the safest thing is not to worship any person, living or dead, but to worship perfection which resides only in God known as Truth. The question then certainly arises as to whether possession of photographs is not a form of worship carrying no merit with it. I have said as much before now in my writings. Nevertheless I have tolerated the practice as it has become an innocent though a costly fashion. But this toleration will become ludicrous and harmful if I were to give directly or indirectly the slightest encouragement to the practice above described. It would be a welcome relief if the owner of the temple removed the image and converted the building into a spinning centre where the poor will card and spin for wages and the others for sacrifice and all will be wearers of Khaddar. This will be the teaching of the Gita in action and true worship of it and me.

Bombay, 15-3-'46

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. You ask people not to eat polished rice but I fear the disease is too far gone. Polished rice is washed again and again and the water thrown away. It is then boiled and that water too is emptied into the drain thus depriving the cereal of all its vitamin value. The rice thus served, with each grain separate, is pleasant for both the eye and the palate. The practice obtains even in students' hostels. How are we to get rid of it?

A. I am aware of the above-mentioned mal-practice. We live in the poorest of poor countries and are yet unable or unwilling to give up such harmful habits. Each one thinks only of himself. We look upon our neighbours as strangers instead of as our kith and kin. What does it matter to us whether they live or die? If they die it is their own fault. If they live it is accredited to their merit. Life and death are not in our hands. Therefore, let us eat, drink and be merry!

In such a distorted view of life we have to follow what we consider to be our duty and believe that what is true will one day be followed. Until then, whenever occasion arises we must proclaim from the housetops what we consider to be right.

Q. You say that those who eat fish should be provided with the same. Does not this entail violence both for him who eats and him who provides the fish?

A. Both commit violence. So do those who eat vegetables. This kind of violence is inherent in all embodied life, therefore, in man too. It is in this condition and in spite of it that we have to practise non-violence as a duty. I have often indicated how we may do so. The man who coerces another not to eat fish commits more violence than he who eats it. Fishermen, fish vendors and fish eaters are probably unaware of any violence in their action. Even if they were they might look upon it as unavoidable. But the man who uses coercion is guilty of deliberate violence. Coercion is inhuman. Those who quarrel among themselves, those who will stoop to anything in order to amass wealth, those who exploit or indulge in forced human labour, those who overload or goad or otherwise torture animals, all these knowingly commit such violence as can easily be stopped. I do not consider it violence to permit the fish eater to eat fish. It is my duty to suffer it. Ahimsa is the highest duty. Even if we cannot practise it in full, we must try to understand its spirit and refrain as far as is humanly possible from violence.

Bombay, 11-3-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

Q. You have declared that freedom seems to be near. But I cannot follow the point. The Pakistan problem is only one complication against you.

A. Hope knows no insurmountable complications. But why ask, when the answer will be known within a few months, if not weeks. And I am not the only optimist this time.

Bombay, 12-3-'46

DECIMAL COINAGE AND ITS COST

(By M. K. Gandhi)

After due sanction required by section 153 of the Government of India Act, 1935, a bill further to amend the Indian Coinage Act, 1906, is said to have been introduced in the Legislative Assembly on the 18th February, 1946. If it becomes law the rupee will be equivalent to 100 cents instead of 64 pice. The consequential changes will naturally follow. The object is stated to be:

"The existing series of small coins below four annas which were introduced as a war-time expedient, have proved unsatisfactory and unpopular, and the large recoinage programme which their reversion to the pre-war standards entails offers a unique opportunity for introducing a decimal system of subsidiary coinage in place of the present coinage system whereunder the rupee is divided into 16 annas and each anna into 12 pies. Modern trade and commerce demand speed and simplicity in the methods of computation, to achieve which there is nothing to compete with the decimal system which has gradually displaced all other systems in most of the advanced countries of the world. Public opinion has expressed itself largely in favour of the adoption of decimal coinage in India and the object of this Bill is to amend the Coinage Act for this purpose," and a note says:

"With the division of the rupee into 100 cents the existing coins will not correspond to an exact number of cents in all cases. During the transition period when both the anna and the cent coins will circulate side by side and prices might be quoted in terms of either, it is necessary to provide for conversion involving fractions of cents. As it is not proposed to issue cent coins of a smaller denomination than a half-cent, the Bill provides for conversions involving smaller fractions, to be made in rupees of any one transaction at the nearest half cent, and where the amount involved is a quarter cent to the nearest half cent below."

Shri Kishorlal Mashruwala has studied the question carefully and has come to the conclusion that whilst in theory the introduction of the decimal coinage may be defensible, in practice for some years to come the poor will be sacrificed as usual in the interests of the modern trade, i. e. the rich merchants. It is unnecessary here to summarize his convincing argument in support. It is given in full in the columns of the 'Harijanbandhu'. It is sufficient here to state that even in the country of the rulers the decimal coinage has not been introduced. Public opinion there commands respect and affects the decisions of the House of Commons. In India, public opinion, such as it is, has very little force and, moreover, the opinion of the millions who will be the sufferers is inarticulate. Shri Mashruwala very aptly points out that the poor will be taxed without the odium of additional taxation. Wisdom would have suggested that if the power is to be transferred inside of a few months to the representatives of the people, it would be improper for the Government to embark upon an experiment even though claimed to be scientific and yet manifestly against the immediate interests of the poor. In a poor country like India, often, the immediate is, as in this case, the decisive factor. It is to be hoped that the Central Legislative Assembly will throw out the bill, if on re-consideration, the Government do not withdraw it.

Poona, 17-3-'46

S. A. DEPUTATION'S SUBMISSION

Extracts from the South African Indian Deputation's submission to H. E. the Viceroy. The Deputation was led by H. H. the Aga Khan.

"3. The present intention of the Government of the Union of South Africa will, if carried out, degrade us to a status of inferiority against which we have put up a fight more definitely since 1893, the year in which an attempt was made to disfranchise the Indian community as such in Natal. We then looked upon it as a slur not only on the Indians in Natal but also on the Mother Country. Then there was no Union of South Africa. The Cape had practically no Indian question worth the name. Orange Free State had banished the few Indian traders it had and prided itself on its thorough anti-Asiatic policy. The Transvaal had a sprinkling of Indian traders, hawkers and others. The "location" system, later known as segregation, had its rise there. The Whites in Natal had deliberately and for their own sake invited the large number of indentured Indians for their sugar and tea plantations and other industries. In their wake followed the trader and others, and the Indian population today is therefore a composite one.

"4. One would have thought that the advent of Union would mean the Union of all the races of South Africa, i. e. the African (the Bantu), the European and the Asiatics (primarily and principally Indians). What a noble tradition such a union would have been for the world! But it was not to be. On the contrary, the Union became an anti-African and Asiatic combine. Every year of the progress of the Union has definitely marked the progress of this combine, and the strenuous opposition to it by the Indian settlers and their descendants, as will be clearly seen by reference to the appendix "A" hereto attached.

"5. We ask Your Excellency to approach the question from that standpoint and no other. The threatened legislation adumbrated by Field Marshal Smuts, which has hastily brought the delegation from South Africa, is a very large step, perhaps the largest yet made in the process of consigning the Asiatics to permanent inferiority. The wedge has now extended into all round inequality and inferiority. Thus, there are zones of segregation, one of which the Whites are reserving for themselves in order to force by legal compulsion the segregation of the other races. God has made man "one great human family". The White races of South Africa would make of it three separate parts based on colour.

"6. Bad enough as the threatened land legislation is, the prospective franchise legislation is worse. It is a mockery of franchise and a poignant reminder of the low status to be accorded to us, so low that we are not to be deemed even fit enough to choose one of our own as our representative.

"7. We have come all the way from South Africa not to seek protection of individual or property rights, dear as both are, but we have come definitely to ask Your Excellency and the people of the Mother Country to appreciate the fight for equality of status, which is theirs as much as ours, and to give us as much help as possible for you and them to give. What is attempted to be done in South Africa is a denial of the brave declarations made by the British and even the Field Marshal himself.

"8. It has given us much pleasure to learn that the withdrawal of the British power in India in favour of elected Indian representatives is imminent. Then, may we ask whether it is not Your Excellency's double and special duty to enunciate your stand in favour of equality and, so far as possible, enforce it in no uncertain terms?

"10. We would, therefore, ask Your Excellency to use your influence to secure the holding of a Round Table Conference between the two Governments to settle, in the words of the Natal Indian Judicial Commission, "all matters affecting Indians in South Africa". But should your efforts in this connection unhappily fail, then, we ask, in terms of our Resolution herein-before embodied, to withdraw the office of the High Commissioner for India in the Union of South Africa and to enforce economic and political sanctions. We are not unaware that they may mean very little material loss to South Africa. We know that counter-measures will cause us hardship. But, our loss we would count as nothing compared to the moral value of the enforcement of the sanctions."

APPENDIX "A"

Before 1893 Indians enjoyed in Natal both parliamentary and municipal franchise equally with the Europeans. They were first deprived of the parliamentary franchise in 1893, with the exception of those who were already on the voters' roll. But Indian protest was heeded and it (the Franchise Act) was vetoed by London.

Indians were successfully deprived of the parliamentary franchise in 1896 on the ostensible ground that they did not enjoy the privilege in India. They were deprived of the Municipal franchise in 1942 with the result that they ceased to influence Central, Provincial or the Municipal Administrations. Indian residential localities in Durban and elsewhere have consequently been grossly neglected by the local authorities.

Separate schools are maintained for Indians and in a few places separate hospitals for Indians and Africans. No Indians are admitted to the Natal University College.

In Railway trains Indians can generally only occupy special coaches reserved for them with non-Europeans, and in Government offices such as the Posts and Telegraph Offices, and Railway Booking Offices there are separate counters for non-Europeans. This method of discrimination is applied in Courts of Justice also.

Indians are almost completely debarred from employment in Government and Municipal services, except in a menial capacity. There are, however, Indian teachers in schools etc. exclusively intended for Indians and so are employed Indian Interpreters in some law courts.

One of the few privileges which Indians enjoyed until recently in Natal was the freedom to purchase and occupy landed property in urban and rural areas, but the "Pegging Act" of 1943 has severely restricted the exercise of this privilege. Field Marshal Smuts has now made an announcement in Parliament that he would introduce new measures affecting Indians in Natal and in the Transvaal.

(a) In Natal the new legislation, which is to replace the "Pegging Act" lapsing on the 31st day of March 1946, will prohibit the acquisition or occupation of properties by Indians, except in certain specified areas.

(b) Whilst the "Pegging Act" is limited in its operation to Durban only and restricts transactions of fixed property between European and Indian only, the new legislation is to apply to the whole Province of Natal, both in urban and rural areas, and totally prohibits such transactions not only between European and Indian, but goes further than the present "Pegging Act" by making it unlawful for any such transactions between Indian on the one hand and non-Indian on the other, i. e. European, Coloured, Bantu, Chinese, Malay and other non-Indian races.

(c) In the Transvaal under the new legislation areas are to be set apart for Indians both for residence and trade in cities, towns, and villages, the effect of which will be to restrict, if not totally confine, trading activities of Indians to the areas assigned to them. Thus being removed some distance away from commercial centres and being out of touch with all other sections of the population with whom they have hitherto been transacting business, the Indian traders will face ruination.

Moreover, in regard to trade the Licensing Laws in the Transvaal operate very harshly against Indians, in that the Licensing Boards have absolute power to refuse license to Indians without assigning reasons therefor. The same is applicable in the case of transfer of Licenses from one person to another.

In Natal, as well, administration of Licensing Laws operates harshly against Indians, all based upon racial considerations.

(d) Indians in Natal and Transvaal are to be allowed representation in the Union Legislature on a "racial" basis, similar to that applicable to the Bantus and other natives of South Africa. The Indian community is to be represented by three European members elected by them in a House of more than One Hundred and Fifty (150) members.

These proposed measures will, if they become law, constitute a breach of the Capetown Agreement of 1927 between the Union Government and the Government of India, and will be a violation of assurances and pledges given from time to time.

Note: The Appendix takes note of some of the legal disabilities, both in Natal and in the Transvaal and by no means exhausts the catalogue of our disabilities, grievances and hardships. The other disabilities reflected in the conduct of the Europeans in various walks of life, though galling, have been purposely avoided.

GANDHIJ'S PRESS STATEMENT

Gandhiji has issued the following statement to the Press:

Shri Shriramulu is an unknown poor Congressman and servant of humanity working in Nellore. He has been labouring single-handed for the cause of the Harijans of that place. There was a time when high hope was entertained about removal of untouchability and other social work in Nellore. An ashram was built near Nellore but for a variety of causes the activity received a set-back. Deshabhakta Konda Venkatappayya was and still is, though very old, the moving spirit in connection with these activities. It is in this place that Shri Shriramulu has been quietly and persistently working for the removal root and branch of untouchability. He has been trying to have a temple opened to Harijans. He asked me the other day whether in order to awaken public conscience in favour of such opening he could, if all other effort failed, undertake a fast. I sent him my approval. Now the place is astir. But some persons have asked me to advise Shri Shriramulu to suspend his fast for removing legal difficulties of which I have no knowledge. I have been unable to give such advice. As I am anxious that an unobtrusive servant of humanity may not die for want of public knowledge and support I bespeak the interest of the journalists of the South, if not of all India, to find out for themselves the truth of the matter and, if what I say is borne out by facts, shame by public exposure the opposing parties into doing the right and save a precious life.

Bombay, 16-3-'46

[The foregoing statement was issued on the 16th instant. A wire was received today from Shri Shriramulu to the effect that he yielded to public pressure and broke his fast. I can be glad only if the ending of the fast means that the public has taken over the responsibility of having the temple opened without delay. Prof. Ramchandra Rao's letter received by me shows that there is a real legal difficulty about the opening and the principal trustee is pledged to have the formality gone through and the temple opened. It is to be hoped that the temple would be opened with the willing consent of the temple-going people. That can be the only meaning put upon the universal sympathy evoked by the fast. M. K. G.]
Poona, 17-3-'46

The Story of My Experiments with Truth

By M. K. Gandhi

Price Rs. 6 Postage 11 Annas

Satyagraha in South Africa

(Companion Volume to the above)

By M. K. Gandhi

Price 4-8-0 Postage 11 Annas

Cow in India

By S. C. Das Gupta

Part I Rs. 10 Postage 15 Annas

Part II " 7 " 10 "

Home & Village Doctor

By S. C. Das Gupta

Price Rs. 10 Postage 15 Annas

RAMANAM, THE INFALLIBLE REMEDY

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Shri Ganesh Shastri Joshi, Vaidya, tells me after reading my article on Nature Cure in 'Harijan' of 3rd March 1946, that in Ayurved too there is ample testimony to the efficacy of Ramanam as a cure for all disease. Nature Cure occupies the place of honour and in it Ramanam is the most important. When Charak, Vagbhat and other giants of medicine in ancient India wrote, the popular name for God was not Rama but Vishnu. I myself have been a devotee of Tulsidas from my childhood and have, therefore, always worshipped God as Rama. But I know that if, beginning with Omkar, one goes through the entire gamut of God's names current in all climes, all countries and all languages, the result is the same. He and His law are one. To observe His law is, therefore, the best form of worship. A man who becomes one with the law does not stand in need of vocal recitation of the name. In other words, an individual with whom contemplation on God has become as natural as breathing is so filled with God's spirit that knowledge or observance of the law becomes second nature, as it were, with him. Such an one needs no other treatment.

The question then arises as to why, in spite of having this prince of remedies at hand, we know so little about it and why even those who know, do not remember Him or remember Him only by lip service, not from the heart. Parrot-like repetition of God's name signifies failure to recognize Him as the panacea for all ills.

How can they? This sovereign remedy is not administered by doctors, vaidyas, hakims or any other medicinal practitioners. These have no faith in it. If they were to admit that the spring of the Holy Ganges could be found in every home their very occupation or means of livelihood would go. Therefore, they must perforce rely on their powders and potions as infallible remedies. Not only do these provide bread for the doctor but the patient too seems to feel immediate relief. If a medical practitioner can get a few persons to say "so and so gave me a powder and I was cured", his business is established.

Nor, it must be borne in mind, would it really be of any use for doctors to prescribe God's name to patients unless they themselves were conscious of its miraculous powers. Ramanam is no copy book maxim. It is something that has to be realized through experience. One who has had personal experience alone can prescribe it, not any other.

The Vaidyaraj has copied out for me four verses. Out of these Charak's is the simplest and most apt. It means that if one were to obtain mastery over even one out of the thousand names of Vishnu, all ailments would vanish:

विष्णु सङ्क्षमूर्धनि चराचरपतिं विमुमु ।

स्तुवन्नाममहत्तेन ज्वरान् सर्वाणि चपोहति ॥

Poona, 10-3-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

CONVENIENCE Vs. NECESSITY

(By M. K. Gandhi)

One whom many Congressmen know writes:

"As I was talking with you I realized how greatly you were worried about the condition of the masses today. Their capacity to express themselves violently is no doubt very disturbing and at times one is liable to feel, 'To what purpose non-violence all these years?'

"When I search into myself (and that is, I feel, the only way to know about the people) I find that during the last 5-6 years conflicting experiences have only strengthened my faith in non-violence. I, and so many others, perhaps for the first time peeped over the precipice — intellectually even travelled in the dark valleys below — and I am convinced that that way salvation does not lie. And do you know, Bapuji, that there are thousands like me who have had that experience and reached the same conclusions? Up till now your voice used to be but a soothing balm to our frayed nerves and refreshed our souls; but non-violence was only a matter that we had to put up with in order to retain you as our general in battle.

"But now to thousands like me non-violence has become the Life Force that alone is capable of creating democracy and humanity. Our non-violence now is a matter of conviction and not a matter of convenience or cowardice.

"But then there are others who have not had the capacity to understand the fundamentals. They are still thinking in terms of power and organization for power. I personally feel that that is a phase in their development and that the experience and urgency of those that have learnt their lesson will count greatly in making even these see reason.

"There are also many that are confused with this game of politics and find it difficult to square it with the non-violent way or are rather confused by the spectacle of many attempting to square non-violence with the game of politics. This all leads me, personally, to the conclusion that Voltaire reached at the end of Candide: "It faut cultiver notre jardin" (It is best to cultivate one's own garden).

"I feel that we are fighting a war for humanity and that we have many a battle to fight — this being only the beginning of the first one — that we have far to go, that only with rugged fearless experience and perhaps a few stumblings shall we be able to grow into non-violence.

"Perhaps there are many who experience my difficulties."

Bombay, 14-3-'46

CONTENTS	PAGE
WORKING COMMITTEE RESOLUTIONS	50
INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA ... M. K. GANDHI	52
"A TEMPLE TO GANDHIJI" ... M. K. GANDHI	52
QUESTION BOX ... M. K. GANDHI	53
DECIMAL COINAGE AND ITS COST ... M. K. GANDHI	53
S. A. DEPUTATION'S SUBMISSION ...	54
GANDHIJI'S PRESS STATEMENT ...	55
RAMANAM, THE INFALLIBLE REMEDY
CONVENIENCE Vs. NECESSITY ... M. K. GANDHI	56
NOTES:
WHY FOR HARIJANS? ... M. K. G.	49
SHOCKING IF TRUE ... M. K. G.	49
THOUGHTLESSNESS ... M. K. G.	49
LEPROSY IN POONA ... T. N. JAGDISAN	51

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Dessai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad

Subscription Rates — INDIAN: One year, Rs. 6, six months, Rs. 3. FOREIGN: One year, Rs. 8, or 14 sh. or $ 3.

HARIJAN

10 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 8]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, MARCH 31, 1946

[ TWO ANNAS

WHY BHANGI QUARTERS?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Friends are puzzled over my keen desire to reside in Bhangi quarters in the cities or towns I may visit. To ask why I have not entertained that desire all these years would be more pertinent. To answer why I did not have the desire long ago must be reserved for a future occasion. Just now I must answer why the desire has come upon me at all.

I have for some time been saying that we must all be bhangis or untouchables. But it has worried me that I have not accorded the statement with corresponding action. It may not be possible to establish complete accordance with the wish. But it ought to be done so far as possible. Whilst this thought was agitating me, I got the news which I have already shared with the readers that in Gujarat only one well and one temple is shared with Harijans and this in Karadi. Whether the news is true or not is immaterial here. The material thing is the reaction produced on my mind by the news. To be angry was madness. The news quickened the desire for residence in untouchable quarters. I said to myself: 'If I lived apart from Harijans, what right had I to question the action of others who went further in their adherence to untouchability? But whether the others changed their mode or not was not for me to judge. If it was my duty to reside in Harijan quarters I must perform it irrespective of the reaction of the step on the others.' This is the thought which is possessing me and goading me to the adumbrated action.

Consequently I have asked Sheth R. D. Birla to arrange, if at all possible, for my residence in untouchable quarters when I happen to be in Bombay. I have also wired to Sheth G. D. Birla to arrange likewise for Delhi and Shri Brijkishen Chandiwalla has already asked for my approval of some arrangement he has made. It goes without saying that I must not impose myself on Harijans anywhere. I must not wound their feelings, if they will not tolerate my presence in their midst. But I fear no such thing.

Incidentally, I notice that some critics rejoice that I shall no longer reside in the Birla House. They do not know that I have been accepting their hospitality for years. I have accepted donations from them for my many constructive activities. The critics do not know of the changes they have imperceptibly made in their life; nor need they or the public in general know these. Such changes are never made for show. At the same time it is perfectly true that there are wide differences between them and me in outlook. This is no cause for sorrow or wonder. All true change comes from within. Any change brought about by pressure is worthless. I am neither so vain nor so foolish as to hope that all would follow me. And who can say whether I am right or others in what we are doing? It is enough if all of us abide by what we consider to be right. We are all His creatures to do His will, not ours. Doing so, we should all be friends to one another.

Uruli, 25-3-'46

(From Harijansevak)

WHY ONE MORE BURDEN?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

'Why have I got involved in Nature Cure in the evening of my life?'—this question is being asked me by several people. Had I not enough work on my hands already? Was I not too old to take up new things? Could any one expect me to add to my existing burdens? All these are pertinent questions demanding my careful consideration. But they do not evoke any echo within me. The still small voice within me whispers: 'Why bother about what others say? I have given you a colleague like Dr. Dinshah who understands you and whom you understand. You have confidence in your capacity, having followed Nature Cure as a hobby for over half a century. If you hide this talent and do not make use of it you will be as a thief. It will ill become you. Remember the teaching of the first verse of Ishopanishad and surrender all you have to Me. There is nothing that really belongs to you. Only you fancied that something was yours. It is all Mine. Give it also to My creatures like the rest. It will not in any way jeopardize your other work provided only that you have cultivated perfect detachment. You have entertained the desire to live up to 125 years. Its fulfilment or otherwise should not be your concern. Yours is only to understand and do your duty and be careful for nothing.' These are the thoughts that haunt me. It is my third day in this village. The number of patients who come for help is daily increasing. They feel happy and I feel happy in serving them. I am receiving the co-operation of the local people. I know that if I can enter the hearts of the people here, illness will be banished and this village will become a model of cleanliness and health. But if this does not happen, what is that to me? I have only to do the behest of the Master.

Uruli, 25-3-'46

(From Harijansevak)

HOW TO MAKE IT DYNAMIC?

"Violence is bad. I agree with you too that the only substitute for it is constructive activity as symbolized by the Charkha. But the dynamic quality seems to have gone out of it. What should be done to bring out its revolutionary significance?" so asked a friend the other day in the course of a discussion with Gandhiji about the R. I. N. ratings' mutiny. Gandhiji's reply was as brief as it was significant. In one word it was: "Through tapashcharya." By tapashcharya he meant the tapashcharya of knowledge which must be coupled with action for its full expression. The conversation did not proceed further and I doubt whether the friend gave a second thought to the question afterwards. It is however an oft repeated question. It was put to Gandhiji at Calcutta by the Khadi workers of Barkamta. Gandhiji replying said:

FROM PLENTY TO POVERTY

"Dr. Radha Kumud Mukherji in one of his books has quoted Colebrooke as saying that in India, the home of chronic poverty, the spinning wheel is the provider of butter to bread for the poor. The late R. C. Dutt has shown how the prosperity of the East India Company was founded on their trade in Indian textiles. No part of the world, neither China nor Japan, could produce fabrics to equal them. In the early phase the East India Company batted on the exploitation of its monopoly in Indian textiles. Not only did it bring them immense trade profits, it also gave an impetus to British shipping. Later, Lancashire developed its own textile industry following upon a series of mechanical inventions. This brought it into competition with the Indian textile manufactures. The policy of exploitation of the Indian artisans then gave way to that of destruction of their craft.

"An English writer has observed that the history of cotton is the history of civilization. Politics is the handmaid of commerce. Indian history provides an apt illustration of it. In the heyday of our cotton manufactures we used to grow all the cotton for our needs. The cotton seed was fed to the cattle which provided the health giving milk to the people. Agriculture flourished. The lint was turned into beautiful fabrics of which the Jamdanis of Dacca were a specimen. As an off-shoot we had the world-famed dyeing and printing art of Masulipatam. Connoisseurs say that our old indigenous dyes could not be matched by any in the world for their permanence as well as brightness and beauty. All that is gone now. India is today naked. We have to cover her nakedness. If anybody could suggest a better substitute than the spinning wheel for the purpose I would discard the spinning wheel today. But none has been found so far and I dare say none is likely to be found.

TO END SLAVERY

"The question may however be asked: 'How can the Charkha bring India freedom when it could not prevent its loss?' The reply is that in the past Charkha was not linked with the idea of freedom. Nor did it then symbolize the power of non-violence.

In olden days it symbolized our slavery. We had not realized that our progress, prosperity and even freedom depended on the Charkha or else we should have put up a fight and resorted to Satyagraha to save it from destruction. What was lost through our ignorance and apathy has now to be won back through intelligence and knowledge. We have today ceased to think for ourselves. The Government says that Bengal is a pauper province and we mechanically accept the statement. To call a province which boasts of 6½ crores of population as pauper is only to proclaim our own intellectual bankruptcy. Did not the Governor of Bengal observe in a broadcast talk the other day that the cultivator in Bengal remains unemployed for six months in the year? Can any population in the world subsist while remaining idle for half the year? Even if all the water that the rains bring were captured and harnessed to irrigation it would not keep the masses alive if their enforced unemployment for the better part of the year were not removed. Our real malady is not destitution but laziness, apathy and inertia. You may achieve marvels of irrigational engineering. But well-filled granaries alone cannot and will not end our slavery. To end slavery you must overcome the mental and physical inertia of the masses and quicken their intelligence and creative faculty. It is my claim that the universalization of hand-spinning with a full knowledge of all that it stands for alone can bring that about in a sub-continent so vast and varied as India. I have compared spinning to the central sun and the other village crafts to the various constellations in the solar system. The former gives light and warmth to the latter and sustains them. Without it they would not be able to exist."

HAS IT FAILED?

Q. "If Swaraj hangs on the thread of hand-spun yarn, as you say, why have we failed to attain it up till now after a quarter of a century of Khadi work?"

A. "Because our labour was not quickened by knowledge. The peace of the grave makes the latter the house of death. But the peace in the soul makes it the seat of divine intelligence. Similarly, soulless labour symbolizes serfdom. Labour illumined with knowledge symbolizes the will to freedom. There is a world of difference between the two. Khadi workers should understand that Khadi work without the mastery of the science of Khadi will be love's labour lost in terms of Swaraj."

THE ALCHEMY OF KNOWLEDGE

Q. "What do you mean by the science of spinning? What things are included in it?"

A. "I have often said that I can do without food but not without sacrificial spinning. I have also claimed that no one in India has perhaps done his spinning with such unfailing regularity and conscientious diligence as I. And yet I will say that all that by itself cannot take the place of scientific knowledge. Scientific knowledge requires constant probing into the why and wherefore of every little process that you perform. Mere affirmation that in Charkha there is Swaraj and peace is not enough. A scientific mind will not be satisfied with having things scientific just on faith. He will insist on finding a basis in reason. Faith becomes lame when it ventures into matters pertaining to reason. Its field begins where reason's ends. Conclusions based on faith are unshakable whereas those based on reason are liable to be unstable and vulnerable to superior logic. To state the limitation of science is not to belittle it. We cannot do without either — each in its own place.

SCIENTIFIC MIND AND KHADI WORK

"When I first discovered the spinning wheel it was purely through intuition. It was not backed by knowledge so much so that I confused Charkha with Kargha i. e. handloom. Later on, however, I tried to work out its possibilities with the help of the late Maganlal Gandhi. For instance, the question arose: Why should the spindle be made of iron, not brass? Should it be thin or thick? What would be the proper thickness? We began with mill spindles. Then, spindle holders used to be bamboo and wood. Later we came to leather and gut bearings. It was found that spindles got easily bent and were difficult to straighten. So we tried to make them out of knitting needles and ultimately of umbrella wires. All this called for the exercise of the inventive faculty and scientific research.

"A Khadi worker with a scientific mind will not stop there. 'Why Charkha, why not the spinning mill?' he will ask himself. The reply will be that everybody cannot own a spinning mill. If people depend on spinning mills for their clothing, whoever controls the spinning mills will control them and thus there will be an end to individual liberty. Today anyone can reduce the whole of London and New York to submission within 24 hours by cutting off their electric and water supply. Individual liberty and inter-dependence are both essential for life in society. Only a Robinson Crusoe can afford to be all self-sufficient. When a man has done all he can for the satisfaction of his essential requirements he will seek the co-operation of his neighbours for the rest. That will be true co-operation. Thus a scientific study of the spinning wheel will lead on to sociology. The spinning wheel will not become a power for the liberation of India in our hands unless we have made a deep study of the various sciences related to it. It will then not only make India free but point the way to the whole world.

DETACHMENT AND COURAGE

"Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru has very aptly remarked that at one time India was not lacking in the inventive spirit but today it has become dormant. Once one gets the scientific outlook it will be reflected in every act of his, in his eating, drinking, rest, sleep — everything will be scientifically regulated and with a full appreciation of its why and wherefore. Finally, a scientific mind must have detachment or else it will land itself into the lunatic asylum. The Upanishad says that whatever there is in this universe is from Him. It belongs to Him and must be surrendered to Him and then enjoyed. Enjoyment and sorrow, success and failure will then be the same to you."

"One thing more," concluded Gandhiji. "Supposing the tyrant wants to destroy the spinning wheel itself. What then? My reply is that in that event we should ourselves perish with the spinning wheel and not live to witness its destruction. For every Khadi worker who thus sacrifices himself thousands will arise to take his place. That act of his will set the final seal of victory on the cause he represents."

Poona, 6-3-'46

PYARELAL

HAND-WEAVING AND HAND-SPINNING

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Shri Jajuji writes to say that whilst on the one hand, hand-spun yarn is piling up, on the other, handloom weavers are day by day giving up hand-spun yarn in preference to mill yarn. An appeal to the weavers through the columns of 'Harijan', whether in English or any of the Indian languages, will be good for nothing. Hardly any weaver reads 'Harijan' and if an attempt is made to read it out to him, he will not take interest in it. Hence the task of speaking to the weavers on the suicidal effect of abandoning hand-spun yarn devolves upon the devoted heads of Charkha Sangh workers. They have to reason out to the weavers how they will be ultimately responsible for killing their own occupation by excluding hand-spun yarn. As soon as the mill-owners can do so profitably, they will certainly stop selling mill yarn and will weave it themselves. They are not philanthropists. They have set up mills in order to make money. They will stop selling their yarn to handloom weavers, if they find weaving it more profitable. Therefore, it is a question of time when handloom weavers will be starved. These are really fed by hand-spinners even as they in their turn are fed by handloom weavers. They are twins complementary of each other. This fact should be brought home to the weavers by the Charkha Sangh. With loving patience and knowledge they should try to appreciate the difficulties of the weavers and learn how to remove them. Acharya Vinoba has pointed out one remedy namely to double and twist the yarn at the same time that the cones are unwound. If this practice becomes universal, there would be no untwisted hand-spun yarn available for weaving. It is found by experience that twisted hand-spun yarn is any day as weavable as mill-spun yarn, if indeed it is not more so. Since the time of my discharge from my last imprisonment, I have been proclaiming as vehemently as I can that the workers should master the art of weaving as well as they have mastered the art of spinning. Had they not taken to spinning themselves they would not have solved the many difficulties of spinners. They have now to make up for past neglect, however unconscious it may have been, by learning the art of weaving and by practising it assiduously. Then and then only will they understand the difficulties that professional weavers experience in weaving hand-spun yarn and be able to solve them. Uruli, 24-3-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

HARIJAN

March 31

1946

CAPITALISM AND STRIKES

(By M. K. Gandhi)

How should capital behave when labour strikes? This question is in the air and has great importance at the present moment. One way is that of suppression named or nicknamed 'American'. It consists in suppression of labour through organized goondaism. Everybody would consider this as wrong and destructive. The other way, right and honourable, consists in considering every strike on its merits and giving labour its due—not what capital considers as due but what labour itself would so consider and enlightened public opinion acclaim as just.

One preliminary question will justly arise: why should there be a strike at all in any well-regulated concern? Strikes ought to be impossible when there is perfect understanding between capital and labour, mutual respect and recognition of equality. And since differences there would be sometimes between employers and employed even in the best-regulated concerns, why should there not be a system of arbitration between the parties so that they will always readily carry out in perfect good faith awards of arbitrators?

But we have to consider things not as they should be but as they are. As time progresses, the labour world is getting more insistent in its demands which are daily increasing, and it does not hesitate to resort to violence in its impatient enforcement of those demands. New methods of enforcing them are being employed. Workers do not hesitate to injure the property of the employers, dislocate machinery, harass old men and women who would not join the strike and forcibly keep out blacklegs. In these circumstances, how are the employers to behave?

In my opinion, employers and employed are equal partners even if employees are not considered superior. But what we see today is the reverse. The reason is that the employers harness intelligence on their side. They have the superior advantage which concentration of capital brings with it and they know how to make use of it. One individual rupee has very little potency but when money combines as capital, the combine derives a power different from and far in excess of the mere sum total of the individual rupees. A million drops individually are negligible. But in combination they make the ocean carrying on its bosom a fleet of ocean hounds. Whilst capital in India is fairly organized, labour is still in a more or less disorganized condition in spite of unions and their federation. Therefore, it lacks the power that true combination gives.

Moreover, it lacks intelligence, so much so that individuals fight against individuals, unions against unions. Lack of intelligence leads to its exploitation by selfish and unscrupulous men even to the point of creating and promoting mischief. They know no better, being ignorant of the secret of non-violence. The net result is that the workers suffer. If labour were to understand the working of non-violence, the power generated by combination would any day exceed the power of dead metal in the hands of a few capitalists.

Hence my advice to the employers would be that they should willingly regard workers as the real owners of the concerns which they fancy they have created. They should further regard it as their duty to equip the employees with sound education that would draw out the intelligence dormant in them and gladly promote and welcome the power that this combination of the workers gives them.

This noble work cannot be done in a day by the employers. Meanwhile, what should those do who have to face the destruction wrought by strikers in their concerns? I would unhesitatingly advise such employers that they should at once offer the strikers full control of the concern which is as much the strikers' as theirs. They will vacate their premises not in a huff but because it is right, and to show their goodwill they would offer the employees the assistance of their engineers and other skilled staff. The employers will find in the end that they will lose nothing. Indeed their right action will disarm opposition and they will earn the blessings of their men. They will have made proper use of their capital. I would not consider such action as benevolent. It would be an intelligent use by the capitalists of their resources and honest dealing in regard to the employees whom they would have converted into honourable partners.

Uruli, 23-3-46

AN ENGLISHMAN'S DIFFICULTY

"However much we may want to be friendly, the past tradition clings round your necks and drives you to desperation," said another member of the F. A. U. who met Gandhiji at Calcutta. "It seems to me," he added, "that there is hardly any hope of giving to a young Bengali student an idea of the better side of Englishmen unless perhaps he is transferred to England." The atmosphere in India was so poisoned that he wondered if it would not be better for Englishmen not to attempt to come to work in India just now but to wait for better times.

"Any friend, who is a real friend," replied Gandhiji, "and who comes in a spirit of service, not as a superior, is bound to be welcome. India, when she has come into her own will need all such assistance. The distrust of Englishmen, as you say, is there. It won't disappear even by transporting Indian students to England. You have got to understand it and live it down. It has its roots in history. The late Charlie Andrews and I were bed fellows. There was scarcely a thought in our mind which we did not share. He even adopted Indian dress though sometimes with grotesque results. But even he could not escape suspicion. He was even dubbed "a spy". His was a very sensitive spirit. He suffered unspeakable anguish under these unmerited attacks and I was hard put to it to dispel the baseless distrust. 'If he is a spy, I am a spy,' I said to these critics. In the end C. F. A.'s spirit triumphed.

"Pearson was C. F. Andrews' disciple and friend. He too came in for his share of distrust. Then there is Stokes. "If I am to serve India I must become an Indian," he said to himself and married a Christian Rajput. He was boycotted by the Rajputs. The Government distrusted him too in the beginning. But he has lived down the distrust of both the Government and Indians."

"If then," observed Gandhiji, "even a C. F. Andrews and a Stokes and others had to labour under distrust, for you to be distrusted may not be wondered at. So far Indians have known Englishmen only as members of the ruling race—supercilious when they were not patronizing. The man in the street makes no distinction between such an Englishman and a good, humble European, between the Empire-builder Englishman of the old type that he has known and the new type that is now coming into being, burning to make reparation for what his forefathers did. Therefore, if one has not got the fire of sacrifice in him I would say to him: 'Do not come to India just now.' But if you are cast in a heroic mould there will be no difficulty. You will in the end be taken at your worth if you persevere. Anyway those of you who are here have no reason for going back."

The same friend was able to elicit from Gandhiji what he considered to be the weak spots in the Indusco Plan of Chinese Co-operatives. Firstly, the Indusco was a product of abnormal times. Its production was war time and war purposes production stimulated by the Japanese blockade. Secondly, it was organized by foreign missionary enterprise and their work was tainted by the proselytization motive. "If you try to merely copy the Chinese Co-operatives in India you will end in miserable failure. Here you have to work among Indian Christians. The temperament is different, the character is different, and the circumstances are different. Co-operation which is rooted in the soil always works. You have therefore to find out for yourself what type of co-operative is best suited to the Indian temperament and soil. Even those who have become converts to orthodox Christianity are today veering round."

"By 'veering round' you mean going back?"

"Yes, I mean going back to real Christianity, to Christ, not Western Christianity. They are beginning to realize that Jesus was an Asiatic. Having seen this they are reading their Bible through Indian eyes. You should study the meaning of Indian Christianity through J. C. Kumarappa's book 'Practice and Precepts of Jesus'."

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. What to do when the local Congress machinery refuses to act or work in a way which is effective?

A. A person who is a real Congressman will in such circumstances himself act singly or in co-operation with others purely in a spirit of service and give all the credit to the Congress organization. Supposing that many persons acted thus, Congress would rise from day to day. Ineffective workers would be shamed into becoming effective, the Congress machinery always remaining clean and intact. "In a spirit of service" is here the operative phrase. If the spirit is that of aggrandizement, although the work done may be effective, credit will probably go to the aggressor and the Congress will lose. That the aggressor will lose in the end need not be stressed.

Q. What should a Congress worker do when he faces a situation at a place which is outside his area of work?

A. Areas are prescribed for workers for their weakness, not for their strength. For a strong Congress worker all India is the area of his work and he will be found every time in the area where he is wanted most. Naturally he will be never regarded as an intruder or as an officious man. Appreciation of the service will be uppermost in the minds of all. It would be ludicrous and a sign of impotence, if a Congressman passing through an area not his own and finding a battle royal between two factions does not interpose himself between them, even at the cost of his life, on the untenable plea that the trouble was outside his area.

Q. Can the same person take up parliamentary work, constructive work as distinguished from the parliamentary and the organization work of the Congress, in addition to working for his own livelihood?

A. He must be a modern Hercules who can effectively do these things at the same time. I can conceive the possibility of the same person managing all these departments with a staff of efficient secretaries and clerks working under him. The point of the question, however, is wholly different. Division of labour is a necessity. One-man-show is always undesirable and is a positive hindrance to a system of organization. An organization like the British kingship is not personal. "The king is dead. Long live the king" Hence the saying, 'the king can do no wrong'. A king as an individual may be a rascal but personified as an organization he is perfect in the sense the word 'perfection' is understood in a given society. The moral is that however inefficient the persons in charge may be in the beginning stages, in a progressive organization persons taking charge should be above board and should put the organization first, themselves last. If an attempt is made to organize work through rascals, the organization will always have rascals at its head.

Q. August 1942 has brought a psychological change in the public mind. They do not await orders from the Congress for observance of days, etc. Other parties often take advantage of this spontaneous effort and associate their programme with it, while official local Congress either keeps mum or inactive. It also often happens that programmes and policies as laid down by the Working Committee are not automatically adopted by the Provincial Congress Committees or are sometimes worked out half-heartedly. Some also refuse to create a machinery for it, till they are officially called upon to do so. In such circumstances, what is expected of Congressmen?

A. This is a good question. If Congressmen have really learnt to act for themselves since 1942 August, it is a great thing. But I do not believe it. Those only act for themselves who think for themselves. It does not matter whether in doing so they make mistakes. A child often stumbles before it begins to walk. Therefore, the effort ceases to be spontaneous or individual when one associates with any programme that comes his way. The secret of the August resolution was that when the Congress as an organization ceased to function every Congressman became his own master, which is wholly different from becoming a pawn in any other person's or group's or party's game.

The second part of the question shows also that 1942 did not teach Congressmen to think and act independently. If they had learnt that lesson truly and well, any programme laid down by the Working Committee would be followed by Congressmen wholeheartedly and the response from Provincial Committees and all constituent elements would be spontaneous, such that the whole organization would move like one man. Such was my expectation in 1942. That it was not so fulfilled is a matter of history. That the people acted somehow without being paralysed by the wholesale onslaught of the Government stands to their credit. How much more creditable it would have been if they had fully carried out the policy of non-violence explicitly laid down in that resolution? If my argument is correct, it follows that Congressmen with understanding would follow implicitly the Working Committee's resolutions without reference to the action of their neighbours. When organizational effort stops or is neutralized or becomes ineffective, every individual belonging to it holds himself responsible for the activity of his organization and then gradually builds it up.

Q. When sporadic strikes are such as cannot be supported by the Congress, what should Congressmen and the public do to put an end to them?

A. In the first place, if the Congress organization were complete there would be no sporadic strikes and any other strike would be unjustified for the simple reason that a people's organization must shoulder the burden of every justifiable strike within the sphere of that organization. But today unhappily the Congress, powerful as it is, has not attained that supreme position. Hence every sporadic strike has to be judged on merits irrespective of the party that has made itself responsible for it.

And when a strike is indefensible on merits the Congress and the public should unequivocally condemn it. The natural result would be that the men on strike would go back to work. If the strike is justified the institution against which it has been declared would be likewise condemned if it employs blacklegs or other questionable means to force strikers into submission.

Uruli, 23-3-'46

Notes

Wastefulness

Correspondence continues to pour in saying that stored food material being declared unfit for human consumption is thrown away. Skimmed milk also is thrown away for want of custom and condensed milk is lying idle owing to ignorance. Accumulation of food material at the ports will not mitigate distress unless it is promptly taken to the places where it is immediately required. Worse than this however is the triple waste going on now side by side with ever growing famine conditions. All such waste takes place for lack of a living contact between the people and the rulers.

Uruli, 24-3-'46

M. K. G.

A. I. V. I. A. News

1. Up to 31st December 1945, members of the A. I. V. I. A. used to get the "Gram Udyog Patrika" free of charge. But as expenses have gone up, it is proposed to charge all members except those who are on actual field work half rates.

2. The following books have been published since the Board last met:

1. Palm Gur
2. Views of Maganwadi
3. Soap Making
4. Dhotijama

3. Shri Bharatan Kumarappa has asked to be relieved of his duties as Assistant Secretary. The Board has accepted his resignation with much regret. His loss after ten years of valuable work will be greatly felt by the A. I. V. I. A.

4. It is proposed to run a rural health centre in Sindhi village either under the aegis of the Kasturba Fund or independently.

[From the minutes of the meeting of the Board of Management]

A. K.

Economics of Khadi

By M. K. Gandhi

Price Rs. 4, Postage 13 Annas

Constructive Programme

Its Meaning and Place

(Revised & Enlarged Edition)

By M. K. Gandhi

Price 0-6-0 Postage 2 Annas

Cent Per Cent Swadeshi

By M. K. Gandhi

Price Rs. 2, Postage 5 Annas

Constructive Programme

—Some Suggestions—

By Babu Rajendra Prasad

Price 0-8-0, Postage 2 Annas

GANDHIJI'S COMMUNISM

Gandhiji has often claimed in the course of his discussions with Communist and Socialist friends that he is a better Communist or a Socialist than they. Their goal is identical. The difference in regard to the means and the technique employed is however fundamental. Changing the structure of society through violence and untruth has no attraction for him because he knows that it will not benefit the dumb millions of India. During the period of his detention in the Aga Khan palace, he studied Communist literature. He has a scientific mind and the knowledge of Communism and Socialism picked up from his talks with friends and casual reading did not satisfy him. He read Das Capital and went through some of the other writings of Marx as also of Engels, Lenin and Stalin. He read some books about the Reds in China too and at the end of it was convinced more than ever that Communism of his conception was the only thing that could bring relief to the suffering humanity. In his Ashram and the institutions that are being run under his guidance and inspiration, the ruling principle is: "To each according to his need, from each according to his capacity." His Ashrams are thus themselves experiments in Communism based on non-violence and Indian village conditions. In Sevagram Ashram the dictum is followed that the inmates are there only on the sufferance of the village people. A cantankerous fellow felled some Ashram trees for his use as fuel though he had no title to them. Another encroached upon the right of way through his field although he had accepted compensation for it. No legal redress was applied for. An announcement was made that the Ashram people were there only for the service of the village folk and that they would go away elsewhere if the latter did not want them. Ultimately the trouble makers were persuaded by their fellow villagers to behave reasonably. In Sabarmati Ashram the women inmates not only merged their domestic kitchens into the communal kitchen and continued to run it but were even persuaded not only to take children other than their own into their families and to look after them like their own but also to let their children be looked after by others. Here was an experiment of pulling down of the walls and emancipation of women without the disintegration of family life—a veritable revolution less the anarchy. But as a friend humorously remarked after dining in the common kitchen of the Talimi Sangh, which feeds more than a hundred individuals, "Gandhiji calls it a rasoda (kitchen) and it sounds commonplace; the Communists would call it a 'Commune' and everybody would be impressed by it." Did not the good old knight of Addison wonder how a certain play could be a tragedy since there was not a line in it but he could understand?

MEANING OF ECONOMIC EQUALITY

"What exactly do you mean by economic equality," Gandhiji was asked at the Constructive Workers' Conference during his recent tour of Madras, "and what is statutory trusteeship as conceived by you?"

Gandhiji's reply was that economic equality of his conception did not mean that everyone would literally have the same amount. It simply meant that everybody should have enough for his or her needs. For instance, he required two shawls in winter whereas his grand nephew Kanu Gandhi who stayed with him and was like his own son did not require any warm clothing whatsoever. Gandhiji required goat's milk, oranges and other fruit. Kanu could do with ordinary food. He envied Kanu but there was no point in it. Kanu was a young man whereas he was an old man of 76. The monthly expense of his food was far more than that of Kanu but that did not mean that there was economic inequality between them. The elephant needs a thousand times more food than the ant, but that is not an indication of inequality. So the real meaning of economic equality was: "To each according to his need." That was the definition of Marx. If a single man demanded as much as a man with wife and four children that would be a violation of economic equality.

"Let no one try to justify the glaring difference between the classes and the masses, the prince and the pauper, by saying that the former need more. That will be idle sophistry and a travesty of my argument," he continued. "The contrast between the rich and the poor today is a painful sight. The poor villagers are exploited by the foreign government and also by their own countrymen—the city-dwellers. They produce the food and go hungry. They produce milk and their children have to go without it. It is disgraceful. Everyone must have balanced diet, a decent house to live in, facilities for the education of one's children and adequate medical relief." That constituted his picture of economic equality. He did not want to taboo everything above and beyond the bare necessities but they must come after the essential needs of the poor are satisfied. First things must come first.

STATUTORY TRUSTEESHIP

As for the present owners of wealth they would have to make their choice between class war and voluntarily converting themselves into trustees of their wealth. They would be allowed to retain the stewardship of their possessions and to use their talent to increase the wealth, not for their own sakes, but for the sake of the nation and therefore without exploitation. The state would regulate the rate of commission which they would get commensurate with the service rendered and its value to society. Their children would inherit the stewardship only if they proved their fitness for it.

"Supposing India becomes a free country tomorrow," he concluded, "all the capitalists will have an opportunity of becoming statutory trustees." But such a statute will not be imposed from above. It will have to come from below. When the people understand the implications of trusteeship and the atmosphere is ripe for it, the people themselves, beginning with gram panchayats, will begin to introduce such statutes. Such a thing coming from below is easy to swallow. Coming from above, it is liable to prove a dead weight.

HIS QUARREL WITH THE SOCIALISTS

Q. "What is the difference between your technique and that of the Communists or Socialists for realizing the goal of economic equality?"

A. "The Socialists and Communists say they can do nothing to bring about economic equality today. They will just carry on propaganda in its favour and to that end they believe in generating and accentuating hatred. They say, 'When they get control over the State they will enforce equality.' Under my plan the State will be there to carry out the will of the people, not to dictate to them or force them to do its will. I shall bring about economic equality through non-violence, by converting the people to my point of view by harnessing the forces of love as against hatred. I will not wait till I have converted the whole society to my view but will straightaway make a beginning with myself. It goes without saying that I cannot hope to bring about economic equality of my conception, if I am the owner of fifty motor cars or even of ten bighas of land. For that I have to reduce myself to the level of the poorest of the poor. That is what I have been trying to do for the last fifty years or more, and so I claim to be a foremost Communist although I make use of cars and other facilities offered to me by the rich. They have no hold on me and I can shed them at a moment's notice, if the interests of the masses demand it."

THE NON-VIOLENT SANCTION

Q. "What is the place of Satyagraha in making the rich realize their duty towards the poor?"

A. "The same as against the foreign power. Satyagraha is a law of universal application. Beginning with the family its use can be extended to every other circle. Supposing a land-owner exploits his tenants and mulcts them of the fruit of their toil by appropriating it to his own use. When they expostulate with him he does not listen and raises objections that he requires so much for his wife, so much for his children and so on. The tenants or those who have espoused their cause and have influence will make an appeal to his wife to expostulate with her husband. She would probably say that for herself she does not need his exploited money. The children will say likewise that they would earn for themselves what they need.

"Supposing further that he listens to nobody or that his wife and children combine against the tenants, they will not submit. They will quit if asked to do so but they will make it clear that the land belongs to him who tills it. The owner cannot till all the land himself and he will have to give in to their just demands. It may, however, be that the tenants are replaced by others. Agitation short of violence will then continue till the replacing tenants see their error and make common cause with the evicted tenants. Thus Satyagraha is a process of educating public opinion, such that it covers all the elements of society and in the end makes itself irresistible. Violence interrupts the process and prolongs the real revolution of the whole social structure."

The conditions necessary for the success of Satyagraha are: (1) The Satyagrahi should not have any hatred in his heart against the opponent. (2) The issue must be true and substantial. (3) The Satyagrahi must be prepared to suffer till the end for his cause.

Poona, 4-3-'46

PYARELAL

COMMUNAL UNITY AND NON-UNTOUCHABILITY IN THE I. N. A.

The Azad Hind movement in East Asia solved many problems. And one of them was the major and intricate problem of communal unity. Although efforts towards this direction were made ever since the inception of the movement in 1942, it became a reality only after the arrival of Netaji Subhash Chandra Bose. There was another question and that was of untouchability, though on a minor scale. In East Asia, the question of untouchability did not confront us so much as it did or does in India. Anyhow, this ill too was remedied as a result of universal training of Indians in the I. N. A. camps and offices after Netaji's arrival.

What were the ways and means adopted to achieve these objects may be a long story. But the achievement can be attributed to three main factors: Firstly, absence of the third power; secondly, Netaji's direct approach to the problems and thirdly, Netaji's apparent ignoring of the problems.

Now, what the people may be interested in, is how this achievement of communal unity and eradication of untouchability was evident. For that, I may pen the following, covering both the combatant and non-combatant sections of the militant organization of Azad Hind.

With the elimination of the British power from East Asia, the communal differences among Indians also started fading away. The first scene of communal harmony was observed in Bangkok in June 1942, when about 120 representatives of the Indian community in East Asia gathered there for Conference. There were among them Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, Christians and others. They stayed together, ate together, and resolved together to organize the Indian community into one body and under one banner.

Then came February 1943, and Gandhiji's historic fast. Throughout East Asia, rallies were held where all Indians belonging to different religions and of different castes and creeds gathered and demanded release of the Mahatma. Prayers were held in temples, mosques, gurdwaras and churches for the long life of Gandhiji. That presented an admirable and thrilling scene of communal unity.

Then came the advent of Netaji, and along with that a revolutionary change in society and in the organization. Netaji had asked for 'Total Mobilization' for the coming armed struggle for India's freedom. To this call of Netaji, the response was universal from all sections of the community—from Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, Christians and others. They offered their services as combatant and non-combatant volunteers.

Some of these volunteers were absorbed in the Azad Hind Sangh, the Party behind the Azad Hind Fauj and the Azad Hind Government. Others — a majority of the volunteers — joined the ranks of the Fauj. The Sangh had a network of branches throughout East Asia. In every branch workers consisting of Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs and Christians worked together. Wherever there were large numbers of workers, as was the case in places like Bangkok, Singapore, Rangoon, Saigon, Hongkong, they used to live in messes. These were joint. There was no separate Hindu, Muslim, Sikh or Christian mess. There used to be one kitchen for all members of all religions. Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs and Christians lived together, ate at the same table and worked together.

Same was the case in the I. N. A.. Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, Christians used to live in the same barracks. There were Brahmins, as well as Harijans, there were Maulvis as well as Ahirs; there were caste-Hindus as well as the so-called untouchables in the same barracks. There were no separate langars. All the soldiers ate together. The same rations were supplied to the soldiers and officers. Beef and pork were prohibited in the messes of the Azad Hind Sangh and the Azad Hind Fauj. There was no problem of jhatka and halal.

RAMSINGH RAWAL

[Note: Except for repetitions, the foregoing is published as it was received. The information is revealing. The natural question is: now that these soldiers have returned, will the same comradeship persist? It ought to. M. K. G.]

Bombay, 14-3-'46

IDEALS FOR THE I. N. A.

Major General Shah Nawaz and Col. Sehgal took occasion during Gandhiji's stay in Bombay to discuss with him at length the question of the future of the discharged I. N. A. men. The men were anxious, they said, to distinguish themselves in national service along non-violent lines, but unless they were suitably absorbed in civil activities and properly guided they might be exploited and led into devious ways by unscrupulous agencies. What ideal should they follow, they asked. Gandhiji repeated to them the advice he had previously given to some discharged I. N. A. men who had met him in Madras. He had told them that it should be derogatory to the dignity and self-respect of a soldier to live upon charity. The ideal which they should set before themselves was to earn their bread by honest industry. The I. N. A. Relief Fund was there but it would be wrong to use it for providing doles. He described to them how in South Africa he had provided relief to dependents of Satyagraha prisoners by settling them on Tolstoy Farm where they had to labour according to capacity. The merit of this method was that it could be multiplied to any degree without proving costly and burdensome. The real test of the I. N. A., he told them, was to come only now. In the fighting line there was the romance and incitement, not so in civil life. The country was today faced with the spectre of famine. Would they help the people to fight it with the same courage, cohesion, doggedness and resourcefulness which they had shown on the battlefield? Would they show the same diligence, mastery and skill in handling the spade, the pickaxe and the hoe as they did in shouldering the rifle? Digging of wells and breaking stony ground to grow food and plying the wheel and the shuttle to clothe the naked was the nation's need today. Would they respond to the call? They had physical stamina, discipline and, what was more, a feeling of solidarity and oneness, untainted by narrow communalism. All that ought to put them in a singular position of vantage for introducing non-violent discipline and organization among the masses.

Constructive activity could absorb every one of the I. N. A. men who was willing and worthy of his name. If they took up that work, not one of them need or would remain unemployed.

As one listened while Gandhiji outlined the ideals for the I. N. A. men one was irresistibly reminded of the following description by a distinguished English historian of another national army that has left its mark on history. The reference is to Cromwell's Ironsides:

"These persons, sober, moral, diligent and accustomed to reflect had been induced to take up arms, not by the pressure of want, not by the love of novelty and license, not by the arts of the recruiting officers, but by religious and political zeal, mingled with the desire of distinction and promotion. The boast of the soldiers was . . . that they were no janissaries but freeborn Englishmen who had of their own accord put their lives in jeopardy for the liberties and religion of England and whose right and duty was to watch over the welfare of the nation which they had saved.

"In war this strange force was irresistible . . . Other leaders have maintained order as strict, other leaders have inspired their followers with zeal as ardent, but in his (Cromwell's) camp alone the most rigid discipline was found in company with the fiercest enthusiasm. His troops moved to victory with the precision of machines, while burning with the wildest fanaticism of crusaders.

"But that which chiefly distinguished the armies of Cromwell from other armies was the austere morality and the fear of God which pervaded all ranks . . . In that singular camp no oath was heard, no drunkenness or gambling was seen, and during the long dominion of the soldiery, the property of the peaceable citizen and the honour of women were held sacred. . . ."

But their greatest victory, records the same historian, was won not in fighting but when they had ceased to fight.

"The troops were now to be disbanded. Fifty thousand men, accustomed to the profession of arms, were at once thrown on the world: and experience seemed to warrant the belief that this change would produce much misery and crime, that the discharged veterans would be seen begging in every street, or that they would be driven by hunger to pillage. But no such result followed. In a few months there remained not a trace indicating that the most formidable army in the world had just been absorbed into the mass of the community. The Royalists themselves confessed that, in every department of honest industry, the discarded warriors prospered beyond other men, that none was charged with any theft or robbery, that none was heard to ask an alms, or that if a baker, a mason, or a waggoner attracted notice by his diligence and sobriety, he was in all probability one of Oliver's old soldiers."

Poona, 20-3-'46

PYARELAL

FAMINES AND BIRTH RATE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Major Gen. Sir John McGaw, President, India Office Medical Board, is reported by a correspondent to have said :

"Famines in India will recur; in fact India is today facing perpetual famine. Unless something is done to decrease the birth rate in India, the country will be leading straight for a calamity."

The correspondent asks what I have to say on this grave issue.

For me, this and some other ways of explaining away famines in India is to divert the attention from the only cause of recurring famines in this benighted land. I have stated and repeat here that famines of India are not a calamity descended upon us from nature but is a calamity created by the rulers — whether through ignorant indifference or whether consciously or otherwise does not matter. Prevention against drought is not beyond human effort and ingenuity. Such effort has not proved ineffective in other countries. In India a sustained intelligent effort has never been made.

The bogey of increasing birth rate is not a new thing. It has been often trotted out. Increase in population is not and ought not to be regarded as a calamity to be avoided. Its regulation or restriction by artificial methods is a calamity of the first grade whether we know it or not. It is bound to degrade the race, if it becomes universal which, thank God, it is never likely to be. Pestilence, wars and famines are cursed antidotes against cursed lust which is responsible for unwanted children. If we would avoid this three-fold curse we would avoid too the curse of unwanted children by the sovereign remedy of self-control. The evil consequences of artificial methods are being seen by discerning men even now. Without however encroaching upon the moral domain, let me say that propagation of the race rabbit-wise must undoubtedly be stopped; but not so as to bring greater evils in its train. It should be stopped by methods which in themselves ennoble the race. In other words, it is all a matter of proper education which would embrace every department of life; and dealing with one curse will take in its orbit all the others. A way is not to be avoided because it is upward and therefore uphill. Man's upward progress necessarily means ever increasing difficulty, which is to be welcomed.

Poona, 19-3-'46

CONGRESSMEN APATHETIC

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. "I am glad that you have expressed yourself in the matter of opening a temple to Harijans in Nellore. It should open the eyes of many Congressmen. The reason given for unwillingness to open the temple was that it might adversely affect the chances of Congress success in the elections."

A. If this represents the general sentiment, it augurs ill for Congress. Even a popular democratic India-wide organization like the Congress cannot afford to be untrue to its policy (if it may not be called creed) of removing untouchability root and branch. Throughout my close contact with the Congress, ever since my return to India in 1915, I have found that the more the Congress has held to its main purpose, the more popular it has become. A democratic organization has to dare to do the right at all cost. He who panders to the weaknesses of a people degrades both himself and the people and leads them not to democratic but mob rule. The line of demarcation between democracy and mobocracy is often thin but rigid and stronger than steel unbreakable. The one leads to life and progress, the other is death pure and simple. In the ultimate analysis, the cause of our fall is to be sought from within and not from without. All the empires of the world could not have bent us, if as a people we had been above suspicion and temptation. This may not be regarded as a mere truism. If we recognize the fundamental facts, we would be true and patient and able to deal with whatever difficulty that may face us whether from within or without. Preparedness to lose all elections rather than sacrifice a principle, is the surest way to success at every election. The results prove that the policy laid down by the Congress in 1920 has led to success from stage to stage, but only to the extent that the Congress has been true to the fundamentals of the policy it accepted during that eventful year. Untouchability is to go, if India is to live and thrive as a nation.

Poona, 21-3-'46

CONTENTS	PAGE
WHY BHANGI QUARTERS? ... M. K. GANDHI	57
WHY ONE MORE BURDEN? ... M. K. GANDHI	57
HOW TO MAKE IT DYNAMIC? ... PYARELAL	58
HAND-WEAVING AND HAND-SPINNING ... M. K. GANDHI	59
CAPITALISM AND STRIKES ... M. K. GANDHI	60
AN ENGLISHMAN'S DIFFICULTY ... PYARELAL	60
QUESTION BOX ... M. K. GANDHI	61
GANDHIJ'S COMMUNISM ... PYARELAL	63
COMMUNAL UNITY AND NON-UNTOUCHABILITY IN THE I. N. A. ... RAMSINGH RAWAL	64
IDEALS FOR THE I. N. A. ... PYARELAL	65
FAMINES AND BIRTH RATE ... M. K. GANDHI	66
CONGRESSMEN APATHETIC ... M. K. GANDHI	66
NOTES:
WASTEFULNESS ... M. K. G.	62
A. I. V. I. A. NEWS ... A. K.	62

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

10 Pages

VOL. X, No. 9]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, APRIL 7, 1946

[ TWO ANNAS

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. Horse racing is going on in many important cities. It is alike a lure for high and low, rich and poor, and it leads to moral degradation and in some cases penury. Many Princes spend lakhs of their people's money on buying race horses. What steps should our new governments take to check this evil?

A. There is no doubt whatsoever about the evil. The good it is supposed to do is extremely doubtful. And at this time of growing distress in the country it is criminal. The new national governments can do a great deal to check the evil. But let us recognize their limitations. Being popular, i. e. people's governments, they will never be able to go far in advance of popular opinion. That is specially a function belonging to reformers. But these governments can certainly, by their own example, rob the evil of the stamp of fashion that the bureaucracy has set upon it even to the point of wasting public money on the luxury. The Princes will copy the example of good manners that the national governments may set.

Q. We find that the Congress is reluctant to select women representatives on a large scale for elective bodies. It is surely just and necessary that more women are taken into the various bodies. How would you deal with the question?

A. I am not enamoured of equality or any other proportion in such matters. Merit should be the only test. Seeing however that it has been the custom to decry women, the contrary custom should be to prefer women, merit being equal, to men even if the preference should result in men being entirely displaced by women. It would be a dangerous thing to insist on membership on the ground merely of sex. Women and for that matter any group should disdain patronage. They should seek justice, never favours. Therefore, the proper thing is for women as indeed for men to advance the spread not of English or Western education among them but such education on general lines through their provincial languages as will fit them for the numerous duties of citizenship. For men to take a lead in this much needed reform would be not a matter of favour but a simple act of belated justice due to women.

Uruli, 30-3-46

WEEKLY LETTER—I FIVE DAYS IN BOMBAY

WHAT IS BEAUTIFUL?

"Won't you ask people to grow flowers on a small piece of land? Colour and beauty is necessary to the soul as food is to the body," asked Agathia Harrison twitting Gandhiji on his suggestion to Seth Rameshwar-das Birla to dig up the flower beds in his terrace garden in Birla House, Bombay, and grow vegetables instead. "No," replied Gandhiji. "I won't. Why can't you see the beauty of colour in vegetables? And then, there is beauty in the speckless sky. But no, you want the colours of the rainbow which is a mere optical illusion. We have been taught to believe that what is beautiful need not be useful and what is useful cannot be beautiful. I want to show that what is useful can also be beautiful." And so the vegetables were planted where flowers grew and I do not think that anybody's aesthetic sense has suffered any loss as a result.

A MOMENTOUS STEP

The same passion for essentials and utter indifference to the outward trappings was reflected in his insistence on drafting the resolutions for the Working Committee this time in Hindustani, an English translation being provided alongside for the convenience of those members who did not know Hindustani well enough. The Congress President was enthusiastic over the change. He took a momentous step when he decided that hereafter all the resolutions of the Working Committee shall be in Hindustani in the first instance and the original Hindustani text would be made available to the Press. The chief difficulty is about transmission over the wires. For the time being it can only be overcome by putting Hindustani messages into Roman script. It is a pity and a shame that our news services are not equipped for transmission of news in Hindustani. Any news service agency that sets up an inland telegraphic news service in Hindustani will steal a big march over its rivals. One news agency, I understand, intends doing so.

IN THE EVENING OF HIS LIFE

Although the bulk of his time during his five days' stay in Bombay was taken up with work in connection with the Working Committee's meetings, he found time to introduce to the Bombay public his latest born, i. e., the project of establishing a Nature Cure Centre for the poor. "What has been a hobby with me for the last fifty years has now become a passion," he remarked in a letter to the Sardar recently. "If I find that I have a talent for the service of the poor and do not make full use of it I shall be set down as a fool," he remarked to another friend. And so at seventysix in the evening of his life, he has decided to add one more to his many activities.

WHAT IS NATURE CURE ?

And why has it gripped him like this ? He explained the difference between the Nature Cure system of his conception and the other systems of cure to a casual visitor who saw him at Birla House. "In the case of the ordinary method of treatment the patient comes to the doctor to take drugs that would cure him. The doctors prescribe the drug. With the relief of abnormal symptoms in the patient his function ends and with that his interest in the patient. The Nature Cure man does not 'sell a cure' to the patient. He teaches him the right way of living in his home which would not only cure him of his particular ailment but also save him from falling ill in future. The ordinary doctor or vaidya is interested mostly in the study of disease. The nature curist is interested more in the study of health. His real interest begins where that of the ordinary doctor ends; the eradication of the patient's ailment under Nature Cure marks only the beginning of a way of life in which there is no room for illness or disease. Nature Cure is thus a way of life, not a course of 'treatment'."

"It is not claimed," he explained to the prayer gathering audience at Rungta House, "that Nature Cure can cure all disease. No system of medicine can do that or else we should all be immortals. But it enables one to face and bear down with unperturbed equanimity and peace of mind an illness which it cannot cure. If once we decide that what cannot be shared by the millions should be taboo for us, we are driven to nature as the only cure—all for the rich and the poor alike."

THE MOST POTENT WEAPON

In the armoury of the Nature Curist Ramanam is the most potent weapon. "Let no one wonder at it," he remarked. "A noted Ayurvedic physician told me the other day, 'All my life I have been administering drugs. But since you have prescribed Ramanam as a cure for physical ailments, it has occurred to me that what you say has too the authority of Vagbhata and Charaka.' The recitation of Ramanam as a remedy for spiritual ailments is as old as the hills. But the greater includes the less. And my claim is that the recitation of Ramanam is a sovereign remedy for our physical ailments also. A Nature Cure man won't tell the patient: 'Invite me and I shall cure you of your ailment.' He will only tell about the all-healing principle that is in every being and how one can cure oneself by evoking it and making it an active force in his life. If India could realize the power of that principle not only would we be free, but we would be a land of healthy individuals too—not the land of epidemics and ill health that we are today."

ITS USE AND LIMITATION

"The potency of Ramanam is however subject to certain conditions and limitations," he proceeded, "Ramanam is not like black magic. If some one suffers from surfeit and wants to be cured of its after effects so that he can again indulge himself at the table, Ramanam is not for him. Ramanam can be used only for a good, never for an evil end, or else thieves and robbers would be the greatest devotees. Ramanam is for the pure in heart and for those who want to attain purity and remain pure. It can never be a means for self-indulgence. The remedy for surfeit is fasting, not prayer. Prayer can come in only when fasting has done its work. It can make fasting easy and bearable. Similarly the taking of Ramanam will be a meaningless farce when at the same time you are drugging your system with medicines. A doctor who uses his talent to pander to the vices of his patient degrades himself and his patient. What worse degradation can there be for man than that instead of regarding his body as an instrument of worshipping his Maker he should make it the object of adoration and waste money like water to keep it going anyhow. Ramanam, on the other hand, purifies while it cures, and therefore it elevates. Therein lies its use as well as its limitation."

THE DISTURBANCES

The embers of the recent disturbances were still hot under the feet when Gandhiji visited Bombay. His first utterance before the evening prayer gathering at Rungta House therefore naturally referred to those events. It was a scathing denunciation of the policy of taking refuge in the "ambiguous middle" when the occasion required boldly speaking out and effective action.

The long deferred Shivaji Park meeting which he was to have addressed on the 9th of August 1942, but could not owing to his arrest at the dawn of the 8th, was a much bigger affair. The audience numbered over two lakhs. But such was the excellence of the arrangements and the discipline of the crowd that Gandhiji's speech was heard amid pin-drop silence. Its theme was 'Satyagraha as the art of living and dying' and its relation to prayer. The text of both the addresses will be found reproduced elsewhere in these columns.

AT URULI KANCHAN

Gandhiji did not stay for many days in the Nature Cure Clinic at Poona on his return from Bombay. Uruli Kanchan into which Gandhiji moved on the afternoon of the 22nd inst. is a small station on the Sholapur-Poona line with a population of about 3,000. It has a railway telegraph office and a post office but no telephone. The mail and the express trains do not stop here. The climate is good, the air bracing. There is a plentiful supply of filtered water from the military camp water works nearby. The locality grows fruits like the grape, orange and papaiya in profusion.

A few days back a deputation of nearly all the leading men of the place had waited on Gandhiji at the Nature Cure Clinic, Poona, to request him to establish his proposed Nature Cure Centre for the poor there. They promised to provide enough land for the purpose and their full co-operation besides donating Rs. 10,000/- to the Nature Cure Trust for the experiment at Uruli. Shri Datar, a retired railway contractor, vacated his bungalow and offered it for Gandhiji's temporary residence.

Congregational prayer was held on the very first day at the outskirts of the village, the mass singing of Ramadhun being introduced here as in other places. Taking as his text the hymn that had been sung Gandhiji presented Ramanam to the village folk assembled there as a natural therapeutic No. 1 for the cure of bodily ailments: "In the song that we have just sung the devotee says:

'O Hari, You are the reliever of the people's distress.' The promise here is universal. It is not qualified or restricted to any particular kind of ailment." He told them of the conditions of success. The efficacy of Ramanam would depend on whether it was or was not backed by a living faith. "If you are subject to anger, eat and sleep for indulgence, not solely for sustenance, you do not know the meaning of Ramanam. Your recitation of it is mere lip service. Ramanam to be efficacious must absorb your entire being during its recitation and express itself in your whole life."

FIRST PATIENTS

Patients began to come in from the next morning. There were about thirty of them. Gandhiji examined five or six of them and prescribed to them all more or less the same treatment with slight variations, according to the nature of each case, i. e. recitation of Ramanam, sun bath, friction and hip baths, a simple eliminative diet of milk, buttermilk, fruit and fruit juices with plenty of clean fresh water to drink. "It has truly been observed," he explained at the evening prayer gathering, "that all mental and physical ailments are due to one common cause. It is therefore but natural that there should be a common remedy for them too. There is a unity of cure as there is in disease. The Shastras say so. Therefore, I prescribed Ramanam and almost the same treatment to all the patients who came to me this morning. But we have a knack of explaining away the Shastras in life when they do not suit our convenience. We have deluded ourselves into the belief that the Shastras are meant only for the benefit of the soul in the life to come, that the end of Dharma is to acquire merit after death. I do not share that view. If Dharma has no practical use in this life, it has none for me in the next.

"There is hardly anyone in this world who is completely free from ailment whether bodily or mental. For some of these there is no earthly cure. For instance, Ramanam cannot perform the miracle of restoring to you a lost limb. But it can perform the still greater miracle of helping you to enjoy an ineffable peace in spite of the loss while you live and rob death of its sting and the grave its victory at the journey's end. Since death must come soon or late to everyone, why should one worry over the time."

THIS IS MY INDIA

The number of patients increased from 30 to 43 on the third day. "This is good," remarked Gandhiji, "because it shows that those who need Nature Cure treatment are coming forward to avail themselves of it." If the work proceeded according to plan, he explained at the evening prayer gathering, he intended to stay for at least four months in the year in their midst. During his absence his colleagues would continue to direct and guide them according to his instructions. "The practice of nature cures does not require high academic qualifications or much erudition. Simplicity is the essence of universality. Nothing that is meant for the benefit of the millions requires much erudition. The latter can be acquired only by the few and therefore can benefit the rich only. But India lives in her seven lakhs of villages — obscure, tiny, out-of-the-way villages, where the population in some cases hardly exceeds a few hundred, very often not even a few score. I would like to go and settle down in some such village. That is real India, my India, for which I live. You cannot take to these humble people the paraphernalia of highly qualified doctors and hospital equipment. In simple natural remedies and Ramanam lies their only hope."

He had been told that there was hardly any disease in Uruli. Probably what was meant was that no epidemic was prevalent, that being the popular conception of disease. But from the cases that had come to him during the last two days it was clear that ill health there was in plenty in Uruli. "If you do as I ask you to," he told the villagers, "Uruli will become an ideal village, to see which people will come from far."

He then proceeded to give them his first discourse on Nature Cure principles. The following is its gist.

NATURE CURE EXPOUNDED

"Man's physical body is composed of five natural elements, i. e. air, water, earth, fire or tejas (the energizing principle) and ether (space). The soul quickens it."

"The most essential of these is air. Man can live without food for several weeks, without water for some time, but without air he cannot live for more than a few minutes. God has therefore made air universally available. Shortages of food or water there may be at times but of air never. In spite of it we foolishly deprive ourselves of God's blessing of fresh and pure air by sleeping within doors with doors and windows shut. One may shut the doors and windows if he is afraid of thieves at night. But why should one shut oneself up?"

"To get fresh air, one must sleep in the open. But it is no good sleeping in the open only to breathe dust and dirt-laden air. The place where you sleep must be free from both. Some people cover their faces as a protection against dust and cold. It is a remedy worse than the disease. Then there is the evil habit of breathing through the mouth. Mouth is the organ of ingestion. It is not the organ of breathing. The air passing through the nasal passages is filtered and purified and at the same time warmed up before it enters the lungs."

"Anyone who fouls the air by spitting about carelessly, throwing refuse and rubbish or otherwise dirtying the ground, sins against man and nature. Man's body is the temple of God. Anyone who fouls the air that is to enter that temple desecrates it. He takes the name of Rama in vain."

In the end he warned them that they should be prepared to find in him a hard taskmaster. If he stayed in their midst he would neither spare himself nor them. He would visit their homes, inspect their streets, their drains, their kitchens, their latrines. He would tolerate neither dust nor dirt anywhere.

Uruli, 23-3-'46

PYARELAL

By M. K. Gandhi

Gandhiji's Correspondence with the Government (1942-44)

Price Rs. 2-8-0, Postage 7 Annas

The Indian States' Problem

Price Rs. 4, Postage 13 Annas

The Story of My Experiments with Truth

Price Rs. 6, Postage 13 Annas

Satyagraha in South Africa

(Companion Volume to the above)

Price 4-8-0, Postage 11 Annas

Hind Swaraj

Price 0-8-0, Postage 2 Annas

By Pyarelal

Status of Indian Princes

Price 0-4-0, Postage 2 Annas

HARIJAN

April 7

1946

IMPLICATIONS OF 'QUIT INDIA'

(By M. K. Gandhi)

In terms of non-violence 'Quit India' is a healthy, potent cry of the soul. It is not a slogan. It means the end, through means purely truthful and non-violent, of foreign rule and domination. It does not mean the foreigner's destruction but his willing conversion to Indian life. In this scheme there is no room for hatred of the foreigner. He is a man, even as we are. It is fear of him that gives rise to hatred. Fear gone, there can be no hatred.

Thus his conversion implies our conversion too. If we cease to be inferiors, he cannot be our superior. His arsenals and his weapons, typified in their extreme in the atom bomb, should have no terror for us. It follows that we may not covet them. We often make the mistake of thinking that we must first have things before we cease to covet them. This tempting argument leads to the prolongation of the agony. Must I do all the evil I can, before I learn to shun it? Is it not enough to know the evil to shun it? If not, we should be sincere enough to admit that we love evil too well to give it up.

Let us assume that foreign rule is ended. What should the foreigner do? He could hardly be considered free when he was protected by British arms. As a free man, he will discover that it was wrong to possess privileges which the millions of India could not enjoy. He will live doing his duty as behoves a son of India. He will no longer live at India's expense. On the contrary, he will give India all his talents and by his services render himself indispensable to the land of his adoption.

If this is true of the European, how much more true must it be for those Anglo-Indians and others who have adopted European manners and customs in order to be classed as Europeans demanding preferential treatment? All such people will find themselves ill at ease, if they expect continuation of the favoured treatment hitherto enjoyed by them. They should rather feel thankful that they will be disburdened of preferential treatment to which they had no right by any known canon of reasoning and which was derogatory to their dignity.

We have all—rulers and ruled—been living so long in a stifling unnatural atmosphere that we might well feel in the beginning that we have lost the lungs for breathing the invigorating ozone of freedom. If the reality comes in an orderly, that is a non-violent manner because the parties feel that it is right, it will be a revealing lesson for the world.

Uruli, 29-3-'46

HINDUSTANI

(By M. K. Gandhi)

I have no doubt in my mind that Hindustani, i. e. a correct mixture of Hindi and Urdu, is the National language. But I have not yet been able to prove this in my own writings or speech. Let not readers of 'Harijansevak', however, be irritated. Perhaps it is as well that the attempt to create a national language has come into the hands of an inept. After all the general mass of people come in this category. It will be through the efforts of all such that linguistic pandits will be enabled to create the proper mixture, easily understood by all. If readers of 'Harijansevak' will keep on pointing out mistakes in language, it will help the journal to create and maintain a proper style. It will be the aim of 'Harijansevak' to make its language sweet to the ear and easily understandable to every Indian. A language which is not generally understood is useless. It is unreal if it cannot serve its purpose. All attempts at having a forced language have proved futile.

Uruli, 30-3-'46

(From Harijansevak)

IS NETAJI ALIVE?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Some years ago it was announced in the newspapers that Subhas Chandra Bose had died. I believed the report. Later the news was proved to have been incorrect. Since then I have had a feeling that Netaji could not leave us until his dream of Swaraj had been fulfilled. To lend strength to this feeling was the knowledge of Netaji's great ability to hoodwink his enemies and even the world for the sake of his cherished goal. These were the only reasons for my belief that he was alive.

I have not the ability for foretelling the future. I have no strength except what comes from insistence on truth. Non-violence too springs from the same insistence. God alone knows absolute truth. Therefore, I have often said, Truth is God. It follows that man, a finite being, cannot know absolute truth. Therefore, I had nothing but my instinct to tell me that Netaji was alive. No reliance can be placed on such unsupported feeling.

On the other hand, there is strong evidence to counteract the feeling. The British Government is party to that evidence. Capt. Habibur Rahman has said he was present at the time of Netaji's death and has brought back his charred wrist watch. Another of his companions Shri Iyer met and told me that my instinct was wrong and I should abandon the feeling that Subhas Chandra was alive. In the face of these proofs I appeal to everyone to forget what I have said and believing in the evidence before them reconcile themselves to the fact that Netaji has left us. All man's ingenuity is as nothing before the might of the One God. He alone is Truth and nothing else stands.

Uruli, 30-3-'46

(From Harijansevak)

WITH AN ENGLISH FRIEND

An English friend who visited Gandhiji during his stay at Sodepur dropped a remark which set Gandhiji off to describe some of his experiences of the disability attaching to colour in South Africa. The question deeply interested the friend. He thought that it was perhaps at its worst in South Africa. Gandhiji, however, was doubtful. He feared it was probably as bad in America. The friend who had actually gone down to Richmond "to have a flavour of the South" could not gainsay the force of Gandhiji's remark but contended that the extraordinary conditions there presented a peculiar problem. "I can understand the American prejudice against the Negro," he added.

RACE PREJUDICE IN SOUTH AFRICA AND INDIA

"Arguing on those lines," replied Gandhiji, "you will be able to understand the prejudice in South Africa too. The root cause—a false notion of preservation of the race and economic status—is common to both. The difference is only one of degree. If you apply concrete facts to individual cases it is half a dozen of one and six of the other. It is on a par with the racial prejudice here."

"Oh, no. Here it is much less."

Gandhiji: "Yes, owing to the vast disparity in numbers. But take the case of the individual who actually suffers. His experience does not differ from that of the coloured man in South Africa or America."

The friend agreed. "We, Englishmen are apt to forget that side of the question," he remarked.

"Habit becomes second nature. There may be no deliberate intention either," replied Gandhiji.

"In the Punjab and Delhi," resumed the friend, "races mix much more freely than elsewhere." Was that due to the fact that the disparity in numbers was comparatively less there?

Gandhiji was of opinion that the contrast presented by Bengal in this respect was perhaps due to the violent spirit having manifested itself there on a much larger scale than in Delhi or in the Punjab. The Punjab did show the violent spirit in some measure. But it was not a patch upon Bengal. The daring of the Chittagong Armoury Raid was neither attempted nor duplicated anywhere else.

"I have often thought over it," remarked the friend, "and it has always baffled me how these Bengali young men, so gentle by nature, have drifted into violence."

THE SPECTRE OF VIOLENCE

"I have solved it for myself," replied Gandhiji. "They feel they have been unjustly libelled in the past. Lord Curzon harped upon their softness. It soured them. So they say, 'We may not be wealthy, but surely we are not effeminate.' So they adopted this devious method and surpassed every other province in daring. They defied death, defied poverty and even public opinion. I have discussed this question of violence threadbare with so many terrorists and anarchists. It is terrible whether the Arab does it or the Jew. It is a bad outlook for the world, if this spirit of violence takes hold of the mass mind. Ultimately in destroying itself it destroys the race."

"And it has spread all over the world for the last two or three years," interpolated the friend.

Gandhiji resumed: "Look at the latest ukase of Gen. MacArthur. He has divided the entire Japanese nation into two categories, those whom he calls war criminals and those who do not come under that label. As I read it, it struck me that this was not the best way to introduce democracy among the Japanese—a race so proud, so sensitive, so highly organized along Western lines. They will do what the Italians did in Garibaldi's time on a much larger scale. You cannot deal with the human race on these lines. Whatever happens in one part of the world will affect the other parts. The world has so shrunk."

IS THE WORLD GOING BACK?

This evoked from the friend the observation that he did not think that the world had deteriorated so much theoretically as it might have during the last three years. Gandhiji agreed with him though his grounds, he remarked, were different.

"My reason for that belief," continued the friend, "is that in spite of the fact that suffering, for instance, in Indonesia and elsewhere has been appalling during the last three years, the human mind has not been equally warped."

Gandhiji: "My hope is based on a detached view of the situation. Whilst in detention in the Aga Khan Palace I had leisure to read and think. What struck me was that whilst practice showed deterioration the mind of men had very much progressed. Practice has not been able to keep pace with the mind. Man has begun to say, 'This is wrong, that is wrong.' Whereas previously he justified his conduct, he now no longer justifies his own or his neighbour's. He wants to set right the wrong but does not know that his own practice fails him. The contradiction between his thought and conduct fetters him. His conduct is not governed by logic. Then, of course, there is my standing prediction in favour of non-violence that it will prevail—whatever man may or may not do. That keeps my optimism alive. Extensive personal experience too confirms my belief that non-violence is self-acting. It will have its way and overcome all obstacles irrespective of the shortcomings of the instruments. "It makes no difference," he concluded, "how we arrive at our conclusion, but it keeps us fresh and green."

LIVING UP TO 125 YEARS

The conversation next turned upon Gandhiji's pet theme of living up to 125 years. Gandhiji's visitor wanted to know how he managed to keep physically fit. Gandhiji replied that outwardly he owed his physical fitness to strict adherence to regular habits in eating, drinking and sleeping and to his partiality for nature cure principles which he had adopted strictly in life since 1901. Reminiscently he described how up till 1901 he used the medicine bottle but had almost thrown it away, and for fortyfive years he had lived more or less according to nature cure principles.

"But in a still greater measure," emphasized Gandhiji, "it is due to the practice, of detachment of mind. By detachment I mean that one must not worry whether the desired result follows from your action or not, so long as your motive is pure, your means correct. Really, it means that things will come right in the end if you take care of the means and leave the rest to Him." He based his belief on the teachings of the Bhagawad Gita which he had called his "dictionary of action".

The friend remarked on the close analogy between the teaching of the Bhagawad Gita and the thesis presented in Aldous Huxley's "Ends and Means". The mention of Aldous Huxley's name revived in Gandhiji's mind memories of old days about Aldous Huxley's father whose writings he used to read during his student days in London in 1889.

"But there is a physical side all the same?" questioned the friend.

Gandhiji : "Yes, only I attach greater importance to the mental. What you think you become. Thought is never complete unless it finds expression in action and action limits your thought. It is only when there is a perfect accord between the two that there is full, natural life."

ALCHEMY OF DETACHMENT

"But what about the legacy of one's past life? It cannot be written off the balance sheet."

"I have my answer for that," replied Gandhiji. "If my past conduct does not warrant the full span of life, no matter how correct my present life may be, I can still counteract the effect of past mistakes by attaining complete detachment between the mind and the body. Detachment enables one to overcome the effects of past faulty practice as well as handicaps of heredity and environment. Normally speaking, every deviation from the rule of nature, whether ignorant or wilful, e. g. anger, ill temper, impatience, errors in conjugal life, exacts its toll. But there is this promise that if you have arrived at complete detachment you can rub out all these. 'Except ye be born again, ye cannot have everlasting life.' Conversely, you can have everlasting life if you are 'born again'. There is no hurdle placed before death. You can turn over a new leaf and begin life anew here and now; the past will not disturb its tenor provided you have completely severed yourself from it and its legacy by the axe of detachment."

LIFE AS SACRAMENT

As I listened to the argument I was reminded of a passage in the Upanishads which Pandit Malaviyaji had recited to Gandhiji when they last met at Benares on the occasion of the convocation ceremony of the Kashi Vishvavidyalaya. In that passage the various periods in man's life are likened to the various sacrificial rituals enjoined in the different periods of the day on the householder. If a person eats, drinks, laughs and lives, not for the satisfaction of the senses but for service only and to glorify God, his life becomes a veritable cycle of sacrifice which disease or death dare not interrupt. Hunger, thirst and self-denial of such a person will correspond to the Diksha (initiation) of the sacrificer; eating, drinking and recreation to Upasada, i. e. the nourishment taken at the time of the breaking of the fast to prevent the vital air from going out; laughter and enjoyment to the hymn of praise to the Lord of Sacrifice which the sacrificer chants.

On the previous occasion when this friend had visited Gandhiji, Gandhiji had done all the talking and the friend had listened. This time Gandhiji had intended that he would only speak in answer to questions and let the friend do the talking but the friend again had the better of his resolve.

"I admit defeat. After all you are a practised journalist," Gandhiji remarked, discomfited, at the end of their talk.

"I am only human," replied the friend as he took leave with a warm handshake.

Poona, 2-3-'46

PYARELAL

CONSTRUCTIVE NON-VIOLENCE

The Friends Ambulance Unit is a war time organization which first came into being in 1914. In 1939 its scope was extended and it was organized again "to give men and women holding pacifist views the opportunity to serve during war time by relieving suffering and distress".

Akin to F. A. U. is the American Friends Service Committee. It represents the Meeting of the Society of Friends in North America. It was organized in 1917. Since then it has been attempting "through practical service in relief and reconstruction, to demonstrate the Quaker belief in the power of love and goodwill to develop kinship and understanding between peoples". It was the late Pierre Ceresole who tried to work out on an international scale the idea of combating war through constructive non-violence by organizing the International Voluntary Service for Peace. His work in pursuance of this ideal in Bihar after the great earthquake in 1934 is well known. Following his trail, members of the F. A. U. came to India from England in June 1942 and devoted themselves to the alleviation of destruction caused by the Midnapore cyclone of 1942 and the Bengal Famine of 1943. They were joined by members of the American Friends Service Committee in May 1944. Since then the two have been working as a single agency. Their activity included operating food canteens and orphanages for children, organizing and supervizing milk canteens, providing medical relief, setting up industrial centres in devastated areas to provide employment to the destitute and forming fishermens', weavers' and agricultural co-operatives. Their general plan is to "work through Indian organization as much as possible", it being their belief that "they will have achieved success in any project only when they have made themselves unnecessary to its continuance".

With the threat of an India-wide famine in the offing, the Friends Ambulance Unit has again begun to organize for action. "As outsiders we hope we can play a useful part by providing a link between the people and the Government," said Horace Alexander to Gandhiji, whom he accompanied to Poona to renew contact with him after a period of nearly four years. "The Government is not suspicious of us and they have the reassurance that we won't suspect their motives. What is more, we are not regarded with suspicion by the people as the Government is. If you think that we should go ahead you might say something which would encourage and help us and also strengthen the hands of our agents in America in obtaining an adequate quota of food supplies." Gandhiji in reply commended the example of Ruey Alley the New Zealander and his companion George Hogg in connection with the organization of Indusco in China. Although they were foreigners they inspired the Chinese with self-confidence. There was, of course, the other side of the picture too. As for F. A. U.'s plan of work for the prevention of famine, while generally approving of it, Gandhiji did not like the idea of what he called "begging for food from outside". "If food comes it would be welcome. But we should not depend on it. India is the granary of the East and now she has to go a-begging for food to America and other countries. I do not like this. Somehow or other, if we rely on self-help, strength comes, we do not know from where. Probably it comes from the original source and people feel they need not die. Moreover, arrival of food in the ports by itself would not solve the problem unless it is made available where it is most needed. Distribution is the real problem. Unless it is tackled there is danger that the food will rot in the ports while people are dying in the interior. At present it seems almost a hopeless task through the present corruption. A Government official sent a note the other day showing how it would be at least two months between the arrival of the food ships in the ports and the food actually reaching the affected areas. In the meantime what are the people to do? I have, therefore, suggested that they should utilize the subsoil water to grow whatever they can by their own effort. If crores take up the cue, they can do much to save themselves even before the food arrives from outside."

Horace next told Gandhiji that the F. A. U. are developing work of a more permanent nature for the upliftment of Bengal villages. For instance, they are trying to attack the problem of poverty from four or five different angles simultaneously. They had discussed the question with Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru who had approved of the idea for two reasons. "With the coming of freedom, he felt, we might help in post war economic rehabilitation so that the high expectations entertained by the people of the national government might not be belied. Besides, a body of people from the West serving the people here would act as an antidote to racial feeling which might otherwise oversweep the country in the first flush of freedom." Gandhiji agreed entirely with Pandit Nehru. "Any person who does such work is worth his weight in gold," he said. He shared Pandit Nehru's fear too. "Pandit Nehru has done well to point to the danger signal," he added. But he felt that the danger was even deeper. The face of the picture as he viewed it seemed horrifying. The feeling towards Europeans was rising all through the East. There were so many complex forces working on the mass mind. If the maelstrom broke out the F. A. U. might have to bear the brunt of it. They must be prepared for that sacrifice. But whilst they should be prepared for the worst he wanted them to share with him the hope that all would be well in the end. "To see the danger clearly and yet to remain unperturbed in the face of it, trusting to God's goodness, is true wisdom," he concluded.

Uruli, Saturday, 23-3-'46

PYARELAL

SATYAGRAHA—THE ART OF LIVING AND DYING

At the mammoth gathering numbering over two lakhs in Shivaji Park on 14-3-'46, Gandhiji delivered an important address in Hindustani, of which the following is the gist:

"The singing of Ramadhun is the most important part of congregational prayer. The millions may find it difficult to correctly recite and understand the Gita verses and the Arabic and Zend Avesta prayers, but everybody can join in chanting Ramanam or God's name. It is as simple as it is effective. Only it must proceed from the heart. In its simplicity lies its greatness and the secret of its universality. Anything that millions can do together becomes charged with a unique power.

"I congratulate you on your success in the mass singing of Ramadhun without any previous training. But it is capable of further improvement. You should practise it in your homes. I am here to testify that when it is sung in tune to the accompaniment of tal, the triple accord of the voice, the accompaniment and thought creates an atmosphere of ineffable sweetness and strength which no words can describe.

"I introduced the practice of having congregational prayer some time before the commencement of the South African Satyagraha struggle. The Indian community there was faced with a grave peril. We did all that was humanly possible. All methods of seeking redress, agitation through the press and the platform, petitions and deputations, were tried but proved of no avail. What was the Indian community consisting of a mere handful of illiterate indentured labourers mostly, with a sprinkling of free merchants, hawkers etc. to do in the midst of an overwhelming majority of Negroes and Whites? The Whites were fully armed. It was clear that if the Indians were to come into their own, they must forge a weapon which would be different from and infinitely superior to the force which the White settlers commanded in such ample measure. It was then that I introduced congregational prayer in Phoenix and Tolstoy Farm as a means for a training in the use of the weapon of Satyagraha or soul force.

"The root of Satyagraha is in prayer. A Satyagrahi relies upon God for protection against the tyranny of brute force. Why should you then be always afraid of the British or anybody playing you false? If someone deceives you, he will be the loser. The fight of Satyagraha is for the strong in spirit, not the doubter or the timid. Satyagraha teaches us the art of living as well as dying. Birth and death are inevitable among mortals. What distinguishes the man from the brute is his conscious striving to realize the spirit within. The last eighteen verses of the second chapter of the Gita which are recited at the prayer give in a nutshell the secret of the art of living. It is given there in the form of a description of a shūtaprajña or the man of steady wisdom i.e. a Satyagrahi, in reply to Arjun's query to Lord Krishna.

"The art of dying follows as a corollary from the art of living. Death must come to all. A man may die of a lightning stroke or as a result of heart failure or failure of respiration. But that is not the death that a Satyagrahi can wish for or pray for himself. The art of dying for a Satyagrahi consists in facing death cheerfully in the performance of one's duty. That is an art which the people of Bombay apparently have not yet learnt. It is not enough not to want to hurt or take the life of your enemy. You are no Satyagrahis if you remain silent or passive spectators while your enemy is being done to death. You must protect him even at the cost of your life. If thousands in India learnt that art, the face of India would be changed and no one would be able to point his finger of scorn at her non-violence as being a cloak for weakness. We would not then try to shift blame for ugly happenings on the hooligan elements. We would convert and control the hooligan elements too.

"We are passing through a crisis in our history. Danger besets us on all sides. But we shall convert it into our opportunity if we realize the power of Satyagraha than which there is nothing more potent on earth."

Uruli, 24-3-'46

PYARELAL

FOR SHAME!

The following is the text of Gandhiji's speech at Rungta House prayer gathering in Bombay on the evening of 11-3-'46.

"The news of the recent events in Bombay has filled me with shame and humiliation as it must have you too. Let me hope that none of those who are here took part in these disgraceful happenings. But that alone would not entitle you to my congratulations. We have reached a stage when nobody can afford to sit on the fence or take refuge in the 'ambiguous middle'. One has to speak out and stand up for one's convictions. Inaction at a time of conflagration is inexcusable. Is it too difficult an ideal to follow? Let me tell you, however, that this is the only course that will take us safely through the present difficult times.

NO MORAL ALIBIS

"It has become the fashion these days to ascribe all such ugly manifestations to the activities of hooligans. It hardly becomes us to take refuge in that moral alibi. Who are the hooligans after all? They are our own countrymen and so long as any countryman of ours indulges in such acts we cannot disown responsibility for them consistently with our claim that we are one people. It matters little whether those who were responsible for the happenings are denounced as goondas or praised as patriots — praise and blame must equally belong to us all. The only manly and becoming course for those who are aspiring to be free is to accept either whilst doing our duty.

"THE WAY OF THE LORD"

"In eating, sleeping and in the performance of other physical functions, man is not different from the brute. What distinguishes him from the brute is his ceaseless striving to rise above the brute on the moral plane. Mankind is at the cross roads. It has to make its choice between the law of the jungle and the law of humanity. We in India deliberately adopted the latter twentyfive years back but I am afraid that whilst we profess to follow the higher way our practice has not always conformed to our profession. We have always proclaimed from the housetops that non-violence is the way of the brave but there are some amongst us who have brought ahimsa into disrepute by using it as a weapon of the weak. In my opinion, to remain a passive spectator of the kind of crimes that Bombay has witnessed of late is cowardice. Let me say in all humility that ahimsa belongs to the brave. Pritam has sung: "The way of the Lord is for the Brave, not for the Coward." By the way of the Lord is here meant the way of non-violence and truth. I have said before that I do not envisage God other than truth and non-violence. If you have accepted the doctrine of ahimsa without a full realization of its implications you are at liberty to repudiate it. I believe in confessing one's mistakes and correcting them. Such confession strengthens one and purifies the soul. Ahimsa calls for the strength and courage to suffer without retaliation, to receive blows without returning any. But that does not exhaust its meaning. Silence becomes cowardice when occasion demands speaking out the whole truth and acting accordingly. We have to cultivate that courage, if we are to win India's independence through truth and non-violence as proclaimed by the Congress. It is an ideal worth living for and dying for. Every one of you who has accepted that ideal should feel that inasmuch as a single English woman or child is assaulted it is a challenge to your creed of non-violence and you should protect the threatened victim even at the cost of your life. Then alone you will have the right to sing "The way of the Lord is for the Brave, not for the Coward." To attack defenceless English women and children because one has a grievance against the present Government hardly becomes a human being.

TO SUSPECT IS UNMANLY

"The British Cabinet Ministers' Delegation will soon be in our midst. To suspect their bona fides in advance would also be a variety of weakness. As brave people it is our duty to take at its face value the declaration of the British Ministers that they are coming to restore to India what is her due. If a debtor came to your house in contrition to repay his debt, would it not be your duty to welcome him? On the other hand, would it not be unmanly to treat him with insult and humiliation in remembrance of past injustice? Let the British Government prove for the final time that they do not mean to act according to their professions. It will be time to act, if they do so. Till then the only manly course is to maintain dignified silence."

PYARELAL

WEEKLY LETTER—II

NO LONGER MERCENARY

In Uruli there is a big military camp. Hardly a day passed after Gandhiji's arrival in Uruli when a group of Indian military men did not contact him. They met him during his morning walks, they were at his evening prayer gatherings, but particularly interesting were the two batches who saw him at his residence.

"We are soldiers," they said apologetically and added, "but we are soldiers of Indian freedom."

"I am glad to hear that," replied Gandhiji. "For, so far you have mostly been instrumental in the suppression of Indian freedom. Have you heard of Jallianwala Bagh?"

"Oh, yes. But those days are past. We were in those days like the proverbial frog-in-the-well. We have now seen the world, our eyes have been opened."

"We admit we are mercenaries," interpolated another. "But our hearts are no longer so." The reference was to the use by Gandhiji five or six years ago of the expression 'mercenary', to describe Indian troops.

"I am glad to hear that," answered Gandhiji. "But, let me tell you my use of that expression was not intended to cast any reflection upon you. It was only descriptive of a soldiery that serves a foreign government for a living. My use of that expression at the time brought a hornet's nest round my ears. But I could not withdraw it; I said our present army system should go."

WHEN INDIA IS INDEPENDENT

"What would be our position when India is independent," asked still another soldier.

"Why, you will fully share that independence and breathe the air of freedom with your countrymen," replied Gandhiji. But that was not the point of his question. Gandhiji proceeded: "Independent India will have need of you. You have had military training. You will give India the benefit of that training. You have learnt the lesson of camaraderie under common danger. It would be a bad day if the moment that peril is lifted, the lesson is lost."

"But in Free India you won't be pampered as you are today," he continued. "You won't have these lavish privileges with which a foreign government bribes you at the expense of India's poor. India is destitute. You cannot serve her unless you are prepared to share her destitution. I told Captain Shah Nawaz that if the I. N. A. people succumb to the lionization of an India pining for freedom and forget her destitution, they will earn not the blessings but the silent execration of their countrymen. The same applies to you. Unless you are prepared to forego your privileges you will feel sorry when independence comes and sigh for the return of old times and old masters."

A NEW FERMENT

"There was a time," remarked one of them, "when we were not allowed to read any civil newspaper. And now we go and tell our officers that we are going to see our greatest leader, and no one dares to stop us."

"I know," replied Gandhiji, "there is a new ferment and a new awakening among all the army ranks today. Not a little of the credit for this happy change belongs to Netaji Bose. I disapprove of his method but he has rendered a signal service to India by giving the Indian soldier a new vision and a new ideal."

"How anybody can think of dividing India into two, three or more parts, we army men are at a loss to understand. We know only one India for which we have fought and shed our blood," remarked a senior ranker among them.

"Well, it requires all sorts to make the world," replied Gandhiji. And they all laughed.

"May we shout slogans?" they finally asked in a chorus with the naivete and eclat of children.

"Well, you may," replied Gandhiji and there was a deafening roar as they shouted 'Jai Hind', 'Netajiki-Jai', and so on repeatedly.

The next day a special train carried about eight hundred of them to another camp. As it passed in front of Gandhiji's residence, from the patriotic exuberance of their slogans, it might as well have been a congress special carrying delegates to an extraordinary session.

IN HARIJAN QUARTERS

Gandhiji has given the reasons for his deciding to stay in Harijan quarters during his forthcoming visits to Bombay and Delhi. The news from Gujarat had set him, furiously thinking. "Your day dawns, they say, from the moment you wake up. Having woken up I cannot now rest. . . ." He wrote to Thakkar Bapa on the nineteenth. "You know, I used to stay in the East End even during the Round Table Conference. East End might be described as the Harijan quarters of London. In the room I occupied there was hardly accommodation enough for two. A chest of drawers was the only furniture—no table, no chairs. One slept on the floor. All around were the slums. And yet Kingsley Hall itself would be called a model of cleanliness." Thakkar Bapa's reply—the inveterate Harijan that he is like Gandhiji himself—was characteristic. He would himself hereafter stay with him in the Harijan quarters!

The Sardar's reaction was equally characteristic. "It will be as you wish," he wrote in reply to Gandhiji's letter. "But at present one cannot get enough room in Bombay to bury one's dead and you want fresh accommodation to be improvised for the living!" Wired Devdas Gandhi from New Delhi: Would not Gandhiji, in view of the specific nature of his mission this time, agree to stay with the Birlas as before? But Gandhiji was adamant. The iron had entered into his soul. Even his present mission would be better served from Harijan quarters, he replied. India's slavery under the British rule is hardly two centuries old. Yet we are impatient to see it ended here and now. How dare we, now that India is on the threshold of the promised land, ask Harijans to subsist on the promise of a distant Utopia? Gandhiji's decision dramatizes his reply to this challenge. The emancipation of Harijans cannot wait. It must be 'now or never'. If in Free India the Harijans still continue to be the underdog his place will be with them.

TEST OF BONA FIDES

Gandhiji was discussing some time back with an English friend the difficult task ahead of the Cabinet Mission. There was an unprecedented upsurge for independence among the masses on the one hand and on the other what he had called "the unholy combination" at bottom among the Hindus and Mussalmans for a joint violent purpose. "I could have understood it if they had combined from top to bottom. That would, of course, have meant delivering India over to the rabble. I would not want to live up to 125 to witness that consummation. I would rather perish in the flames."

"The Mission are coming fresh after a bloody victory," he continued. "They have now an opportunity to add to it the laurels of a bloodless peace. It will be a glorious thing for them and the world if they rise to the occasion and do justice to India even though it might mean reducing themselves (it won't be so in fact) to insignificance. That would be the height of non-violence. But miracles have happened in the world."

"So you believe in miracles?" twitted the friend.

"I do and I do not," replied Gandhiji. "God does not work through miracles. But the divine mind is revealed in a flash and it appears like a miracle to man. We do not know God, we know Him only through the working of His law. He and His law are one. There is nothing outside His law. Even earthquakes and tempests do not occur without His will—not a blade of grass grows but He wills it. Satan is here only on His sufferance, not independently of Him."

"By justice do you mean that they should agree to withdraw the British army without stipulating any conditions?" asked the friend.

SINISTER?

"I do," unhesitatingly replied Gandhiji. "Freedom will be truly won only when the British army is withdrawn from the whole of India, not excluding Indian States."

"Otherwise, it would be sinister," remarked the friend.

This raises the question of the status of the States in an independent India. There has been of late some loose talk of their claiming independence with the termination of British suzerainty and being free to enter into fresh, independent treaty relations with Great Britain. All this is moonshine. It has been pointed out by eminent jurists that although in law the relations of the Indian States are with the Crown, the British Constitution and its Indian auxiliary are so built that the theory of Crown relations has no other way of expressing itself than in the practice of Government of India relations. In the natural course of events the would-be Free Government of India must inherit and exercise all the prerogatives and functions that the Government of India exercises either in its own right or under delegated authority of the Crown, just as the Government of India exercised all the Company's powers when it succeeded the latter in 1858. The theory of "independent treaty States" bearing direct personal allegiance to the British Crown is an exploded myth not worthy of a moment's consideration. To quote from the Butler Committee's report:

"It is not in accordance with historical facts that when the States came into contact with British Power they were independent. Some were rescued, others were created by the British."

It was Sir Samuel Hoare who outspokenly told the Princes in the House of Commons that paramountcy must remain paramount. The only way in which they could lighten the paramountcy for themselves was by exchanging it with the control of the Federal Government. If they had the most of Federation, they would be under the least of paramountcy. Any attempt to retain the States as pockets of British influence and power or, as Lord Canning—referring to the anxious days of 1857-58—put it in his famous dispatch, as "breakwaters to the storm which would otherwise have swept over us in one great wave", would be looked upon by the people of India with the gravest suspicion and render all British bona fides unacceptable.

Lastly, the ante-diluvian classification of States into Hindu, Muslim and Shikh States must go by the board. The future complexion of the administration of a State shall be determined only by the composition of its population, not by any vested interest within or outside it. The Princes can retain their present title only as constitutional symbols of sovereignty which must ultimately vest in their subjects. In no other capacity can they claim a place in the councils of an Independent India. To quote the late Prof. Keith:

"There is in fact no answer to Mr. Gandhi's claim that the princes are bound to follow the Crown in the transfer of authority to the people."

On the train to Delhi, 31-3-'46 PYARELAL

KASTURBA SMARAK TRUST

(By M. K. Gandhi)

There were two meetings at Uruli Kanchan on the 28th, 29th and 30th March; one of the Agents of this Trust and the other of the Executive. The meeting of the Agents was the first of its kind. The Agents had many interesting questions. Why could not the Agents be members of the legislatures? The obvious answer is that if they are to do justice to their work, they should have no time for legislative duties. The decisive reason is that the villagers will have a wrong example set to them, if they have members of legislatures to look up to.

Whatever the sphere of work they choose they should not be nonentities. It should be remembered that the Agents have displaced the committees that were appointed for the last year. If they cover the whole province, they have their work cut out for them. If they cannot cope with it, they have to run model shibirs in one or more places to prepare women workers for villages. These may be teachers, nurses, spinners, weavers, sanitarians, etc. Work by women among women in the villages of India is an unbeaten track. Men are hardly fit for it. But the women have so long remained without experience of such work that it is difficult, especially in the initial stages. If the Agents attempt at intensity and confine their activity to certain centres, they will find the work to be simple and instructive.

Then they have their advisers. They are not meant to be ornamental. Their advice should always be at the disposal of the Agents. If they are well-chosen, they must prove towers of strength to the Agents in their difficult task.

The experiment of having women only as Agents is new. It can only succeed if they are wisely guided by the Centre and ably advised by the advisers. Much as it is to be wished that they too were women, the fear is that in the beginning they will be mostly men. The advisers should never aspire to be more than such and never be less. It should be their proud privilege to give the Agents their advice whenever it is sought. The members of the defunct committees, it is hoped, will never feel that they have been displaced for any other reason save the patent and potent one of manning the organization with women from top to bottom. The secret of success in this as in any other organization lies in the spirit of service actuating its every limb and self being subordinated to the organization.

On the train to Delhi, 31-3-'46

CONTENTS	PAGE
QUESTION BOX ... M. K. GANDHI	67
WEEKLY LETTER—I ... PYARELAL	67
IMPLICATIONS OF 'QUIT INDIA' ... M. K. GANDHI	70
HINDUSTANI ... M. K. GANDHI	70
IS NETAJI ALIVE? ... M. K. GANDHI	70
WITH AN ENGLISH FRIEND ... PYARELAL	71
CONSTRUCTIVE NON-VIOLENCE ... PYARELAL	72
SATYAGRAHA—THE ART OF LIVING AND DYING ... PYARELAL	73
FOR SHAME! ... PYARELAL	74
WEEKLY LETTER—II ... PYARELAL	75
KASTURBA SMARAK TRUST ... M. K. GANDHI	76

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad

Subscription Rates—INLAND: One year, Rs. 6, six months, Rs. 3. FOREIGN: One year, Rs. 8 or 14 sh. or $ 3.

HARIJAN

16 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 10]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, APRIL 14, 1946

[THREE ANNAS]

WHAT IS IN A NAME?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. From the psychological point of view, I think, the name 'Harijan' instils into the minds of the people to whom it is applied a feeling of inferiority, however sacred that name may be. This feeling is very difficult to wipe out from them — to whatever extent they are advanced — if they are always called 'Harijan'. Similarly, if a man in the street is asked about a 'Harijan' the first thing he will speak of is 'untouchability and the depressed class'. Would it not be possible to save the 'Harijan' from involuntarily acquiring such an inferiority feeling and other people from thinking about them without the 'qualification' usually ascribed to them? Would it not be preferable to choose a name which could also bring in its fold people from other sects?

A. This subject was years ago dealt with in the pages of "Young India". The name 'Harijan' has sacred associations. It was suggested by a Harijan as a substitute for Asprishya (untouchable), Dalita (depressed), or for the different categories of 'untouchables' such as bhangis, mehtars, chamars, pariahs, etc. The Government officers put them in a schedule and therefore called them the Scheduled Classes, thus making confusion worse confounded. Those who were not untouchables were classed among the scheduled and the ones who could be so called were excluded. We have now arrived at a stage, thanks to the Government policy, when to be included among the Scheduled Classes is to be coveted. The Government have created a separate electorate agitating for seats in all elective institutions. I do not mind such ambition, if it carries honest merit with it. But it becomes positively mischievous, when seats are coveted irrespective of merit. The wish to be so educated as to be qualified for the highest post is to be appreciated and encouraged, the wish to be appointed to such a post on the basis of belonging to a caste or a class is essentially to be deprecated and discouraged.

The real remedy has been suggested by me. The feeling of inferiority must go. It is going, but too slowly. The process can be accelerated, if every Hindu would deliberately shed his superiority and in practice become a Harijan or, if you like, a mehtar, the lowest class among Harijans. Then we will all become true children of God as the word 'Harijan' means. Until this is done, no matter which word signifies 'Untouchables', it will smell of inferiority. The process has to be carried out thoroughly in every walk of life till the last trace of untouchability is removed. When that happy day arrives, every quarter will be a Harijan quarter and cleanliness of the heart and the home will be the order of the day.

New Delhi, 5-4-'46

WEEKLY LETTER

FIRST STEP NOT THE LAST

As in Bombay so at New Delhi Gandhiji has put up in Harijan quarters. Two small tents and a shamiana have been put up on the precincts of the Valmiki Mandir to improvise extra accommodation for his party. Years ago he had sent the late Shri Mahadev Desai to visit these quarters and in reporting the fine work among the Harijans that was being done by some philanthropic Savarna Hindus, the late Shri Desai had expressed the wish that Gandhiji might some day be able to go and stay in those quarters. It therefore gave him supreme satisfaction to be able to do so. "I have of late been saying," he remarked in his first public utterance after the evening public prayer on the day of his arrival in Delhi "that the Hindus have to become atishudras not merely in name but in thought, word and deed. For that token scavenging is not enough. I have therefore decided that I must go and actually live among Harijans in Harijan quarters."

"I however do not delude myself with the belief," he continued, "that by staying here I am sharing the actual life with the Harijans. I have seen some Harijan quarters and the squalor, the dirt and the filth in the midst of which the Harijans live. I know too that this place has been brightened up. Indeed, I feel embarrassed by the amenities that have been provided here by Sheth Birla for me and my party. My coming to stay here, I hope, is my first step, not the last. It is my constant prayer and I look forward to the day when I would actually go and stay in a Harijan hut, and partake of the food they may provide me there. In the meantime, it gives me some satisfaction to be able to live in this dharmashala surrounded by Harijan dwellings on all sides."

Referring next to a hostile demonstration which a certain section of the Harijans had tried to stage on his arrival, he observed: "How can I feel angry with them? I can quite understand their pent up resentment at the way in which they have been treated by the so-called Savarnas. They might even want to wreak vengeance. There is such a glaring contradiction between our profession and practice. They have a right to feel impatient. I can only plead with them to bear with the Hindu society. An age-old evil cannot be eradicated in a day. I know it has to go or Hinduism must perish. In the meantime the least expiation that we can make is to share with the Harijans their disabilities and to deny ourselves the privileges which the latter cannot share. The present conditions under which they live should be intolerable even for a day to a decent-minded person. I pray for the time when the condition of life, as regards sanitation, cleanliness etc. in Harijan quarters will be such that even a person like myself might be able to go and stay there without any compunction."

Public prayer which in the beginning "used to be held on the precincts of the Valmiki Mandir had soon to be shifted to the spacious maidan outside Ajmeri Gate for lack of sufficient accommodation. He had appealed on the first day that no one should come to the prayer gatherings merely for the sake of darshana. Only those should come who were earnest about prayer. But the crowd continued to swell daily and necessitated the change.

ZERO HOUR

The mission which brought Gandhiji here has been keeping him wholly occupied from early in the morning till night. To the strain of work is added the concern as to how the people will behave when the zero hour of India's independence arrives after the long servitude under the British rule full of bitter memories which are hard to forget. He is aware of the deep hatred of the British rule that is in the people's breast. What if it should break out in a conflagration? To forestall and prevent such a tragedy all his energies are bent. On Saturday last it kept him awake for the better part of the night. "I have been praying to God to give me the right word," he remarked to one of his companions in describing the night's vigil, "so that it will induce those to whom it is addressed to act with the courage and wisdom which the occasion demands."

During the week he accepted an invitation to attend a silent prayer service of the Friends and paid a visit to the I. N. A. camp and hospital. He summed up his reactions to the latter in a speech which will be found reproduced elsewhere.

New Delhi, 9-4-46

PYARELAL

By M. K. Gandhi
Economics of Khadi

Price Rs. 4-0-0, Postage 13 Annas

Constructive Programme
Its Meaning and Place

Price 0-6-0, Postage 2 Annas

Cent Per Cent Swadeshi

Price Rs. 2, Postage 5 Annas

By J. C. Kumarappa

Practice & Precepts of Jesus

Rs. 1-8-0, Postage 6 Annas

Christianity-Its Economy & Way of Life

Price Rs. 1-8-0 Postage 6 Annas

THE MESSAGE OF THE I. N. A.

The day after his visit to the I. N. A. prisoners Gandhiji said at the evening public prayer:

"Let me share with you the thoughts that have been crowding in my mind since yesterday. India has accorded to the released I. N. A. men a right royal welcome. They have been acclaimed as national heroes. Everybody seems to have been swept off his feet before the rising tide of popular sentiment. I must, however, frankly confess to you that I do not share this indiscriminate hero worship. I admire the ability, sacrifice and patriotism of the I. N. A. and Netaji Bose. But I cannot subscribe to the method which they adopted and which is incompatible with the one followed by the Congress for the last twentyfive years for the attainment of independence. Yesterday I spoke to you of a Sthitaprajna (स्थितप्रज्ञ) i. e. "the man of steady wisdom", i. e. a Satyagrahi. If we accept that ideal we would not regard anybody as our enemy; we must shed all enmity and ill will. That ideal is not meant for the select few—the saint or the seer only; it is meant for all. I have described myself as a scavenger having become one, not only in name but in fact, while I was in Phoenix. It was there that I took up the bucket and the broom, impelled by the inner urge to identify myself with the lowest of the low. As a humble fellow toiler, then, let me bear witness that anyone, even a simple-minded villager who wants to and tries, can, attain the state of mental equipoise described in the Gita verses which are recited at the prayer. We all lose our sanity at times, though we may not care to admit it or be even aware of it. A man with a steady mind will never lose patience, even with a child, or indulge in anger or abuse. Religion as taught in the Gita is a thing to be practised in this life. It is not a means for attaining merit in the next irrespective of what you may do here. That would be a negation of religion.

"For me the visit to the I. N. A. men in detention was a matter of pure duty. It gave me supreme satisfaction to be able to meet them, and they on their part received me with a warmth of affection which I shall always treasure. I have interpreted their welcome as a token of their recognition in me of a devoted servant of the country.

"Netaji was like a son to me. I came to know him as a lieutenant full of promise under the late Deshabandhu Das. His last message to the I. N. A. was that, whilst on foreign soil they had fought with arms, on their return to India they would have to serve the country as soldiers of non-violence under the guidance and leadership of the Congress. The message which the I. N. A. has for India is not adoption of the method of appeal to arms for settling disputes (it has been tried and found wanting), but of cultivating non-violence, unity, cohesion and organization.

"Though the I. N. A. failed in their immediate objective they have a lot to their credit of which they might well be proud. Greatest among these was to gather together under one banner men from all religions and races of India and to infuse into them the spirit of solidarity and oneness to the utter exclusion of all communal or parochial sentiment. It is an example which we should all emulate. If they did this under the glamour and romance of fighting, it was not much. It must persist in peace. It is a higher and more difficult work. We have to die performing our duty and without killing. For that we shall need to cultivate the attributes of a Shitaprajna as set forth in the Gita.

"Far more potent than the strength of the sword is the strength of Satyagraha. I said so to the I. N. A. men and they were happy to tell me, as I was to hear, that they had realized this and would hereafter strive to serve India as true soldiers of non-violence under the Congress flag."

New Delhi, 8-4-'46

PYARELAL

VANASPATI AND GHEE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Sardar Sir Datar Singh has been putting up a fight on behalf of the cow in India. The cow includes the buffalo. In that case both can live. If the buffalo includes the cow then both die. "The cow is the mother of prosperity." To understand how this is so, the reader should see Shri Satish Chandra Das Gupta's two instructive volumes.* Here I want to confine myself to ghee which is in danger of being swamped by Vanaspatti, as the so-called vegetable ghee is called. In reality ghee is pure animal product. One thoughtlessly uses the expression vegetable ghee or Vanaspatti, but it is a contradiction in terms. Sardar Datar Singh has shown in a considered note that the sale of Vanaspatti has risen from 26,000 tons in 1937 to 137,000 tons in 1945, i. e., it has increased more than 400 per cent. during seven years. Pari passu the ghee industry has declined. Those who would study the whole note should procure a copy from Sardar Datar Singh or the Goseva Sangh in Wardha. I condense below the Sardar's conclusions:

1. Vanaspatti as an article of diet is a very poor substitute for ghee. It not only lacks absorption by the human system, but has no vitamin potency.

2. Due to its similarity with ghee in texture and flavour, most of it is being used as an adulterant or is passed off as genuine ghee and is therefore a great menace to ghee.

3. Due to great margin of profit in this industry, it has developed from 26 thousand tons per annum in 1937 to 105 thousand tons in 1943 and there are proposals afoot to at least double this production in the near future.

4. The ghee industry is India's greatest cottage industry involving production of 23,000,000 maunds of ghee per annum at a cost of one hundred crores of rupees.

5. The destruction of the ghee industry will not only adversely affect the welfare of the cultivators, but it will have a very deleterious effect on the cattle industry upon which the prosperity of the whole nation directly depends.

* 'The Cow in India' vol. I Rs. 10/-, vol. II Rs. 7/-; both together Rs. 16/-. Postage Rs. 1-9-0. Can be had from the office of this paper, or Khadi Pratishthan, Sodepur, Calcutta.

In order to overcome the difficulties explained above, the following remedial measures are suggested:

1. If due to some reasons the Government cannot actually ban the manufacture altogether of Vanaspatti, it must at least be brought under strict control immediately.

2. All manufacturers, and wholesale and retail dealers of Vanaspatti should be licensed. Such persons should not be permitted to trade in or stock ghee on their premises.

3. It should be made compulsory to colour all Vanaspatti, at the source of its manufacture in India and to colour all such imported product immediately on its landing at an Indian port. Manufacturers must mix ten per cent. of til oil with Vanaspatti. The advantage of this would be that if pure ghee is adulterated with Vanaspatti containing 10% til oil, the detection will become extremely simple. The presence of til oil can be most easily detected by well-known chemical reactions.

4. The addition of synthetic essences to give Vanaspatti a semblance of ghee should be prohibited.

5. Persons selling food products in the preparation of which they use Vanaspatti should be required, under marketing law, to display a sign to that effect. The presence of Vanaspatti on the premises not displaying the sign should be made an offence under law. This will eradicate the evil of Halwais and confectioners using Vanaspatti for their preparations and passing them off as made from genuine ghee.

6. Vanaspatti should not be allowed to go in the market under names such as 'Vegetable ghee' or 'Vanaspatti ghee' or any other name which is apt to deceive the customers as to its real origin of composition.

7. Vanaspatti should not be allowed to be marketed in packages of the same pattern as used for packing ghee and all packages containing Vanaspatti should be distinctly labelled.

It is clear that the mischief arises principally from the greed of the very persons who worship the cow. Vanaspatti is wholly superfluous. Oils may be refined of injurious property, but they do not need to be solidified nor need they be made to look like ghee. An honest manufacturer will not stoop to counterfeits. The market is flooded with them. Counterfeit coins are heavily punishable. Why not counterfeit ghee, since the genuine article is much more precious than coins? But the sovereign remedy lies in all round honesty among dealers who are in a hurry to become rich even at the cost of the health of the nation.

New Delhi, 8-4-'46

TO AGENTS

Permission for issuing sixteen pages of the three Harijan weeklies on special occasions has been granted. In view of this we have decided to price copies of the weeklies with 12 or more pages at annas three. Agents will please take note of this and add necessary amount to their deposit,

MANAGER

HARIJAN

April 14

1946

LET US PRAY

(By M. K. Gandhi)

There is little doubt that India is about to reach her cherished goal of political independence. Let the entrance be prayerful. Prayer is not an old woman's idle amusement. Properly understood and applied, it is the most potent instrument of action.

Let us then pray and find out what we have meant by non-violence and how we shall retain the freedom gained by its use. If our non-violence is of the weak, it follows that we shall never be able, by such non-violence, to retain freedom. But it follows also that we shall not, for some length of time at any rate, be able to defend ourselves by force of arms if only because we have neither them nor the knowledge of their use. We have not even the requisite discipline. The result is that we shall have to rely upon another nation's help, not as equals but as pupils upon their teachers, if the word 'inferiors' jars upon our ears.

Hence there is nothing but non-violence to fall back upon for retaining our freedom even as we had to do for gaining it. This means exercise of non-violence against all those who call themselves our opponents. This should not mean much for a man who has used himself to non-violence for nearly three decades. It is summed up in "die for your honour and freedom" instead of "kill if necessary and be killed in the act". What does a brave soldier do? He kills only if necessary and risks his life in the act. Non-violence demands greater courage and sacrifice. Why should it be comparatively easy for a man to risk death in the act of killing and almost superhuman for him to do so in the act of sparing life? It seems to be gross self-deception to think that we can risk death if we learn and practise the art of killing but cannot do so otherwise. But for the hypnotism induced by the repetition of an untruth we should not grossly deceive ourselves.

But the critic or the scoffer will ask, why bring in prayer if the matter is so simple as you put it. The answer is that prayer is the first and the last lesson in learning the noble and brave art of sacrificing self in the various walks of life culminating in the defence of one's nation's liberty and honour.

Undoubtedly prayer requires a living faith in God. Successful Satyagraha is inconceivable without that faith. God may be called by any other name so long as it connotes the living Law of Life—in other words, the Law and the Law-giver rolled into one.

New Delhi, 6-4-'46

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. God is a creation of man's imagination. It is not God who has created man but man who has created God. Is this not true?

A. I have taken this from a correspondent's letter. There is a semblance of truth in what he says. The writer has, however unwittingly, created the illusion by a play upon the two words "creation" and "God".

God Himself is both the Law and the Law-giver. The question of anyone creating Him, therefore, does not arise, least of all by an insignificant creature such as man. Man can build a dam, but he cannot create a river. He can manufacture a chair, but it is beyond him to make the wood. He can, however, picture God in his mind in many ways. But how can man who is unable to create even a river or wood create God? That God has created man is, therefore, the pure truth. The contrary is an illusion. However, anyone may, if he likes, say that God is neither the doer nor the cause. Either is predicable of Him.

New Delhi,

4-4-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

KASTURBA LEPROSY WORK

(By M. K. Gandhi)

This work has been going on under Prof. T. N. Jagdisan's supervision since 19th May 1945. He has produced a short summary of the work done from day to day. Dr. T. S. S. Rajan is the chairman of the committee specially formed for this work. Dr. V. P. Ramaswami has specially trained himself for the work under Dr. R. G. Cochrane. He is doing out-patient work as well as conducting surveys of villages.

The first survey in Kandachipuram schools of 655 children revealed that apart from leprosy there was a high incidence of scabies and guinea worm. Over 100 children have to be followed up and 30-40 treated for leprosy. In Madavilagam village 18 definite cases of leprosy have been discovered out of 593 inhabitants. Four of these are infective and fourteen neural. Infection is spread by indiscriminate contact of infective cases with children.

In Adukkam village 15 cases have been found out of a population of 323. Five of these are infective. Two other places have 29 and 15 definite cases respectively of which 9 are lepromatons.

Dr. Ramaswami has also surveyed five more villages and has so far detected 300 cases out of which 157 only, being women or children under seven years, can benefit from the Trust.

Prof. T. N. Jagdisan's summary points out that poor men patients though in need of attention cannot get the benefit of the funds. This defect cannot be removed by any departure from the terms of the Trust, but the professor can easily raise a small fund locally and bring them within the scope of his work.

New Delhi,

4-4-'46

GANDEHIJI'S IDEAL OF A PRIVATE SECRETARY

(Continued from No. 1)

II

The late Shri Mahadev Desai was the beau ideal of a secretary of Gandhiji's conception. Gandhiji once described him as son, secretary and lover rolled into one. On another occasion he described the latter's relationship with him as that of a "Hindu wife"—mutually complementary and indissoluble; it was a "marriage of true souls". It would not be therefore out of place to give here an epitome of his career with Gandhiji.

After his university career and a varied experience, first as a clerk in the Oriental Translator's Office during which he was much in request as a friend in need not only by his colleagues but his superiors also, then as a lawyer and as an Inspector of Co-operative Societies, followed by a short spell of private secretaryship to a well-known Bombay Home-Rule Leaguer. He came to Gandhiji in 1917 at Kochrab Ashram and immediately realized that he had found the master. His first experience here was as a copyist and amanuensis. He not only won Gandhiji's admiration by producing faultless copies in his elegant, print-like hand at an incredible speed but brought to bear his intelligence and critical faculty on his work, suggesting alterations and improvements in the original wherever necessary. When, some time later, he held back from publication, on his own initiative, an article that Gandhiji had sent, as it seemed to contain a statement or an argument of doubtful character, Gandhiji on his part felt that he had found his ideal secretary.

In those early days, before the Mahatmic handicap forced upon Gandhiji the irony of travelling in third-class reserved bogies, he used to travel often in the ordinary third-class all by himself. After Shri Desai joined him he accompanied him on these journeys and acted as his (Gandhiji's) hammal. He looked after Gandhiji's travelling kit, made his bed, cooked his food, washed his thick, heavy Khadi clothes and cleaned his commode, besides rendering secretarial assistance. After the successful Champaran Satyagraha campaign, he settled down with Gandhiji in Motihari, where with his wife and other co-workers he taught the three R's to the village children. It was also during this period that he had his real schooling in those values and norms that have come to be associated with Gandhiji's name, e. g. simplicity coupled with elegance, meticulous regard for neatness and cleanliness, capacity for concentration in the midst of turmoil and chaos, preference for manual skill over mechanical perfection and a passionate love of the mother tongue. "He would insist on my writing the most important dispatches on the crudest hand-made paper and that too with a reed pen!", he once told me. "He was proud of my hand-writing, said, it was good enough for any Viceroy, no matter how and on what paper I wrote. Sometimes, he even snatched away the steel pen from my hand and flung it out of the railway carriage window." In the use of Gujarati the disciple soon learnt to excel the master and in later years often claimed for himself the role of Gandhiji's instructor in Gujarati, a claim which Gandhiji has since often admitted.

Right through the War Conference days (1916) and the Anti-Rowlatt Act Agitation, he followed Gandhiji like a shadow, quietly watching, assimilating, rehearsing. Then came the Khilafat and non-cooperation movements and Gandhiji was sucked into the vortex of the unprecedented storm that overswept the country. That gave Shri Desai his chance; he found himself. He began writing his compendious Boswellian diaries which continued without a break till practically his last day. The last entry, I think, is dated August 14, 1942. On the morning of the 15th he was no more. Wisdom was gleaned and garnered in these tomes straight from the master's lips. So great was his passion for recording that lacking paper, I have actually seen him taking down jottings of important talks on the margin of newspapers, backs of currency notes, sometimes even on thumb and finger nails, to be transferred to the regular note book at the first opportunity. He constituted himself into a living encyclopædia of Gandhiji's thoughts and ideas and a final court of appeal where the authenticity of a particular act or utterance ascribed to Gandhiji could be checked and verified. No one dared to misquote or misrepresent Gandhiji during Shri Desai's lifetime without the Nasmyth hammer of the latter descending upon him with all the weight of the evidence of his contemporary notes.

It would be difficult to enumerate all the varied assignments, some of them of a highly confidential and even unbelievable nature (alas! they cannot be divulged), which he fulfilled for Gandhiji with a D'Artagnanlike unflinching fidelity and success. Throughout his career I do not remember a single occasion when he failed Gandhiji in an emergency or left him in the lurch. As co-editor with the late George Joseph of the 'Independent' of Allahabad and later, on the latter's arrest, as the sole editor of that daily, he won warm encomiums from the fastidious and exacting late Pandit Motilal Nehru by his personal charm and highly specialized knowledge of Gandhiji and his non-cooperation technique, no less than by his trenchant and versatile pen. When security was demanded of that paper he closed it and under Gandhiji's instructions brought it out in manuscript form. Some of his colleagues on the staff, new to Gandhiji's ways, could not appreciate the new venture and felt it to be a bit infra dig to cooperate in it. I happened to be there at that time, having been sent by Gandhiji to "keep the flag flying" in the event of Shri Desai's arrest which was considered imminent. Nothing daunted by the non-cooperation of his colleagues, Shri Desai told them that he had not served apprenticeship under Gandhiji in vain and would bring out the paper unassisted, if it came to that; and brought out it was, that very evening, the first copy being all in Shri Desai's own beautiful hand. I think it fetched a fancy price of Rs. 250/-.

After the Bardoli Satyagraha of 1928 he was sent by Gandhiji to assist Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel in the collection and marshalling of evidence before the Broomfield Inquiry Committee. Such was the impression he created by his ability and integrity that before the end of the inquiry both Judge Broomfield and Sir Reginald Maxwell claimed him as a 'friend'. That each expressed his 'friendship' in his own typical way, the one by writing him "love letters", the other by issuing orders for his rigorous isolation, almost amounting to solitary confinement in Belgaum prison, is a different story.

By nature Shri Desai was rather of the contemplative and scholarly type. Action was not his forte. Taking orders, rather than issuing them was his chief delight. "I am more accustomed to stand behind a chair than in front of one", he once wittily remarked when called by the chairman to come alongside of him and address a public meeting. But when occasion demanded it he plunged into the fray with the same wholeheartedness and sense of devotion as characterized him in other fields. A typical illustration of this was afforded in 1930 at the time of the Dandi March, when in the absence of the Sardar, he set the whole of Gujarat from one end to the other ablaze with Satyagraha.

As he progressed from apprenticeship to maturity, he showed more and more initiative and capacity for handling important missions all by himself. But to the last he remained like Arjuna, with all his marvellous bowmanship, essentially a virtuoso, a faithful instrument in the hand of the master, the inspirer.

At the time of the Rajkot fast he was at New Delhi undergoing treatment for an illness from which he really never recovered. But as soon as he got the news, he left his sick bed without a moment's thought and set to work contacting the highest officials, including Lord Linlithgow. It was his faithful and able presentation of Gandhiji's viewpoint before those concerned that contributed not a little to the settlement in favour of Gandhiji and the Sardar. After the Gwyer Award, he accompanied Gandhiji to Rajkot, where even Darbar Veerawalla found it impossible to resist him after the glowing account he had of him from the cynical, hard-boiled Sir Bertrand Glancy, whom Shri Desai had met at New Delhi as the head of the Political Department of the Government of India.

During the individual Satyagraha of 1940, he denied himself the luxury of jail-going as he did not want to leave Gandhiji short-handed. But soldier-like he set out later to collect the 5 lakhs fund for the Gujarat Flood Relief work in the absence of the Sardar and completed it by working even when he was laid on his back with double pneumonia. Again, he set out to organize peace brigades in Ahmedabad at the time of the Hindu-Muslim riots, leaving his wife on what was believed by the doctors to be her death bed, with the same unflinching devotion to duty as he had shown on a previous occasion, when with streaming eyes, he finished his writing for Navajivan before setting out for his village home on receiving the news of his father's death.

In the intervals there was of course the killing daily grind of office routine which sometimes made him complain of what he humorously used to call his "dog's life". His versatility was equal to his industry. He was equally at home in taking on visitors who came to discuss high politics with Gandhiji as in settling intricate "domestics" of the Ashram. He kept accounts, drew up tour programmes for Gandhiji with the help of railway maps and Bradshaw, kept dates for him, answered letters, looked after guests, often trudged from Maganwadi to Sevagram Ashram and back—a distance of over five miles either way—in the blazing hot sun, day after day and week after week, to take instructions, besides writing for Harijan with a clock-work regularity. This last was a marvel, considering that his work had often to be done in the caravanserai that his office was or in overcrowded third-class railway compartments with undisciplined, shouting crowds struggling at the carriage windows at every station. The wonder of it was that in the midst of it all he was able to do all the encyclopaedic reading, hard thinking and research which went into his writings.

He was not merely an interpreter of Gandhiji's ideas, he was a "fisher of men" and brought scores of enthusiastic, idealistic workers to his fold by the charm of his magnetic personality. Wherever, under whatever circumstances he was, that place became a centre and citadel of the master. And who could go forth on a 'goodwill mission' on behalf of Gandhiji better than Shri Desai? The late Deshabandhu Das doted on him, his sister having constituted herself into his adoptive mother, Dr. Jayakar could not do less than respond to his appeal by raising his subscription to the Tilak Swaraj Fund from Rs. 5,000/- to Rs. 25,000/ whilst the Rt. Hon. Shastri welcomed his visits as a 'spiritual exercise'.

In Gandhiji's 'family' of workers he was the cementing bond, the shock absorber, the activizer. He smoothed differences, soothed frayed tempers, solved personal problems, resolved doubts, pulled people out of trouble when they landed themselves in it and negotiated delicate points with Gandhiji when it called for extraordinary tact and his 'masterly manner', for which he had become famous. He was extremely popular owing to his overflowing kindness, goodness of heart, broad sympathy and understanding and his willingness and capacity to serve and lend a helping hand whenever there was a chance, to all and sundry.

For instance, Gandhiji could give only limited time to his visitors who came for consultation. He could speak to them in sutras only. But Shri Desai made up for Gandhiji's "Be quick, be brief, be gone" motto that hangs on the wall of his hut above his head, and the visitors as a rule did not feel satisfied unless they could round off their interview with Gandhiji with a good heart-to-heart talk with his secretary. It was also his unpleasant duty to keep off undesirable visitors. And what a motley crowd he had sometimes to deal with, ranging from dyspeptics and food faddists to dilettantes, literateurs, blue stockings, tourists, pressmen and politicians, seekers after metaphysical knowledge, sometimes even lunatics! All this required a Job's patience. No wonder sometimes when a particularly sticky customer claimed him, even his suavity could not keep down a persecuted and martyred look on his face which was pathetic to behold. Friends discreetly avoided his gaze on such occasions lest they might betray a smile on the wrong side of the in face! But he was happy in the knowledge that it meant saving thousands of precious hours of the master for the service of the country and humanity.

Let no one, however, imagine that he was merely a "faithful echo" of the master. When occasion demanded he could also speak up to him, since Gandhiji expects his secretary, and in fact any one who is closely associated with him, to be his conscience keeper too. He was often prized as a tower of strength by those who brought to Gandhiji a different viewpoint from his own, and he himself was able on one occasion to avert an unconditional fast unto death on the part of Gandhiji when every one else had failed. It is the only instance of its kind in Gandhiji's entire life within my knowledge.

On occasions, but very rare occasions, there were brushes. These were invariably of the nature of "lovers' quarrels". Once Shri Desai likened his association with Gandhiji to sitting on the top of a volcano which might erupt at any moment. At Delang the "quarrel" even found its way into the weekly letter when, in a moment of desperation, the devoted secretary exclaimed with Dr. Halliday Sutherland (Arches of the Years) that "to live with saints in heaven" was "a bliss and a glory", but "to live with a saint on earth" was "a different story". The article itself was of a piece with the quotation. With characteristic coolness, Gandhiji blue-pencilled portions of the truant disciple's outpourings to "save him against himself", suitably corrected the rest and published the whole in Harijan! On another occasion, when exasperated by the heavy demands made by rules* of Ashram life, he tendered his resignation, Gandhiji tore it up saying that it did not bear evidence of "coherent thinking" and therefore could not be accepted as an indication of "Mahadev's real mind". The ending was equally characteristic. Before many hours the "blues" had completely worn off and the ardent secretary was explaining to the appreciative master the beauties of a gorgeous sunset. But it reduced the sensitive Shri Desai to tears when Gandhiji once gently rebuked him (it was reproach more than rebuke) for an inadvertant error in description by remarking, "Is it thus you are going to interpret me after my death?"

It has become the fashion these days to compare the late Shri Desai with Boswell. The comparison might hold good so far as passion for gathering and recording biographical material of their respective masters was concerned. But there the comparison ends. In moral and intellectual stature they were as poles asunder. Shri Desai was great in his own right. Boswell's attitude towards his master was that of an ardent hero-worshipper and a cheap and vulgar one at that at times. Shri Desai's attitude towards Gandhiji was that of a spiritual devotee to his guru and a lover of the motherland towards the promised deliverer.

Shri Desai's was a consecrated life characterized by a rare singleminded devotion to Gandhiji and his ideals. Gandhiji lived for the world but Shri Desai lived for Gandhiji. In one of Goethe's plays every one who gazes into the face of the heroine sees in it the countenance of his beloved. In the case of the late Shri Desai, it was the reverse; he lived only to read the lineaments of his master in every celebrated character of history or legend that he contemplated whether it was Asquith or William of Orange, Ruskin or Tolstoy, Marx, Lenin or Masaryk, Fenelon or St. Francis of Assisi. In the immortal lines of Moore:

"The moon looks into many brooks

The brook can see no moon but this."

I have been asked to set down as addenda the experiences of Shri Mahadev Desai's successor in office. The truth of the matter is that the late Shri Mahadev Desai was not a mere occupant of an office, he was an institution. His office began and ended with himself. He left behind him no successor.

9-9-45

PYARELAL

CHRISTIANS AND POLITICS

If we hold ourselves to be Christians we have to follow the principles laid down by Jesus in every walk of life. Politics is only one aspect of our social relations but we must carry these principles into that sphere also if we enter politics. Let us therefore analyse Jesus' attitude to such a career.

At the very beginning of His ministry we have a record of the temptations He met with. These will give us the main lines of approach.

He was hungry after a fast of forty days. He was tempted to convert stones into bread. He brushed that idea aside as "man does not live by bread alone". Do we want to enter politics to make a livelihood out of it? This is too base an ideal for those who would follow Jesus.

He was asked to jump down from the steeple as angels would bear Him up. Do we wish to enter the councils to demonstrate our powers of oratory and personal talents? God did not endow us with powers to glorify ourselves.

Satan wanted Jesus to fall down and worship him promising Him the gift of all the kingdoms of the Earth. Is politics a means of getting control over our fellowmen? Do we aspire to becoming ministers to wield power over our neighbours? That is not the way of Jesus.

What is this service of God? "I was an hungered and ye fed me, naked and ye clothed me, sick and ye visited me". "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me". This is then the field for all who would follow Him who went about doing good. His whole life was based not on man's rights but on his duties to his neighbour. Can we under such allegiance form ourselves into a community fighting for its rights and privileges? Is it not a denial of our Lord to seek after these things? Did not Jesus teach us by the parable of the good Samaritan that we should help those in need irrespective of whether the needy belong to our group or not. The priest the Levite passed by on the other side of the one who was wounded and robbed by thieves but the Samaritan, though he was despised, came to the rescue and ministered to him. Shall we not do likewise?

* The rule in question was soon after rescinded.

Generally when people talk of communities in relation to politics they mean to secure power for safeguarding their own interests. This is diametrically opposed to the teachings of Jesus and it is definitely unchristian.

A few days ago a small deputation of Indian Christians waited on the M. P. Delegates to represent their case! How far have we drifted from the Master who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not.

Some of the leaders of the community waited on the Viceroy on another occasion begging him to form an Indian Christian Regiment! Do we realize the blasphemy of this? We seek to learn cold-blooded murder as a profession and we call ourselves by the name of the Prince of Peace who taught us not to resist with evil "but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also". Here we are petitioning Government to teach us to kill those whom we have never met and who have never done us any personal harm.

The irony of fate has it that this community has enlisted freely into this murder gang otherwise euphemistically called the military. Even the softer sex has been so tempted by mammon as to join in the auxiliaries forgetting the gentleness of their sex. Does not all this arise out of our illegitimate desire for the things of the world? Let us always remember that the Master we profess to serve had not where to lay His head. Can we expect better treatment or reward than what was meted out to Him? He died on the cross and His crown was a crown of thorns. Are we prepared to drink of the cup He drank or do we think that He drank the bitter cup to procure for us licence for unrestricted indulgence?

Do we seek to get into politics so as to be honoured of men? Worldly ones seek to exercise authority over others. But it should not be so amongst us. Whoever will be chief must be the servant of all. Jesus says He came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many. If we must compete let us compete in serving others. Let us win the love and confidence of others by our dedicated lives. Let us give up this humiliating begging for favours and high seats.

The only community Jesus recognizes is a community of servants. He that doeth the will of the Father the same is my brother, sister and mother.

Let us strive to be numbered within this select family. The Master calls, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross, and follow me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it." Shall we not pay heed to this invitation?

J. C. KUMARAPPA

BEWARE OF BUREAUCRATIC PLANS

In September last, Reuter cabled from Washington that a mission headed by a British knight was visiting the United States, 'after five months' stay in England' in connection with the present irresponsible Government of India's project to set up a factory for the manufacture of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  million tons of ammonium sulphate yearly at an expenditure of 40,000,000 dollars or over 13 crores of rupees.

But no greater misfortune could perhaps befall the people of India than that their land should be poisoned with artificial fertilizers, the use of which has been condemned by British authorities on agriculture themselves.

We must replace what we take from the soil. The harvesting of crops leads to the impoverishment of the soil which should be replenished by cattle dung and by ploughing in of grasses (see Joseph James' Must We Starve? distributed by F. Muller). But chemical fertilizers affect the soil in much the same way as drugs affect the human body. They produce temporary exhilaration, and then there is a relapse. Bumper crops are obtained but they cause new diseases and deficiencies in the soil. Balfour in Living Soil quotes from a circular letter sent by Sir Albert Howard:

"In the South of France grapes are raised very largely by means of artificials: the many diseases are combated by poison sprays.

"In Baluchistan on the other hand the vine is always manured with farm-yard manure; artificials are not used; the crops have no need for fungicides and insecticides, because diseases are practically non-existent."

British writers hold that crop diseases which are on the increase in England are due to artificials. James quotes from Lord Lymington who says:

"Twenty years ago potatoes were sprayed with copper sulphate mixtures once or perhaps twice in a year, but now they are sprayed twelve or fifteen times a season. Nearly all this is due to loss of organic manure for land and proper balance of farming" (Famine in England).

Chemical sprays affect the crops adversely and shorten considerably the life of the soil itself.

Lord Lymington is of the opinion that artificial manures are highly dangerous:

"The processes of life depend as much on decay as on growth. Healthy growth can only take place when there has been proper decay of organic matter which becomes humus. This can only be brought about by the working of soil bacteria. Reckless use of sulphate of ammonia, nitro-chalk, potash and other salts kills these bacteria, and so the plant cannot remain healthy when there is no humus in the soil."

Animal and human diseases no less than crop diseases are caused by artificials. £6 a year is the amount of money spent in England per head on medicines, and the cost of animal disease is estimated at one tenth of the farmer's total return from stock.

Foot and mouth disease is prevalent in England and the infected animals are sent to the slaughter house, stock movements being prohibited within a radius of fifteen miles from the parts affected by the disease. But Howard testifies that his oxen in India fed on compost-grown food failed to contract the disease, even when 'rubbing noses' with infected animals.

Balfour quotes from a correspondent who wrote :

"Cabbages . . . grown too fast with nitrate and phosphate are a curious 'wrong' colour. If over 50 p. c. of the green stuff given to rabbits is of this sort the rabbits die. If the phosphate goes beyond a certain point the field takes on an unnatural green and is deserted by wild rabbits." Salesmen use this as a recommendation: 'Use our soluble phosphate fertilizer and keep the rabbits away', or 'Use enough nitro-chalk, and you will get big greens that rabbits will scarcely touch; if they do, they die'.

It was found that cattle refused to graze in a field dressed with artificials.

Balfour also cites the case of a school which at first raised its vegetables with artificials and then with the Indore compost. The Head Master said that at first cold, measles and scarlet fever used to run through the school, but afterwards they tended to be confined to single cases imported from outside. There was also definite improvement in the taste and the quality of the vegetables.

McCarrison, when in charge of the Deficiency Diseases Inquiry in India, found that when wheat was grown on soil treated with farm-yard manure, its nutritive value was 17 per cent higher than when grown on soil treated with complete chemical manure. Wheat grown under the latter condition contained a smaller amount of vitamin A, which is essential in maintaining the resistance of man and his domestic animals to infectious diseases.

McCarrison also found that 'if the vitamin B value of cattle manure millet be taken as 1, that of chemical manure millet is approximately .66'.

II

Another item in these plans is the mechanization of agriculture. But as Lord Northbourne warns us in his Look to the Land (Dent), "mechanization can be a terrible snare, as it makes possible the kind of soil exploitation which has led to desert making on a scale hitherto unparalleled."

British farmers who have mechanized their agricultural operations have many lessons to teach us, and it is up to us to profit by what they themselves admit to be their mistakes.

For one thing the machines are too heavy for the maintenance of soil health. Lawns deteriorate when a motor lawn-mower is used.

The many-shared plough works too fast. With a single-share ox or horse-driven plough it took quite a number of days to finish a big farm. Flocks of birds alert for grubs and worms followed the plough. But what took quite a week before is now done in a single day, so that birds have no time to clean the soil. British farmers therefore complain of serious increase in wireworm.

But the loss in soil cleanliness is only half the story. The loss in humus is still more disquieting. The horse or the ox never moved over a field without enriching the soil. The motor tractor moves over the field but gives nothing. Five lakhs of horses have been eliminated from the British army and from British towns during the last twenty years with the result that a million acres of land in Britain get no dung and there is a corresponding loss of soil fertility.

The plant-animal-man cycle has been broken in England in a variety of ways, and the consequences have been always bad. As Michael Graham points out in Soil and Sense (Faber) the British housewife limits the size of her family, thus throwing shepherds out of work and reducing farmers to bankruptcy. The number of sheep is down by one million a year, so that although Britain badly needs wheat, there are not enough sheep to tread and manure the soil.

In fact, so-called scientific farming is too exhaustive and therefore ultimately destructive all over the world, as for instance in Egypt, where "the soils have steadily deteriorated with the introduction of a more efficient technique" (Rape of the Earth).

Mechanized farming in England also called for the wholesale destruction of hedges which according to E. B. Balfour is responsible for the increase in insect pests, for "with the hedge has gone the shelter for the small birds who prey on insects." Fields in England were formerly small. There was an abundance of hedge-rows and frequent trees which did much in the windy climate of Britain to "maintain the soil in position and to increase its productivity." But the size of the fields is now enlarged in order to accommodate modern farming machinery.

Such being the experience of British farmers, may it not be that the failure of the United States to supply us with even 500 tractors while she is delivering 50,000 tractors to Russia and 20,000 more to France is only a blessing in disguise?

Two years before A. E. died, the Government of the United States invited him to come and see what was wrong with agriculture. The apparatus had been perfected, but workers were refusing to carry on. A. E. found excessive organization had destroyed the soul of the thing; machinery so intruded between man, soil and beast that man could not bear work any longer.

Let us bear in mind these wise words of Lord Northbourne:

"The very best in farming as in all other crafts can only be produced by hand, and less than the best will not do."

V. G. D.

GLEANINGS FROM CORRESPONDENTS

The Soya Bean has already been mentioned in these columns. A friend from Bareilly writes:

"I have grown Soya Beans in my fields in this district. As a kharif crop it has proved very successful and some friends who have tasted its different preparations like it much. A friend of mine has been using Soya Bean milk during all these war days of milk scarcity.

"In the coming rainy season it can be grown widely in all fields where rain water does not stand for long. It will be specifically a very suitable crop for sowing in any vacant land attached to bungalows. People in Western U.P. and the Punjab cannot take much rice without detriment to their health. Bajra and maize do not suit many persons. Wheat is scarce. Soya Bean may be a useful substitute in some if not many cases."

* * *

Shrimati Lilavati Munshi threw out some useful suggestions to the Bombay Municipal Corporation and the general public when presiding the other day over the annual general meeting of the Agri-Horticultural Society.

(a) To convert the Malabar Hill Slopes, with the exception of the hanging gardens at the top, from the Bombay Garage to Kemp's Corner, into vegetable gardens. This space could easily supply vegetables to a thousand persons,

(b) to use all house terraces with the help of modern methods for small scale cultivation of vegetables like tomatoes and greens,

(c) to convert by chemical means the City's refuse into manure,

(d) to encourage in children the healthy pastime of cultivating fruit plants, vegetables and cereals, both in school and at home, and thus early instil into them a sense of social service.

She rightly says that a vegetable garden, if laid out properly, can be a thing of beauty. The society is willing to give expert advice if needed.

* * *

A correspondent welcomes Gandhiji's suggestion of more raw vegetables and occasional complete or partial fasts. Simple diet plus yogic exercises will make many people lose their superfluous fat and improve their digestion. Most of the well-to-do man's maladies are due to wrong diet or overeating, both of which handicaps can easily be overcome by wise restriction in these difficult times.

* * *

Goat's milk can be produced very cheaply. In several large families there is enough food material thrown away daily, like peelings and the coarser parts of vegetables etc. to feed at least one goat.

In a country like ours where pasture lands today are unavailable and a very small percentage of farmers is able to keep milch cattle, it is the milk goat that must become the poor man's cow.

Clean milking and boiling helps to eliminate the odour and flavour objected to by some people in goat's milk.

Uruli, 28-3-'46

A. K.

AFTER NEARLY FOUR YEARS

It was a joy to return to Sevagram after the best part of four years and receive a warm welcome from the family here. Change is the one unchanging law of life. Small wonder, then, that I was greeted by many new faces and new landmarks.

Of the old, familiar landmarks Ba's and Mahadev's cottages are desolate without those loved figures. It is difficult to get used to their absence or not to be reminded of them daily, for they were more a part of Babu's life than anyone else. But "why should we mourn for the blest?"

My time here has been very full and too short for me to take everything in or see all that I would like to see more closely and at greater leisure.

The Mahadev Mandir is a fine structure and a worthy memorial to him. It is used for meetings, for collective spinning and lectures. The acoustics are good and there is room to seat 400 persons. It is intended, in its vicinity or in a portion of it, to have a permanent museum for Khadi and all its implements as well as maps and charts showing progress etc. of our constructive work all over India.

The Khadi Vidyalaya has grown beyond recognition and now includes an all-round training course for village workers. There is a fine boarding hostel for boys. Accommodation can be provided for 80, but it is big enough for 100 students. The hostel is simple with large dormitories in which each student has a wooden bed, a stool, a small mat and a locker. All the processes of Khadi are taught and apart from improvements made so far, constant research is going on all the time. There are 36 looms, also housed in new buildings, all of them pit except four, which are "frame" looms. These latter are removable and therefore useful for schools. The equipment for the institution is made in the workshop and the buildings have all been put up with local material and village labour. The all-round village worker is trained, in addition to the science of Khadi, in sanitation, hygiene, cooking, dietetics, village economics, elementary history of India, history of the Congress and general knowledge. For Khadi training the qualification is VII Vernacular (or full primary). For all-round workers the equivalent of the matriculation is requisite. There are 60 students at the moment undergoing training which lasts two years. There is room for ten women but no girls, alas! have been so far forthcoming. This is a pity, for women village workers are just as much, if not really more, needed than men.

The Talimi Sangh has added a kitchen and dining room and a hall to their buildings since I was last there. They have taken over the buildings that used to belong to the Khadi Vidyalaya and utilize them for hostels for their boarders. Co-education exists. At the moment there are 60 children from the ages of seven upwards out of which number ten are girls. More girls would like to come but there is no room for them. A plot of land is available for a girls' hostel but owing to the high cost of labour and material as little as possible in the shape of new buildings is being undertaken. The children seem happy and contented. They come from neighbouring villages, and have improved in every way. Spinning continues to be the main craft through which education is imparted but in addition, there are numerous activities for the children. They have a small plot of land, where they grow flowers in beds allotted to groups. It was good to see sweet peas, hollyhocks, nasturtiums and larkspur making a colourful frontage to the building. Now, however, with the necessity for growing more food I imagine this plot of land too will grow carrots and cabbages instead of flowers! Not so joyous to look at but definitely joyous if it means so many more vegetables for some hungry mouths.

The kitchen proves an excellent training ground for the little ones. They do all the cooking under supervision of a member of the staff. They work out food values daily, weigh out the ingredients themselves and thus get practical lessons in arithmetic. The daily menu has been planned on a system of vitamins. The following account is educative. It has been given to me by the daughter of the Principal of the school who is receiving her education with the village children. She is eleven years old.

"Today, 7-1-'46, it was our turn for kitchen work. We were twelve boys and girls. Two boys were suffering from itch, so they were sent for work in the garden. We first went in a line to the well and washed our faces, hands, feet and nails. The captain then asked us to stand in a line in front of the kitchen and inspected our hands, our nails, our hair and our clothes. He sent back boys whose nails were dirty to cut them. He then distributed our work. One for the cooking of Khichadi, one girl for the cooking of vegetables, one to cut and prepare raw vegetables, one to arrange for clean linen and vessels, one for recording and the rest for making bhakis, i. e. Jowari rotis.

Today's meal consisted of Khichadi, Brinjal curry, bhakis (Jowari rotis), salt, lemons, green chillies, water and milk 4 ozs."

More milk daily per head is aimed at but has not yet been attained. The cost of food per head is Rs. 10/- p. m..

The children do all the washing up of vessels and cleaning of their rooms. They have the care of two bullocks with whom they are on the friendliest terms. A ghani (oil press) has recently been purchased. I saw a boy of ten, presumably, in charge the day I visited. He was responsible for recording how much oil had been pressed in an hour and for putting it carefully away in the proper tin where it is stored. Physical exercises are compulsory in the morning. Games, folk dances and gardening provide outdoor relaxation in the afternoons. On the food provided it has been noted that children put on weight in the winter months.

The following gives an account in detail of the yarn produced:

Yarn produced during July 1944 to February 1945 (8 months) Grades I to V.

Grades	Average attendance	Weight.		Ave. count.	Equivalent in sq. yds. of cloth	Wages
		Hanks	srs. ch.			Rs.	As.	Ps.
I & II	21	294½	15 1½	9	90	32	1	8
III	10	690½	28 12½	12	197	82	10	8
IV	5	499	20 12½	12	142	62	12	9
V	17	1300½	46 7	14	342	164	8	6
Total	53	2784	111 1½	...	771	Rs. 342	1	7

53 children spun 2784 hanks of yarn in 8 months which can produce 771 sq. yds. of cloth from July 1944 to February 1945. During the period of July 1945 to February 1946 the students themselves wove 443 sq. yds. of cloth in the school.

It would be well for those who are prejudiced against spinning to see the children enjoying this portion of their studies. They are able, without knowing as it were, to produce enough cloth to clothe themselves. When one sees what can be achieved in a comparatively short time against heavy odds one longs more than ever for a government of the people which would give to this life-giving scheme the money and encouragement of which it stands in need. Here, as elsewhere, the need for teachers who will look upon their task as a calling and not a profession, and training centres for them in every province, is very urgent.

There is a pre-basic school in Sevagram village itself run by Shantabai Nerulkar. She works for adult education also. Nursery schools and adult education are very necessary items in our curriculum of education. I was unable to see the school in action. But in a brief visit to the village I was struck by the improvement in cleanliness and a kind of aliveness in the inhabitants.

The training school is one of the main activities of the Hindustani Talimi Sangh. There are 36 students being trained at the moment from various provinces, barring Madras, where a training centre is already being carried on. The training lasts one year. Andhra has sent a strong contingent of women which is all to the good.

The hospital stands out, apart from its great utility, by the only colourful building in the neighbourhood. Why its walls were coloured a deep terra cotta is not known but it is a happy accident. Neatness and colour add to the charm of life and may not be disregarded when we start building model villages. There is no doubt as to the need for medical relief in all areas. Sevagram Hospital serves all the neighbouring villages in addition to Sevagram. The building is simple and cleanly kept. 16 in-door patients can be accommodated. There is a room for minor operations, a dispensary and examination room. For the hundreds of out-patients a thatched shamiana has been put up in the compound. The staff consists of a lady doctor, a vaidya, a fully trained dispenser with three helpers and three nurses who have been trained here. They are all heavily worked, because, in addition to this hospital there is an antenatal clinic in Sevagram village and two dispensaries in neighbouring villages which have to be visited at least twice a week. The need for qualified nurses and midwives for village service is very great. The surgeon performs the operation, the physician prescribes, but the burden of constant care and carrying out of orders is the nurse's task, without which no success can attend the work of doctors. Sevagram medical relief shows how much can be done by the right type of worker and is worthy of emulation. In all maiden effort, such as everything in Sevagram is, workers have to make shift and accommodate and adjust themselves as best they can. Those who are able to do so are true servants who count no cost too great for the cause they have espoused. I feel that Sevagram is not belying the name the ashramites chose for it themselves in the early years.

Sevagram, 15-2-'46

A. K.

INSPIRING FOR WOMEN

It is a far cry from Assam to Kerala and yet Uruli village, unknown to anyone except its residents until Gandhiji took up his abode there the other day, was the meeting place of all the women agents so far appointed by the Kasturba Trust to organize and supervise work in the different provinces.

We of the towns have no idea of the uphill task that lies before village workers. When Thakkar Bapa suggested to Gandhiji that an Agents' meeting would be advisable, Gandhiji welcomed the idea. Fears and doubts are natural when one is faced with difficulties and these sisters had many things to ask. As Agents they had been asked why Gandhiji who talked of democracy should have been party to the appointment of single persons to run the work of Provinces instead of the originally formed committees? Tracing his line of thought Gandhiji explained how it was women's work and how he had felt he must make women shoulder the responsibility of it. In no other organization, not even in the Congress, had such a tremendous responsibility been thrown on women. The Agent's post throws all the burden of work on her in her area. It is immense but given industry and intelligence not only will the work grow but the Agent herself will grow in stature. She is there to serve and to give, not to possess. By this giving she will become the people's trusted servant. This is the royal road to democracy.

Gandhiji gave them a clear answer in respect to political work such as volunteering at polling booths. They were not there for that purpose. It was perfectly possible for them not to be in the Congress and yet be of it as he was himself. The work before them was to make women fit to take their place in society. If they succeeded in teaching them the correct way of life they taught them all they needed. Today they were steeped in the Stygian darkness of ignorance and superstition. With the removal of that, women would make freedom worth while.

He cited the good example of Kanu Gandhi who had said that in his camp soon to be started it would be his aim to teach the students how to battle against famine by tilling the ground, scavenging, cooking, bringing their own expenses with them, so that they need not be a liability on any one. Women have to work in famine areas with this ideal. It is ours to mitigate, not to aggravate the burden.

Asked as to what work he would lay most emphasis on so far as women were concerned, Gandhiji felt that sanitation and hygiene, owing to the lack of knowledge of which our people suffered so greatly, should take first place. Then there were evil customs which had to go, the useless expenditure on jewellery, and he made everyone laugh by his graphic description of a much bejewelled woman patient with a huge nose ring, earrings, necklace, bracelets and anklets complete who had visited him as a patient that very morning! It was hard to know what should come first. "Really all work in its own place is of equal importance." There is the very great necessity of teaching women the care and upbringing of children, discipline in their own lives in every department including eating. He placed maternity almost last in comparison with the above-mentioned. But nothing could be achieved without friendship with the women. That was the first and basic desideratum.

The pay of workers had caused much discussion. For Gandhiji it was the spirit of the worker that meant everything. Inasmuch as the labourer was worthy of his hire a decent living wage must be paid, but it was the work and not the pay that should attract.

Were the women to be given the wheel as a revolutionary weapon as he had said it was in the hands of a Jawaharlal? The answer was 'no'. How could it be such in the hands of an ignorant woman? But if every woman in India span then a silent revolution would certainly be created of which a Jawaharlal could make full use. Unless steam generated was put to proper use the engine would not run and the person generating the steam might himself be scalded by it even unto death.

Amongst the members were some staunch feminists who are anxious for women alone to run the show. To them Gandhiji said that the men who were there were serving the memory of one who was instinctively a village woman. Long before he himself had taken to village life as being the ideal life for service, Kasturba had shown her preference for it. Her heart was in Phoenix even in the far off South African days when he himself worked in a town. The men who were honouring her memory were only serving until such time as women were ready to take their place. "I am the only one-whom you may find it hard to get rid of for I have always counted myself as a woman. I believe I know your sex and your needs better than you do yourselves."

He said the Kasturba Trust would have even a bigger place in national service when freedom was ours than it had today. For all would go to the winds if women were not properly trained. He hoped that every worker in the Trust would have a great deal to give to the new government. But we have got to generate that strength within us. We may not be frightened of making mistakes. Man is born to make mistakes but the great thing is to see our mistakes and learn from them. We should magnify our own errors so as to be deterred from falling into them again. Those who imagine that they never make mistakes are to be feared. He agreed with one of the members when she said that it was a great tragedy that the uplift of women has to be an item on the constructive programme. "Have we yet to find ourselves?" she asked. "Yes, indeed," was the reply. "And where better can you find yourselves than by being true to the highest traditions of Indian women by serving your unhappy sisters today?"

On the train to Delhi,
31-3-46

A. K. -

SELF-SUFFICIENCY VERSUS COMMERCIAL KHADI

(By M. K. Gandhi)

We are ourselves responsible for the creation of this problem. We did not know the science of Khadi. We do not know it fully even now. Therefore, like children, we stumble again and again and thereby learn to walk. In order that we may not fall so as never to rise again we made use of a go-cart and are still using it. Having realized this the A. I. S. A. has to make a tremendous effort to vindicate its existence or else be wiped out. By A. I. S. A. is meant all its workers and includes even the spinners. It must be borne in mind that to make the spinners self-reliant and through their activity to achieve India's freedom is and ought to be the Association's goal. That we may not reach that goal should not cause undue worry. It is enough for us to know that it is the correct goal and having started the activity we have to correct our mistakes and go forward. That is the essence of the scientific method. No science has dropped from the skies in a perfect form. All sciences develop and are built up through experience. Perfection is not an attribute of science. Absolute perfection is not possible either for man or for the science that he creates. For example, astronomy is continually progressing. Many mistakes have been made and corrected. The process still continues. The same may be said of the science of Khadi.

If this is intelligently understood and fearlessly acted upon, replies to the questions presented from time to time become easy. The spinner must have full knowledge of all the processes from the beginning to the end, right up to weaving. In this lies the way to Swaraj. Up till now, knowingly or unknowingly, we have been producing Khadi solely for purposes of commerce. But this too has always been linked with the ideal of Swaraj. Had it not been so, even commercial Khadi would have failed and most probably Khadi for Swaraj would have remained a mere dream.

Commercial Khadi has been and still is our go-cart, so to speak. To the spinner to have her cotton carded by others has been and still is an additional prop. Only as we progressively give up these props will we bring into being Khadi for Swaraj. Those branches where commercial Khadi is being produced and carding carried on as an independent activity should, if possible, be closed down. Life is, however, made up of compromises. Therefore, let it be said that the props should be given up as quickly as possible. Those who have faith and knowledge will be the first to do so. Where sincere and earnest efforts are made, the question of competition should not arise.

One aspect of the present situation needs attention. Those who spin for their livelihood will willingly learn the new processes because thereby their earning capacity will increase. Today this section is diminishing because other and easier sources of income are open to them. For them it is not a moral question. They take what is easiest as, for example, collection of leaves for making bidis. It is our duty to impart true knowledge to them and help them up the steep road to Swaraj and make them healthy and hardy in the process of climbing. If we cannot do this we shall deservedly lose our existence. Therefore, we can only have dealings with the man or woman who spins with understanding.

Another thing that has to be remembered is that spinning is now one of the recognized avocations and will, therefore, continue. So we need not worry about the production of commercial Khadi. Whatever difficulties may arise from the above have to be overcome by the workers. To ask whether this or that comes within this framework is a sign of mental laziness and ignorance. He who cannot draw deductions cannot be said to know geometry. The same is true of all sciences.

New Delhi, 3-4-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

WHAT IS THE LAW?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

'Confused' writes:

"I grant that Italy, Germany and Japan have lost their power, but is the loss due to their faith in violence, as you would say, or is it due to their exhaustion brought about by fortunes of war? Will you hold that Britain, Russia and America have been successful because of their non-violence?"

Thus argues a correspondent whom I have paraphrased without diminishing the force of his argument. The questioner has failed to perceive that in the writing quoted by him, I have said nothing about the so-called victorious Powers. But I have said elsewhere that their victory is an empty boast if they do not learn the lesson while there is time and do not shape their life in accordance with the law of non-violence. I believe wholly in the truth that "those who take the sword will perish by the sword". There is no doubt that the victors employed the same means as the vanquished. There was only a question of degree. The victorious parties already seem to be on the verge of quarrelling among themselves. If another war has not already begun, it is because no one is ready to enter upon it. After all men are not machines. They cannot be continually fighting without being reduced to the state of beasts. One has to hope, for the sake of humanity, that they will do some hard thinking and discover the truth that the common man of whom the world is composed gains nothing by cutting his fellowman's throat and that the fruits of peace are infinitely superior to those of war. Ingenuity employed in devising methods of destruction lowers, whereas when employed in devising ways of building it befits mankind.

New Delhi, 5-4-'46

GANDHIJI ON NEW SPIRIT*

(By H. N. Brailsford)

When last I was in Poona, Gandhi was a prisoner and I was not allowed to meet him. Then, the town, gloomy and angry, was involved in a general strike. Today it is celebrating the spring carnival in a mood of gaiety.

Gandhi in his turn was happy when I met him, for Mr. Attlee's speech in the Indian debate had just opened the road to independence. He looked well and very much less than his age. He talked easily without a trace of tension. His manner was never solemn and often he relaxed in a humorous chuckle. In a way hard to define, one felt that this man was speaking for India. Though his moral stature lifts him high above the average man, he interprets what is typical and enduring in this nation's outlook. He warned me, none the less, that he would be speaking only for himself and not for the Congress.

Our talk took its start from the Prime Minister's recognition of India's right to choose independence. This, Gandhi welcomed, and not only this, but the whole tone of the speech. "But I can't forget," he went on, "that the story of Britain's connection with India is a tragedy of unfulfilled promises and disappointed hopes. We must keep an open mind. A seeker of truth will never begin by discounting his opponent's statement as unworthy of trust. So I am hopeful, and indeed, no responsible Indian feels otherwise. This time I believe that the British mean business. But the offer has come suddenly. Will India be jerked into independence? I feel to-day like a passenger who has been hoisted in a basket-chair on to a ship's deck in a stormy sea and has not yet found his feet. There should have been some psychological preparation, but even now it is not too late. The tide of bitterness had risen high and that is not good for the soul. The last two months should have been filled with generous gestures. This is a milestone not only in India's history and Britain's, but in the history of the whole world."

Gandhi's meaning was clear. The British Government had done the right thing, but in its manner of doing it, he missed the big touch. When I asked him for concrete illustrations, he chose two. The release of the political prisoners had been gradual and was still incomplete. "There was no danger to fear. If independence is coming, would these men have opposed it? A complete amnesty would have captured the people's imagination. When you are about to transfer power, you should do it boldly."

He went on to speak of the salt tax. "Its abolition would be a gesture the poorest peasant could understand. It would mean even more to him than independence itself. Salt in this climate is a necessity of life, like air and water. He needs it for himself, his cattle, and his land. This monopoly will go the instant we get independence. Then why not abolish it today? By such acts the Government could have created a feeling among the masses that the new era has already dawned."

* Reproduced from the 'Hindu', Madras,

INDEPENDENCE v. DOMINION STATUS

So much for the preparation for independence. I now reminded Gandhi that many Englishmen find it hard to understand why Indians prefer independence to Dominion Status. His answer was startling: "There was a time when I used to swear by Dominion Status and actually preferred it to independence. That was my attitude during the first World War. I even used, in writing to Lord Chelmsford, the Viceroy of those days an expression that has often been quoted against me. I wanted to evoke in the Indian breast the same loyalty to the British Crown that there is in the breast of an Englishman. It was an English footballer who converted me to independence. With a laugh, Gandhi explained that he was referring to C. F. Andrews, who had been a notable athlete at Cambridge, as well as a don. Gandhi added: "Andrews made me understand the significance of the King-Emperor's title. The British King is King also in the Dominions, but he is the Emperor of India. India alone makes the Empire. The Dominions are peopled by your cousins. But we Indians, with our different culture and traditions, can never belong to the British family. We may belong to a world-wide family of nations, but first we must cease to be under-dogs. So, I set myself to win independence. You may object that by so doing I am throwing away the protection of the British army and navy. India would not need them, if she were truly non-violent. If, in the glow of freedom, she could live up to that creed no power on earth would ever cast an evil eye upon her. That would be India's crowning glory and her contribution to the world's progress."

"If only Englishmen could follow this argument of mine, they would make their offer of independence in a different tone altogether. Today, they insist that Dominion Status is the best gift they can possibly bestow: still, if Indians do choose independence, they shall have it. No, that is the wrong attitude. I should like to hear Englishmen saying: 'For the world's sake and for ours as well as your own, you shall have independence today, even as we have it.'"

ALLIANCE WITH BRITAIN

With some sense of incongruity, for I was descending to a lower level, I now asked Gandhi to face the anxieties of his English listeners and tell them whether Indian independence would make for Britain's security and the world's. He answered that the British need never fear an independent India. If they leave India as willing friends, she in her turn will always remain friendly. But Britain, I told him, might hope for some assurance of friendship. Would an independent India be willing to enter into an alliance with Britain?

Gandhi's answer came promptly: "Supposing India said no, would you make the recognition of India's independence contingent upon her entering into an alliance with Britain? If you did that, it would immediately lower the value of your offer and rob it of all grace. The proper attitude is to meet India's claims as a matter of right, even if she wanted to be unfriendly and pay you back in your own coin. No calculations entered into the British mind, when they settled with the Boers at the end of a bloody war, and the Boers have stayed friends ever since."

I replied that Britain has made up her mind to end the coercive connection with India. But living as she does in a perilous world, it is inevitable that she should ask the question whether as an ally in a defensive war she would be entitled to use India's strategic bases and ports against the aggressor. If that question were asked in no bargaining spirit, could India give a reassuring reply?

"Englishmen", Gandhi answered, "must learn to be Brahmins, not Banias." The Bania I should explain is the trader, or as Napoleon put it, the shopkeeper. The Brahmin is the man who is intelligent enough to rank the moral above the material values of life."

"A Gujarati novelist," Gandhi went on, "has said that Englishmen are soldiers and Brahmins, but not Banias. That was a generous verdict, but it was mistaken. Englishmen have still to evolve the British Brahmanical spirit. Even the British soldier still calculates and bargains like a Bania, and fails to reach the highest type of courage. I still cherish the hope that the British will respond to the non-violent spirit of India. As the author of that movement, I know what it has meant for the world. The non-violent spirit is the greatest thing in life. I feel it is my responsibility to help my brothers not to degrade themselves by bargaining. If you and we can rise to this moral height, no danger can alarm us. It is probable that many members of the Congress will not take this view and may be willing to discuss an alliance today. But independence should come free as air: don't let us bargain over it."

In reply to a further question, whether a defensive alliance might be discussed when independence is ratified by treaty, Gandhi replied: "If India feels the glow of independence she probably would enter into such a treaty of her own free will. The spontaneous friendship between India and Britain would then be extended to other Powers and, among them, they would hold the balance, since they alone would possess moral force. To see that vision realized, I want to live for 125 years."

This was the high moment of our talk. I had heard Gandhi's message. But there are still some details I ought to report. He said that he hoped for a mutually helpful commercial treaty between a friendly Britain and an independent India. For goods that India needed to import, he was even ready to give Britain a preference,

PAKISTAN QUESTION

While we talked of Pakistan, Gandhi said that, if no other method of solution succeeded, he was prepared to submit the whole issue to international arbitration. Nor should we forget that expedient, if any insoluble question arose between Britain and India, for example over debts. But he saw no blank wall of difficulty ahead. His last words were that difficulties make the man.

I came away with the sense that I had been talking to a brave man who has the courage to believe that human society can be built only on moral principles. Amid our preoccupations over military perils he stands aloof and repeats with unshaken faith his creed that safety is attainable, only when men learn to treat each other as brothers and equals. No lesser means will avail.

THE CASE FOR THE BULLOCK

Now that machinery threatens to overrun our agriculture and transport as a part of so-called planning, it is necessary to sum up the case for the bullock who is doomed to destruction if that threat materializes.

We must have milk, more milk and still more milk. We must therefore have cows, and if we have cows, the bullocks will be always with us, for whom we have to provide and can provide full employment only if we yoke them to the plough, to the cart and to the ghani. If we fail to do this, we shall be reduced to the same plight as the Western nations who slaughter all bull calves except a few which are reared as stud bulls.

The tractor is a machine; the bullock also is a machine, though not so powerful as the tractor. But the bullock is a living machine, and contact with such harmless animals has been a potent factor in the onward march of human civilization. I am not sure that the elimination of animal power and the installation of lifeless machinery in the Western countries has not something to do with the brutalization of human nature to which frequent and fierce wars bear witness in common with other evils peculiar to the West.

This is the humanitarian argument, which must be reinforced by the economic argument. We shall now deal with this latter, and in doing so make free use of a chapter in Shri N. G. Apte's Thoughts and Work about Villages entitled 'Economics of the Bullock' (Publisher: Shri Sardesai, Samarth Bharat Press, Poona 2).

The bullock is not only a living tractor; it is also a living fertilizer factory and gives us farmyard manure which supplies nitrogen and improves the porosity of the soil, thus helping to increase the moisture content of the soil as well as proper aeration. These three factors are essential to plant growth. 'No amount of concentrated manure would help if the porosity of the soil and consequent aeration of the soil are not improved.'

Arcificial manures are an unmitigated curse, as has already been shown in these columns. Then there is green manuring with sann hemp and other leguminous plants, but that too compares unfavourably with farmyard manure. For, the green manure occupies the soil for a season from the time of planting till it is sufficiently decayed, but cannot be fed to the animals. On the other hand if we grow a fodder crop instead of the green manure on the same piece of land, at the end of the season we would get fodder enough for two animals. These animals would work for us the whole year and give us the fodder back in the form of manure better adapted for assimilation by the soil, with probably some additional nitrogen derived from metabolic processes of the animal body.

Most of the nitrogen taken from the soil will be returned in the dung as the bullock requires only carbohydrates for work. These carbohydrates are no good as a manure as most of the carbohydrate material in the crop is fixed from the atmosphere during the process of metabolism in the plants and is not drawn from the soil. Thus the bullock utilizes the energy which is wasted when a green manure is ploughed into the soil. Then again farmyard manure feeds the soil better than the green manure, having passed through the animal system and thus having been acted upon by decomposing agents present in that system.

The bullock's function as the manufacturer of a first class fertilizer is not the only point where it scores over the machine. For, no machine ever invented can perform the various duties that the bullock discharges. The bullock can work fast as well as slow. It can not only be yoked to the plough, it can be used in crushing the earheads as well as in carting the grain to the market. All this it does, while subsisting on the straw or the cake left after the grain and the oil have been utilized for human consumption. This oil too is extracted by the same animal. A pair of bullocks costs a few hundred rupees, but if it is supplanted by machinery, the farmer must go in for an oil engine, a motor truck, a tractor, small motor-driven harrows and what not, which would cost him goodness knows how many times as much. Then again he must purchase fuel in the shape of oil, which cannot be produced not only on his own field but even in his own country.

The main agricultural operations of ploughing, harrowing, sowing and interculturing keep the bullocks busy for only three or four months in the year. During the rest of the year they can be and should be used for carrying goods as well as passengers, for crushing oilseeds and so on. The bullocks are capable of doing all this, while the specialized machinery would remain idle during the long dull season.

Extraction of oil by machinery is profitable on the face of it, but the profits reappear on the debit side of the cultivator's account, with nothing on the credit side to counterbalance the debit.

We shall close with a final quotation from Shri Apte's valuable study:

'Machinery may be introduced when the existing man and animal power is fully occupied. At present this power is not fully utilized, and therefore there is no occasion for the introduction of machinery.'

V. G. D.

Notes

Eating With Harijans

Q. How can a vegetarian caste Hindu sit down to food in the home of a meat-eating Harijan?

A. A vegetarian caste Hindu can eat vegetarian food in the home of a meat-eating Harijan. Interdining does not imply that one should eat everything that is put before one. All that is necessary is that the food, the plates on which it is served, and the hands that have cooked it should be clean. The same applies to water. Nor does interdining mean that people should eat out of the same plate or drink out of the same glass. There should be no breach of hygiene.

Ramanam

Q. Is it not enough to have Ramanam in one's heart or is there something special in its recitation?

A. I believe there is special merit in the recitation of Ramanam. If anyone knows that God is in truth residing in his heart, I admit that for him there is no need for recitation. But I have not known such a person. On the contrary, my personal experience tells me that there is something quite extraordinary in the recitation of Ramanam. Why or how is not necessary to know.

(From Harijansevak)

Ministerial Salaries

Ministers and members of the provincial assemblies are in their respective places as servants of the people in every sense of the term. The British scale of pay cannot be copied by them except at their cost. Nor need all draw payments because a certain scale is allowed. The scale fixes the limit up to which they may draw. It will be ludicrous for a monied man to draw the full or any payment. The payments are meant for those who cannot easily afford to render free service. They are representatives of the poorest people in the world. What they draw is paid by the poor. Let them remember this salient fact and act and live accordingly.

New Delhi, 6-4-'46

M. K. G.

CONTENTS		PAGE
WHAT IS IN A NAME ?	... M. K. GANDHI	77
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	77
THE MESSAGE OF THE I. N. A.	... PYARELAL	78
VANASPATHI AND GHEE	... M. K. GANDHI	79
LET US PRAY	... M. K. GANDHI	80
QUESTION BOX	... M. K. GANDHI	80
KASTURBA LEPROSY WORK	... M. K. GANDHI	80
GANDHIJI'S IDEAL OF A
PRIVATE SECRETARY—II	... PYARELAL	81
CHRISTIANS AND POLITICS	... J. C. KUMARAPPA	83
BEWARE OF BUREAU-
CRATIC PLANS	... V. G. D.	84
GLEANINGS FROM
CORRESPONDENTS	... A. K.	86
AFTER NEARLY FOUR YEARS...	... A. K.	86
INSPIRING FOR WOMEN	... A. K.	88
SELF-SUFFICIENCY V.
COMMERCIAL KHADI	... M. K. GANDHI	89
WHAT IS THE LAW ?	... M. K. GANDHI	89
GANDHIJI ON NEW SPIRIT	... H. N. BRAILSFORD	90
THE CASE FOR THE BULLOCK	... V. G. D.	91
NOTES :
EATING WITH HARIJANS	... M. K. G.	92
RAMANAM	... M. K. G.	92
MINISTERIAL SALARIES	... M. K. G.	92

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 11]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, APRIL 21, 1946

[ TWO ANNAS

FASTING IN THE AIR

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"Fasting has become a veritable epidemic. The blame lies at your door." So writes a correspondent and adds: "One can understand the efficacy of a fast for purposes of inward purification as also for the outward. But fasts are undertaken nowadays for an increment in one's own pay or in that of one's group, for being selected as a candidate for the Assembly or for various other causes. You encourage one man for fasting for the removal of untouchability and yet you are willing to let another die who is doing the same for a different cause. Is this not injustice? Should you not lay down rules as to when to fast and when not to, what should be its duration, should fruit juices be taken or only water? You talk of the inner voice where you are concerned. Would it not really be best if you were to stop undertaking fasts yourself and stop others too?"

There is force in the above argument. It is, however, impossible to lay down rules. Experience alone can suggest rules. In particular cases it is open to a person to frame his own law or he can refer to me, if he believes me to be an authority. I have had the temerity to claim that fasting is an infallible weapon in the armoury of Satyagraha. I have used it myself, being the author of Satyagraha. Anyone whose fast is related to Satyagraha should seek my permission and obtain it in writing before embarking on it. If this advice is followed, there is no need for framing rules, at any rate, in my lifetime.

One general principle, however, I would like to enunciate. A Satyagrahi should fast only as a last resort when all other avenues of redress have been explored and have failed. There is no room for imitation in fasts. He who has no inner strength should not dream of it, and never with attachment to success. But if a Satyagrahi once undertakes a fast from conviction, he must stick to his resolve, whether there is a chance of his action bearing fruit or not. This does not mean that fasting cannot or can bear fruit. He who fasts in the expectation of fruit generally fails. And even if he does not seemingly fail, he loses all the inner joy which a true fast holds.

Whether one should take fruit juices or not depends on one's physical powers of endurance. But no more fruit juice than is absolutely necessary for the body should be taken. He probably has the greatest inner strength who takes only water.

It is wrong to fast for selfish ends, e. g. for increase in one's own salary. Under certain circumstances it is permissible to fast for an increase in wages on behalf of one's group.

Ridiculous fasts spread like plague and are harmful. But when fasting becomes a duty it cannot be given up. Therefore I do fast when I consider it to be necessary and cannot abstain from it on any score. What I do myself I cannot prevent others from doing under similar circumstances. It is common knowledge that the best of good things are often abused. We see this happening every day.

New Delhi, 13-4-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. On what principle is the question of the salaries of ministers in Congress majority provinces going to be settled this time? Does the Karachi resolution in this regard still hold? If the question is to be settled on the basis of the present high prices is it possible, within the limits of their revenues, for the provincial budgets to increase the pays of all their servants threefold? If not, will it be proper for the ministers to be paid Rs. 1500/- while a chaprasi or a teacher is told to make two ends meet on Rs. 15/- and 12/- p. m. and not make a fuss about it because Congress has to run the administration?

A. The question is apt. Why should a minister draw Rs. 1500/- and a chaprasi or a teacher Rs. 15/- p. m.? But the question cannot be solved by the mere raising of it. Such differences have existed for ages. Why should an elephant require an enormous quantity of food and a mere grain suffice for the ant? The question carries its own answer. God gives to each one according to his need. If we could as definitely know the variations in the needs of men as those of the elephant and the ant, no doubts would arise. Experience tells us that differences in requirements do exist in society. But we do not know the law governing them. All therefore that is possible today is to try to reduce the differences as far as possible. The reduction can be brought about by peaceful agitation and by the creation of public opinion. It cannot be done by force or by duragraha in the name of Satyagraha. The ministers are the people's men. Their wants even before they took office were not those of chaprasis. I would love to see a chaprasi become worthy of holding the office of a minister and yet not increase his needs. It should also be clearly understood that no ministers need draw up to the maximum of the salary fixed.

It is worth while pondering over one thing that arises out of the questions. Is it possible for the chaprasi to support himself and his family on Rs. 15/- p. m. without taking bribes? Should he not be given enough to keep him above temptation? The remedy for this is that as far as possible we should be our own chaprasi. But even so if we need them we must pay them enough for their requirements. In this way the big gulf that exists between minister and chaprasi will be bridged.

It is another matter as to why the pay of the ministers has been raised from Rs. 500/- to 1500/- p. m. But this is nothing as compared with, and does not solve, the main problem. With the solution of the latter it will ipso facto be solved.

New Delhi, 14-4-'46
(From Harijansevak)

THE SACRED WEEK

The following is the text of Gandhiji's Hindustani speech at the prayer gathering on the evening of the 6th of April:

"Twentyseven years ago when the late Swami Shraddhanandji was alive, Satyagraha against the Rowlatt Act was inaugurated on this day. History was made during the following week. For the first time the entire masses of India from one end to the other rose like one man. It was an entirely spontaneous demonstration.

"That was the time when Hindus and Muslims for the time forgot all their differences. The Ali Brothers and I used to go all over the country together like blood-brothers. We spoke with one voice and delivered the message of Hindu-Muslim unity and Swaraj to the masses. We resolved that thereafter we should address our prayers to God alone instead of the British Government and so Satyagraha was born in India. The Ali Brothers readily fell in with the programme of a national day of fasting and prayer. People fasted on the 6th and 13th of April. They realized that they were all children of the one God, destined to live together and die together in the land of their birth, which was India. They assembled together in their thousands and offered prayers in temples, churches and mosques. The climax was reached when in Delhi a monster gathering consisting of both Hindus and Musalmans was held in the Juma mosque and was addressed by the late Swami Shraddhanand. It was a glorious day in India's history, the memory of which we shall always treasure."

Now they had fallen upon evil times, proceeded Gandhiji. The hearts of Hindus and Musalmans were sundered. The air was poisoned with communal bitterness and rancour. A section of the Musalmans had begun to claim that they are a separate nation. Into the logic of that claim he would not go at present, he said. He confessed that it baffled his understanding.

The speaker added: "We commenced our proceedings today with prayer. If we believe in prayer we cannot fly at one another's throat, or regard anybody as our enemy. At Amritsar people lost their heads. But we promptly confessed our mistake and made expiation for it by fasting and praying to God for forgiveness. To err is human. By confessing we convert our mistakes into stepping stones for advance. On the contrary, a person who tries to hide his mistakes becomes a living fraud and sinks down. Man is neither brute nor God but a creature of God striving to realize his divinity. Repentance and self-purification are the means. The moment we repent and ask God for forgiveness for our lapse we are purged of our sin and new life begins for us. True repentance is an essential prerequisite of prayer.

"Prayer is not mere lip service. It must express itself through action. How shall we then pray during the Sacred Week? We can pray by purging our hearts of any taint of communal hatred and ill will that might be lurking there and invoking God's aid for the same. Achievement of communal harmony would thus be one form of prayer. Then we can pray by doing sacrificial spinning for the attainment of non-violent Swaraj. I have a vivid recollection of how in 1919 every home in the Punjab hummed with the music of the spinning wheel. A mountain of yarn was presented to me on one occasion during my tour, which was never equalled before, nor has it been since except recently at Madura during my Madras tour. What are the sisters of Punjab doing today? That is the question which you must ask yourselves during this week of introspection. If the four hundred millions of India took to spinning in earnest, and span for sacrifice, i. e. not for self, with the name of God in their hearts and with the common purpose of winning India's freedom through non-violence, their united effort would not only bring us freedom assuredly, but also provide us the means for safeguarding it after it is won and enable us to point the way out of darkness to the whole world.

"The other day I was talking to the I. N. A. men in the Red Fort. We were discussing as to what they should do on their release. They assured me that they would on their release serve India as true soldiers of non-violence under the Congress flag. I told them that today a true soldier of India is he who spins to clothe the naked and tills the soil to grow more food to meet the threatening food crisis. The Congress has declared that she would carry on the struggle for India's independence through the method of non-violence. But she has not yet decided whether she would adhere to that method for the protection of that freedom against possible foreign aggression. To me it is a self-evident truth that if freedom is to be shared equally by all—even physically the weakest, the lame and the halt—they must be able to contribute an equal share in its defence. How that can be possible when reliance is placed on armaments my plebeian mind fails to understand. I therefore swear and shall continue to swear by non-violence, i. e. by Satyagraha or soul force. In it physical incapacity is no handicap and even a frail woman or a child can pit herself or himself on equal terms against a giant, armed with the most powerful weapons.

"The eighteen-fold constructive programme with the spinning wheel as its centre is the concrete expression of that spirit in organized society. Let us realize that spirit by devoting ourselves prayerfully to the carrying out of the constructive programme during the National Week."

New Delhi, 15-4-'46

PYARELAL

WEEKLY LETTER

THE WAY TO DO IT

The visit to I. N. A. prisoners in Kabul Lines about which I wrote last week was followed by a similar visit by Gandhiji to some thirtyfive I. N. A. prisoners who are detained in the Red Fort. What particularly delighted him during both these visits was to see so many officers and men representing so many different religions and races of India drawn together in a common cause—the cause of India's freedom—and living together like members of one family. It was like a whiff of fresh invigorating air from the free India that is to be. The absence of the third-party had enabled them to obliterate all communal distinctions and develop a perfect spirit of camaraderie in exile, but in detention those distinctions were again being brought home to them.

"We never felt any distinction of creed or religion in the I. N. A.," remarked one of them. "But here we are faced with 'Hindu tea' and 'Musalman tea'. What are we to do?"

"Why do you suffer it?" asked Gandhiji, half seriously, half in banter.

"No, we do not," they replied. "We mix 'Hindu tea' and 'Musalman tea' exactly half and half, and then serve. The same with food."

"That is very good," replied Gandhiji laughing, pleased with their ingenuity.

Summing up his reactions of his second visit, Gandhiji in the course of his remarks at the evening prayer narrated how Col. Niranjan Singh, speaking for the I. N. A. prisoners in the Red Fort, had told him that they were finally convinced that India could not win or retain her independence except through non-violence. They had further assured him that after their release they would serve India as true soldiers of non-violence. "We shall disdain to depend on anybody's charity for our support," they had told him. "We would rather dig the ground and till the land than compromise our self-respect by living on subscriptions."

"I told them," said Gandhiji, "that they would be sadly disillusioned if they thought that a free India would be able to provide them all those emoluments, honours and perquisites which a foreign government gave to the army men by the exploitation of the masses, while education, public health and the allied nation-building activities were starved. India was a poor country, her children were born in poverty and grew up in poverty into anaemic, stunted specimens of humanity. If they wanted to become true soldiers of India they must be prepared to share her destitution and try to ameliorate it to the best of their capacity, not expect to be pampered at the cost of the poor. A true soldier would prefer death to charity."

"In reply," continued Gandhiji, "they assured me that Netaji had inculcated upon them the twin lessons of poverty and equality. 'Among us, officer and men live together and dine together without any distinction. There is no high, no low.'"

A MESSAGE FOR THE I. N. A.

Sardar Ramsing Rawal whose note on "Communal unity and non-untouchability in the I. N. A." has appeared in "Harijan" already saw Gandhiji the other day and asked him what his message for the I. N. A. was. Gandhiji's reply covered not only the I. N. A. but all Indian army men. Although the I. N. A. men had declared open rebellion under Netaji's lead the spirit of rebellion was not confined to them. It had permeated even the Indian Army ranks. Some of the latter had seen him at Poona and sought his advice. Gandhiji had told them that it was open to them to give notice to the authorities that though they were in their pay, their loyalty was mortgaged to India, not to the King of England. Hitherto they had yielded obedience to military orders and been prepared even to shoot down their countrymen to order. But now that the spirit of independence had taken possession of them they would do so no more under a foreign Government's orders.

For the I. N. A. men there were two alternatives. They could serve free India as soldiers-in-arms or they could convert themselves into soldiers of non-violence if they were convinced that non-violence was the higher and the more efficacious way. They should make use of their training and discipline to introduce non-violent organization among the masses, learn spinning and become veteran constructive workers. If they did that, they would set a glorious example to the whole world.

"The I. N. A. men," observed Gandhiji, "have shown great strength, heroism and resourcefulness. But I must confess that their achievements have not dazzled my eyes. To die without killing requires more heroism. There is nothing very wonderful in killing and being killed in the process. But the man who offers his neck to the enemy for execution but refuses to bend to his will shows courage of a far higher type."

"Troublous times lie ahead of us. Our non-violence has brought us to the gate of independence. Shall we renounce it after we have entered that gate? I for one am firmly convinced that non-violence of the brave, such as I have envisaged, provides the surest and most efficacious means to face foreign aggression and internal disorder just as it has done for winning independence." The British were going to quit. What place would India have in the comity of nations? Would she be satisfied with being a fifth-rate power like China? China was independent only in name. India would have long to wait before she could become a first-class military power. "And for that she would have to go under the tutelage of some Western power. A truly non-violent India will have nothing to fear from any foreign power nor will it look to British navy and air force for her defence. I know that we have not as yet the non-violence of the brave."

New Delhi, 16-4-'46

PYARELAL

HARIJAN

April 21

1946

SWEEPERS' STRIKE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

There are certain matters in which strikes would be wrong. Sweepers' grievances come in this category. I do not want to go into others here. My opinion against sweepers' strikes dates back to about 1897 when I was in Durban. A general strike was mooted there and the question arose as to whether scavengers should join in it. My vote was registered against the proposal. Just as man cannot live without air so too he cannot exist for long if his home and surroundings are not clean. One or other epidemic is bound to break out especially when modern drainage is put out of action.

Therefore I was perturbed when I read about the sweepers' strike in Bombay. Fortunately it has come to an end. I understand, however, that the sweepers, both men and women, refused to submit their case to arbitration.

In spite of my close attachment to sweepers, better because of it, I must denounce the coercive methods they are said to have employed. They will thereby be losers in the long run. City folk will not always be cowed down. If they were, it would mean the collapse of municipal administration. Coercion cannot but result in the end in chaos. An impartial tribunal for settling disputes should always be accepted. Refusal is a sign of weakness. A bhangi may not give up his work even for a day. And there are many other ways open to him of securing justice.

Townpeople should, on the other hand, forget that there is such a thing as untouchability and learn the art of cleaning their own and the city's drains, so that if a similar occasion arises they are not non-plussed and can render the necessary temporary service. They may not be coerced. I go so far as to say that the military who know this work should be used for such emergency. If Swaraj is round the bend, we can now look upon the military as ours and need have no hesitation in taking all the constructive work we can from them. Up till now they have only been employed in indiscriminate firing on us. Today they must plough the land, dig wells, clean latrines and do every other constructive work that they can, and thus turn the people's hatred of them into love.

Now that the hartal is at an end, it is the duty of everyone to stretch out the hand of fellowship to the bhangis, educate them, see that they are properly housed, permit them, like anyone else, to live wherever they choose, look in the matter of an equitable wage for them and see that justice is meted out to them without their having to demand it. If this is done throughout India we shall definitely prove ourselves worthy of Swaraj and be able also to maintain it.

New Delhi, 15-4-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

WHAT ABOUT WOMEN?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"I am glad to read your reply to the complaint that enough women have not been put up for elections or selected for official posts. You reply that merit should be the only criterion in the choice of candidates. Your dictum is perfectly correct and every thinking man and woman will agree with it. There is a saying that "neither age nor sex but merit alone should be the object of adoration." The reality, however, is far from the truth. You are not unaware that the maxim is everywhere observed in the breach. Neither in the ministries and legislatures, nor in local bodies is merit given first consideration in the matter of selection of candidates. Considerations of caste, community and province come into the picture and are the determining factors. The argument proffered in favour of such action is that none of these interests can be ignored. If the argument holds, what about the interests of women? In view of the maxim does not the basis of selection need clarification?"

The above is from the letter of an esteemed sister. The sister's argument boils down to this, that where everything is on a wrong basis another wrong will not matter. But if we go on thus, the evil will grow and we shall be hopelessly caught in a vicious circle. My appeal to women, therefore, is that they should intelligently become the personification of renunciation and thereby not only adorn but also raise the status of their sex and the nation.

So long as considerations of caste and community continue to weigh with us and rule our choice, women will be well advised to remain aloof and thereby build up their prestige. The question is as to how best this can be done. Today few women take part in politics and most of these do not do independent thinking. They are content to carry out their parents' or their husbands' behests. Realizing their dependence they cry out for women's rights. Instead of doing this, however, women workers should enroll women as voters, impart or have imparted to them practical education, teach them to think independently, release them from the chains of caste that bind them so as to bring about a change in them which will compel men to realize woman's strength and capacity for sacrifice and give her places of honour. If they will do this they will purify the present unclean atmosphere. So much for women.

As to men, they should consider it their duty to come out of the impure atmosphere wherever it exists. They will not be guided by considerations of caste and community if these are banished from their own minds. The best and easiest way to achieve this is for both men and women to stoop to conquer by becoming Harijans and that too of the last class, i. e. bhangis or mehtars.

Where capable women have been left out men should make amends. It is their duty to give such encouragement to women as will enable them to outshine men. If both parties act as suggested the atmosphere will soon become pure. Whether men do so or not, women's duty is, to my mind, clear.

New Delhi, 12-4-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

A MINISTER'S WOE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Dr. Katju sends the following note :

"Owing to the comparative failure of winter crops in many parts of India, there is a widespread apprehension about serious food shortage in the country. In order to afford equal opportunity to the rich and the poor alike regarding food supplies, rationing has been introduced in many urban areas in the United Provinces. Rationing entails responsibility on the Government to feed the inhabitants in such areas. The apprehended scarcity is so severe that the U. P. rations have been cut down to the barest minimum viz., six chhataks of cereals. This includes 2 chs. of wheat, 2 chs. rice and 2 chs. of mixed atta. Mixed atta is not generally liked by the people and any further reduction in rations is almost impossible. To feed the urban areas, continuous supplies from the villages is an evident necessity. The Government of India has suggested to Provincial Governments that in order to ensure continuous supplies, it would be desirable to enforce compulsory levies on agricultural produce in surplus districts, i. e. in districts where it is expected that the produce exceeds the requirements of the rural area concerned. This question of a compulsory levy is greatly agitating the public mind. It is said that the control price fixed by the Government is too low and should be raised. The answer to that is, that the price structure is an all-India affair and it is not possible to raise the price in any particular province without affecting the structure as a whole. Furthermore, the control price in the United Provinces has been fixed at Rs. 10-4 per maund of 40 seers which is not really a low price. It is sufficiently remunerative and makes due allowance for the rise in costs of cultivation and general living. Formerly in pre-War days wheat used to sell at about 13 seers a rupee; the control price is 4 seers. Supplies being apprehended to be much less than the demand, there is bound to be a black market where selfish people can buy foodstuffs at higher prices to satisfy their individual needs. No compulsion would be necessary if cultivators realize that it is their social and patriotic duty to do their utmost to feed their brothers and sisters in urban areas, and also landless people living in the rural areas. The cultivator is in every sense of the word the Anna-dala and I ask you to appeal to him at this critical juncture not to hoard, not to sell in the black market but to supply in the greatest measure possible to the Government stores, so that food may be distributed equitably and equally to all people, rich and poor alike and hunger and destitution may be avoided. Your voice goes far and wide and I therefore appeal to you to take up this work. Very many schemes have been considered for the purpose of ensuring adequate supplies in our urban areas, but whatever the proposals may be, the net result is that in every case the cultivator is asked to part with his grain. Unless the consumers in rural and urban areas are fed, there are bound to be disturbances of every kind. We are doing our very best to encourage the 'Grow More Food' and 'Grow More Vegetables' campaigns in the United Provinces. The various suggestions made by you have all been adopted. Instructions have been issued to plough all Government lands in Government buildings etc. Private owners have also been offered expert advice and are being given facilities by the supply of free seeds and free water from irrigation channels. Assistance in the digging of wells has also been given. After all is said and done, without public co-operation little progress can be made and co-operation must take the form of the Anna-dala giving the gift of food grains to the utmost of his capacity."

This note from Dr. Katju is worthy of close attention by the Kisan and his guides as also urban people. The impending calamity can be turned to good use. Then it will be a blessing in disguise. Otherwise, curse it is and curse it will remain.

Dr. Katju writes as a responsible minister. Therefore, people can either make or mar him. They can remove him and replace him by a better. But so long as ministers of the people's choice are in office as their servants, the people have to carry out their instructions. Every breach of law or instructions is not satyagraha. It can easily be duragraha rather than satyagraha.

New Delhi, 14-4-'46

INDIAN PRESSMEN v. EUROPEAN

(By M. K. Gandhi)

An Indian journalist complains that our great men have a weakness for foreign journalists to the extent of excluding Indians at their press conferences, and wonders whether I am myself free from this weakness. For myself, I can say without fear of contradiction that I have never been guilty of such partiality. Having suffered a good deal for the crime of being an Asiatic, I am not likely to be guilty of such weakness. And I must say that I know of no such example as my friend adverts to, if only because public men can ill afford to face a boycott by Indian Pressmen. What has happened with me and, so far as I am aware, with others too is that they and I have found it necessary at times to give special interviews to foreign journalists when it has been found necessary in the interest of the common cause to get messages across the seas. It is impossible in the present circumstances to do otherwise. It would be as foolish to invite a boycott by foreign journalists as by Indian. Any industrious person will find out that Indian journalists have been more often than not preferred by Indian public men again for the sake of the common cause. As a fellow journalist I would urge journalists, whether Indian or foreign to prefer their particular causes to their own or their employers' pockets or to descending to recriminations or personalities.

New Delhi,

14-4-'46

SHELLEY'S PROPHETIC VISION

When Shelley was living in Italy, he received with indignation the news of the Manchester Massacre in which unarmed English weavers stood at bay against the yeomanry and suffered in consequence. 'The great truth that the many, if accordant and resolute, could control the few, . . . made him long to teach his injured countrymen how to resist', as Mrs. Shelley tells us. Shelley therefore wrote the Mask of Anarchy in which he unfolded his scheme of non-violent rebellion.

Shelley pictured first the slavery of the common man in England in those days. He had to work hard, but received such low wages that he could barely keep himself alive for the benefit of the 'tyrants'. He had to work at 'loom and plough and sword and spade', but the fruits of his labour were not for him to enjoy and he defended his masters but not himself. His ill-fed and ill-clothed wife and children

' . . . are dying whilst I speak,
When the winter winds are bleak.'

He cast longing eyes on the food that the rich man in his riot cast to his fat dogs. He was paid in paper currency, 'the ghost of gold' for which he had to toil infinitely harder than people groaning under the tyrannies of old toiled for its substance. 'Paper coin' is characterized by Shelley as

'that forgery
Of the title-deeds, which ye
Hold to something of the worth
Of the inheritance of Earth.'

English people had become slaves in soul, had no wills of their own and were

'All that others make of ye.'

And when at last the worm turned, and they ventured to complain

'with a murmur weak and vain',
'the tyrants' crew rode over their wives and them, and blood was on the grass like dew.' Even savage men or 'wild beasts within a den' would not put up with that sort of oppression, to which however they were utter strangers.

After this Shelley gave English people an idea of the promised land of Freedom to which he would lead them, but where was the path to that New Jerusalem? In answer to this question Shelley revealed his splendid vision of mass Satyagraha.

'The blue sky overhead,
The green earth on which ye tread', all that was eternal must witness the solemnity. From every nook and corner of England, from every hut, village or town,

'Where those who live and suffer moan
For others' misery or their own,' let there be a vast assembly of men, and let them declare with 'measured words' that they 'Were, as God had made them, free.'

The tyrants would then pour around them
'Troops of armed emblazonry'.
But the assembly must stand calm and resolute,
'Like a forest close and mute,

With folded arms and looks which are Weapons of unvanquished war.'

Panic must pass,
'a disregarded shade,
Through their phalanx undismayed.'

And if then the tyrants dare
'Let them ride among you there,
Slash and stab and maim and hew,—
What they like, that let them do.
With folded arms and steady eyes,
And little fear and less surprise,
Look upon them as they slay
Till their rage has died away.'

Then they will return with shame to the place from which they came,

'And the blood thus shed will speak
In hot blushes on their cheek.'

Every woman in the land will point the finger of scorn at them as they stand. 'They will hardly dare to greet their acquaintance in the street'.

'And the bold, true, warriors
Who have hugged Danger in wars
Will turn to those who would be free
Ashamed of such base company.'

That slaughter shall steam up like inspiration to the Nation, eloquent, oracular: a volcano heard afar. And the doom of oppression will be proclaimed by the following words which will ring through each heart and brain,

Heard again—again—again:
'Rise, like lions after slumber,
In unvanquishable number,
Shake your chains to earth like dew
Which in sleep had fallen on you.
Ye are many—they are few.'

Poona, 23-2-'46

V. G. D.

Notes

The National Week

The National Week is intended to be observed as a week of introspection and prayer, the latter including service through constructive work. The 6th and 13th of April, marking its opening and close were observed in Gandhiji's camp by fasting and common spinning. In the latter 183 spinners including several members of the Working Committee took part on the last day. Gandhiji delivered the message of the National Week in two discourses at the evening prayer gathering on the 6th and 13th of April respectively. The text of these discourses will be found reproduced elsewhere in this issue.

New Delhi, 16-4-'46

P.

A Request

Change of address to be effective for the week should please be intimated to us by Tuesday. The subscriber number should be quoted with the intimation.

Please note that change of address cannot be effected within one month.

Subscribers are not enrolled for a period of less than six months.

J. DESAI

KHADI IN TAMILNAD, 1944-45

We have received a copy of the Annual Report for 1944-45 of the Tamilnad Branch of the All India Spinners' Association, Tirupur. It is in the fitness of things that it has been printed on hand-made paper manufactured by the Branch itself.

During the year under report Tamilnad produced Khadi worth Rs. 32 lakhs and sold Khadi of the value of Rs. 36 lakhs out of which the province itself consumed Khadi worth Rs. 32 lakhs. It ministered to about 75,000 spinners, about 2,500 weavers and about 500 other artisans in about 3,500 villages among whom it distributed Rs. 21 lakhs as wages, while the total salaries paid to the staff (440 people) amounted to only Rs. 1½ lakhs. In fact when we purchase a rupee worth of Tamilnad Khadi, we spend 2 annas for the cotton, 12 annas as a charge for carding and other processes up to weaving and 2 annas for all overhead charges including freight, packing and establishment. We suggest that when the report for next year is published, it should also supply the corresponding figures for mill cloth. Seventy-five per cent of the Khadi produced by the Branch was made in Coimbatore district alone.

In 1923 Tamilnad produced Khadi worth less than Rs. 5 lakhs, compared with the present figure of Rs. 32 lakhs. Allowing for wartime inflation, it will be safe to say that the province has trebled its output in 22 years. [Khadi production year by year should be shown in square yards as well as in rupees]. In fact Tamilnad at present is the biggest producer of Khadi (30 lakhs of square yards) among all the provinces, the second biggest being Bihar which however produces less than half the Khadi manufactured by Tamilnad, i. e. about 12½ lakhs of square yards. Maharashtra and the United Provinces are the rest of the Big Four.

What a pity that after a quarter of a century of Khadi production under wise and able guidance the Tamilnad Branch has not still succeeded in overcoming what it calls the 'persistent tendency of the weavers to prefer mill yarn when available to hand-spun yarn and to take to the latter when mill yarn is not available'. According to the report this tendency mainly accounts for the rise and fall in production and is a limiting factor in the progress of the Khadi movement.

A chain can never be stronger than its weakest link. If we take care of every single link, the chain will take care of itself. It is high time the workers of the A. I. S. A. took to the method of doubling and twisting yarn even in the process of unwinding the cone on the spindle. This can compete fully with any mill-spun yarn.

As regards sales, we note that out of over Rs. 33 lakhs worth of Khadi sold in 1944, rural areas accounted for less than Rs. 4 lakhs. According to the 'new dispensation', we have to aim at disposing of our entire output in villages, the spinners and weavers themselves being Khadi-clad.

We commend one new feature of Khadi production in Tamilnad to workers in charge of other provinces, viz. that out of 6 lakhs lbs. of cotton consumed in a year, only a third was supplied by the A. I. S. A., the remaining two thirds being the spinners' own. This enabled the Branch to effect a considerable saving in capital required for stocking cotton.

The Khadi woven for self-sufficient spinners was less than 10,000 square yards in 18 months. Self-spinners' yarn was worse than the yarn spun for wages, so that weavers would not weave it at scheduled rates.

The Branch conducted cheap grain stores and classes in spinning on the Magan Charkha. We would have welcomed more details about the working of these classes.

Gandhiji's Sayings on the welfare of women compiled by Shri Shankarlal Banker was distributed to the artisans free of charge.

The Branch collected 75,000 hanks of yarn worth over Rs. 11,000 for the Kasturba Fund.

Exhibitions were organized in connection with fairs and were visited by two lakhs of people. These were so designed as to stress and demonstrate the crafts rather than merely dispose of Khadi stocks.

The Shankarlal Charkha Works at Tirupur produced implements and accessories of the value of about Rs. 1,25,000 in 18 months.

Jamnalal Vidyalaya undertook an experiment in sericulture and produced 18 lbs. of Endi silk cocoons which were also spun and woven at the same institution.

Let us close this notice of the report with a paragraph in it which explains the re-orientation of Khadi in a few words:

"Spinning is not for wages but in order to meet our own clothing requirements. Khadi is not a commodity for sale but for consumption by the spinner himself. Every spinner should wear Khadi and every Khadi wearer should spin. The spinning wheel is a symbol of ahimsa, and it aims at creating a non-violent society free from all forms of exploitation."

V. G. D.

SIGNS OF THE TIME

Addressing the evening prayer gathering on the Jallianwala Bagh day Gandhiji said:

"Today is the last day of the National Week which I have also called the Sacred Week. It was on this day that the tragedy of the Jallianwala Bagh was enacted. The 6th of April saw the birth of Satyagraha in India. The awakening among the masses resulting from it was so phenomenal that the Government could suppress it only by having recourse to the method of frightfulness. It culminated in the Jallianwala Bagh massacre when Gen. Dyer with a party of fifty sepoy opened fire on an unarmed and peaceful gathering, resulting in the death of at least 500 people and the wounding of thrice that number. There was only one exit and it was held by the firing party so that the innocent men and women who were trapped there had no alternative but to be shot down like rabbits in a hole. It is true some excesses were committed by the mob before the massacre. But they were nothing as compared to the savage reprisals taken by the Government. That is the way of all imperialisms. In no other way could a handful of foreigners maintain their rule over a nation of 400 millions."

"Why have I recalled these incidents? Not to stir up bitter, old memories or to keep alive the embers of hatred, but only to emphasize the distinction between the old order which they symbolized and the new that is in sight. I have not the slightest doubt as to the bona fides of the Cabinet Mission. I am convinced that they have finally made up their mind to withdraw in toto. The question which is exercising their minds is how to effect the withdrawal in an orderly manner and to that end their energies are bent. Gentlemanness requires that if a person is sincerely trying to make amends he should be thanked and congratulated for it, not that his past should be flung in his face.

"You know Shri Jaiprakash Narain and Dr. Lohia. Both of them are daring men of action and scholars. They could easily have become rich. But they chose the way of renunciation and service. To break the chains of their country's slavery was their one passion. Naturally the alien Government regarded them as dangerous to its existence and put them into prison. We, however, have different scales to weigh merit and we regard them as patriots who have sacrificed their all for the love of the country which has given them birth. That they would be found wanting in the scales of non-violence is irrelevant today. What is relevant is that independence of India is today common ground between the British and ourselves. Their freedom, therefore, is no longer considered dangerous by the Government. Viewed in that light, their release as also the release of the I. N. A. men yesterday must be regarded as an earnest of the honesty of the Cabinet Mission and the Viceroy. We must be thankful to them for this earnest, and prayer of thankfulness should ascend to heaven for the wisdom with which God seems to be endowing them.

"The Satyagraha Week which is closing today is devoted always to communal unity and Khaddar. Communal unity is not confined to Hindus and Muslims only, it extends to all including Englishmen. It must not become a menace to anybody or group. That is the message of non-violence.

"The National Week is a week of self-introspection and prayer. Prayer is not for the impure in heart."

New Delhi, 15-4-'46

PYARELAL

"ROMAN URDU"

(By M. K. Gandhi)

If there is Roman Urdu, why not Roman Hindi? The next step will be to romanize the alphabets of all the languages of India. They have done this for Zulu which had no alphabet of its own. The attempt in India would be on a par with the attempt to foist Esperanto on the world. It cannot succeed in the near future. Believers in the Roman script in the place of all the known Indian scripts will have a circle of adherents but the movement cannot permeate the masses. It should not. Crores of people need not become so lazy as not to learn their own respective scripts. A laudable attempt is being made not to replace the alphabets in vogue in India but to teach Nagari in addition in the hope that in course of time millions may learn to read the Indian languages in the Nagari character. And since Urdu characters cannot for well known reasons be replaced by Nagari, it should be learnt by all the patriots who love their country too well to find the learning of the Urdu alphabet a burden. All these attempts seem to me to be worthy.

With all my readiness to grasp new ideas, I have failed to find a substantial reason for inducing the spread of the Roman alphabet for the purpose of replacing the Nagari or Urdu scripts. It is true that in the Indian Army the Roman alphabet has been largely used. I should hope that the Indian soldier, if he is saturated with the national spirit, will not mind learning both Nagari and Urdu characters. After all, amid the ocean of Indian humanity, the Indian soldier is a mere drop. He must shed the English mode. Probably the reason for romanizing Urdu will be found in the English officer being too lazy to learn to read Urdu or Nagari characters.

New Delhi, 15-4-'46

HE LIVES

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Death has removed not only from us but from the world one of India's best sons. That he loved India passionately, every one who knew him could see. When I saw him last in Madras, he could talk of nothing but India and her culture for which he lived and died. I am sure that he had no thought of himself even when he seemed to be on his deathbed. His Sanskrit learning was as great if not greater than his English. I must not permit myself to say more, save this that though we differed in politics our hearts were one and I could never think that his patriotism was less than that of the tallest patriot. Sastri the man lives though his body is reduced to ashes.

New Delhi, 18-4-'46

CONTENTS

	PAGE
FASTING IN THE AIR	M. K. GANDHI 93
QUESTION BOX	M. K. GANDHI 93
THE SACRED WEEK	PYARELAL 94
WEEKLY LETTER	PYARELAL 95
SWEEPERS' STRIKE	M. K. GANDHI 96
WHAT ABOUT WOMEN?	M. K. GANDHI 96
A MINISTER'S WOE	M. K. GANDHI 97
INDIAN PRESSMEN v. EUROPEAN	M. K. GANDHI 97
SHELLEY'S PROPHETIC VISION	V. G. D. 98
KHADI IN TAMILNAD, 1944-45	V. G. D. 99
SIGNS OF THE TIME	PYARELAL 99
"ROMAN URDU"	M. K. GANDHI 100
HE LIVES	M. K. GANDHI 100
NOTES:
THE NATIONAL WEEK	P. 98
A REQUEST	J. DESAI 98

HARIJAN

12 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 12]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, APRIL 28, 1946

[THREE ANNAS

THE LESSON OF THE CROSS

Good Friday is, perhaps, the greatest day in the Christian year, inasmuch as it is the day that reminds the followers of Jesus of the supreme sacrifice by means of which he showed the way of life to man. As one reads or dwells afresh on the story of the Cross, the pathos and beauty of it never fail to stir one to the depths. Could man's cruelty to man have gone further, and could man's forbearance with man have been more manly? 2000 years have rolled away but Jesus lives, and the noble example is there to inspire man for all time. For me he is more man than God.

It was fear of the truth which was in Jesus, that made his enemies slay him. It is fear in the hearts of men at all times, that breeds hatred and suspicion, the root cause of strife. The fear that stalks our land to-day cannot but distress everyone. During the recent meeting of the Kasturba Trust Agents in Uruli, one worker asked that while he (Gandhiji) did not advocate their taking any part in politics what would he (Gandhiji) advise them to do in case of violent outbreaks? The reply was quick and clear. "There is no question of any of you keeping aloof from the fiery furnace, should such ever come your way. I shall not shed a tear, I shall rejoice to hear if any or all of you are found to have laid down your lives in trying to quell the disturbance. To be killed but never to kill is the law that governs us, and women should surely excel in this field."

In talking to a friend the other day who was suggesting an expedient to solve the political tangle, contrary to his inner conviction of the wrong of it, Gandhiji told him that it was unworthy for a man of faith ever to believe that anything but evil could be born out of a poisonous germ. The friend replied, "The Cross was poisonous, full of hatred and ill will and yet redemption came out of it." "No," was Gandhiji's reply. "That is not my interpretation of the Cross. There was no poison there, no hatred, no fear. It was the way of self-suffering and therefore of love and hence the story of redemption."

The story of Calvary brings home to one the need for supreme faith in the hour of trial, which sees beyond the veil and gives one the courage to stand by truth at all cost.

New Delhi,

Good Friday, 1946

A. K.

WEEKLY LETTER

THE LURID BACKGROUND

The labours of the Cabinet Mission are proceeding against a lurid background. The Imperial City has for the last few days become a seething cauldron of wild rumours, with swirling eddies and counter currents. The air is thick with alarms and threats of rioting. Some dealers in daggers and knives and other lethal weapons are even said to be exploiting the panic which they assiduously foster for their own selfish purposes like their ante-type—the merchants of death in Europe and America. Deprecating this tendency in the course of his remarks one evening, Gandhiji said:

"The newspaper man has become a walking plague. In the East as in the West newspapers are fast becoming the people's Bible, Koran, Zend Avesta and the Bhagwad Gita, rolled into one. All that appears in the papers is looked upon as God's truth. For instance, a paper predicts that riots are coming, that all the sticks and knives in Delhi have been sold out and the news throws everybody into a panic. That is bad. Another newspaper reports the occurrence of riots here and there and blames the police with taking sides with the Hindus in one place and Muslims in another. Again, the man in the street is upset. I want you all to shed this craven fear. It is not becoming of men and women, who believe in God and take part in the prayers, to be afraid of anyone.

"What if riots do actually take place and some people get killed? Everyone must die one day. I will expect you to go in the midst of the fracas and tell the rowdies to be sensible. A friend remarked in the course of the conversation the other day that whilst it is poor rowdies that kill and get killed in the riots, the real responsibility lies not with them but with educated people, some of them occupying respectable places in society. It is they who incite others to violence from behind the scenes. It is for these educated and cultured people to stop the riots by laying down their lives in the process if necessary. Even a little girl can go up to the hooligans and tell them to desist. Most probably they will. But supposing they do not and kill her, it will be well with her all the same. She will live through her pure sacrifice. It is always well with those who believe in God and try to do His will to the best of their ability.

"Independence is coming," he concluded. "But our lungs appear to have lost the capacity to breathe the air of freedom. But when freedom actually comes, you will find that the loss of capacity was only apparent. May be, the first impact of freedom will give you a rude shock, and before you regain your equilibrium some undesirable things might take place. All that you need to do is to keep yourselves on the alert and undaunted and it will be well with you in the end."

ON THE EVE

An English novelist in one of his immortal stories has left us a picture of a doctor who, when suddenly brought into broad daylight after his long confinement in a dark dungeon, blinks uncomfortably and wants to go back into the unlighted gloom of the dungeon. Similarly, the question arises, how will India react to independence after nearly two centuries of subjection? Would she have the courage to face up to the realities, or would she be frightened by them and want to go back to the so-called ease and security of her servitude? For, it is getting more and more clear that independence, when it comes, is not going to be all beer and skittles. Are we ready to pay the price of freedom and make the necessary sacrifices or do we want to cling to the privileges and perquisites to which a foreign government might have accustomed a few of us as a part of its policy of divide and rule? These must be willingly sacrificed before we are fit to enter the temple of freedom. The fact that everybody is just now going through a fierce process of self-examination and introspection is a healthy sign. It is an indication of the general realization that the hour of independence is close at hand.

"Where shall we stand when India is independent?" asked a friend representing the landholders' interests, the other day during his visit to Gandhiji.

"You will be as free as any scavenger," replied Gandhiji, "but whether you will be able to retain all the privileges which you are enjoying under the British Government is a question you can answer for yourself."

"We realize," proceeded the friend, "that we shall secure our salvation at the hands of Indian leaders, not the British Government."

"Everybody believes that today," said Gandhiji. "Even the British Government feel that they cannot do otherwise than to leave India to settle her own affairs."

"The landholders," resumed the friend, "derived their charter of rights and privileges from the Permanent Settlement of 1802, which was of the nature of a contract between the British and the Zamindars, but they are quite willing to negotiate an agreement with the leaders of the country on the future of their rights."

"Being a non-violent man by nature," replied Gandhiji, "I cannot countenance the usurpation of anybody's just rights. But some of the extraordinary privileges that pass muster under the British rule are themselves in the nature of an usurpation. The history of British rule is a history of usurpation. Those who helped the British Government in this process got certain rights as a reward for their services. These cannot be insisted upon."

"Many ancient Zamindaris existed long before the advent of the British and were exercising sovereign power," rejoined the friend, "as a product of indigenous social and economic system of long standing. Don't you think they have a title to continue their existence? They are trying their best to discharge a philanthropic function in the shape of founding educational and social institutions."

"Anything that is ancient and consistent with moral values has a title to be retained," answered Gandhiji. "Per contra anything that does not conform to moral values has to go. Wrong has no prescriptive right to exist merely because it is of a long standing. If those who are on your Zamindaris feel one with you and you with them, like members of a family, you have nothing to fear from anybody."

The friend proceeded, "We want even-handed justice. We have no objection to an Independent India Government abolishing all manner of vested interests. But let there be no discrimination against the Zamindars especially. We only want a conciliatory gesture, an assurance that you won't wipe us out as a class, without giving us a sporting chance to vindicate our existence."

"A just man," replied Gandhiji "need have no fear of any kind from an Independent India. India may, however, fall into unjust hands. Every Congressman is not an angel nor is everyone who is not a Congressman a devil. Let us hope that, if Congress comes into power, it will try to be more than just. Otherwise all the good that it might have done would disappear in the twinkling of an eye."

"I do not deny that there are bad boys amongst us. But you can cure us. We only wish that nothing should be done without consulting us."

"That goes without saying," replied Gandhiji, pointing in a mute petition of mercy, as it were, to the heap of undisposed papers in front of him.

ITS OWN SEAL AND SANCTION

Another group of friends presented Gandhiji with a poser, 'Could he guarantee that under independence the right of proselytization would be guaranteed by a statute?' This provoked the counter question, 'Did they really believe in the ideal of independence or was their support to the independence ideal only for a consideration?' In the latter case, he would say, remarked Gandhiji, that they believed neither in independence nor in religion. Who could suppress the voice of truth, if it filled one's being? And of what avail was a statutory guarantee if there was not the fire within to bear witness to truth?

"It is true, no one can suppress the voice of truth," interpolated one of them. "We want a guarantee from you that no attempt would be made to suppress it."

"I cannot give you that guarantee because I have no authority," replied Gandhiji. It was the function of religion, he continued, to save the temporal power from losing its soul; religion did not depend upon it for protection. And he cited to them the illustration of Daniel, the servant of God, who used to pray behind closed doors. But when Darius the King issued a decree prohibiting the worship of any God or man save himself under a penalty, he began to pray to God publicly, the windows of his chamber being open so that all could see him praying. He was thrown into the hungry lion's den but came out unscathed. The result was that the King rescinded his former decree which was 'unalterable' under the laws of Medes and Persians and made another decree to the effect that in every dominion of his kingdom, "men tremble and fear before the God of Daniel, for he is the living God and steadfast as ever." And "so Daniel prospered in the reign of Darius and in the reign of Cyrus." That was the only true way of proselytization and it needed no guarantee, statutory or otherwise. It was its own seal and sanction. "To take a leaf from the history of our own times, remember the words of the late Lord Salisbury who, when in office, had told a missionary deputation about China that they were a poor specimen, if for their mission they sought the protection of British guns," concluded Gandhiji.

A PILGRIMAGE

Gandhiji had thought of returning to his residence from the Balikashrama. But a number of students and some members of the staff from Jamia Millia came and requested him, some time, to pay a visit, to their institution too.

"Some time must mean now," replied Gandhiji. "Having come so far I cannot go back without going to you." The Jamia Millia group were overjoyed. They ran ahead of him to carry the happy tidings to their colleagues and returned with petromax lanterns to lead the way. The unexpected visit put the whole place in a flutter of excitement. Dr. Zakir Hussain was away at Bhawalpur. But Moujeeb Saheb was there with other members of the staff. Carpets were spread on the lawn and a happy family gathering was held there under the sky. Jamia Millia, founded at the commencement of the non-cooperation movement in 1920 is shortly to celebrate its silver jubilee. The seedling planted by the late Hakim Ajmal Khan Saheb, Dr. Ansari and the Ali Brothers has grown into a stately tree under the loving care of Dr. Zakir Hussain and his colleagues. It has now 200 students attending the primary classes, 100 in the secondary section and 28 in the college. Sixty teachers are besides undergoing training. The institution is running a day school and a Maktaba or a publishing house in Karol Bagh.

"I have proved my claim to being a member of the family by coming without previous notice," Gandhiji remarked touched by the spontaneous welcome. He then invited questions.

One student asked, "What can the students do to bring about Hindu-Muslim unity?" It was a question after Gandhiji's heart. "The way is simple," he replied. "Even if all the Hindus turn rowdies and abuse you, you may not cease to regard them as your blood-brothers and vice versa. Is it impossible? No, rather the contrary. And what is possible for the individual is possible for the mass.

"Today the whole atmosphere is poisoned. All kinds of wild rumours are circulated by the Press and are indiscriminately swallowed by the people. Panic results and both Hindus and Musalmans forget their humanity and behave towards one another like wild brutes. It behoves man to act decently, irrespective of what the other party might or might not do. If one returns decency for decency, it is a bargain. Even thieves and dacoits do that. There is no merit in it. Humanity disdains to calculate profits and losses. It enjoins on one a unilateral obligation to put up decent behaviour. If all the Hindus listened to my advice, or in the alternative the Muslims listened to me, there would be peace in India which neither daggers nor lathis would be able to shatter. The mischief maker will soon be weary of the sorry business of stabbing, when there is no retaliation or counter provocation. An Unseen Power will arrest his uplifted arm and it will refuse to obey his wicked will. You may throw dust at the sun, it won't dim his lustre. All it needs is to hold one's soul in faith and patience. God is good and does not allow wickedness to proceed beyond a certain length.

"I had a hand in the building up of this institution. It, therefore, gives me much pleasure to be able to pour out my heart before you. I have said the same thing to the Hindus. May yours be a shining example to India and the world."

Before returning to his residence he made a pilgrimage of the tomb of the late Dr. M. A. Ansari, the living monument of Islamic liberalism at its best and Hindu-Muslim unity. To Gandhiji he was like a blood-brother. During Gandhiji's twentyone days' fast in Parnakuti at Poona in 1932, when things seemed critical, Dr. Ansari interrupted his visit to Europe and hastened to his bedside. A spacious platform thrown up into a series of terraces marks the burial place. A marble tablet at the foot bears his name and the dates of his birth and death. The unostentatious and austere simplicity only enhances its impressiveness. Independent India will always cherish the late doctor's memory as a symbol of hope, faith and unity.

New Delhi, 23-4-'46

PYARELAL

Notes

'Silk Khadi'

If partial payment in yarn is necessary for buying cotton Khadi why should the same not apply to 'silk Khadi'?

There can be only one answer to this question. Silk Khadi too is Khadi and its purchase should, therefore, also be contingent on the requisite payment of yarn.

Why Only Yarn?

Since spinning is a part of the constructive programme, why should not all constructive workers be exempt from paying for Khadi in yarn?

There is some confusion of thought in this question. The reason for part payment in yarn, instead of in money, is to give Khadi its rightful place, and in time make yarn current coin. That yarn is a part of constructive work has no bearing on the present argument. Let us leave aside for the moment the fact that the wheel is the central sun of the solar system of our constructive programme. If we believe that Swaraj hangs on the hand-spun thread, then it is clear that the value of yarn will be far greater than gold and silver currency. Constructive workers are not exempt from spinning. How can there be any such exemption from yajna? Spinning is the necessary yajna for everyone.

New Delhi, 20-4-'46

M. K. G.

(From Harijanbandhu)

HARIJAN

April 28

1946

MINISTERS' DUTY

(By M. K. Gandhi)

It is legitimate to ask what Congress ministers will do for Khaddar and other village industries now that they are in office. I should broaden the question and apply it to all the Provincial Governments of India. Poverty is common to all the provinces and so are means of alleviation in terms of the masses. Such is the experience of both the A. I. S. A. and the A. I. V. I. A.. A suggestion has been made that there should be a separate minister for the work, as, for proper organization, it will occupy all the time of one minister. I dread to make the suggestion, for we have not yet outlived the English scale of expenditure. Whether a minister is separately appointed or not, a department for the work is surely necessary. In these times of scarcity of food and clothing, this department can render the greatest help. The ministers have experts at their disposal through the A. I. S. A. and the A. I. V. I. A.. It is possible to clothe today the whole of India in Khadi on the smallest outlay and in the shortest time possible. Each Provincial Government has to tell the villagers that they must manufacture their own Khaddar for their own use. This brings in automatic local production and distribution. And there will undoubtedly be a surplus for the cities at least to a certain extent which, in its turn, will reduce the pressure on the local mills. The latter will then be able to take part in supplying the want of cloth in other parts of the world.

How can this result be brought about?

The Governments should notify the villagers that they will be expected to manufacture Khaddar for the needs of their villages within a fixed date after which no cloth will be supplied to them. The Governments in their turn will supply the villagers with cotton seed or cotton wherever required, at cost price and the tools of manufacture also at cost, to be recovered in easy instalments payable in, say, five years or more. They will supply them with instructors wherever necessary and undertake to buy surplus stock of Khaddar, provided that the villagers in question have their cloth requirements supplied from their own manufacture. This should do away with cloth shortage without fuss and with very little overhead charges.

The villages will be surveyed and a list prepared of things that can be manufactured locally with little or no help and which may be required for village use or for sale outside, such for instance, as ghani-pressed oil and cakes, burning oil prepared through ghanis, hand-pounded rice, tadgud, honey, toys, mats, hand-made paper, village soap, etc.. If enough care is thus taken the villages, most of them as good as dead or dying, will hum with life and exhibit the immense possibilities they have of supplying most of their wants themselves and of the cities and towns of India.

Then there is the limitless cattle wealth of India suffering from criminal neglect. Goseva Sangh, as yet not properly experienced, can still supply valuable aid.

Without the basic training the villagers are being starved for education. This desideratum can be supplied by the Hindustani Talimi Sangh. The experiment was already commenced by Congress Governments but it was interrupted by the resignations of the Congress ministries. The thread can be easily resumed now.

New Delhi, 22-4-'46

IS IT GENUINE?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. In one of your post-prayer discourses last week you stressed the use of Khadi to the exclusion of all other cloth. I love the very touch of Khadi as it links me, in my heart and thoughts, to my poor sisters and brothers, to whom it brings a well-earned morsel of food. I love it from every point of view—on hygienic, aesthetic, humanitarian, moral and spiritual grounds. But I have so far never been able to take to spinning, much as I like the soothing hum of the wheel, and thanks to our system of education, my hands are utterly untrained and unfit to learn spinning at this stage. I am, therefore, unable to comply in a straightforward manner with the conditions now imposed on the sale of Khadi, and it is galling to me to have to go in for mill cloth.

A. If the love for Khadi is so genuine as to cover moral and spiritual values, surely the writer should be able to learn spinning easily at his age. The late Pandit Motilal Nehru learnt it, after he was fifty. The late Ali Brothers learnt it, though they did not practise it regularly. And all these three learnt it for its national and political value in the highest sense of the term. As a matter of fact most of the public workers learnt it late in life.

The writer should learn spinning without delay. There is nothing wrong with his fingers. All who can write can spin. And spinning for Swaraj is any day more valuable than writing.

I agree that for one like the writer the only straightforward way to give his quota of yarn for buying Khadi is self-spinning. If he was incapable for any cause, it would be perfectly right for him to get his many friends or relations to spin the required quota for him.

As an earnest student of affairs, he should know, too, that while Khadi is good for the poor as an honourable occupation for earning bread, it has an additional and far greater value as an instrument of winning Swaraj through non-violent means. Let it not be said of men like him that they could write eloquently about moral values without realizing the implications of the statement.

New Delhi, 21-4-'46

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

SUGAR AND SWEETMEATS

Q. The sugar ration in Bombay has just been reduced by 25 per cent. Would it not have been fairer to reduce sweetmeat shops' rations rather than cut down the individual's?

A. It is always well to cut down the ration of sweet vendors rather than that of individuals. In these hard times I would not mind if sweet-making were even prohibited. Sweetmeats are not a necessary part of a wholesome diet.

WHITE BREAD AND BROWN

Q. Up till January it was obligatory to mix ten per cent of bran with wheat flour. Later the rule was abolished. Should it not be reinforced?

A. I am a witness to the age-old rivalry between white and wholemeal brown bread. People are attracted by whiteness. I nurse the belief that the Negro is not drawn by it. Be that as it may, it is a fact that special effort is made to make bread look white. Fortunately, only city dwellers indulge in such fads. Doctors say that one chapati of wholemeal flour is more tasty and contains more nourishment than two to five Chapatis made out of refined flour. And in these days it is our duty to use wholemeal, because all flour saved is flour gained. From one point of view it is even more than that. Wheat stored in villages is far more useful than sacks of it lying in ports. Therefore, it is desirable to make the mixing of bran with wheat flour compulsory. The war is over but post-war conditions are worse for us than during the war, and the situation is daily deteriorating. God alone knows when it will improve.

ROWDYISM IN ELECTIONS

Q. You are no doubt aware of the rowdyism resulting in severe damage during one of the recent elections in Bombay. Does it become the teacher of ahimsa to keep silent on such an occasion?

A. I do not want to enter into the question of whether silence becomes me or not. If the rowdyism is not a forerunner of what the future holds, it will be wrong to take note of it. Such sporadic clashes should not worry us. The education of the masses in ahimsa can make way gradually. It may be that it will develop from the lessons learnt from such happenings. But it may be that this rowdyism is symptomatic of an epidemic. Many people imagine that they alone are right and everyone else wrong, and they do not consider that there is anything unworthy in forcing their point of view down others' throats. This error has to be rectified. If we are in the right we must have infinite patience.

Just now we seem unable to see our own mistakes. Those who lack the faculty of reason, or who desire to live for the sake of enjoyment, can never see the error. If there are many such, then we must conclude that our non-violence has been a weapon of the weak, himsa masquerading in the guise of ahimsa. If this weakness continues we shall have to go through rivers of blood once the British rule goes. We may even come under the sway of some other foreign power or it may be that with internecine warfare the weaker side will have to submit to the one that has the mightier weapons. If we are unfortunate enough to witness such strife, believers in non-violence will joyfully die in the effort to stop it and thereby live.

My hope is that the masses have sufficiently imbibed the spirit of ahimsa and that when the British go there may be a little fight here and there and then we shall settle down as brothers giving a lesson of peace to the world.

Only those who fought in Bombay know what good they achieved by fighting. I am ignorant of who fought and what the fight was about and what were the gains if any.

New Delhi, 22-4-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

SOVEREIGN REMEDY

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"I read with avidity every word that flows from your pen. I can hardly wait till I have finished reading the new issue of 'Harijan' when it arrives. This results in a strange ego in me, demanding the object of my adoration to be perfect according to my light! Anything which appears obviously unconvincing makes me restless. Your new note in nature cure—reciting of Ramanam as the sure remedy—leaves me completely bewildered. The modern youth refrains from challenging some of your views out of toleration. Their attitude may be summed up in the following: 'Well, Gandhiji has taught us a whole lot of things; he has elevated us to unimaginable heights; he has, above all, brought Swaraj within our reach; why not 'suffer' his Ramanam 'fad'?"

"Inter alia you have said the following:

"No matter what the ailment from which a man may be suffering, recitation of Ramanam from the heart is the sure cure' (Harijan 3-3-'46).

"Man should seek out and be content to confine the means of cure to the five elements of which the body is composed, i. e. earth, water, akash, sun and air' (Harijan, 3-3-'46).

"And my claim is that the recitation of Ramanam is a sovereign remedy for our physical ailments also' (Harijan 7-4-'46).

"At first, when you introduced this new note in the system of nature cure, I thought you were merely putting in other words a kind of psychotherapy or 'Christian science' based on faith. These have their place in every system of medicine. I interpreted my first quotation above in that light. The second sentence quoted above is difficult to grasp. After all, it is physically impossible for medicines to be composed of anything but the five elements to which you refer, and which you say must be the sole means of cure.

"If faith is what you insist on I have no quarrel; it is necessary for the patient to cooperate in getting well also by faith. But it is difficult to accept that faith alone would cure 'our physical ailment also'. Two years ago, my little daughter was struck by infantile paralysis; it was the most modern treatment that saved the child from becoming a cripple for life. You would agree that it would not avail to ask a two and a half year old child to recite Ramanam to be rid of infantile paralysis; and I would like to see you persuade any mother to do the recitation (and recitation alone) on her child's behalf.

"The authority from Charaka that you have quoted in the issue of March 24th, leaves me cold; you have taught me not to accept anything, however ancient and however authoritative it may be, if it does not appeal to my heart."

Thus writes a teacher of youth. While I am eager to be in the good graces of the student world, my eagerness has well-defined limitations. For one, I must please them with the rest of the world, which is admittedly much larger. In no case should a servant of the public pander to any person or class.

If those whom my correspondent represents really think that anything I have done has taken India to unimaginable heights, they should extend to my so-called fads slightly more than toleration. Toleration by itself will do them and me no good. It may easily promote laziness in them, and false self-assurance in me. Let them think well before rejecting even a fad. Faddists are not always to be despised. Fads have before now made their owners mount the gallows.

Ramanam has the flavour of faith-healing and Christian science; yet, it is quite distinct from them. Recitation of Ramanam is a mere symbol of the reality for which it stands. If one is knowingly filled with the presence of God within, one is that moment free from all ailment physical, mental or moral. That we do not see the type in life is not to disprove the truth of the statement. My argument is admittedly useless for those who have no faith in God.

Christian scientists, faith-healers and psychotherapists may, if they will, bear witness somewhat to the truth underlying Ramanam. I cannot take the reader a long way with me through reason. How is one to prove to a person who has never tasted sugar, that sugar is sweet, except by asking him to taste it?

I must not reiterate here the conditions attendant upon the heart recitation of the sacred syllable.

The authority of Charaka is good for those who have some belief in Ramanam. Others may dismiss the authority from their consideration.

Children are irresponsible. Ramanam is undoubtedly not for them. They are helpless beings at the mercy of their parents. They show what tremendous responsibility parents bear to them and society. I have known parents who have trifled with their children's diseases even to the extent of trusting them to their (the parents') recitation of Ramanam.

Lastly, the argument about everything, even medicines, being from 'panch mahabhutas' betrays a hasty confusion of thought. I have only to point it out to remove it.

New Delhi, 19-4-'46

MERCY VERSUS RUTHLESSNESS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The virtues of mercy, non-violence, love and truth in any man can be truly tested only when they are pitted against ruthlessness, violence, hate and untruth.

If this is true, then it is incorrect to say that ahimsa is of no avail before a murderer. It can certainly be said that to experiment with ahimsa in face of a murderer is to seek self-destruction. But this is the real test of ahimsa. He who gets himself killed out of sheer helplessness, however, can in nowise be said to have passed the test. He who when being killed bears no anger against his murderer and even asks God to forgive him is truly non-violent. History relates this of Jesus Christ. With his dying breath on the cross, he is reported to have said: "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." We can get similar instances from other religions but the quotation is given because it is world famous.

It is another matter that our non-violence has not reached such heights. It would be wholly wrong for us to lower the standard of ahimsa by reason of our own frailty or lack of experience. Without true understanding of the ideal, we can never hope to reach it. It is necessary for us, therefore, to apply our reason to understand the power of non-violence.

New Delhi, 21-4-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

'HARIJAN' IN URDU SCRIPT

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"Harijan" is variously described as 'Harijan-sevak' when it is the Hindustani and 'Harijan-bandhu' when it is the Gujarati edition. Hindustani was Hindi when it was in Nagari type only. Now, for reasons already known, it is Hindustani in two scripts—Nagari and Urdu. The Urdu edition would have been published simultaneously, if the arrangement could have been completed. But there were difficulties of official permission and type to be surmounted. Litho printing became well-nigh impossible, and expert advice favoured Urdu type. The type could not be had for the wanting. But it is now hoped definitely to bring out the Urdu edition on 5th May next.

Whilst the matter in the three editions is not as a rule mere translation, one of another, and to an extent differs in the three editions, the Nagari and Urdu will be the same, word for word. An endeavour will be made to produce Hindustani which will neither be sanskritized Hindi nor persianized Urdu. Whether the Hindustani will be popular or not will depend as much upon the writers for the Hindustani 'Harijan' as upon its readers.

New Delhi, 21-4-'46

MEETING SASTRIAR

Now that Shri Sastriar is no more, his last talks with Gandhiji assume a great though tragic importance.

The first meeting took place on the evening of the 22nd January. Gandhiji had heard that Sastriar was so ill that probably he alone would be allowed to go in for a few minutes. Shri Jagadisan had advised my brother and me to accompany him. "Sastriar will be pleased to see you," he had said. So Gandhiji took both of us and Shri Manilal Gandhi with him, warning us that we might have to stay outside. The doctor, however, gave us more cheerful news about the patient's condition, and we were all allowed to enter. At one time Sastriar had almost given up hope of surviving till Gandhiji's visit to Madras and the joy of meeting him in the flesh almost choked him with emotion. He had been reclining on a bedrest but he sat bolt upright as Gandhiji entered and moved to the edge of the bed. "I want to come near enough to hug you, little brother," he muttered in a choked voice.

Gandhiji took his hand and soothed him. "You must not hug me and excite yourself," he pleaded and the illustrious patient once again reclined on the bedrest holding Gandhiji's hand in both his own.

The excitement had greatly aggravated the breathlessness. With great effort he began, "I have wanted to say one thing to you." And panting for breath after each word, with moist eyes, he continued: "Another opportunity for peace has been lost. They are sitting there at the Peace Conference Table. But who is there who can speak for humanity except you? I am afraid India has failed to do her duty." Ever since Gandhiji's release from prison, Sastriar had been writing to him, imploring him to go to the Peace Conference at San Francisco. "Even if they do not ask you, you must go as the apostle of truth and non-violence and be on the spot. Your mere presence will have a tremendous effect. You must not stand on ceremony."

I have tried to put in my own words the substance of what he had been writing. Gandhiji's view was that his non-violence should have its effect from wherever he was. His going to the Peace Conference, unless the Great Powers themselves wanted it, could serve no useful purpose. But Sastriar had remained unconvinced and he gave vent to his feelings on meeting Gandhiji.

Then referring to the Parliamentary delegation he remarked, "We know nothing can come out of it. Labour or Conservative, so far as India is concerned, they are all one and the same."

Gandhiji agreed and added, "But we must trust."

"Burrows, the new pitboy Governor of Bengal, has a sense of humour. When the pressmen worried him and asked him what policy he was going to initiate, he replied, 'Gentlemen, I am not going to initiate. I am going to carry out.' That is true of all of them. The Labour Government cannot afford to do otherwise." So saying Sastriar asked: "What next?"

"Who knows?" replied Gandhiji. "The British Government itself does not know, I think. But I did not come here to discuss politics with you."

Sastriar spoke like a man, "I see, you think I am no good for it."

"No, but you are certainly no good for it in the present state of your health."

They touched upon the topic of the communal problem. They cracked a few more jokes and then Sastriar called us near and bade good-bye saying a few kind words to each one of us. He talked a little about South Africa and General Smuts with Shri Manilal Gandhi, and Gandhiji left him with a promise to visit him again if the doctor reported that the visit had had no deleterious effect upon his health.

The doctor's report was satisfactory and Gandhiji paid him a second visit on the night of the 30th. This time he was accompanied by Shri Rajagopalachariar, Shri Thakkar Bapa, Rajkumari Amritkaur, Miss Agatha Harrison, Shri T. N. Jagadisan, my brother Shri Pyarelalji, Dr. Srinivasan and myself. Dr. Srinivasan, an honorary physician of the General Hospital, Madras, who was in charge of Sastriar's case, came to Gandhiji's residence and escorted him to the hospital as on the previous occasion. The talk mostly centred round the Ramayana.

Sastriar began by saying, "You have been a blessing to me in a hundred ways."

"What nonsense, Sastri," said Gandhiji.

"Ah, don't I know, Gandhi, you are the greatest fellow alive in the world today," said Sastriar and introduced his grandchildren to him. "Let your kataksha fall on them." And in good humour he quoted a shloka from the Ramayana:

यद्य रामं न पश्येत्तु यं च रामो न पश्यति ।

निन्दितः स मवेच्छोके स्वात्माप्येन विगर्हते ॥ अयोध्या ८

"He who does not see Rama and whom Rama does not see is despised by every one in this world."

Then Sastriar told Gandhiji how on the previous day after his midday meal he had dozed off and as if in a trance written a most beautiful essay on the Ramayana in about 15 minutes. The theme was that after Ravana's death Hanuman goes to Sita in Ashoka Vatika and asks her, 'Mother, give me your permission and I shall severely punish all the Rakshasis who have been torturing you.' The Divine Lady turns round and replies:

समयो रक्षितव्यस्तु सन्तश्चारित्रभूषणाः

पापानां वाञ्छुमानां वा वचार्हाणामथापि वा ।

कार्यं काश्यमाणेन न कश्चिन्नापराध्यति ॥ अयोध्या ८

"No, what wrong have these poor things done? They are merely slaves of their master and they did his bidding for the sake of their livelihood. Leave them alone. It is forgiveness that makes life worth living. Forgiveness is divine. It is the noblest of virtues, so I pardon them. There is no one who is wholly free of error. And who does not need to be forgiven?"

"As soon as I go home," Sastriar added, "I shall dictate it to Jagadisan if he can come to me and send it to you. Will you let Pyarelal read it out to you?"

Gandhiji promised to read it himself. "You dictate it to Jagadisan tomorrow," he said, "and send it to me. I shall read it before I go to Madura."

"No," replied Sastriar, "it will take me at least two or three days. I have to do it in bits. Marvellous as my doctor is, he has not made me well enough to do it tomorrow."

Sastriar was full of the Ramayana. "The Ramayana has no parallel." He regretted that the great epic was not read more generally and that its ideal did not animate the people as of old. "When Sita had repulsed the evil-intentioned Ravana with the trifas of her purity," he continued, "the Rakshasis came to her and said, 'You do not know the world. Else you would not have refused what is being offered to you.' The Divine Lady's reply was, 'Your city is beautiful, the buildings are grand and there is every mark of civilization, but are there not two or three people who feel the wrong and can say the truth to Ravana?'"

And Sastriar was deeply moved. "That is the duty we owe to friends and that we fail to discharge. I have done that for you once or twice and as for you, you do it and sometimes publicly, much to the consternation of everybody. But it is the noblest office of friendship." Turning to Rajaji, he continued, "Tell me, Rajagopalachari, out of a hundred people that go wrong, is not there one whom a timely warning could have saved? Please do not think that I am preaching at the Mahatma. I am making a confession. I have also failed in that duty sometimes."

Turning to Bapu he said, "You are a seeker after truth. You and I are poles asunder in many things. I have differed from you and you have said so without reserve. But I also am a follower of truth, though at a great distance from you. The eternal truths propounded by Valmiki in the Ramayana have been the greatest source of inspiration to me. I feel I have failed to do my duty by not giving to the people what I have found for myself in that great epic." Gandhiji reminded him of the lectures on Ramayana that he had delivered and suggested that they should be printed. But that was not enough for him. "If I live for sometime more and good Jagadisan can spare time, I might still be able to make some atonement," he sighed.

Gandhiji: "Jagadisan is your admirer and a devoted follower. He will be always at your disposal, unless of course the doctor thinks that you should not be disturbed. Then he will just not be at home."

Sastriar had a hearty laugh. "So, like Rama you teach falsehood. When Sumantra was driving Rama, Lakshmana and Sita to the jungle, Rama asked him to drive fast. 'Man, why prolong the agony? Go fast, and if my father is angry tell him you did not hear him.'"

The patient was talking too much and the doctor was getting worried. He said some thing in Tamil. Sastriar replied, "Yes, you are right. A good conversationalist hears more than he talks. But they say 'once a schoolmaster, always a schoolmaster.' So I have gone on."

Gandhiji: "And we shall bear witness to that."

Sastriar: "Well, this might be my last meeting with you. I am not in a position to say, 'I will come to see you when you return from Madura.' So, I wanted to talk and have talked. Now it is your turn."

Gandhiji: "Nonsense, this is not the last meeting. I will try to come and see you on my return from Madura. And I have very little to say except this, that you must get well soon and return the visit at Sevagram."

"You are the prince of optimists," replied Sastriar.

"Oh yes, an irrepressible one!" retorted Gandhiji, and they both laughed, exchanged a few more jokes and parted.

On his return from Madura, Gandhiji had only three hours at his disposal during which he held the prayer meeting, had his bath etc., gave several autographs, saw several people, collected funds for Harijans, and Hindustani Prachar and paid a hurried visit to Sastriar on his way to the station. It was a Monday and Sastriar was disappointed to find that Gandhiji was observing silence. Gandhiji would have liked to have begun his silence early on Sunday evening so that he could talk when he went to see Sastriar but he had not been able to manage. So Sastriar talked and Gandhiji replied by writing on slips of paper. In reply to Sastriar's enquiry about the tour, Gandhiji wrote that it had been very nice but very taxing. Sastriar was surprised to hear that five to six lakhs had gathered at the prayer meeting at Madura, more than half of which number had come from the surrounding villages. They had sat on the roadside without food and shelter just to have a darshan as they felt that this might be their last chance.

Gandhiji enquired about Sastriar's health and advised him to obey the doctor. Sastriar said he felt almost normal. He was moved beyond words. "Brother, you have done me an exceptional honour," he remarked, "especially by paying this visit when you were in a great hurry. You are dearer and nearer to me than my own brothers and sons and members of the family." His voice had become almost inaudible. "We have come together by some inner affinity. No external reason can explain this friendship. Gokhale was but the occasion of it." And he drew nearer to Gandhiji and whispered, "I won't waste words. You know what I want to say." Gandhiji waved to him to be quiet as he was becoming breathless with emotion and got up to say goodbye.

As Gandhiji got up Sastriar caught sight of his dangling watch. "Ah! your constant companion. Somebody said you had lost your watch and would use it no longer," he said. Shri T. R. Venkatarama corrected him by saying that the remark related to his fountain pen.

Sastriar: "Oh! I see. But if someone steals your watch, will you give up using a watch also?" Gandhiji laughed and shook his head to say that he could not do without his watch.

We bade good-bye to Sastriar and reminded him of his promise to return the visit to Sevagram. In another half an hour, we were in the special train and Gandhiji was busy writing and revising articles for 'Harijan'.

New Delhi, 21-4-'46

S. N.

By M. K. Gandhi

Non-violence in Peace and War

Price Rs. 7, Postage 10 Annas

Women & Social Injustice

Price Rs. 4, Postage 7 Annas

By J. C. Kumarappa

Practice & Precepts of Jesus

Rs. 1-8-0, Postage 6 Annas

Christianity-Its Economy & Way of Life

Price Rs. 1-8-0, Postage 6 Annas

THE LOSS

It needed all his resources of philosophy and stoicism to enable Gandhiji to bear up under the loss of Sastriar's passing away. The news came in the middle of the night when he was fast asleep. It was communicated to him after the morning prayer on the following day. There was such a deep bond of affection between the two and a mutual recognition of the fundamental things which they shared in common, that people who saw only the difference in their respective political outlooks, marvelled at their friendship. The strongest bond that united them was truth. "Your truthfulness," remarked Gandhiji once in the course of a letter to him, "is far more precious to me than your co-operation." On another occasion he wrote: "Your criticism soothes me, your silence makes me nervous." On Sastriar's part, if he sometimes found fault with Gandhiji, it was out of his jealous concern for him. It was the concern of "a friend, a lover and a child." No wonder that Gandhiji, who is ever in search of a conscience-keeper, was never tired of beseeching him not to cease to strive with him.

Intellectually, Sastriar was a sceptic. But the heart, as the French saying goes, has a logic of its own that transcends the logic of the intellect, and so Sastriar's practice very often transcended his creed of scepticism. Gandhiji, on the other hand, with all his transcendent faith insisted on subjecting his actions to the pragmatic test with the result that very often, proceeding by diverse routes, they found a common meeting ground on the broad platform of humanity. Sastriar who enjoyed having a spar with the late Shri Mahadev Desai occasionally wrote to the latter in the course of a letter:

"You point out with justice that when I stop short where reason fails Gandhiji marches on, upheld by faith. Let me add by way of supplement . . . that I would first listen to faith, which has a strange fascination for me, and that Gandhiji on many occasions shrinks from the lengths to which faith would draw him. That is where a common human nature comes in; no distinction can reach down to the bottom."

As a further illustration of the same, Sastriar was one of the most erudite scholars of English and was proud of it too, and yet he found the fullest satisfaction only in the use of the mother tongue.

"This Tamil escapade," he remarked in one of his letters to a friend, referring to an autobiographical piece in Tamil which he had dictated, "warms my blood with the genuine passion. It is awkward, stumbling and—don't I see?—ludicrous. But it possesses me for the time. I am oblivious of what the critical world says."

"If second childhood may lisp, let it lisp in the mother tongue."

His last conversation with Gandhiji which is recorded elsewhere in these columns by Dr. Sushila Nayyar is a veritable monument of affection that transcends differences.

New Delhi, 23-4-46

PYARELAL

COMMUNION OF SILENCE

Last week I referred to the Sunday silent prayer meeting of the Quakers which Gandhiji attended. He has been attending it every Sunday since his arrival here.

Quakers believe that "in corporate silent waiting, God does speak to us and we can understand His will in the common walks of life." As Shri Ranjit M. Chetsingh explained at the beginning of the service last week quoting an early Quaker, "The thinking busy soul excludes the voice of God." "Be still and cool from thine own self." Said George Fox, "The Silence of a religious and spiritual worship is not a drowsy unthinking state of mind but a withdrawing of it from all visible objects and vain imaginings."

Making the Quaker meeting which he had attended the theme of his address at the evening prayer gathering, Gandhiji described how his own experience tallied with that of the Quakers. "Emptying of the mind of all conscious processes of thought and filling it with the spirit of God unmanifest brings one ineffable peace and attunes the soul with the Infinite." The question may however be raised, should not one's whole life be an unbroken hymn of praise and prayer to the Maker? Why then have a separate time for prayer at all? Brother Lawrence testified that "with him the set times of prayers were not different from other times; that he retired to pray according to the directions of his superior, but that he did not want such retirement, nor asked for it, because his greatest business did not divert him from God." Gandhiji does not question that view. "I agree," he observed in his discourse, "that if a man could practise the presence of God all the twentyfour hours, there would be no need for a separate time for prayer." But most people find that impossible. The sordid everyday world is too much with them. For them the practice of complete withdrawal of the mind from all outward things, even though it might be only for a few minutes every day, would be found to be of infinite use. Silent communion would help them to experience an undisturbed peace in the midst of turmoil, to curb anger and cultivate patience. "When the mind is completely filled with His spirit one cannot harbour ill will or hatred towards any one and reciprocally the enemy will shed his enmity and become a friend. It is not my claim that I have always succeeded in converting enemies into friends, but in numerous cases it has been my experience that when the mind is filled with His peace all hatred ceases. An unbroken succession of world teachers since the beginning of time have borne testimony to the same. I claim no merit for it. I know it is due entirely to God's grace. Let us then in the Sacred Week seek His grace through the communion of silence and may the experience will abide with us ever afterwards."

The silent Communion of the Friends generally ends when one and another feel a call to offer prayer or to pass on what they feel must be shared by the whole group. On the last occasion it ended with a moving reference by Shri Sudhir Ghosh to the late Charlie Andrews. "I was not present by his side when he breathed his last in 1940. But they say that during the semi-conscious state before the end he often muttered the words 'Bapu, Swaraj is coming.' A lump rises in my throat at the thought that now that Swaraj is coming at last C. F. A. is no longer with us to see its coming. In these days when violence is simmering in this vast country and a spirit of vengeance against the British is in the air, let us remember more than ever the legacy left by this Christian man who lived and died for peace between the British and the Indian peoples, and for which he was even despised by some of his own countrymen. What better worship can we offer to God in these fateful days here in Delhi than to contemplate the work of a man whose life was a silken bond of the spirit between the good that is England and the good that is India?"

The biographer of Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman has recorded how it was the outspokenness and courageous championship of the Boers during the darkest days of the Boer war by an English woman — Emily Hobhouse — that contributed not a little to the liquidation of the hatred engendered by the incidents of the war and the final establishment of an understanding between the two nations. C. F. A. did for India what Emily Hobhouse did for the Boers. May his labours in the cause of Indian independence be a sufficient ransom for what British Imperialism might have done to India.

New Delhi, 17-4-'46

PYARELAL

YOUNG AT EIGHTYFIVE

In his 85th year Bharatabhushan Pandit Malaviyaji refused to remain confined to his bed and rushed to Delhi to watch the denouement of two centuries of British rule in India. In vain did Gandhiji and Sheth G. D. Birla try to dissuade this hero of a hundred fights, who is now practically bedridden on account of his years, from undertaking the journey. On reaching Delhi, he wanted to come and see Gandhiji in Bhanga Nivas. But Gandhiji anticipated him by meeting him at 5, Canning Road, on the evening of 18th April. "You would have covered me with shame, if you had come to me instead of my going to you," Gandhiji told him when he met him.

Malaviyaji lay half reclining in his bed, supported by a high pillow. At fourscore and five his mind is alert, the memory still functioning. The sight and bearing are good but the physical energy is at its low ebb. His voice during the conversations scarcely rose above a whisper. Both Gandhiji and I strained our ears in vain to catch it till Govind Malaviyaji came to our rescue. The one passion that filled his soul was the independence and integrity of India and on these points Gandhiji was able to allay his apprehensions. He had heard that a lot of people came and disturbed his peace by retailing all kinds of idle rumours. "Why do you lend a ready ear to such gossip?" pleaded Gandhiji. "Why can't you take a leaf out of my book? If someone comes to me and talks to me about the Indian States, I send him off to Pandit Nehru. If it is about internal politics of the Congress, I give him Maulana Azad's address. In this way I have rigorously restricted my ambit of work. Even so, I have hardly a moment's respite. Unless I did that I would have to give up the desire to live up to 125 which I must not do, if my dream of non-violence as a world conquering force is to be realized. You are a man of religion and purity of the soul. It should need no argument on my part to convince you that if you completely empty your mind of outward things and fixing all your thoughts on Him inwardly pray, you will have more than contributed your share to the struggle for independence. You must complete your century. It is perfectly feasible if you will listen to my advice." Malaviyaji followed Gandhiji's remarks with an inscrutable childlike smile on the face, beaming affection. What did the amused look signify? Was it to say, 'O, I have heard all that before!' I wonder. "I must not engage you in talk any further," he remarked, "I know you are always busy."

New Delhi, 22-4-'46

PYARELAL

PRAYER DISCOURSES

The embargo laid by Gandhiji upon himself, in regard to press interviews, continues. Having adopted the delicate role of adviser to the Cabinet Mission and his own countrymen, he feels he must not be "broadcasting to the world on the matters covered by his advice". And so discourses at the evening prayer gatherings are the only public utterances that he has allowed himself to make since his arrival in Delhi. Prayer, as Gandhiji has more than once remarked of late, is not merely a means of attaining spiritual salvation, but also of obtaining freedom from bondage in this world. The greater includes the less. "If Swaraj is to be won through the non-violent strength of the millions," he observed in the course of one of his prayer addresses, "they must in some measure develop in them the qualities of a sthitaprajna or the man of steady wisdom.

"That ideal is not meant for jnanis only, it is for all, even ordinary lay people. Lord Krishna himself is depicted in the Mahabharata as a charioteer actually driving a team of white horses while his pupil Arjuna, to whom the Gita discourses are addressed is pictured as being plebeian in his mental make-up and outlook.

"What then are the characteristics of a Sthitaprajna? He is one who withdraws his senses from the objects of the senses behind the shield of the spirit, as a tortoise does its limbs under its shell.

"A man whose wisdom is not steady is liable to be betrayed into anger, evil thoughts or abuse. On the contrary, the man with the steady wisdom will remain equally unaffected by adulation or abuse. He will realize that abuse fouls only the tongue that utters it, never the person against whom it is hurled. A man of steady wisdom will therefore never wish ill to anyone, but will pray even for his enemy with his last breath.

"Is it too difficult an ideal to follow?" he asked, and replied, "No. On the contrary, the conduct laid down in it is the only conduct worthy of the dignity of human beings.

"Today our minds are clouded by delusion. In our ignorance we quarrel with one another and indulge in rowdism against our own brethren. For such as these there is neither salvation nor Swaraj. Self-discipline or rule over self is the first condition of self-rule or Swaraj.

"All might find it difficult to correctly recite the Gita verses which are in Sanskrit. But all can take part in the singing of Ramdhun. The mass singing of Ramdhun to the accompaniment of tal is prayer reduced to its simplest terms."

"But how can non-Hindus take part in it?" the question was once raised.

"I laugh within myself," replied Gandhiji, "when someone objects that Rama or the chanting of Ramanam is for the Hindus only, how can Musalmans therefore take part in it? Is there one God for the Musalmans and another for the Hindus, Parsis or Christians? No, there is only one omnipotent and omnipresent God. He is named variously and we remember Him by the name which is most familiar to us.

"My Rama, the Rama of our prayers is not the historical Rama, the son of Dasharatha the King of Ayodhya. He is the eternal, the unborn, the one without a second. Him alone I worship, His aid alone I seek, and so should you. He belongs equally to all. I, therefore, see no reason why a Musalmah or anybody should object to taking His name. But he is in no way bound to recognize God as Ramanam. He may utter to himself Allah or Khuda so as not to mar the harmony of the sound."

On another occasion, commenting on a bhajan that had been sung at the prayer, he observed: "In that hymn there is an assurance that whom God protects no power on earth can injure. The message of that hymn has a particular relevancy in the present times when the whole world is plunged in strife. Although the war has ended, the causes that brought it about still continue. This is not peace; it is only silent preparation for another war.

"Look at the mutual recrimination, abuse and threats of violence that poison the atmosphere in Delhi itself. But if you have faith in God you will remain unaffected by all these threats and abuse, and feel secure in the assurance that not a hair of your head will be injured so long as you are under God's protecting care. There is a saying to the effect that the outer is only the reflection of the inner. If you are good, the whole world will be good to you. On the contrary, if you feel tempted to regard anybody as evil, the odds are that the evil is within you."

Applying the lesson of that hymn to an outburst against the Hindus in general, attributed to Choudhary Khaliq-uz-Zaman, that had appeared in the Press, he proceeded, "The Choudhary Saheb has had great regard for me. If, therefore, somebody comes and tells me that he has abused the Hindus and called them names, I must refuse to believe it or think ill of him. How can a person who till yesterday was like a blood-brother to me turn all of a sudden into a hater of Hindus? I would rather think that some Hindus had exasperated him by their behaviour and made him lose his balance. Similarly, I am quite sure that if the Choudhary Saheb were to meet me today and I were to ask him if he really believed that the whole mass of Hindus had turned bad overnight, he would laugh at the remarks attributed to him and dismiss them as absurd. We must neither think evil about others nor suspect others of thinking evil about us. Proneness to lend ear to evil reports is a sign of lack of faith."

Here is another talk:

"In a moment of introspection the poet asks himself: 'O Man, why have you left off taking God's name? You have not given up anger or lust or greed, but you have forgotten truth. What a tragedy to save worthless pennies and to let go the priceless gem of God's love! Why could you not, O fool! renounce all vanities and throw yourself on the grace of God alone?' This does not mean that if one has wealth, it should be thrown away and wife and children should be turned out of doors. It simply means that one must give up attachment to these things and dedicate one's all to God and make use of His gifts to serve Him only. It also means that if we take His name with all our being we are automatically weaned from all lust, untruth and baser passions.

"In the first shloka of Ishopanishad that is repeated everyday at the beginning of the prayer, one is asked to dedicate everything to God and then use it to the required extent. The principal condition laid down is that one must not covet what belongs to another. These two maxims contain the quintessence of the Hindu religion.

"In another shloka which is recited during the morning prayer it is said, 'I do not ask for temporal power; nor do I ask to go to heaven, nor even to attain Nirvana. What I ask for is that I may be able to relieve the pain of those who are in pain.' The pain might be physical, mental or spiritual. Spiritual pain due to slavery to one's passions is sometimes greater even than the physical.

"But God does not come down in person to relieve suffering. He works through human agency. Therefore, prayer to God to enable one to relieve the suffering of others must mean a longing and readiness on one's part to labour for it.

"The prayer you will note is not exclusive. It is not restricted to one's own caste or community. It is all inclusive. It comprehends the whole of humanity. Its realization would thus mean the establishment of the Kingdom of Heaven on earth."

On another occasion a couple of children, that had been romping about during the prayers, disturbed the prayer service. It upset him. It was the fault of the parents, he remarked. He had never seen children playing in a church or a mosque. "True culture requires that there should be perfect peace in the prayer ground at the time of the prayer." There should be an atmosphere of solemnity as in a church, a mosque or a temple. He knew that many of the temples were full of clamour. It had hurt him deeply. "We go to the temple to worship not the stone or the metal image but God who resides in it. The image becomes what man makes of it. It has no power independently of the sanctity with which it is invested by the worshipper. Therefore everyone, including children, should observe perfect silence at the time of prayer." As a result of his criticism there was a striking improvement in the behaviour of children from next day.

New Delhi, 22-4-'46

PYARELAL

DEPLORABLE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Shri J. C. Kumarappa, writing in the 'Gram Udyog Patrika', says that to rely on or encourage imports from abroad is wholly wrong in principle. In the matter of the expected shortage of sugar owing to the failure of winter rains in the U. P. and Bihar and by frost in the Punjab and N. W. F. P., he suggests that the deficit in sugar should be made good by tapping palm trees in jungle areas for nira and preparing gur and sugar from it.

In regard to the import of a primary necessity like kerosene oil, he suggests further extraction of vegetable oils to meet our needs. Imports will entail export of some of our own production to pay for them, and will only cause further distress in the long run.

He also draws attention to the insidious scheme for the development of Virginia cigarette tobacco in Bihar sponsored by Sir Herbert Stewart (Vice-Chairman of the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research). Under the scheme a number of research stations on tobacco are to be opened in various places and the Imperial Tobacco Company have given two studentships of £500 per annum for training in tobacco cultivation abroad. At such a time the obvious duty of a government should have been not to waste good money or time on tobacco research, but to devote both to reclaim all available land for food cultivation. But Imperial Councils can only think in terms of either tobacco, long staple cotton or thick rind sugarcane for mills and groundnut for export, and thus serve foreign business masquerading as "India Ltd."

New Delhi, 21-4-'46

WHY NOT?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"You say that if Kasturba Agents are also members of the legislatures, it will be setting a bad example to the villagers. I can understand this being applicable to the present Assembly, but when we have Swaraj the position will be changed. Will it, therefore, not be an advantage for us to be there? Will not such work as we want done be done in one session of the legislature, whereas ordinarily it would take years to do?"

So writes a sister. But there seem to be three flaws in her line of argument.

Firstly, I have not made any distinction between the present and the future Assembly under Swaraj. It is unnecessary for my argument.

Secondly, it is an illusion to think that M. L. A.'s are the guides of the voters. Voters do not send representatives to the Assemblies in order to be guided by them. On the contrary, they are sent there loyally to carry out the people's wishes. The people are, therefore, the guides, not the M. L. A.'s. The latter are servants, the former masters. The illusion is due to the present system of government. When the illusion disappears, the existing unseemly competition to get into the legislatures will also be much less. There will be a few whose duty it will be to go there, and they will go to do the people's will. Today they go to the Assembly in order to fight there for Swaraj, but it has now dawned on most people that they cannot achieve much there even in this line.

The third mistake in the argument is that the Assemblies are best fitted to guide the people. If we look around the world we shall find that the best guidance is given by those outside. If that were not so, a rot would set in in all governments, because the field for guidance is vast and the Assembly is a very small thing. Parliaments are, after all, a mere drop in the ocean of national life.

New Delhi, 20-4-'46

(From Harijansevak)

CONTENTS

	PAGE
THE LESSON OF THE CROSS ...	A. K. 101
WEEKLY LETTER ...	PYARELAL 101
MINISTERS' DUTY ...	M. K. GANDHI 104
IS IT GENUINE? ...	M. K. GANDHI 104
QUESTION BOX ...	M. K. GANDHI 105
SOVEREIGN REMEDY ...	M. K. GANDHI 105
MERCY VERSUS RUTHLESSNESS ...	M. K. GANDHI 106
'HARIJAN' IN URDU SCRIPT ...	M. K. GANDHI 106
MEETING SASTRIAR ...	S. N. 107
THE LOSS ...	PYARELAL 109
COMMUNION OF SILENCE ...	PYARELAL 109
YOUNG AT EIGHTYFIVE ...	PYARELAL 110
PRAYER DISCOURSES ...	PYARELAL 110
DEPLORABLE ...	M. K. GANDHI 112
WHY NOT? ...	M. K. GANDHI 112
NOTES:
'SILK KHADI' ...	M. K. G. 103
WHY ONLY YARN? ...	M. K. G. 103

HARIJAN

12 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 13]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, MAY 5, 1946

[ THREE ANNAS

NON-VIOLENT VOLUNTEER CORPS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Some time ago an attempt was made, at my instance, to form shanti dals but nothing came of it. This lesson, however, was learnt that the membership, in its very nature, of such organizations could not be large. Ordinarily, the efficient running of a large volunteer corps based on force implies the possibility of the use of force in the event of breach of discipline. In such bodies little or no stress is laid on a man's character. Physique is the chief factor. The contrary must obtain in non-violent bodies in which character or soul force must mean everything and physique must take second place. It is difficult to find many such persons. That is why non-violent corps must be small, if they are to be efficient. Such brigades may be scattered all over; there may be one each for a village or a mohalla. The members must know one another well. Each corps will select its own head. All the members will have the same status, but where everyone is doing the same work there must be one person under whose discipline all must come, or else the work will suffer. Where there are two or more brigades the leaders must consult among themselves and decide on a common line of action. In that way alone lies success.

If non-violent volunteer corps are formed on the above lines, they can easily stop trouble. These corps will not require all the physical training given in akhadas, but a certain part of it will be necessary.

One thing, however, should be common to members of all such organizations and that is implicit faith in God. He is the only companion and doer. Without faith in Him these peace brigades will be lifeless. By whatever name one calls God, one must realize that one can only work through His strength. Such a man will never take another's life. He will allow himself, if need be, to be killed and thereby live through his victory over death.

The mind of the man in whose life the realization of this law has become a living reality will not be bewildered in crisis. He will instinctively know the right way to act.

In spite, however, of what I have said above I would like to give some rules culled from my own experience :

1. A volunteer may not carry any weapons.
2. The members of a corps must be easily recognizable.
3. Every volunteer must carry bandages, scissors, needle and thread, surgical knife etc. for rendering first aid.
4. He should know how to carry and remove the wounded.
5. He should know how to put out fires, how to enter a fire area without getting burnt, how to climb heights for rescue work and descend safely with or without his charge.
6. He should be well acquainted with all the residents of his locality. This is a service in itself.
7. He should recite Ramanam ceaselessly in his heart and persuade others who believe to do likewise.

There are many who, whether from mental laziness or from having fallen into a bad habit believe that God is and will help us unasked. Why then is it necessary to recite His name? It is true that if God is, He is irrespective of our belief. But realization of God is infinitely more than mere belief. That can come only by constant practice. This is true of all science. How much more true of the science of all sciences?

Man often repeats the name of God parrot-wise and expects fruit from so doing. The true seeker must have that living faith which will not only dispel the untruth of parrot-wise repetition from within him but also from the hearts of others.

New Delhi, 26-4-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

WEEKLY LETTER

The fever of excitement which the yellow press had been trying to work up for some time past and to which Gandhiji referred last week reached its culmination on Wednesday last when a Hindu boy in New Delhi was stabbed in the back in a dastardly manner by some unknown person. Luckily the assault did not prove fatal. Thanks to the level-headedness shown by the people of the locality, there were no reprisals taken and the trouble did not spread. "It might be presumed at first flush," observed Gandhiji commenting on this, "that because the victim in this case was a Hindu boy the assailant must be a Muslim and vice versa. Such speculation, in my opinion, is not only idle but mischievous. We should rather ask ourselves as to how we would have or should have acted, if we were present on the scene." To remain passive witnesses of the dastardly attack would be cowardly. Should they, then, whip out a knife and pay back the miscreant in his own coin? Both these courses would be wrong, observed Gandhiji. The only becoming course, he told them would be to plead with the miscreant not to dye his hand with innocent blood. If in doing so they themselves became victims of the miscreant's anger, they should not mind but should rather welcome it. Such an occasion should provide them with an opportunity to test the sincerity of their daily attendance of the prayer meetings. "When passions rise high and panic and mass hysteria lay hold of the people, it is up to the man of prayer to keep his head above the storm and refuse to sink to the level of the brute. We should pray to God to help us to keep down the hatred and anger in the heart. To be able to conquer anger and hatred and all other baser passions is the fruit of prayer. It is braver far to disarm the miscreant with cool determination devoid of anger than to counter him with a dagger, to prevent an angry word from escaping one's lips than indulge in abuse."

He recalled another instance of assault on a harmless German during the Victory Day disturbances in Delhi that had been brought to his notice the day before. The mass madness at that time was directed against Englishmen and Europeans. In his opinion, it was not less cowardly.

"We should pity the ruffian," he pleaded. "A Maulana who saw me just before I started for the prayer was telling me how a number of newspapers were fanning the flames of communal hatred day after day and week after week. They are the real culprits. To incite to murder is as bad if not worse than the murder itself. The actual murderer is very often an ignorant tool, victim of mischievous propaganda." But even such propaganda could take effect only in a vitiated atmosphere. In a healthy atmosphere it would be sterilized. "Panic is the result of fear after all," he concluded. "But a man of prayer knows no fear. Your prayer is vain repetition if it does not clear the atmosphere of fear, panic and mass hysteria."

He reverted to the topic in another after-prayer discourse. Newspapers had reported that Bombay was full of panic, Hindus dared not go into Muslim quarters and vice versa, the shops were closed, the streets deserted for fear of riots breaking out. All that had proved to be a press canard. There was neither any panic nor disturbance worth noting in Bombay. Hindu women and children freely visited and went about in Muslim quarters and vice versa. The whole story was faked. In Delhi itself a Hindu sister was being driven by a Muslim tonga driver only on the day before. The driver had expressed amazement and horror at what was taking place. Why should there be any quarrel between Hindus and Muslims, he had asked and added, "God turns His back on those who quarrel amongst themselves." That showed, remarked Gandhiji, how dangerous it was to give credence to panicky rumours. "The lesson to be learnt from all this is," he proceeded, "that we should not be afraid. Because people will always frighten the timid, not the brave." But it was no use making a show of bravery when there was fear in the heart. Probably they had all heard about a child playing with a snake without coming to harm. But if a grown-up person who was afraid of snakes tried to play with one, it would detect fear in the very touch and probably bite him. But supposing they were afraid and wanted to shed fear, the first condition was that they must not carry any arms. They should put faith in God and depend upon Him to protect them. The man who was afraid and carried arms repudiated God and made the arms his God.

THE BAR SINISTER

Only a wall divides Gandhiji's residence from the Municipal sweepers' quarters in New Delhi. Yet a gulf as wide as that between Abraham and Lazarus separates the living conditions in the two. Gandhiji took opportunity early in the morning on Saturday last to visit it. A small square enclosed by rows of single room tenements on all sides constituted the busti. The tenements were miniature Black Holes with only one narrow aperture near the roof for air and light. One felt suffocated. Some of these tenements, only 10×12 ft., were occupied by as many as six, eight and even ten members of a family. How they could possibly live there with decency God alone knew. Right in the middle of the square was a double row of ramshackle latrines open in front and bathing taps. Most of the people were sleeping in the open. Their bed clothes were indescribably filthy. How could it be otherwise with the amenities provided to them? Speaking at a volunteers' gathering the next day, Gandhiji poured out the lava that filled his soul. It was their shame as it was his. The volunteers had been in attendance in his camp. He felt grateful for the love and diligence with which they had served him and his party. But what was the use of their serving him if they served not the lowest among the low who were his next door neighbours. They should rather go and serve the bhangis who lived next door to him in filth and squalor. Such service carried with it its own reward. He had come to live in the Sweepers' Colony but could not live in the filth in which they lived. The fault was not theirs but of those who had reduced them to that state. The quarters provided for them were worse than the worst prison cell that he had seen in India or in South Africa. If they went to Bhangi quarters, not as their patrons or teachers but as their true servants, they would be able to reach their hearts and transform the look of things in no time.

A similar visit to the Sweepers' Quarters in old Delhi near Ajmeri Gate revealed conditions still more shocking. There were only eight tenements cowering under the city wall with only a narrow strip of space separating them from the edge of the city's main sewer. It hardly afforded passage to one man. We were told that one sweeper child had actually tumbled into the sewer and been drowned some time back. Some more tenements were being improvised by the sweepers themselves with mud and old rusty corrugated iron sheets as their only material. There was only one water tap for bathing and filling drinking water pots, and that had only been recently installed. The whole place was indescribably filthy. One had to hold one's breath; it stank. Rajkumari Amrit Kaur who had accompanied Gandhiji to the busti could not stand it; she vomited.

This city, the pride of the Pandavas and the Great Moghuls, Gandhiji learnt, was today perhaps the filthiest city in India. The municipal insanitation had reached the very limit. One could believe it after what one saw reflected in the sweepers' quarters. Seven years ago the late Shri Mahadev Desai visited these quarters and made a harrowing report. The passage of time only seems to have made things worse. Gandhiji was shocked. What were the municipal councillors and their health officer doing, one wondered. How one wishes that the rate payers would wake up and make their city fathers realize their duty.

Like a refreshing bath in the Holy Ganges in contrast with this was the second visit to Malaviyaji on the eve of Gandhiji's departure for Simla. But of that more next week.

New Delhi, 1-5-'46

PYARELAL

FOR WOMEN

City women often ask what they can do in the way of social service. The tragedy of the lives of these sisters is that they are not in touch with those whom it is their duty to serve. If they were, the question would not arise.

I wonder how many, if any, of the well-to-do sisters of Delhi have ever visited the Harijan quarters here. The busti on the outskirts of which Gandhiji lives cries out for service for these neglected members of society. Their living quarters are bad enough, though better than many in other cities or perhaps even some in Delhi itself. Women should be in the forefront of agitation for the providing of better quarters for these people without whose service we could not live. Their wages are insufficient. It is piteous to see their bed clothes or their personal wear and the unwashed condition of the children. Is it too much to ask a band of sisters to visit these quarters daily, bathe the children, comb the matted hair of the girls, give them simple remedies for any ailments, have their clothes washed, provide milk for the children and train the women how to feed themselves and their families and how to keep their environment as clean as possible in spite of the dark, dingy and insanitary living space that is their lot today? It is devoutly to be hoped that the elected representatives of the various provincial governments will look upon making decent quarters for Harijans and indeed all labourers and raising their wages as the very first charge on their revenues.

The builders of New Delhi obviously paid scant attention to any air and light outside the gilded palaces of the rich. Our own governments must be quick to mend their errors.

New Delhi, 26-4-'46

A. K.

CRUEL

The following is the gist of a letter to the Railway authorities by some passengers:

"We the passengers in the 'Hubli Mail' which has arrived in Poona at 10.19 p. m. beg to bring to your notice that the carriage in which we are sitting should hold only 28 whereas actually there are 80 persons in it plus heavy luggage. We are at a loss to understand why there is no supervision of accommodation available in trains. Our condition is comparable to the legendary 'Black Hole of Calcutta'. We are being suffocated. Women and children are almost dying. Is this fair treatment to third class passengers?"

The complaint is most apt. The description is an everyday occurrence. But will the railways, who live on the income derived from third class passengers, do anything for these poor people? Third class compartments and third class travel need thorough and immediate overhaul and reform. It is high time we had a government that thought in terms of the people.

New Delhi, 27-4-'46

A. K.

HARIJAN

May 5

1946

INDEPENDENCE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Friends have repeatedly challenged me to define independence. At the risk of repetition, I must say that independence of my dream means Ramarajya, i. e. the Kingdom of God on Earth. I do not know what it will be like in Heaven. I have no desire to know the distant scene. If the present is attractive enough, the future cannot be very unlike.

In concrete terms, then, the independence should be political, economic and moral.

'Political' necessarily means the removal of the control of the British army in every shape and form.

'Economic' means entire freedom from British capitalists and capital, as also their Indian counterpart. In other words, the humblest must feel equal to the tallest. This can take place only by capital or capitalists sharing their skill and capital with the lowliest and the least.

'Moral' means freedom from armed defence forces. My conception of Ramarajya excludes replacement of the British army by a national army of occupation. A country that is governed by even its national army can never be morally free and, therefore, its so-called weakest member can never rise to his full moral height.

Though Mr. Churchill is claimed to have won the war for the British, he has in his Aberdeen speech uttered words of wisdom from the standpoint of a radical non-violent reformer. He knows, if any panoplied warrior knows, what havoc the two wars of our generation have wrought. In another column I reproduce the summary of his speech as reported in the public press. Only I must warn the public against the pessimistic note underlying the speech. Nothing will be found to have gone wrong if mankind recoils from the horrors of war. The bloodletting that men have undergone to the point of whiteness will not have been in vain, if it has taught us that we must freely give our own blood in the place of taking other peoples' blood, be the cause ever so noble or ignoble.

If the Cabinet Mission 'delivers the goods', India will have to decide whether attempting to become a military power she would be content to become, at least for some years, a fifth-rate power in the world without a message in answer to the pessimism described above, or whether she will by further refining and continuing her non-violent policy prove herself worthy of being the first nation in the world using her hard-won freedom for the delivery of the earth from the burden which is crushing her in spite of the so-called victory.

New Delhi, 29-4-'46

PRESS SUMMARY OF MR. CHURCHILL'S SPEECH

The world is very ill. This is the time when hatred is rife in the world and when many mighty branches of the human family, victors or vanquished, innocent or guilty, are plunged in bewilderment, distress or ruin. Two fearful wars in our lifetime have torn the heart out of its grace and culture.

Measureless injury has been done to much that the 19th century would have called 'Christian civilization', for all the leading nations have been racked by stresses which have blunted their sensibilities and have destroyed their agreeable modes of social intercourse.

Only science has rolled forward, whipped by the fierce winds of mortal war, and science has placed in the hands of men agencies of destruction far beyond any development of their commonsense or virtue.

In a world where over-production of food was formerly from time to time a problem, famine has laid its gaunt fingers upon the peoples of many lands and scarcity upon all.

The psychic energies of mankind have been exhausted by the tribulations through which they have passed and are still passing. It is not only bloodletting that has weakened and whitened us.

The vital springs of human inspiration are, for the moment, drained. There must be a period of recovery. Mankind cannot, in its present plight, bear new shocks and quarrels without taking to altogether cruder and primordial forms.

Yet we do not know that the hatreds and confusion which are found will not confront us with even harder trial than those we have so narrowly and painfully survived.

In many countries, where even united efforts would fall short of what is needed, party strife and faction is fomented or machine-made and skeleton fanatics rave at each other about their rival ideologies.

All the while, the ordinary folk of every country show themselves kindly and brave and serviceable to their fellow men. Yet, they are driven against one another by forces and organizations and doctrines as wantonly and remorselessly as they ever were in the ages of absolute emperors and kings.

There never was a time when breathing space was more needed, a blessed convalescence, a truce of God and man.

(Statesman, 29-4-'46)

GOSHALAS AND PINJRAPOLES

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The following condensation from a scheme propounded by Sardar Sir Datar Singh will be of general interest:

It is estimated that there are at present 3000 'goshalas' in the country with a population of over six lakhs head of cattle. These organizations, besides taking up the improvement of their institutions as envisaged by the Government of India, in the present threatened famine conditions can come to the country's help by production of more milk in the institutions. The number of well-organized 'goshalas' and 'pinjrapoles' can be taken as half, i.e. 1500. The cattle may be classified as:

- |  |          |
|--|----------|
| 1. Good Dairy type 20%   | 1,20,000 |
| 2. Fair type—good for breeding, though not highly productive 20% | 1,20,000 |
| 3. Old, infirm and unfit for further breeding 60%                | 3,60,000 |

It is the first and second class that could be exploited for milk production and breeding. Out of these 2,40,000, half will be milch and half dry.

Better feeding, management, organization, etc. would mean an increase in production of 1,20,000 seers or say 3,000 maunds of milk per day.

In order to achieve this end immediately, a skeleton plan is suggested below:

1. Productive animals should be separated from those that are aged, infirm or otherwise useless. The latter should be removed to rural areas, preferably to forest rakhs in order to relieve congestion and allow better feeding of productive cows. These cattle should not be allowed to propagate. Their care, as well as that of dry stock farms, may be in the hands of a committee.

2. For the achievement of this end, the stock should be divided in the following manner:

a. Milch animals about to calve should be kept at the 'goshala' premises.

b. Dry animals fit for breeding should be kept on the lands, if any, belonging to the 'goshala' in the neighbourhood or may be provided for at a place from where they could be returned when about to calve, and the animals, which go dry in the 'goshala,' should be sent there.

3. The congestion-relieved 'goshalas' and 'pinjrapoles' will have enough space to house cattle properly, feed them scientifically and carry out other improvements.

4. To further help, encourage and stimulate these institutions in this direction, it is suggested to help them financially by giving them 50% reduction on concentrates and fodder on the condition that these institutions will increase their milk production immediately either by keeping milch cattle of the owners who are not able to keep them during the famine days or by buying cattle where their finances permit. The Government will have the option of purchasing one-third of their milk supply for the needy people of the locality and in the neighbourhood, if required.

5. Attempts should be made to feed cattle more on feeds which are not generally required for direct human consumption such as oil-cakes, cotton seeds, etc.

6. It may also be stated here that by feeding by-products of grains to the cattle, not only can the production of available food be increased in the form of additional milk from these animals as compared to the food value of these by-products of food in case they are directly consumed, but it will also be a more economical method of using the latter. Within limits, it will have double effect. It will help in the production of human food and will also protect the cattle from being underfed during the scarcity period.

7. All possible facilities should be provided for transport and supply of concentrates and other cattle-feeds to these institutions. Collection of data as to the requirements of the 'goshalas' and the available stocks in these organizations should immediately be taken in hand. Provision should be made well in advance for the supply of these essential requirements from surplus to deficit zones. All this must be done in advance through Goshala Development Officers, who will be responsible for the working of the whole scheme.

The Sardar suggests to every province the appointment of Goshala Development Officers, training of workers and the supply of bulls. He rightly says that for real success there must be genuine co-operation between Government and the public. He has no doubt that 'goshalas,' humanitarian and Cattle Welfare and such other bodies will give the co-operation if approached.

Another friend of cattle writes as follows:

"I want you to consider one or two suggestions for saving our cattle during the coming famine as the shortage of fodder is likely to be acute in some of the famine-stricken areas. The world is familiar with 'Save the Children' campaigns. Why should we not in India inaugurate a 'Save the Cattle' campaign? Many of our good cattle were slaughtered as you know, during the war and we cannot afford to lose more through starvation.

"My concrete suggestion is that well-to-do people with plots of land on which grass is grown should be generous enough to permit cattle belonging to less fortunate people to graze in their compounds. This may not afford large scale relief, since it would apply in the main to urban areas. Nevertheless, it is a point worthy of consideration.

"Provincial governments should establish a chain of 'goshalas' where owners of cattle, who are unable to maintain them during the period of famine, may leave them to be fed and maintained at State expense until the crisis is over. Whether this should be done entirely free or if a fee should be levied from the owners and recovered later is a detail which the provincial governments may decide for themselves. It would be easier for provincial governments to make arrangements for the collective feeding of large numbers of cattle than the distribution of fodder to individual owners."

New Delhi, 20-4-'46

IDEAL FOR WOMEN

Many social reformers have espoused the cause of women. But with almost all of them woman was the queen of the home. Her sphere of activity was limited to looking after her husband's comfort and proper bringing up of children. With the advent of Western education sex equality became the vogue, but the equality was superficial and even artificial. Gandhiji believes in real equality. He practises what he preaches. In his Ashram the common kitchen has often been entrusted to men. It is simply an indication that most occupations are common to men and women. Woman is man's equal and can even be his superior. Care of children and the home is a joint responsibility. Woman is the mother. But her motherly tenderness should extend beyond her own children and therefore her sphere must also extend beyond the home.

During Gandhiji's Bengal tour, while answering questions in one of the workers' meetings, he said that a woman who really and truly prepared her children for the service of the motherland need not do anything more. A friend interpreted this remark as a confirmation of the popular belief that woman's one duty was to look after the home and bring up the children properly. Gandhiji laughed and said: "People always interpret things in the way that suits them. Men and women given to animal enjoyment can never prepare their children for the service of the motherland. It is only those whose law of life is self-control that can do so and such will always find time for service outside the domestic sphere."

He holds strong views against birth control with the help of contraceptives. "Contraceptives," he says, "are an insult to womanhood. The difference between a prostitute and a woman using contraceptives is only this that the former sells her body to several men, the latter sells it to one man. Man has no right to touch his wife so long as she does not wish to have a child, and the woman should have the will power to resist even her own husband."

Addressing a women's meeting during his recent visit to Madras he said that he wanted women to radiate the tejas of purity, even that of Sita before which the mighty Ravana had to accept defeat. If they possessed her purity, they would rule India and bring the Kingdom of Heaven upon earth. He would like to see women not only managing the Kasturba Trust but taking a large share in all national activity. He would see the wheel in the hands of millions of India's women and would have them banish from their hearts all traces of untouchability and communal differences and speaking Hindustani.

Woman is personification of non-violence. While talking to some Jain Sadhvis at the time of his talks with Qaid-e-Azam Jinnah he once said: "Woman is naturally more self-suffering. Non-violence therefore comes more easily to her. You are Jain women. I expect a lot from you."

He often says: "I am half woman." According to him, man comes nearer to woman when he assimilates and practises non-violence which requires greater courage than violence, because for violence physical strength and brute force is all that matters. Thus to be nearer a woman is a mark of a higher state.

Speaking at Borivli Kasturba Training Camp he said: "I wish to see women as men's equals and even their superiors. I would like you to occupy all posts of responsibility. But that does not mean that I would like you to occupy them without possessing the capacity. In fact I want you to give proof of greater ability than men."

"Equality must not mean copying men's shortcomings. Smoking and drinking, for instance, are common amongst men. You are not to descend to their level. You are to set to them an example in purity, renunciation, selfless love and service."

New Delhi, 15-4-'46

S. N.

IGNORANT LEGISLATION

Shri T. N. Jagdisan writes to Gandhiji:

"The following appeared in the Hindu: 'April 1, Karachi. The Sind Assembly today referred to a select committee the Bill seeking to empower the Government to sterilize lepers. In the statement of the Objects and Reasons of the Bill, it is stated that leprosy is not indigenous to the province of Sind, but the facilities for medical treatment available here attract an increasingly large number of leper immigrants from all over India and this has created a serious problem for the province. This Bill provides for sterilization of male lepers.'

"About a year ago Dr. R. G. Cochrane (now on leave in England) had expressed himself strongly against the proposal in an opinion which he was asked to give. If leprosy were hereditary, sterilization of male cases of leprosy would be a measure calculated to control leprosy. But leprosy is not hereditary. It is spread by the close and prolonged contact of healthy persons, especially children, with infective cases. Any child brought into contact with an infective case may develop leprosy. Children born to an infective parent or parents do not develop the disease if they are removed from the infective persons at a very early age. Reports of intensive surveys, done so far, show that in our Indian joint-families less infection results by contact with parents than by contact with uncles, aunts, brothers, sisters, etc. There is also infection by neighbours and co-tenants. So the sterilizing of male cases of leprosy would not improve the situation. On the other hand it will definitely worsen it by frightening the patients and driving them to conceal their disease for long years. And let it be remembered that leprosy can be concealed for long years, and these years are just the years when the patient, if treated, can get better; if untreated, can be an effective source of infection."

"If the proposed legislation is enacted, it will in practice operate only on the obvious, advanced, mutilated case who is probably not very infective, even if he were of the infective type, who certainly has no scope for marriage and progeny. The Sind Bill seeks to control the spread of the disease by immigrant patients. The immigrant patient, if infective, will not by sterilization cease to be a source of infection, in close and prolonged contact. The only way in which leprosy can be controlled is by the ensuring of conditions in which infective cases of leprosy, whether immigrant or indigenous, do not live in close and prolonged contact with children.

"The Sind Bill is both unintelligent and harsh. Leprosy, like tuberculosis, runs in families by the close contact of healthy members, particularly the children, with the infective ones. Measures to control leprosy need be no harsher than measures to control tuberculosis, and should be directed at cutting the channel of communication between the infective and the uninfected. The pity is that even the most enlightened people have old and wrong notions about leprosy, and, as of all things an ancient prejudice dies hardest, a penalizing attitude enters into the minds of legislators and administrators when they deal with leprosy. But with one voice all the experience of great workers in leprosy cries aloud that harsh measures intended to abolish leprosy have only had the opposite effect of driving the disease underground, thereby increasing it. In leprosy as in other spheres of life, harshness never pays, violence never pays."

The medical world will support every word of what Prof. Jagdisan has said. This is what Manson-Bahr, an authority on tropical diseases, says with regard to heredity in leprosy:

"From the fact that it tends to run in families and that in certain instances it assumes the appearance of atavism, leprosy was formerly believed to be hereditary. If this were so, how explain the striking fact, brought out by Hansen, that of the numerous offspring of 160 Norwegian lepers who emigrated to America not one has become a leper? Although acid-fast bacilli have been found in the placentas, the evidence of Culion settlement in the Philippines is that leprosy is not hereditary."

The only way to prevent the spread of the disease is to segregate the lepers. A child born of leprosy parents should be separated from them immediately at birth. According to still another authority on tropical diseases if this is delayed for six months, the child will have probably contracted the disease by that time. Ignorant legislation can serve no useful purpose whatsoever. On the contrary, it is likely to do a lot of harm as the good professor has explained in his letter. It is hoped that medical opinion all over the country will protest against the proposed measure and the Government will take really proper and effective measures for preventing the spread of the disease instead of passing the proposed bill.

New Delhi, 23-4-'46

S. N.

By M. K. Gandhi

Non-violence in Peace and War

Price Rs. 7, Postage 10 Annas

Women & Social Injustice

Price Rs. 4, Postage 7 Annas

By Rajkumari Amrit Kaur

To Women

Price 6 Annas, Postage 2 Annas

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH AND FOOD SHORTAGE

Ever since the P. S. V.'s visit to Gandhiji at Sevagram in connection with food shortage, his mind has been working to find out ways and means of combating the coming disaster. He has laid the fullest emphasis on "Grow More Food" and "Save As Much Food As Possible" campaigns. In his Ashram all the flower plants have been dug out and vegetables grown there instead. Nobody is to eat a morsel more than necessary, and no food is to be wasted. Over and above these, he has been thinking whether any food substitutes can be found. He asked me one day whether tender shoots of wheat before the grain has formed inside had any nutritive value. The idea is to tide over the period till the next crop is ready. So far as I know tender shoots or ears of wheat before the proper formation of grain has no nutritive value whatsoever. It is for the research institutions in the country to work on the problem and help to ward off the famine. Some of the medical journals have published reports of scientists having succeeded in making grass edible and assimilable by human beings. The Nutrition Research Laboratories at Coonoor can play a great part in this connection. It is sincerely hoped that the authorities of that institution will suspend for the time being academic research and concentrate on finding out ways and means of fighting the food shortage, for instance, finding out alternative foods, working out the role of tubers and root crops—admittedly short term heavy yielding crops, ideally suited to tide over the food crisis. They can also help a good deal by making suggestions for efficient husbanding of the available food resources in the country. A friend who had good experience of agriculture and, kisans was telling us the other day that practically 1/8th of the wheat stored by kisans goes to waste because of improper storage. That should be remedied without delay, and it is for medical research workers to suggest simple and efficient methods to do so. They can work out austerity meals, suggest menus giving a balanced diet and at the same time economize as much food as possible. The Nutrition Research Laboratories, Coonoor, have rendered useful service in the past by making the intelligentsia of the country food conscious. It is for them now to help the masses. Then and then alone can the heavy annual budget of such research work be justified. The money spent on the research comes from the pockets of the poor and the research workers must see that they do not die of preventable starvation.

S. N.

[The more I study the food crisis the more convinced I feel that people are being starved not for want of food, but for want of the co-operative effort of the expert and a national Government at the Centre bent upon meeting the crisis and inspiring the masses with confidence.]

New Delhi, 20-4-'46

M. K. G.]

A LIGHT IN DARKNESS

Seven miles from New Delhi, on the main road to Muttra, near Okhla Station, is an as yet tiny institution, the Kasturba Balika Ashram, that lights the shadow of the Imperial City with its steady, mild glow. Under that shadow covers the Harijan population of the city amidst the filth and squalor of bastis, where men and women engaged in rendering the most useful service to society are condemned to live under sub-human conditions of existence, to the shame and despair of all humanitarians. In the midst of his multifarious engagements Gandhiji found time to pay the Ashram a visit on Saturday, the 20th April.

The institution owes its existence to the passion for Harijan uplift of Mrs. Rameshwari Nehru who four years ago donated a sum of Rs. 10,000/- for founding an industrial home for the training of Harijan girls. Shrimati Sumitra Devi (Mrs. Madhavaprasad Birla) just before her untimely and tragic death willed a sum of one and a quarter lakh of rupees for the institution. The present roomy buildings in which it is housed is the gift of a Delhi gentleman to whom it originally belonged. One and a half year after the death of Mrs. Kasturba Gandhi, its opening ceremony was performed by Mrs. Rameshwari Nehru, when a beginning was made with 12 Harijan girls. At present the number of girls receiving training is 40, 14 out of these being from C. P., 10 from U. P., 8 from Rajputana, 5 from the Punjab, 1 from Maharashtra and 2 from Gujarat. Three out of 40 are Caste Hindus, all the rest being Harijans. All the expenses of the Harijan girls are paid by the Harijan Sevak Sangh. Admission is confined to unmarried girls, of 7 to 12 years of age, who have read up to the second class. But owing to the difficulty of securing Harijan girls even with that minimum standard of qualification, some altogether illiterate girls too had to be admitted. Teaching is now being given up to the 6th class. Training includes house-keeping, crotchet work, cooking, kitchen gardening, spinning and the allied processes and batik work. In literary training the curriculum in force in the District Board schools has been followed hitherto. But it has now been decided to prepare the candidates for the Prayag Mahila Vidyapith examinations.

Vocational training is given the place of honour in the syllabus of studies. By devoting one hour daily to spinning, 790 hanks of yarn representing a spinning wage of Rs. 90/- were spun since Gandhiji's birthday in October last. The highest number of hanks spun by a girl was 86, the second best having spun 82 hanks of 20c. out of self-carded cotton, representing a spinning wage of Rs. 13-7-0 and Rs. 12-15-0 respectively. Both the girls distinguished themselves in their literary studies too. The Balikashram experiment has conclusively proved that by giving one hour to spinning a student of school or college can produce all the cloth for her requirements.

Over and above this, 643 pieces of clothing were stitched, and 40 pieces of embroidery and six toys were produced by students in the vocational classes, the total amount of labour represented by these being Rs. 158/-. The total income for the last six months was

Rs. 56,261-1-3, expenditure during the corresponding period being Rs. 45,067-2-9

The institution is being conducted under the personal guidance of Shrimati Rameshwari Nehru, who visits and stays in the institution for a week or a fortnight every two or three months, and Thakkar Bapa, who claims with Gandhiji the title of being Harijan No. 1 of India. The institution has been fortunate in securing the services of Shri Prabhudas Gandhi, who is the Superintendent and of Shrimati Anasuya Mehta who is the Head Mistress.

A small exhibition of the products of the vocational activity of the students had been arranged. The exhibits included specimens of embroidery, crotchet and batik work, and maps and drawings by the students showing a high degree of artistic taste and manual skill. Their singing of bhajans was beautiful and the pronunciation of the Sanskrit verses that were recited as good as that of any 'Caste Hindu' girl, if not better. What pleased Gandhiji particularly was the high standard of personal cleanliness and tidiness shown by the girls. A few days back they had all come to Bhangi Nivas, a distance of seven miles, to meet Gandhiji and had walked back.

Making the cultural aspect of education the theme of his talk Gandhiji said, addressing them in Hindustani:

"I attach far more importance to the cultural aspect of education than to the literary. Culture is the foundation, the primary thing which the girls ought to get from here. It should show in the smallest detail of your conduct and personal behaviour, how you sit, how you walk, how you dress, etc., so that anybody might be able to see at a glance that you are the products of this institution. Inner culture must be reflected in your speech, the way in which you treat visitors and guests, and behave towards one another and your teachers and elders.

"I was pleased too that you walked all the distance to and from Bhangi Nivas, when you came to see me. But if you came only to please me, your trudging had no merit. It will do you no good. You must make it a rule to prefer walking to using a conveyance. Motor car is not for the millions. You will therefore shun it. Millions cannot afford even train journey. Their world is their village. It is a very small thing but if you faithfully adhere to this rule it will transform your entire life and fill it with a sweetness that natural simplicity carries with it.

"Education here won't qualify you for luxurious living. I want the Harijan girls here to show such a degree of culture that everybody should feel ashamed to regard them as untouchables. That is the goal of the Harijan Sevak Sangh's activities. This institution should demonstrate to the whole world the heights to which Harijans can rise, if they are freed from the incubus of untouchability and conversely the sacrilege and inhumanity of the institution of untouchability itself. I look forward to the day when this institution will fill the whole country with its fragrance and become a centre of attraction for girls from near and far."

New Delhi,
22-4-'46

PYARELAL

SWARAJ THROUGH SPINNING

(By M. K. Gandhi)

An A. I. S. A. worker writes thus :

"If we are to teach the spinners to spin with understanding and wear nothing but Khadi, it is only natural that the commercial side of Khadi will suffer. I personally am all in favour of the new scheme enunciated by you. You have said that we must make the spinners self-sufficient and that to obtain Swaraj through their activity is the aim of the A. I. S. A. You also want them to learn all the processes from cleaning cotton up to making slivers. 'This way lies Swaraj', you say. I admit it is right for spinners to learn well all the processes. This knowledge will increase their wage-earning capacity as also make them self-sufficient. The quality of yarn and cloth will also improve. But how can we win our freedom this way? How are we to bring home this lesson to the spinners? Please write clearly on this issue so that not only may the workers understand your meaning, but they may also be in a position to explain it to the spinners."

Imagine, if all the spinners understood the inner meaning of the wheel and spin willingly and not under pressure, what an India there would be! The awakening of crores of women spinners would ipso facto produce lakhs of Khadi weavers. Imagine too the numbers of men and women workers needed to bring about this awakening! If such a time comes, textile mills even if any were working, would have to rely on foreign countries for the sale of their produce. They would not, as they do today, hold imperialistic sway over the villages and cities. There would be Hindu-Muslim unity, all would be truthful, there would be no need to tell anyone to wear Khadi for no cloth other than home-spun would be available. That Swaraj is hidden in this revolutionary change should be self-evident to seeing eyes. The question may imply that such a consummation is impossible. If such is the question, it means that Swaraj through non-violent means is impossible.

Another question asked is how the spinners are to be given the requisite education. To seek out the right answer is the main work of the A.I.S.A. Enough research has not so far been done. It is the duty of every A.I.S.A. worker to try to solve the puzzle. Now that we have Congress ministries in several provinces the work should be easy. Let the workers throw themselves heart and soul into it. They will never succeed if they look all the time to the Central Office for help and guidance.

New Delhi, 26-4-'46

(From Harijansevak)

MARCH OF CIVILIZATION

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. On page 91 of 'Harijan' dated 14-4-'46, it has been argued that the bullock is a living machine and that contact with such harmless animals is a potent factor in the onward march of human civilization. The animals are, however, made 'harmless' by making them 'impotent'. Is this the correct method of the onward march of civilization? If we have cows, we must have bulls. The bullock is a creation of human selfishness and cruelty. If not in thinking man, in the lower animals at any rate, all the force of their nature rages in the fury of the generative desire. Therefore, to turn the noble animal, the 'Vahana of Mahadev' into a beast of burden is sad.

A. The writer is logical. But such logic would prevent the domestication of the cow. For there is probably more cruelty in domesticating the cow than in castrating the bull. It is a question of degree. Further march of civilization seems to imply increasing domination of man over beast, together with a growingly humane method of using them.

There are three schools of humanitarians. One believes in replacing animal power by the use of any other. Another believes in treating animals as fellow beings and making such use of them as a brotherly spirit will permit. The third will not make use of lower animals for man's selfish purpose but will employ instead one's own power and that of fellow beings to the extent that the latter give intelligent and willing use. I belong to the third school. It is possible by human labour, judiciously and humanely employed, to do fruit culture to a large extent and even corn culture. Indeed, as prisoners we civil resisters in Transvaal dug up stony ground for converting it into a municipal garden. No ploughing would have answered the purpose. The ground could yield only to the pickaxe.

The first I hold to be useless and even injurious in the end to mankind. A judicious combination of the other two seems to me to be the goal. I can see no escape from castration. The only thing to be done is to make it progressively humane.

A correspondent has brought forward in this connection the question of branding animals. Does the pain caused by branding compensate for the benefit it confers upon the owner and the animal? If it confers none on the animal, naturally branding must be taboo.

New Delhi, 29-4-'46

By M. K. Gandhi

Economics of Khadi

Price Rs. 4-0-0, Postage 13 Annas

Cent Per Cent Swadeshi

Price Rs. 2, Postage 5 Annas

Constructive Programme

Its Meaning and Place

Price Rs. 0-6-0, Postage 2 Annas

KANU GANDHI'S CAMP

( By M. K. Gandhi )

This issue contains an abridged account of Kanu Gandhi's second camp. How the candidates were selected, how there was no financial loss, how beginning with cleaning latrines they carried out all the other work, what they ate etc. are all matters worthy of attention. The smallest detail was not neglected. The running of this camp will serve as a guide to others who wish to organize or attend training camps.

The secret of Kanu Gandhi's camp lay, in my opinion, in the fact that the organizers knew their job and were there as workers rather than for issuing orders. Where the organizers are mere superintendents the work is often apt to be lifeless or slack.

It is sad that the camp had to be of short duration. There were strong reasons for this being so. Let us hope that those who came for training will utilize in their own lives the lessons they learnt and thus make progress towards becoming perfect servants of the people.

[ An abstract from Kanu Gandhi's description of his shibir in Sevagram to which reference has been made in the foregoing shows that candidates were informed that the shibir would be conducted during the hot months and in Gandhiji's absence. Nevertheless 160 applications came in. Forms were sent to them all but as Gandhiji's movements became uncertain and Shri Kanu Gandhi was with him, the filled-in forms were received at Bardoli where Gandhiji was originally to have gone, from thence to Poona, and thence to Sevagram. Ultimately there were 22 men and 4 women admitted to the shibir.

These men and women had to attend to everything, beginning with conservancy work and going on to cooking and cleaning. They had to do strenuous farming work too. At first it was intended to have sheds on the open ground near the Ashram. But as only 26 persons were able to come they were accommodated near the Talimi Sangh quarters and so far as it was possible the Talimi Sangh people also collaborated with the shibir trainees. On two days in the week they had sprouted gram, otherwise dallia was served for breakfast. For the midday meal and supper they had jawari bread or rice and dal with vegetables. Oil was served instead of ghee and an attempt was made to give 8 ounces of curds per head during the 24 hours. All this cost -/6/9 per day.

Every trainee knew how to spin but they had regular training given them in the new process of sliver-making called tunai. It was possible to attain a speed of 170 rounds of yarn per hour, tunai being included in the period.

They had lessons in first aid, civil drill, singing picked national songs and they were taught the way to hoist the national flag with ease and without any mishap.

All had to take part in the prayer meetings.

A special feature of the training consisted in seeing whether they would take to Hindustani written in both Nagri and Urdu characters. Shri Devprakash of the Talimi Sangh successfully taught Urdu for three hours during the three weeks, thus dispelling the gloomy foreboding that the Urdu characters cannot be learnt without much labour and difficulty. The result shows just the opposite. In spite of the rigorous work and heat and very simple food, only four persons lost in weight from 2 to 5 lbs. All others showed decisive gain.]

New Delhi, 29-4-'46

( From Harijanbandhu )

A REQUEST

Change of address to be effective for the week should please be intimated to us by Tuesday. Please quote the subscriber number with the intimation.

Please note that change of address cannot be effected twice within one month.

Subscribers are not enrolled for a period of less than six months.

TO AGENTS

I am glad to announce that the quota of paper sanctioned for the Harijan weeklies has been increased by Government. Hence, orders for more copies of all the three weeklies can now be entertained. Those agents who want to increase their number of copies can write to the office now. I may remind them that consequent increase in the sum of their deposits will have to be remitted to the office along with the orders.

Please refer to the 1st of the Agency terms. It has been found on experience that its working gives rise to many complications and much unnecessary correspondence. It is therefore amended as under :

1. The agent will have to deposit with us a sum sufficient to cover the cost of at least two months' copies required by him. Out of this amount a sum equivalent to one month's cost will be treated as reserved or fixed deposit. Every week the bill will be deducted from the other half, i.e. the current deposit, and on the sum of that amount being insufficient to cover the next week's copies, the supply of copies will be stopped at once.

Agents are requested to make the necessary arrangement according to the amended term immediately, as the new arrangement comes into force from the 1st of May. All agencies which do not make this arrangement before the next issue is out, will be treated as cancelled.

2-5-'46

J. DESAI

CULTURAL CONQUEST AND ROMAN SCRIPT

Shri S. A. Ayer of the Azad Hind Government came to discuss with Gandhiji the other day the question of issuing a news bulletin in Roman script for the I. N. A., as proposed by the Central I. N. A. Relief Committee. "The Committee are not enamoured of the Roman script," he observed. "They have accepted it only as a temporary expedient. Otherwise we shall have to print it in three different scripts — Hindi, Urdu, Tamil, and that would mean a lot of expenditure. Moreover it would only be a continuation of the old tradition," he added. "The men had got used to the Roman script while they were in the Indian Army and so retained it when they were operating in S. E. Asia." "You forget," replied Gandhiji "that you are not working in S. E. Asia today, but in India. May I ask if these men ever write to their wives and children in the Roman script?"

"Never," replied Shri Ayer. "They write one and all in Hindi, Urdu, Tamil or any of the other Indian scripts."

"This means," remarked Gandhiji, "that they all know one or the other Indian script. I could understand your wanting to adopt Roman script as a temporary makeshift if we had no script of our own. But to adopt Roman script for Hindustani which has got two acknowledged scripts is only a sign of the psychological conquest that the English have made over us. In order to conquer the English who had conquered you, you adopted the English garb, i. e. Roman script for your bulletins in S. E. Asia. You should have discarded this symbol of the cultural conquest and insisted on having your bulletin in two Indian scripts rather than in Roman. The latter was primarily adopted for the sake of the British officers and men who had to learn Hindustani in order to rule over us. They solved the difficulty presented by the permutations and combinations of the Urdu alphabet and tempted us by their typewriters, telegraph and printing machines which use Roman script. We succumbed. We may not hark back to the symbol of our cultural conquest when we are out to end India's age-long slavery in toto. When you served in the British army it was with the prospect of getting rewards in the form of decorations, comfortable pay and pensions, grants of land etc. But now you don't want such temptations. You serve only for the independence and honour of your country. You do not want the easy way."

"India will soon have independence. Do not think that there will be one script for Hindustani all at once. It will come when you and I have honestly and diligently learnt both the scripts — not before. That is the least price we have to pay for independence."

In support of his argument he cited the parallel of South Africa where they have everything in two languages. The Government gazette is published in two languages and so are the text books for use in schools. "And it is not called partition, but Union of South Africa. To maintain this union they have four capitals one for each province. That is the way of a free and freedom-loving people."

Shri Ayer agreed and said, "We shall have the Hindustani bulletin in Nagri and Urdu scripts, not in Roman."

New Delhi, 20-4-'46

PYARELAL

THE MONKEY NUISANCE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

People get weary of the trouble caused to them by monkeys. In their hearts they wish them dead. They are inwardly pleased if anyone kills them. At the same time they will oppose their slaughter. A friend who is well acquainted with the scriptures writes that monkeys ruin the crops, they even kidnap children and remove articles, eat and spoil fruit etc. Their number is daily increasing. I am asked as to what non-violence dictates in the matter.

My ahimsa is my own. I am not able to accept in its entirety the doctrine of non-killing of animals. I have no feeling in me to save the life of these animals who devour or cause hurt to man. I consider it wrong to help in the increase of their progeny. Therefore, I will not feed ants, monkeys or dogs. I will never sacrifice a man's life in order to save theirs.

Thinking along these lines I have come to the conclusion that to do away with monkeys where they have become a menace to the well-being of man is pardonable. Such killing becomes a duty. The question may arise as to why this rule should not also apply to human beings. It cannot because, however bad, they are as we are. Unlike the animal, God has given man the faculty of reason.

New Delhi, 25-4-'46

(From Harijansevak)

GANDHIJI'S PRESS STATEMENT

Gandhiji has issued the following statement to the Press:

Mr. Hoover's flying visit to India has excited considerable interest and possibly hope. Whilst all the help that America and other countries can send to India, struggling against starvation, must be welcome, my endeavour has been to find ways and means to make ourselves self-supporting. The moment people give way to panic, starvation is a certainty in spite of a continuous line of steamers offloading grain from outside on India's wharves. Conversely, every grain from abroad sent as a matter of duty to self-reliant India, honestly and manfully braving the threatening danger, will be twice blessed. Let Mr. Hoover's visit serve as a reminder to Government servants, monied men and grain merchants that they must think all the time of their duty to the masses. Nature never fails those who will help themselves.

New Delhi, 26-4-'46

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

CRIMINALS AND NON-VIOLENCE

Q. What would be the treatment meted out to criminals in Free India in the light of your non-violence?

A. In Independent India of the non-violent type, there will be crime but no criminals. They will not be punished. Crime is a disease like any other malady and is a product of the prevalent social system. Therefore, all crime including murder will be treated as a disease. Whether such an India will ever come into being is another question.

New Delhi, 28-4-'46

WHITED SEPULCHRES?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"I am a woman but feel I must write to you about this matter. About three months ago a man who said he was ...'s servant came here. I have always had a high opinion of the integrity of Congressmen and was therefore glad to meet him. I used to spin every day and he used to come to see me daily and call me daughter. I too began calling him uncle. One evening he brought a car and asked me if I had ever been in one and if not, would I not go with him for an outing? It never entered my head to suspect him and I acceded to his request. I was first taken to . . . where I was gagged and later we proceeded to a house in . . . For some days every effort was made to commit an outrage on me. I tried several times to escape but was always stopped with the threat of being shot. Who does not love life and I confess I was frightened. Then one day a wealthy merchant and Congress leader of . . . came and asked me to go and enjoy life with him in . . . My abductor was looking at me and laughing. I cannot describe in words the horrible behaviour of this scoundrel. There are others also implicated whose names I do not know, but the wealthy merchant gave Rs. 500/- to the old woman in charge of the house where I was kept. She tried to persuade me to go with him and told me that I would be kept in comfort.

"Later one day I was rescued by a friend of my father's with the help of the police."

I have received more than one such letter accusing some Congressmen of immorality. It would not be wisdom to believe that they are all untrue and ignore the complaint. It has never been claimed that every Congressman is a model of virtue. But it is a matter of pride that the public expect a high standard of morality from Congressmen. All kinds of immorality are prevalent among us. It is a reformer's duty to try to wean from error those who are justly accused of misbehaviour. There are limits to immorality, if any can be claimed to pass muster. If what has been related is true, every man has to ask himself how far he is justified in seeking to satisfy his lust at the expense of innocent girls.

New Delhi, 26-4-'46

(From Harijansevak)

CASTE CORROSION

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Soil corrosion eats up good soil. It is bad enough. Caste corrosion is worse, it eats up men and divides men from men. Letters continue to come from Christians, Parsis, naturally from Scheduled Castes and women. They require representation in the ministry. Provincial competition is already there. The makers of ministries are not free from the taint and even when they do not favour it, they will lose caste if they dare to do the right thing and restrict their choice to merit only. Democracy can only represent the average, if not less than the average. Therefore, a democratic institution to be pure has to attend to the all-round education of the humblest and the lowliest. It must take in its sweep all superstition and social abuse. In such a society there will be no Christian and non-Christian, there will be no distinction of sex. If best persons are women all ministers will belong to that sex, if Parsis they will be all Parsis. That good day may be far off. What is to be done in the meanwhile? Those who feel that they are left out should have patience and rise by dint of service and merit. Those who happen to be ministers should mete out even justice which must include extra effort to raise the neglected and downtrodden. They should make all feel at every step that they are servants, not masters of the nation.

New Delhi, 29-4-'46

	CONTENTS	PAGE
NON-VIOLENT
VOLUNTEER CORPS	... M. K. GANDHI	113
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	114
FOR WOMEN	... A. K.	115
CRUEL	... A. K.	115
INDEPENDENCE	... M. K. GANDHI	116
PRESS SUMMARY OF
MR. CHURCHILL'S SPEECH	...	116
GOSHALAS AND PINJRAPOLES	M. K. GANDHI	117
IDEAL FOR WOMEN	... S. N.	118
IGNORANT LEGISLATION	... S. N.	118
SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH AND
FOOD SHORTAGE	... S. N.	119
A LIGHT IN DARKNESS	... PYARELAL	120
SWARAJ THROUGH SPINNING	... M. K. GANDHI	121
MARCH OF CIVILIZATION	... M. K. GANDHI	121
KANU GANDHI'S CAMP	... M. K. GANDHI	122
A REQUEST	... J. DESAI	122
CULTURAL CONQUEST AND
ROMAN SCRIPT	... PYARELAL	123
THE MONKEY NUISANCE	... M. K. GANDHI	123
GANDHIJI'S PRESS STATEMENT		123
QUESTION BOX	... M. K. GANDHI	124
WHITED SEPULCHRES?	... M. K. GANDHI	124
CASTE CORROSION	... M. K. GANDHI	124

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 14]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, MAY 12, 1946

[ TWO ANNAS

A HARIJAN'S LETTER

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A Harijan friend complains bitterly about my article on sweepers' strike.

His first complaint is that I have given up the sweet name 'Harijan' and used 'Bhangi' instead. The criticism shows the sensitive nature of the correspondent. It was a Gujarati untouchable, in the first instance, who suggested the name 'Harijan' to me and I willingly adopted it. This does not, however, mean that a current word for any sub-caste may never be used. I count myself a Harijan and it pleases me to call myself a Bhangi among them, because that is the lowest caste of Harijans. When I stayed recently in the sweepers' quarters in Delhi, the Harijans there too complained against the use of the word 'Bhangi'. They suggested 'Mehtar'. I tried to make them understand that it mattered little as to which of the current words was used for the same occupation. In spite of being considered the lowest occupation, it was in fact the highest inasmuch as it protected health and they should be indifferent to the name. Whatever the origin of the word may be, 'Bhangi' is, in my opinion, another name for Shivji. Whether you call a sweeper a Mehtar or a Bhangi, like Shivji he brings health to man. The one brings it by keeping the home clean, the other cleanses the mind of man.

The second criticism is more serious. Prejudices are responsible for misunderstandings. If we take by force even that to which we are entitled, the action is likely to lead to a quarrel. We may not even be able to digest what we get by force. The strikers got what they did by coercion. At least, that is my belief. If my occupation is to keep latrines clean and I refused to do the work, can it be termed anything other than coercion? Of course, I am not bound to take up the job of cleaning latrines and I may be said to have every right to lay down my conditions of service. But according to my way of thinking, the laying down of conditions is not an absolute right. Even if such an absolute right would be permitted, it might not be proper to use it under certain circumstances. But I do not want to enter into the justification of this reasoning. I tried to show in my article the duties of Bhangis as well as of citizens. I have often said that every kind of injustice is meted out to Bhangis. I have no doubt that citizens do not fulfil their obligations to them.

Thus it is their duty to see that Harijan dwellings are built properly, the means employed for cleaning are decent, that they have a special working uniform given to them, that they and their children have facilities for education etc. These and other problems should be solved without loss of time. The Bhangis may not go on strike for lack of these amenities but it is up to all citizens to raise their voice on behalf of them.

Yet another criticism is directed against my suggestion of the use of the military to do sweepers' work. I do not see any wrong in what I said. I have re-read my article and am not willing to withdraw one single word of it. I do not regret having written as I did. I advise Harijan friends to read it in the proper spirit. If they do so, they will see that my feelings on their behalf have undergone no change.

Simla, 5-5-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

Notes

The Late Bhulabhai Desai

It was the heroism and travail of Bardoli that brought to public life men like Shri Bhulabhai Desai. He might otherwise have remained a distinguished Government servant and ended his career as a judge of the Bombay High Court. He reached the height of fame when his forensic talents resulted in the release of the I. N. A. prisoners. His son and daughter-in-law have in me, like many others, a co-sharer in their grief which, it is to be hoped, they will turn into joy by inheriting the deceased's love of the country's service, which alone makes life worth living.

Simla, 6-5-'46

Ramanavami Celebrations

"They get the best talent from the South at enormous cost for the sake of amusement. The artistes who preside are of questionable morals. All this at a religious festival." This is a condensation of a correspondent's letter. When a man begins a downward career, it is difficult to say where the deterioration will end. Intoxication of wealth is often as bad as that caused by liquor. The only way to stop this degradation of religious or for that matter any celebrations is for the public not to patronize them.

Simla, 2-5-'46

M. K. G.

THE SO-CALLED DECIMAL COINAGE

The Central Legislative Assembly having decided to circulate the Cent Bill for eliciting public opinion, as one, perhaps, partly responsible for influencing this decision, I owe it to the public to explain more fully my views about this measure.

I am conscious of the comparative simplicity of decimal arithmetic. Two facts must, however, be borne in mind in regard to this simplicity: (i) it is particularly available to calculations made on paper rather than to oral ones, and (ii) the cause of the simplicity is not the number ten, but the use of zero in representing every-tenth number. If the ancient inventor of numerical digits had arranged objects in groups of, say, eight or sixteen instead of ten and utilized zero for representing every eighth or sixteenth number, all the advantages of decimal reckoning would have accrued to that arrangement as well. It was rather unfortunate that he did not do so. For, in practice, it is easier to divide a thing into halves, quarters, eighths, etc. than into one-fifths, one-tenths etc. A child of seven would be able to divide a piece of string into 2, 4, 8 or even 16 equal parts with greater ease and without a measuring rod than an educated adult could divide it into 1/10th or 1/5th.

But as this is not a thesis for bringing about a revolution in Mathematics, I shall not dilate further upon this. We have to accept the decimal system as an irrevocably established custom as long as the present human race lasts, and make as best use of it as possible. As far as multiples are concerned, we find that all the world over it is used by the learned and the ignorant alike. Thus all of them say, ten or twenty or hundred rupees, maunds, seers, feet, yards etc. But when it comes to the sub-divisions of a unit, it is all anarchy. There is, however, a negative peculiarity about this anarchy. Until the invention of the scientific Metrical System, nowhere do we find a general tendency to sub-divide a unit into tenths. Where it is not a half or a quarter, it is 1/3rd, 1/6th, 1/12th, 1/28th and anything but 1/10th. It seems that the untrained intellect of man has never been able to conceive of 1/10th, although the decimal fraction itself has been used in mathematical calculations for several centuries now.

I have been reminded that India has the honour of inventing the decimal. India should also be credited with the honour of inventing the chauthai (quarteral) system as well. In the midst of anarchy in respect of sub-divisions, she has tried to establish some order by introducing the quarteral system as nearly as possible in the various tables of measurement. Thus the rupee has been progressively divided into 4 quarters, 16 annas or 64 pice; the tola into 32 wals; the seer into 16 chhataks. When a smaller unit had to be related to a larger one of the same order, the quarteral system has often been combined with the decimal one. Thus the seer is made of 80 tolas, the maund of 40 seers, the khandi of 20 maunds and so on.

Progressive halving being obviously easy, it suggests itself more naturally to the human mind than decimalization. Even the author of the Cent Coinage Bill has not been able to forget the half and the quarter rupee. If the decimal system were applied to its logical perfection, there should have been a proposal to sub-divide the rupee into 10 dasais (decemfids) and each dasai into 10 cents. The nomenclature "half-rupee" should have given place to 5 dasais or 50 cents, and the quarter-rupee should have disappeared as unharmonious. Coins of 1 and 2 dasais would have been more regular. But the proposal is to keep the half and the quarter rupee unchanged. Therefore, in spite of the title "decimal coinage" given to the measure, the proposal virtually amounts to one of dividing the quarter-rupee into 25 equal parts instead of the present 4 annas, 16 pice or 48 pies.

I do not blame the author for this logical imperfection. For, it shows that he was mindful of the necessity of not sacrificing practical convenience to logical perfection. On the same practical ground I urge for the search of a better solution than the proposed cent. I have pointed out in my former criticisms on this bill, how during the transition period when both the anna and the cent coins will circulate side by side, whenever a person was obliged to pay partly in cents and partly in the old coins, he would always have to pay a little more than the exact amount. I have also pointed out how the re-pricing of retail articles in terms of the cent would tend to make them more costly automatically. I should also point out that to the illiterate villager — man or woman — who cannot often count up to more than twenty and hardly ever up to one hundred, prices in terms of, say, 35 cents, 48 cents, 72 cents etc. will be extremely puzzling. He can understand and know how to pay  $5\frac{1}{2}$  annas,  $7\frac{1}{2}$  as.,  $11\frac{1}{2}$  and so on, but not the other figures, which are very nearly their equivalents. He can also add up these amounts orally and know the total in terms of rupees, annas and quarter annas. But he cannot, unaided, be able to add up the cents. These difficulties will disappear with the spread of education, but they are not so trivial as could be ignored just at present.

But I realize fully that all these arguments may still fail to satisfy the eager theoretician and industrialist, and their influence might prevail. Nor am I myself blind to the necessity of an advance towards decimalization to suit the requirements of science and modern business. Some way, therefore, must be found for meeting these requirements, without causing inconvenience or loss to the humble citizen. With this end, I shall make some constructive suggestions in my next article.

K. G. Mashruwala

[Shri K. G. Mashruwala's note is a fairly conclusive argument to show that there should be no hurry over the proposed change. Let such things await a full-fledged national representative government. Simla, 3-5-'46 M. K. G.]

USEFUL HINTS

[The following excerpts are taken from Prof. Kumarappa's notes. M. K. G.]

CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES

Co-operative societies are ideally suited organizations, not only for developing village industries, but also for promoting group efforts by the villagers. A multi-purpose village society can serve a very useful purpose in a variety of ways such as:

1. Stocking of raw materials for industries, and food grains needed by the village people.
2. Marketing of village products and distributing the requirements of the people.
3. Distribution of seeds, improved implements and tools, manures such as bonemeal, flesh, fish manure, oilcakes, green manure seeds etc.
4. To maintain a common stud bull for the area.
5. To stand between the Government and the people in the matter of collection and payment of taxes etc.

Much of the wastage caused to food grains in transport and handling, and the expenses of collecting food grains to a central place and redistributing them again to the villages can be eliminated through the agency of a co-operative society which is a very reliable medium both from the government as well as from the public point of view. If stocks of grain are held by co-operative societies in villages, the remuneration of local officials can be conveniently paid partly in kind and this may facilitate the much desired system of collecting revenue also in kind.

AGRICULTURE

The production of crops should be controlled keeping two considerations in mind. (1) The locality must try to produce its own food requirements and raw materials required for primary necessities of life in preference to commercial crops. (2) It must try to produce raw materials suitable for village industries rather than for factories, for example, instead of growing thick rinded sugar-cane or long staple cotton as demanded by factories, soft rinded sugar-cane as can be crushed by village kollus for gur-making and short staple cotton as required for hand-spinning should be grown. The surplus land can be utilized to supplement crops needed by surrounding districts. Land utilized for sugar-cane of the factory requirements, tobacco, jute and other money crops should be eliminated or reduced to the minimum. In order to make the farmers adopt this policy heavy dues or excess land revenue should be levied on land used to raise money crops and that too after a licence has been obtained. This will give the farmers no incentive to go in for money crops in preference. On the whole the prices of the agricultural products should be made to compare favourably with those of industrial products.

Commercial crops such as tobacco, jute, sugar-cane, etc. are doubly wasteful. They reduce the food production for man as well as for animals which would otherwise have got their fodder from food crops.

The supply of gur which may be reduced with the decline of sugar-cane crops of the factory varieties can be made good by the production of gur from palm trees now tapped for toddy or from those which are found or can be grown in waste lands in sufficient numbers as practically to meet our demand in this respect. The best land put under sugar-cane today can then be utilized for the production of cereals, fruits and vegetables which India needs so badly today.

IRRIGATION

The need for providing irrigation facilities to all the villages cannot be emphasized too greatly. This is the foundation upon which agriculture depends for its progress, in the absence of which it remains a gamble. A drive for sinking wells, enlarging and dredging tanks and building canals has to be launched. The power engines used in rice and flour mills now can be acquired by the Governments to pump up water from tube wells. No proper manuring can be done without water facilities, as manure in the absence of water is harmful.

(To be continued)

Simla, 3-5-'46

GANDHIJI'S PRESS STATEMENT

Pressmen are inquiring already why my large party is going back. This is a personal question. I would rather avoid answering it, but in these days of publicity and speculation the question cannot be evaded. The reason is purely moral, if it may not be described as spiritual. My task as a self-appointed adviser to all the parties concerned is the most delicate at the present moment. The Simla venue was declared all of a sudden. It dawned on me that if I was to go to Simla, I must go without the usual party, even though 'Harijan' work might suffer. Had I succeeded in carrying conviction to the members of my party, they would have remained behind in Delhi. The time within which the decision was to be taken was only a few hours on the 1st instant. They were anxious for my well-being. The whole moral purpose would be defeated, if I did not carry their mind with me. They, therefore, came to Simla. But the matter was still agitating me. So I conferred with Pyarelal yesterday. He felt convinced that I should be left free to put myself solely in God's keeping, if I was to work under as much detachment as was possible for me. The best part of the afternoon was devoted to prayerful discussion that the party should go back to the heat of Delhi and await me there to rejoin me when I descended. This is the sole reason without reservation.

Simla, 4-5-'46

By M. K. Gandhi

The Story of My Experiments with Truth

Price Rs. 6, Postage 13 Annas

Satyagraha in South Africa

(Companion Volume to the above)

Rs. 4-8-0, Postage 13 Annas

By S. C. Das Gupta

Cow in India

Part I Rs. 10 Postage 15 Annas

Part II Rs. 7 Postage 10 Annas

Home & Village Doctor

Price Rs. 10, Postage 15 Annas

HARIJAN

May 12

1946

CERTAIN QUESTIONS

( By M. K. Gandhi )

A London friend has put seven questions on the working of non-violence. Though similar questions have been dealt with in 'Young India' or 'Harijan', it is profitable to answer them in a single article, if perchance the answers may prove helpful.

Q.1 Is it possible for a modern State (which is essentially based on force) to offer non-violent resistance for countering internal as well as external forces of disorder? Or is it necessary that people wanting to offer non-violent resistance should first of all divest themselves of state-authority and place themselves vis-a-vis the opponent entirely in a private capacity?

A. It is not possible for a modern State based on force, non-violently to resist forces of disorder, whether external or internal. A man cannot serve God and Mammon, nor be 'temperate and furious' at the same time. It is claimed that a State can be based on non-violence, i.e. it can offer non-violent resistance against a world combination based on armed force. Such a State was Ashoka's. The example can be repeated. But the case does not become weak even if it be shown that Ashoka's State was not based on non-violence. It has to be examined on its merits.

Q.2 Do you think that it would be possible for a Congress government to deal with foreign aggression or internal riots in an entirely non-violent manner?

A. It is certainly possible for a Congress government to deal with "foreign aggression or internal riots" in a non-violent manner. That the Congress may not share my belief is quite possible. If the Congress changes its course, the change will prove nothing save that the non-violence hitherto offered was of the weak and that the Congress has no faith in State non-violence.

Q.3 Does not the knowledge that the opponent is wedded to non-violence often encourage the bully?

A. The bully has his opportunity when he has to face non-violence of the weak. Non-violence of the strong is any day stronger than that of the bravest soldier fully armed or a whole host.

Q.4 What policy would you advocate if a section of the Indian people tries to enforce by sword a selfish measure which is not only repugnant to others but also basically unjust? While it is possible for an unofficial organization to offer non-violent resistance in such a case, is it also possible for the government of the day to do so?

A. The question assumes a case which can never exist. A non-violent State must be broad-based on the will of an intelligent people, well able to know its mind and act up to it. In such a State the assumed section can only be negligible. It can never stand against the deliberate will of the overwhelming majority represented by the State. The government of the day is not outside the people. It is the will of the overwhelming majority. If it is expressed non-violently, it cannot be a majority of one but nearer 99 against 1 in a hundred.

Q.5 Is not non-violent resistance by the militarily strong more effective than that by the militarily weak?

A. This is a contradiction in terms. There can be no non-violence offered by the militarily strong. Thus, Russia in order to express non-violence has to discard all her power of doing violence. What is true is that if those, who were at one time strong in armed might, change their mind, they will be better able to demonstrate their non-violence to the world and, therefore, also to their opponents. Those who are strong in non-violence will not mind whether they are opposed by the militarily weak people or the strongest.

Q.6 What should be the training and discipline for a non-violent army? Should not certain aspects of conventional military training form a part of the syllabus?

A. A very small part of the preliminary training received by the military is common to the non-violent army. These are discipline, drill, singing in chorus, flag hoisting, signalling and the like. Even this is not absolutely necessary and the basis is different. The positively necessary training for a non-violent army is an immovable faith in God, willing and perfect obedience to the chief of the non-violent army and perfect inward and outward co-operation between the units of the army.

Q.7 Is it not better under existing circumstances that countries like India and England should maintain full military efficiency while resolving to give non-violent resistance a reasonable trial before taking any military step?

A. The foregoing answers should make it clear that under no circumstance can India and England give non-violent resistance a reasonable chance whilst they are both maintaining full military efficiency. At the same time it is perfectly true that all military powers carry on negotiations for peaceful adjustment of rival disputes. But here we are not discussing preliminary peace parleys before appealing to the arbitrament of war. We are discussing a final substitute for armed conflict called war, in naked terms mass murder.

Simla, 2-5-'46

IS KHADI TOTTERING?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

To those who have no faith Khadi is tottering. In reality it is gaining ground. From being the poor man's staff of life, it is trying to become the non-violent means of gaining independence. The difficulty is fairly clearly expressed in the following paragraphs from a letter from Tamil Nad.

"The A. I. S. A. is faced with two problems now. The one is to keep on the Khadi production on the present methods. The other is to give reorientation to our activity related to artisans and their villages where we serve.

"The commercial production as it is, is seriously affected in the last few months owing to competition of the uncertified merchants in Khadi. The uncertified merchants buy the yarn from our spinners who spin with better cotton, supplied by us. They buy Khadi woven by the weavers out of our yarn and sell it with profit. They go to our weavers' homes and buy the Khadi woven for us by giving extra wages and yarn equivalent for the Khadi. The weavers part with our Khadi as they get extra wages and yarn at their own homes. The Khadi thus bought is sold as special Khadi with higher prices.

"There are more than fifty uncertified Khadi dealers in this area, who are said to produce about Rs. 7 lakhs worth of uncertified Khadi monthly. Among these are Congressmen also, who occupy places in the Congress Executive.

"We are not able to influence the artisans against being exploited by the uncertified merchants though the former have their deposits with us. They simply say that they are not able to resist the temptation of higher wages for inferior labour and with no conditions that we impose with regard to quality and their wearing Khadi, etc. The spinners are given besides an inferior cotton called bonda by the uncertified dealers which require, no carding. This is mill waste available for about three-fourths the price of good cotton. The yarn spun is only in sheafs without hanking. As this is simpler the spinners prefer this cotton. Because higher wages are paid for indifferent labour and no deposits are taken for Khadi from spinners and as there is no insistence upon quality of yarn etc. there is a tendency on the part of the spinners to work under the uncertified merchants.

"This tendency among the artisans is a great impediment and obstacle in approaching them with our ideals of village reconstruction through the Charkha."

The present method of Khadi production has to be sacrificed if it hinders re-orientation. This requires faith and the alertness which faith brings. Faith never accrues to the lazy.

Uncertified Khadi dealers are a powerful menace to Khadi whether from the standpoint of the poor man or of non-violence. For, the dealer knows only his own pocket and nothing else matters to him. Of course, he goes to the weaver and the spinner and makes all kinds of promises, not knowing that if he killed the A. I. S. A. he would kill himself.

The pity of it all is that Congressmen become willing tools in the hands of these uncertified dealers. They have brought into being an association of specialists. Yet they do not know that they are willingly or unwillingly killing the goose that lays the golden egg. They have a right to do so in any case, more so if they do not believe in Khadi as the non-violent instrument of Swaraj.

It has been suggested to me that the policy of the A. I. S. A. can be changed only after consultation with Congressmen. This is wrong in the nature of things. The A. I. S. A. is composed of Congressmen. Though created by the Congress, it is an autonomous body. It can be disowned by the Congress at any time but while it is owned it must be trusted to do the right thing in terms of Swaraj. Part payment in yarn is a potent cause of worry to Congressmen. This should not be so, if they believe that Khadi is a symbol of non-violence and all that it implies. If such is not the belief the clause about compulsory wear of Khadi should be given up.

Moreover, Khadi furnishes the acid test of public honesty. It is a great effort to find the best way of inducing honesty in public dealings, for it means coming in close and selfless touch with the millions of men and women in the villages.

The upshot of it all is that workers like the writer have to carry on their work with full faith in their mission and leave the result in the hands of God. Simla, 3-5-'46

THE CHARITY OF THE RICH

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The following is the gist of what a friend writes:

"You accept many donations from the wealthy. There can be no doubt that the money is well spent. But the question is as to whether these donations should be accepted for your work. The donors certainly get a name thereby and among them might even be black-marketeers. Can such charity benefit the poor?"

The question really boils down to whether donations are in themselves wrong. I have no doubt about their being so in my own mind. But the world works differently. The author of the Gita has said that all undertakings are tainted. Therefore, all action should be performed with complete detachment. The Ishopanishad begins by saying that all action must be preceded by a full surrender of everything to God. It must, however, be admitted that even if everyone ceased to receive charity, the rich would not cease to amass wealth. It is also a fact that some rich people are stingy enough never to give anything in charity. Some even give money for nefarious purposes. Therefore, all that one can say is that certain principles should be observed in the matter of receiving charity. Not one pie should be taken for selfish ends and all should be received with God as witness.

I do, however, hold that it would be wrong to receive money from any group or individual whom the recipient considers to be unworthy. The discussion is naturally relevant only for those who are troubled by conscientious scruples.

Simla, 5-5-'46

(From Harijansevak)

INTROSPECTION

The following is the gist of Gandhiji's Hindustani speech at the evening prayer gathering on 2-5-'46—the day of his arrival at Simla.

I did not know that I would have to come to Simla this time. If we have faith in God we simply would not care to know beforehand how He may dispose of us. It is enough for us to hold ourselves perfectly in readiness for whatever happens. We are not allowed to know what tomorrow has in store for us and our best conceived plans have a knack very often of going awry. The highest wisdom therefore is never to worry about the future but to resign ourselves entirely to His Will.

I do not propose to say anything here about the Cabinet Mission. And I would like you too, on your part, to repress your curiosity about it. Let us all mutely watch and pray. As I told the people who attended the evening prayer gathering at Delhi yesterday, the Cabinet Mission will not be able to go beyond what is warranted by our strength. We shall be fools to think otherwise. Even if they tried to go beyond, it would only cause us surfeit and we would not be able to take advantage of it. Therefore, even if the Mission should prove infructuous I would not blame them for it. Rather I would blame ourselves for our weakness. It would give us a measure of our strength. By strength I mean non-violent strength. We are pledged to gain Swaraj non-violently.

Many people today share the belief, and I am one of them, that this time the Cabinet Mission will do the right thing by India and that the British power would finally and completely be withdrawn. Time alone will show how far this belief is justified.

Now to take up the question I want to talk to you about. The first mantra of the Ishopanishad says that it is man's duty to surrender his all to God in the first instance. There is nothing which he can call his own. Having made the surrender man is to take out of it what he may require for his legitimate needs but not a jot more. He must not covet what belongs to others. Take my instance. I have been housed here in a palatial building. For fear of your embarrassing affection I had to seek Government's hospitality and they put me up here. That however does not mean that since the Government have placed a big bungalow at my disposal I am free to make use of the whole of it. Tolstoy, in one of his inimitable parables, has answered the question, how much land a man requires. The Devil tempts a man by granting him a boon that all the land that he can circumscribe by running around shall be his. The man runs and runs, goaded by his greed and in the end when the sun is just sinking below the horizon, he reaches back the starting point only to drop down dead. Six feet of the earth is all the land that he requires for his burial. If, therefore, I were to delude myself with the belief that I needed the whole of this bungalow and took possession of it, I would be set down as a fool. Only a perverse nature can interpret the verse to mean that after making a ceremony of offering everything to God one can indulge oneself in the good things of life to an unlimited extent. That would be a travesty of its true meaning. I would far rather like to see a man dressed in old, mended clothes than in gaudy new ones. To wear torn clothes is a sign of laziness and therefore shame, but to wear patched clothes proclaims your poverty or renunciation and industry. Similarly, if someone gives me Rs. 25,000/- and I spend it on my person I am a robber and thief. I can use only enough for my bare needs. That would be the teaching of Ishopanishad.

Simla, 3-5-'46

PYARELAL

WEEKLY LETTER

THE DILEMMA

The late Shri Mahadev Desai often used to say that to be with Gandhiji was like sitting on the top of a volcano which might erupt at any time. Little did any of us dream, when Gandhiji decided to go to Simla, that within fortyeight hours of his reaching there, he would be sending his whole entourage packing back to the plains of Delhi. He has a nature extraordinarily sensitive to the atmosphere around him. Reverses and defeats he takes with unperturbed calm as the workings of the Divine Will, but the slightest taint of untruth in the atmosphere, or even a suspicion of it, oppresses him. He had accepted the delicate role of adviser to the Cabinet Mission and ourselves. But there was something in the general situation—something uncanny which he could sense but not quite define—which made him feel extremely uneasy. And as is his wont on such occasions, believing as he does in the principle of "as with yourself so with the universe", he began by subjecting himself to fierce self-introspection and overhaul. If he was square with himself, he knew, it would be all well with the world.

THE TEST

Thanks to the burden of editing three—now four—Harijan weeklies and attending to the growing volume of correspondence and other work he has nowadays to keep a rather large staff with him. On Tuesday last he asked me to set down the barest minimum of personnel that we would require to accompany us to Simla. This I did. But it did not quite satisfy him.

Rajkumari Amrit Kaur, our unfailing host at Simla on the previous occasion, felt extremely unhappy as Manor Ville had only limited accommodation and a number of her domestic staff were sick or on leave. And then there was the Mahatmic handicap—the necessity of protecting him from the embarrassing affection of the crowds. Here was a dilemma. The Government had thoughtfully placed at his disposal a big bungalow at Simla and made transport arrangements for himself and his party. Should he avail himself of these without stint? His faith in God and his detachment, he felt, were on trial. Further reduction in the staff seemed hardly feasible. But, did he hope to cope with the situation through unaided human effort? And if he was to be merely an instrument for carrying out the Divine

Will, were outward trappings necessary for his purpose? "We are up against heavy odds. There is so much corruption, falsehood and deceit all around. How can I cut my way through it and come out of it unscathed, except by the use of the sharp axe of detachment," he said to himself. He put his dilemma before the party. "In this hour of trial I wish to put myself entirely in God's hands and proceed to Simla all alone. But I do not want to do so unless I can carry you with me. To force my will upon you would be the negation of detachment." The party felt staggered. They could not take upon themselves the tremendous responsibility of letting him go altogether unattended. After a hurried deliberation they communicated their unanimous decision to me to be placed before him. It was: "Let him take with him three only, or you alone, and we will be satisfied. But he cannot be allowed to go all alone. We cannot think of it." But Gandhiji was adamant. "None or all" was his laconic reply. "Faith cannot be divided. You cannot trust me to God in part." As the poet says, "Want of faith in aught is want of faith in all."

AN ACT OF FAITH

But there was no time then for further consideration and so the whole party trekked up to Simla.

Gandhiji's self-introspection however continued and found vent in his after-prayer discourse on the first day of his arrival at Simla when he took up the first verse of the Ishopanishad as his text. "Surrender all to Him and then, out of His, use for His service whatever is absolutely necessary—not a jot more." Could he be said to be acting according to the Upanishadic teaching while he surrounded himself by his entourage? "All must be surrendered to Him in the first instance and then His work carried on with whatever material may come to you through His grace." The preliminary stripping was a necessity. He again broached the proposition to us. "Unless the Lord build the house, they build in vain who build it." Why not let me take my chance with God? "It was not too late yet to perform that act of faith, he told us. "Now retire within yourself and seek the answer there. Do not consult others. And let me know the result," he said to me.

Later in the day he poured out his soul to Agatha Harrison. "The world will laugh at me and say: 'Here is a theatrical man.' I do not mind it. When one is used to human aids it is not easy to tear oneself away from them all of a sudden. I am very conservative in my feelings. I have spent half a day in searching for a small bit of pencil which had been with me for a long time. I could not reconcile myself to its loss. And here I have to detach myself from my entire surroundings and send away a party whom I have trained and seasoned for my work for years—no easy job.

"It should not be so. All should be same to one who has surrendered his all to God. My Ramanam will be vain repetition and I would be a wretched guide for the Congress, the Cabinet Mission and others, if I allowed that feeling of attachment to weigh with me. If they follow my advice it might be like a plunge in darkness. As seasoned politicians they cannot afford to take that risk. My guidance must, therefore, be unalloyed.

"If you are surrounded by your family, they divide your attention in however small or subtle a measure. I wish in this crisis to give my undivided self to God."

"You feel you have to deal with an extraordinarily acute crisis?" asked Agatha Harrison.

A DOUBLE CRISIS

"Yes, there is a crisis within a crisis. Not only is there the outward crisis, which you see, but a crisis within myself," replied Gandhiji.

"It remains to be seen how I come out of the test," he continued. "So far people around me had attended to every little thing for me. If anything went wrong they were responsible. From tomorrow I shall have to do all that myself and blame myself only, if anything goes wrong. With all that I must feel at ease with myself. I shall have to watch myself. It will be a great thing if I survive that detachment and feel the inner joy—not start running high blood pressure. It is a big experiment in my life and a necessary stage in my spiritual growth."

What was one to say before this moral passion?

"Then felt I like some watcher of the skies

When a new planet swims into his ken,

Or like stout Cortez when with eagle eyes

He stared at the Pacific—and all his men

Look'd at each other with a mild surmise—

Silent upon a peak in Darien."

SURRENDER

Mystics and seers have a way of their own. It is the same all the world over. One seemed almost to hear the voice of Thomas a Kempis across the centuries.

"O Lord, I stand much in need of yet greater grace, if I ought to reach that place, where no man nor any creature shall be a hindrance unto me. For as long as anything holdeth me back, I cannot freely fly to Thee."

and again,

"Unless too a man be disentangled from all creatures, he cannot freely attend unto divine things."

*

*

*

"And unless a man be elevated in spirit, and freed from all creatures, and wholly united unto God, whatsoever he knoweth, and whatsoever he hath, is of no great weight."

*

*

*

"And whatsoever is not God, is nothing, and ought to be accounted as nothing."

What right had we puny creatures to hold him down in his upward flight? It would have been vain conceit on our part to think that he would be handicapped for want of our assistance. I surrendered. "It will be as you wish", I told him. "We shall be returning to Delhi by the first available train."

I communicated my decision to the Sardar. I wondered what he would have to say. I confess I felt a bit nervous. But he only said, "You are right. We may not always be able to follow him in his upward flight or even to fully grasp his reasoning. But we have no right to stand in his way."

Simla, 4-5-46

PYARELAL

SEEKING BLESSINGS

Before starting for Simla, Gandhiji revisited the super-octogenarian of Indian nationalism at 5, Canning Street, to take leave of him and his blessings for his mission. Badsha Khan Abdul Gaffar Khan accompanied him. It was Gandhiji's day of silence, being Monday and he had, therefore, to communicate by writing only. As before, Malaviyaji was reclining in his bed. But he looked fresher than on the previous visit. In reply to Gandhiji's question as to what he proposed to do since the venue of the Cabinet Mission talks was going to be shifted to Simla, Malaviyaji said, he would be returning to Benares. That relieved Gandhiji as he was half afraid lest in his irrepressible enthusiasm this enfant terrible should decide to venture up the heights of Simla. That would be courting disaster at his age and in his present state of health.

"How long are you to continue to worry over the country's affairs?" Gandhiji asked him, marvelling at his perennial freshness.

"So long as the country's affairs continue to cause worry," he replied with a merry twinkle in his eyes.

"Won't you leave something to a youth like myself," scribbled out Gandhiji on another slip of paper and added, "It will make me even younger."

"This young man," replied Malaviyaji in an audible whisper, his eyes beaming at his visitor, "is going to remain young for many a day yet."

But Gandhiji was determined not to be put off so easily. As in the case of Gurudev he was eager to take upon himself Malaviyaji's burdens too, if the latter would allow it.

"You can entrust any of your burdens to me," he told him. "The only condition is that you must cease worrying and bless me with some of your strength."

"The name of God is the strength of our strength," replied Malaviyaji.

"That is true. The recitation of Ramanam is there all the time. But wherefrom shall I bring your learning? I am not flattering. I have neither your erudition nor your knowledge of the Mahabharata and the Bhagawata lore."

"But you have God's name which is the quintessence of all knowledge. Is it not?"

"That is true, but all the same I do feel jealous of your learning. But now you must get well and make use of all your learning to that end."

"I will get well," replied Malaviyaji.

At this stage Pandit Radhakant told Gandhiji that he had read out his article on Vanaspati Ghee, which had appeared in 'Harijan', to his father and it had pleased him immensely.

"It is a national menace, this spread of vegetable ghee on the one hand, and the slaughter of the cows on the other. Between the two the vitality of the people is being sapped. I feel so happy over what you have done and are doing for the milk supply," commented Malaviyaji.

Gandhiji agreed with him as regards the menace of the vegetable ghee and added: "My efforts to solve the milk problem, of course continue, but success is not possible without the full cooperation of our commercial and trading class. But I must now take leave of you."

Malaviyaji smiled leave and blessings in reply, making namaskars at the same time. As Gandhiji rose from his seat he (Malaviyaji) slowly recited the following verse:

"Forget not yourself,

"But continue to spread your fragrance wherever you are,

"Even like the rose."

That was Malaviyaji's way of giving blessings.
Simla, 4-5-'46

PYARELAL

A SURE AID

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A correspondent suggests three aids to self-control, of which two are outward and one is inward. The inward help he describes as follows:

"A third thing that helps towards self-control is Ramanam. This has got the terrible power of converting one's sex desire into a divine longing for the Lord. In fact it seems to me from experience that the sex desire present in almost all human beings is a form of Kundalini Shakti left to its own natural growth and development. Just as man has fought against nature ever since creation, so also he should fight against this natural tendency of his Kundalini and see that it acts upward instead of downward. Once the Kundalini begins to act upward its direction is towards the brain and gradually will it dawn upon such a man that he and all whom he sees around him are but different manifestations of the same Lord."

There is no doubt that Ramanam is the surest aid. If recited from the heart it charms away every evil thought, and evil thought gone, no corresponding action is possible. The outward helps are all useless if the mind is weak. They are superfluous if the mind is pure. This must not be taken to mean that a pure-minded man can take all the liberties and still keep safe. Such a man simply will not take any liberties with himself. His whole life will be an infallible testimony to the inward purity. The Gita truly says that mind makes the man and unmakes him. Milton paraphrases the same thought when he says:

"The mind is its own place and in itself can make a heaven of hell and hell of heaven."

Simla, 2-5-'46

CONTENTS		PAGE
A HARIJAN'S LETTER	... M. K. GANDHI	125
THE SO-CALLED DECIMAL COINAGE	... K. G. MASHRUWALA	126
USEFUL HINTS	... M. K. G.	127
GANDHIJ'S PRESS STATEMENT		127
CERTAIN QUESTIONS	... M. K. GANDHI	128
IS KHADI TOTTERING?	... M. K. GANDHI	129
THE CHARITY OF THE RICH	... M. K. GANDHI	129
INTROSPECTION	... PYARELAL	130
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	130
SEEKING BLESSINGS	... PYARELAL	132
A SURE AID	... M. K. GANDHI	132
NOTES:
THE LATE BHULABHAI DESAI	M. K. G.	125
RAMANAVAMI CELEBRATIONS	M. K. G.	125

HARIJAN

16 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 15]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, MAY 19, 1946

[THREE ANNAS

Notes

Non-violence and Khadi

The Congress constitution is undergoing a radical change. The supreme change that is desirable for the sake of avoiding untruth and hypocrisy is to remove the words "legitimate and peaceful" from the first article of the Congress constitution as also the clause about Khadi. Experience shows that the people who form the bulk of Congressmen are not wedded either to truth and non-violence or to Khadi. As an ardent lover of truth and non-violence and Khadi as their symbol, I make bold to suggest that these clauses should go. It will be open to anyone to be truthful and non-violent and to wear Khadi if he or she chooses to. Only there will be no deception practised on India or the world. Paradoxical as it may appear we shall be more healthful, more non-violent and better Khadi lovers with the suggested amendment than without. It should be remembered that I myself had at one time moved the removal of these clauses. I was glad I was defeated. It was wrong to be glad. I shall be sorry if my suggestion is rejected even now. Let it not be said of us that we prize hypocrisy above truth.

Cocktail Parties

We seem to be on the eve of attaining independence! Should we ape bad European manners and customs and still prize independence? It would be a sad day for India and the world, if the price we are to pay for independence is cocktail parties and the like. What do the famishing millions know of such parties? Let it not be said of us that our monied men were gay whilst those from whom they made money were famishing for food.

Harijan Cooks

A correspondent suggests that at the next session of the Congress all the cooks should be Harijans and to that end a corps of Harijan cooks should be trained in the observance of cleanliness and the art of cooking scientifically and as behoves a poor country like ours. He would have this privilege and duty given to the Congressmen in the province in which the Congress session is to be held. After the session these cooks should be taken over by those Congressmen who can afford it and keep cooks. Any suggestion like this which shows in practice that untouchability is a thing of the past is to be welcomed. I would only add that Congressmen who endorse it need not wait for the session. They should from now take up Harijans not merely as their cooks but have them in all other capacities.

What is more, let those who can afford it take Harijans in their families as their own children and give them proper training. All this can only happen if men and women are sincere in their professions and if the truth has gone home that under the garb of religion Hinduism is said to have consigned to untouchability their own kith and kin for no fault of theirs.

Simla, 8-5-'46

Valmiki of Simla

Readers must know that Valmiki is another word for bhangi. Their living quarters in Simla are deplorable. No one bothers about them. Rajkumari has tried her best for them for years but how much can a single person do? I am unable to get as far and see things for myself, but I requested Badshah Khan who is staying with me to go there. He gives me a piteous account of their hovels. Some of the *Valmiki*s have been to see me and have placed other woeful complaints before me. I feel that if in the first instance their living quarters were rebuilt many of their other complaints too would be put right. It is the bounden duty of the public and the Municipality of Simla to remove this evil as soon as they can from their midst. They can be no cleaner than the least clean among them.

Simla, 13-5-'46

(From Harijansevak)

To Correspondents

My daily post may be said to have increased fourfold since the 'Harijan' weeklies started. It is impossible to answer every letter. Every communication is read but not by me. If I attempted to do so I would be unable to render any service. My staff put before me only what I should see. Much of the post does not merit replies, but questions of public interest are answered in 'Harijan'. Personal correspondence has to be rigidly restricted. I receive a large number of requests for blessings on the occasion of marriages which I am hesitant to send. I have already stated publicly that my blessings should be asked for only such marriages where one of the contracting parties is a Harijan. But in reality where is the need for blessings? Those marriages which are undertaken for the sake of joint service carry their own blessings. Those entered upon for self-satisfaction are wholly unworthy of any. In any event, in these days of famine, no money should be spent on feasts and enjoyment. Weddings will continue, but is it not possible for the event to take place quietly and without fuss?

Simla, 6-5-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

M. K. G.

WITH THE SOUTH AFRICAN DELEGATION

South Africa is the cradle of Satyagraha as a political weapon. It is also the place, thanks to the weapon of non-violence, where the Indian community have so far been able successfully to resist the attempts of the Whites to squeeze them out. Faced with the renewed menace in the form of the Land Tenure Legislation which has been passed into law, it has again resolved to resort to the weapon of Satyagraha.

A Delegation on behalf of the South African Indian community has been in this country for some time past to enlist the co-operation and active support of their compatriots in their impending struggle for the right to exist as a self-respecting community. It includes some veteran Satyagrahi soldiers who took part in the Satyagraha fight under Gandhiji and which closed with the Gandhi-Smuts Agreement. It is headed by Shri Sorabjee Rustomjee, the son of the late Parsi Rustomjee, with whose name the readers of Gandhiji's 'Story of My Experiments with Truth' and the history of 'Satyagraha in South Africa' must be familiar.

STRATEGY OF SATYAGRAHA

The Delegation saw Gandhiji more than once. The last time it was in the Sweepers' Colony at Delhi. They sought Gandhiji's advice as to the starting of a successful Satyagraha. In the course of the conversation Gandhiji remarked on the presence of divisions among them. They admitted divisions but argued that they were there even in Gandhiji's time.

"The difference between then and now," explained Gandhiji "is this, that in those days the blacklegs became isolated after a time and it was possible to hold monster meetings everywhere. Parsi Rustomjee went among the indentured labourers and in the final struggle they rose like one man. Repeat that history today and you will win. Do not repeat it and you will fail. Do you command the sympathy and support of all the interests? Will the mercantile community back you?" he asked them.

"The mercantile community," answered Sorabjee, "was not with us even then."

"But we had Kachalia," rejoined Gandhiji. "If you have one Kachalia amongst you, the whole of the mercantile community will be covered."

"Suppose no merchant comes forward. Is not a struggle possible then?" asked Sorabjee.

"It will then take a different turn," replied Gandhiji, "and in the end the mercantile community will be swept out of existence."

"We are a difficult community at times," remarked one member of the deputation.

"And quarrelsome too," added another.

"I know, I know," said Gandhiji. "The South Africa of today is not far different from the South Africa that I have known. In the first article I wrote for the 'Indian Opinion', I said that if after all there was one true man in South Africa he will cover all. He will build up the whole structure from within." "Amidst a whole heap of bad coins, I wrote," proceeded Gandhiji, quoting from memory, "if there is one true sovereign, the heap will be worth that one sovereign and no more. If you produce one civil resister of merit he will pull things through. Do not start the struggle therefore unless you have that stuff. Manage to exist you will anyhow. But that should not satisfy you. You have to live as a self-respecting community with an equal status. Indians have to make good that position by showing the real stuff."

The discussion then turned on the strategy of the proposed Satyagraha. Gandhiji was definitely opposed to sitting in prohibited seats in trains and railway carriages by way of Satyagraha. Satyagraha should be on a clear, unequivocal and impersonal issue and capable of taking thousands in its fold.

RELATIONS WITH THE NATIVES

The conversation next turned on the relations between the Indian community and the Natives. Gandhiji mentioned how he had refused to send a message for a meeting of the West African Federation that was held some time back in London, because they conceived of a struggle after the way of Europe. "Probably theirs is not the way of non-violence." "One day the black races will rise like the avenging Attila against their White oppressors, unless some one presents to them the weapon of Satyagraha," he added.

"You have said we should associate with Zulus and Bantus. Does it not mean joining them in a common anti-White front?" one member of the Delegation asked.

"Yes, I have said," answered Gandhiji, "that we should associate with Zulus, Bantus, etc. It means that you take them under your wing when you have developed that power of non-violence. It will be good if you fire them with the spirit of non-violence. You will be their saviour. But if you allow yourselves to be over-whelmed and swept off your feet, it will be their and your ruin."

"Their slogan today is no longer merely 'Asia for the Asiatics' or 'Africa for the Africans' but the unity of all the exploited races of the earth. On India rests the burden of pointing the way to all the exploited races. She won't be able to bear that burden today if non-violence does not permeate us more than today. I have been trying to fit ourselves for that mission by giving a wider bend to our struggle. India will become a torch-bearer to the oppressed and exploited races only if she can vindicate the principle of non-violence in her own case, not jettison it as soon as independence of foreign control is achieved."

"Race consciousness," remarked another member of the Delegation, "is rising all over South Africa. We Indians take advantage of the Bantus. We send our children to native colleges. But we are ashamed to call ourselves natives. They feel we are arrogant and aloof. We do not do enough to make an adequate return for what we have got from them. They are getting resentful and the White man encourages and promotes that feeling to widen the gulf."

"It will be an evil day for you if he succeeds," replied Gandhiji. "The trouble is that you are all worshippers of the golden calf."

"Having never seen it, how can we worship it?" Mr. Christopher put in.

"Worshipping is different from seeing," retorted Gandhiji. "Don't we worship God without seeing Him?"

PRODUCE YOUR OWN LEADERS

The Delegation then asked if a leader could be sent from India to organize and lead them. Gandhiji in reply told them that a leader would have to arise from among them. He hoped that they would throw up one in due time. He described to them how he had been arguing with his son Manilal to train up his children for the task. After they had finished their education in India he hoped they would go back and settle down in South Africa and serve the Indian Community.

Apropos the training that would equip South African born Indian children for service he mentioned how he had refused to send his own children to Loveday and Fort Hare.

Delhi, 8-5-46

PYARELAL

A SIMLA DIARY

I must apologize to the readers for the absence of a "Weekly Letter" from Simla for reasons I explained last week. The following gleaned from the notes on Gandhiji's prayer discourses prepared by Rajkumari Amrit Kaur will, however, be found fairly to cover the week.

Gandhiji's statement on his reasons for sending back his permanent staff to Delhi did not satisfy the people. It seemed too strange to be true. They still wanted to know the "real reason". Gandhiji's first discourse after our departure from Simla, therefore, naturally turned on his momentous decision. He explained to the audience how his permanent staff had shortly before left for Delhi with smiling faces and his blessings. His task was very hard. But all difficulties could be overcome by leaning on God. Ever since he had reached years of discretion he had felt that God is always with those who wait on him. "In reality He is everywhere but because He is formless and invisible man cannot always sense His presence. But if we have listening ears, God speaks to us in our own language, whatever that language be." Badshah Khan had just explained what prayer was. God was all powerful. Man lived at His will. It was because Gandhiji wanted in these crucial days to rely solely on His help that he had asked his people who looked after his every need and helped him to edit the 'Harijan' weeklies to leave him to God. Yet he was not quite without human help. He had the Fakir Badshah Khan with him, the Sardar and his daughter, who was as his own daughter, Dr. Dinshah Mehta and Shri Brijkrishna and Shri Sudhir Ghosh. Birlaji had sent some of his staff too.

A DIFFICULT TASK

Referring to the work in Simla he observed that it was hard for everyone of the three parties—perhaps hardest for the Cabinet Mission. They had vowed to let go their hold on India. He trusted their word. He would advise all to do likewise. It was undignified to be suspicious. The deceiver ever lost. Gandhiji warned people not to believe that Britain was crumbling. They were a great power. The shame for us was that a handful of them had ruled over us for so long and the greater shame for them was that they had held dominion over us. But if all were true and all relied on God, no one need have any fear for the future.

THE TECHNIQUE OF SILENCE

He might have pursued the theme on the next day too. But the next day being his day of silence he contented himself by writing out a short message explaining the technique of restoring silence in big gatherings. The general practice of everybody trying to restore order by shouting at every other is a contradiction in terms and often makes confusion worse confounded. "Noise is not erased by making greater noise. It can only be stilled by people making mute signs and never pushing forward. Peace and order were necessary at all gatherings, but are especially so at prayer gatherings. People come together for prayers in order to obtain peace, to hear God's name and to recite it. Therefore, those who come should really attune themselves even as they start from their homes. Let them be silent and let their thoughts dwell as they walk, on prayer. Otherwise coming to prayers was useless."

STRANGE RUMOURS

He reverted to his previous day's theme in his after-prayer discourse on the 7th. Strange rumours had come to him, he said, in regard to his permanent staff having left. Some people were foolish enough to believe that there had been some domestic quarrel. Those who lived with him were not made of such stuff. Others imagined that because his staff had left, the negotiations had broken down. This too was wholly untrue. They left, as Gandhiji had said before, because they understood that he wanted to be alone with God as his only help. Even so he was not without help. It had been so throughout his life. In South Africa, too, all kinds of people had helped him including Boers, Africans and Europeans.

SPECULATION FEVER

The address on the 7th contained scathing denunciation of the speculation fever which had seized Simla. He interpreted it as a sign of cowardice. He tried to impress upon them that it arose from fear. He himself, was a coward in his early youth. He had learnt to shed his cowardice through the recitation of Ramanama. It was cowards who died many times before their death. Fear of disease killed more men than disease itself. He appealed to newspapermen also not to spread false news. It was their duty to teach people to be brave and not instil fear into them. The Cabinet Mission had come with the blessings of the Prime Minister, who had said they were coming here to part with power whether Indians agreed among themselves or not. It was not right to distrust or disbelieve anyone so long as there was no cause to do so. Were those who had had the courage to put up a non-violent fight against a mighty empire for 25 years going to yield to frustration if the British Government failed to perform its duty today?

GURUDEV'S BIRTHDAY

On Gurudev's birthday which fell on the 8th, a picture of the poet had been put on the dais at the prayer gathering. Drawing the attention of the gathering to it, Gandhiji said that the inscription under it was the motto 'The light that never failed.' Gurudev's body was reduced to ashes but the radiance that had been within him was like the sun which would shine so long as life on this earth lasted. But the light he shed was for the soul as the sun's was for the body. He was a poet and a literary star of the first magnitude. He wrote in his mother tongue and all Bengal was able to drink deep at the fountain of his poetry. Translations of his works existed in many languages. He was a great writer in English too, perhaps almost without knowing it. He had school education but he could boast of no university degree. He was just Gurudev. One Viceroy had called him the poet of Asia, a title that no one before him had had. He was also a world poet and, what is more, a Rishi. "He has left us the Gitanjali, the poems which brought him world fame. The great Tulsidas left us his immortal Ramayana. The renowned Vedavyasa left us a history of mankind. They were not mere poets; they were teachers. Gurudev too wrote not only as a poet but as a Rishi." Writing, however, was not his only gift. He was an artist, a dancer, a singer with all the sweetness and purity that art in its finest sense should contain. "His creative genius has also given us Shantiniketan, Shriniketan and Vishwa-Bharati. These breathe his spirit and are a legacy not only to Bengal but to India. Shantiniketan has become, as it were, a place of pilgrimage to us all. He was not, in his lifetime, able to make of these institutions what he had dreamed for them. What man can? Fulfilment of man's purpose is in God's hands. But they are monuments to his endeavour and are a constant reminder to us of the passionate love he had for his country and the service he rendered to her." They had just heard the national song he wrote, a song which has found a place in our national life. "How often is the inspiring refrain heard from thousands of voices! It is not only a song but is also like a devotional hymn."

Gandhiji ended by exhorting the people to learn the lessons of love of country, love of the world and selfless service from the noble example which Gurudev had left.

THINGS OF THE SPIRIT

Things of the spirit formed the subject of his next two discourses. In the first he told them that the spirit of prayer must abide with them all the twentyfour hours, if it was a heart prayer and not merely from the lips. The real peace of prayer could come to their hearts only if God entered therein.

Then they would be the same outwardly as they were within. They would be honest, they would harbour no enmity against anyone, they would be truthful, they would cheat no one if they were in business.

Gandhiji said he would like more and more persons to come to the prayer gatherings but only if they came in the right spirit and with listening ears, so that they may live up to whatever good they may take from the worship. "It may take time for the recitation to come from the heart even as a seed sown has to be nurtured and bears fruit only in due season. If the desire to have God within us is there, progress, however slow, is bound to be. Man can not be transformed from bad to good overnight. God does not exercise magic. He too is within His own law." His law, however, was different from the law of the State. "There may be mistakes in the latter but God cannot err. If He were to go beyond the limits of His law, the world would be lost. He is changeless, unchanging, unequalled, the same yesterday, today and for ever." His law is written on the tablets of their hearts. They could become changed men and women, only if they had the desire of reform and if they were prepared for ceaseless endeavour.

The arrival of Shri Sucheta Kripalani with her melodious singing introduced some colour into the prayer gatherings. Interpreting, in the course of his discourse on the 11th, the song which she had sung, he reminded them that in that song they were told that they were all citizens of a country in which there was no sorrow and no sighing. They should not imagine that this reference was to heaven. The poet had said that he was singing of the land in which they lived. It did not mean waiting until all were perfect. Each one could make such a country for himself if he allowed God to dwell therein. The world was after all made up of individuals. True, there were people of different races and different colours, speaking different languages. How to live in such a world was what the bhajan taught them.

NO FAILURE THIS TIME

An indication as to the trend of the Simla talks was afforded by his next discourse. Referring to the spate of false rumours which filled the air, viz. that there had been a break-down in the talks, that the Cabinet Mission were returning home without doing anything and Indian leaders would again return empty-handed as they did from the Simla Conference last time, he said that this was not a conference like the one they had last year. If he understood the English language aright, the Cabinet Mission were here to find out how best they could implement their decision to quit, i. e. remove their power from India. It was their duty, if they could, to try to bring about agreement between the Congress and the Muslim League. The Conference was being held for that purpose. If people were united, no power on earth could have ruled over them but their tragedy was that they had their differences. But even if the Conference failed of its purpose, no one need be disappointed. Those who have faith in God must be patient and brave. Supposing they were going to be deceived, they must stand up and face the consequences bravely. Gandhiji said he had no reason to believe that the Cabinet Mission was here to deceive them. They were trying to leave in an orderly manner so that Indians may be able to live in peace. There was no need to worry. Man had to do his duty. God had given him strength and discernment to do so. But results were always in God's hands.

LEST WE FORGET

Lest in their anxiety for their own future they might forget their duty towards those whom they had condemned as the lowest of the low, he sent Badshah Khan to visit and report on the conditions of the Sweepers' Quarters. The report which the latter brought him filled him (Gandhiji) with anger and grief. He would have loved to go there himself. Unfortunately he could not now negotiate hills and therefore could not walk so far to see them himself. He thought it a crime to sit in rickshaws especially for able-bodied man. He disliked even a motor car. He wanted always to use his legs, the means of locomotion that God had given him. Last night he walked, but the hill seemed unending. It was impossible for him, much as he would have liked to do so, to live in the Harijan Nivas here. He had heard of it before and what Badshah Khan told him confirmed it, namely that the quarters in which they were forced to live were not fit for animals, much less for human beings. Some of them had been to see him in the morning with a long tale of woe. It was the bounden duty of the residents of Simla to look into their grievances and have them redressed.

He had heard too that the Khadi Bhandar at Simla might have to close down, because the Simla public were too lazy and too ununderstanding to spin the requisite quota of yarn. He told them that he still maintained that Swaraj hung on the thread of hand-spun yarn. Even if they got political Swaraj, as they were going to, they would never be able to maintain it without Khadi which was the truest symbol of non-violence. If they hoped to maintain Swaraj through force, they were hopelessly mistaken. Some one stronger would come and wrest their freedom from them. It was in the hands of the public in Simla to keep the Bhandar going and he hoped they would do so. Punjabi women were the first to offer him yarn in the old days. Let them live up to their reputation. For himself, he would rather lose their money and close down every Bhandar, if need be, but Swaraj never.

Delhi, 15-5-'46

PYARELAL

By M. K. Gandhi

Non-violence in Peace and War

Price Rs. 7, Postage 10 Annas

By Richard B. Gregg

A Discipline for Non-violence

Price 0-10-0, Postage 2 Annas

By K. G. Mashruwala

Practical Non-violence

Price 0-12-0, Postage 2 Annas

HEART SEARCHING

"Do you think we are getting off your backs at last," asked an English visitor who saw Gandhiji sometime back.

"I have no doubt as to the sincerity of your intention. The question is whether you will have the strength and courage needed for it. It is so difficult to get out of conventional grooves of thought and action," replied Gandhiji.

"We must not precipitate a solution," resumed the friend. We must let India decide for herself. At the same time, one does not want to leave the country to chaos when an unprecedented famine threatens it."

"Your difficulty," remarked Gandhiji, "will remain so long as you retain the belief that your rule has benefited India. None of us believes it."

"One or two have testified to the contrary," rejoined the visitor.

"That is neither here nor there," replied Gandhiji. "I too believed it once. Such benefit as has really accrued to India is not part of foreign rule but is the result of contact with a robust people. The good is incidental, the evil of foreign rule is inherent and far outweighs the good. Communal divisions in India can be demonstrably proved to be a British creation. Even famine as we know it today is your creation."

The last remark startled the visitor. Gandhiji noted the effect his words had produced. "Mark the true meaning of my words," he resumed. "Famines may be said to be God-sent. But a well-equipped country should be able to pull through a deficiency period and not helplessly succumb. Famines in India today are not due to rain or lack of it merely, but due to the fact that India is ill equipped to tide over the dry periods. Nothing has been done to safeguard her population against the threat of recurring famines. Take South Africa. There they fight against the locusts, draught etc. manfully and with infinite resourcefulness. Here famine is simply blamed on the rain gods and there is nothing to be done for it."

"Would India have been better equipped, if Britain had not been here?" interpolated the visitor.

"Yes," replied Gandhiji. "There would have been no railways. . . ."

This was another shock to the visitor who apparently with most Westerners regarded railways as the proudest achievement of British rule in India to combat famine. But Gandhiji who holds with the late Mr. Ramsay Macdonald that the railways are the chief cause of the recurrence of famines in India proceeded: "If there were no railways etc. we would be living in a natural state as they used to in England and Europe in the Middle Ages when every feudal baron had his castle with its stocks of grain and water. Before the advent of railways in India every village had its granary. In that sense we were better equipped. Moreover, we had our system of domestic crafts to fall back upon if crops failed. Now railways have depleted the countryside of its stocks and killed the handicrafts.

Whatever cash the cultivator gets in return for his produce runs through his fingers like water, thanks to the invasion of his economy by the revenue collector and the imported foreign goods without which he thinks he can no longer do. The British have told him: 'Do not stock grain, do not hoard silver.' There is no provision made for a deficit period. Railways have become a snare, cheap transport a trap. The Princes practised tyranny in olden times too. But it could not go far. The natural means of redress, viz. insurrection, retreat or migration were still open to the people. They were not then disarmed or emasculated. Odds were even. Today the odds are so heavy that a handful of British soldiers can terrorize millions. That is what British rule has done to us. It is most demoralizing. The British must realize this and leave us in an exemplary manner. If the virus has gone so deep that it cannot be cured without applying a strong blister, even then they must go. A few lakhs might be killed in internecine warfare but real peace will come at last. If I could persuade India to adopt the way of non-violence it would be settled in two days. Otherwise, the ordeal might last longer. Even so the destruction won't be anything like the destruction wrought by foreign rule. India would have then something to live for and die for. Today what has she to live and die for?"

"But it is a big responsibility to leave India faced with anarchy," remarked the visitor still hesitating.

"Not a bigger responsibility than you were prepared to face during the war out of strategic considerations," answered Gandhiji, leaving his visitor to ruminate over the inconsistency of his position.

Delhi, 14-5-'46

PYARELAL

USEFUL HINTS

(Continued from No. 14)

MANURE

Much of the waste of the village including sweepings, bones, human excreta etc. that go to spoil the sanitation of the village at present could be utilized into making compost manure which is very easily done and which is as good a manure as cow dung. Bones and oil-cakes which are usually exported out of the country should not be allowed to leave the villages. The bones must be crushed locally with the help of chunam chakkis after being charred a little in the chunam bhattis and the meal distributed amongst the farmers.

Manure-making in villages may be given out on subsidized contract. This will not only ensure the cleanliness of the village but it will also raise the sweepers engaged in making compost and manure to the level of traders.

Oil mills which take away the oil-seeds from the villages and give only oil in return, sending the cake abroad, are depriving the land of a valuable form of fertilizer. This must be stopped altogether. This is one of the fundamental reasons why oil-seeds should not be allowed to go out of the villages, but should be crushed in the local country ghanis. This will retain both the oil and the cake in the village and be a source of enrichment to men, cattle and the land.

In the name of increasing the fertility of the soil, much attempt is being made to introduce chemical fertilizers into our agriculture. The experience gained through the use of such chemical fertilizers throughout the world is clear enough to guide us against the inroads to be made by these fertilizers. They do not add to the fertility of the soil, but act as stimulants or drugs resulting in immediate bumper crops and in the end bring about a corresponding exhaustion of the land. They also destroy a host of earth worms so essential for agriculture. In the long run such artificial fertilizers prove to be most injurious to the land. Behind the trumpeting of chemical fertilizers lies the anxiety of the fertilizer factory owners to push the sale of their products irrespective of the harm or injury they do to agriculture.

LAND MANAGEMENT

Besides increasing the bulk of the manures, the fertility of the soil should be maintained by stopping erosion by means of proper drainage, embankments etc. In the final analysis fertility of the soil is the fountain head from which springs all nourishment for cattle and men in the form of fodder and corn. If the fertility of the soil is reduced, the food produced on it will be of poor quality and consequently the health of the people will suffer. This is why nutrition experts connect up health with agriculture.

SEEDS

Selected and improved varieties of seeds are essential for the improvement of agriculture. What is wanted in this regard is the machinery for effective distribution of seeds. There can be no better medium for this than co-operative societies.

RESEARCH

All research in agriculture should be directed towards improving food crops as well as raw materials for village industries rather than money crops such as tobacco and raw materials for factories, e.g. thick rinded sugar-cane and long staple cotton.

DISTRIBUTION OF LAND FOR THE PRODUCTION OF BALANCED DIET

The food question, which has assumed serious proportions now, does not promise an immediate solution. The problem is two-fold. The immediate is a caloric shortage and secondly, there is the long standing shortage of protective foods. The first problem may find an easy solution but the second one is going to present difficulties.

It is ordinarily presumed that an acre of land provides more calories through the production of grains than through any other food. But apart from the question of calories, grains are very poor suppliers of protective food factors. Therefore, if we aim at getting these factors from cereals only, huge quantities of grains will be required. On the other hand, if the grains are substituted and supplemented by foods like fruits and vegetables, nuts, oil-seeds etc., the protective food factors required to make up a balanced diet may be obtained through lesser quantities of these types of food than through grains alone. Even the supply of calories per acre is greater in the case of some of the root vegetables like potatoes than in the case of cereal grains. Thus a balanced diet may be a double blessing and may offer the solution to our problem. It reduces the per capita requirement of land and at the same time supplies the body with all its requirements in their correct proportions, so as to keep it fit and healthy. It is calculated that the per capita land available in India at present for food cultivation comes to about 0.7 acre. This very land which is found to be too inadequate to meet our requirements in food according to the present distribution of cultivation becomes more than sufficient as only 0.4 acre is the estimated figure required for a balanced diet in the re-ordered system of agriculture. The land of the locality should be so divided for the purpose of growing crops as to provide its population with the materials for a balanced diet rather than merely supplying the cereals for a grain diet as at present. This aspect of the question should be thoroughly investigated and a definite plan chalked out.

RICE

1. All rice mills should be disbanded as in Travancore.
2. All the hullers used for polishing rice should be completely banned.
3. People should be educated about the better nutritive value of whole unpolished rice and about the method of cooking it by practical demonstration and film shows. Polishing of rice should be prohibited or its degree of polishing should be very strictly controlled.
4. Where the paddy husking industry is carried on on an industrial scale for business purposes, in predominantly paddy growing areas, costly equipment such as paddy separators, winnowers etc. should be supplied on hire to a group of artisans through their co-operative society.
5. In view of the fact that the use of unpolished rice is to be advocated and popularized, the movement of paddy from one place to another will become necessary, and in order that the freight on the extra weight of the paddy may not enhance the price of rice, the freight charges on paddy should be favourably discriminated.
6. In areas where the implements for dehusking paddy and polishing rice are not separate, but both the processes are combined into one of pounding paddy, the resultant product is polished rice. In such cases, dehusking implements, i.e. chakkis either of wood, stone or mud, should be introduced, and can even be supplied along with the equipment for other industries through the district demonstration centres. As far as possible the use of rice polishing implements should be discouraged and even a tax may be levied on them to restrict their number. The degree of polishing rice under these licensed polishing implements should also be supervised and controlled. Paddy and other grains and seeds required by the village should be stocked in the village itself, and only the surplus should be sent out. The best agency for all such activities can be the multi-purpose cooperative society.

GRAIN STORAGE

If storage arrangements are made locally all the wastage through bad storage etc. and conveyance charges will be eliminated. Big towns and cities where proportionately larger stocks of grain are to be held can build pucca cement godowns after the model of the godowns at Muzaffarnagar, U. P.. These can be built either by the municipality or by private people to be rented out for grain storage. These godowns should be licensed and subjected to periodical inspection, like boilers are at present. An enormous loss of grain occurs through bad storage alone. Such loss is estimated on a conservative basis to be about 3.5 million tons, an amount equal to the declared deficit of grains in India during the current year. The qualitative loss caused by insects, rodents, dampness etc., all caused by bad storage arrangements—resulting in all kinds of diseases, is equally enormous. The storage problem is both an urgent and a permanent one and should be tackled in all earnestness and seriousness. In any case holding stocks in ill-protected godowns, as at present, should be stopped.

If the stocks are held in the villages where they are produced, and all their movements to town and back to villages are eliminated, the chances of their getting damaged are, of course, reduced. Local storage will go a long way towards eradicating black-marketing and is likely to stabilize prices besides removing much of the inconvenience caused to villages in obtaining rations from cities.

Individual holders of stock should be educated in methods for the preservation of grain. (Concluded)
Simla, 3-5-'46

J. C. KUMARAPPA

A GOOD REMINDER

(By M. K. Gandhi)

An anonymous friend has taken the trouble of collecting apposite extracts from the Book of Job and Psalms. As they are a perpetual reminder to all of us, I gladly give them below. The moral I draw from the sheaf is that since man is only dust and at best grass, he had better pass the few moments he is on this earth in the service of his fellow creatures. I am hoping that the sender has not collected the Biblical verses to show the futility of all work, which is a doctrine of laziness and parasitism.

Job :

Man that is born of a woman is of few days,
and full of trouble,
He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not;
Seeing his days are determined, the number of his months are with Thee, Thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass;
For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again and that the tender branch thereof will not cease;
Though the root thereof wax old in the earth,
and the stock thereof die in the ground;
Yet through the scent of water, it will land,
and bring forth boughs like a plant;
But man dieth, and wasteth away,
Yea man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?
As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up;
So man lieth down, and riseth not;
till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep.

Psalm :

Lord make me to know mine end and the measure of my days what it is; that I may know how frail I am.
Behold Thou hast made my days as an hand-breadth;
and my age is as nothing before Thee;
verily every man at his best state is altogether vanity;
For He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust;
As for man, his days are grass: as a flower of the field he flourisheth;
For the wind passeth over it and it is gone;
and the place thereof shall know it no more.

Simla, 13-5-'46

HARIJAN

May 19

1946

HOW CAN VIOLENCE BE STOPPED?

( By M. K. Gandhi )

Q. Some time back a military officer in Poona, who is about to return to England, said to me that violence was on the increase in India and would further increase as people were gradually turning away from the path of non-violence. "We in the West" he said, "not only believe in violence but our society is based on it. Several subject races have won their independence through violence and are today living in peace. We have discovered the atom bomb for stopping violence. The last great war is a case in point." Continuing the military officer said, "Gandhiji has shown your people the way of non-violence. Has he discovered any such power as the atom bomb which will at once convert people to non-violence and bring about a rule of peace? Cannot Gandhiji's 'atom bomb' stop people from following the path of violence? Ask Gandhiji to exercise his power over the people and tell them to give up all thoughts of violence and adopt his creed. If he cannot wean his people today from the terrible violence that is spreading all over the country, I tell you that he will live a disappointed man and his life's work will be ruined."

A. There is much confusion of thought in this question. The atom bomb has not stopped violence. People's hearts are full of it and preparations for a third world war may even be said to be going on. While it would be absurd to say that violence has ever brought peace to mankind it cannot either be said that violence never achieves anything.

That I shall have to repent if I cannot stop violence does not enter into the picture of non-violence. No man can stop violence. God alone can do so. Men are but instruments in His hands. Here material means cannot stop violence but this does not mean that material means should not be employed for the purpose. The deciding factor is God's grace. He works according to His law and, therefore, violence will also be stopped in accordance with that law. Man does not and can never know God's law fully. Therefore we have to try as far as lies in our power. I hold that our experiment in non-violence has succeeded to a fair extent in India. There is, therefore, no room for the pessimism shown in the question. Finally Ahimsa is one of the world's great principles which no power on earth can wipe out. Thousands like myself may die in trying to vindicate the ideal but Ahimsa will never die. And the gospel of Ahimsa can be spread only through believers dying for the cause.

Simla, 9-5-'46

( From Harijansevak )

TOTAL PROHIBITION

( By M. K. Gandhi )

National Provincial Governments are now in full swing in India. Happily on the question of prohibition, there can be no differences of opinion between the Congress and the Muslim League. And if all followed a concerted policy and the States too joined in, India would be dry in no time and earn the blessings of lakhs of homes. To the discredit of the Governments under virtual martial law, Governors and their Advisers had the shamelessness to reverse the policy which had been already adopted in some provinces and misappropriate the revenue which was raised by the provinces in question. Let them now take up prohibition of intoxicating drinks and drugs. Let them, too, not rest content with prohibition legislation. They have to devise methods of educating the drinking public in the harm that drink does and provide them with innocent recreation and health-giving drinks. Every bar or, failing that, a place next door to it should, so far as possible, be utilized as a refreshment and recreation room. If this constructive activity is taken up, it must prove a source of revenue for the State besides prohibition benefitting and reconstructing thousands of ruined homes.

Moreover, toddy-tapping should be replaced by nira-tapping for the purpose of converting nira into gur, much to the advantage of the nation which needs cheap sugar. These columns have shown how in some ways tad-gur is preferable to cane-gur.

These reflections are suggested by the following paragraph from a circular letter addressed by the Women's Christian Temperance Union (Fyzabad Road, Lucknow) to the Press. From it, I take the following items addressed to the students under the heading "What can youth do?"

1. Pledge themselves to total abstinence from all intoxicants and habit-forming drugs, which includes tobacco. It helps to sign the pledge.

2. Demand a thorough Alcohol and Narcotic Drugs Education, to be a part of the School Curriculum.

3. Demand while under training a part in Social Service, including temperance work, educating the public of the harm done to them through the use of the intoxicants.

4. Recommend that in the Scheme for Small Savings Campaign for rural population, total abstinence from all intoxicants be stressed.

5. Ally themselves against the awful waste of precious foodstuffs for liquor in breweries and distilleries to feed the nation.

6. Join up with a Temperance Society. The W. C. T. U. has been in this struggle for the last 59 years in India. It needs your encouragement and support. Their motto is: "For God, for Home and Every Land."

7. Make use of temperance literature. Rs. 2/- a year will bring to you a 100 leaflets a month in either Hindi or Urdu, also in some other vernaculars to give away. The monthly magazine, the Indian Temperance News in English can be placed in any library (not personal) for a rupee a year. If students wish to subscribe to it, it might have the same reduction.

8. Holidays, a good time for this service.

9. As true patriots, to learn the lesson of how much they can give to the country rather than how much they can get out of it for themselves.

Simla, 7-5-'46

SLIGHTING SWARAJ ?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"I am a middle class man living in a 12'x20' room in Bombay. I have a wife and child. My kitchen has to be in my living room. I had taken a vow to wear Khadi and have adhered to it up till now. Since the decision that Khadi could only be purchased by giving a certain quota of yarn came into being, it has become very hard for a man like myself, living the mechanical life of Bombay to find the requisite time for spinning. Nevertheless I have been spinning 1½ hours daily in order to be true to my pledge. I had no slivers left the other day and, therefore, went to the Khadi Bhandar to buy some. I was asked by the Manager either to come to the Bhandar in order to make my own slivers or do the carding there and make the slivers at home. Now it is impossible for me with my very limited living space to make slivers at home nor has a man like me the time to go and make them at the Bhandar. I said, "Either give me slivers or else I shall have to give up spinning." I was told I was at liberty to do what I considered proper. I realize that a man should be self-reliant and should make his own slivers. But I feel that this is impossible for me, placed as I am in Bombay. Thousands are in the same boat as myself. What should I do ?

"By stopping the sale of slivers the Khadi Bhandar has hit the poor hard. They could earn as much by making slivers as by spinning."

The above letter requires an answer. The plight of the writer is the same as that of the many who live in the slums of Bombay. If our people were not so easily satisfied, the landlords of Bombay would not relegate poor families to one small living room each. Lakhs live in this way and thus make it possible for the rich to have their Malabar Hill and Chowpatty.

The spinning wheel shows us the way to remedy these conditions. If this were not so, it would have no place in my life. A few people may carve out their way by the sword, but the crores cannot. We must not imagine that slums do not exist in London, or Paris, or even New York. They do.

What will be the condition in Russia it is too early yet to say.

What then about the writer's difficulty? He says he finds time to spin 1½ hours daily. A man who spins that much every day can accumulate more yarn than necessary for his Khadi needs. It was a mistake on his part to want to buy slivers from the Bhandar. The Manager gave him the correct reply. Where there is room for spinning there is also room for 'tunai' (new carding method) or 'punai' (simpler than 'tunai'). If there is no room for the wheel there is always the takli. The Dhanush takli too takes up less space. Whatever difficulties apply to the individual apply to all. The way to Swaraj lies in not going under but in overcoming them. Necessity is the mother of invention.

Again why should not the facilities for carding, slivering and spinning offered by the Khadi Bhandar be availed of? The new method of making slivers does not require much space and is not difficult.

The main requisite is for the spinner to have the faith that Swaraj hangs on a thread of hand-spun yarn. It will not hurt the country's cause if the man who lacks this faith gives up spinning. Khadi does enable many poor persons to earn their living by spinning and weaving. But this cannot do the work for the crores.

Simla, 13-5-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

AN EXACTION AND OPPRESSION

(By Pyarelal)

"The salt tax is an exaction and oppression, and if the people understood it, it would only breed discontent. It is a survival of the general exploitation of India's poverty by a profit-making Company."

Ramsay Macdonald

"For a poor population the pressure of what is equivalent to a poll tax is heavily felt and often produces grave discontent."

Bastable

The present annual consumption of salt in India has been estimated to be 51,050,000 maunds per year according to Government estimates. An intake of 12 lbs. of salt per head per year is said to be necessary for maintaining an individual in the tropics in health. At this rate the total quantity of salt required for 40 crores would come to 600,00,000 mds.

The salt requirement for cattle and other four-footed animals per head has been calculated to be 18 lbs. for a cow, 45 lbs. for a bullock, a buffalo and a horse and 11 lbs. for a goat and a sheep. According to a rough estimate of the present cattle population of India, their requirement in salt would come to about 4 crores and 13 lakhs mds.* Another 3 crores mds. is required for various industrial purposes. This makes a total of 73 crores and 73 lakhs mds. The present production of salt is * Total requirement of salt for cattle and other quadruped population of India:

According to the 1935 census the number of cattle in India was 21 crores and 50 lakhs. At the rate of half an ounce of salt daily, equivalent to 12 lbs. for the year, they would require about 4 crores and 73 lakh maunds of salt per year. Similarly, calculating the salt requirement of milch cattle as  $\frac{3}{4}$  chhatak for 10 seers of milk, one hundred crore maunds of milk which are annually produced in India call for an annual consumption of 1 crore and 12 lakhs mds. of salt for milch cattle alone. The estimate of 3 crores mds. of salt for the consumption of cattle and other four-footed animals in India is therefore a palpable under-estimate. According to veterinary authorities the inadequate supply of salt available for cattle has resulted in a deterioration of their health and quality of the breed.

510,00,000 mds. per year. This comes to 38% of the actual requirement. As the industrial development of the country progresses the requirement for salt would increase still further.

The energies and expenditure of the Salt Department of the Government of India have hitherto been used more for preventing unlicensed manufacture of salt than for developing the salt industry itself. In 1939-40, the Government paid Rs. 33,72,251/4/10 as compensation to the various States to prevent the manufacture of salt in the States.

Given the freedom to manufacture salt, India could easily increase its salt production by ten-fold. The map of India is strewn with areas which were at one time flourishing centres of salt manufacture but which are now lying in a state of disuse as a result of the stringent enforcement of the salt laws, and it is a matter of shame that with all the unutilized natural sources of salt in India, we today import 194,00,000 mds. of salt or 25% of the total consumption, not to mention Rs. 1,42,42,000 worth of sodium and potassium salts other than sodium chloride. The total amount of nitrates and alkalies imported in 1937-38 was worth Rs. 3,33,00,000. This included potassium nitrate, sodium sulphate, calcium chloride and magnesium chloride. Pari passu with this, thousands of acres of land in India are today rendered unfit for cultivation owing to excessive salinity of the soil. If, instead of spending lakhs on the suppression of salt manufacture, Government were to utilize even a fraction of that amount for developing the salt industry which forms the base and starting point of all heavy chemical industries, not only could large areas of land be reclaimed for agricultural purposes, but crores of rupees could also be saved from being drained out of the country for the purpose of importing chemicals.

The suppression of the salt industry has also spelt the suppression of the manufacture of a number of other chemicals. According to 1873-76 figures the number for the manufacture of some of these chemicals in North India alone was as follows:

Year	Shora	Kruthad	Khari	Sajji	Rassi
1873-74	212	13908	668	3760	815
1874-75	186	7409	498	3620	114
1875-76	132	6701	750	4853	387
1876-77	130	5633	544	1765	212

The relation between the suppression of these manufactures and the enforcement of salt laws will be seen from the following extract from a Government report for the years 1872-73, page 109:

"I have seen the analysis of the samples of salt obtained from Bulandshahr, Aligarh, Badaun, Agra, Mainpuri, Faruqabad, Jaunpur and Ghazipur. In my opinion, to allow alkalies to be manufactured from the saline earth that is to be found on either side of the Jumna river would be disastrous. To give permission to manufacture alkalies at any place from the saline earth would be dangerous. It would jeopardize the salt revenue on lakhs of maunds of common salt."

In 1940 and 1941, 1,50,000 cwts. of dried and salted fish was exported from the country. The dried and salted fish consumed in the country must be taken to be many times that quantity. Similarly, in the year 1939-40, 31,800 tons (87,00,000 mds.) of dried and cured hides were exported from the country. Salt is also used in paper manufacture, agriculture, soap, glass and steel industries and in the manufacture of glazed earthenware, to mention only a few. And yet the amount of rebate claimed and granted on the use of salt for industrial purposes has been showing a decline in spite of the rapid growth of these industries.

Salt consumption declined by 25% (12 to 9 lbs. per head) in the course of 50 years as a result of the imposition of the salt tax.* At the same time the cost of salt to the rural labourer for a family came to about two months' wages i.e. 1/6 of the whole annual earnings (J. Cranford—1836).

Considering that the total production of salt in India is 5.1 crore maunds and includes the quota used for industrial purposes and cattle, an average of about 10 lbs. per head is left for human consumption which is far below the requirement of a man in the tropics.†

In spite of this decline in the basic consumption of salt, in Canara and near Vedaranyam† special excise personnel are employed to turn into the sea or otherwise destroy salt fit for human consumption as soon as nature deposits it.

Government have hardly shown any initiative in organizing the salt industry on scientific lines. Their methods of salt manufacture are crude, primitive and inefficient. The overhead and supervising charges exceed the actual cost of production, for instance, in the case of Sambhar salt the cost of production per maund is only 8.6 pies but after the addition of the overhead and supervising charges it comes to 3 as. 2.34 pies per maund.§ For Delhi the overhead charges work out to 623% of the cost of production.

Nothing has been done to reclaim other valuable by-products from the Sambhar lake deposits after

* Year	Consumption per individual
1793	11.90 lbs.
1803	11.27 "
1823	11.44 "
1833	8.74 "
1843	9.0 "
† See Appendix B.		† See Appendix C.
§ Place	Cost of production	Total cost including overhead charges	Average cost of Production for the whole year	Sale price
Sambhar	0/0/8.64	0/2/6.60	0/3/2.34	0/4/3
Didwana	0/1/9.84	0/2/3.80	0/2/8.02	0/2/6
Pachbhadra	0/2/2.19	0/2/10.82	0/3/0.12	0/3/0
Khewda	0/2/8.69	0/3/3.65	0/3/4.42	0/4/3
Barchha	0/1/10.97	0/2/4.42	0/2/4.43	0/4/3
Kala Bara	0/2/10.30	0/3/0.88	0/3/3.88	0/4/3

Most revealing too are the following figures provided by the Salt Department of the Government of India:

Rate of Duty	Rs. 1/9/- per md.
Per capita incidence	" -/4/- "
Cost of production at the Govt. salt sources 1944-45	" -/4/4 "

the extraction of common salt and so lakhs of tons of sodium sulphate, sodium carbonate and soda bicarbonate are allowed to go to waste while large sums of money are drained out of the country by the import of the chemicals for industrial purposes.

II

It is little realized that salt manufacture was at one time next in universality only to the hand-spinning industry, nor is the story of its exploitation and suppression less tragic.

During the days of the East India Company's salt monopoly numerous petitions were presented against the sweating of Molunghees. Under date 26-9-1874, wrote the Board of Trade to the Governor-General-in-Council in the course of a communication:

"Your honourable Board expressed your opinion that the investigation you have made into the circumstances relating to Adjoora tenure left no room for doubt of its being a system of coercion; consequently, equally repugnant to the spirit of the Regulations and to the dictates of justice and good policy."

In 24 Parganas the Agent reported that "the remuneration of Molunghees amounted to only Rs. 6/- for 7½ months' labour, i. e., the entire salt manufacturing season, so that the Molunghee was in permanent 'bondage to the Agency.' Special courts of justice were established claiming to safeguard the interests of the Molunghees but these only helped to "tantalize wretches who neither can, or else do not, prefer a complaint from the dread of still greater oppression."

So widespread was the manufacture of salt that to safeguard the monopoly, savage laws were passed. Thus the 1778 Salt Rules and the Regulation of 1793 required proprietors of land "to give information of illicit manufacture or import on pain of penalties, if salt was proved, in Diwani Adalat, to have been made or imported with their connivance." Regulation 6 of 1801 provided for Rs. 5,000/- fine, if manufacture or establishment of salt works was not reported when proved. Regulation 10 of 1819 imposed a fine of Rs. 500/- for each salt work on a Zamindar's estate about which information was knowingly suppressed from Government. Section 31 made each little fireplace a khalari, so that some salt water boiled in a cooking pot, made the Zamindar liable to a fine of Rs. 500/-. By Regulation 10 of 1826, burning of straw steeped in water, with the purpose of using saline ashes as condiment for food was made an offence as under Regulation 10 of 1819, and also any bed prepared for evaporation of sea water was construed to be a salt work.

Regulation XXIX of 1838 added to the above penal provisions: "Such knowledge shall not be required to be established by the direct proof but may be inferred from circumstances at the discretion of the judge." Also, if the Zamindari was a partnership, each of the several proprietors was liable to a fine of Rs. 500/-.

The abolition of the Government monopoly of salt in 1863 resulted in the abandonment of salt manufacture by the Government. At the same time, free manufacture of salt in India was inhibited owing to the excise duty on salt, with the result that Indian salt was soon entirely replaced by imported salt. It reduced thousands upon thousands of persons who, under the monopoly system, were engaged in the manufacture of salt to landless labourers. In the words of Sir Cecil Beadon, Secretary to the Board of Revenue, Government of India, "they were the first victims of famine in Orissa. They had nothing to fall back upon . . . they had no agricultural produce of their own . . . a great many of them starved," and, "a considerable number of them were swept off the face of the earth."

That Draconian policy continues even today. Section 48A of the Bombay Salt Act lays down among other things that any salt revenue officer "who is guilty of cowardice shall on conviction before a magistrate be punished with imprisonment which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to three months' pay or with both." The word 'cowardice' is not defined. But one will have no difficulty in understanding what cowardice can possibly mean in the administration of an Act which takes in its sweep millions of human beings, men and women, young and old, cripples and healthy.

Salt duty has been called the Indian gabelle. In France an excessive high salt tax was one of the causes of the French Revolution. History has not been far different in India.

As the places, where salt used to be manufactured before its suppression are also places where there is a perpetual scarcity of rainfall and conditions are not otherwise favourable for cultivation, salt manufacture provided an occupation par excellence to hundreds upon thousands of poor people. In Balasore and Cuttack alone at one time 44,000 people derived their living from the manufacture of salt. Suppression of salt manufacture resulted in widespread unemployment among these people and, in fact in many places, produced such discontent as to cause risings which had to be suppressed with great severity.

Place	Wholesale price per md.
Delhi	Rs. 3-8-4
Allahabad	" 3-3-0
Calcutta	" 6-8-0
Madras	" 2-1-1
Bombay	" 3-12-10
Sind	" 2-8-10

Two points that emerge from these are that whereas the cost of production of salt at the Government salt sources (1944-45) was Rs. -4/4 per md., the wholesale price per maund in Delhi was Rs. 3/8/4. Deducting from it Rs. 1/9/- duty, the balance of Rs. 1/11/- over the cost of production represents the overhead charges, i. e. nearly 623% on the cost price. The corresponding percentage for Calcutta is 1592!

And why this discrepancy between the Calcutta price and the Delhi price of salt? Is it because the bulk of Liverpool salt is landed in Calcutta and is consumed almost entirely in Bengal? Must 13 crores be taxed to subsidize this unnatural import? Nothing could show better the monstrosity of the Government's salt monopoly. If the people of Bengal were free to manufacture salt without any duty or licence, they could have all the salt they require at 1 or 2 annas per maund.

In Surat the raising of the salt duty from as. 12/- to Re. 1/- in 1844 caused riots which were suppressed. The duty was afterwards restored to the old scale of as. 12/- per maund. In 1817 the enforcement of the salt monopoly caused a "widespread rebellion" in Orissa which had to be suppressed with "maximum force".

How extensive this occupation was and what potentialities for expansion there are for developing the salt resources of the country will be seen from the following brief bird's-eye view of the centres of manufacture which at one time were flourishing but are today lying in a state of disuse as a result of the suppression of free manufacture of salt.*

In a country where salt can be manufactured in such abundance locally by the people themselves at negligible cost from hundreds and thousands of salt lakes, salt springs, brine wells and saline earth, not to mention thousands of miles of seaboard, it is nothing short of criminal squandering of the nation's patrimony to deplete the salt mines of their contents while all these sources are left undeveloped.

To sum up therefore :

1. Free manufacture of salt by the people without any tax or licence should be encouraged and an effort made to bring back into operation all the centres of salt manufacture which at one time flourished but are today in disuse as a result of Government suppression. This will enable the full complement of salt requirement for men and cattle to be produced from local salt at about anna 1 per maund, eliminating as it will, the cost of transport and supervision and middleman's profits. What is more, the extension of salt manufacture by the people in the way suggested will not jeopardize Government's revenue if it chooses to undertake manufacture of refined salt.

2. The import of Liverpool and Cheshire salt is a monstrosity. It has an evil history.† It ought to be stopped immediately by the imposition of a heavy import duty.

3. This would prevent 45 lakhs of rupees every year from going out of the country.

4. Free permission for the manufacture of salt in the Indian States will save Government an annual sum of nearly 34 lakhs of rupees, which is at present being given to the various States as compensation to prevent salt being manufactured within their territories.

5. The Government should undertake the reclamation of salts other than the common salt which are to be found in the various saline earths in India or exist as impurities along with the salt in the salt lakes. The Government should further undertake the manufacture of alkalies and chemicals from earth on scientific lines and prevent their importation from abroad by the imposition of import duties.

6. The present Excise Department ought forthwith to be abolished and the development of salt manufacture made over to the Industries

Department. The present Excise personnel are by tradition and training unfit to handle an industry on scientific or business lines. The money spent on providing salaries to the highly paid officials of the department should be utilized for meeting the deficit in the revenue caused by the abolition of the salt duty or for promoting research for the organization of the salt industry on scientific and economical lines.

These measures will reduce the deficit caused by the direct loss of excise revenue to a very considerable extent and the country on the whole will materially gain in the end by being provided with cheap salt and other chemicals required for its industries, agriculture and cattle which are at present being starved.* Occupation will also be provided to lakhs of people in areas which are unfit for cultivation and therefore subject to repeated famines. There will thus be an all round improvement in the health of the soil as well as the inhabitants on it, both animal and human.

Delhi, 13-5-'46

APPENDIX A

EXCISE AND SALT CONSUMPTION

Mr. Gokhale, speaking from the Congress platform in 1895 at Calcutta, said :

"In 1882, i. e. before the duty was reduced to a uniform rate of Rs. 2/- a maund, the consumption of salt in India was about 2 crores, 90 lakhs maunds. In that year, the duty was reduced all round to Rs. 2/- and consumption at once began expanding. And this consumption stood at 337 lakhs in 1887, when Lord Dufferin again raised the duty to Rs. 2/ 8/- a maund. What was the result? The expansion of consumption, which had gone on so steadily during Ripon's time, at once ceased. And since that year up till now, i. e. during a period of 8 years, consumption has remained absolutely stationary, the figure for the last year being 341 lakhs of maunds . . . . . We thus find that, while under Lord Ripon's reduced duties the consumption increased in 5 years by about 50 lakhs of maunds, under Dufferin's enhanced duties it increased by only 4 lakhs in a period of 8 years. Population has been steadily increasing and you will at once see that consumption has actually gone back during these 8 years."

Coming to the more specific issue of per capita consumption, Mr. Gokhale said :

"Eminent physicians have laid down that for healthful existence the annual consumption of salt must be 12 lbs. per head. Now, during the administration of Lord Lawrence . . the consumption was about 12 lbs. per head. After that it began to decline, till at the end of Lord Lytton's regime, the average figure per head stood at about 9 lbs. Then came the beneficent administration of Lord Ripon. And the duty on salt was lowered, as I have already mentioned, to a uniform rate of Rs. 2/- a maund. Consumption went up by leaps and bounds and in 1887, the average per head stood at 10. 1/3 lbs. The enhanced duties, however, have once more put back the figure, and last year it stood at only 9 1/2 lbs. per head."

* See Appendix D. † See Appendix E.

* See Appendix F.

APPENDIX B

SALT AND HEALTH

More salt is required to keep a man in health in the tropics than in cold or temperate climate. Again, when the diet is wholly or partly vegetarian, more condiment is required to maintain the balance of salt in the system.

Observes Mr. Carver in his article on salt: "A year or two back the British army authorities in India began issuing extra salt to the troops, because it was discovered that in the hot season it keeps them healthy, and prevents exhaustion and heat stroke. The salt replaces that lost from the body by profuse perspiration. Doctors have found that perspiration on hot work, resulting in loss of salt, makes men liable to muscular cramp. During the war, workers in America were supplied with tablets of common salt for adding to drinking water in order to replace the salt lost."

Continues Mr. Carver: "Without salt, health and vigour fail. In Holland in the Middle Ages one of the legal punishments was to deprive a man of salt, and this caused depression and illness. Criminals in Sweden were once allowed, as an alternative to capital punishment, to abstain from salt for a month, eating saltless food, and the result was, they usually died.

"During the sieges and famines, too, shortage of salt always causes suffering and ill-health. Only where man lives mainly on milk and flesh—the latter consumed raw or roasted so that its salt is not lost—is it possible for him to do without ordinary salt, sodium chloride. But a cereal or vegetable diet calls for a supplement of salt."

How heavily the duty on this essential article of diet affects the millions of the poor in India may be judged from the following from a petition which the cultivators from Bombay submitted to the Bombay Government on November 26, 1852 and which was read out by Rustonjee Viccajee in the course of his examination before the Select Committee of the House of Commons in the following year. The petitioners stated "that the produce of their fields supplied them with food enough for eight months in the year; that during the remaining four months they subsisted on vegetables, which they season with chillies, and salt when the latter was free from duty; but when it was made subject to duty, they were obliged to forego even this poor comfort."

APPENDIX C

DESTRUCTION OF NATURAL SALT

Bruce writing on the salt sources of India in 1863 observes: "In Ganjam and Rajahmundry, these swamps abound," whereas Tanjore and Masulipattam "are especially productive of fine quality salt." In these districts, this spontaneous salt as it was called could be manufactured "to almost any extent, of fine quality and at a small charge, probably on an average of Rs. 4/- per 120 maunds or  $\frac{1}{3}$  anna per maund." The great swamps to north and west of Point Calymere, near about Vedaranyam, extending for upwards of 30 miles, produced a variety of salt. "very white and of peculiarly fine crystals." But the policy of the administration did more serious injury to the spontaneous salt, than even to the Malabar sea-salt, described by T. A. Barber. Its manufacture was automatic and therefore not preventible. The Government, therefore, sought refuge in destroying it wholesale, so as to render smuggling impossible, the reason urged to support such a policy being that the localities, where it was produced, were isolated, and inconvenient of approach in the then state of inland communications. The 1876 Commission, however, noted the fact of its being collected at some places, and sold at a discount—against manufactured salt—the Vedaranyam salt in particular. In 1859, the Government circularized Collectors asking for information in regard to their present and proposed attitude towards "spontaneous salt," but no important action was taken upon the replies received, the destruction at some places, and collection at others, continuing the same as ever before.

APPENDIX D

Excellent salt in large quantities was produced at Tilwadi, eight miles away from Pachbhadra, which was known as Tilwadi salt. In the villages of Hundu, Limbu, Padharu, there are ponds full of saline water fit for manufacture of salt. Natural salt of a high quality was also found in Charni, opp. Chitwana, from Charni down to Waramba. There is a great concentration of salt in river water which continues right up to Mandola downwards. Besides there are a number of salt springs down the river bank where crystalline salt is found in a natural state. In Phlaudi in Jodhpur and in Lokasur in Bikaner there are salt lakes. In the west of Rachodra village there is a lake, which is several miles in area, into which several salt springs empty themselves. The salt produced from it is better than Sambhar salt, being of 97-98% purity. 2,00,000 maunds of common salt was at one time produced in Phlaudi State. In Nayar and Jodhpur States there are 36 villages covering 400 sq. miles of area where salt can be manufactured under particularly favourable conditions of production. In Rivasa, 1,2,5000 mds. of salt was produced.

Thirty miles from Sambhar is the Raichur salt lake with several other salt lakes in its proximity. Lakhs of maunds of salt were manufactured in the villages of Nasoda, Pali, Humauns, Sayanko, Dharasani, Khedwa Goora, Kuchpak, Lalki, Sanod, Rupvas, Buryalo and Samwora. Other places of salt manufacture were Akhari, Parvata and extensive areas round Bhakigaon, Bhakhi-mandol and Jahyali. In these places salt can be dug up in a free natural state.

In Chakur near Churu in Bikaner, 250,000 mds. of salt was annually produced. In Pokhtu 30,000 mds. of salt was annually produced. In Durgapur State, Mr. Young in the year 1890 catalogued 2992 salt factories, the annual production being 70,000 to 80,000 mds. of salt. In Jhabua State two varieties of salt were produced, phul and sadhara, with sodium chloride content of 96 and 88% respectively.

In Jaisalmer State 30,000 mds. were produced in the year 1867. In Bharatpur State according to the Government report of 1867-68 the annual production averaged :

Matia	12,000 mds.
Katila	75,000 "
Purania	6,00,000 "

In 1867 salt was manufactured in the villages of Sultanpur, Sadrana, Saidpur, Mahmudpur, Mubarikpur, Basirpur, Balpur, Kaliabaz, Jaharpur and Silona, covering an area of 1565 acres. The number of salt wells was 330. The average annual salt production from these wells was 5,056,058 mds. In the years 1866 and 1868, the salt manufactured and sold was 6,94,357 mds. The figure for 1877-78 was 9,24,442 mds.

In Burari, 8 miles from Delhi, 2,00,000 mds. of salt was manufactured in 19 villages, covering an area of 30 sq. miles. Tanks in this area yield  $1\frac{1}{2}$  ozs. of salt from every 2 lbs. of water. Other places of manufacture are Basipur, Adari, Ferozepur, Ghadi and Dariapur. In Ballabhadra Tahsil, salt is manufactured from saline earth in 30 villages. In Rahtak Dist. there were 90 nitre factories, in Hansi and Hissar 50, in Shahpur Dist. 19. In Jind State nitre was manufactured in 72 villages out of the total 150. In Bhawalpur State the manufacture of salt was stopped by paying an annual compensation of Rs. 86,000 to the State. Similarly, in Yudo Kotah State the manufacture of salt was stopped in 1867 by paying Rs. 38,000 annually as compensation. In Mysore State the Government income for the year 1867 from the salt pans was Rs. 13,007/12/7. On behalf of Riyasat Bow in the Bombay Presidency a letter was addressed to the Government in 1926 to the effect that 2 lakh maunds of salt annually could easily be dug out of the ground and put into the market if the necessary permission was granted.

In U. P., at one time there were said to be 15,000 salt factories in operation in the province. As a result of their activities there, was a diminution of 10 lakhs of maunds in the sale of Government salt in the year 1867.

In the Bombay Presidency, in Malabar and Canara there were 6438 salt factories which were stopped. According to a report by Mr. T. A. Barber in 1876, 6438 persons were thrown out of employment as a result of the suppression of salt manufacture.

In Bengal, salt was manufactured all along the sea coast up to Banglore and Cuttack in Orissa. The production of salt was 44 lakhs maunds and gave employment to 44,000 men.

In Madras, according to Mr. Bruce (1863), there were a number of salt lakes in Ganjam, Rajahmundry and Masulipattam where salt was manufactured at the cost of Rs. 40/- per 120 maunds. According to Plowdeon there was a lake 30 miles in length near Vedaranyam which yielded white crystalline salt. When all efforts to prevent the people from manufacturing salt failed an attempt was made to destroy the salt and thus, the manufacture was put to an end. In Levingpura, Sevatalakulam, Urani, Kamalapattanam, Arumugeneri, Kiranpur and Kulasekharapattanam in Tinnevely Dist. on the western seaboard there were a number of factories manufacturing salt which were stopped in 1844.

In Sind salt was manufactured in a number of places in Thar and Parkar districts in 1847 and the Run of Cutch. In 1845-46, 6,924 mds. of salt were produced from Mokai lake in the desert of Sind. There are a number of places where crystalline salt is found. According to Mr. Burke there is a salt deposit 20 miles by 15 near Kotri station. The amount of salt in it is estimated to be 184,41,51,430 tons. Up to the year 1878 and 1879 salt was manufactured from saline earth. There were innumerable factories for the manufacture of salt from saline earth. In that year the salt tax was raised from as. 8/- to Rs. 2/8/- per maund and all these small factories were stopped.

APPENDIX E

LIVERPOOL SALT—A MONSTROSITY

Mr. F. W. Prideaux, Asst. Examiner of India, No. 1815 in his evidence before the Select Committee of Indian territories clearly stated that the East India Company's price fixation policy of salt in Bengal was influenced by the consideration of helping British manufacturers of salt as well as British exporters. The shipping industry suffered in the East India trade from a dearth of cargo on the outward journey. Stones had often to be used as ballast. Later salt came to be used as the most suitable material to be transported, both as ballast and as cargo. James Aikin, shipowner, gave the following evidence before the 1836 Select Committee on Salt:

"Mr. Bagshaw: Do you know many shipowners at the port of Liverpool who would much prefer loading salt immediately on the vessels arriving for Calcutta, than to keep them in the berths waiting for light goods? . . . Certainly, and as I presume the object of the Committee is to obtain information and not to enter into a contract, I will endeavour to show the testimony I have given is correct. We obtain from Liverpool to Calcutta freight amounting to £ 500 to £ 600. After lying on the berth a month or six weeks, if we could get the same sum by taking salt £1 per ton in a few days instead of weeks, of course, we should prefer it; even if we did it at a cheaper rate, the difference of time would more than compensate."

What the import of foreign salt meant to the people of Bengal and Bengal's Salt Industry will be seen from the following from Frederick J. Haliday, Secretary, Government of India, Home Dept.:

"It is generally understood by those acquainted with the subject and it cannot be denied by any one, who looks into the details, that the present price of the government manufactured salt in Bengal is very much raised to the consumer in the market by the necessary want of economy, not to say extravagance, connected with the Government system of manufacture and by those many speculations and extortions and corruptions which are inevitable in such a system and carried on with such instruments. It has seemed almost certain under these circumstances to persons informed upon the subject that if the Government were to withdraw, if there were no duty imposed and the whole were left perfectly free, the native manufacturer in Bengal would forthwith completely and entirely undersell the imported salt and there would not be a grain of salt imported into Bengal."

And this in spite of the fact that, the salt manufactured in Bengal, as the test, showed, was as good as, if not better than, the imported salt.

In 1931 the question of imposing a customs duty on imported salt was brought up before the Central Legislative Assembly and it was resolved to impose a duty of 4½ as. per maund on it. This was calculated to bring Rs. 34 lakhs of additional revenue to the Government. A countervailing duty of an equivalent amount was at the same time put on salt imported into Bengal from other provinces. This continued during the year 1932-33. In March 1933, the duty was reduced to  $2\frac{1}{2}$  as. per md. and in 1936 still further to  $1\frac{1}{2}$  as. per md. Finally in May 1938 it was altogether removed with the result that in that year the import of Aden salt into Bengal decreased from 8378440 to 4524829 mds. But whereas in 1937-38 salt imports from Port Said, Jibuti and Ras Haifa were nil, in 1938-39, 2112480 mds. were imported from Port Said, 561630 from Jibuti, 452640 mds. from Ras Haifa. Liverpool which in 1937-38 had exported only 22 mds. of salt, in 1938-39 exported 169710 mds. and in 1930-40 234875 mds. The import of salt into Bengal from other parts of India, which in 1937-38 was 6234059 mds. or 39.43% of the total consumption, fell in 1938-39 to 549874 mds. or 38.96% of the total consumption. But the import of Aden salt was reduced, as we have already seen, to half the import, and the import from Liverpool increased from 22 mds. to 169710 mds. In other words the foreign salt completely replaced the deficit caused by the drop in the import of Aden and Indian salt.

APPENDIX F

SALT AS MANURE AND CATTLE FEED

As in the case of salt used for human consumption, so in the case of salt used for agricultural purposes as manure, there has been a marked decline as a result of the imposition of the salt-tax.

Mr. Robertson, who was appointed by Government to report upon agricultural conditions in Coimbatore observed in the course of his report:

"Salt has long been used for promoting vegetation. It is of the greatest value as a manure in inland countries .... It has been ascertained by direct experiment that the lands near some coasts receive annually as much as 300 lbs. of salt per acre carried to it by the winds. Salt is generally used as an auxiliary manure with lime or other manures. In England as much as 600 lbs. of salt per acre is applied with other manure to land intended for Mangold Surtzel, and for meadow land a usual top dressing is 200 lbs. of salt with 100 lbs. of nitrate of soda. Heavy dressings of salt are sometimes applied to pasture land to improve the herbage and kill insects injurious to grass."

The same was testified to by Sir Thomas Bernard, Bart., in his evidence before the 1888 Select Committee on Salt Duties in England. Quoting from a letter from Mr. Bevin of Chester, he described the results of an experiment made on a farm 'overrun with coltfoot and other weed' of strewing on it ashes from salt works. The account concluded:

"The effect on the corn crops, besides destroying the weed completely, was very great. I do not exaggerate in saying, that on the part of the field on which this manure was laid, the crop was nearly treble in proportion and the grain, of excellent quality."

The following figures of the issue of denatured salt will show how our agriculture is starved of the necessary manure:

1914-1915	2644 mds.
1915-1916	2655 "
1918-1919	suspended on account of shortage
1919-1920	175 mds.
1920-1921	402 mds.
1922-1923	772 mds.
1925-1926	2407 mds.

In cattle the salt hunger obtains in such an intense form that cattle often resort to human or animal excreta by the wayside to satisfy it.

"I marvelled very much at this abnormal appetite," observes Ratton in his Handbook on Salt, "but subsequently finding that such cattle were depastured on poor grass without any salt whatever either in their natural food, or in the crude state, I ceased to wonder, for these excrements happen to contain an appreciable amount of salt and are often rich in it. The consequences of the habit are most dangerous."

Ratton goes on to describe how it gives rise to the disease of hytids, and how herds of cattle perishing therefrom had been saved by the liberal use of salt, "not that salt is in any sense a remedy, but it is a prophylactic or preventive of the disease."

That the scarcity is the direct result of the salt duty will be seen from the following from the evidence of John Crawford of the Bengal Medical Service before the Select Committee on salt in British India (1836):

"It is a constant argument used by the Board of Customs against an increased consumption of salt in Bengal that salt neither is, nor ever will be, used except for mere alimentary purposes. This is not strictly correct, even as applicable to the present state of things. A good deal of salt (not indeed nitrate of soda, for that being highly taxed cannot be used for such a purpose, but of other impure and untaxed substitutes) is given to horses, horned cattle and even to sheep; pure salt, and in considerable quantity, would no doubt be given, if it could be afforded."

Hindustani Pracharak School, Wardha

The Hindustani Prachar Sabha, Wardha, has decided to open a Hindustani Pracharak School in Wardha from 1st July, 1946, in order to accelerate the creation of teachers of the national language. It is intended to select 25 pupils from all over India to receive the training. Only such persons will be chosen who have a good knowledge of either of the two languages, Hindi or Urdu, and a working knowledge of the other. The training will be for a period of 10 months. 15 students will be eligible, according to their capacity, for a scholarship each of Rs. 25/- per month.

The prospectus and rules of the School may be had from the Sabha Office, Wardha. All applications must be in by 10th June, 1946.

Arrangements for receiving women students can be made at the Mahila Ashram, Wardha. Intending women applicants may apply for rules and prospectus to the Secretary, Mahila Ashram, Wardha.

SHRIMAN NARAYAN AGARWAL
Secretary,

Hindustani Prachar Sabha, Wardha

AYURVEDA AND NATURE CURE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Vaidya Vallabharam, Professor of Ayurveda and Vanaspati Shastra writes:

"By combining Ayurveda with allopathy the essentials of the former science have been almost destroyed. Cure through Ayurveda is based on the five elements. Misuse of air will cause wind, that of fire bile, of water phlegm. The progress of Ayurveda depends on its recognition of these basic factors in disease. It holds that for the cure of such complaints as mentioned above, the remedy lies in the proper use of air, light and water. The religious factor must be there too in order scrupulously to observe the laws of nature. Pathya (diet cure) is a scientific term of the greatest importance in Ayurveda. Its real meaning is that freedom from disease depends on a proper observance of the laws of nature.

"Vagbhat says:

"Without strict dieting of what use is medicine? With strict dieting why any other medicine?"

I have no doubt whatsoever that the spread of Ramanama and pure living are the best and cheapest preventives of disease. The tragedy is that doctors, hakims and vaidyas do not make use of Ramanama as the sovereign of cures. There is no place given to it in current Ayurvedic literature except it be in the shape of a charm which will drive people further into the well of superstition. Ramanama has in fact no connection with superstition. It is nature's supreme law. Whoever observes it is free from disease and vice versa. The same law which keeps one free from disease applies also to its cure. An apt question is as to why a man who recites Ramanama regularly and leads a pure life should ever fall ill. Man is by nature imperfect. A thoughtful man strives after perfection, but never attains it. He stumbles on the way, however, unwittingly. The whole of God's law is embodied in a pure life. The first thing is to realize one's limitations. It should be obvious that the moment one transgresses those limits one falls ill. Thus a balanced diet eaten in accordance with needs gives one freedom from disease. How is one to know what is the proper diet for one? Many such enigmas can be imagined. The purport of it all is that everyone should be his own doctor and find out his limitations. The man who does so will surely live up to 125.

Vaidya Vallabharam asks whether well known home drugs and condiments can be included in nature cure. Doctor friends claim that they do nothing more than investigating the laws and act accordingly and that therefore they are the best nature cure men. Everything can be explained away in this manner. All I want to say is that anything more than Ramanama is really contrary to true nature cure. The more one recedes from this central principle the farther away one goes from nature cure. Following this line of thought I limit nature cure to the use of the five elements. But a Vaidya who goes beyond this and uses such herbs as grow or can be grown in his neighbourhood purely for service of the sick and not for money may claim to be a nature cure man. But where are such Vaidyas to be found? Today most of them are engaged in making money. They do no research work and it is because of their greed and mental laziness that the science of Ayurveda is at a low ebb. Instead of admitting their own weakness they throw the blame on government and public men. Government is powerless to help those who through their own fault become helpless and thereby drag the name of Ayurveda in the mud.

Simla, 9-5-'46

(Condensed from Harijanbandhu)

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. The Congress Constitution makes it incumbent on all its candidates standing for election to be habitual wearers of hand-spun and hand-woven Khadi. Does this not imply that they can only use that Khadi which is certified by the A. I. S. A.?

A. In my opinion it cannot be otherwise.

Q. Is a dealer in uncertified Khadi eligible to hold office in a Congress Committee?

A. It is beyond my conception as to how a dealer in uncertified Khadi can be a Congressman, leave alone an aspirant for holding office in any Congress Committee.

Q. You say that a dealer in uncertified Khadi cannot even be a Congressman much less an office holder. But what about those who are office holders in Congress and who deal in mill and even sell foreign cloth?

A. My answer to the second question is equally applicable to the persons referred to in the third. It is for these very reasons that I have recommended the removal of the relevant clauses from the Congress constitution. Experience has taught us that we are unable to adhere to the rules in question.

Simla, 8-5-'46

(From Harijansevak)

CONTENTS		PAGE
WITH THE SOUTH AFRICAN
DELEGATION	... PYARELAL	134
A SIMLA DIARY	... PYARELAL	135
HEART SEARCHING	... PYARELAL	137
USEFUL HINTS	... J. C. KUMARAPPA	138
A GOOD REMINDER	... M. K. GANDHI	139
HOW CAN VIOLENCE BE STOPPED?	... M. K. GANDHI	140
TOTAL PROHIBITION	... M. K. GANDHI	140
SLIGHTING SWARAJ?	... M. K. GANDHI	141
AN EXACTION & OPPRESSION	... PYARELAL	141
AYURVEDA & NATURE CURE	... M. K. GANDHI	148
QUESTION BOX	... M. K. GANDHI	148
NOTES:
NON-VIOLENCE & KHADI	... M. K. G.	133
COCKTAIL PARTIES	... M. K. G.	133
HARIJAN COOKS	... M. K. G.	133
VALMIKIS OF SIMLA	... M. K. G.	133
TO CORRESPONDENTS	... M. K. G.	133
HINDUSTANI PRACHARAK SCHOOL, WARDHA	... AGARWAL	147

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 16]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, MAY 26, 1946.

[ TWO ANNAS

NATIONAL LANGUAGE OF INDIA

Gandhiji has given many things to India, but probably very few people realize that one of the biggest things that she has received at his hands is the idea of national language. Although she could boast of several languages there was none which was universally accepted as her national language.

English came to us through the Government, but soon it so dominated the country that it became the medium for higher education and social intercourse among the educated class. They were ashamed to speak in their national language and considered it a mark of honour and distinction to speak in English only on all occasions. Even in their private conversations they could not put away their English.

A new political awakening came over the country towards the close of the last century when the Indian National Congress was founded. The sessions of the Congress were held to make the demands and decisions of the nation heard to the world. But even this voice was not in the national tongue. We wanted to proclaim to England that India was for Indians and for none other. But to say that, we could find no language of our own and were content to express our longing in a borrowed tongue.

The entry of Gandhiji in the political field spelt a complete revolution—the country began to speak in its own tongues. To speak in the national tongue ceased to be regarded as a shame. Gandhiji reminded the people that the thing to be ashamed of was to forget one's own tongue. He toured all over the country in 1920-21 and delivered hundreds of speeches but without exception they were in Hindustani.

When I was under detention at Ranchi during the Great War, I remember having read in the newspapers the report of the War Conference which Lord Chelmsford had summoned in 1917. Gandhiji participated in it, but he had made it a condition that he would speak in Hindustani. At that time this was regarded by the Press as a strange innovation. But the innovation was soon to become the common thing in the country and today we see that Hindustani has taken the place that English held twentyfive years ago.

(From Harijansevak) ABUL KALAM AZAD

[The foregoing is a translation of the article of Maulana Saheb written for the Hindustani edition of 'Harijan'. He is a Hindustani scholar and believes in a simple combination of Hindi and Urdu to be the standard national speech of all India which millions can easily understand. He believes that such a combination is natural. By way of illustration of what he says, he will contribute a short weekly article to the Hindustani edition of 'Harijan' called 'Harijansevak'.

New Delhi, 21-5-'46

M. K. G.]

HYPNOTISM OF ENGLISH

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"You are making a tireless effort for the propagation of Hindustani. You do not like that Indians should speak or write in any foreign tongue in preference to Hindustani. May I draw your attention to the attitude of the owners of the so-called nationalist English newspapers towards their Indian languages editions? May I ask how this kind of invidious discrimination on their part helps the spread of the national tongue? You have only to compare the scale of salaries paid to the staff working on the English dailies with that of their Indian languages editions respectively to see the glaring disparity between the two. The former get nearly ten times as much as the latter. The editor of an English daily some times gets as much as Rs. 2000/- per month but that of a Hindi daily does not get even Rs. 200/-. An English newspaper is provided all the facilities. It gets the news straight from the teleprinter and has only to set it to type, whereas its Hindi counterpart must get the news translated before it can be printed. Thus it has to put in double the labour and yet receives neither encouragement nor appreciation. Why should they, who work on these newspapers then, care for the Indian languages, when they find that English is everywhere in demand and they have to starve in spite of their pains? Another thing to be noted is that the circulation of Indian languages newspapers is by no means less than that of the English ones. But just as on the Indian railways, in spite of the fact that they derive the bulk of their revenue from the third class passenger traffic, all the amenities are reserved for the first and second class passengers, even so the owners of English newspapers mete out a step-motherly treatment to the readers of their Indian languages editions."

The foregoing letter is from a fellow worker in the cause. He knows what he is writing about. Nor are the facts referred to by him unknown to the Indian public. The question is how to break the spell that the English language exercises over us.

It is an essential part of our struggle for Swaraj or else we shall have to revise our definition of Swaraj. In slavery, the slave has to ape the manners and ways of the master, e. g. dress, language, etc. Gradually he develops a liking for it to the exclusion of everything else. When the British yoke is lifted and we are independent, this infatuation, with the English language, will automatically go. In the meantime, let those who have realized the harm that this infatuation has done to the country make it a point to use Hindustani or their mother-tongue only.

It is a fact that the editors of English newspapers earn ten times as much as the editors of newspapers in the Indian languages. The remedy for it also lies in our hands. The market value of English will find its natural level, once the British empire over India goes, for the simple reason that India cannot afford to pay on a lavish scale. India is a poor country, and so long as the lot of the poorest of the poor remains unameliorated, we have no right to draw fat salaries. The fact, however, is that it rests with the newspaper reading public to raise or reduce the prestige and price of the Indian languages newspapers. If they will cease to regard English papers as their gospel and transfer their patronage to Indian languages newspapers instead, the proprietors will be compelled soon to take note of the change and adjust their policies accordingly. Something like that is happening already. There was a time when Indian languages newspapers had a poor circulation compared to English. Now the scales are reversed. Indian languages newspapers are increasing both in number and circulation.

But those who are running Indian newspapers in Indian languages also owe a duty in the matter even like the newspaper reading public. The language of the newspapers in the Indian languages is often poor and the writings appearing in them lack originality. Newspapermen alone can remove these defects.

New Delhi, 21-5-'46
(From Harijansevak)

By M. K. Gandhi
Economics of Khadi

Price Rs. 4-0-0, Postage 13 Annas

Constructive Programme

—Its Meaning and Place

Price Rs. 0-6-0, Postage 2 Annas

Cent Per Cent Swadeshi

Price Rs. 2, Postage 5 Annas

By J. C. Kumarappa

Practice & Precepts of Jesus

Price 1-8-0, Postage 6 Annas

Christianity—Its Economy & Way of Life

Price Rs. 1-8-0, Postage 6 Annas

By Babu Rajendra Prasad

Constructive Programme

—Some Suggestions

Price 0-8-0, Postage 2 Annas

KHADI SCIENCE SCHOOL IN BOMBAY

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Shri Viththaldas Jerajani is one of those who will do his utmost to put into practice what he is once convinced is the right thing to do. When I returned home in 1915 from South Africa after 20 years' exile, he was at that time running a large Swadeshi Stores in Bombay. I explained to him that he was dealing in what was 'swadeshi' only in name. It was not difficult for him to understand that he had been labouring under a delusion but it was not clear to him what he should do. Beyond pointing out the flaw I too was unable to give him practical guidance straightaway. But I could not remain content without making efforts to put into practice what I believed. As soon as possible I threw myself heart and soul into producing Khadi and Shri Viththaldas started business in Khadi sales. At that time all the Khadi that was produced was sold in Bombay. Khadi weavers in the production areas could be counted on the fingers of one hand. The history of the gradual growth of Khadi is very interesting but I may not dwell on it here.

Now that it has been realized that Khadi merely as a commercial commodity has been a mistake, Shri Viththaldas has taken another step forward. I give below the gist of his account of his doings which he has described in a Gujarati letter to me :

"I have already informed you that two out of the original four Khadi Bhandars in Bombay have been converted into teaching centres. Instead of windows dressed with attractive Khadi for purposes of sales, people are treated to look at all the implements of Khadi production beginning from cotton right up to yarn. Those who are tempted to gain practical knowledge enter the showrooms and are given instruction should they so desire. Up till now there are 209 pupils and the attendance is fairly good for learning all the processes. Shri Kakubhai has taken up the work with zest and is devoting all his time to it.

"For weaving we could only get one place in Andheri where we have put up looms. Owing to the difficulty of procuring accommodation in Bombay, half the shop in Kalbadevi Road has been turned into a weaving centre also. The services of an expert have been obtained. It remains to be seen how far we can progress in this line.

"During the war Khadi sales mounted high owing to cloth shortage. Today also cloth for everyday needs is hard to get and other cloth has gone into the black market and fetches fantastic prices. Khadi is, therefore, still considered cheap and if it weren't for the fact that yarn currency even to a limited extent is in vogue we simply could not meet the demand nor cope with the rush on our stores. The danger of Khadi going to the black market might even have been there.

"Political awakening has always connoted a pari passu increase in the demand for Khadi and it is good that those who really believe in it and yet have been lazy about spinning will now have to take to the wheel. Conditions for teaching spinning are therefore favourable."

There is nothing striking about the figures given by Shri Jerajani. Those who think that the world is full of crazy people have every right to say that Bombay has its full quota of such folk. Men of faith believe that the world is the better for them. The man who strives for the impossible may be looked upon as a burden. But the crazy man who is possessed by some special idea is the crazy man who is prized by society. I place Shri Viththaldas in this category. To find even a few people in a pleasure-loving city like Bombay who realize the power of Khadi is no small matter for satisfaction. Khadi will grow to its full height of course only when it is manufactured in every village and in every home and used there.

Just as Bombay is the foremost city where giving money in charity is concerned, so it can play a leading part in the difficult task of producing Khadi. Who would not like Bombay to hold this coveted position? Shri Viththaldas and his colleagues are working hard for this goal. If they die in the attempt to bring their dreams to fruition their death will be worth while. They must, however, hasten slowly in order to avoid mistakes. If they are watchful and mend their errors at once all will surely be well with their work.

Simla, 9-5-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

AN EXPERIMENT IN NATIONAL DIET

A striking experiment was carried out in Denmark in the last year of the Great War which has a moral for us in the present food crisis. The Danes as a people were, in the first instance, largely lacto-vegetarian in their diet. Then about 1870-1880 American wheat and barley from the virgin soil of the prairies began to pour in and forced the Danes to change their agricultural methods quickly. They began to raise pigs and poultry and became exporters of eggs and bacon and butter to England. They also became big eaters of meat and eggs themselves.

The blockade following the entry of the United States into the war created a serious situation for the Danes. Denmark had a population of 35,00,000 human beings and 50,00,000 domestic animals. Grain and fodder used to come from America. The sudden stoppage of the American imports created an acute shortage of these articles. Professor Mikkel Hindhede, Superintendent of the State Institute of Food Research, was appointed Food Adviser to the Danish Government to deal with the crisis. The question which he was called upon to decide was this. So far the pigs had provided ham and bacon for the English as well as the Danes. Would it be wise in this crisis to get rid of the pigs and let men eat the grain which otherwise the pigs would eat? Hindhede decided it would be wise and so some four-fifths of the pigs and about one sixth of the cattle were killed. The pigs gone, the bran which was fed to them was set free and was utilized for making whole meal bread with the entire coarse bran incorporated. This was the celebrated Kliebrot which was made official for the whole country. In addition to it the Danes ate porridge, green vegetables, milk, butter and fruit. "No grain or potatoes were allowed for distillation of spirits, so there were no spirits." Half the previous quantity of beer was permitted. Only people on the farms got meat. The people in the cities, about 40 per cent of the population got very little meat. Only the rich could afford beef.

The food regulations were begun in March 1917, and were made stringent from October 1917 to October 1918.

An amazing result followed from the enforcement of this national diet. Death rate which had been 12.5 in 1913-14 now fell to 10.4 per thousand "which is the lowest mortality figure that has been registered in any European country at any time" (Hindhede). To express the results in another way, taking the average from 1906 to 1916 as 160, in the October to October year it was 66. "Even in men over 65 the figure fell to 76."

Before the fiat the Danes ate fine meal bread and whole meal bread. Hindhede made them eat only whole meal bread with extra bran. Its proportions were given out as 67% rye, 21% oats and 12% bran.

"Except for the bran which added vegetable meat for those who were animally meatless or meat short," observes Hindhede, "this bread was the bread which the Danes used to eat before the invasion of American wheat," and which had been the "national bread of Denmark for centuries."

Hindhede attributed the remarkable improvement in the national health of the Danes to (1) less meat, (2) less alcohol. "The bran largely filled the gap of the scanty or absent meat, bran having a good proportion of vegetable meat protein." He regarded his experiment as a "triumph of his previous teaching." "The reader knows," he wrote in Deutsche Medizinische Wochenschrift of March 1920, "how sharply I have emphasized the advantages of a lacto-vegetarian diet. I am not in principle a vegetarian but I believe I have shown that a diet containing a large amount of meat and eggs is dangerous to health."

Delhi, 9-5-'46

PYARELAL

Still Worse

Last week I appealed to women to pull their full weight in trying to alleviate the sufferings of our Harijan brothers and sisters everywhere and asked a band of sisters to go to the Harijan quarters in Reading Road, New Delhi and minister to the needs of the inhabitants, in particular of the women and children there.

Since then Gandhiji has visited the Harijan quarters in Ajmeri Gate and I was one of the party who accompanied him. I had visited this place ten years ago with Mahadevbhai and his facile pen had then tragically described this basti in 'Harijan'. It was sad to find these unfortunate human beings still wallowing in the mire with the pigs who share their lot. Their woeful state needs to be seen to be believed. The committee in charge of this particular area and the M. O. H. ought to be relieved of their duties if they are incapable of fulfilling them. The residents of Delhi ought also to be ashamed of themselves for being callous in regard to these plague spots. Concerted public agitation can never fail if it is arrayed against manifest evil. This is surely a matter on which both Indian and European, official and non-official can join hands. These plague spots, truth to tell, exist all over our country and the blame for them must be shared by us all. Women will acquit themselves to some extent if they get Harijan bastis everywhere reformed and made as habitable as their own homes.

Simla, 3-5-'46

A. K.

HARIJAN

May 26

1946

AN ANALYSIS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

After four days of searching examination of the State Paper issued by the Cabinet Mission and the Viceroy on behalf of the British Government, my conviction abides that it is the best document the British Government could have produced in the circumstances. It reflects our weakness, if we would be good enough to see it. The Congress and the Muslim League did not, could not agree. We would grievously err if at this time we foolishly satisfy ourselves that the differences are a British creation. The Mission have not come all the way from England to exploit them. They have come to devise the easiest and quickest method of ending British rule. We must be brave enough to believe their declaration until the contrary is proved. Bravery thrives upon the deceit of the deceiver.

My compliment, however, does not mean that what is best from the British standpoint is also best or even good from the Indian. Their best may possibly be harmful. My meaning will, I hope, be clear from what follows.

The authors of the document have endeavoured to say fully what they mean. They have gathered from their talks the minimum they thought would bring the parties together for framing India's charter of freedom. Their one purpose is to end British rule as early as may be. They would do so, if they could, by their effort, leave a united India not torn asunder by internecine quarrel bordering on civil war. They would leave in any case. Since in Simla the two parties, though the Mission succeeded in bringing them together at the Conference table (with what patience and skill they could do so, they alone could tell), could not come to an agreement, nothing daunted, they descended to the plains of India, and devised a worthy document for the purpose of setting up the Constituent Assembly which should frame India's charter of independence, free of any British control or influence. It is an appeal and an advice. It has no compulsion in it. Thus the Provincial Assemblies may or may not elect the delegates. The delegates, having been elected, may or may not join the Constituent Assembly. The Assembly having met, may lay down a procedure different from the one laid down in the Statement. Whatever is binding on any person or party arises out of the necessity of the situation. The separate voting is binding on both the major parties, only because it is necessary for the existence of the Assembly and in no otherwise. At the time of writing, I took up the Statement, re-read it clause by clause, and came to the conclusion that there was nothing in it binding in law. Honour and necessity alone are the two binding forces.

What is binding is that part of it which commits the British Government. Hence, I suppose, the four members of the British mission took the precaution of receiving full approval of the British Government and the two Houses of Parliament. The Mission are entitled to warm congratulations for the first step in the act of renunciation which the Statement is. Since other steps are necessary for full renunciation, I have called this one a promissory note.

Though the response to be made by India is to be voluntary, the authors have naturally assumed that the Indian parties are well organized and responsible bodies capable of doing voluntary acts as fully as, if not more fully than, compulsory acts. Therefore, when Lord Pethick-Lawrence said to a press correspondent, "If they do come together on that basis, it will mean that they will have accepted that basis, but they can still change it, if by a majority of each party they desire to do so," he was right in the sense that those who became delegates, well knowing the contents of the Statement, were expected by the authors to abide by the basis, unless it was duly altered by the major parties. When two or more rival parties meet together, they do so under some understanding. A self-chosen umpire (in the absence of one chosen by the parties, the authors constitute themselves one) fancies that the parties will come together only if he presents them with a proposal containing a certain minimum, and he makes his proposal, leaving them free to add to, subtract from or altogether change it by joint agreement.

This is perfect so far. But what about the units? Are the Sikhs, for whom the Punjab is the only home in India, to consider themselves against their will, as part of the section which takes in Sindh, Baluchistan and the Frontier Province? Or is the Frontier Province also against its will to belong to the Punjab, called "B" in the Statement, or Assam to "C" although it is a predominantly non-Muslim province? In my opinion, the voluntary character of the Statement demands that the liberty of the individual unit should be unimpaired. Any member of the sections is free to join it. The freedom to opt out is an additional safeguard. It can never be a substitute for the freedom retained in paragraph 15(5) which reads:

"Provinces should be free to form groups with executives and legislatures and each group could determine the Provincial subjects to be taken in common."

It is clear that this freedom was not taken away by the authors by section 19 which 'proposes' (does not order) what should be done. It presupposes that the Chairman of the Constituent Assembly at its first meeting will ask the delegates of the Provinces whether they would accept the group principle and if they do, whether they will accept the assignment given to their Province. This freedom inherent in every Province and that given by 15 (5) will remain intact. There appears to me to be no other way of avoiding the apparent conflict between the two paragraphs as also the charge of compulsion which would immediately alter the noble character of the document. I would, therefore, ask all those who are perturbed by the group proposal and the arbitrary assignment, that, if my interpretation is valid, there is not the slightest cause for perturbation.

There are other things in the document which would puzzle any hasty reader who forgets that it is simply an appeal and an advice to the nation showing how to achieve independence in the shortest time possible. The reason is clear. In the new world that is to emerge out of the present chaos, India in bondage will cease to be 'the brightest jewel' in the British crown, it will become the blackest spot in that crown, so black that it will be fit only for the dustbin. Let me ask the reader to hope and pray with me that the British crown has a better use for Britain and the world. The 'brightest jewel' is an arrogation. When the promissory note is fully honoured, the British crown will have a unique jewel as of right flowing from due performance of duty.

There are other matters outside the Statement which are required to back the promissory note. But I must defer that examination to the next issue of 'Harijan'.

New Delhi, 20-5-'46

MANGO SEED KERNEL

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A friend has sent me an extract from "Current Science" showing how mango seed kernel is a fair substitute for cereals and fodder.

"According to a recent estimate, the concentrates available in India are sufficient only for 29.1% and fodder for 78.5% of adult bovine population. This does not take into account the requirements of goats, sheep and equines. The shortage is further accentuated during periods of famine. In order to meet the shortages, the Nutritional Research Laboratory at Izat-Nagar have been exploring new sources of foodstuffs. This investigation relates to the use of mango seed kernel as a cattle and human food. At present the material is thrown away as a waste. From chemical analysis of kernels it has been found to be rich in carbohydrates and fats (crude protein 8.5%, ether extract 8.85% and soluble carbohydrates 74.49% on dry basis.)

"The observations credit mango seed kernel with a place in the category of food grains and make available every year about 70 million lbs. digestible protein and 780 million lbs. of starch equivalent from a hitherto unutilized source. It has been also calculated that the digestible protein obtained from 80 lbs. of oats is equal to that of 100 lbs. of the kernel and the starch equivalent for 86 lbs."

I have known this use from my early youth. But no one seems to have thought of conserving this seed for food. The mango season is upon us and though much time has been lost, it will be a good thing if every mango seed was saved and the kernel baked and eaten in the place of cereals or given to those who need it. Every ounce of food saved is so much gained.

Delhi, 21-5-'46

NATURE CURE IN KANCHANGAON

(By M. K. Gandhi)

I settled down and started work in Uruli Kanchan in response to the invitation of the inhabitants there in the hope of making it a model nature cure centre for the villages of India. The people of the village had promised their co-operation. They were to have provided the land and erect buildings on it. But that has not yet materialized. They have given the money. But that is not enough for buying land and buildings. They have to find the land and to erect the buildings on it. Their active interest in it is more important than mere monetary aid.

According to the reports received from co-workers there, the inhabitants of Kanchangaon have begun to understand and appreciate nature cure. And the workers have developed such self-confidence that they won't mind, if I do not return there before June. They say that the people are co-operating with them so wholeheartedly that they can well afford to wait till I descend from Mahabaleshwar and Panchgani at the end of the warm season. All this has filled me with hope.

Nature cure consists of two parts. Firstly, to cure diseases by taking the name of God or Ramanama and secondly, to prevent illness by the inculcation of right and hygienic living. The report from the village says that the inhabitants are co-operating with them in keeping the village clean. I hold that where the rules of personal, domestic and public sanitation are strictly observed and due care is taken in the matter of diet and exercise, there should be no occasion for illness or disease. Where there is absolute purity, inner and outer, illness becomes impossible. If the village people could but understand this, they would not need doctors, hakims or vaidyas.

In Kanchangaon there are hardly any cows. That is unfortunate. There are some she buffaloes. But all the evidence that has come to me so far shows that buffalo's milk is no match for cow's in the health-giving quality. The vaidyas specially recommend cow's milk for patients. I, therefore, hope that the people of Uruli Kanchan will keep a herd of cows to insure a supply of fresh clean cow's milk to all. Milk is an absolute necessity for health.

Then, the sooner the buildings are erected the better. In the first place, it is a question as to how long we ought to go on using Shri Datar's bungalow. Secondly, and that is more important, so long as there is not adequate housing accommodation, proper treatment of patients is not possible. Accommodation for indoor patients is a necessity. I shall always hope that Kanchangaon will become an ideal village. Nature cure implies an ideal mode of life and that in its turn presupposes ideal living conditions in towns and villages. The name of God is, of course, the hub round which the nature cure system revolves.

Delhi, 21-5-'46

(From Harijansevak)

WEEKLY LETTER

BACK IN SWEEPERS' COLONY

Gandhiji was glad to be back once more in the Sweepers' Colony at Reading Road where he feels far more at home than on the Simla heights. Public prayer was resumed from the very first day of his arrival. But the prayer gatherings are now held not on the Ramalila grounds near the Ajmeri Gate but in the Mehtar compound itself. The Quranic prayer was led by the Fakir Badshah Khan. (He is now gone to his province.) Twice during the week he addressed the prayer gathering. On the first day he explained that all prayer, in whatever language or from whatever religion it was, was prayer addressed to one and the same God and taught mankind that all belonged to one family and should bear love to one another.

Echoing Badshah Khan's words at the end of the prayer, Gandhiji said it was a travesty of true religion to consider one's own religion as superior and others, as inferior. All religions enjoined worship of the One God who was all pervasive. He was present even in a droplet of water or in a tiny speck of dust. "Even those who worship idols, worship not the stone of which it is made; they try to see God who resides in it." Similarly it was a libel to call the Parsis fire-worshippers or sun-worshippers. The Parsi hymn which Dr. Dinshah Mehta had recited corresponded to the Gayatri of the Hindus. It was nothing but pure worship of God. Various religions were like the leaves on a tree. No two leaves were alike, yet there was no antagonism between them or between the branches on which they grew. Even so, there is an underlying unity in the variety which we see in God's creation.

SPECULATION FEVER

Speculation as to the contents of the impending announcement of the Cabinet Mission had reached a feverish height with the return from Simla of the Mission and other members of the Tripartite Conference. Friends had been asking, remarked Gandhiji, as to what the message was likely to contain. He did not know, nor did he speculate. It was no use giving a thought as to what it would contain. A man of prayer could not do otherwise. Good or bad, they would know all in another twentysix hours. It would then be open to them to accept or reject it. Instead of looking outwards let them search inward and ask God what their duty was in either event. For him and them in the meanwhile, it should be enough to know that the Cabinet Delegation had come all the way leaving their hearth and home to find out in what manner British rule was to end and when the last British soldier was to leave India, and not whether or not to leave India. It was necessary for them to find out whether the Congress and the Muslim League could be brought together. British rule had separated them and if they (the Cabinet Mission) failed it was small wonder. They were bound to come together soon after British hold on India had demonstrably ceased. The Cabinet Delegation's concern was to quit India without a moment's delay.

NO PAROCHIAL OUTLOOK

"But supposing the reverse happens," he continued, "they will be the losers, not we. We have chosen the path of self-suffering. We rise through our suffering. That is nature's law. He who clings to his sordid self or family interests loses. Man is sent into the world to perform his duty even at the cost of his life if necessary. We must therefore be braced for any suffering that may come in the performance of duty.

"All of us, Hindus and Musalmans, constitute an integral whole. If someone errs all must suffer for it. God has so ordered this world that no one can keep his goodness or badness exclusively to himself. The whole world is like the human body with its various members. Pain in one member is felt in the whole body. Rot in one part must inevitably poison the whole system. Let us, therefore, cease to think in terms of individuals and think in terms of the whole country. We must put faith in God and be careful for nothing. We hold our destiny in our own hands and no one but ourselves can make or mar it."

ON THE EVE

The after-prayer address on the following day, too, was devoted to preparing the people's mind for a just and dispassionate examination of the forthcoming announcement. He asked the gathering not to allow themselves to be led away by prejudice or hearsay, but to study the document itself carefully and then form their own opinion. He deprecated the habit of borrowing opinions from newspapers. "Newspapers should be for the study of facts. They should not be allowed to kill the habit of independent thinking." The English language, he warned them, was a difficult medium to master. Even he, after his residence for nearly twenty years among English speaking people, could not claim to have full mastery over it. They should therefore study the document in Hindustani to be able to grasp its full meaning. Whether they liked the announcement or not, it was going to be a most momentous one in the history of India and therefore deserved careful study. As men of prayer it further behoved them to put themselves entirely in the hands of God and pray to Him to illumine and purify them so as to fit them for understanding the document aright.

NOT AN AWARD

The Cabinet Delegation's announcement was published on Wednesday the 18th. The following day's discourse, therefore, naturally contained an examination of that document.

Taking as his text the song sung by Shrimati Sucheta Kripalani about "the land that was without sorrow and suffering," he proceeded to examine the Cabinet Mission's pronouncement in the light of the ideal set forth in that song. How far was the Cabinet Mission's pronouncement calculated to enable them to realize that ideal? "The poet says we are citizens of a country in which there is neither sorrow nor suffering. Where is such a country to be found in this world? I confess, throughout my wanderings I have not come across such a country so far. The poet has later described the conditions for the attainment of that ideal state. It is easy to observe them individually. For one who really and truly is pure at heart, there is no sorrow or suffering. But it is a difficult state for the millions to attain. Nevertheless we want India to be such a country." He had asked them on the previous day to examine independently of other people's opinions the Statement of the Cabinet Delegation when they saw it. They should examine it from the point of view of a country which would be without sorrow or suffering. He would give them his own reactions. He, however, did not want to contradict himself by asking them to follow his ideas if they did not appeal to them. Everyone should think for himself and herself. They were to weigh opinions and adopt only those they had assimilated.

He had glanced at the document casually on the previous night as soon as it was received. He had read it carefully in the morning. It was not an award. The Mission and the Viceroy had tried to bring the parties together but they could not bring about an agreement. So they had recommended to the country what in their opinion was worthy of acceptance by the Constituent Assembly. It was open to that body to vary it, reject it or improve upon it. There was no 'take it or leave it' business about their recommendations. If there were restrictions, the Constituent Assembly would not be a sovereign body, free to frame a constitution of independence for India. Thus the Mission had suggested for the Centre certain subjects. It was open to the Assembly by the majority vote of Muslims and non-Muslims separately, to add to them or even reduce them. And it was open to the Assembly to abolish the distinction which the Mission had felt forced to recognize. Similarly about grouping. The provinces were free to reject the very idea of grouping. No province could be forced against its will to belong to a group, even if the idea of grouping was accepted. He instanced only two things to illustrate his point. He had not exhausted the list of things which seemed to him to be open to objection or improvement.

Subject to the above interpretation, which he held was right, he told them that the Mission had brought forth something of which they had every reason to be proud.

SPIRIT OF C. F. A.

There were some, he proceeded, who said the English were incapable of doing the right thing. He did not agree with them. The Mission and the Viceroy were as God-fearing as they themselves claimed to be. It was beneath their dignity as men to doubt a person before he was proved to be untrue to his word. "The late Charlie Andrews was every inch of him an Englishman who had died slaving for India. It would be grievously wrong to doubt in advance every one of his countrymen." Whatever the wrong done to India by British rule, if the statement of the Mission was genuine, as he believed it was, it was in discharge of an obligation which they had declared the British owed to India, namely, to get off India's back. It contained the seed to convert this land of sorrow into one without sorrow and suffering.

THE LESSON OF THE TREES

Pursuing the theme of the previous day's song, Gandhiji asked in his next prayer discourse how they were to convert India, which was today the home of sorrow and suffering, into the ideal country about which the poet had sung. The reply he said was furnished by the song about the sermon of the trees which had just been sung. "In that song one is asked to take the lesson from the trees which themselves suffer the fierce rays of the sun and give shade to those who take shelter under them. To those who throw stones at them they respond by dropping fruit. That is true philanthropy. To learn that philanthropy we are asked in that song to go to Harijans. Today society has condemned Harijans to a life of filth and degradation. That is not their shame but our shame. Society has treated them as untouchables and condemned them to live in ghettos and yet they continue to render invaluable services to society for a mere pittance. It was open to them to take to more lucrative avocations as some of them have done. The fact that the vast majority of them have chosen not to, resounds to their credit." If they could show that spirit of service in spite of their ignorance and backwardness, he asked, how much more spirit of selfless service and sacrifice ought the so-called savarna classes to show?

THE ANNOUNCEMENT X-RAYED

He had remarked in his previous day's address that he saw the germs of the realization of the ideal envisaged by the poet in the song that had been sung on that day, in the announcement of the Cabinet Mission. But it was subject to the condition that it meant what it said. He likened that announcement to a promissory note, whose worth depended entirely on its genuineness and validity. "If the promise inscribed on a promissory note is not honoured, the note is worth nothing and fit only to be torn to pieces and thrown away." Truth meant everything to him. He had said that he would not purchase even Swaraj at the cost of truth, because Swaraj so purchased would be illusory. It was his hope and prayer, in which he invited the audience to join him, that the announcement of the Cabinet Mission would be finally honoured in letter and in spirit and that God would help the members of the Mission to discharge their promissory note even as He had done for His devotees in days of old.

MEANING OF PRAYER

On Sunday the 19th Fakir Badshah Khan again addressed the prayer gathering. His theme was the meaning and significance of prayer. The object of prayer, prarthana, or namaz, he said, was the same, viz. to purge ourselves of all dross and baseness so as to enable us to realize the bond of unity with the entire human family. Unfortunately, mankind had today lost its essential oneness and had got divided up into mutually antagonistic groups. All this was the result of a tragic delusion. "Prayer should fit one for service not of any particular section or community but of God's entire creation, for which he has sent us into this world."

Commenting on it Gandhiji said that if they had carefully followed and assimilated Badshah Khan's remarks they would know that the object of prayer was not to please God, who does not want our prayers or praise, but to purify ourselves. "God is omnipresent. There is not an atom in the universe without His presence. The process of self-purification consists in a conscious realization of His presence within us. There is no strength greater than that which such realization gives."

It had pleased him to see so many of them coming to attend the prayers, he said. But it would hurt him if he found that they had come just for fun, or, what would be worse still, to hear his political views. As a rule, politics should not be permitted to intrude upon prayer. He, however, could not avoid referring to current political topics sometimes in the course of his after-prayer discourses because life could not be divided into water-tight compartments. Presence of God had to be felt in every walk of life. If they thought that as soon as they left the prayer ground they could live and behave anyhow, their attendance of the prayer was useless. If their interest in prayer was genuine, the next day's prayer, he hoped, would be as numerously attended as on the day he spoke, although he would not be speaking on account of his Monday silence.

Monday is always the day of self-examination and prayer with Gandhiji. The silence enables him to be alone with God. Never has he felt the need to wait on the inner light for guidance more than on the present momentous occasion. And so, although he is now surrounded by his 'family', his thoughts are continually turned inward. Out of the depth of his silence and repose came his written message to the prayer gathering yesterday. "I only want to say to you that for India it is a day for deep and serious thinking. We should do nothing in haste. For, we are dealing with the destinies of dumb millions. It therefore becomes our bounden duty that, with God as witness, we should think only of the country with its 40 crores of people, not of our petty selves nor of our respective communities or groups. And whatever we decide we should act upon without fear or shame."

New Delhi,
21-5-'46

PYARELAL

A FAIR HIT

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"A report from New Delhi dated 16th April, published in the 'Times of India' of the 18th says that at a prayer meeting held on Tuesday evening you said:

"1. 'The machinery and even engineers were all foreign. He had no enmity with machinery. Mills, he said, could not remove the poverty of India, but on the other hand had deprived crores of villagers of their work and practically ruined them. Those Indians responsible for ruining the villages had become foreigners and as such they should live in foreign countries.'

"How can you reconcile this statement with the gentlemen who form the Board of Trustees of the Kasturba Memorial Fund, the primary aim of which is to improve conditions in villages. Majority of these gentlemen are industrialists and owners of mills. Can they, who are responsible for ruining the villages, and still continue to ruin them by their mills, be ever capable of sincere help in improving the condition of villagers?

"2. You have so often talked and written against the curse of black markets. How many of the trustees of the Kasturba Memorial Fund can lay their hands on their hearts and say they have not dealt in the black market either as buyers or sellers?"

This is a fair hit. That mill-owners and such others have joined the Kasturba Trust is a compliment to my ahimsa. Though I express my opinions strongly, there is no sting in them, nothing personal. I have no sense of shame in befriending mill-owners whose business, I hold, should be stopped, not forcibly but by reason. Education of the public could bring about results which no force can. I must say in favour of the capitalist class trustees that they never interfered with the decision of non-capitalist trustees. Indeed, they have always helped by their knowledge. The combination is good and beneficial to the Trust. Their sincerity cannot be questioned; for, they have faith in their capacity and the modern trend.

As to black markets, I do not know that any of the Trustees have black market dealings. But should I discover any, I should think twice before inviting them to leave the Trust. They have not imposed themselves on the Trust.

Delhi, 21-5-'46

CONTENTS	PAGE
NATIONAL LANGUAGE OF INDIA	ABUL KALAM AZAD 149
HYPNOTISM OF ENGLISH	... M. K. GANDHI 149
KHADI SCIENCE SCHOOL IN BOMBAY	... M. K. GANDHI 150
AN EXPERIMENT IN NATIONAL DIET	... PYARELAL 151
AN ANALYSIS	... M. K. GANDHI 152
MANGO SEED KERNEL	... M. K. GANDHI 153
NATURE CURE IN KANCHANGAON	... M. K. GANDHI 153
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL 154
A FAIR HIT	... M. K. GANDHI 156
NOTE:
STILL WORSE	... A. K. 151

HARIJAN

12 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 17]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, JUNE 2, 1946

[TWO ANNAS

SALARY OF M. L. A.'s

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. The monthly salary of an M. L. A. is Rs. 200/-. He is a mofussil member and, as such, is entitled to a daily allowance of Rs. 15/- when the Assembly is in session. Besides that, he may draw a conveyance of Rs. 2/8/- for any day on which he attends the meeting of the Assembly. Moreover, he is entitled to 'travelling allowance' for his journey from the usual place of residence to the City at the rate of one and a half times first class fare but he cannot draw 'travelling allowance' and 'daily allowance' for the same day.

1. (a) Should such a person as a representative and servant of the poor draw the salary?

(b) Would he be absolved from the wrong if he gave the whole amount to the local Congress Committee or the institution under which he is working for constructive work?

(c) If so, would it not mean that the end justifies the means?

2. He will have to live in the City when the Assembly is in session and has to incur some other expenditure for discharging his duties and responsibilities as an M. L. A.

(a) In the circumstances, may he, consistently with his ideal, draw the daily allowance to meet the expenses?

(b) If so, and if it be not permissible to draw a part of it, should he draw the whole of it and give the balance to the institution under which he is working?

(c) In that case, may he, consistently with his ideal, spend the balance or part thereof for his family, which will have otherwise to depend upon the charity of friends to make the two ends meet?

3. (a) Should he draw the conveyance allowance (meant for his conveyance inside the city for attending meetings) when the daily allowance will be more than sufficient to cover all his expenses including the conveyance?

(b) Should he avail of costly conveyance for attending meetings, if he usually travels in tram cars and buses?

4. If such a member travels third class on principle, what should he do regarding drawing 'mileage allowance' if it is not permissible to draw at lower rate than one and a half first class fares?

A. In my opinion, the salary and allowances drawn by the gentlemen of the various Assemblies are out of all proportion to the services they render to the country. The scales fixed are on the English pattern, not at all compatible with the income of this country—the poorest in the world. Therefore, the answer I suggest is that the Ministers should, with the consent of the Assemblies, reduce the whole scale in accordance with requirements and, in the meantime, either the amount taken should be handed to the party to which the member belongs, drawing what the party has fixed or, if that be not possible, drawing what his conscience thinks just for himself and his family and devoting the balance to some item of the constructive programme or some such public activity. The money allowed has to be drawn but nobody is obliged to use it for oneself except to the extent needed. No question here arises of end justifying the means.

New Delhi, 25-5-'46

INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The Indian Deputation from South Africa have made a great stir in India. They propose to approach the U. N. O. with a view to enlist the latter's sympathy. But the legislation is going through. The Indian High Commissioner will be withdrawn as he should be. What little aid he can render is nothing compared to the indignity of representing a country whose inhabitants are to be treated as an inferior race. This new caste is worse than the ancient but dying institution of India which has some redeeming features, even while it is dying. But the new civilized edition has none. It shamelessly proclaims that white civilization requires the erection of legal barriers in order to protect itself against Asiatics and Africans. The Indians in South Africa are bearing a heavy burden which they are well able to discharge. Satyagraha, the mightiest weapon in the world, was born and bred there. If they make effective use of it, it will be well with the sacred cause they are handling. It is not one of making it easy for a handful, to be permitted to live and trade there if they wear the badge of inferiority called years ago by an Englishman of South Africa 'dog's collar'. The cause is the cause of the honour of India and through her of all the exploited coloured races of the earth, whether they be brown, yellow or black. It is worth all the suffering of which they are capable.

New Delhi, 27-5-'46

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

WHO IS RAMA?

Q You have often said that when you talk of 'Rama' you refer to the Ruler of the universe and not to Rama, the son of Dasharatha. But we find that your Ramadhun calls on 'Sita-Rama' 'Raja Rama' and it ends with 'Victory to Rama the Lord of Sita'. Who is this Rama if not the son of the King Dasharatha?

A. I have answered such questions before. But there is something new in this one. It demands a reply. In Ramadhun 'Raja Rama', 'Sita-Rama' are undoubtedly repeated. Is not this 'Rama' the same as the son of Dasharatha? Tulsidas has answered this question. But let me put down my own view. More potent than Rama is the Name. Hindu Dharma is like a boundless ocean teeming with priceless gems. The deeper you dive the more treasures you find. In Hindu religion God is known by various names. Thousands of people look doubtless upon Rama and Krishna as historical figures and literally believe that God came down in person on earth in the form of Rama the son of Dasharatha, and by worshipping him one can attain salvation. The same thing holds good about Krishna. History, imagination and truth have got so inextricably mixed up. It is next to impossible to disentangle them. I have accepted all the names and forms attributed to God, as symbols connoting one formless omnipresent Rama. To me, therefore, Rama described as the Lord of Sita, son of Dasharatha, is the all powerful essence whose name inscribed in the heart, removes all suffering, mental, moral and physical.

New Delhi, 26-5-'46

(From Harijansevak)

PEACEFUL STRIKES

Q. How should a strike be conducted so that hooliganism and violence are avoided?

A. A strike should be spontaneous and not manipulated. If it is organized without any compulsion there would be no chance for goondaism and looting. Such a strike would be characterized by perfect co-operation amongst the strikers. It should be peaceful and there should be no show of force. The strikers should take up some work either singly or in co-operation with each other, in order to earn their bread. The nature of such work should have been thought out beforehand. It goes without saying that in a peaceful, effective and firm strike of this character, there will be no room for rowdyism or looting. I have known of such strikes. I have not presented a Utopian picture.

New Delhi, 26-5-'46

WHY DOCTORS?

Q. Why do you go to the doctors for examination and diagnosis and not to the vaidyas?

A. The vaidyas do not possess the knowledge of the human body as the doctors do. The basis of diagnosis in Ayurveda is the theory of tridosh. They have not got to the bottom even of that. The doctors are ever carrying on research and making new discoveries. One either goes forward or backward. Nothing remains static in the world. Those who become static, become lifeless. God alone is static, but amazing as it may sound, He is described both as motionless and full of motion.

Moreover, doctors and vaidyas are my friends. The doctors have clung to me. One of them has become more than my own daughter. One's own daughter can leave her father; how can one who has chosen to become daughter? The vaidyas themselves use though indifferently the methods of diagnosis used by the doctors or else they advise the patient to go to the doctors for it. The vaidyas possess the knowledge of certain drugs which they use effectively.

But the doctors, vaidyas and hakims all slave for money. They do not take to the profession purely from a spirit of service. That some of them have that spirit does not contradict my statement. Nature cure is the only thing which has come into existence purely from the point of view of selfless service. Today even that has become a means of making money. Thus money has taken the place of God. The doctors examine me, but I depend on none but God. He is the Master of every breath I take. If He wills it, He will keep me up to 125 years. If not, He might carry me off any moment, leaving the medical friends staring as helpless spectators.

New Delhi, 27-5-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

WORKING COMMITTEE RESOLUTION

[The following resolution was passed by the Working Committee of the Indian National Congress on May 24, 1946, at New Delhi.]

The Working Committee have given careful consideration to the Statement dated May 16, 1946, issued by the Delegation of the British Cabinet and the Viceroy on behalf of the British Government, as well as the correspondence relating to it that has passed between the Congress President and the members of the Delegation. They have examined it with every desire to find a way for a peaceful and co-operative transfer of power and the establishment of a free and independent India. Such an India must necessarily have a strong central authority capable of representing the nation with power and dignity in the counsels of the world. In considering the Statement, the Working Committee have kept in view the picture of the future, in so far as this was available to them from the proposals made for the formation of a Provisional Government and the clarification given by members of the Delegation. This picture is still incomplete and vague. It is only on the basis of the full picture that they can judge and come to a decision as to how far this is in conformity with the objectives they aim at. These objectives are: independence for India; a strong, though limited, central authority; full autonomy for the provinces; the establishment of a democratic structure in the centre and in the units; the guarantee of the fundamental rights of each individual so that he may have full and equal opportunities of growth; and further that each community should have opportunity to live the life of its choice within the larger framework.

The Committee regret to find a divergence between these objectives and the various proposals that have been made on behalf of the British Government, and, in particular, there is no vital change envisaged during the interim period when the Provisional Government will function, in spite of the assurance given in paragraph 23 of the Statement. If the independence of India is aimed at, then the functioning of the Provisional Government must approximate closely in fact, even though not in law, to that independence, and all obstructions and hindrances to it should be removed. The continued presence of a foreign army of occupation is a negation of independence.

The Statement issued by the Cabinet Delegation and the Viceroy contains certain recommendations and suggests a procedure for the building up of a Constituent Assembly, which is sovereign in so far as the framing of the constitution is concerned. The Committee do not agree with some of these recommendations. In their view it will be open to the Constituent Assembly itself at any stage to make changes and variations, with the proviso that, in regard to certain major communal matters a majority decision of both the major communities will be necessary.

The procedure for the election of the Constituent Assembly is based on representation in the ratio of one to a million, but the application of this principle appears to have been overlooked in the case of European members of Assemblies, particularly in Assam and Bengal. Therefore, the Committee expect that this oversight will be corrected.

The Constituent Assembly is meant to be a fully elected body, chosen by the elected members of the Provincial Legislatures. In Baluchistan, there is no elected assembly or any other kind of chamber which might elect a representative for the Constituent Assembly. It would be improper for any kind of nominated individual to speak for the whole province of Baluchistan, which he really does not represent in any way.

In Coorg, the Legislative Council contains some nominated members, as well as Europeans elected from a special constituency of less than a hundred electors. Only the elected members from the general constituencies should participate in the election.

The Statement of the Cabinet Delegation affirms the basic principle of provincial autonomy and residuary powers vesting in the Provinces. It is further said that Provinces should be free to form groups. Subsequently, however, it is recommended that provincial representatives will divide up into sections which 'shall proceed to settle the Provincial Constitutions for the Provinces in each section and shall also decide whether any Group Constitution shall be set up for the Provinces'. There is a marked discrepancy in these two separate provisions, and it would appear that a measure of comolusion is introduced which clearly infringes the basic principle of provincial autonomy. In order to retain the recommendatory character of the Statement, and in order to make the clauses consistent with each other, the Committee read paragraph 15 to mean that, in the first instance, the respective provinces will make their choice whether or not to belong to the section in which they are placed. Thus the Constituent Assembly must be considered as a sovereign body with final authority for the purpose of drawing up a constitution and giving effect to it.

The provisions in the Statement in regard to the Indian States are vague and much has been left for future decision. The Working Committee would, however, like to make it clear that the Constituent Assembly cannot be formed of entirely disparate elements, and the manner of appointing State representatives for the Constituent Assembly must approximate, in so far as is possible, to the method adopted in the Provinces. The Committee are gravely concerned to learn that even at this present moment some State governments are attempting to crush the spirit of their people with the help of armed forces. These recent developments in the States are of great significance in the present and for the future of India, as they indicate that there is no real change of policy on the part of some of the State governments and of those who exercise paramountcy.

A Provisional National Government must have a new basis and must be a precursor of the full independence that will emerge from the Constituent Assembly. It must function in recognition of that fact, though changes in law need not be made at this stage. The Governor-General may continue as the head of that Government during the interim period, but the Government should function as a cabinet responsible to the Central Legislature. The status, powers and composition of the Provisional Government should be fully defined in order to enable the Committee to come to a decision. Major communal issues shall be decided in the manner referred to above in order to remove any possible fear or suspicion from the minds of a minority.

The Working Committee consider that the connected problems involved in the establishment of a Provisional Government and a Constituent Assembly should be viewed together so that they may appear as parts of the same picture, and there may be co-ordination between the two, as well as an acceptance of the independence that is now recognized as India's right and due. It is only with the conviction that they are engaged in building up a free, great and independent India, that the Working Committee can approach this task and invite the co-operation of all the people of India. In the absence of a full picture, the Committee are unable to give a final opinion at this stage.

HARIJAN

June 2

1946

VITAL DEFECTS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Intrinsically and as legally interpreted, the State Paper seems to me to be a brave and frank document. Nevertheless, the official interpretation would appear to be different from the popular. If it is so and prevails it will be a bad omen. During the long course of the history of British rule in India, the official interpretation has held sway. And, it has been enforced. I have not hesitated before now to say that the office of the lawgiver, judge and executioner is combined in one person in India. Is not the State Document a departure from the imperialistic tradition? I have answered 'yes'.

Be that as it may. Let us try to glance at the shortcomings.

The Delegation, after a brief spell in Simla, returned to Delhi on the 14th instant, issued their statement on the 16th, and yet we are far from the popular government at the Centre. One would have thought that they would have formed the Central Government before issuing the Statement. But they issued the Statement first and then set about the search for the formation of the Interim Government. It is taking a long time coming, whilst the millions are starving for want of food and clothing. This is defect No. 1.

The question of paramountcy is unsolved. It is not enough to say that paramountcy will end with the end of British rule in India. If it persists without check during the interim period, it will leave behind a difficult legacy for the independent Government. If it cannot be ended with the establishment of the Interim Government, it should be exercised in co-operation with it and purely for the benefit of the people of the States. It is the people who want and are fighting for independence, not the Princes who are sustained by the alien power even when they claim not to be its creation for the suppression of the liberties of the people. The Princes, if they are true to their professions, should welcome this popular use of paramountcy so as to accommodate themselves to the Sovereignty of the people envisaged under the new scheme. This is defect No. 2.

Troops, it is declared, are to remain during the interim period for the preservation of internal peace and protection against external aggression. If they are kept for such use during the period of grace, their presence will act as a damper on the Constituent Assembly and is more likely than not to be wanted even after the establishment of independence so-called. A nation that desires alien troops for its safety, internal or external, or has them imposed upon it, can never be described as independent in any sense of the term. It is an effete nation unfit for self-government. The acid test is that it should be able to stand alone, erect and unbending. During the interim period we must learn to hop unaided, if we are to walk when we are free. We must cease from now to be spoon-fed.

That these things are not happening as we would wish is to be accounted as our weakness, be the causes whatever they be, not the cussedness of the British Government or their people. Whatever we get, will be our deserts, not a gift from across the seas. The three ministers have come to do what they have declared. It will be time to blame them when they go back upon the British declarations and devise ways and means of perpetuating British rule. Though there is ground for fear, there is no sign on the horizon that they have said one thing and meant another.

New Delhi, 26-5-'46

RIDICULING RAMANAMA

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. You know we are so ignorant and dull that we actually begin to worship the images of our great men instead of living up to their teachings. Ramalila, Krishnalila and the recently opened Gandhi temple are a living testimony of that. The Ramanama bank in Benares and wearing clothes printed with Ramanama, is, in my opinion, a caricature and even insult of Ramanama. Don't you think that under these circumstances your telling the people to take to Ramanama as a sovereign remedy for all ailments is likely to encourage ignorance and hypocrisy? Ramanama repeated from the heart can be a sovereign remedy, but in my opinion religious education of the right type alone can lead to that state.

A. You are right. There is so much superstition and hypocrisy around that one is afraid even to do the right thing. But if one gives way to fear, even truth will have to be suppressed. The golden rule is to act fearlessly upon what one believes to be right. Hypocrisy and untruth will go on in the world. Our doing the right thing will result in their decrease if any, never in their increase. The danger is that when we are surrounded by falsehood on all sides we might be caught in it and begin to deceive ourselves. We should be careful not to make a mistake out of our laziness and ignorance. Constant vigilance under all circumstances is essential. A votary of truth cannot act otherwise. Even an all-power remedy like Ramanama can become useless for lack of wakefulness and care, and become one more addition to the numerous current superstitions.

New Delhi, 25-5-'46

By J. C. Kumarappa

Practice &amp; Precepts of Jesus

Price Rs. 1-8-0, Postage 6 Annas

Christianity-Its Economy &amp; Way of Life

Price Rs. 1-8-0, Postage 6 Annas

Public Finance &amp; Our Poverty

Price Rs. 1-8-0, Postage 5 Annas

FAMINE NOTES

ABUSE OF FOOD GRAINS

Now that the expectation of consignment of food grains arriving from America has receded into the background and we are threatened with the breakdown of our rationing system by the third week of June, most stringent measures must at once be taken to prevent a single grain of foodstuffs from being wasted or put to any other use than that of saving human lives threatened with starvation. The use of enormous quantities of food grains for the manufacture of dextrine and starches for industrial use, was commented upon in these columns some time back. A friend has now sent a detailed note showing that not only one lakh and sixtyone thousand and odd tons of food grains are diverted to this use, but also a considerable proportion is wasted. It could either be greatly reduced or eliminated altogether. He writes:

"At present as far as I could gather, there are 13 starch factories manufacturing starches, dextrines, flour etc. on a large scale all over British India and the States. The raw material used for manufacturing starches and dextrines are maize, wheat, rice, tapioca, potato, barley, etc.

"These starches and dextrines find application in many industries for various processes but I touch upon only three main uses of these on a very huge scale:

1. AS "SIZE" OR "SIZING PRODUCT" IN THE TEXTILE TRADE. In order to give sufficient winding and/or weaving strength to fibre and/or fabric "Sizing" is the process generally employed. As far as I could collect details, the total all India consumption of such sizing products made of starch or dextrine by various textile mills and handloom societies and factories is estimated to be in the neighbourhood of 1,32,000 tons a year. The percentage of "Sizing" or "Size" depends on the counts of yarn used, the quality of textile material manufactured, the price at which it is marketed and particularly the whims and fancies of the manufacturers. The cheaper varieties of textiles are given very heavy sizing to fetch better prices, the burden of which ultimately falls on the lower class who go in for cheap consumer goods. To manufacture 1,32,000 tons of sizing products, 70,200 tons of starch or dextrine are necessary on a 60% basis every year, which in turn consumes double the raw materials. In other words, yearly 1,40,400 tons of foodstuffs mentioned above are used up in the manufacture of sizing products. Here in India, starch is made of all essential foodstuffs given above and the starch contents range between 30 to 60% of the raw materials. But for our calculations, I have taken an average of 50%.

2. IN MANUFACTURING GUMS OR PASTES. Though the statistics are not available, the flour of wheat and rice, and tapioca powder used in manufacturing gums, pastes, etc. for various purposes including sticking or affixing etc. can be estimated at about 1,500 tons a year from 2,000 tons of raw materials (foodstuffs).

3. IN REDUCING THE STRENGTH OF DYE-STUFFS. Use of dextrine as a reducing agent in the "Dyes" or "Colours" trade is a well-known fact. As far as I could gather, the consumption of the reducing agent in various provinces is approximately 5,500 tons, Bombay Province leading the list with 2,500 tons. These figures I fear may be on the lower side as I could not get accurate consumption. The necessary data can only be collected by the Government machinery.

"Reducing dyestuffs for the bazar consumers is a common practice with all leading firms like Imperial Chemical Industries, Ciba (India) Ltd., Shaw Wallace, and Geigy as also many Indian firms. Fine dextrine or starch is used as a reducing agent. Only 30% dextrine can be manufactured of raw materials that is to say, to prepare 5,500 tons of dextrine 19,000 tons of raw material are consumed.

"Thus for all the three purposes a total of 1,61,400 tons of foodstuffs are consumed.

"I have gathered these statistics from the actual consumers of starch and dextrines and my assumption is based on the actual consumption and not on the manufacturers' production. To these must be added another 20% for wastage, the stocking and storing tendencies of the manufacturers and so on. The actual quantity of foodstuffs used for these purposes may thus be about 2,00,000 tons a year."

The correspondent then goes on to describe the wastage due to mismanagement and corrupt practices in mills and factories.

"There is a lot of wastage of these sizing products in textile mills and colour factories, merely because of corruption. The sizing master or the mixer or the manager of the establishment is generally offered a bakshis or illegal gratification or commission depending on the quantity he orders or recommends. Sometimes and in some places there are chains and the margin of commission is more. In some cases the master or manager becomes greedy and goes on ordering the quantity, always stressing the importance of such products. Enormous quantities are wasted to show huge consumption.

"In some cases textile material costing 6 to 8 annas, by giving a very thick and heavy size, can be sold at 10 to 14 annas to very poor but ignorant consumers. This can be checked or remedied by appointing textile experts to fix the minimum and maximum sizing for a particular kind of textile of a particular count of yarn. I think this will have to be tackled by the National Government.

"So also points 2 and 3 can be controlled by offering suitable substitutes or at least prohibiting the use of all these in colour-reducing by colour importers, mixers and packers. Here again there is corruption on one side and duping the consumers on the other. Colours which may normally cost Rs. 3 to 6 are even sold at a higher if not the same price after reducing the strength by 50% by the addition of dextrine, thus deriving over 100% profit."

This enormous use of huge quantities of grains and roots, etc. can either be prohibited forthwith or at least restricted to a very great extent, thus making a considerable quantity available for human consumption. This step, it is suggested, would not in the least affect or paralyse the textile industry or the colour trade as suitable substitutes in the form of coffee-dextrine, tamarind-starch, mango-seed-starch, and a score of other forest products can take its place. At present hundreds of tons of tamarind seeds are being exported to foreign countries.

AN UNWELCOME INTRUDER

Even more startling are the facts about the spread of tobacco cultivation at the expense of food crops, to which a correspondent from Gujarat has drawn attention. The following is the gist of his letter:

"While on the one hand you are asking people to dig up flower gardens to grow vegetables and food grains and to sink more wells and repair old ones for cultivation, lakhs of acres of land are being used for growing tobacco, which not only has no food value but is positively harmful to health. Thus tube wells and oil engines and quantities of crude oil which could serve to grow more food to alleviate famine are being used for growing tobacco for the black market.

"In 1942 the British Government imposed a tax of as. 9/- per lb. or Rs. 23/- per maund on tobacco and with a view to obtain the maximum revenue from it encouraged the cultivation of tobacco. This has resulted in an enormous increase of the acreage under tobacco.

"In States where the tobacco tax was not levied the State authorities offered free land and tobacco seed and engaged the services of tobacco growers from outside by paying salaries to grow tobacco within their territories. Thus nearly 3,000 families of tobacco growers migrated from Gujarat and engaged themselves in tobacco growing in the neighbouring States of Bhavnagar, Junagadh, Morvi, Jamnagar etc. Tobacco growing has also spread to the States of Udaipur, Jodhpur, Khetri, Neemuch, Piplode, Ratlam, Gwalior, Bhopal, Dewas, Indore, Ujjain and Sirohi in Marwar. In Hyderabad, Sukkur and Kharej in Sind, 90,000 bighas have been put under tobacco. In the Nizam's territory and Palanpur State a tax on tobacco has been levied and tobacco growing is encouraged for the sake of revenue. In Amaraoti, Yeotmal and Khamgaon in C. P., Patidars from Charotar are engaged for tobacco growing. In Mehsana in Baroda State, tobacco yield has increased from 1,000 bags to 7,00,000 bags."

The correspondent ends by suggesting that all tobacco cultivation should be stopped by law while the threat of famine lasts and that in the case of areas assigned to food crops preference should be given to growing oil seeds and cotton, so that the oil-cake and cotton seed might be fed to milch cattle, instead of grain.

A WAIL FROM GUNTUR

Shri Sitarama Shastry from Guntur writes:

"I discussed the question of tobacco cultivation in the Guntur District with the Deputy Director of Agriculture, Guntur, last month. The Government called for suggestions regarding the stopping of the tobacco crop and utilizing the lands, thus released, for foodcrops. Virginia tobacco is grown on about 70,000 acres of land and country tobacco is grown on about the same extent. The total area under tobacco is thus 1,40,000 acres of land. It was calculated that tobacco crop of either variety will yield about Rs. 150/- per acre and that a food crop will yield about Rs. 80/- per acre. The money crop cultivator has thus an advantage apparently of about Rs. 70/- per acre. It was then proposed that a subsidy of Rs. 70/- per acre should be given to the cultivator of tobacco on the basis of acreage as shown in the cultivation accounts for the current fasli.

"There are vested interests in tobacco and to minimize the damage caused to them by total prohibition, it was also suggested at the time that 50% of area might be converted into food crops this year and the other half might be switched over to food crops next year.

"The Director of Agriculture speaking at Bapatia the other day hinted that Government contemplated measures to check tobacco cultivation.

"The extent of 1,40,000 acres, above referred to, is exclusive of the extent on which Virginia seedlings are grown; such seedlings are grown on about 1000 acres of land in this district. That extent also will be available for foodcrops.

"It is unnecessary to dilate upon the evil effects of tobacco. It affords neither food nor drink to any man or beast or bird.

"This tobacco is an all India question and concerted action should be taken by all the provinces and states. The matter may be considered by the Working Committee and a definite lead may be given to the whole country."

There can be no question as to the desirability of prohibiting by law the raising of this most exhausting of money crops at a time when dire famine threatens the land. The proposal about paying compensation to tobacco growers, however, is preposterous and can arise only in a capitalistic order that has made money its God. Vested interests can have no claim on famine and starvation. Cultivation like other production should primarily be for use. The invasion of our economy by 'money crops' has become a national menace. In a well ordered society land will belong only to those who till it and will be worked in answer to the people's needs, not for making money. Agriculture must be freed from the octopus of vested interests which enslaves it today.

TWO VALUABLE SUGGESTIONS

Two valuable suggestions have been made for growing more food which are worthy of immediate attention of the Government. An engineer from Quetta writes:

"If the Government are really in earnest about growing more vegetables, wherever practicable, to supplement the rations that could be made available immediately by human effort in India, I would suggest you to request the Viceroy to persuade the provincial governments to order their Public Works Departments to put into commission, for the growth of vegetables, all those pieces of land along the canals called berms. A berm of a canal is from six to twenty feet in width on either side and is about six inches above the level of water.

"The area of berms if put into use will mean thousands of acres of virgin and fertile land needing no extra expenses of making new water courses or regulation of water. The soil of these berms keeps always sufficiently moist for the purpose and in practice it has been found very workable. In Sind, at least, on almost all the regular sites (where there is a P. W. D. establishment stationed for the purposes of regulation of water) vegetables are grown by the P. W. D. staff for their own consumption.

"If the facilities of approach to the berms are given to certain local farmers of adjoining lands they would gladly employ their spare time usefully in the plantation of vegetables and look after them. The P. W. D. only has to overlook the encroachment of the "foreigners" on their area; but this should not be objected to considering the immediate good that will accrue to the country at this critical time.

"The provincial governments have also to make necessary arrangements for transport of the vegetables to the railway stations or nearby markets for further disposal. This can be done exactly as was being done during the war period for the supply of vegetables to the army camps. The lease lend lorries given to many contractors could be put into commission at a reasonably fixed rate; (this is one of the conditions of the issue of these lorries to the contractors). The existence of a service road along every canal, its branches and distributaries will be usefully employed by these lorries and no further charges have to be borne for making any new roads etc. Of course the road has to be maintained which also can be easily done through the farmer who would be willing to look after that length of the road which comes in his jurisdiction.

"There is no article of food so quickly grown as vegetables. If the Government could only organize it, it would not be difficult to dehydrate (by sunshine only) most of the vegetables."

ARMY TO THE RESCUE

The other suggestion is from a British army man. He writes in a letter to Gandhiji:

"It is with concern and regret that I find the Indian people have now to face yet another famine. I have followed this matter in the press and read your published letter of 21st February to Mr. G. E. B. Abell, Private Secretary to the Viceroy.

"The Indian Army should certainly be used as you suggest, and I also think both the British and Indian Army and Air Force should start growing food in cantonments and all other permanent stations and camps. There is ground that can be set aside for this purpose, there is the labour and there is usually a fairly plentiful water supply at such places. The Army in Britain was called upon to do this during the war and the present position in India warrants that similar steps be taken in India now.

"It was with interest that I noted you also suggested the distribution of food should be through co-operative societies or similar organizations. In civilian life I am connected with the Co-operative Movement in Britain, and whilst I have been in India I have been observing the position here. There are, of course, some big differences, one of the most important that you will appreciate being that in Britain the Co-operative Societies are of the people, whereas in India they are mostly Government-sponsored. However, from my contacts with the Societies in India I think the retail stores that have been set up mostly during the war have been doing good work in ensuring the people of their supplies of atta, sugar, oil cakes etc. at fair prices and I was interested to see some recognition of this in your suggestion."

Delhi, 11-5-'46

PYARELAL

PROGRAMME FOR THE CONGRESS MINISTERS

Now that the Congress has once again accepted office in the Provinces, it is very essential that the Ministers should have before them a definite programme of constructive work in terms of the Congress Election Manifesto. This programme should be completed within six months, if not earlier; the Ministers should, then, be free to plunge into another struggle if and when necessary. It would have been in the fitness of things if the Congress Working Committee or the Central Parliamentary Board had chalked out such a programme for the Ministries. Since this may not be done in the near future, I venture to place before the Ministers in all humility a concrete programme of national reconstruction. The following items constitute only the barest outline of this programme:

1. The Village Communities should be resuscitated and revitalized by devolving maximum local autonomy on the Gram Panchayats. A bold policy of decentralization should be carefully formulated with due regard to local conditions.

2. The Ministries should plan to make the Village Communities, more or less, self-sufficient in regard to food, cloth and other necessities of life. To this end a vigorous policy of rehabilitating and subsidizing cottage industries like spinning, weaving, paper-making, paddy-husking, oil-pressing etc. should be adopted. The Ministers should immediately seek the guidance and assistance of the A. I. S. A. and the A. I. V. I. A.

3. Intensive efforts should be made to introduce and popularize co-operative farming and co-operative marketing. Cheap credit facilities for both short and long terms should be arranged.

Drastic steps should be taken to scale down rural indebtedness.

4. The existing land tenure systems should be radically overhauled so as to provide full security to the actual tillers of the soil. I suggest that the Mausawari (Village tenure) system should be introduced, as far as possible, in all the provinces with necessary modifications to suit local conditions. (Details of the Mausawari system will be found in the "Gandhian Plan of Economic Development for India".)

5. Intoxicating drinks and drugs should be totally prohibited except for medicinal purposes.

6. Basic education or Nayee Taleem should immediately be given the fullest scope in the primary and secondary educational system. Even during the period of transition, the existing primary and secondary courses of study need radical recasting.

7. The medium of instruction at all stages of education must be the predominant language or languages of the territorial area. The English medium has had its day and should now cease to be. The Education Ministers should abolish the English medium up to the high school stage immediately. A definite policy of imparting college education as well through the medium of the provincial language or languages should be announced by them. Immediate steps should be taken to prepare and publish suitable text books in the Indian languages.

In this connection, it is gratifying to note that the Nagpur University has accorded the necessary permission to the authorities of the Seksaria Commerce Colleges at Nagpur and Wardha to introduce Hindustani and Marathi media of instruction from the ensuing session.

8. The Provincial Governments should, as far as possible, directly control primary or basic education and try to transfer existing Government high schools and colleges to private educational societies or universities.

In the domain of higher education, the Governments should maintain only technical and research institutions.

9. The Ministries should fully exploit the natural and mineral resources of their respective provinces and wherever possible develop key industries which should be State-owned.

10. With a view to promoting public health, especially in the rural areas, indigenous systems of medicine and naturopathy should be encouraged and popularized. Cottage dispensaries and maternity centres should be established as far as possible in every village. Special medical institutes for training doctors and midwives for rural areas should be started.

11. The system of public taxation should be overhauled in order to make it more direct and equitable. Whenever necessary, the provincial Governments should raise public loans and not be "fastidious" about "balancing the budget".

12. Special attention should be devoted to schemes of labour welfare.

13. Ministers are expected to lend impetus to the propagation of Hindustani in both the styles and scripts.

14. The present judicial system encourages unnecessary litigation. It should be decentralized in order to render it cheap, just and speedy. Settlement of disputes by arbitration through local panchayats should be the usual practice.

15. British jails are monstrous institutions; they are breeding places of crime. The existing jails should become veritable reformatories.

The above list is not exhaustive; it could be multiplied according to immediate local needs and circumstances. Needless to mention that the impending food famine should be the first concern of the Ministries. But without tackling the fundamental problems of India's poverty and social degeneration, permanent results could never be achieved. Hence the need for intensive constructive work in different sectors of national life.

Wardha,
6-5-'46

SHRIMAN NARAYAN AGARWAL

TRUE PHILANTHROPY

Great truths are universal. They are not confined to any particular race or religion. Every schoolboy knows the story of the dying Sir Philip Sydney passing on the cup of water, just as he had lifted it to his lips to slake his thirst, to a fellow soldier whose need he felt was greater than his. A correspondent draws attention to the story of Rantideva in the 9th skandha of the Bhagavata bearing on the same theme. He writes:

"The story of Rantideva as narrated in the epic of Bhagavata in the 9th skandha will be interesting to you and your readers of 'Harijan' from the point of view of the food situation:

वियद्वित्तस्य दत्तो कथं कथं बुभुक्षतः ।

निकिंचनस्य धीरस्य सङ्कुम्बस्य सीदतः ॥

Rantideva used to give whatever he possessed to the needy and did not mind the starvation of his own family.

व्यतीयुरष्टचत्वारिंशद् अहान्यपिबतः किल ।

घृतपायससंयारवं तोयं प्रातरुपस्थितम् ॥

कृच्छ्रमासङ्कुम्बस्य क्षुत्तृड्भ्यां जातवेपथोः ।

अतिथिर्ब्राह्मणः काले भोक्तुकामस्य चागमत् ॥

तस्मै संन्यमजत् सोऽन्नम् आदत्त श्रद्धयान्वितः ।

हरिं सर्वत्र संपश्यन् स मुक्त्वा प्रययौ द्विजः ॥

He passed fortyeight days without water. One morning ghee, pudding and water were brought before him. He was just about to partake the food, when one Brahmin suffering from hunger and thirst came to him. Knowing that God was everywhere, he gave some food and water to the Brahmin.

अयान्धो भोक्ष्यमाणस्य विभक्तस्य गृहीपतेः ।

विभक्तं व्यभजत् तस्मै वृषलाय हरिं स्मरन् ॥

Rantideva was about to eat what was left, when a Shudra came to him for food and he gave him also a part of the food.

याते शूद्रे तमन्वोऽगाद् अतिथिः शशिरावृतः ।

राजर् मे दीयताम् अन्नं सगणाय बुभुक्षते ॥

स आदृत्यावशिष्टं यद् बहुमानपुरस्कृतम् ।

तत् च दत्त्वा नमश्चक्रे शम्भुः श्वपतये विभुः ॥

Another guest came with dogs and beseeched Rantideva for food. Rantideva granted his request and gave him food.

पानीयमात्रमुच्छेपं तत्त्वैकपरितर्पणम् ।

पास्यतः पुष्कलोऽभ्यागाद् अपो देहक्षुभस्य मे ॥

न कामयेऽहं गतिमीश्वरात्पराम् अष्टद्वियुक्तामपुनर्भवं वा ।

आर्तिं प्रपद्येऽखिलदेहभाजास् अन्तःस्थितो येन भवन्त्यदुःखाः ॥

So only water was left just sufficient to quench the thirst of one man. Just then a Chandala came and said he was thirsty. Rantideva said that he was not desirous for attaining salvation i. e., siddhi or moksha but it was his life's desire to remove the distress of the needy even at the cost of suffering to himself.

क्षुत्तृड्भ्रमो गात्रपरिश्रमः च दैन्यं क्लमः शोकविषादमोहाः ।

सर्वे निवृत्ताः कृपणस्य जन्तोः जिजीविषोः जीवन्तर्पणान् मे ॥

He said to the Chandala that his own hunger and thirst had disappeared since he had quenched the thirst of the Chandala who might otherwise have died."

Delhi, 11-5-'46

PYARELAL

DR. MEHTA'S INSTITUTION

(By M. K. Gandhi)

I have received several questions about Dr. Dinshah Mehta's institution. Two of them are worth noticing. They are given below :

"In order to make the institution more scientific, more modern and more useful for the public, is it not desirable that some capable enthusiastic nature cure man or men should be sent abroad for higher studies in nature cure ? Would not such experts on their return evolve a system of nature cure suitable for our country and enable it to become popular and stand on its own feet ?

"You want a simple and cheap method of nature cure for our villages. Can the methods described by Kuhne, Just and Kneip etc. serve that purpose ? Can these methods be useful and suitable for village work ?"

The clinic at Poona could not serve the purpose of village nature cure in the opinion of the Trustees. Therefore, it was closed down and an experiment in village nature cure started at Uruli Kanchan. There the work is going on satisfactorily, though on a small scale. There is nothing there worth seeing as yet. Even the land has not been bought and no buildings have been built.

Now let us take the main question. The tendency of looking to the West in order to make progress in whatever we do, should be checked. If we have to go to the West to learn nature cure, it cannot be of much use to India. Nature cure is a thing which everyone can practise in the home. The advice of nature cure experts should not be necessary for all time. It is such a simple thing that everyone can learn it. If we have to go to Europe to learn to recite Ramanama, it simply will not do. Ramanama is the very foundation of nature cure of my conception. Nor should it be necessary to go across the seas in order to learn the use of earth, water, ether, sun and air. This is self-evident. Whatever other knowledge is required in this direction can be had in our villages. For instance, if herbs are used, they must be village herbs. Ayurveda teachers know all about them. If some Ayurvedic physicians are scoundrels, they cannot become good men and servants of the people by going abroad. The knowledge of anatomy and physiology has come from the West. It is very useful and necessary for all physicians. But there are plenty of means of learning it in our own country. In short, whatever useful contribution to knowledge has been made by the West, it has reached everywhere and can be learnt everywhere. I might add here that the knowledge of anatomy and physiology is not essential for learning nature cure.

The writings of Kuhne, Just and Father Kneip, are simple, popular and useful for all. It is our duty to read them. Practically every nature cure physician knows something about them. Nature cure has not been taken to the villages so far. We have not thought deeply and no one has thought of it in terms of the millions. This is just the beginning. No one can say where we shall stand in the end.

As in all great and good enterprises, sacrifice and dedication are required to make this successful. Instead of looking up to the West, we should turn the searchlight inwards.

New Delhi, 24-5-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

NATURE CURE FOR THE POOR

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. Is it not a cruel joke to ask the poor villager to live on orange juice when he cannot afford even ordinary diet ? He has to work throughout the day to feed his wife and children. His land and his children mean more to him than life itself. Nature cure is meant for the rich who have plenty of money and time at their disposal.

If you really wish to serve the villagers through nature cure, you should see that the right type of nature cure homes are started everywhere. At these homes the patients should get free food, clothing and bedding. And, if the patient happens to be a wage earner, arrangements should be made to support his family.

You have said nature cure means re-orientation of the way of living. Is it not necessary that education in that direction should form a necessary part of nature cure treatment ?

A. The question betrays the correspondent's ignorance. He has not taken the trouble to read carefully what I have written on the subject. Nature cure implies that the treatment should be the cheapest and the simplest possible. The ideal is that such treatment should be carried out in the villages. The villagers should be able to provide the necessary means and equipment. What cannot be had in the villages should be procured. Nature cure does mean a change for the better in one's outlook on life itself. It means regulation of one's life in accordance with the laws of health. It is not a matter of taking the free medicine from the hospital or for fees. A man who takes free treatment from the hospital accepts charity. The man who accepts nature cure never begs. Self-help enhances self-respect. He takes steps to cure himself by eliminating poisons from the system and takes precautions against falling ill in the future.

The central feature of nature cure treatment is Ramanama. But it must come from the heart, if it is to be a remedy for all one's ailments.

Orange juice is not an essential part of nature cure treatment. Right diet and balanced diet are necessary. Today our villages are as bankrupt as we are ourselves. To produce enough vegetables, fruits and milk in the villages, is an essential part of the nature cure scheme. Time spent on this should not be considered a waste. It is bound to benefit all the villagers, and ultimately the whole of India.

It is true that nature cure homes of the right type should be opened in the villages and the cities. God willing, this will be done. The individual should rest content by doing his own duty leaving the rest to God.

New Delhi, 25-5-'46

(From Harijansevak)

WEEKLY LETTER

CONDITIONS OF REDEMPTION

The Working Committee's deliberations have been engaging practically the whole of Gandhiji's time during the week following upon the Cabinet Mission's pronouncement. The resolution of the Working Committee will be found reproduced elsewhere in these columns. Whilst the charter of independence that is to be framed by the popular Constituent Assembly, if its deliberations are successful, will launch us on the path of sovereignty, the contents of that sovereignty and independence will be realized solely through and to the extent of our own effort. In his first prayer discourse after his silent day's written message last week, Gandhiji described the conditions of individual and national redemption. In the song that had been sung by some of the Harijan girls of the Balika Ashram, Okhla, at the prayer, it was said that since God was known as the Redeemer he would redeem us some day. "The orthodox conception of redemption," remarked Gandhiji, "is redemption in the life to come. What I want to tell you is that redemption in that song is promised us here and now, if we fulfil the necessary conditions. They are firstly, self-purification and secondly obedience to the Law. It is vain, it is demoralizing to expect that in the life to come God will vindicate his title as Redeemer by saving us while we continue to carry the load of sin on our heads in this life. A businessman who lies and cheats his simple-minded, ignorant customers cannot hope to be saved."

It had been said, continued Gandhiji, that to one who is good the whole world becomes good. "That is true so far as the individual is concerned. But goodness becomes dynamic only when it is practised in the face of evil. If you return good for good only, it is a bargain and carries no merit, but if you return good for evil, it becomes a redeeming force. The evil ceases before it and it goes on gathering volume and momentum like a snowball till it becomes irresistible."

So much for the individual. How could a slave country like India be redeemed?—he next asked. His reply was that a slave country owes the continuation of its slavery to the vices which slavery engenders. The way of self-purification, therefore, is also the way of redemption for a slave country. It was no use putting off hopes for redemption to a future state. If they failed to gain redemption here they would probably miss it in the hereafter too. "Let us therefore turn the searchlight inward and purge ourselves of all dross. If we shed our petty quarrels and animosities and forget all communal differences and petty distinctions the foreign troops would find their occupation gone and nobody would be able to keep us in servitude for a day."

SUN AND SHADE

The picture of "the land without regrets and sorrow" which he presented in the course of his discourses during the last week has gripped him. He got that song printed and distributed at the prayer meeting.

A gentleman had donated Rs. 51/- for free distribution of the printed copies of that song but Gandhiji did not want it to be treated as a hand-bill and therefore decided that people should show their appreciation of it by paying the price of one pice. He was under the impression that the amount of the promised donation was Rs. 101/- and he had announced that figure accordingly. But when it was pointed out to him that the donation was Rs. 51/- only, he retorted that he could not allow the Harijans to be done out of the full amount which he had announced and therefore the donor should come forward and make up the balance. He apologized for the delay in the printing and distribution of the leaflet and twitted the Imperial City for its dilatoriness. He twitted too the printers of the leaflet for their 'greed' in charging for paper and printing. When he was told that nothing had been charged for printing, he twitted them still for charging the price of paper. The gentleman concerned thereupon announced that paper also would not be charged for.

Gandhiji had been told that he had been coming to the prayer meeting late. That was not so, he explained. Only his watch was slow and he kept time by it. Unpunctuality was not his weakness. Still less could he afford wilfully to be unpunctual at the prayer gathering where they assembled for the solemn purpose of renewing their covenant with God. "If we have to catch a train, we try to reach the station well in time because the train waits for nobody. That is even more true of God—the wheel of His Law never stops nor slows down."

LAND WITHOUT REGRETS

Coming back to the text of the song that had been distributed, he once again explained in detail the inner meaning of the ideal set forth in it. The conception of a country where there was no suffering and no sorrow, might at first sight strike one as Utopian. Nevertheless, they wanted their country to be such a country and he had even allowed himself to say the other day that the announcement of the Cabinet Mission contained in it the germs of that fulfilment. The poet in that song, had not only set forth the ideal but also mentioned the conditions for its realization. Those conditions were freedom from illusions and regrets, delusion and desire. Such a country, however, was nowhere to be found on this earth. The poet, therefore, in order to be logical and true, had said that it was within us—it was identifiable with the realm of the spirit within. It connoted Swaraj, that is to say, self-rule or rule over self. A person who had perfect mastery over self could realize in his own person the ideal depicted in the song. As he had remarked on the previous day, to a person who is good the whole world becomes good. If millions did that, the Kingdom of God would be realized on earth. But even if all did not, there was no need for the individual to despair. He could make a beginning with himself straightaway in the faith that what he did today the rest would do tomorrow.

A SUBTLE TEMPTATION

As result of Gandhiji's remarks on Wednesday last the gentleman who had donated Rs. 51/- brought an additional fifty rupees to make up the balance of Rs. 101/- announced by Gandhiji in his previous day's prayer discourse. All the printed copies of the song being sold out a fresh lot was printed for distribution. Gandhiji, however, decided that it should be sold at the fixed price of one pice for each copy and on no account at a fancy price. Similarly, he said that he would hereafter insist on the printer receiving his due charge for printing and stationery. He did not want to be greedy. It was a subtle snare in which humanitarian workers sometimes fell. If he charged more for the bhajan than its fixed price, the money would become tainted and would hinder instead of helping the cause of the removal of untouchability. Untouchability could not be eradicated by the expenditure of crores of rupees. But it could be eradicated in the twinkling of an eye without spending a penny if there was a true change of heart among the so-called Caste Hindus. That would elevate both the Harijans and the Savarnas. "Today the 'Savarnas' ride on the backs of the so-called Untouchables. That degrades them both. For, it is nature's law that one cannot degrade another without degrading himself." They should not tempt him, said Gandhiji, by offering fancy prices. If any one wanted to pay the price for more than one copy of the bhajan leaflet, he or she would have to produce a corresponding number of bona fide purchasers. Just as the leaflet would not be distributed free so it would not be sold for more than its fixed price. The way to earn merit was to translate into their lives the teachings of that bhajan.

BONDAGE OF LOVE

Commenting next on the bhajan of the evening "Sabase unchi prem sagai" he said that in that song the poet had sung of the bondage of love or ahimsa. There was no bond higher or stronger than that of love. Under the power of Sudama's love Lord Krishna had accepted the former's gift of broken rice taken out of a dirty rag and had preferred to partake of the simple greens and herbs of Vidura in preference to Duryodhana's rare and luscious fruit. Again, it was in return for Arjuna's loving devotion that he had forgotten his royalty and became Arjuna's charioteer and we are told that it was the mastery of his art that contributed more to Arjuna's victory than the might of the latter's bow. Service of love was the highest service one could render to another. It asked for no consideration or return. "Love becomes a sordid bargain when it asks for return or compensation; it degrades. Spontaneous service of love purifies and elevates."

SUPERSTITION

Gandhiji's next two discourses were devoted to the subject of nature cure or the cure of ailments spiritual, mental and physical, by the application principally of Ramanama. A correspondent had written to him, pointing out how some people superstitiously wrote Ramanama on their clothes so as to wear it 'next to the heart'! Others wrote Ramanama millions of times minutely on a piece of paper which they afterwards cut up into small bits and swallowed so that they could claim that Ramanama had entered into them! Another correspondent had asked him whether he had prescribed Ramanama as the sovereign remedy for all ills because Rama was God's anointed and was a descendant of Dasharatha, the illustrious King of Ayodhya. There were people who thought that he was self-deluded and was trying to delude others by adding one more to the thousands of superstitions which filled this superstition-ridden land. He had no answer to such criticism. He only said to himself, what did it matter if truth was abused and fraud practised in its name by others? So long as he was sure of his truth he could not help proclaiming it for fear of its being misunderstood or abused. "Nobody in this world possesses absolute truth. This is God's attribute alone. Relative truth is all we know. Therefore, we can only follow the truth as we see it. Such pursuit of truth cannot lead anyone astray."

WHO IS THIS RAMA?

He reiterated that Rama whose name he prescribed as the infallible remedy for all ills was neither the historical Rama nor the Rama of those who used the name as a charm or black magic. Rama whose name he prescribed as a cure-all was God, by taking whose name devotees attained purity and peace, and he claimed that it was the one infallible remedy for all ailments whether mental, spiritual or physical. It was, of course, possible to cure physical ailments by going to doctors and vaidyas. But Ramanama enabled one to become one's own doctor or vaidya and to find the elixir of healing within oneself. Even when the ailment could not be cured, because physically it was incurable, it enabled one to endure it with equanimity and peace of mind. "A person who has faith in Ramanama would not run from pillar to post and dance attendance at the doors of celebrated doctors and vaidyas in order to prolong existence anyhow. Nor is Ramanama meant to be taken only when the doctors and vaidyas have failed. It is meant to enable one to do without them altogether. For a believer in Ramanama it is the first as well as the last remedy."

HOW TO RECITE RAMANAMA

Continuing the theme Gandhiji in his next day's discourse explained the conditions under which alone Ramanama could become an effective remedy for the three-fold malady, to which man was subject. The first condition was that it should come from the heart. What did that mean? People did not mind going to the ends of the earth to find a cure for their physical ailments which were much less important than the mental or spiritual. "Man's physical being is after all perishable. It cannot, by its very nature, last for ever. And yet men make a fetish of it while neglecting the immortal spirit within." A man who believed in Ramanama would not make a fetish of the body but would regard it only as a means of serving God. And for making it into a fit instrument for that purpose, Ramanama was the sovereign means.

To install Ramanama in the heart required infinite patience. It might even take ages. But the effort was worthwhile. Even so success depended solely on the grace of God.

Ramanama could not come from the heart unless one had cultivated the virtues of truth, honesty and purity within and without. Every day at the evening prayers they repeated the shlokas describing the man with a steadfast intellect. Every one of them, said Gandhiji, could become a sthita prajna — man with steadfast intellect — if he kept his senses under discipline, ate and drank and allowed himself enjoyment and recreation only to sustain life for service. If one had no control over one's thoughts, if one did not mind, for instance, sleeping in a hole of a room with all doors and windows shut, and breathing foul air or drinking dirty water, his recitation of Ramanama was in vain.

That, however, did not mean that one should give up reciting Ramanama on the ground that one had not the requisite purity. For, recitation of Ramanama was also a means for acquiring purity. "In the case of a man who repeats Ramanama from the heart, discipline and self-control will come easy. Observance of the rules of health and hygiene will become his second nature. His life will run an even course. He will never want to hurt anyone. To suffer in order to relieve others' suffering will become a part of his being and fill him with an ineffable and perennial joy." Let them therefore, said Gandhiji, persevere and ceaselessly repeat Ramanama during all their waking hours. Ultimately, it would remain with them even during their sleep and God's grace would then fill them with perfect health of body, mind and spirit.

A BRIEF HOLIDAY

A lull in the Cabinet Mission's deliberations has enabled Gandhiji to take a brief holiday for rest and recuperation. He had been advised by his doctors some time ago to pass two months of the hot weather at some hill station to enable him to build up a reserve for the rest of the year. He could not do so this year for reasons that all know. He has decided to go to Mussoorie in preference to Panchgani or Simla as it is nearer. He will return when the Maulana Saheb or the Cabinet Mission require him again.

In announcing his plans to the prayer gathering on Sunday he said that they had been coming to the prayer gathering daily in order to join him in reciting Ramanama or rather in learning how to do so. Ramanama could not be taught by word of mouth. But more potent than the spoken word was the silent thought. "A single right thought can envelop the world. It is never wasted. The very attempt to clothe thought in word or action limits it. What man has ever succeeded in expressing fully a thought in word or in action?"

"Then, why not go into perpetual silence, one might ask", proceeded Gandhiji. "In theory that is possible," he replied. "But it is very difficult to fulfil the conditions by which silent thought can wholly replace action." He for one could not claim to have attained the requisite intensity or control over thought. He could not altogether keep out useless or irrelevant thoughts from his mind. It required infinite patience, vigilance and tapashcharya to attain that state.

He was not indulging in a figure of speech, he continued, but had meant it literally when on the previous day he had told them that there was no limit to the potency of Ramanama. But in order to experience that, Ramanama had to come from a heart that was absolutely pure. He himself was striving to attain that state. He had envisaged it in the mind but had not fully realized it in practice. When that stage was reached, even the recitation of Ramanama would become unnecessary.

He hoped they would continue to recite Ramanama in their homes severally and in company during his absence. The secret of collective prayer was that the emanation of silent influence from one to the other could be of help in their spiritual striving.

New Delhi, 27-5-'46

PYARELAL

Flags and Uniforms

A correspondent writes :

"During the recent election meetings I was astonished at the number of flags — not to speak of the special uniforms worn by Congress volunteers for the occasion. In these days of cloth shortage, is not the use of cloth for flags and special uniforms a criminal waste?"

Flags and uniforms are in order when they are in their time and place. They are easily an abomination when they take the place of bread. Satisfaction of hunger has precedence over everything. Similarly, flags and uniforms cannot replace cloth for wear. Hence, if the correspondent is right, congressmen and others will have to be strictly economical in the use of flags and uniforms for demonstrative purposes.

New Delhi, 26-5-'46

M. K. G.

CONTENTS		PAGE
SALARY OF M. L. A.'S	... M. K. GANDHI	157
INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA	... M. K. GANDHI	157
QUESTION BOX	... M. K. GANDHI	158
WORKING COMMITTEE
RESOLUTION		158
VITAL DEFECTS	... M. K. GANDHI	160
RIDICULING RAMANAMA	... M. K. GANDHI	160
FAMINE NOTES	... PYARELAL	161
PROGRAMME FOR THE
CONGRESS MINISTERS	... S. N. AGARWAL	163
TRUE PHILANTHROPY	... PYARELAL	164
Dr. MEHTA'S INSTITUTION	... M. K. GANDHI	165
NATURE CURE FOR THE POOR	... M. K. GANDHI	165
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	166
NOTE:
FLAGS AND UNIFORMS	... M. K. G.	168

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 18]

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, JUNE 9, 1946

[ TWO ANNAS

EXCESSIVE PRAISE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Thus an army officer to a friend:

"... And what a pity it is that, in all democratic countries, politicians are so ignorant of and uninterested in the army. The army could teach them much. Is it not at least worthy of deep thought as to why it is, that the army has held the loyalty and affection of the man serving in it to a far greater degree than any other Government service? And held it moreover under conditions of danger and discomfort and trial far exceeding those of any other service. You have a fine army and it will be finer still when your best men come forth in large numbers to officer it. Find the right officers and you need have no fears about it. It will be second to none. But put in the wrong officers or get it mixed up with politics and you will have a heavy bill to pay. India is bound to have many troubled years ahead, but I am convinced that the one thing which can pull you through them most quickly and with the minimum bloodshed is your present army, provided you find officers for it and keep politics and religious differences out of it."

It is not a matter for pity if it is true that in all democratic countries politicians are uninterested in the army. The pity of it is that they are wrongly interested in it. The democracies regard army men as their saviours. They bring wealth and subjugate other countries and sustain authority in times of civil disturbance. What is, therefore, to be wished is that democracy to be true, should cease to rely upon the army for anything whatsoever.

What has the army done for India? It is for that army that the writer pleads. I fear that in no sense has it served India's interest. It has kept millions of inoffensive and disarmed people under subjection. It has impoverished them. It is an army of which the sooner the British part is sent away and better employed, the better for both India and England, and the world. The sooner the Indian part is turned away from its destructive purpose and its talent employed for constructive purposes, the better it will be for democracy in India. It will be a poor democracy that depends for its existence on military assistance. Military force interferes with the free growth of the mind. It smothers the soul of man. Thanks to years of foreign domination brought about by the "highly efficient" army, India, in spite of the efforts of the Mission, might have to pull through a long or short civil war which, I shall hope, will bring to an end all infatuation for armed forces. They are a brutalizing process after you have isolated discipline which should be common for any social order. If Free India has to sustain the present military expenditure, it will bring no relief to the famishing millions.

Mussoorie, 30-5-'46

WEEKLY LETTER

THE LENGTHENING SHADOW

Gandhiji left for Mussoorie under the lengthening shadow of communal disturbances in many cities of India. The senselessness of these riots oppresses him. He knows that very often they are either directly engineered by unscrupulous persons to serve as a weapon for blackmail and intimidation or are the result of mass hysteria let loose by unthinking propaganda. And it is always the deluded man in the street who is the victim while the real culprit sits secure behind the facade of respectability.

A celebrated English writer describing the panic-stricken years of the Popish Plot of 1678-80 has recorded how in his times, "there were a hundred stout fellows ready to fight to death against Popery without knowing whether Popery was a man or a horse." The same holds good in regard to our present day communal riots. What is a man of prayer to do under such circumstances, asked Gandhiji, in his silence day's written message which was read out at the last prayer meeting that he had at Delhi. "It is obvious," he remarked, "that one cannot go to all the places where the riots may break out. But one can refuse to encourage them by word, deed or thought. If riots should break out before one's eyes, one should try to prevent them even at the risk of one's life, but never by taking the life of another. As I said yesterday, more potent than the spoken word is a pure thought. Do you believe it? And if so, will you act according to your belief?"

MUSSOORIE

Mussoorie with its cool, pine-scented breezes, shady walks and thickly wooded crags and hill-sides has afforded welcome relief after the broiling heat and dust storms of the Imperial City. This is Gandhiji's third visit to this hill station — the last one being eighteen years ago on the eve of the Independence Resolution that was passed in the Lahore Congress that year. A deep note of resignation, sadness and introspection ran through his first public utterance at the evening prayer gathering which was held in the compound of the Birla House where he is putting up. How could he feel at home amidst the endless saturnalia of fashions that is Mussoorie? He recalled his previous visits to Mussoorie, which were in connection with Congress work. This time he had come purely on his own. "As you know I am not even a four-anna member but only a humble servant of the Congress like the unnamed crores who are not on its rolls but serve it all the same humbly and quietly to the best of their capacity without expectation of name or reward. And why? Because the thirst of freedom has taken possession of their souls. They do not know how it can be won. But they have heard that the Congress is the one organization that has for the last sixty years been fighting the good fight that would bring freedom to all without distinction. That is why they are devoted to it. I have come to Mussoorie as one of them—a humble, private individual." He did not want anyone to be bothered with taking care of him. "God alone is my protector. How can puny man, who is not sure even of his own tomorrow, presume to protect another? I am content to be under God's care. He may protect or destroy. I know He sometimes even destroys to protect."

He had been told before, and again since his arrival at Mussoorie, of the life of the fashionable rich in Mussoorie. Like other Himalayan hill stations, Mussoorie was no place for the poor. "The poor slave for you. They draw your rickshaws. It hurts me, and it ought to hurt you too, that a fellow human being should pull the rickshaw of a healthy and able-bodied person. I say this not to criticize you but to remind you of those whose very existence you are otherwise apt to forget, but who nevertheless are India. It is up to you to think of them and enter into their lives.

"I long for the day when Ramanama would save me from the necessity of having to go to hill stations during the summer. Crores cannot go to the hill stations. They are born to live and die on the plains.

I have not come here for pleasure but only under medical necessity so that I might be able to serve you the more. Give me your blessings and let me have a little quiet so that I can attend to my work and commune with the Maker undisturbed."

A SANCTUARY FOR THE POOR

He did not allow the matter to rest there. On the following day he again took it up and suggested that Mussoorie should have a place where the poor could come and avail themselves of the benefits of the hill climate whenever necessary. "I myself have become a Harijan by choice. I would love to be in a place where Harijans too can come and dwell. A Harijan by birth may repudiate his varna but how can I who has become a Harijan by choice? I have not hesitated to suggest to Caste Hindus that today they have all to become atishudras, if the canker of caste feeling is to be eradicated from Hinduism and Hinduism is not to perish from the face of the earth." If there were such a place in Mussoorie itself, where even Harijans would be welcome, he would rather stay there. In answer to a similar suggestion at Panchgani, the people there were planning to have a place of that type. He was glad to inform the gathering that there was some talk already of a committee of the citizens of Mussoorie being formed for that purpose.

COFFIN AT THE FEAST

What, however, exercised his mind even more was the impending famine. He reminded his fashionable audience of the coffin at their feast. As a matter of fact the famine was already in the land. Crores were not getting enough to eat. Rich people were perhaps ready to give money, but no one could eat money. There was not enough food in the country. Whatever there was could not be transported quickly to the deficit areas. Such was the bankruptcy of Government. Then again there were places where people went hungry in spite of the fact that the food was stored on the spot. The reason was all round corruption and the greed of our own people. He appealed to those who were well off and could afford to get somehow whatever they wanted, to spare every grain of foodstuffs, that they could. If the people co-operated and there was no black-marketing and corruption, possibly there was enough food in the land to enable them to tide over the crisis. There were some who did not agree with him and maintained that if we did not get food from other countries we could not avoid starvation and death. He was not of that opinion. It would take time for the supplies to reach India in the first instance and even after they were landed in the ports, it would take about six weeks to transport them to the needed areas. The only real remedy was self-help and co-operation among all and disappearance of corruption. He appealed to the well-to-do men and women of Mussoorie to save every grain they could for the famishing people. If all voluntarily restricted themselves absolutely to what was needed for their health, they would be well able to tide over their difficulties.

Mussoorie, 1-6-'46

PYARELAL

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. What can one do if in spite of putting in a full day's labour, one cannot get enough to eat?

A. The labourer is worthy of his hire. This law is as old as the hills. All useful labour ought to bring in the same and adequate wages to the labourer. Till that time comes, the least that should be done is to see that every labourer gets enough to feed and clothe himself and his family. A government that does not ensure this much is no government. It is anarchy. Such a state should be resisted peacefully. Looting of grain shops and rowdyism is not the remedy. It leads to needless loss and death. Even if the authorities give in out of fear, it does not really help them or the people. It does not remove anarchy and things remain as they were. A look round the world will confirm what is here stated.

If, in spite of the collections of food grain in the depots, the hungry cannot get it, they can offer peaceful Satyagraha. They should not take by force what has not been given to them. They can go on a fast unto death and thus secure relief for themselves and for others. If they have patience, the method suggested by me is sure of success.

Mussoorie, 29-5-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

IS LYING EVER JUSTIFIABLE ?

Q. What do you say to the following from Bertrand Russell? "I once in the course of a country walk saw a tired fox at the last stages of exhaustion still forcing himself to run. A few minutes afterwards I saw the hunt. They asked me if I had seen the fox, and I said I had. They asked me which way he had gone, and I lied to them. I do not think I should have been a better man if I had told the truth."

A. Bertrand Russell is a great writer and philosopher. With all respect to him I must dissent from the view attributed to him. He made the initial mistake of admitting that he had seen the fox. He was not bound to answer the first question. He could even have refused to answer the second question unless he deliberately wanted to put the hunt off the track. I have always maintained that nobody is bound always to answer questions that may be put to him. Truth-telling admits of no exceptions.

ADDRESSES AND FLORAL TRIBUTES

Q. A correspondent complains: "In many of the provinces there are Congress ministries, and the public is proud of the fact. So when any Minister visits any place, the local bodies or local institutions show their respect by presenting addresses of value. In almost all the cases, these things become the property of the Minister. This practice, in my opinion, is not good. Either this system of receiving addresses must be stopped or the things presented should go, say, to the local Congress Committee. There should be some definite policy regarding the garlanding of the Ministers or the Congress leaders. I have seen several cases where these Ministers have been honoured with flowers costing not less than 300 to 400 rupees. This is mere waste of money."

A. The complaint is valid. No public servant should receive for his own use addresses of value or costly floral tributes. These things have become a nuisance, if they are not much worse. The argument is often trotted out that costly frames and flowers put money into the pockets of artisans. The latter are well able to take care of themselves without the aid of Ministers and the like. These gentlemen do not travel for pleasure. Theirs are business tours undertaken often for listening to what the people have to say. The addresses presented to them need not extol their virtues which are their own reward. They should express accurately local wants and grievances if any. In these times the Ministers and their secretaries have a hard task before them. Public adulation instead of being a help will become a hindrance.

Mussoorie, 31-5-'46

By M. K. Gandhi

Non-violence in Peace and War

Price Rs. 7, Postage 10 Annas

Women & Social Injustice

Price Rs. 4, Postage 7 Annas

By Rajkumari Amrit Kaur

To Women

Price 6 Annas, Postage 2 Annas

FAITH CURE v. RAMANAMA

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Here is fine banter from a friend :

"I have read your 'Confession and Cure' in Harijan of 17-3-'46. I wonder whether this Nature Cure has any close relation to what is being called Faith Cure. Of course one should have faith in treatment. But there are some exclusive faith cures, for example, small-pox, stomach pain, etc. For small-pox as you might know, especially in the South, no treatment is given but it is considered Divine Play. We do poojas to Goddess Mariamma and it is almost miraculous to see most of the cases come out successful. For stomach pain, even chronic cases, many make vows before the deity at Thirupathi and finding themselves cured fulfil their ablutions and other obligations. To give you a fitting example, my mother had the same pain and after her visit to Thirupathi she is now free from that disease.

"Will you kindly enlighten me on this and may I ask why people should not have such faith in Nature Cure also and save the recurring expenditure to the doctors who, as Chaucer said, maintain a fine conspiracy with the apothecary to keep a patient always a patient which is part of the natural order of things."

The examples that have been quoted are neither Nature Cure nor yet Ramanama which I have included in it. But they do show how nature cures without any treatment in many cases. They are undoubtedly cases which show the part superstition plays in Indian life. Ramanama which is the centre of Nature Cure is the enemy of superstition. Unscrupulous men will abuse Ramanama as they will any other thing or system. Mere lip recitation of Ramanama has nothing to do with cure. Faith cure, if I know it correctly, is blind cure, such as the friend describes and thereby ridicules the living name of the living God. The latter is not a figment of one's imagination. It has to come from the heart. It is conscious belief in God and a knowledge of His Law that make perfect cure possible without any further aid. That law is that a perfect mind is responsible for perfect health of the body. A perfect mind comes from a perfect heart, not the heart known by a doctor's stethoscope but the heart which is the seat of God. It is claimed that realization of God in the heart makes it impossible for an impure or an idle thought to cross the mind. Disease is impossible where there is purity of thought. Such a state may be difficult to attain. But the first step in the ascent to health is taken with its recognition. The next is taken when the corresponding attempt is made. This radical alteration in one's life is naturally accompanied by the observance of all other nature's laws hitherto discovered by man. One cannot play with them and claim to have a pure heart. It can be said with justice that possession of a pure heart should do equally well without Ramanama. Only, I know no other way of attaining purity. And it is the way trodden by the sages of old all over the world. They were men of God, not superstitious men or charlatans.

If this is Christian science, I have no quarrel with it. The way of Ramanama is not my discovery. It is probably much older than the Christian era.

A correspondent questions whether Ramanama avoids bona fide surgical operations. Of course, it does not. It cannot restore a leg that is cut off in an accident. In many cases surgical operations are unnecessary. Where they are required they should be performed. But a man of God will not worry if a limb is lost. Recitation of Ramanama is neither an empirical method nor a makeshift.

Mussoorie, 30-5-'46

HARIJAN

June 9

1946

RELIGION v. NO RELIGION

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A correspondent writes:

"In the Harijanbandhu of the 5th May you have written that your non-violence contemplates destruction of animals dangerous to mankind, such as leopards, wolves, snakes, scorpions etc.

"You do not believe in giving food to dogs etc. Several other people, besides the Gujaratis look upon the feeding of dogs as a meritorious act. Such a belief may not be justifiable in times of food shortage like the present. Yet we must remember that these animals can be very useful to man. One can feed them and take work out of them.

"You had put 27 questions to Shri. Raichandbhai from Durban. One of these questions was: 'What should a seeker do when a snake attacks him?' His answer was: 'He should not kill the snake and, if it bites, he should let it do so.' How is it that you speak differently now?"

I have written a lot on this subject in the past. At that time the topic was the killing of rabid dogs. There was much discussion on the subject but all that seems to have been forgotten.

My non-violence is not merely kindness to all living creatures. The emphasis laid on the sacredness of sub-human life in Jainism is understandable. But that can never mean that one is to be kind to this life in preference to human life. While writing about the sacredness of such life, I take it that the sacredness of human life has been taken for granted. The former has been overemphasized. And, while putting it into practice, the idea has undergone distortion. For instance, there are many who derive complete satisfaction in feeding ants. It would appear that the theory has become a wooden, lifeless dogma. Hypocrisy and distortion are passing current under the name of religion.

Ahimsa is the highest ideal. It is meant for the brave, never for the cowardly. To benefit by others' killing and delude oneself into the belief that one is being very religious and non-violent, is sheer self-deception.

A so-called votary of non-violence will not stay in a village which is visited by a leopard everyday. He will run away and, when someone has killed the leopard, will return to take charge of his hearth and home. This is not non-violence. This is a coward's violence. The man who has killed the leopard has at least given proof of some bravery. The man who takes advantage of the killing is a coward. He can never expect to know true non-violence.

In life it is impossible to eschew violence completely. The question arises, where is one to draw the line? The line cannot be the same for everyone. Although essentially the principle is the same, yet everyone applies it in his or her own way. What is one man's food can be another's poison. Meat-eating is a sin for me. Yet, for another person, who has always lived on meat and never seen anything wrong in it, to give it up simply in order to copy me will be a sin.

If I wish to be an agriculturist and stay in the jungle, I will have to use the minimum unavoidable violence in order to protect my fields. I will have to kill monkeys, birds and insects which eat up my crops. If I do not wish to do so myself, I will have to engage someone to do it for me. There is not much difference between the two. To allow crops to be eaten up by animals in the name of ahimsa while there is a famine in the land is certainly a sin. Evil and good are relative terms. What is good under certain conditions can become an evil or a sin under a different set of conditions.

Man is not to drown himself in the well of Shastras but he is to dive in their broad ocean and bring out pearls. At every step he has to use his discrimination as to what is ahimsa and what is himsa. In this there is no room for shame or cowardice. The poet has said that the road leading up to God is for the brave, never for the cowardly.

Finally, Raichandbhai's advice to me was that if I had courage, if I wanted to see God face to face, I should let myself be bitten by a snake instead of killing it. I have never killed a snake before or after receiving that letter. That is no matter of credit for me. My ideal is to be able to play with snakes and scorpions fearlessly. But it is merely a wish so far. Whether and when it will be realized I do not know. Everywhere I have let my people kill both. I could have prevented them if I had wished. But how could I? I did not have the courage to take them up with my own hands and teach my companions a lesson in fearlessness. I am ashamed that I could not do so. But my shame could not benefit them or me.

If Ramanama favours me I might still attain that courage some day. In the meantime, I consider it my duty to act as I have stated above. Religion is a thing to be lived. It is not mere sophistry.

Mussoorie, 29-5-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

MORE SUGGESTIONS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

It is a good sign that food shortage is taxing many minds. Suggestions for meeting it come in from all quarters. A friend, who knows what he writes about, sends the following:

"(1) When there is an acute shortage of cereals why need non-vegetarians, who can take animal food, be given the same ration of cereals as vegetarians? A substantial saving in cereals should be possible by reducing the ration of cereals to non-vegetarians to the extent that it is possible to supplement equal nutrition value by non-vegetarian food.

"(2) Ration of cereals has been reduced. I expect that a large number of men who do manual work find difficulty in satisfying hunger with the reduced rations. Several supplement the reduced quantity by adding mung, gram and barley to wheat and then have the mixture made into flour. But the cost of these three is higher than that of wheat. Many cannot afford it. It, therefore, follows that to the extent that cereals are reduced to non-vegetarians, animal food, having equal nutrition value, should be substituted and that also for the same cost as that of the cereal reduced. I have calculated the cost and it is not likely to exceed 15 crores during the next few months. No amount can be too large to save human life. It is mentioned that 10 to 15 millions may die in India due to food shortage.

"(3) Taking of life is very repugnant to me. But when the choice lies between human life and animal life, I think that the former should have preference. There is a large damage to crops by deer, rabbit, boar, pig and pigeon. I am a vegetarian. But non-vegetarians tell me that these have food value and can be used for food. By a proper organization, though difficult, but not impossible, it should be possible to organize shooting of these animals so as to provide regular supply in certain areas, particularly in large cities. Incidentally, destruction on a large scale of these would be reflected in reduced destruction of field crops.

"(4) To save food in order that it will be available for famine areas under the present system of ration appeals to very few. There is so much of black-marketing and corruption that one feels that what one saves would find its way to the black market. There would be a good psychological appeal if the food-grains saved are collected and guaranteed to be sent to the famine areas. This will have to be organized. But I feel that substantial quantities will be forthcoming."

Whether the authorities act up to the first or not, it is one which those honest meat-eaters who draw full vegetarian rations can. They can easily part with a portion of their cereals for the benefit of those in need. Mutual aid is the swiftest way of reaching relief to the needy in such cases.

The second follows from the first.

The third is contentious. In a country where all life is largely held sacred and even when it is not, habit has made people reluctant to take any life, the suggestion may be difficult of adoption even by non-vegetarians. But a confirmed respecter of all life though I am, I have no difficulty in recommending for acceptance by meat-eaters the suggestion that the correspondent's wisdom has dictated. I hope to examine an argument in "Harijanbandhu" advanced against the taking of even noxious life without any connection with food.

The fourth suggestion, though sound, is not likely to produce any tangible result because of the ruling corruption and the inefficiency and irresponsibility of the Government. The difficulty will only be met when there is a national government which is responsible to the people and to which the people may look forward with confidence. It has been long coming. Will it ever come?

Mussoorie, 29-5-'46

Notes

Wholesale Releases

Responsible ministries in the provinces have naturally meant wholesale releases of political prisoners. These include convicts sentenced for murder, arson, robbery etc. Correspondents ask how far these releases should be acclaimed by the public as of heroes and martyrs.

It is one thing to release, for a variety of reasons, persons who were convicted of such crimes. It is wholly another thing to praise the acts as of heroes to be received with every mark of honour. I have no doubt that it is thoughtless and wrong. If I am in need of money for a public purpose and commit robbery I do not cease to be a robber, because the robbery committed by me is for public use. This indiscriminate praise of every crime, so long as it is dignified by the name of patriotism, is a boomerang bound to return with redoubled force to the nation which will have to pay heavily for it. Independence, though it includes the freedom even to commit a crime, may easily prove a curse, if it does not carry a voluntary rigid restraint. The public approbation referred to, is wrong education of the people and a harmful preparation for the independence that is coming much sooner than many of us expect.

Mussoorie, 31-5-'46

Uruli Kanchan

My co-workers from Uruli Kanchan inform me that patients from far distances are coming there for treatment. I have already written in 'Harijansevak' that up till now there is nowhere any permanent arrangement for anyone to live and no room for in-patients. I have just heard that some land has been made available but the work of building huts on it remains. There is no house available in the village either where patients from outside could be taken in and, in any event, it has never been the intention to turn a village into a city. The real aim is for every village to have a nature clinic to adorn it just as it should have a school.

Readers should bear in mind that my co-workers in Uruli Kanchan are unable to guide patients through correspondence. Persons who live far away can carry out their own nature cure treatment. Who cannot recite Ramanama in his own home? It is also possible for everyone to have sitz baths etc., wherever he is.

Mussoorie, 2-6-'46

(From Harijansevak)

M. K. G.

I. N. A. MEN'S DILEMMA

Between 50 to 60 senior officers of the I. N. A. met Gandhiji in the Sweepers' Colony the other day during his stay in Delhi. They first sang in a chorus the I. N. A. Hindustani adaptation of Gurudev's song "Janaganamana adhinayaka jaya he Bharata-bhagyavidhata" just as they had sung during Gandhiji's visit to them behind the barbed wire fence in the Kabul Lines when their fate still hung in the balance. Gandhiji then addressed them a few words in Hindustani.

"Other friends have placed before me," he began, "the dilemma which, I am told, faces many of you too. The Congress creed is, of course, that of winning Swaraj through non-violence and peaceful means but there are many men outside, and even within the Congress, who have begun to doubt whether that policy of the Congress has not exhausted its purpose and now become effete for the tasks that lie ahead, especially in view of the changed and changing times.

"You who have served under Subhash Babu as veteran fighters have proved your mettle on the battlefield. Success and failure are, however, not in our hands, but in God's hands alone. Netaji told you when bidding good-bye to you that, on your return to India, you must put yourself under the Congress discipline and act according to its policy. Your object, as I have been told, was only to free India, never to help the Japanese. You failed in your direct objective, i.e. to defeat the British. But you have the satisfaction that the whole country has been roused and even the regular forces have been stirred into a new political consciousness and have begun to think in terms of independence. You have achieved a complete unity among the Hindus, Muslims, Parsis, Christians, Anglo-Indians and Sikhs in your ranks. That is no mean achievement. What, however, you realized under conditions of freedom outside India, you have now to sustain and keep alive under Indian conditions. That will be your real test.

"If you have imbibed the spirit of non-violence, you will remain free men at heart even here. For instance, no government on earth can make men, who have realized freedom in their hearts, salute against their will. If they threaten to kill them they will offer their necks to them, but refuse to submit. The odds are that a soldier's spirit will revolt against such cold-blooded murder. Thus, whether they live or die it will be as free men. They will never be slaves. If you all become free men at heart, the whole of India will be free. They might imprison you. You will welcome it or you can tell them that you will be a corpse before they can put you into prison. Both alternatives are open to a non-violent soldier and both call for bravery of the highest order. Our task is no less than to reinfuse life into the 400 millions of India. We have to dispel fear from their hearts. On the day they shed all fear, India's fetters shall fall and she will be free.

"Years ago I said at Nankanasahib: 'Sikhs have given proof of their martial valour. But the consummation of Guru Govind Singh's ideal will be reached only when they will substitute for their kirpans the sword of the spirit or non-violence.' So long as one wants to retain one's sword, one has not attained complete fearlessness. No power on earth can subjugate you when you are armed with the sword of ahimsa. It ennobles both the victor and the vanquished. Netaji has fired you with a new spirit. That spirit can now be kept alive only through non-violence."

Having thus explained to them the significance of ahimsa in terms of martial courage, Gandhiji proceeded to place before them the higher type of courage that is required of a Satyagrahi soldier to become an ideal, self-respecting citizen. "Above all, you must never beg or throw yourself on anybody's charity. Because you have risked your lives for India's sake and fought for her on the Imphal plain, you must not expect to be pampered in return. If you do that, you will lose all worth like the salt that has lost its savour. You should prefer to earn your bread by the sweat of your brow, but refuse to beg or accept charity. In short, you have to show the same degree of bravery and courage of the non-violent type as you have done in the use of arms hitherto.

"If you want land you will have it. You will clear it and turn it into model farms. You have to overcome the inertia of ages which weighs down our masses. That you will be able to do only by setting an example of industry and hard work. You must be able to wield the bucket and the broom with skill and diligence and not consider the cleaning of latrines as dirty or beneath your dignity. Graduation in this work is more heroic than winning the Victoria Cross."

Then followed questions and answers.

Q. How can one who has spent his whole life in fighting take to ahimsa with success? Are not the two incompatible?

A. I do not agree. Badshah Khan is a Pathan. But today he has become a soldier of non-violence. Tolstoy too served in the army. Yet he became the high priest of non-violence in Europe. We have not yet realized fully the power that is in non-violence. If the Government had not arrested me in 1942, I would have shown how to fight Japan by non-violence.

Q. Surely, it is no breach of ahimsa to use the sword in self-defence?

A. Even Wavell, Auchinleck or Hitler does not use the sword without necessity. But that does not make it ahimsa. It is himsa, whatever its justification.

Q. You cannot take the world along with you if you adopt ahimsa. You have to choose the one or the other.

A. There again I disagree. A reformer has to sail not with the current, very often he has to go against it, even though it may cost him his life. You must not be carried off your feet by unthinking, popular applause. The essential part of your message to the country is not how to wield the sword but to cease to be afraid of it.

Q. What would you have done if Subhas Babu had returned to you victorious?

A. I would have asked him to make you put away your weapons and stack them before me.

Mussoorie, 30-5-'46

PYARELAL

THE IDEAL WOMAN

"A virtuous woman who can find?
For her price is far above rubies.
The heart of her husband trusteth in her,
And he shall have no lack of gain.
She doeth him good and not evil
All the days of her life.
She seeketh wool and flax,
And worketh willingly with her hands.
She is like the merchant ships;
She bringeth her food from afar.
She riseth also while it is yet night,
And giveth meat to her household,
And their task to her maidens.
She considereth a field and buyeth it;
With the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard.
She girdeth her loins with strength,
And maketh strong her arms.
She perceiveth that her merchandise is profitable;
Her lamp goeth not out by night.
She layeth her hands to the distaff,
And her hands hold the spindle.
She spreadeth out her hand to the poor;
Yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.
She is not afraid of the snow for her household;
For all her household are clothed with scarlet.
She maketh for herself carpets of tapestry;
Her clothing is fine linen and purple.
Her husband is known in the gates,
When he sitteth among the elders of the land.
She maketh linen garments and selleth them;
And delivereth girdles unto the merchant.
Strength and dignity are her clothing;
And she laugheth at the time to come.
She openeth her mouth with wisdom;
And the law of kindness is on her tongue.
She looketh well to the ways of her household,
And eateth not the bread of idleness.
Her children rise up and call her blessed;
Her husband also, and he praiseth her, saying:
Many daughters have done virtuously,
But thou excellest them all.
Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain;
But a woman that feareth the Lord,
She shall be praised.
Give her of the fruit of her hands;
And let her works praise her in the gates."

The above picture is centuries old. It is Hebrew, drawn from Solomon's wisdom. It is possible to get similar descriptions from Indian seers. It would appear that in those days women must have worked with skill and ability and shared the burden and heat of the day equally with men and thus made life worth-while. The words of wisdom were meant not so much for the poor as for the well-to-do. In any event the ideal is there for every woman today to turn her attention to. The strength depicted in the picture, the variety of woman's activities, her position as a builder not only of the home but of society, all have gone from her in the East, at any rate. Instead of being the mainstay of her home, woman has become a weak dependent. It is high time she returned to the spindle and sought wool and flax in order to mend the broken tapestry of life. If woman in India can rise to the heights described by the seer, she will certainly contribute greatly towards the regeneration, not only of her own country but also of the world. It is not much use planning for a new world unless one tries forthwith and firstly to make oneself worthy to fit into a true structure.

Mussoorie,

29-5-'46

A. K.

HARIJAN WORK IN BHUSAWAL TALUKA

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Shri Thakkar Bapa writes:

"It has been decided to carry on sound and extensive Harijan work in the Bhusawal Taluka. For that purpose two meetings were arranged on the 14th of May. Shri Vaikunthbhai Mehta, Shri Ganapatrao Tapase, Shri Barve, Shri Dastane and myself were present. We aim at having all the public wells opened to Harijans. The villagers showed great enthusiasm and we are hopeful of success. The circumstances are favourable."

What Bapa says is true. By favourable circumstances, Shri Thakkar Bapa probably means the establishment of a Congress ministry. That does not mean that henceforth reforms will be imposed upon the people. There is the least room for the use of force in such things. An evil like untouchability which has found its way to the very marrow of the people's bones, and that too in the name of religion, cannot be removed forcibly. But an alien government uses its influence to further suppress the suppressed by force. And when it tries to help them from a motive, pure or selfish, that too is done by the exercise of force. The Congress has not established its position through force. It is a purely democratic organization. Therefore, it is hoped that the Congress ministers will educate public opinion and win popular support for all its progressive measures. This should result in an impetus to reforms like Harijan work in their province and the forces standing in the way of such reforms would automatically disappear. Moreover, intensive work in the limited area of the Bhusawal Taluka is likely to prove very fruitful. We cannot reach the whole of India at one and the same time. Wherever the workers have the requisite ability and influence, the work will proceed at a quicker pace. Sound work in a small area is therefore likely to be copied by others and thus lead to an early success. Let us hope that will be the result of the work which has been started in Bhusawal.

Mussoorie, 29-5-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

INSTRUCTIVE CONVERSATION ON KHADI

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A Khadi worker writes:

"I give below a recent conversation between the manager of a Khadi Bhandar and some customers. Should Khadi be sold to such persons?"

"Q. 'Is this yarn spun by you?'"

"A. 'No. I have bought these 8 hanks for Rs. 10."

"Q. To a second customer: 'Are you able to spin all this yarn?'"

"A. 'No. This is spun by my daughter. We sell yarn too at the rate of 12 annas per hank."

"Q. To a third: 'You cannot buy Khadi unless you produce the requisite quantity of yarn.'"

"A. 'It does not matter. So long as I cannot get the yarn, I will buy uncertified Khadi.'"

"Q. To a fourth: 'Why do you buy Khadi?'"

"A. 'Because it is easy to procure.'"

"Q. To a fifth: 'You are not a regular wearer of Khadi. What will you do with what you have bought?'"

"A. 'Today Khadi is looked upon as being in the fashion.'"

"Q. To a sixth: 'You do not spin yourself. From where then comes this yarn?'"

"A. 'A good friend of mine always provides me with yarn.'"

"Q. To a seventh: 'Why do you always wear either silk or wool Khadi?'"

"A. 'Because I do not have to give yarn for these.'"

"Q. To an eighth: 'You have bought a large quantity of Khadi. What will you do with it all?'"

"A. 'This will last me two or three years. After that it will be seen whether I can get any or not.'" "

The above questions and answers are revealing. If the new policy in regard to Khadi is correct and Khadi customers are of the above nature, it proves the necessity for the abolition of the Khadi clause from the Congress constitution. It is worthy of note that the questions and answers concern eight persons. The Charkha Sangh need not cater for the needs of a single one of them. The Spinners' Association exists only for the poor. Those who wear Khadi, do so either for the sake of the poor or for winning Swaraj or both. The eight customers mentioned above are concerned with neither. If the Charkha Sangh is to prove the rightness of the ideal for which Khadi stands, then its workers must be loyal enough to the new policy and not fear even the closing down of the sales Bhandars. They must have the strength to bear any consequences in order to set right the mistakes of the past.

The above conversation also holds a warning to the managers of the Bhandars to be wide awake. They should become experts in the science of Khadi and be prepared to teach customers the inner meaning of Khadi with patience and humility. This may take time but it is worth-while. If there is faith in the power of Khadi I have no doubt that we shall remain steadfast and thereby inspire others to the belief also. But if workers themselves lack faith then the claim for Khadi will fall to the ground.

I have taken for granted that the conversation has been truly reported.

Mussoorie, 1-6-'46

(From Harijansevak)

MINISTERIAL SALARIES

(By M. K. Gandhi)

I have to pay heavily for the caution with which I wrote the other day the paragraph in 'Harijan' in regard to increase in ministerial salaries. I have to go through long letters bemoaning my caution and arguing with me to revise my view. How can ministers make large increases in their own original fat salaries when the poor chaprasis and clerks get an increase which hardly meets the occasion? I have re-read my note and I claim that the short note includes all that the various correspondents desire. But, in order to avoid any misunderstanding, I expand my meaning.

I have been twitted for not referring to the Karachi Resolution. The lower scale of ministers' salaries rests on much higher ground than the authority of a resolution. In any event, so far as I am aware, the Congress has never varied that resolution. It is as binding today as it was when it was passed.

I do not know that the increase in the salaries is justified. But I must not offhand condemn the increase without knowing the case of the ministers. Critics should know that I have no authority over them or any one else except myself. Nor am I present at all the meetings of the Working Committee. I attend only when required by the President. I can only give my opinion for what it is worth. And, if it is to have any weight, it must be well-conceived and based on ascertained facts.

The question of the hideous inequality between the rich and the poor and the lower services and the higher is a separate subject requiring drastic and well thought out method and could not be merely incidental to the lowering of the salaries of the few ministers and their secretaries. Both subjects require to be dealt with on merits. The question of salaries could be and should be easily disposed of by the ministers concerned. The other is a much vaster subject requiring a thorough overhauling. I would any day agree that the ministers should tackle the subject in their own provinces without delay and that the lower ranks should before everything else have their salaries fully reconsidered and increased wherever necessary.

Mussoorie, 31-5-'46

CONTENTS		PAGE
EXCESSIVE PRAISE	M. K. GANDHI	169
WEEKLY LETTER	PYARELAL	169
QUESTION BOX	M. K. GANDHI	170
FAITH CURE V. RAMANAMA	M. K. GANDHI	171
RELIGION V. NO RELIGION	M. K. GANDHI	172
MORE SUGGESTIONS	M. K. GANDHI	173
I. N. A. MEN'S DILEMMA	PYARELAL	174
THE IDEAL WOMAN	A. K.	175
HARIJAN WORK IN
BHUSAWAL TALUKA	M. K. GANDHI	175
INSTRUCTIVE CONVERSATION
ON KHADI	M. K. GANDHI	176
MINISTERIAL SALARIES	M. K. GANDHI	176
NOTES:
WHOLESALE RELEASES	M. K. G.	173
URULI KANCHAN	M. K. G.	173

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 19

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, JUNE 16, 1946

TWO ANNAS

URDU, THE LANGUAGE OF BOTH?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

1. "You are making strenuous efforts to get every Indian, particularly Hindus with whom you naturally come most in daily contact, to learn Urdu. Similarly, is any Mohammedan striving to induce Muslims to learn Hindi? If not, will not the result of your labours be that Urdu will become the language of both and Hindi remain the medium solely for Hindus? Will not this be a disservice to Hindi?"

2. "The Urdu equivalent of the Hindi word is invariably given in brackets in the Hindustani Prachar publications, but the converse is not done. Does that not signify a desire to teach Urdu by force to Hindus?"

3. "There are any number of Persian and Arabic words used in these publications. Do you think they are understood by the general run of people? For example adab (अदब), ādāb (आदाब), etakat (एताकत).

4. "If Hindustani is in fact a language, why in your educational readers is there such a difference in terminology in the Urdu and Hindi editions?"

5. "My fear is that the lakhs of Southern Indians who have so far been trying to learn Hindi will be so scared of the Urdu script that they will learn neither and in the end the work hitherto done by the Hindustani Prachar Sabha will be completely wiped out."

1. Efforts are being made that those who are unacquainted with the Urdu form should learn it and vice versa with those who do not know the Hindi form. It is true that my contacts are more with Hindi knowing Hindus. But that does not worry me. Hindus are not likely to forget their Hindi. In fact I believe that their Hindi will be enriched by their knowledge of Urdu. The majority of Indians, whether Hindus or Mussalmans, generally know best the languages of their provinces which contain a large number of Sanskrit words. I myself have neither the fear nor the desire that everyone will, as a result of my efforts, learn the Urdu form to the exclusion of Hindi. Desire or no desire, whatever is natural will happen. The attempt to have a wise blending of the two forms for a national tongue is, in my opinion, a good venture in every way.

2. I have not read all the publications of the Hindustani Prachar Sabha. It is commendable if the Urdu equivalent of some Hindi words is given in brackets. This only means that in the opinion of the writers of the books these words are not commonly known. That the Hindi equivalents are not given signifies that those Urdu words have become current coin in Hindi. It is a pity that a learned person like the correspondent should have such suspicions. Suspicion is not an attribute of learning.

3. This does not seem to be a correct charge. And even if it were true, what harm can there be? The introduction of new words into any language enriches it. The words of Latin origin that came into the English language after the Norman Conquest added to its virility. Whatever was not good or unnecessary or forced did not remain. The words given by way of example by the correspondent are known to all Hindi lovers in the North and have taken their rightful place in Hindi. It is true that they are new for Southern Indians and therefore their Sanskrit equivalents should be and are given. The truth is that the Hindustani Prachar Sabha has neither antagonism towards one nor partiality towards the other. Both forms are there and will remain and these should not present any difficulty. But, of course, if there is jealousy and antagonism between the two, Hindustani will never come into being. And such an eventuality will be a bad thing for India.

4. Hindustani existed at one time. The present effort is directed to revive it through a wise mixture of Hindi and Urdu and let it grow thereby. Neither Hindi nor Urdu lovers should sorrow over this. Hindi and Urdu are sisters. What harm, therefore, if they mix with each other? It cannot be a matter of surprise that in this transition stage there should be a difference of terminology in Hindi and Urdu books.

5. My experience is quite contrary to that of the writer. I have not known anyone who has given up learning either script because of the insistence on the Urdu script. Nor do I fear that this will ever be so.

My appeal to the writer is to divest himself of his prejudices.

Mussooree, 4-6-'46

(From Harijansevak)

MINDFULNESS, THE REMEDY

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"It is your insistence on truth and non-violence that has attracted me to you so powerfully. The realization that the mere desire for truth and non-violence is not sufficient to make people non-violent made me think that mere preaching of non-violence is not enough and that a way must be taught, which would enable people to rebuild themselves fundamentally.

"Just being fascinated by non-violence and wanting to be non-violent does not make a man truly non-violent. The sub-conscious does not react easily to the movements of the conscious mind and remains unaffected even when the conscious mind has been apparently soaked in the idea. The cause of this opacity of the unconscious lies in the hidden desires and fears which do not allow contrary ideas to become spontaneously active. Unless the sub-conscious is cleared and the hidden resistances removed, the man's real nature, which is wise and kind, cannot be revealed.

"Therefore, it is necessary to give to those who are earnest correct advice as to how to proceed to clear themselves of the unknown inner obstacles to truth and non-violence and to make truth and non-violence really reliable, spontaneous and effective.

"External observances like prayers, handicrafts etc. are not the efficient means for truth and kindness. The proof of it is in the whole history of mankind. Only by inner and well directed effort can a man rebuild himself. Good intentions are not enough—the correct means have to be used. Fortunately such means, well tested as correct and efficient and in harmony with the structure of the human psyche, are known, although practised by very few. I have in mind the way of mindfulness, recommended by Buddha in glowing terms, as supremely efficient. Sober and reticent as He was, He has gone to the point of saying that this way can bring a man to perfection in seven days.

"In case you have not read about the way of mindfulness, I am giving a short account of it.

"The way of mindfulness consists in being constantly observant, conscious, attentive, watchful, awake, uninterruptedly aware of the mental and emotional content of our consciousness and of its expressions through the body. Man must set himself into an attitude of constant observation, awareness, alertness. It is very important that he should maintain this awareness fully impersonal, detached, non-judging, non-condemning, non-approving, just awareness and nothing else. You will catch the point easily if you watch for a moment your breathing as it moves up and down, because not having any desires and fears attached to mere breathing you can watch it impersonally.

"If a man maintains this intense and perpetual awareness of the movements of his mind and feelings and of their expressions through the body, very soon things begin to happen to him. The mind becomes clear, translucent, as if void and into the clarity of the conscious mind the unconscious tangles begin to emerge. They melt away in the light of awareness allowing deeper, still less accessible layers of the unconscious to emerge and get dissolved.

"The entire process, if carried out correctly, is effortless and accompanied by a sense of release and intense happiness. Man grows wiser and kinder from day to day and his wisdom and kindness are not self-imposed, but self-revealed. Therefore they are reliable, because there is nothing in the subconscious to oppose them.

"I am purposely avoiding quoting Western and Indian classics to prove that the way of mindfulness was well known to the ancients. It needs no authority for support. It stands by its own simplicity and ease with which a man can test on himself its efficacy. You can easily try it out on yourself. Within a week you will be convinced that Buddha has left with us a tool of unparalleled efficacy for rebuilding ourselves truly and permanently.

"We cannot have truth and non-violence in the world unless we as individuals are truthful and non-violent. Therefore, the problem of becoming truthful and non-violent is of the utmost importance. There is a way well spoken of by the great and tested by many as sound, correct, efficient, direct. You can have it tested again and again in small groups of friends, who will concentrate on it intensely and compare notes. You will see for yourself the result. The test can be made as scientifically accurate as you wish.

"There is also another aspect to consider. You have come across honest and earnest people, who have been defending falsehood and cruelty on the grounds of higher efficiency and quick results. Teach them only the way of mindfulness and they will see for themselves the roots of stupidity and hatred of which their methods are but a rationalized expression. The way of mindfulness will lead even the dull and cruel to wisdom and kindness, because it will dispel the very causes of dullness and cruelty, which are in craving and in the fear born out of craving.

"Please do not judge the message by the messenger. The message, although poorly conveyed, is of supreme importance to your work."

Thus writes Mr. Frydman, better known to the public as Bharatanand. I reproduce it for what it is worth. I have not fallen in love with it because this too has not caught on. If it was a seven days' work, why is it that it has so few witnesses in the world today? In so far as it is an aid, it is in general vogue and takes its place among the other remedies, whether it is called mindfulness, vigilance or meditation. It does not take the place of prayer or the 'mala' or any other outward practice. It is in addition to these outward observances so long as the latter are not for show. Indeed, prayer is purely an inward act. Those who found in Ramanama the talisman knew mindfulness and found by experience that Ramanama was the best of all the remedies adopted for the practice of Truth and Non-violence.

Mussooree, 4-6-'46

KASTURBA WORK IN ASSAM

The following is a synopsis of Shrimati Amalaprabha's report of her work in Sarania:

16 Village girls, mostly teachers and two of whom are Harijans are receiving training. There are two permanent members of the staff who live with the girls and share their life as one of them. All the house and cooking work is done by the girls under the supervision of the staff and Shrimati Amalaprabha, the only outside help taken being for fetching water, which has to come from some little distance necessitating a climb.

The main handicraft is muga reeling and weaving. As this work was new the production in the first 1½ months was small but even so one than worth Rs. 30 has been woven and yarn for two more worth Rs. 120 has been prepared. After deducting the price of cocoons the net profit is reckoned at Rs. 82. Cotton Khadi is also being made and the girls are being taught all the processes. Gardening is included in the programme. During the month of February, 35 seers of vegetables were produced. Physical drill forms a daily feature of the training and once a week the trainees go to serve the people there.

Hindustani, elementary science relating to diet, cooking and gardening, hygiene and sanitation and the principles of the Constructive Programme are subjects taught in the theoretical classes. Some friends from outside have helped in lectures.

The food is simple but wholesome. With an increase in the number of reeling machines and looms it is hoped in time to attain self-sufficiency in the matter of cloth.

Errata

In Harijan of May 19, 1946, in article 'An Exaction and Oppression', page 141, para 4, line 3, salt requirement for cattle should read sixteen (16) pounds instead of eighteen (18). In the same para, line 9 total requirement of salt should read thirteen (13) crores instead of seventy-three (73) crores and seventy-three lakhs maunds.

In Harijan of May 5th, in article 'A Light in Darkness', page 120, col. 1, para 2, line 10, read 1½ months instead of 1½ years.

Col. 2, para 2, line 8, read Anasuya Desai instead of Anasuya Mehta.

Same page, col. 1, last line, the figures for income and expenditure should be as being for 2 years instead of as being for 6 months.

By M. K. Gandhi

Non-violence in Peace and War

Price Rs. 7, Postage 10 Annas

Women & Social Injustice

Price Rs. 4, Postage 7 Annas

By Rajkumari Amrit Kaur

To Women

Price 6 Annas, Postage 2 Annas

NOT ENOUGH

Since Gandhiji's appeal to Gujarat to expiate for the wrong in keeping away the Harijans from fetching water from public wells and denying them the other social amenities, to which Shri Hemantkumar had drawn his attention, there has been a stirring in the 'Savarna' Hindu conscience in many places. Shri Parikshitlal of the Harijan Ashram, Sabarmati, in his letter to Gandhiji reporting the experiences of his recent tour in some of the Gujarat villages, writes:

"I had the opportunity in the course of my recent tour of the Surat District to visit the places where the villagers gladly gave permission to the Harijans to use the village wells. Both the incidents took place during the National Week and in both places a public function was held to take the Harijan families to the public wells. Kolis constituted the bulk of the population in both the villages in question.

"In Budiya village in Choryasi taluka a programme of interdining on a small scale was held after the visit of the Harijans to the public wells in the village. As there is a separate well for the Harijans in this village they still feel hesitation in going to the public wells newly thrown open to them. But I have learnt that they are satisfied that the bulk of the village people are in full sympathy with them. A public meeting was also held in the village, at which Harijan women were accorded a welcome.

"The other village was that of Hajira in the same taluka. It is a well-known sea-side health resort in the Surat District. Since the 1942 struggle, young men of the village have started a successful Bal Mandir. A weaving school is being run by the Charkha Sangh. Besides, there are classes for adult education. There is only one Harijan family in this village. The auspicious tilak mark was put by the village people on the forehead of the sweeper sister representing this family and she was taken to the public well to fetch water. As the poor woman was too poor to afford a rope for drawing water, a rope was lent by a 'Savarna' woman of the village. On inquiry since I have learnt that she can now use the public village well without any let or hindrance.

"In Vadadla village in Kaira District also, young men of the village had arranged a programme during the National Week for securing this right to the Harijans and had invited the workers of the district on the occasion. But it was found that the orthodox section was not fully ripe for the reform. The spokesman of the youth thereupon declared that so long as the public wells of the village were not thrown open to the Harijans, he would himself (he was from a Patidar family) fetch water from only the Harijan well. His wife joined him in his resolve. Several other young men in the village expressed their desire to follow suit. In the public meeting that was held in this connection water from the Harijan well was served and drunk. This softened down the opposition of the orthodox section and the village well was declared open to the Harijans. But the Harijans have not so far ventured to avail themselves of their right."

All this is good so far as it goes, but not good enough, if Gujarat aspires to be in the vanguard of the freedom struggle. A vigorous campaign with a definite time limit for the complete removal of all the disabilities under which the Harijans suffer ought to be launched. Emancipation of the Harijans can no longer be postponed to an indefinite distant date. It has to be realized here and now even like Independence. Independence itself will turn into bitter ashes in our mouth if the most useful section of the community is baulked of its essential rights.

Mussooree, 7-6-'46

PYARELAL

HARIJAN

June 16

1946

THE UNKNOWN

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Some learned men describe Him as Unknowable, some others as Unknown, yet others as 'Not This.' 'The Unknown' is good for the present purpose.

When yesterday (9th June) I said a few words to the prayer audience, I could say nothing more than that they should pray for and rely upon the strength and the guidance that this big X could give. There were difficulties to be overcome by all parties in the great Indian drama that was being enacted before them. They were all to rely upon the Unknown who had often confounded man's wisdom and in the twinkling of an eye upset his tin-pot plans. The British party claimed to believe in God, the Unknown. The Muslim League did likewise. They delighted in saying Allah-o-Akbar. The Congress naturally had no single equivalent cry. Nevertheless, if it sought to represent the whole of India, it represented the millions of believers, no matter to what compartment in the House of God they belonged.

At the time of writing, in spite of my irrepres-sible optimism, I am unable to say decisively that at least in political parlance, the thing is safe. All I can say, therefore, is that if, with the best efforts of all the parties, the unsafe happens, I would invite them to join with me in saying that it was as well and that safety lay in unsafety. If we are all children of God, as we are, whether we know it or not, we will take in good part whatever happens and work with zest and confidence for the next step whatever it may be. The only condition for that zest is that each party does its honest best for the good of the whole of India. For that is the stake and no other.

New Delhi, 10-6-'46

TAKE CARE OF PENNIES

(By M. K. Gandhi)

I have discovered honourable members of Assemblies using most expensive embossed note paper even for private use. So far as I know, office stationery cannot be used for private purposes such as writing to friends or relatives or for letters from members of Assemblies to constituents outside matters of public business. So far as I know, this is a universal objection in every part of the world.

But for this poor country my objection goes deeper. The stationery I refer to is too expensive for us. Englishmen belonging to the most expensive country in the world and who had to flourish on the awe they could inspire in us introduced expensive and massive buildings for offices and bungalows requiring for their upkeep an army of servants and hangers-on. If we copy their style and habits we will be ruined ourselves and carry the country in this ruin. And what was tolerated in the case of the conquerors will not be tolerated in ours. There is, too, paper shortage. I am of opinion, therefore, that all these expensive habits should be given up. Hand-made paper with ordinarily printed letterheads in Nagari and Urdu should be used. The embossed stationery already printed can easily be cut up and put to better use, and should not be used up under cover of economy. Surely village products cannot be made to wait till the expensive and possibly foreign stuff is used up. Popular Governments should signalize their advent by adopting popular measures and inexpensive habits.

Mussooree, 8-6-'46

Notes

Its Language

A correspondent writes:

"You must be aware that when constitutions have been drawn up in any of the countries of the world they have been invariably drafted in the language of the country concerned, e. g. France, Germany, Ireland, Egypt, Japan, etc.

"It would be fitting, if our constitution were to be drawn up in our national language. But one difficulty will be that few, if any, of the judges of our High and Federal Courts know Hindustani. They will, therefore, have to have an English translation for their use.

"The other question that will arise is as to whether the members of the Constituent Assembly will know enough Hindustani to grasp its essentials."

This letter appeals to me. Why should our constitution be in English? It should certainly be in an Indian language and, in my opinion, that language can only be Hindustani which crores can easily understand. In addition such an act will electrify the masses. As circumstances are, it is right that the Constituent Assembly should make an English translation of the document and, indeed, there should be translations also in every one of the provincial languages.

The second point raised by the writer is also apt. But since the members of the Constituent Assembly will be chosen by the present legislative bodies, it will be open to the latter to elect, so far as possible, only those persons as are conversant with Hindustani and thus act on the correspondent's letter. Mussooree, 3-6-'46

(From Harijansevak)

True but not New

Maulvi Hamidullah Sahib of Lucknow came to see me in Mussooree and handed two of his pamphlets. They are an attempt to prove the necessity of making obligatory up to the high school standard a knowledge of both Hindi and Urdu and Nagari and Persian scripts, whether for boys or girls. The idea appeals forcibly to me. My effort has always been directed to this end. Time was when Maulana Hasrat Mohani and Babu Purshottamdas Tandon were working for the same objective but alas! we did not meet with success. Nevertheless, I neither abandoned hope nor effort and the result was the creation of the Hindustani Prachar Sabha. The Maulvi Sahib's request, therefore, is nothing new for me.

If the U. P. Government is able, with the general consent, to make the attempt, they will have rendered a great service. I am of opinion that in all the provinces where Hindi or Urdu is the mother tongue, a knowledge of the other should be made compulsory. I have no doubt that the natural outcome of such a step will be the easy birth of Hindustani, in which the two will blend into one. The present controversy between the two sisters will then cease. Another advantage that will accrue is that tuition up to the high school will be in the national language instead of English.

Mussooree, 5-6-'46

(From Harijansevak)

No Publicity Required

A Brahmin correspondent asks me to publish the fact that he has become a Harijan and wants to eliminate his name as a Caste Hindu from the census too. This is a sequence to my having asked all Caste Hindus to look upon themselves as Harijans of the so-called lowest stratum. But what is the point in giving publicity to an inner change? The real proof is for the convert to practise the change in his daily life. He will, therefore, mix freely with Bhangis and take an active part in their life. If possible, he will live with them or get a Bhangi to live with him. He will give his children in marriage to Harijans and on being questioned he will say that he has become a Harijan of his own free will and will register his name either as a Harijan or Bhangi in the census when he has to classify himself. But having done so he will on no account arrogate to himself any of the rights of Harijans as, for example, he will not enter his name as a voter on their list. In other words, he will undertake to fulfil all the duties of a Harijan without seeking any of the rights that pertain to them. So long as separate voting lists are maintained he will cease to be a voter.

New Delhi, 9-6-'46

(From Harijansevak)

Petrol and the Black Market

A correspondent writes as follows:

"Owing to lack of time it is not always possible to do all the necessary touring by rail. Workers have, therefore, to travel long distances by car. As petrol is rationed and the required quantity is not available recourse is had to the black market. It is either brought through someone or the taxi-driver is commissioned to obtain it from the black market and payment per mile is given to him according to the price paid for the petrol.

"Is it right for workers to use a car under these circumstances?"

"It is possible that if they do not, they will have to cut down their touring which will seemingly be harmful to the work. Am I right in believing that there is no alternative?"

I am of opinion that the worker who believes in truth should not use a car under these conditions. Even if he is not a believer but tries to render service thoughtfully he should not do so. If he does, he knowingly encourages black marketing and nothing but harm can come of such action. I go further and say that to use a car at all times for service is wrong in itself.

New Delhi, 10-6-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

Decimal Coinage

It seems that I inadvertently allowed to be printed in the last paragraph of Shri K. Mashruwala's article on this subject the statement that a second instalment would follow showing how, if at all, decimal coinage without loss to the poor could be promulgated. As a matter of fact I do not think the time has come for a serious consideration of the contemplated reform. I am quite clear that however attractive any scheme of decimal coinage may be, it should not be considered before there is an independent national Government. Therefore, the publication of any such scheme is wholly premature. There are many more pressing and urgent problems occupying the best mind of the country. Surely the country can easily wait for a more fortunate moment for a proper understanding of a scheme before legislation on the subject is undertaken. If England has waited for years and is still waiting, why should poor famishing India have a radical reform in coinage sprung upon it without the man in the street being instructed in the pros and cons of the subject? It is not a matter which has nothing to be said against it. It will certainly not add one grain of corn to the existing stocks. Whether a rupee is to contain 100 cents or 64 pice is a problem that can await solution for a happier day. Democracy demands patient instruction on it before legislation. Hence I intended to erase the announcement of the second article in order to avoid raising a hope I had no desire to satisfy.

New Delhi, 9-6-'46

M. K. G.

WEEKLY LETTER

HIS LIBRARY

Perhaps very few people besides his close companions know that Gandhiji calls his lavatory 'library'. It is not merely a matter of nomenclature but is so in fact. He has done more reading in his 'library' than an average man does in his lifetime. It is also the place where he has done some of his hardest thinking—I can recall at least three occasions when decisions of a most far-reaching character were either taken or reversed in the solitude of that sanctum, the only solitude that he could have. The expression 'library' was borrowed from an esteemed friend. Gandhiji often loves to describe how this friend kept his lavatory so clean that one could sit and read in it without discomfort. He had even got fixed over the seat of his lavatory a book shelf which was put to its full and legitimate use. "The lavatories of even the poorest of the poor ought to be as clean and neat as a library or the kitchen. There should not be a trace of dirt or foul smell in it," remarked Gandhiji before the prayer gathering at Mussooree on Sunday last. He was speaking to them about the necessity of building a sanctuary or a musafarkhana at Mussooree for the poor folk, where they could avail themselves of the cool hill climate in case of need. "You might think that I am speaking with my tongue in my cheek. The fact is that a meticulous sense of cleanliness, not only personal but also in regard to one's surroundings, is the alpha and omega of corporate life. We in India have made a ritual of cleanliness. But we have yet to make good our claim that we possess the sanitary instinct. I have seen how we foul the banks of our holy rivers. Ganges water is regarded by us as holy, capable of washing off our sins. The idea is symbolical. Just as water washes the body clean, a devotee prays and hopes for the cleansing of the heart by the water of life. But if we contaminate our holy rivers as we do, how can their water effect inner cleansing?"

He had heard that the living conditions of the labourers in Mussooree were deplorable. They lived in small, overcrowded, dirty and evil smelling rooms. No one could afford to overlook that. All life was one. If they cleaned their own homes and neglected their neighbours' they would have to pay the price in the form of epidemics and the like. In the West they had been able to rid their countries of plague. He himself had witnessed in South Africa how by prompt and energetic action the Johannesburg Municipality was able to arrest the outbreak of plague so effectively that it never came back. But in India it returned again and again—it had become almost endemic. "The remedy lies in our own hands. We must not only observe the rules of health and hygiene in our own persons but we must see that our poor neighbours do so too. To neglect to do so is a sin for which we cannot escape the penalty. I do not grudge the rich their riches provided that they do not forget the poor and share their riches with them and provided their riches are not gained at the expense of the impoverishment of others."

THE GADFLY

Socrates described himself as a gadfly, the mission of whose life was to shake the complacency and quicken the conscience of the rich and the powerful. Gandhiji did not allow the conscience of the fashionable rich of Mussooree any rest or respite. Only he accompanied it with the healing message of Ramanama. "Ramanama is not for the few; it is for all," he told them on the following day. "He who takes His name lays by a rich store for himself, and it is inexhaustible. The more you draw upon it, the more it increases. It is infinite. As the Upanishad says, you take out infinite out of infinite and infinite remains behind. It is the unfailing panacea for all the ills, physical, mental and spiritual to which man is subject. Ramanama is only one of the numerous names of God. In fact there are as many names of God as there are human beings in the world. You may substitute Krishna for Rama or you can substitute for it any of His countless names and it will make no difference." He himself had got the mantra of Ramanama, he said, from his nurse when he was a child. "I used to be frightened of ghosts and evil spirits in the dark. My nurse told me, 'If you repeat Ramanama all the ghosts and evil spirits will vanish.' I accepted her advice with all the unquestioning faith of a child. That cured me of my cowardice." If that was the experience of a child, how much more would the grown-ups stand to gain by it if they repeated Ramanama with understanding and faith, he asked.

But the condition was that it must come from the heart. "Do evil thoughts possess you or, are you tormented by lust or greed? Then there is no charm against it like Ramanama." And he illustrated his meaning by a parable. "Supposing you are tempted to amass a big fortune by some easy and dishonest means. If you have faith in Ramanama you will say to yourself, 'Why should I amass for my wife and children riches which they might squander away—why not leave them a legacy in the shape of sound character and sound education and training that will enable them to earn their living by honest industry and body labour?' Ceaseless repetition of Ramanama will dispel your delusion and false attachment and the living realization will dawn on you that you were a fool to hanker after millions for the sake of your dear ones instead of offering them the priceless treasure of His name which frees one from all bondage and wandering. Filled with the joy of that realization such a person will tell his wife and children, 'I have not brought for you the treasure I had set out for but something infinitely richer.' 'Where is it, show it to us?' they will say incredulously. 'It is the Name which is richer than all treasures' he will reply, 'because it quenches the thirst for all riches. It is enshrined in my heart.'"

SKELETONS IN THE CUPBOARD

As at Simla so at Mussooree, he more than once rattled the skeletons in their cupboards. He spoke to them of the poor rickshaw pullers and load carriers there. They should be everyone's concern. They made life possible for the wealthy and yet the latter, while willing to take from them even the inhuman service of rickshaw-pulling, did not care to see where and how they lived, what they ate and what they earned. He had heard that these poor men lived in tiny rooms without adequate light and air; they did not want to reveal how many herded together into one room lest they should be evicted or fined. They were dirtily clad as could be seen from the little crowd of them that had come to attend the prayers that evening. But perhaps they had not the wherewithal to afford a change of clothes. They might be like the woman in Bihar, when he first went there, who, when asked to wash herself and her clothes, said to Ba: "How can I bathe when I have not another sari to put on?" It was the bounden duty of those to whom God had given more than their needs to spend the extra on those who were in want. He had been told that the Congress Government was now in power and would see to it that labour quarters everywhere were rebuilt. If they did so it would be a good thing. It would be no more than their bare duty. That would not, however, exonerate rickshaw riders from their duty. Doctors had told him that these poor people pulled these vehicles for four years or so and the work was so hard that they died soon after of lung and heart trouble. How could the users be so callous as not to see that they were properly housed and sufficiently paid and clothed and not overworked.

AN ERROR AND CONFESSION

In the mirror of Satyagraha what might appear as trifles to others, some times assume gigantic proportions. Not satisfied with what he had heard from others about the condition of the load bearers and rickshaw coolies of Mussooree, he deputed one of his party to visit their slums and study at first hand the conditions of living there. In the course of his report, the friend who had been deputed, mentioned to him, what he had been told by some rickshaw pullers, that they had been turned out from the prayer gathering on account of their dirty clothes. On the basis of that report he had allowed himself to address a few remarks to the prayer gathering. His remarks were taken to heart by one of the workers who was in charge of the meeting. On subsequent inquiry Gandhiji learnt that the information which he had received was of doubtful authenticity. As a Satyagrahi he felt he had fallen from grace in accepting a statement made to him without full scrutiny and by basing his public remarks thereon. Making a public confession of his mistake in his address after the prayer on the following day, he stressed the importance of speaking only when necessary and uttering every word after the most careful thought. A Satyagrahi could not afford to be credulous or to be careless in his speech. There is a Sanskrit verse saying that not to begin is the first sign of wisdom, but once you begin a thing you should do it well. "It would have been best not to have made use of the unsifted information. But having done so I should end it well by making the admission that on inquiry I found that the accusation could not be supported." He next told them of his three gurus—the three Japanese monkeys, a replica of which he always kept before him on his desk. "There is a great piece of sculpture in Japan depicting three monkeys. One of them is shutting his mouth with his hands, the second is shutting his ears and the third is shutting his eyes. The lesson of the first one is not to speak unless absolutely necessary and then too, to weigh every word before speaking. The message of the second is not to hear evil things, of the third not to let one's eyes wander here, there and everywhere." Therefore, when going along the road, one should either contemplate the beauty of nature or else fix his gaze on the ground before one. He carried about the three gurus with him wherever he went and he advised them all to bear their instruction in mind.

ANOTHER LESSON

Accidental delay of a few moments at the prayer meeting provided Gandhiji with another theme for his after-prayer discourse on Thursday last. An important visitor had detained him beyond the stipulated time, so that when he reached the prayer-grounds the prayer had already commenced. Apologizing for the delay in his address at the end of the prayer, he told the audience how pleased he was that Shri Kanu Gandhi had started the prayer without waiting for him. "It should be the general rule that prayers must not be delayed for anybody on earth. God's time never stops. From the very beginning the wheel of His time has gone ceaselessly on. As a matter of fact there is no beginning for Him or His time.

"God is not a person. No one can describe Him as no one has seen Him. He is the Law and the Law-giver combined into one. The author of the Vedas, after the profoundest search has described him as Neti, Neti (not this, not this). He moves all and yet no one can move Him. Not a blade of grass moves without His will. For Him there is no beginning and no end.

"Everything that has a beginning must end. The sun, the moon and the earth must all perish one day even though it might be after an incalculable number of years. God alone is immortal, imperishable. How can man find words to describe Him? How can anyone afford to miss the time of offering prayers to Him whose watch never stops?" Had Kanu Gandhi waited for him it would have hurt him, he said. He had felt ashamed of disturbing the meeting by walking up to the dais when the prayer was going on. If others came late during the prayers he inwardly fretted against them: why did they not stand at the far end of the gathering instead of walking in and disturbing the meeting? He would have liked to wait outside but he knew that people were waiting for him. They might feel worried over his absence. Therefore, he had dared to walk to the dais and take his seat there though not without trembling. His car had not failed him. But he could not rudely tear himself from his visitors.

He wanted them all to learn a lesson from the incident. If they kept the time for the prayers the habit would be reflected in all that they did. "A man who works regularly in a systematic fashion never feels overworked or tired. It is not hard work that kills a man, but irregularity or lack of system."

New Delhi, 11-6-'46

PYARELAL

HINDUSTANI CRITICIZED

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Shri Jivanji Desai has sent me samples of some criticisms of the edition in Urdu Script of 'Harijan-sevak' from both Hindi and Urdu newspapers. They have made fun of its Hindustani. Hindi critics opine that the articles are deliberately filled with unnecessary Urdu words and Urdu critics complain of the use of Sanskrit words which Muslims cannot understand.

I am glad of these criticisms. Thus, why should the paper be called 'Harijansevak' instead of 'HarijanKhidmatgar'? Why 'Sampadak' and not 'Editor' or 'Mudir' and so on? Lovers of Urdu believe that Hindustani and Urdu are synonymous. Lovers of Hindi feel the same conversely even when it is written in the Urdu script. Presumably they hope that this criticism will go home and make me give up the Urdu script in sheer despair. But the hope is not likely to be fulfilled. In fact neither Urdu nor Hindi is to be termed Hindustani. Though not in vogue today Hindustani is a wise mixture of the two. If newspaper and other critics will exercise a little forbearance they will presently see that it is not difficult to understand what is Hindustani as distinguished from Hindi and Urdu. I admit that those who write for 'Harijansevak' are still struggling but they are determined to reach the desired goal. Readers must bear kindly with what may today seem a hotch-potch of the two forms. If God spares my life, I hope to prove to the readers of 'Harijansevak' that Hindustani can be as sweet as either Urdu or Hindi. The seeming quarrel of today will shortly disappear when the two forms, it is realized, are sisters and that through their joint effort will come into being a stately language which will serve the crores of India.

In the interim I hope critics will point out what to them may appear as mistakes. Taken in a friendly spirit such criticism will help to improve the language of 'Harijansevak'.

Mussooree, 5-6-'46

(From Harijansevak)

DURING MUSSOOREE SOJOURN

(By M. K. Gandhi)

During the prayer meetings in Mussooree I suggested that the gay people of the place might well think of the poor among them, and make their living comfortable, clean and hygienic as also enable the poorest of all classes to find an abode where it would be possible for them to receive the benefit of the hill climate. Both the suggestions have been taken up with enthusiasm. An influential committee has been formed to carry out the idea of a dharmashala or musafarkhana. I write this note to suggest that much the most important thing would be to have a committee of workers or even one worker who would make it his business to run the guest house in a becoming manner. Seeing that the place will be free of rent it will be no small task to choose the guests who may occupy the premises. Care will have to be taken to exclude those who are at all able to pay a reasonable rent. The visitors must be those who have nothing wherewith to pay. If the place is to be kept absolutely clean, there will have to be rules to be rigidly enforced in the interests of the visitors themselves. And yet the occupants will have to be treated with perfect courtesy. They must never be allowed to feel that poverty is a crime. Every third class traveller knows that the poor receive rough treatment in the railway carriages and at railway stations. It is a sad commentary that in this poor country where according to books poverty carries with it a certain dignity, in public places the poor are treated almost with contempt and they are made to pay for receiving it. It is in this unfortunate atmosphere that this guest house is to be built. Let the committee seek out from now an ideal caretaker who will answer the requirements of the office which are undoubtedly onerous. If such a person is found, the project is bound to be a pattern for all such places on hill stations.

Mussooree, 8-6-'46

CONTENTS	PAGE
URDU, THE LANGUAGE
OF BOTH? ... M. K. GANDHI	177
MINDFULNESS, THE REMEDY ... M. K. GANDHI	178
KASTURBA WORK IN ASSAM ...	179
NOT ENOUGH ... PYARELAL	179
THE UNKNOWN ... M. K. GANDHI	180
TAKE CARE OF PENNIES ... M. K. GANDHI	180
WEEKLY LETTER ... PYARELAL	182
HINDUSTANI CRITICIZED ... M. K. GANDHI	184
DURING MUSSOOREE SOJOURN ... M. K. GANDHI	184
NOTES :
ITS LANGUAGE ... M. K. G.	180
TRUE BUT NOT NEW ... M. K. G.	181
NO PUBLICITY REQUIRED ... M. K. G.	181
PETROL AND THE BLACK MARKET ... M. K. G.	181
DECIMAL COINAGE ... M. K. G.	181

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 21

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, JUNE 30, 1946

TWO ANNAS.

A TOUCHSTONE AND A CHALLENGE

Shri Ghanashyamasingh Gupta writes:

"The employees of the Durg Municipality, including the sweepers, went on a strike from the 7th instant on the rejection of their demand for a 300 per cent increase in their pay. The Municipality requested the Karmachari Sangh not to include the sweepers in the strike. But the request was turned down. They would not refer the matter to impartial arbitration. The decision of the sweepers to strike work naturally put the Municipality into a dilemma.

"A public meeting was held on the 7th. at which both the President of the Municipality and that of the Sangh put their respective viewpoints before the public. I was present at the meeting. Although in my opinion the employees' case was weak, I took the stand that without entering into the merits of the dispute between the Sangh and the Municipality, the citizens should make arrangements to keep the essential services going. They should volunteer to take up scavenging duties themselves and maintain sanitary condition in the city rather than import sweepers from outside and thereby possibly precipitate trouble. Accordingly no help from outside was sent for or came and the sanitation work was done by the people themselves with the result that after four days the strike collapsed and the strikers returned to their work on the 5th day. Throughout the period there was no incident and complete peace prevailed.

"At the public meeting announcing the termination of the strike, the President of the Sangh said, referring to me and my companions, that in taking up the sweepers' work during the strike we were guilty of himsa towards the strikers. The implication was that if we had abstained, the Municipality would have been forced to concede their demands. Our intervention had hit them and therefore was of the nature of violence. What is your view? Were I and my companions guilty of violence? Was our action morally wrong? I may add that I have no feeling of antagonism in me in regard to the strikers. I have in my own small way even served them. In 1942, when I was President of the Municipality, I even brought trouble upon myself by admitting Harijan boys to schools along with other non-Harijan children."

The question raised by Shri Ghanashyamasingh is an important one. Sweepers' strikes are becoming the order of the day. They are a challenge to our civil conscience and a touchstone on which the sincerity of our cry for independence will be tested. Shri Khandubhai Desai has sent an account of similar action taken by the citizens of Ahmedabad during the recent sweepers' strike there. Sweepers occupy a pivotal position in our social and municipal life. They ought to have the first claim on our consideration for the amelioration of their living conditions and improved instruments of work. Instead of their having to resort to direct action for redress, it is the citizens and municipal rate payers who ought to resort to direct action on their behalf.

Not all the demands put forth by the strikers are necessarily just and it is, therefore, wrong to refuse to submit a dispute over wages and the like to impartial arbitration. In the two cases, if the intention behind the action taken by the citizens was simply to coerce the strikers into submission, it was reprehensible from the strikers' standpoint. But they had every right to resist the dictation of the strikers, if the latter's demands were unreasonable and unjust.

The strike however being now over, the interest evinced by the citizens in the sanitation problem should not cease. It is up to them to see that the cause for their recurrence is eradicated by the root. The disgraceful living conditions which characterize sweepers' quarters in many cities ought to go without delay. The sweepers should be taught the best method of rendering sanitation service. They should have facilities for education and medical relief for themselves and their children to enable them to become model citizens. If the wages are inadequate, they should be raised. Above all, having found from personal experience what sanitation work means, reformers should be able to judge better what should be done for the removal and disposal of night soil and refuse, so that the sweepers' avocation may cease to be regarded as unclean. If this urgent reform is not attended to in time and without further agitation, the excellent work done would be counted as waste of effort.

New Delhi, 23-6-46

PYARELAL

MORE LEGAL OPINIONS

Following upon Shri Shivanarain's legal opinion on the question of the right of the Europeans to vote or be candidates for the Constituent Assembly, Shri D. N. Bahadurji, Shri K. M. Munshi, Sir Alladi Krishnaswami Aiyar and Sir Bakshi Tekchand have sent their opinions to Gandhiji in response to the latter's invitation. After examining the question from different angles, they all arrive at the same conclusion as Shri Shivanarain. The following excerpts from their opinions will be found to be illuminating :

Shri D. N. Bahadurji after noticing paragraphs 1, 3 and 16 of the State document of May 16, proceeds :

"It is clear from the above quoted paragraphs that the declared intention of the author of the said Paper was that the future constitution of the Indian Government was to be devised by Indians only.

"I see nothing in paragraph 18 of the said Paper which may be construed as departing from the intention emphasized in the previous paragraphs of the said Paper. Paragraph 18 divides Indian nationals into three groups: (1) Muslims, (2) Sikhs, (3) "General Community" for reasons of convenient expression. Just as Muslims and Sikhs in paragraph 18 are assumed to be persons of Indian Nationality, so it must be assumed in the case of "General Community" that the persons comprising it, must be of Indian Nationality.

"In my opinion Europeans who are foreigners are not entitled to vote at the election of or be candidates for the election of members of the proposed Constituent Assembly."

Shri K. M. Munshi's opinion runs :

"In the last portion of the Statement the Mission further state :

'We hope in any event that you (Indians) will remain in close and friendly association with our people. But these are matters for your own free choice.'

"The British subjects who are in the country as non-national Britishers are clearly included in 'our people' and 'countrymen' and as different from 'they' (Indians) and 'the Indian people'."

Referring to paragraph 18 of the State Paper he observes :

"For the purpose of the Constituent Assembly the paragraph recognizes three main communities of Indians, namely, the General, Muslim and Sikh. The words to wit : 'We therefore propose that there shall be elected by each provincial legislative Assembly', in paragraph 19 (1) mean the same thing as representatives allotted to each of these communities.

"The General Community is deemed to include persons who are neither Muslims nor Sikhs. It is to consist of Hindus and other groups of persons referred to therein as 'smaller minorities'. The word 'smaller' as qualifying the word 'minority' has been used in contradistinction to Muslims and Sikhs who are classified as major communities of Indians. The word 'community' had to be used for 'minority' for the Muslims and the Sikhs only because a new artificial group, called General Community consisting of the majority, viz. the Hindus and the smaller minorities has to be formed."

He then proceeds to discuss the meaning of the word 'minority' as used in paragraphs 19 and 20 of the State Paper :

"The word 'minority' as used in constitutional treatises, enactments and documents means a group of nationals with distinct interests as against the interests of a larger group of nationals called the majority. But in all cases both such groups are treated as always belonging to the same State having a common domicile and citizenship. The Treaty of June 28, 1919, by the Allied Powers made with Poland contains provisions relating to minorities, which Poland undertook to recognize as its fundamental laws. The Articles of the Treaty have since then been recognized as a precedent for minority rights. Article 7 of the said Treaty provides that 'all Polish nationals shall be equal before the law' etc. Article 8 provides as follows : 'Polish Nationals who belong to racial, religious, or linguistic minorities shall enjoy the same treatment and security in law and in fact as the other Polish Nationals.' Similar provisions are included in the treaties concluded by the Allies with Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Bulgaria, Turkey etc. See Wheaton's International Law, p. 80. Clearly therefore the word 'minorities' used in paragraphs 19 (iv) and 20 of the Statement in connection with rights of citizens and fundamental rights means national minorities.

"It must not be forgotten that the doctrine of minorities and majorities among the nationals of a country is as old as the 'Federalist' and after the first world war found expression in the Weimar Constitution of Germany. In considering the rights of the minorities provided in the said Peace Treaties, Mr. William Edward Hall, an eminent jurist on International Law, states in his work on International Law that "too much stress was laid on the rights of minorities while a corresponding duty incumbent by the said minority to co-operate loyally with other fellow citizens was hardly ever stressed." The learned author at page 64 of his treatise refers to a resolution passed at the third Assembly of the League of Nations emphasizing the said duty of racial, religious, linguistic minority in a State. Hall's International Law (8th Edn.), p. 64. 'A minority' in the Statement, therefore, means a comparatively smaller group of nationals of the State and not a group of nationals of another State living within the boundaries of the former.

"The Joint Committee on Indian Constitutional Reform 1933-34 in its Report on page 14, while dealing with the special responsibilities and powers of the Provincial Governors and the Governor-General also gave the same meaning to the minorities in India. It is there stated that the authority of the Provincial Governors as also the Governor-General was interlinked with their responsibilities to the Crown and Parliament both, for peace and tranquility and 'for the protection of all the weak and helpless among her (India's) people.' In paragraph 321 of the said Report, the Committee while dealing with the Anglo-Indian community and the problem of their education makes a distinction between 'Europeans' and 'domiciled Europeans'. This clearly establishes that the Joint Committee treated Europeans other than the Europeans domiciled in this country, as being non-nationals of India."

Shri Munshi proceeds:

"The representation to Europeans given in the various Provincial Legislatures under the Government of India Act 1935 and in prior Statutes, is not a representation given to them as a racial minority of India but as a vested interest existing in the country at the time of framing of a constitution which was admittedly not based on the principle of self-determination or on a recognition of Indians as being entitled to frame their own constitution.

"That the Mission did not intend to depart from the accepted meaning of minorities is clear from paragraph 18 of their Statement, where they state that 'the most satisfactory method of election to the Constituent Assembly would be the one based on adult franchise.' Adult franchise in this clause can only mean a right exercisable by persons who are Indian citizens. But the procedure of granting adult franchise having been found by them to be impracticable, the Mission adopts an alternative course. This again would lead to the conclusion that there was no intention to get the constitution framed by persons who are not Indian nationals, or citizens.

"The words 'majority' and 'minority' therefore, in my opinion, were used with reference to India or Indian people as used by the British Prime Minister in his said announcement and 'Indians' as used in the Mission's Statement and do not include non-national residents in India. Any other view would conflict with the expressed intention to ask only Indians to frame their own constitution.

"In my opinion, therefore, the words 'elected by each Provincial Assembly' and 'by the smaller minorities' in paragraphs 18 and 19 must necessarily be construed as restricting the franchise to the Indian members of such Legislative Assembly inclusive of domiciled Europeans who are Indian nationals, and cannot be extended to apply to European British subjects not domiciled in India.

"The words in paragraph 19 'elected by each Provincial Assembly' may be argued to indicate a different meaning. But ex-concessis the election is not by the Provincial Assembly as such, but by its members representing the three groups.

"It follows also that the 'representatives on the Constituent Assembly' have to be Indians."

Sir Bakshi Tekchand after referring to the occurrence of the words 'community' and 'communities' in paragraphs 18 and 19 of the State Paper poses the following question:

"The question for consideration is whether the expression 'all persons who are not Muslims or Sikhs' is limited to Indians only, or it includes Europeans or other foreigners who may be members of the Provincial Legislatures under the Constitution of 1935.

"Clearly, para 18 is to be interpreted not as an isolated or independent clause, but in the context, according to the 'character and scheme' of the document as a whole. The rule of construction is 'that language is always used secundum subjectam materiam and that it must be understood in the sense which best harmonizes with the subject matter.' Where words of a general import are used, the real meaning is to be collected ex antecedentibus et consequentibus, that is to say, in reference to that which precedes and follows it. There is, therefore, no doubt that the expression 'all persons' included in the "General Community" means Indian members of the Provincial Assembly concerned and not foreigners or non-nationals.

"That this is the intention, is further clear from para 22 of the Statement which reads as follows:

'It will be necessary to negotiate a Treaty between the Union Constituent Assembly and the United Kingdom to provide for certain matters arising out of the transfer of power.'

Surely, it could not have been the intention that the Constituent Assembly, with which the United Kingdom is to negotiate the Treaty, will have as its members, persons who are not Indians, but are nationals of the United Kingdom which is to be the other party to the Treaty."

Sir Alladi Krishnaswami Aiyar after referring to the object of the machinery to be set up, viz. to enable "Indians" to decide the future constitution of India, observes:

"If the normal procedure in vogue in the framing of other constitutions were adopted the procedure would have been to have a convention based upon adult franchise of Indian Nationals or at least persons having an Indian Domicile. The procedure of having the body elected by the personnel in the existing Legislative Assemblies is merely followed with a view to speed up Indian Independence and the framing of a Constitution to implement India's right to Independence. The accident of that procedure is not to be availed of by persons who are not Nationals to exercise the franchise for the Convention or to take part in the Convention summoned for the framing of the Constitution."

New Delhi, 26-6-46

PYARELAL

HARIJAN

June 30

1946

WHITE MAN'S BURDEN !

(By M. K. Gandhi)

According to Reuters picked Indians, men and women, headed by Dr. Naicker, commenced Satyagraha (in South Africa popularly known as passive resistance) on June 14th in respect of the Segregation Law of the Union Parliament of South Africa. The same agency further reports that neither the Government nor the Municipality had taken any action against the passive resisters but that some 'Whites' of Durban had taken the execution of the law into their own hands by raiding the camp at night, cutting down tents swiftly and carrying them away. "A band of 100 young White men broke through the cordon of 50 Indian passive resisters, pulled down the tents and dragged them away torn. Some camp stretchers were smashed and blankets and pillows removed. Two women resisters were involved in the melee. They are stated to have been kicked but not injured."

The papers report that after three days of hooliganism the Borough Police had posted themselves near the scene of passive resistance and warned the hooligans against molesting the resisters and terrorizing them into submission. This is heartening news. Let us hope that it can be taken at its full value and that the protection means fullest protection against lawlessness, sporadic or organized. Organized popular lawlessness is known as lynching, so shamelessly frequent in America.

Before the Segregation Law was passed, White men, known to be respectable, had carried anti-Asiatic agitation to the point of frenzy. Not satisfied with their triumph in having legislation compelling segregation passed probably beyond expectation, the more advanced section among the agitators have become the executioners of their own laws. They do not know that they are thereby defaming the White man's name!!!

My appeal to the White men and women who have regard for laws for which they have voted is that they should create public opinion against hooliganism and lynch law.

Passive resistance is aimed at removal in a most approved manner of bad laws, customs or other evils and is designed to be a complete and effective substitute for forcible methods including hooliganism and lynch law. It is an appeal to the heart of man. Often reason fails. It is dwarfed by self. The theory is that an adequate appeal to the heart never fails. Seeming failure is not of the law of Satyagraha but of incompetence of the Satyagrahi by whatever cause induced. It may not be possible to give a complete historical instance. The name of Jesus at once comes to the lips. It is an instance of brilliant failure. And he has been acclaimed in the West as Prince of passive resisters. I showed years ago in South Africa that the adjective 'passive' was a misnomer, at least as applied to Jesus. He was the most active resister known perhaps to history. His was non-violence par excellence. But I must no longer stray from my main subject. It is the resistance of the Jesus type that the White hooligans are seeking to thwart. Let us hope that our countrymen's heroic resistance will not only shame the hooligans into silence but prove the precursor of the repeal of the law that disfigures the statute book of South Africa. In concrete form, what pure suffering, wholly one-sided, does is to stir public opinion against a wrong. Legislators are, after all, representatives of the public. In obedience to it they have enacted a wrong. They have to reverse the process when the same public, awakened to the wrong, demands its removal.

The real 'White man's burden' is not insolently to dominate coloured or black people under the guise of protection, it is to desist from the hypocrisy which is eating into them. It is time, White men learnt to treat every human being as their equal. There is no mystery about whiteness of the skin. It has repeatedly been proved that given equal opportunity a man, be he of any colour or country, is fully equal to any other.

Therefore, White men throughout the world and especially of India should act upon their fellow-men in South Africa and call upon them not to molest Indian resisters who are bravely struggling to preserve the self-respect of Indians in the Union and the honour of their motherland. "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you." Or, do they take in vain the name of Him who said this? Have they banished from their hearts the great coloured Asiatic who gave to the world the above message? Do they forget that the greatest of the teachers of mankind were all Asiatics and did not possess a white face? These, if they descended on earth and went to South Africa, will all have to live in the segregated areas and be classed as Asiatics and coloured people unfit by law to be equals of Whites.

Is a civilization worth the name which requires for its existence the very doubtful prop of racial legislation and lynch law? The silver lining to the cloud that hangs over the devoted heads of our countrymen lies in the plucky action of Rev. Scott, a White clergyman, and his equally White fellow workers, who have undertaken to share the sufferings of the Indian resisters.

New Delhi, 26-6-'46

By M. K. Gandhi

The Story of My Experiments with Truth

Price Rs. 6, Postage 13 Annas

Satyagraha in South Africa

(Companion Volume to the above)

Rs. 4-8-0, Postage 13 Annas

By J. C. Kumarappa

Practice & Precepts of Jesus

Price Rs. 1-8-0, Postage 6 Annas

Christianity-Its Economy & Way of Life

Price Rs. 1-8-0, Postage 6 Annas

Notes

Imitation

Q. You have averred that a person who gives up eating meat in mere imitation of you cannot be said to be doing the right thing. Are you not wrong in holding this view?

A. I see nothing wrong in what I have said. If a person may change his practice in imitation, it is equally possible for him to revert to the original practice in imitation. The gist of what I said was that nothing should be done without being well weighed and thought out and without deep conviction. Thoughtless imitation is the sport of little minds and may lead a man into a ditch with disastrous results.

New Delhi, 21-6-'46

Harijan Collections

Q. You collect funds for Harijans wherever you go. According to press reports, you sometimes receive large sums for that purpose. What is the total amount that you have collected? How is it spent? Are the accounts inspected or 'audited' by anyone? I do not mean to suggest that the funds are being misused, but it ill-becomes you to keep the people in the dark about these things.

A. The question hardly calls for a reply. But there must be many uninformed people like the correspondent. By itself the question is legitimate. The answer is simple. All Harijan collections made by me are handed over to the Harijan Sevak Sangh. Shri Thakkar Bapa is the guardian of the fund. It is spent according to the direction and with the sanction of the Harijan Sevak Sangh. Some of it is spent according to my instructions, but it has to be for the service of the Harijans only. Similarly for other funds, donations are sent to be spent at my discretion. Strict account is kept of every pie and the income and expenditure accounts are duly audited and certified from time to time.

Why This Antipathy?

Q. Simple-minded Jains take you for a Jain, and you are not ashamed to be regarded as such. And yet, you seem studiously to shun the very mention of Mahavira in the columns of 'Harijan'. Is this becoming for a Mahatma like you?

A. The above is the gist, in my own words, of a correspondent's question. The reader can infer from it, what the original must be like. I plead guilty to the charge of not being a Jain. But possibly I am a better informed devotee of Mahavira than many who claim to be Jains. If, however, I am not a devotee of Mahavira Swami, he or his devotees stand to lose nothing thereby. I alone will be the loser. I suggest that we merely betray our weakness when we resent the indifference of our neighbours about those whom we revere and idolize.

New Delhi, 25-6-'46

Yarn Exchange

Shrimati Annapurna Devi sends me the following account of work carried on by her in Madhi, near Bardoli:

"I had been trying to work in this small village for the girls and thus come in contact with their families but I was a little perplexed when Shri Jugatram pressed me to work in a larger area. On hearing from you, however, I was encouraged and gained confidence.

"I have made some good contacts and feel that people have begun to listen to me and appreciate with affection my endeavours to help them. I should like to tell you about the hank shop which we started over a year ago with a view to popularizing the idea of yarn currency. It came into being after a play about a hank shop which was part of a daily entertainment which we used to get up for the villagers after the evening prayer. Since May last year, we have been selling articles of daily use such as soap, oil, salt, gur, chillies, ground-nut etc. in exchange for yarn. The stock of hanks increased from 43 in May to 233 in September. Last month there was a big fall, but that was because of the people being occupied in the harvesting season.

"Children of 10 years of age who attend my school run this shop. Two such who used to spend their days in dust and dirt are now the chief actors in this little drama."

New Delhi, 23-6-'46

M. K. G.

(From Harijanbandhu)

WEEKLY LETTER

Thanks to the irrepressible and, may I add, very often irresponsible activity of the gentlemen of the Press, the Imperial City during the week has been a seething cauldron of speculations, rumours and false alarms. Gandhiji had more than once to appeal to newspapermen not to injure themselves and the cause by indulging in this kind of journalism. "If I were appointed dictator for a day in the place of the Viceroy, I would stop all newspapers," he said on one occasion. "With the exception of Harijan of course," he added with a smile and a wink. Incidentally he remarked that if he had to rename his weekly he would call it not Harijan but Bhangi, i. e. Sweeper, that being more in tune with his present temper and the need of the hour as he understood it. As an illustration of the infinite harm that might result from such irresponsible journalism, he remarked that, if the people were to believe what had been appearing in the Press about his part in the deliberations of the Working Committee, Hindus would be right to execrate him as the enemy of their interests. It was further being made to appear, he observed that his was the only intransigent voice in the Working Committee. He wanted them to dismiss all that as pure imagination. He appealed to newspapermen to put a curb on their pen. Failing that it was up to the public to shed their craving for 'potted' news and to cease to patronize papers that purveyed it or at least cease to be misled by what might appear in them.

"There are two kinds of curiosity," he remarked on another occasion "— healthy and unhealthy." "One should always be curious to know one's duty at every step. But itch for news is a variety of dissipation debilitating to the mind and spirit, unless it is properly curbed."

CAMPAIGN OF VILIFICATION

In spite of its diligence to come to a speedy decision on the Cabinet Mission's proposals, the Congress has not been able to escape a malicious campaign of vilification in a certain section of the Press. It has been accused of procrastination and delaying tactics. And when that theme was played out, it was given out that the delay was due to dissensions in the Working Committee. Giving the lie to these innuendoes in one of his prayer discourses Gandhiji remarked that it was wholly untrue that the delay in arriving at a final decision was due to divisions in the Working Committee. Differences of opinion were inevitable in a living organization. He himself did not know what the final decision of the Working Committee was going to be. It was but natural that there should be more Hindus on the Congress register than Muslims, as the Hindu population preponderated in India. But the Congress could not by any stretch of imagination be called a Hindu organization. Its President Maulana Azad had occupied the Presidential chair for a longer period than any other in the Congress history. He was held in equal respect by all those who claim to be of the Congress. The Congress had constituted itself into a trustee, not of any particular community, but of India as a whole. In an organization like that, it always became the duty of the majority to make sacrifices for the minorities and backward sections, not in a spirit of patronizing favour, but in a dignified manner and as a duty. "In the eyes of the Congress, Hindus and Mussalmans, Parsis, Christians and Sikhs are all Indians and therefore equally entitled to its care. The Congress has no sanction except that of non-violence. Unlike the Viceroy, who has the entire armed force of the British Empire at his back, the Congress President can rely only on the united and whole-hearted co-operation of all the communities and classes to give effect to India's will to independence. The Working Committee is, therefore, anxious that we should accept responsibility at the Centre only with the unanimous goodwill of all the communities. That is why they were giving such anxious thought to all the various interests. And that is a ticklish job. They do not want to make the Interim Government the arena of unseemly quarrels among ourselves."

SOUTH AFRICA

The heroic struggle going on in South Africa has become a theme of his after-prayer talks. "We hold it to be a crime against man and God to submit meekly any longer to a policy of segregation that is causing disaster to our country and our people," runs the Passive Resistance resolution passed at a meeting of the Transvaal Indian Congress held at Johannesburg on April 21, 1946. "They must remember," continues the resolution, "that non-violence is the basis of this movement and that this struggle is directed against the policy of segregation and not against the White population of this country."

The struggle has the full sympathy of the European Democrats and the Negro section of South Africa.

Said the President General of the South African National Congress at the Transvaal Indian Congress mass meeting:

"I declare from this platform that we Africans do not only sympathize, but will support and assist in all possible manner the Indians in their struggle against this inhuman legislation."

"Yesterday," he continued, "it was the turn of Africans, to day it is the turn of the Indians, tomorrow it will be the turn of the coloured and there is no knowing where this policy of racialism will end."

Referring to the events of the struggle, as reported in the daily press, Gandhiji in his prayer address on 21-6-'46 described how some White people there had taken the law into their own hands and were harassing the passive resisters. "The Union Government seem to be just watching. It is wrong. It is bad enough to pass an unjust law, but it is worse to let White people take it into their own hands. They ought to realize that Indians are in no way inferior to them. The latter cannot and will not submit to segregation."

Some White men, said Gandhiji, were daily raiding their tents, and terrorizing them. Some women were also among the resisters. But the women had bravely told the men that they would stand by them and share their vicissitudes. "The passive resisters are not criminals but respectable citizens. As self-respecting people they will prefer imprisonment to segregation in ghettos. They will resist injustice and oppression with their last breath. It is open to the South African Government to visit them with the penalty of the law for breach or to abrogate the Segregation Act which is contrary to the dictates of humanity. But it will be a dark blot on the history of the White civilization if lynch law is allowed to have its course in South Africa." He hoped that the South African Government and the civilized conscience of mankind would not allow that.

"What is taking place in South Africa today is worse than martial law," remarked Gandhiji in the course of another prayer address. He did not say these things, he added, to incite them to anger against the Whites of South Africa. If they did that, they would be unworthy to sit in the prayers. He wanted them to go home and pray that God may give strength to their brethren and sisters in South Africa, who were fighting for the honour of India, to face all hardships bravely; secondly that He should show light to the White men so that they might cease to behave like less than men and that the eyes of the Government there may be opened so that they may treat Indians as fellow human beings. The Whites of South Africa too were their brethren, being children of the same God.

When they had the control of India's affairs in their own hands, Gandhiji concluded, such things would become impossible. A Free India wedded to truth and non-violence would teach the lesson of peace to the inhabitants of South Africa. But it would be for them and the Congress to decide whether a Free India would follow the way of peace or the sword. It was bad enough that the small nations of the earth should denude humanity of its precious heritage, it would be awful if a sub-continent of some four hundred millions were to take to gunpowder and live dangerously.

New Delhi, 24-6-'46

PYARELAL

[P.S. For once fear has proved to be a liar. At yesterday's prayer, Gandhiji drew attention to the demi-official statement that had appeared in the Press that the instructions issued for the election of candidates for the Constituent Assembly did not bind them to anything in clause 19 of the Statement. This was clear in the declaration quoted in the papers. He was sorry, said Gandhiji, that he had not seen it before he made his Sunday's speech. He was glad to say that his fears on that score had proved groundless. He felt he owed it to the Delegation to own his mistake, however bona fide it was.

At the same prayer gathering he referred to the report of the deliberations of the Working Committee that had appeared in the newspapers. It was true that the Working Committee had decided to reject the proposals, put before them for the formation of a provisional government for the interim period. But they had decided to go into the proposed Constituent Assembly. There were several flaws in the proposal for the Constituent Assembly, he said, but the Working Committee had reasoned that after all, it would consist of the elected representatives of the people. So, after considering every aspect of the question, they had decided that it should not be rejected.

The papers had also reported, proceeded Gandhiji, that the Working Committee's decision had been taken in the teeth of his opposition. That was a misleading statement to make. The fact was that for the last four or five days his mind had been filled with a vague misgiving. He saw darkness where he had seen light before. He knew that darkness indicated lack of faith in God. One whose whole being is filled with God, should never experience darkness.

Be that as it may, said Gandhiji, the fact remained that he did not see the light just then. What was more, he could not explain or give reasons for his fear. He had, therefore, simply placed his misgivings before the Working Committee and told them that they should come to a decision independently of him. Those whose function was to give a lead to the country could not afford to be guided by another's unreasoned instinct. They could not guide the destiny of the country unless they had the capacity to think for themselves and convince others by reason. The members of the Working Committee, he concluded, were the servants of the nation. They had no other sanction except the willing consent of the people whom they tried to serve. The latter would remove them whenever they liked. His advice to the people, therefore, was to follow the lead given by the Working Committee. He would tell them when he saw the light. But so long as darkness surrounded him in anything, nobody should follow him in it. P.]

THE UTILITY OF THE GROUND-NUT

The following is the essence of Dr. A. T. W. Simeons' long article on the ground-nut.

He opines that the low stamina of our people is primarily due to lack of protein, vitamins and salts in our diet. During the Bengal famine it was proved that the life of the victim of starvation depended more on administering protein than on starch. He maintains that if more protein could be provided, the net result on the national nutritional value would be infinitely better than of more cereals. Ground-nut flour contains over 50% protein and is richer in it than any other known vegetable substance and very edible. An acre of ground-nuts can produce many times the quantity of protein than an acre of wheat, millet or rice. And yet we are not making full use of it. 45% of the ground-nut crop is taken for the production of oil. "What happens to the remaining 55%? If we can eat whole nuts, why cannot we eat them minus the oil? The economist answers, 'because we need the oil cake for feeding our cattle and for manuring our sugarcane and rice fields.'" Dr. Simeons argues that to use an edible protein for this purpose is criminal waste when we have inedible substances like dung, night-soil or guano to enrich our fields. "If we fertilize a sugarcane field with ground-nut cake, every grain of protein we plough into the earth is lost; because sugar contains no protein at all—not to mention the loss of 10% of residual oil in the cake, the vitamins and salts. . . . We feed oil cake to our milking cattle. The milk output increases and milk is an excellent food, but if we feed a cow 10 lbs. of nut protein, it is doubtful if this will produce even  $\frac{1}{2}$  lb. of milk protein. Is it worth it when we can achieve about the same result with cotton-seed and other inedible products?"

Dr. Simeons quotes Prof. B. G. S. Acharya who, after controlled rat feeding experiments, has shown that ground-nut protein was found to have a high biological value. Experiments, he says, have also established the high digestibility coefficient of ground-nut protein. "It ranks with the microbial protein of yeast and closely approximates animal protein as found in milk, eggs and mutton."

"Clean ground-nut oilcake contains over 50% of high grade protein, 13% more than mutton, so that with every ton of oilcake that is ploughed into the field, we are using the nutritional value of a flock of 50 sheep or 50,000 eggs or 15,000 seers of milk in protein alone."

Besides protein the ground-nut contains fat, starch and minerals so that with the addition of a little extra starch and vitamin C, it is a complete food in itself. The most important vitamin deficiency in India is of the B complex which has a profound effect on the health and longevity of the people. The ground-nut is very rich in vitamin B complex, particularly in vitamin B<sub>1</sub>, Nicotinic acid and riboflavin, which are the most important factors. Mr. Kincaid, a missionary worker in a remote village of Kolhapur, testified that the children of his school have thrived on a cake made of clean hand-picked ground-nut. The villagers have overcome their prejudices and use it as a daily addition of 1/2 - 1/5 portion to their usual cereals. Diabetics particularly have been thankful for the increased bread ration it enables them to enjoy. Children enjoy bread made from flour mixed with ground-nut flour, many adults prefer it with a little salt. Ground-nut flour can also be used for pastry and sweetmeats.

The controlled price of commercial ground-nut is Rs. 75 per ton. Edible ground-nut will be more costly. But Dr. Simeons opines that even if the price is higher than the commercial product, it will still be well below the cost of the common cereals.

From the manufacturer's point of view too, the switchover to edible cake will not dislocate either the oil or the ground-nut market.

"India is estimated to produce about 1½ million tons of ground-nut. Thus 7 lakhs of tons of the finest food can be made available from this crop." The protein value would be equivalent to 3500 crores of eggs or 1000 crores of seers of milk or 350 lakhs of sheep. The annual loss of starch, fat, minerals and vitamins is in addition and all due to the wrong use of this valuable nut."

New Delhi, 24-6-'46

A. K.

DR. LOHIA'S CHALLENGE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

It would appear from newspaper reports that Dr. Lohia went to Goa at the invitation of Goans and was served with an order to refrain from making speeches. According to Dr. Lohia's statement, for 188 years now, the people of Goa have been robbed of the right to hold meetings and form organizations. Naturally he defied the order. He has thereby rendered a service to the cause of civil liberty and especially to the Goans. The little Portuguese Settlement which merely exists on the sufferance of the British Government can ill afford to ape its bad manners. In Free India Goa cannot be allowed to exist as a separate entity in opposition to the laws of the free State. Without a shot being fired, the people of Goa will be able to claim and receive the rights of citizenship of the free State. The present Portuguese Government will no longer be able to rely upon the protection of British arms to isolate and keep under subjection the inhabitants of Goa against their will. I would venture to advise the Portuguese Government of Goa to recognize the signs of the times and come to honourable terms with its inhabitants rather than function on any treaty that might exist between them and the British Government.

To the inhabitants of Goa I will say that they should shed fear of the Portuguese Government as the people of other parts of India have shed fear of the mighty British Government and assert their fundamental right of civil liberty and all it means. The differences of religion among the inhabitants of Goa should be no bar to common civil life. Religion is for each individual, himself or herself, to live. It should never become a bone of contention or quarrel between religious sects.

New Delhi, 26-6-'46

MAN'S INHUMANITY TO MAN

A glaring instance of hide-bound prejudice and the use of law to uphold "man's inhumanity to man" has recently been reported in the Press. The following from the Hindu of the 10th June, will speak for itself.

"Citing a recent criminal case in which two Madura Harijans were sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment for an act which was likely 'to wound the feelings of others', Mr. A. Vaidyanatha Iyer, M. L. A. in a communication to the Press, draws the attention of the public to 'the cruel suffering which the Harijans have to bear by reason of untouchability'.

"Mr. Vaidyanatha Iyer says: 'A Madura Harijan who lost his eldest child cremated the body in the Madura Municipal burning ghat in a shed which is said to be set apart for caste Hindus instead of in the one reserved for Harijans. The Harijan's plea was that he did not know of any such reservation, that it was drizzling, and that he thought the former place was better. No caste Hindu raised any objection nor was there any proof that anyone's feelings were wounded. The incident came to the notice of the Madura Police who prosecuted the father of the child and another near relation on the ground that such an act was likely to wound the feelings of others because the Harijans were untouchables. The Second Class Magistrate convicted the accused and sentenced them to four months' rigorous imprisonment. On appeal the City Magistrate confirmed the conviction and sentence, though it was argued that the Madras Civil Disabilities Removal Act of 1938 had laid down that Harijans or Untouchables should not be prevented from having access to any regular institution maintained by a local authority and that Courts should not recognize any custom or usage which sought to impose civil disabilities on Harijans.

"Mr. Vaidyanath Iyer adds that he has brought this case to the notice of the Madras ministry."

The first thing for the Madras ministry, in this case of inhumanity, is to remit the sentences under its powers of clemency and then, if further legal proceedings are permissible, to have the convictions set aside by the High Court at the instance of the Crown.

New Delhi, 23-6-'46

PYARELAL

CONTENTS	PAGE
A TOUCHSTONE AND A CHALLENGE ...	PYARELAL 201
MORE LEGAL OPINIONS ...	PYARELAL 202
WHITE MAN'S BURDEN I ...	M. K. GANDHI 204
WEEKLY LETTER ...	PYARELAL 205
THE UTILITY OF THE GROUND-NUT ...	A. K. 207
DR. LOHIA'S CHALLENGE ...	M. K. GANDHI 208
MAN'S INHUMANITY TO MAN ...	PYARELAL 208
NOTES:
IMITATION ...	M. K. G. 205
HARIJAN COLLECTIONS ...	M. K. G. 205
WHY THIS ANTIPATHY? ...	M. K. G. 205
YARN EXCHANGE ...	M. K. G. 205

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 23

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, JULY 14, 1946

TWO ANNAS

'ALL ABOUT BHANDARS'

(By M. K. Gandhi)

An article under the above caption appeared in the Khadi Patrika of 3rd June. As it is important I give it in full below:

"It is our intention to make rapid changes in the running of our 'bhandars'. In spite of the condition of yarn currency attaching to the sales of Khadi, Bombay people have not yet taken to spinning. Most of the yarn given in exchange for cloth is bought. From the 1st of July, we shall give only Rs. 2 worth of Khadi for one hank and, as a result, the sales of Khadi will go down. One of the main reasons for Khadi sales is that mill cloth is rationed. Many persons who ordinarily wear mill cloth are almost forced, as it were, to buy Khadi. We take a statement from every customer as to whether the yarn given in is self-spun or spun by a member of the family or staff. But we have regretfully to admit that many customers do not appreciate their responsibility in the matter of making accurate statements. This irresponsible attitude is not in the best interests of Khadi. Khadi-production aims at self-sufficiency of village India. Other provinces will, therefore, now provide less and less cloth to our bhandars. The use of the words 'sale of Khadi' is really inconsistent with the ideal. In the circumstances it is imperative for us to make timely changes in the running of bhandars. From July 1st we are closing two branches in Matunga and Dadar. For the last three months we have been giving training in Matunga in all the processes of Khadi. In Dadar, there was some sale of Khadi too, but these activities must now come to an end. In Girgaum, in the Khadi Printing Shop, the A. I. S. A. was running a training centre too. This shop will now be handed back to the trustees of the Khadi Printing Shop who will continue to give instruction in all the processes of Khadi as well as arrange for some sales.

"The reduction of work involves dispensing with the services of fifteen workers.

"Ever since the new policy came into vogue, Gandhiji has been saying that the make-up of the bhandars must be changed. In order to, fall into line we arranged facilities for teaching and weaving in some places but such outward changes have not connoted the real change. We felt that a change in our mental outlook is what was most needed. Therefore, examination of workers and such other reforms came into force.

"Nevertheless all the changes mentioned above have not enabled us to gain our object. At the time when customers looked upon Khadi as being in the fashion, bhandars were purely commercial depots. Today the bhandar desires to bring about a change in the mentality of the Khadi wearer. It no longer desires to remain a sales depot. It desires to become a centre for imparting knowledge in all the processes of Khadi manufacture. It desires to become a centre of attraction for weavers and other craftsmen. To this end we must continue undeterred to bring about the necessary changes and ~~for this~~ <sup>by this</sup> change the outlook of Bombay Khadi wearers. Then only will bhandars reflect the reality. We expect the customers of Bombay to remain loyal to us in our endeavour."

Readers will note that the success of the purpose, as expressed in the article, rests on the faith, intelligence and capability of the workers.

Bombay, 6-7-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

WEEKLY LETTER

A NEW SUPERSTITION?

"Am I propagating a new variety of superstition?" asked Gandhiji in the course of one of his recent prayer discourses at Poona. "God is not a person. He is the all-pervading, all-powerful spirit. Anyone who bears Him in his heart has accession of a marvellous force of energy comparable in its results to physical forces like steam or electricity, but much more subtle." Ramanama was not like black magic. It had to be taken with all that it symbolized. He likened it to a mathematical formula which sums up in brief the results of endless research and experimentation. Mere mechanical repetition of Ramanama could not give strength. For that, one had to understand and live up to the conditions attaching to its recitation. To take God's name one must live a Godly life.

A PORTENT

South African Satyagraha is a sign and a portent. As Pandit Jawaharlalji remarked the other day in the A. I. C. C. meeting, it may be that the future of India is even now being decided by the struggle of the Indians overseas, particularly in South Africa. Lynch law has already claimed its first victim. Commenting on the doings of the White hooligans who were said to have beaten to death an Indian, whom they mistook for a Satyagrahi, Gandhiji remarked, "It is a sad event. Nevertheless, I feel happy. A Satyagrahi must always be ready to die with a smile on his face without retaliation and without rancour in his heart. Some people have come to have a wrong notion that Satyagraha means only jail going, perhaps facing lathi blows and nothing more. Such Satyagraha cannot bring Independence. To win Independence you have to learn the art of dying without killing."

Indians in South Africa are a mere handful in the midst of the overwhelming majority of the Whites and the Negroes. The Whites in the intoxication of power had not only enacted a barbarous measure but had taken the law in their own hands. The excuse trotted out for that infamous measure was that it was necessary for saving the White civilization from being swamped by the rising tide of colour. "I venture to submit," remarked Gandhiji commenting on this, "that a civilization which needs such barbarous legislation for its protection is a contradiction in terms. The Indians are fighting for their honour. The land in South Africa does not belong to the Whites. Land belongs to one who labours on it. I would not shed a single tear if all the Satyagrahis in South Africa are wiped out. Thereby they will not only bring deliverance to themselves but point the way to the Negroes and vindicate the honour of India. I am proud of them and so should be you." His object in speaking to them, he continued, was not to move them to tears or to incite them to anger and vituperation against the Whites. Rather they should pray to God to guide the Whites aright and grant strength and courage to their brethren to remain steadfast to the end.

SOME HIGHLIGHTS

The way in which the courage and renunciation of the Satyagrahis is rising to the occasion would make the heart of an Indian dilate with pride. Dr. Goonam, a woman passive resister, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour. The trying magistrate reduced her sentence by four months. She objected to it saying that she wanted no favour on the score of her sex. Her offence, if it could be so called, was the same as that of men Satyagrahis. But the magistrate would not listen to her objection. Young Sorabjee who was recently here as the head of the South African Delegation has also gone to prison. A worthy son of a worthy father, the late Parsi Rustomji, he distinguished himself by his unusual courage even as a young lad of sixteen in the course of the Satyagraha movement which was conducted by Gandhiji in South Africa. A mounted White man threatened to overrun the passive resisters. Sorabjee held the reins of the horse and told the horseman that he could not frighten the Satyagrahis into submission by such tactics. His pluck averted an ugly situation.

It is gratifying too to find that there is at least one White man in South Africa, Rev. Scott of Johannesburg whose Christian conscience has revolted against the inequity of the colour bar and the ill-treatment to which the passive resisters are being subjected there. As a protest against it he has joined the ranks of the passive resisters and has gone to the only fit place, in the words of Thoreau, for a just man under an unjust government, namely prison. "It is no small thing," remarked Gandhiji, in paying him a glowing tribute, "for a White man to identify himself with the coloured people in South Africa. If the Satyagrahis remain firm and non-violent till the end, all will be well with them."

"The South African struggle may appear to be insignificant today," remarked Gandhiji in the A.I.C.C. meeting at Bombay, "but it is charged with momentous consequences. Satyagraha is today being tried in the land of its birth. The success of a handful of Indians mostly descendants of indentured labourers had excited the jealousy of the Whites of South Africa. And they are now subjecting them to unspeakable indignities. They are sought to be segregated into ghettos and further humiliated by being offered an inferior franchise. That all this should happen under the imprimatur of Field Marshal Smuts fills me with shame and humiliation. Our sins have a strange way of coming home to roost. We turned a portion of ourselves into pariahs and today the Whites of South Africa are doing the same to our compatriots there. Let us purge ourselves of this curse and bless the heroic struggle of our brethren in South Africa. They do not need our monetary help. But they need all our sympathy and moral support."

THE MOTE AND THE BEAM

Even while he was uttering these words in the A. I. C. C., his mind was filled with what he had seen and observed on the day before in the Harijan chawl from which he had driven to the A. I. C. C. meeting. Owing to rainy weather the prayer gathering was held in the Labour Welfare Hall that was built by the Congress Ministry in 1941. At the end of the prayer on the 6th, he asked how many Harijans were present in the hall. Not a hand went up. It was a great disappointment for him. He had come to live in Harijan quarters because he had become a bhangi. But not to talk of bhangis, there was no Harijan there. "I blame you and not those who are absent," he said addressing the gathering. "The reason for their absence is that the so-called caste Hindus have kept down the so-called untouchables for ages and that too in the name of religion. This hall is meant for the use of the Harijans. Non-Harijans can come only by grace. Let those who come here make it a point of bringing with them at least one Harijan each." If they befriended the Harijans, he told them, untouchability would disappear in the twinkling of an eye. But he was grieved to find that they had not really done so. There were Harijan barristers and lawyers. Even today they could not live in the bungalows on Malabar Hill, for instance. There was a Harijan volunteer girl working in his camp. She was studying in B. A. There was nothing in her appearance to distinguish her from other girls. Why should the knowledge that she was a Harijan cause her to be treated differently from other girls?

He was embarrassed, he observed, by the care and attention that was being lavished on him by those who were in charge of the management of the camp. Yet he was finding his stay very taxing. There was so much dirt and filth about the place. Dr. Dinshah had told him that the lavatories were so dirty that he could not use them. There were so many flies about the place that he was afraid lest he (Gandhiji) might catch some infection and get ill. He himself, said Gandhiji, was not worried about that. Although the two doctors with him looked after him, he did not depend on anyone except God. The Almighty would take care of his health. But his companions did not have that faith in God. He was anxious for them. He himself had been given a good, clean lavatory but all the party could not use it. He had been thinking that if he came here again he should stay there all by himself. He was occupying the house of the overseer. He had been wondering why the overseer and those in charge of the sanitation, i. e. the Municipality and the P. W. D. put up with all that filth. What was the use of his coming and staying there if it could not induce them to make the place healthy and hygienic?

A CASE FOR SATYAGRAHA

He followed up his remarks by deputing Drs. Sushila Nayyar and Dinshah Mehta to inspect the chawls and report. The filth and dirt which they saw there was unbearable. In several places the drain pipes were choked with the result that they did not function properly. In other places the drains overhead were leaking to the discomfort of those living below. There was grave scarcity of water. Except for two or three hours during the day, the taps were not running. Flushes did not work. No wonder the latrines were indescribably filthy. It was a wonder to him, remarked Gandhiji, that under such conditions anyone could use them at all. The arrangements for collection and disposal of refuse were most unsatisfactory. The open refuse bins emitted a foul smell. The overcrowding in the chawls was appalling. "It is the duty of those in authority to improve the sanitary conditions of the chawls," remarked Gandhiji in the last prayer gathering which he addressed in Bombay. "And if the Municipality fails in its duty, it is the right of the people to demand redress even by offering Satyagraha. The owners of the chawls and the overseers and the managing staff should all do their utmost to rectify the wrong."

He felt ashamed and hurt to find too that his residence was being guarded by the police day and night. It should be a matter of shame for them also, he said. They should tell the police that he was their charge and that they would look after him. The Harijans had a cause to feel bitter against "Caste Hindus" and therefore against him too, though he had become a bhangi. If they were angry with him and visited their anger upon him, he would feel no rancour against them. He had been doing his utmost to explain to the "Caste Hindus" and to the Harijans their respective duties. The Harijans however could well feel bitter against him because with all his efforts, untouchability had not disappeared root and branch. When he came again, he concluded, he would expect to find cleanliness all round and not merely in his rooms. And he would like to do without police protection. He had no desire to become a burden to them, the dwellers in the chawls.

FALLEN FROM GRACE

Ahmedabad, the pride of Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, where he had rendered yeoman service to the Municipality has fallen from grace. Hindus and Muslims had lived always together in peace there. But madness seems to have seized its inhabitants of late. It has distressed Gandhiji beyond measure. "Hindus and Muslims of Ahmedabad seem to be dehumanized," he observed in one of his prayer addresses. All the deaths in Ahmedabad were not the result of stabbing and the like. It was a shame that they should have to take the help of the police and the military to prevent them from flying at each other's throats. If one side ceased to retaliate, the riots would not go on. What did it matter if even a few lakhs were killed in the right manner out of the 40 crores of India? If they could learn the lesson of dying without killing, India, which was celebrated in legend and history as Karmabhoomi — the land of duty — would become a virtual Eden — the image of the Kingdom of Heaven on earth.

He had told Shri Morarji Desai, the Home Minister, who had seen him before proceeding to Ahmedabad that he must go to meet the flames under the sole protection of God, not that of the police or the military. If need be, he must perish in the flames in the attempt to quell them as the late Shri Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi had done. Shri Morarji had invited the representatives of Muslims, Hindus and others to a joint conference at Ahmedabad and had told them that he was prepared to withdraw the police and the military if they so desired. But the latter had unanimously replied that they were not prepared to take the risk. The result was that the police and the military remained there. "The disturbances have been arrested," remarked Gandhiji in agony "but the peace that is seen in Ahmedabad today is the peace of the grave. It is not something of which one can be proud. How I wish that both the Hindus and the Muslims would combine and dispense with the help of the police and the military for purposes of keeping them from mutual fight." He warned them that so long as they depended upon the help of the police and the military for maintaining law and order, real independence must remain mere idle talk.

Poona, 9-7-'46

PYARELAL

By M. K. Gandhi

The Story of My Experiments with Truth

Price Rs. 6, Postage 13 Annas

Satyagraha in South Africa

(Companion Volume to the above)

Rs. 4-8-0, Postage 13 Annas

HARIJAN

July 14

1946

THE REAL DANGER

(By M. K. Gandhi)

As during the two days of the session of the A. I. C. C. in Bombay I listened to some of the spirited speeches against the Working Committee's resolution submitted to the A. I. C. C. for ratification, I could not subscribe to the dangers portrayed by the opposition. No confirmed Satyagrahi is dismayed by the dangers, seen or unseen, from his opponent's side. What he must fear, as every army must, is the danger from within.

Opposition, however eloquent it may be, will defeat its purpose if it is not well informed, balanced and well-based and does not promise action and result more attractive than what is opposed. Let the opposition at the late meeting answer.

My purpose here is merely to point out the danger from within. The first in importance is laziness of mind and body. This comes out of the smug satisfaction that Congressmen having suffered imprisonment have nothing more to do to win freedom and that a grateful organization should reward their service by giving them first preference in the matter of elections and offices. And so, there is an unseemly and vulgar competition for gaining what are described as prize posts. Here there is a double fallacy. Nothing should be considered a prize in the Congress dictionary and imprisonment is its own reward. It is the preliminary examination of a Satyagrahi. Its goal is the slaughter house even as that of the spotless lamb. Jail going is, instead, being used as a passport to every office accessible to the Congress. Hence there is every prospect of Satyagrahi imprisonment becoming a degrading occupation like that of professional thieves and robbers. No wonder my friends of the underground variety avoid imprisonment as being comparatively a bed of roses. This is a pointer to the pass the Congress is coming to.

The friends who opposed the resolution on the British Cabinet Delegation's proposal do not seem to know what they are aiming at. Is independence to be bought at the price of a bloody revolution as was, say, the French, the Soviet or even the English? Then frank and honest work has yet to begin. They have to tread a very dangerous path in openly making the Congress such an institution. My argument has no force if subterranean activity is a doctrine of universal application and is now being employed against the Congress. The very thought repels me. I should hope for the sake of my own sanity that the thought is devoid of any foundation. Then it is clearly their duty to say to the Congressmen that now that there is Congress Raj or Representative Raj, whether of the Congress variety or the Muslim League, they must set about reforming it in detail and not condemn it in toto. Total non-violent non-cooperation has no place in popular Raj, whatever its level may be.

Who is responsible for the mad orgy in Madura and, coming nearer in Ahmedabad? It will be folly to attribute everything evil to British machinations. This senseless theory will perpetuate foreign domination, not necessarily British. The British will go in any case. They want to go in an orderly manner as is evident to me from the State Paper or they will go and leave India to her own fate assuming that India has forsaken the path of non-violence with the certain result of a combined intervention of an assortment of armed powers. Let the opposition say to Congressmen what kind of independence they want. Congressmen in general certainly do not know the kind of independence they want. They recite the formula almost parrot-like. Or, their notion of independence is fully expressed in saying that they mean by it Congress Raj. And they won't be wrong. They have left further thinking to the Working Committee—a most undemocratic way. In true democracy every man and woman is taught to think for himself or herself. How this real revolution can be brought about I do not know except that every reform like charity must begin at home.

If then the Constituent Assembly fizzles out, it will not be because the British are wicked every time. It will be because we are fools or, shall I say, even wicked? Whether we are fools or wicked or both, I am quite clear that we must look for danger from within, not fear the danger from without. The first corrodes the soul, the second polishes.

Bombay, 9-7-'46

SUCCESS OF THE NEW TEAM

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The success of the new team depends as much upon the manner in which it carries out the work as upon the manners of the old. If new team breaks with the old, it is bound to fail even like a son who repudiates the inheritance left by his father. It is also bound to fail if those who have retired do not help their successors in every possible way. They were selected by Maulana Saheb not in order to give them importance but by reason of their services in their own provinces. A servant does not cease to be a servant when he gives place to another for the sake of accession of new blood or some other similar and cogent reason. It is to be hoped therefore that the old ones will give the new ones the full benefit of their experience.

The most striking change is the retirement of the General Secretary who had held the post for an unbroken period of ten years. His help will be required constantly by his successors who are new to the office and new members of the Working Committee. I know they will get all the help they need from Acharya Kripalani. It is a good thing a woman fills for the first time in the history of the Congress the post of General Secretary. Shrimati Mridula Sarabhai was one of the pupils of Acharya Kripalani in the initial stage of the career of the Gujarat Vidyapith. Therefore, she will have full guidance from her acharya in the difficult task to which she is called.

To those to whom the change may give cause for misgivings, I would say that Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru himself makes a fine and stable bridge between the old and the new, assisted as he will be by some of the ablest members of the old team. No one need therefore entertain any fear of a break with the past. A healthy circulation is as necessary for the body politic as for the individual. Poona, 10-7-'46

A. I. C. C. RESOLUTION

The All India Congress Committee has passed the following resolution about Satyagraha in South Africa at its meeting held at Bombay, on 6-7-'46.

This meeting of the All India Congress Committee, while it is grieved that it has become imperative for the Indian settlers in South Africa once more to offer Satyagraha in the land of its birth against a law imposing on them a colour bar more sinister than the one against which they had put up a brave fight between 1907 and 1914, congratulates the handful of Satyagrahis on their brave but unequal action against heavy odds.

This meeting is pleased to find that doctors and such other men and women are at the head of the gallant struggle and that among them are represented Parsis, Christians, Muslims and Hindus. This meeting is also pleased to find that a few White men like Rev. Scott have thrown in their lot with the Satyagrahis. This meeting condemns the action of some White men in resorting to the barbarous method known as Lynch Law to terrorize the Satyagrahis into submission to the humiliating legislation.

It is worthy of note that a large part of the Indians are born and bred up in South Africa and to whom India exists only in their imagination. These colonial-born Indians have adopted European manners and customs and English has become like their mother-tongue.

This meeting notes with great satisfaction that the Indian resisters are keeping their struggle free from violence in any shape or form and conducting it with dignity and without rancour and that they are suffering not only for their self-respect but for the honour of India and by their heroic resistance have set a noble example to all the exploited peoples of the earth. This meeting assures the Indian settlers in South Africa, India's full support in this unequal struggle and is firmly of opinion that persistence in it is bound to crown their effort with success.

This meeting appeals to his Excellency the Viceroy to use all his endeavour and to ensure the support of the British Government in aid of this struggle and invites the European residents of India to raise their voice in protest against White hooliganism and anti-Asiatic and anti-colour legislation in South Africa.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN HINDI AND URDU

(By M. K. Gandhi)

I know Shri Ram Naresh Tripathi fairly well. He came to see me in Mussooree one day and I was quite prepared for him to reproach me for my propaganda in favour of Hindustani. Contrary to my expectation he did exactly the opposite. He was of opinion that if I cherished the hope that true Hindustani would be born of a proper mixture of Hindi and Urdu, I would derive greater help in this endeavour from Urdu, provided I realized that, just as in the case of present-day Hindi and Urdu, wrong attempts are being made to clothe the language in an unnatural garb, the former in Sanskritic and the latter in Arabic or Persian. Similarly, it will be wrong to mutilate original Urdu. With this proviso there was every hope of Hindustani becoming a live language. I asked him to give me some concrete examples so that I might clearly understand his meaning. There was a pause and apparently it seemed difficult for him to do so on the spur of the moment. I, therefore, requested him to send me something illustrative in writing. The result is the following:

"You asked me to show you in writing the difference in mould between Hindi and Urdu. But it seems to me that this can really best be defined by intimate experience. No number of stray examples would answer the purpose. I have, however, one suggestion to offer. If you were to ask two knowledgeable persons to translate a paragraph of any of your English articles in 'Harijan' in simple Hindi and simple Urdu, you would at once see the difference.

"The day I met you I gave it as my opinion that Urdu is better-finished than Hindi. I give an example to prove my point. Take the following sentence from a wellknown Hindi writer: समझने न जानेसे बकराहटसी लगने लगती है. In Urdu लगती cannot be used here. बकराहट होती है or बकराहट पैदा होती है would be correct. No good writer of Urdu is ever guilty of wrong phraseology. If he did, he would meet with strong criticism. There is no sustained movement to reform Hindi. As a matter of fact the best help that could be rendered today to Hindi would be to publish select Urdu books and writings in the Nagari script. In this way, the untiring efforts of Urdu poets and prose writers on behalf of the reform and finish of the Urdu language over the last several centuries could easily be taken advantage of by lovers of Hindi and I believe that Hindustani would be the natural outcome of such an experiment."

This letter deserves consideration. I love both the languages but I am not versed in either of them. My knowledge of Hindi is very average. I have not had the time to study it from books. My son Devadas who went years ago at my instance and with my blessings to spread Hindi in Madras knows it far better than I do. I can name many others who have similarly outpaced me. My knowledge of Urdu is much less even than my Hindi. I have known the Hindi script since childhood. I have had to work to learn the Urdu and lack of knowledge of the language makes reading a difficult task. Nor can I write the script with ease. My knowledge being as limited as it is, I can claim nothing but a completely impartial love for both Hindi and Urdu. Therefore, it is my hope that if God wills, scholars in both the languages will contribute to make my venture a success. For this reason I have published Shri Tripathi's letter so that he and others may be inspired to help me in my endeavour.

Other lovers of Hindi have also told me that the same energy has not been expended on Hindi as on Urdu. If people will realize that there should be no ugly rivalry between the two, that both are, at root, one, that crores speak Hindustani and that it is the duty of scholars and poets to concentrate on it for the sake of the masses, I have no doubt that we shall progress by leaps and bounds.

Poona, 3-7-'46

(From Harijansevak)

A MEDICAL WITNESS

Sometime back I mentioned a case reported by a patient of his successful effort to introduce spinning as occupational therapy among the fellow patients in the orthopaedic ward of a hospital in South India. Even more striking is the experience related by Dr. Narendranath Ghosh, a retired Civil Surgeon from Bengal. He writes :

"As a Civil Surgeon I had opportunity to work in Bengal Jails. In Comilla Jail I introduced spinning as a psycho-therapeutic measure for curing lunacy with the help of a lady visitor of the Jail who used to spin yarn herself regularly. She is a highly educated lady, American by birth and Indian by marriage. I can't mention her name, as I have not got her permission to do so. We were very fortunate in curing the first case of lunacy within a period of three months. I got more extensive opportunity in Midnapore Central Jail to try this measure amongst lunatics. In this jail there were 35 to 40 cases in different stages in 1942-43 of different kinds. Those who were in a quiescent stage took to spinning on the charkha straightaway and their mental condition improved appreciably and proportionately with the gradual improvement of the quality of their own handiwork. The finer the yarn produced or spun by a particular lunatic, the better the result. It was rather a difficult and slow process amongst the violent lunatics, although once initiated into the art, the final result was even better than amongst others. In the case of violent lunatics, some medication was required to bring them to a fairly quiescent stage before they could be made to begin with the teasing of cotton first, followed by spinning on the takli and finally on the charkha. Most of the charkhas were made inside the jail with the help and guidance of some D. I. convicts and security prisoners who had brought their own charkhas with them. In this connection I must also state that I was able to grow long staple cotton in the jail garden in Midnapore and Krishnagar with the help of the economic botanist and the local agricultural officer who kindly selected the suitable plots, supplied good seeds and some bone manure. My idea was to make the prisoners learn all the stages and processes from cultivation of cotton to weaving of cloth. As a matter of fact the yarn produced by the lunatics was woven into cloth on handlooms and utilized for making for them kurtas and pants out of their own yarn, which again was a source of great pleasure to them and consequently of mental improvement also. But I did not succeed in making the lunatics themselves to cultivate or help in cultivation of cotton and in weaving cloth from their own yarn and tailoring it into kurtas and dhoties or pants for themselves. This would have been and was really my ideal. I shall be grateful if this important industry, from cultivation of cotton to weaving and tailoring etc., is taken up not only in the different mental hospitals but also in all the jails of India. It is quite possible to grow cotton in most of the jails of Bengal also. As most of the inmates of all jails are more or less mental cases, I don't see why this really useful art and industry should not be taken up by all jails for all kinds of persons as a major jail industry and all jail kit for prisoners themselves and also for chowkidars and police force of the local governments should not be manufactured out of the cotton and yarn produced in the jail by the prisoners. This will not merely be a measure for cure of mental cases but also a measure of moral improvement of all or a majority of the prisoners and a highly economic measure for any government."

The experiment can be safely recommended mutatis mutandis for trial in jails by the popular ministries in the provinces. Its success, however, will depend on suitable persons being available for conducting it. They must not only have mastered the science of Khadi but they must be inspired by humanitarian sentiment. In jails the tendency is to give to every kind of occupation penal, one may say even vindictive, flavour. That would be fatal to success. It may also be noted that the spinning has to be done solely by the hand and noiselessly. Its rhythm and soothing effect must never be lost sight of in this connection.

Bombay, 8-7-'46

PYARELAL

Gurudev's Agony

The following from Gurudev, the original manuscript in English of which Shri Amiya Chakravarty is the proud possessor, is apt in our famine-stricken land today:

"The famished, the homeless raise their hands towards heaven, and utter the name of God.
Their call will never be in vain in the land where God's response comes through the heart of man in heroic service and love."

Will the English knowing for whom this was written in the Poet's agony sufficiently understand the call for 'heroic service and love'?

Poona, 30-6-'46

A. K.

USEFUL SUGGESTION

Dr. M. A. Chadray sends the following:

The method now in vogue of first grinding grain into flour and then making chapatis or bread out of the flour is wasteful. The defects of the method are as follows:

In the process of grinding in mills at a high speed, the properties of protein, starch, cellulose and mineral salts are altered while the fat content is lost, as in the process the flour gets hot. In the preparation of dough of workable consistency, the flour absorbs only half the quantity of water to its own weight, with the result that starch does not swell and in turn makes the food only partly nutritive due to insufficient proportion of water. In the East, the dough is rolled into shapes called chapatis and puris which can either be cooked or baked, but are fried with ghee or oils, and in so doing only a skin forms on both the sides. In the West, the dough is mixed with yeast for the preparation of spongy bread, but this too is neither fully nutritive nor hygienic as claimed, as the vitamins together with other constituents of food value are destroyed by the alcoholic fermentation due to the action of the yeast. Hence, the food prepared with this age-old process is neither tasteful nor hygienic, nor fully nutritive nor easily digestible and even for partial digestion needs a large quantity of digestive fluids, like bile, gastric juice and pancreatic juice. That a sick person cannot be fed with this food is a popular recognition of this fact. Even biscuits cannot be said to be better. Again, not being easily digestible, it causes constipation, the cause of all disease. Besides, before the preparation of dough, the flour is sieved to remove bran, which means a loss. The flour being liable to easy attack by microscopic germs, it cannot be stored for a long time and considerable loss occurs in transport and use, all of which make its use uneconomical.

All these defects can now be surmounted with the process developed after extensive experiments conducted with a view to increasing the nutritive value of cereals, particularly wheat, bajri and jowar, so that the food made out of these cereals can impart immense health.

According to this new process, a known quantity of wheat with about three and a half times water by volume, i. e. one pot of wheat and three and a half pots of water, or 1 lb. of wheat and 4 lb. of water, is hydrated by gradual boiling, with or without the addition of a teaspoonful of sugar or jaggery under low heat, keeping the lid on if an ordinary pot is used. Prior to heating, if wheat is steeped in water for about 12 to 18 hours, fuel will be saved. In case a pressure cooker is employed, the ratio of wheat and water should be one to one and three-quarter by weight. The proportion of water to be used varies according to the quality of wheat. In so cooking or boiling, about 2 lb. of water is removed by evaporation and starch, bran and other constituents swell by absorbing water, and wheat become meaty. In this manner cooking or boiling should be continued till only a little water is left, which too will be absorbed by the wheat when it cools. Heating should neither be continued till water is completely evaporated, for then hydration will not be sufficient, nor should the water from the pot be thrown out, for if removed, it means a loss of soluble constituents of wheat. When wheat is cooked completely, which can be seen either from its swollen state or by pressing between the fingers to determine the softness, a little salt may be mixed with it to impart taste.

Wheat so cooked should then be masticated or ground to a paste, which can be accomplished with the aid of mincers, or by grinding on a masala stone, or pressing with two wooden pieces. With the use of pressure cooker, wheat inside will be digested to a pulpy dough of workable consistency. The paste so made can be made into shapes like puris, chapatis and biscuits by the known method, and fried with known fats or oils, for consumption.

In places like Bombay where at times grain cannot be had but only flour, one may first make a dough of the flour as usual when making chapatis, put the dough in a piece of cloth and hang it over a pot of boiling water till the dough gets completely cooked with the steam. Chapatis should then be made out of the cooked dough, following the usual process.

The advantage of this new food is that by it about fiftyfive per cent wheat is saved—forty per cent by the absorption of about one and three quarter times water, ten per cent by retaining bran, and five per cent by elimination of wastage. This means that a month's provision will last for two months. Actually, with this process, the volume of wheat increases to two and a half times, i. e. one pot on cooking becomes two and a half pots. This means that from a quantity of flour required to make four chapatis with the old process, ten chapatis can be made from the same weight of wheat with this process, without altering the thickness and size.

Besides, the food is more tasteful, hygienic, nutritive and easily digestible as the known and unknown constituents of food value are retained and evenly distributed. As such, its consumption will add a marked amount of weight. Moreover, being easily digestible, it can be fed even to sick persons. Also, the process will facilitate storage of wheat, bajri, jowar and like grains for a longer time without decay, and will save wastage in transport of flour. Moreover, it will dispense with flour mills.

Above all, this method will mean food for all. The adoption of this activated food in India will save every year about 8 to 12 million tons of wheat costing approximately Rs. 300 to 450 crores at the rate of Rs. 360 per ton and a similar quantity of valuable bajri and jowar. As such it will eliminate the present scarcity of cereals and will make the future bright for our famished people.

LEFT-HANDED COMPLIMENT

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"I am writing this letter with a hope of getting proper and immediate response from you. Along with the whole of India I am well aware of your sweet will and affinity towards the Mehetar Community. Your "Harijan" has obliged us to a great extent by enabling us to see through your heart. Especially the recent "Harihans" have emphatically revealed your thoughts about the Mehetar Community.

"I now wish to reveal my interrogatory heart in order to be well nigh to your feelings towards us and to be definite about our position in the muddled and complicated Indian Political Field.

"By the time you will receive this letter it will be the last date of filling in nomination forms for the candidatures for the Constituent Assembly, which as it is learnt to be completed by the end of this month. Congress is proposing particular M. L. As and non-M. L. As for the same. It is believed that Scheduled Castes are also to be represented (adequately?). But is there any proposal from you or from Congress to elect adequate or at least some members from the Mehetar Community? Who, I am sure will discharge their duty of citizenship and pick up their legitimate share in the future constitution of Free India.

"2. Generous as you are towards us, May I assure myself and my community that Mehetar seats in the Constituent Assembly will not escape your notice.

"3. Who will be the components of the Advisory Board? Caste Hindus or Minorities including (?) the Scheduled Castes?

"4. Will the advice or proposals of the Advisory Board be binding to the Constituent Assembly? I think they will not. If so, what sense is there in appointing such a Board, which will be nonentity if the Constituent Assembly were not to pay heed to its advice. Is it not merely for the appeasement of the weak minorities?

"You might say you have been and will do every thing for us, but I wish to say 'let us be with you when everything for us is to be done. Let us be represented democratically."

"I strongly hope that my questions will be fully and satisfactorily answered by you with an obligation of immediate reply to me. I further humbly request you to be good enough to publish your answers in your weekly "Harijan".

"Hope to be excused for troubles."

I have reproduced the foregoing in order to show what havoc dangerous knowledge of English has produced in our society. This is a specimen not of English English nor yet of Indian English. It is bookish English which the writer probably half understands. I suggest to him that if he had written to me in the national language Hindustani or in his provincial language, it would not have evoked an unfavourable response from me.

The writer has paid me a left-handed compliment and that perhaps in order to teach me how to express my love for the bhangi, otherwise known as mehetar. The writer is a discontented graduate, setting no example or a bad example to bhangis. He has isolated himself from them, though he professes to represent them.

He will certainly become my teacher if he will be a graduate in the art of being a good bhangi. I very much fear that he does no scavenging himself, he does not know what scientific scavenging is. If he became an expert in the art, his services would be wanted by all the cities of India. When bhangis really rise from the slumber of ages, they will successfully sweep the Augean stables everywhere and India will be a pattern of cleanliness and there will be in India no plague and other diseases which are the descendants of filth and dirt.

In the place where I am living in Bombay, my room and the adjoining lavatory are fairly clean, but I am in the midst of suffocating dirt. I have had no time to examine the tenements in front of me. They are as crowded and as dirty as the ones in the quarters where I was living in New Delhi. Had my graduate fellow bhangi been an expert in the art, I would, without doubt, have requisitioned his services as my guide and helper.

As it is, not only have I no use for him, I have to risk his displeasure by telling him that he should not think of the Constituent Assembly or other assemblies. Let those go to them who are wanted there. Instead of getting rid of the wretched caste mentality, he argues that any Harijan is not good enough for the purpose but preference should be given to the mehetar caste. I suggest to him that it is a harmful method, doing no good to anybody.

Anyway, he has expected the impossible from me. I am not made for these big institutions. I have never interested myself in the periodical assembly elections. I have not attended Working Committee meetings where they make these selections. What I know of the present selections is from the newspapers. I have become a bhangi because I think that that is the vocation of every Hindu; that the hoary institution of untouchability as we know it today in its ugly shape will die a decent death only when the Hindus will be casteless by becoming bhangis from the bottom of their hearts. That cannot be done by aspiring after the membership my correspondent has in view.

Bombay, 6-7-'46

CONTENTS		PAGE
'ALL ABOUT BHANDARS'	...	M. K. GANDHI 217
WEEKLY LETTER	...	PYARELAL 217
THE REAL DANGER	...	M. K. GANDHI 220
SUCCESS OF THE NEW TEAM	...	M. K. GANDHI 220
A. I. C. C. RESOLUTION	...	221
DISTINCTION BETWEEN HINDI AND URDU	...	M. K. GANDHI 221
A MEDICAL WITNESS	...	PYARELAL 222
USEFUL SUGGESTION	...	223
LEFT-HANDED COMPLIMENT	...	M. K. GANDHI 224
NOTE :
GURUDEV'S AGONY	...	A. K. 222

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad

Subscription Rates — INLAND: One year, Rs. 6; Six months, Rs. 3; FOREIGN: One year Rs. 8 or 14. sh. or $ 3.

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 24

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, JULY 21, 1946

TWO ANNAS

KASTURBA MEMORIAL TRUST

(By M. K. Gandhi)

It is alleged by some that the funds collected with much speed for this Trust are not being spent at the same pace and that the general public are unaware of how the money is being spent. Both allegations are baseless. While it is true that for the most part the donations to the Trust came from city-dwellers, it is equally true that the aim of the collectors was that the money should be spent in the villages for the benefit of village women and children. Those who do not see the Trust accounts cannot be aware of how the money is being spent. The critics are all city-dwellers. Villagers do not read newspapers nor do they care about how the money is spent. Those who live in the villages, where work, if any, is being done, see the same for themselves.

Any work done for city-dwellers is broadcast at once. A building or a statue is advertised in the papers. Its foundation stone is laid or its opening ceremony performed with due pomp and ceremony. Any such propaganda is impossible for village work among village women. The reader will today have to be content with knowing through whom Kasturba Trust work is being done. When work has been accomplished in even a few thousand out of the seven lakhs of our villages and the women and children of those areas have become ready to play their proper part in life, then will all become ipso facto aware of the work. Today it is enough for all to know that village midwives and nurses are being trained.

At the last meeting of the Executive Committee held recently in Poona, it was resolved to sanction money for the holding of training camps in several out of the twenty-one provinces. But since all the workers trained here will go to the villages, city-dwellers will know nothing about them unless they were to be paraded in the cities. And it is neither the intention of the Committee nor would it be proper to do so. Another point to be borne in mind is that the work undertaken is of a new kind and can only be tackled in new ways. Therefore, progress must perforce be slow just as was and is the case with Khadi and other village industries.

Scant attention has so far been and is even now being paid to the villages. Only when the town-dwellers become village-minded, will any real change take place. Until then neither newspapers nor city-folk will take much interest in village organizations.

Sometimes, quite rightly, the money collected for a specific purpose is expended on it straightaway. But in the case of the Kasturba Fund, it was necessary to proceed with caution. The donors may be numbered in thousands but the field in which the money is to be spent is 1900 miles long and the population to be served numbers 40 crores. How to work, where to commence, are matters that require thought and time. Workers could not be found at once and now time is required for their training too. Therefore, donors must have confidence that the Trustees will neither waste money nor will they lazily refuse to spend where it is necessary.

Ever since committees were formed in various centres, there have been complaints that these should have been composed solely of donors and that the latter have been taken in very small numbers. It does not follow that donors are always the best judges of how the money should be spent. Several persons may, for example, donate 10 crores for the construction of an artificial lake. What can they do without the help of engineers in whose hands the expenditure of money and work must naturally go? Many similar instances may be cited in support of the argument. In the first instance, provincial committees were formed in the manner described. Later, it was felt that it was woman's work and should be run, as far as possible, by women agents. By such a course of action it is sought to give the requisite confidence to women workers, so that the responsibility of running the organization eventually comes into their hands. All this must take time. There are difficulties to surmount. But it is hoped that ultimately the work will grow and women will be prepared to shoulder the burden. Results will show whether the experiment is worth-while.

Panchgani, 14-7-'46

(From Harijansevak)

GANDHIJI'S SPEECH AT THE A. I. C. C.

The following is the text of Gandhiji's speech in the A. I. C. C. meeting held at Bombay on the 7th July.

"I have often said that man plans but the success of his plans depends not on him but on the will of the Providence which is the supreme arbiter of our destinies. Unlike you, I am not in my own right but on sufferance. I have been told that some of my previous remarks about the Cabinet Mission's proposals have caused a good deal of confusion in the public mind. As a Satyagrahi it is always my endeavour to speak the whole truth and nothing but the truth. I never have a wish to hide anything from you. I hate mental reservations. But language is at best an imperfect medium of expression. No man can fully express in words what he feels or thinks. Even seers and prophets of old have suffered under that disability.

NO INCONSISTENCY

"I have not seen what has appeared in the papers about what I am supposed to have said regarding the Cabinet Mission's proposals. I cannot read all the newspapers myself. I content myself with perusing only what my co-workers and assistants may place before me. I hold that I have lost nothing thereby. Because of what has appeared in the press, an impression seems to have been created that I said one thing at Delhi and am saying something different now. I did say in one of my speeches at Delhi in regard to the Cabinet Mission's proposals that I saw darkness where I saw light before. That darkness has not yet lifted. If possible it has deepened. I could have asked the Working Committee to turn down the proposal about the Constituent Assembly if I could see my way clearly. You know my relations with the members of the Working Committee. Babu Rajendra Prasad might have been a High Court Judge, but he chose instead to act as my interpreter and clerk in Champaran. Then there is the Sardar. He has earned the nickname of being my yes-man. He does not mind it. He even flaunts it as a compliment. He is a stormy petrel. Once he used to dress and dine in the Western style. But ever since he decided to cast his lot with me my word has been law to him. But even he cannot see eye to eye with me in this matter. They both tell me that whereas on all previous occasions I was able to support my instinct with reason and satisfy their head as well as heart, this time I have failed to do so. I told them in reply that whilst my own heart was filled with misgivings, I could not adduce any reason for it or else I would have asked them to reject the proposals straightway. It was my duty to place my misgivings before them to put them on their guard. But they should examine what I had said in the cold light of reason and accept my viewpoint only if they were convinced of its correctness. Their decision, which they have arrived at after prolonged deliberations and which is almost unanimous, is before you. The members of the Working Committee are your faithful and tried servants. You should not lightly reject their resolution.

DEFEATIST LOGIC

"I am willing to admit that the proposed Constituent Assembly is not the Parliament of the people. It has many defects. But you are all seasoned and veteran fighters. A soldier is never afraid of danger. He revels in it. If there are shortcomings in the proposed Constituent Assembly, it is for you to get them removed. It should be a challenge to combat, not a ground for rejection. I am surprised that Shree Jaiprakash Narain said yesterday that it would be dangerous to participate in the proposed Constituent Assembly and therefore they should reject the Working Committee's resolution. I was not prepared to hear such defeatist language from the lips of a tried fighter like Jaiprakash. One line from a song composed by the late Choudhary Rambhaji Dutt has always made a very deep appeal to me. It means: 'We will never be defeated — nay, not even in death.' That is the spirit in which I expect you to approach this resolution. A Satyagrahi knows no defeat.

"Nor would I expect a Satyagrahi to say that whatever Englishmen do must be bad. The English are not necessarily bad. There are good men and bad men among the English people as among any other people. We ourselves are not free from defects. The English could not have risen to their present strength if they had not some good in them. They have come and exploited India, because we quarreled amongst ourselves and allowed ourselves to be exploited. In God's world unmixed evil never prospers. God rules even where Satan seems to hold sway, because the latter exists only on His sufferance. Some people say that Satyagraha is of no avail against a person who has no moral sense. I join issue with that. The stoniest heart must melt if we are true and have enough patience. A Satyagrahi lays down his life, but never gives up. That is the meaning of the 'Do or Die' slogan. That slogan does not mean 'Kill or be killed'. That would be wilful distortion and a travesty of its true meaning. The true meaning is that we must do our duty and die in the course of performing it if necessary. To die without killing is the badge of a Satyagrahi. If we had lived upto that ideal we would have won Swaraj by now. But our ahimsa was lame. It walked on crutches. Even so it has brought us to our present strength. I know what happened in 1942. You will perhaps say that it was sabotage and underground activity that had brought the country to its present strength. It cannot be denied that sabotage activity was carried on in the name of the Congress during the '42 struggle, but I deny in toto that the strength of the masses is due to that. Whatever strength the masses have is due entirely to ahimsa — however imperfect or defective its practice might have been. Our ahimsa was imperfect because we were imperfect, because it was presented to you by an imperfect being like myself. If then, even in the hands of imperfect instruments it could produce such brilliant results, what could it not achieve in the hands of a perfect Satyagrahi?

"In 1942 our people showed great valour. But greater valour will be required of us before our goal is reached. We have done much, but more remains to be done. For that we must have patience and humility and detachment. You should try to understand what happened in 1942, the inner meaning of that struggle and the reason why it stopped short where it did.

NO BED OF ROSES

"This is no time for dalliance or ease. I told Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru that he must wear the crown of thorns for the sake of the nation and he has agreed. The Constituent Assembly is going to be no bed of roses for you but only a bed of thorns. You may not shirk it.

"That does not mean that everybody should want to go into it. Only those should go there who are especially fitted for the task by virtue of their legal training or special talent. It is not a prize to be sought as a reward for sacrifices, but a duty to be faced even like mounting the gallows or sacrifice of one's all at the altar of service.

"There is another reason why you should join the Constituent Assembly. If you asked me whether in the event of your rejecting the proposed Constituent Assembly or the Constituent Assembly failing to materialize, I would advise the people to launch civil disobedience, individual or mass, or undertake a fast myself, my reply is 'No'. I believe in walking alone. I came alone in this world, I have walked alone in the valley of the shadow of death and I shall quit alone when the time comes. I know I am quite capable of launching Satyagraha even if I am all alone. I have done so before. But this is no occasion for a fast or civil disobedience. I regard the Constituent Assembly as the substitute of Satyagraha. It is constructive Satyagraha.

DUTY OF A SATYAGRAHI

"The alternative is constructive work which you have never done justice to. If you had, you would have today got the Constituent Assembly of Jaiprakash's dream instead of the present one. But a Satyagrahi cannot wait or delay action till perfect conditions are forthcoming. He will act with whatever material is at hand, purge it of dross and convert it into pure gold. Whatever may be the defects in the State Document of May 16th, I have no doubt as to the honesty of those who have framed it. They know they have got to quit. They want to quit in an orderly manner. And to that end they have produced the Document they could under the circumstances. I refuse to believe that they came all the way from England to deceive us.

"A Polish lady has sent me a note just today saying that all Europeans had received secret instructions to leave India as the British army would no longer be able to give them adequate protection. If it is so, it is a sad reflection on us. We would be unworthy of the name of Satyagrahi if even an English child did not feel secure in our midst. Even if we succeed in driving out the Europeans by these tactics, something worse will take their place. Our Quit India resolution has no malice about it. It only means that we will no longer be exploited.

"Let us not be cowardly, but approach our task with confidence and courage. Let not the fear of being deceived dismay us. No one can deceive a Satyagrahi. Never mind the darkness that fills my mind. He will turn it into light."

Notes

When a Bullock Ghani is 'Furniture'

The Railway Priority Rules have been used to kill Village Industries. The interpretation of Priority Rules would be amusing, were not the results so tragic. For months on end we have not been able to send out equipment for village industries such as, paddy husking, floor grinding, oil pressing, beekeeping, paper-making etc., because of the ludicrous ideas railway servants have. As our implements are made of wood they refuse to classify them as "Machinery and its parts or tools". According to them machines etc. are always of steel or iron! So we cannot be placed under Class IV "Maintenance of Industrial Production". Hence the Ghani is classified as 'Civilian' furniture which is Class VI and even the Ghani models about 1 foot in height are so classified. Stone chakkis are classified as personal luggage!

It is interesting to note that cigarettes, liquors, empty bottles etc. get a priority over us as they are placed under Class V.

The clause provides for the transport of paper from "Mills" but the railways refused to book hand-made paper because we do not call ourselves a "Mill". The Chief Traffic Manager writes that "paper cuttings is considered as raw material, only when consigned to paper Mills" and that as we are not a "Mill", it cannot be booked for us as "raw materials". Can stupidity go further? Or is it a wanton attempt to destroy artisans? It would appear that these are not the whims of an ignorant "goods clerk" but the obduracy of highly placed officials at Headquarters.

Controls and Controls

Government controls are the order of the day, but how many of these controllers understand the principles underlying controls? Controls are being used indiscriminately and their very purpose is being frustrated.

Where return on capital and profits are the objective of a business—as in centralized industries—price control checks accumulation of wealth and profiteering. On the other hand, in decentralized industries, where the return the artisan gets is a wage, such price controls will act as an obstacle on distribution of wealth. The latter is harmful in a poor country like ours.

Where certain articles are produced both by centralized methods and by decentralized processes, as in the case of cloth or oil, price controls may be applied to mill products but not to handmade goods, if we follow the fundamental principles of public finance and abstain from restricting the much desired distribution of wealth.

Many provincial governments are killing village industries by their indiscriminate use of price controls. Practically, they have brought the Ghani oil pressing to the brink of ruin by their control of prices of oil seeds, Ghani oil cakes and oils. Is it too much to expect that our representative governments will alter this state of affairs by an intelligent use of controls? J. C. K.

HARIJAN

July 21

1946

KHADI IN TOWNS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"Your scheme for making village India self-sufficient in the matter of clothing has hit town lovers of Khadi pretty hard. You have gone so far as to say that sales bhandars may close as such and that townfolk may even revert to the use of mill cloth.

"While there is no quarrel with the new ideology and the consequent basic change in the running of bhandars nor with the introduction of a certain quota of yarn currency for purchasing Khadi, I would like you to solve the difficulty of town buyers who must use only Khadi."

Let the readers fully understand the so-called new plan for Khadi. I call it so-called, because what is being done is the logical step, if Khadi is to clothe the villagers, as from the very start it was intended to do. Khadi was never meant merely for the townspeople, it was never meant to bleed the villagers as they are being bled so that the townspeople can live. Khadi was from its inception conceived for the sake of reversing the order though never to bleed the townspeople. To reverse the order was to restore the natural relation. Towns there were before the British arrival. Things were bad enough then. Now they are much worse. Towns became cities. The latter, in spite of their Indian millionaires, lived mainly for the British masters. Khadi was to undo the grave mischief. Mill cloth is the symbol of the slavery of village India as Khadi is, or should be the symbol of its freedom, both economic and political. If it cannot be that, it is meaningless. Therefore, any healthy change undergone in the process of Khadi development is to be welcomed.

The defect in the existing development, good though it appeared, was not good enough for the villagers who spun yarn and wove Khadi but did not use it themselves. They neither understood nor appreciated the dignity and value that its use carried. The fault was not theirs. The workers themselves did not. The town dwellers had to wear Khadi and do the penance. They were willing to buy penance for a few extra rupees which they could easily spare and be called patriots in the bargain. But how could the Charkha Sangh (called in English All India Spinners' Association) belie its faith by ignoring the very foundation of Khadi? And so it is employing its resources to making the villagers Khadi-clad. It naturally begins with the spinners and weavers of hand-spun. If the move succeeds, as it is bound to, there will be after a time, ample Khadi in the city and town markets. Then the only cloth available in India will be Khadi. The A. I. S. A. is diligently working at the consummation. If its researches show that Khadi has no such potentiality, it will have no hesitation in declaring its insolvency. Let the reader remember that it is a science which deals with the psychology of forty crores of people in the machine age. Thus considered, it is a tremendous problem, though at the same time fascinating and interesting. The very defeat, if defeat it is to be, will itself be no defeat. Let it be understood that it is not an attempt to go back to the dark ages when the Charkha was the symbol of the slavery of the masses. Surely it will be a triumph of human understanding, i. e. of the soul of India, when India makes an effort through the Charkha to break her bonds asunder. The free man eats the same bread as the slave. The one eats the bread of freedom, the other of slavery.

But if the city dwellers and the town dwellers would learn the glad tidings that the Charkha has to give, they will willingly employ their leisure time in carding, spinning, and weaving rather than in gambling on the race course or drinking and idling away their time in their clubs. And their children? Why—they could spin for their parents, for the liberty of India and have education of the type that India wants. I was in Rome and Mussolini's officials took pride in showing the graceful manoeuvres of the little children who were being taught all naval tricks. And do the English children do otherwise than learn in their mother tongue what England needs? It is only reserved for India to teach her children the foreigners' language and through it, such things as the latter need. Who but a foreigner has devised the education code?

The A. I. S. A. sales depots will be used for a better purpose than before. They will teach the people, who, I hope, will flock to them, all the tricks of spinning and weaving. If they do, they will have all the Khadi they need. Where there is a will, there is a way.

Lastly, let the reader know too that nowadays Khadi like mill cloth is scarce. Let me not go into the reason why.

Panchgani, 14-7-'46

The Drink Evil

"The first glass makes a man animated, his vivacity great, his colour heightened. In this condition he is like the peacock. When the fumes of the liquor rise into his head, he is gay, leaps and gambols as an ape. Drunkenness takes possession of him, he is like a furious lion. When it is at its height he is like a swine; he falls and grovels on the ground, stretches himself out and goes to sleep."

The above is said to be an old Mohammedan account of the stages of intoxication. The drink habit is growing in the West. We copy much that is bad from them. Let us avoid this evil, which is alien to our soil.

Bombay, 7-7-'46

A. K.

JEWES AND PALESTINE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Hitherto I have refrained practically from saying anything public regarding the Jew-Arab controversy. I have done so for good reasons. That does not mean any want of interest in the question, but it does mean that I do not consider myself sufficiently equipped with knowledge for the purpose. For the same reason I have tried to evade many world events. Without airing my views on them, I have enough irons in the fire. But four lines of a newspaper column have done the trick and evoked a letter from a friend who has sent me a cutting which I would have missed but for the friend drawing my attention to it. It is true that I did say some such thing in the course of a long conversation with Mr. Louis Fischer on the subject. I do believe that the Jews have been cruelly wronged by the world. "Ghetto" is, so far as I am aware, the name given to Jewish locations in many parts of Europe. But for their heartless persecution, probably no question of return to Palestine would ever have arisen. The world should have been their home, if only for the sake of their distinguished contribution to it.

But, in my opinion, they have erred grievously in seeking to impose themselves on Palestine with the aid of America and Britain and now with the aid of naked terrorism. Their citizenship of the world should have and would have made them honoured guests of any country. Their thrift, their varied talent, their great industry should have made them welcome anywhere. It is a blot on the Christian world that they have been singled out, owing to a wrong reading of the New Testament, for prejudice against them. "If an individual Jew does a wrong, the whole Jewish world is to blame for it." If an individual Jew like Einstein makes a great discovery or another composes unsurpassable music, the merit goes to the authors and not to the community to which they belong.

No wonder that my sympathy goes out to the Jews in their unenviably sad plight. But one would have thought, adversity would teach them lessons of peace. Why should they depend upon American money or British arms for forcing themselves on an unwelcome land? Why should they resort to terrorism to make good their forcible landing in Palestine? If they were to adopt the matchless weapon of non-violence whose use their best prophets have taught and which Jesus the Jew who gladly wore the crown of thorns bequeathed to a groaning world, their case would be the world's, and I have no doubt that among the many things that the Jews have given to the world, this would be the best and the brightest. It is twice blessed. It will make them happy and rich in the true sense of the word and it will be a soothing balm to the aching world.

Panchgani, 14-7-'46

[Note: The following are the four lines referred to in the foregoing: "Gandhi also discussed the Palestine problem. 'The Jews have a good case', he affirmed. But he hoped the Arabs too would not be wronged."]

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

PRAYER

Q. Is it possible during prayers, for thousands who assemble at your prayer gatherings, to concentrate their minds on anything whatever?

A. I can only answer yes. For, if I did not believe in mass prayer, I should cease to hold public prayers. My experience confirms my belief. Success depends upon the purity of the leader and the faith of the audience. I know instances in which the audience had faith and the leader was an impostor. Such cases will continue to happen. But truth like the sun shines in the midst of the darkness of untruth. The result in my case will be known probably after my death.

A wag asks three questions in this matter. One requiring an answer, runs: "Is not political education infinitely superior to the religious?" In my opinion, political education is nothing worth, if it is not backed by a sound grounding in religion by which is not meant sectional or sectarian belief. Man without religion is man without roots. Therefore, religion is the basis on which all life structure has to be erected, if life is to be real.

THIEVING

Q. What is the employer to do when an employee of his is addicted to stealing and is not amenable to correction whether it is by way of entreaty or the cane?

A. It may well be that the others too are addicts though they may not be found out. Observation would show that we are all thieves, the difference being that most of us are tolerant towards ourselves and intolerant towards those that are found out and are not of the ordinary run. What is a man, if he is not a thief, who openly charges as much as he can for the goods he sells? If the reply be that the buyer is a willing dupe, it begs the question. In reality the buyer is helpless rather than willing. The stealing referred to is one of the symptoms of a deep-seated disease of society. It is symptomatic of the eternal strife between the monied few and the many paupers. Therefore, my advice to the employer will be to remove all temptations in the way of the thief, to treat him as if he was his own brother and, when he refuses to yield to any treatment, however humanitarian it may be, to ask him to go his way. Let the employer always ask himself whether he would treat his own brother in the same way at the given stage.

Panchgani, 14-7-'46

By M. K. Gandhi

The Story of My Experiments with Truth

Price Rs. 6, Postage 13 Annas

Satyagraha in South Africa

(Companion Volume to the above)

Rs. 4-8-0, Postage 13 Annas

WEEKLY LETTER

Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru made a pregnant remark in the course of his A. I. C. C. speech. He was making an impassioned plea for regarding the questions facing the house not in a spirit of narrow isolationism but in the larger context of world events. The world had gone topsy turvy, ancient landmarks had disappeared, time-honoured ideals had crumbled or been given the go by. But India was still holding fast to her fundamentals. As an independent country, they would soon have to take their due share in shaping world affairs. What contribution would India make to the solution of the world's problems? What would be her guiding principles then? "That is what you should keep in mind" he said, "in shaping your present policy. Ours is a big country. On whatever side she throws in her weight, it will affect the current of world's history."

THE SOUTH AFRICAN STRUGGLE

Gandhiji's first utterance at Poona on his return from the A. I. C. C. provided, as it were, an apt commentary on Pandit Jawaharlal's remarks. His theme was world significance of the South African Satyagraha. South African Satyagraha is fast becoming the question of the questions. It has become the focus of attention of the Negroes who, disarmed, helpless and groaning under the tyranny of the White usurpation, have begun to see in it a symbol and promise of their own deliverance. They have decided to join the ranks of Indian passive resisters. The South African struggle has thus opened a window on Independent India's future mission in respect of the oppressed people of the world. To realize its full significance it is necessary to know a little of its historical background. Indian emigrants first went to South Africa as 'girmilias'—indentured labourers in or about 1840. The Whitemen could not get the Negroes to work for them. So they took labour from India under the indenture system. It was a form of semi-slavery, the difference being that whilst a slave was bound for life, the indentured labourer was bound for five years according to the terms of the indenture. In the wake of these labourers went the Indian traders, Haji Saheb Abubaker Ahmed Zaveri of Porbandar being the first. Then there were small traders from Kathiawad, Memons from Surat and Patidars from Bardoli, who went there and made a living, some as merchants and as hawkers and pedlars. This was in and after 1882. They helped to develop South Africa and made some money. Their children entered the professions, became doctors and lawyers. It was these people, remarked Gandhiji, who were fighting in South Africa today and their fight was not so much for themselves as for Indian honour. "I know what is taking place there because in a way I belong to South Africa, having passed 20 years of the best part of my life there. It was there that Satyagraha was born. The West is passing through a purgatory today. The vanquished lie prostrate at the feet of the victors. But those who have won the war have found that they are no more victors than those who have lost it. Yet it is not in the world war No. II that the Western civilization will have met its grave. It is being dug in South Africa. The White civilization in South Africa looks black in contrast with the coloured or the Asiatic civilization which is comparatively white. If our people remain steadfast and non-violent till the end, I have not a shadow of a doubt that their heroic struggle will drive the last nail in the coffin of Western civilization which is being found out in its true colours in South Africa.

FIELD MARSHAL SMUTS' APOLOGIA

"The Whites in South Africa are becoming like brutes. Eastern and Western cultures are pitted against each other. And what a contrast they present! The Whites have enacted savage laws to force the Indians to live in ghettos. Field Marshal Smuts is a great philosopher. He calls me his friend. He has nothing to say against Asiatic culture. But he has to take measures to safeguard the White civilization. He told me that he did not look down upon coloured people. The fact that Mrs. Subbarayan, when she went to England for studies stayed in Field Marshal Smuts' house supports that statement. But, said the Field Marshal, in spite of the absence of prejudice, he was bound to protect Western culture in South Africa and he hoped that an understanding man that I was, I would appreciate it."

Gandhiji failed to understand how a culture or civilization worth the name could require legal protection. The Indians were resisting the ghetto law in a civil, i. e. non-violent and therefore civilized way. They welcomed the penalty for the breach of a law which could not be morally defended. But the White hooligans too were breaking their own laws. Theirs was criminal disobedience. It was a matter of pride for India that the children of indentured labourers and traders—many of them descendants of Harijans—were proving themselves such brave Satyagrahis. As against this, the Whites were resorting to lynch law. "After all," remarked Gandhiji, "civil resistance had its birth in Asia. Jesus was an Asiatic. If he was reborn and went to South Africa today and lived there, he would have to live in a ghetto."

He hoped that as in 1914 Field Marshal Smuts would at long last realize that he could not persecute the Indians in South Africa for ever and come to an honourable settlement with them when he had tried them through and through. A committee of White men had been formed in South Africa to express sympathy with and identify themselves with the cause of the Indian passive resisters there. There was something of that kind in his time also. But this time it seemed to be on a bigger scale. "If this becomes extensive and the hooliganism stopped and anti-Asiatic laws are repealed, there is hope of a blending of Eastern and Western cultures. Otherwise South Africa may prove to be the grave of Western civilization."

KHADI AT THE CROSSROADS

Gandhiji's four days' stay at Poona on return from the A. I. C. C. was taken up by the meeting of the A. I. S. A. and the Board of Trustees of the Kasturba Memorial Trust respectively.

Thanks to a quarter of a century's start, India need not feel helpless like some other war-battered countries to meet the problem of cloth shortage. She has an invaluable inheritance in her spinning tradition and widely diffused technical skill in textile processes which give her a position of special vantage. If she used her talents to the best advantage, not only could she help herself but lend a helping hand to some of her neighbours too in meeting the cloth famine. In the course of an address before the prayer gathering on the 10th he outlined his plan which had been discussed by the Executive Committee of the A. I. S. A. in its meeting in the afternoon that day.

The A. I. S. A. had distributed 7 crores of rupees among the poor spinners and weavers. It had done a lot, but, compared to the task before it, its achievement appeared insignificant. It had to clothe the whole of India with Khadi as was the case once upon a time. Not only did India produce enough cloth for itself, she was also able to export it. There were no mills in India then. "I might say that every woman had her own mill in the charkha and the takli." Modern mills were evolved from the charkha. Man was a mixture of divine and devilish forces. The force behind the spinning wheel was divine, devoid of any trace of exploitation. The foreigners saw the hidden possibilities that were in it and by the application of steam and electricity created mills and used them as instruments of exploitation of the simple races of the earth. This represented the power of the devil. There were so many cloth mills in India and yet India was about almost naked. There was scarcity of cloth all over the world. The Prime Minister of the Indonesian Republic, Sultan Shariar, had informed Pandit Nehru that they had surplus rice which they would gladly send to India to help meet the threat of famine. In return they wanted no money but would be glad to have cloth as they were suffering from an acute cloth scarcity and could not manufacture it themselves. They had neither cloth mills nor had they taken to the wheel. Pandit Nehru had broached the matter with some mill owners who gladly gave quantities of cloth for despatch to Java. If, out of the 40 crores of India, even 20 crores in 7,00,000 villages took to spinning for 1 to 2 hours a day, they could not only clothe the population of the villages but even supply cloth for the cities. "The conviction dawned upon me even before I came to India that the revival of hand-spinning alone could restore India to its pristine glory. I have since compared the spinning wheel to the central sun round which the solar system of our village economy revolves. It provides the golden bridge between the rich and the poor. To meet the crisis that faces us, I have suggested that the popular ministries should make a declaration that the villagers must produce their own cloth. They would be supplied with cotton, which they must spin and make into cloth. This would enable them to have cloth almost free of cost as it were. The A. I. S. A. will have to work out a scheme and put it before the ministries. If the ministers realize that there is no other way to clothe the naked in India, the scheme would go ahead without any difficulty. Today the city-dwellers complain that they cannot get Khadi at the Khadi Bhandars, that they are required to make partial payment in yarn spun by themselves. If they understood the new spirit behind the Khadi drive, these complaints would disappear. There is nothing to prevent the city-dwellers from producing their own Khadi in the same way that the villagers are expected to do." e

KASTURBA TRUST

In the course of the same address he referred to the work of the Kasturba Trust which he characterized as being more difficult than that of the A. I. S. A. They had collected one and a quarter crores of rupees but the money had to be spent on the welfare of women and children in the villages. "Take for instance maternity work in the villages. The village midwives are ignorant and dirty. The village women are more hardy than city women. Still laws of nature cannot be defied. To teach clean methods to the village midwife is no easy job. It is a matter of adult education and everyone knows that adult education is a much harder task than the education of the children. I could spend away the one and a quarter crores today by raising one or two big hospitals of the city type. But that would not be rendering real service to women and children in the villages. I am not prepared to squander money. I know that the public feel that the work is progressing too slowly. But they must not lose patience. Work is going on slowly but surely. We are sailing on uncharted waters. We must proceed with caution."

CEYLON THE GOLDEN

Gandhiji's address at the farewell prayer gathering at Poona was devoted to describing the conditions of Indians in Ceylon. He had visited Ceylon years ago. If Kashmir with its snow-clad Himalayas was the diadem of Mother India, then Ceylon was the pendent of the necklace round her neck. It was rightly called as Ceylon—the Golden. Indians had played an important part in developing Ceylon. Now that the Ceylonese had got a sort of a constitution (there was nothing wonderful in it), they wanted to turn the Indians out of Ceylon. As in the case of South Africa, Indians went there as labourers. They worked under most difficult and unhealthy conditions. They had settled there. It was hard for them to be told to leave that country now. They wanted equal citizenship rights with the Ceylonese. The Ceylonese case was that the Indians could not ride two horses at one time. If they were Indians, they should return to India. If not, they should become Ceylonese nationals. There were others who were not prepared to have Indians in Ceylon under any circumstances. It was strange. Indians and Ceylonese were brothers. A narrow strip of water separated India from Ceylon. A strong man could swim across the channel. They were both coloured people. The Ceylonese followed Buddhism and the birth place of Buddhism was India. How could a quarrel between Indians and Ceylonese be tolerated? They all wished them to bridge the gulf and become one. The A. I. C. C. had passed a resolution appointing a committee of four to go into the matter. It consisted of the Congress President, Shri Rajagopalachari, Shri Ramachandran and Shri Aryanayakam. The Indian labourers in Ceylon had gone on a strike. The Congress had advised them to give it up. They did not wish to embarrass the Ceylonese. They wanted a brotherly settlement.

What was their duty in the matter? he asked them. They should all pray to God to show light to both. It was their duty to know how their brothers overseas were faring. That was why he had told them all about Indians in Ceylon.

PANCHGANI AT LAST

Hope deferred has not made Gandhiji's heart sick so far as his annual visit to Panchgani is concerned. For, it is no pleasure trip to him but a duty which, he has realized, he owes to Brother Ass. He would have loved to be put up in the dharmashala or the musafarkhana for the poor which had been projected during his sojourn here last year. But although a suitable house has been purchased for the purpose, it needs reconditioning and would not be ready till the next season. After the ceaseless strain of activity for the last three months, he has come here once more to drink in the life-giving silence and the ozone-laden misty air blown from the green hills that engirdle this place. The public prayer is held as before in the Batha Girls' High School which is next-door to our residence. Gandhiji was touched too by the soulful and melodious songs sung at the prayer gatherings by the Parsi girls of the Batha School. Whether it was the theme of the song that moved him or whether it was due to the natural yearning of the soul for self-withdrawal and repose after an arduous spiritual Odyssey, his utterances at the prayer gatherings for the last two days have breathed a note of pensiveness, one might even say sadness.

"Or, is it that when human soul a journey long has had And returned unto itself it cannot but be sad?"

"In the song that has just been sung, the world has been aptly described as the valley of sorrow and suffering," he observed on the first day. "God alone enables us to brave it all. The poet, however, has proceeded to call the world an illusion and a dream. Joy or what men call happiness may be, as really is, a dream in a fleeting and transitory world, where everything is like a dissolving phantasmagoria. But we cannot dismiss the suffering of our fellow creatures as unreal and thereby provide a moral alibi for ourselves. Even dreams are true while they last and to the sufferer, his suffering is a grim reality. Anyway, whether the world be real or unreal, we have certain duties in life which must be faced, understood and duly performed while we are in this world."

The second day's discourse turned on the 'dignity of poverty'. In the song that had been sung it was said that God is the friend of the poor. Poverty, remarked Gandhiji, had a dignity in our country. The poor man was not ashamed of his poverty. He preferred his hut to the rich man's palace. He even took pride in it. Though poor in material goods, he was not poor in spirit. Contentment was his treasure. He might as well say to himself, "since we cannot all become rich and own palaces, let us at least pull down the palaces of the rich and bring them down to our level." That could bring no happiness or peace either to themselves or anyone else, and God would certainly be not the friend and helper of the poor of such description. Poverty, in the sense of inequality of material possessions was there in every part of the world. That was perhaps in a certain measure inevitable, for all men are not equal either in their talents or the measure of their needs. Even in America which was fabulously rich and where Mammon has taken the place of God, there were many poor. Poet Malabari had come across some relatives of Shah Alam begging in the streets of Rangoon. He had written a beautiful poem about it which had sunk into his heart. The substance of it was that he alone is rich who has God for his friend and helper. In India there was a particular type of man who delighted in having as few needs as possible. He carried with him only a little flour and a pinch of salt and chillies tied in his napkin. He had a lota and a string to draw water from the well. He needed nothing else. He walked on foot covering 10-12 miles a day. He made the dough in his napkin, collected a few twigs to make a fire and baked his dough on the embers. It was called bati. He had tasted it and found it most delicious. The relish did not lie in the food but in the appetite, that honest toil and the contentment of the mind give. Such a man had God as his companion and friend and felt richer than any king or emperor. God was not the friend of those who inwardly coveted other's riches. Everyone could copy that example and enjoy ineffable peace and happiness himself and radiate it to others. On the other hand if one hankered after riches, one had to resort to exploitation, by whatever name it might be called. Even then the crores could not become millionaires. True happiness lay in contentment and companionship with God only.

Panchgani 15-7-'46

PYARELAL

"A Dirty Habit"

A sister writes:

"For some years I have been trying to help people to understand the danger of spitting everywhere. The filth and the dirt is so bad on account of spitting and cleaning noses everywhere that one does not know where to begin. Even small boys, girls, educated men and women, apart from illiterate folk, spit on railway platforms, carriages, trams, outside shops, in corridors, outside their houses and everywhere. Our country is getting dirtier and dirtier and diseases are spreading all over. Will not volunteers come forward for spreading the message of cleanliness?"

Promiscuous spitting is a bad habit on which I have commented often enough. It is all part and parcel of the incredible ignorance that exists in our land among all classes of people in regard to the elementary laws of sanitation and hygiene. It is a habit which we must give up, if we would avoid certain diseases. My correspondent's suggestion is certainly commendable.

Panchgani, 14-7-'46

M. K. G.

CONTENTS	PAGE
KASTURBA MEMORIAL TRUST ... M. K. GANDHI	225
GANDHI'S SPEECH AT
THE A. I. C. C. ...	226
KHADI IN TOWNS ... M. K. GANDHI	228
JEWS AND PALESTINE ... M. K. GANDHI	229
QUESTION BOX ... M. K. GANDHI	229
WEEKLY LETTER ... PYARELAL	230
NOTES:
WHEN A BULLOCK GHANI IS
'FURNITURE' ... J. C. K.	227
CONTROLS AND CONTROLS ... J. C. K.	227
THE DRINK EVIL ... A. K.	228
"A DIRTY HABIT" ... M. K. G.	232

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 26

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, AUGUST 4, 1946

TWO ANNAS

CLOTH SHORTAGE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Shri Manu Subedar who takes interest in Khadi and other village industries, sent me the following note some time ago. But I delayed publication in order that I might make some more effective use of it than giving it in 'Harijan'. I could not think of any. Hence this publication for the use, not only of all provincial governments but also of private individuals or organizations, in however limited the field may be.

Here is Shri Subedar's scheme :

"One bale of cotton should be given to every village collectively. The people of the village could spin this yarn. The yarn will be used either for doubling or as weft and cloth could be made.

"One bale would yield approximately 2,400 yards of cloth (or 1,800 according to count).

"If charkhas and takkis are wanted, they should be supplied by the State. (Manufacture should be organized in jails).

"The cloth, when ready, should be made available to the people of the village on a per head ration basis.

"If and when it is important to collect grain in those villages, where there is supposed to be a grain surplus in the hands of the farmers, the cloth should be substituted only for grain. In other cases, the people of the village should collect enough to pay for the value of the bale of cotton. In other words, for the price of cotton (which is in the first instance, advanced by Government), they would get cloth.

"While cloth shortage would be eased, cotton surplus would also be taken away and it will help the grower of cotton.

"As the village Pancha would have to take over the cotton bale and deal with the whole thing, the beginning would be made of :

- i) village industry,
- ii) joint and collective effort,
- iii) participation and labour contribution by the small and the big ones, and
- iv) elimination of the middleman.

"If the experiment were made in the first instance with twenty thousand villages of the Bombay Presidency, or even two thousand of them, the results would be seen in the course of the next six weeks.

"Government will have to lock up funds for the cotton at the rate of Rs. 225 per bale. Much of this money will return either in the form of grain or in the form of cash. But it will have incidentally marked the beginning of something which the villages can do for themselves.

"Assistance may have to be given where looms are not available, or where the yarn produced is not capable of being used both as warp and as weft. But these are details in organization, which could be attended to by someone at the headquarters of every district.

"On return of price of bale by a village, a fresh bale should be sent to them by Government as an advance."

I may add that this is a variation upon the one suggested by me. In my opinion, the original is probably better. But I attach greater value to Shri Subedar's note because he has worked out the figures, suggested a beginning with a 'bale of cotton' and more specially because he as an economist has thought out his scheme independently of me. It will be easy enough to find flaws in every human scheme. Our business is to remove flaws if we know how or to make a beginning in spite of the flaws which we know but cannot mend. No reform is possible if we wait for perfection.

Panchgani, 27-7-'46

AFTER FOUR YEARS

THE WANDERING JEW

Louis Fischer, whose quest for lost causes has turned him into a veritable Wandering Jew, sought out Gandhiji at Panchgani during the week. Espousing worthy causes is with him a biological necessity. He regards the Indian problem as being central to world peace. In 1942, in the course of a famous interview, he helped Gandhiji to discover and remedy a vital gap in the Quit India proposal. Now that India is once more at the cross-roads, he has again found his occupation here.

He had seen Gandhiji at Poona before the A. I. C. C. meeting. But it did not give him full satisfaction. "Somehow I could not come to grips with the main problem as I could in 1942," he remarked afterwards. He had his revenge this time during a series of three interviews that he had with Gandhiji on two successive days. The talks covered a variety of subjects from the proposed Constituent Assembly, the Hindu-Muslim problem and untouchability to socialism, non-violence and the ethics of retaliatory measures against South Africa, interspersed with lighter intervals in which quick thrust and parry served to relieve the strain of more serious discussions.

A SOVEREIGN BODY?

Fischer opened with a broadside on the question of the Constituent Assembly. "I would go into the Constituent Assembly and use it for a different purpose — as a battle-field — and declare it to be a sovereign body. What do you say to this?"

"It is no use declaring somebody else's creation a sovereign body," said Gandhiji. "After all, it is a British creation. A body does not become a sovereign body by merely asserting it. To become sovereign, you have to behave in a sovereign way. Three tailors of Tooley Street in Johannesburg declared that they were a sovereign body. It ended in nothing. It was just a farce.

"I do not consider the proposed Constituent Assembly to be non-revolutionary. I have said, and I mean it cent percent, that the proposed Constituent Assembly is an effective substitute for civil disobedience of the constructive type. Whilst I have the greatest admiration for the self-denial and spirit of sacrifice of our Socialist friends, I have never concealed the sharp difference between their method and mine. They frankly believe in violence and all that is in its bosom. I believe in non-violence through and through."

SOCIALIST WITH A DIFFERENCE

That turned the discussion on to socialism. "You are a socialist and so are they," interpolated Fischer.

Gandhiji: "I am, they are not. I was a socialist before many of them were born. I carried conviction to a rabid socialist in Johannesburg, but that is neither here nor there. My claim will live when their socialism is dead."

"What do you mean by your socialism?"

"My socialism means 'even unto this last'. I do not want to rise on the ashes of the blind, the deaf and the dumb. In their socialism, probably these have no place. Their one aim is material progress. For instance, America aims at having a car for every citizen. I do not. I want freedom for full expression of my personality. I must be free to build a staircase to Sirius if I want to. That does not mean that I want to do any such thing. Under the other socialism, there is no individual freedom. You own nothing, not even your body."

"Yes, but there are variations. My socialism in its modified form means that the State does not own everything. It does in Russia. There you certainly do not own your body even. You may be arrested at any time, though you may have committed no crime. They may send you wherever they like."

"Does not under your socialism, the State own your children and educate them in any way it likes?"

"All States do that. America does it."

"Then America is not very different from Russia."

"You really object to dictatorship."

"But socialism is dictatorship or else arm-chair philosophy. I call myself a communist also."

"O, don't. It is terrible for you to call yourself a communist. I want what you want, what Jaiprakash and the Socialists want: a free world. But the Communists don't. They want a system which enslaves the body and the mind."

"Would you say that of Marx?"

"The Communists have corrupted the Marxist teaching to suit their purpose."

"What about Lenin?"

"Lenin started it. Stalin has since completed it. When the Communists come to you, they want to get into the Congress and control the Congress and use it for their own ends."

"So do the Socialists. My communism is not very different from socialism. It is a harmonious blending of the two. Communism, as I have understood it, is a natural corollary of socialism."

"Yes, you are right. There was a time when the two could not be distinguished. But today Socialists are very different from Communists."

"You mean to say, you do not want communism of Stalin's type."

"But the Indian Communists want communism of the Stalin type in India and want to use your name for that purpose."

"They won't succeed."

PLAYING THE GAME

Fischer reverted to the Constituent Assembly. "So you will not yourself go into the Constituent Assembly, but will support it."

"Yes. But it is wrong to say we are going to the Constituent Assembly to seize power. Though it is not a sovereign body, it is as near it as possible."

"Pandit Jawaharlal said that if the British tried to impose a treaty in terms of the State Paper of May 16, he will tear it up."

"Yes, an imposed treaty from outside."

"And he said, Congress will not go into groupings."

"Yes. I have said the same thing — unless the Federal Court or some other court gives a different decision. As I see it, much can come out of the Constituent Assembly, if the British will play the game."

CIVIL DISOBEDIENCE

"You say and I believe they will," remarked Fischer. "But supposing they do not, won't you then offer your form of protest?"

"Not until the conditions are favourable. But it is wrong to speculate about the future, still more so to anticipate failure. If we take care of the present, the future will take care of itself."

UNTOUCHABILITY AND THE COMMUNAL QUESTION

They then passed on to the question of Hindu-Muslim unity. Gandhiji startled his visitor by proffering the remark that the Hindu-Muslim question, in the final analysis, was an offshoot of the untouchability question. "When Hinduism is perfectly reformed and purged of the last trace of untouchability, there will be no communal problem left."

"I have heard," remarked Fischer, "that though the Congress Harijans have won at the elections against non-Congress Harijans, they were able to do so only with the Hindu votes!"

"What was the joint election for, if not to enable the caste Hindus to make a selection from successful candidates at the primary elections?" replied Gandhiji. "No failed candidate at the primary elections can offer himself as a candidate at the joint elections. Moreover, it is not correct to say, as has been claimed, that in the majority of cases, the Congress Harijans won against the non-Congress candidates with the caste Hindu votes. In Madras the non-Congress Harijans were defeated almost to a man in the primary elections, wherever they contested them. In the majority of cases the Congress Harijans were returned unopposed."

"Some of them want separate electorates," remarked Fischer.

"Yes. But we have resisted it. By separate electorates they put themselves outside the pale of Hinduism and perpetuate the bar sinister."

"That is true. But, anyhow, they might say that Hindus have put them outside the pale."

"But today the Hindus are penitent."

"Are they adequately penitent?"

"I am sorry to say 'not yet'. If they were, there would be no untouchability and no communal problem as I have already said."

"Is there less social contact between the Hindus and Muslims," next asked Fischer.

"No, rather the contrary. But politically there is a bar, thanks to Lord Minto."

ETHICS OF RECIPROCITY

After a little sword play Fischer changed over to another topic.

"Your young men are too Indo-centric," he said.

"That is only partly true. I won't say we have become international," replied Gandhiji, "but we have taken up forlorn causes, e. g. the cause of the exploited nations, because we are ourselves the chief exploited nation."

"The growing anti-White feeling here is bad," proceeded Gandhiji's interviewer. "In Taj Mahal Hotel they have put up a notice 'South Africans not admitted'. I do not like it. Your non-violence should make you more generous."

"That won't be non-violence. Today the White man rules in India. So, if Taj Mahal has the gumption to put up that notice, it is a feather in its cap."

Fischer's liberalism felt hurt. "That is what any nationalist will say. You must say something better," he remarked.

"Then I will be a nationalist for once," replied Gandhiji with firmness. "They have no right to be here if they do not deal with Indians on terms of equality."

"No right — yes," rejoined Fischer. "But you must give them more than their right. You must invite them."

"Yes, when I am the Viceroy."

"You mean the President of the Indian Republic."

"No. I will be quite content to be the Viceroy, a constitutional Viceroy, for the time being," said Gandhiji. "The first thing I will do, will be to vacate the Viceregal Lodge and give it to the Harijans. I will then invite the South African White visitors to my hut and say to them: 'You have ground my people to powder. But we won't copy you. We will give you more than you deserve. We won't lynch you as you do in South Africa,' and thus shame them into doing the right."

"There is so much anti-White feeling today," put in Fischer somewhat troubled in mind.

"Of course, I am opposed to that. It can do no good to anybody."

"The world is so divided. And there might be another war and that may be between the Coloured and the White races."

"Europe seems to be heading for another war. It is not sufficiently exhausted."

"Europe is terribly exhausted. But with the atom bomb human beings don't matter so much. A few scientists are enough. The next war will be carried on by pressing a few buttons. That is why colour war is so dangerous."

"Anything is better than cowardice. It is violence double distilled." And to illustrate his remark Gandhiji narrated the story of a Negro clergyman with a Herculean frame in South Africa saying "pardon me brother," when insulted by a White man, and sneaking into a coloured man's compartment. "That is not non-violence. It is a travesty of Jesus' teaching. It would have been more manly to retaliate."

"You are not afraid of what happens to you but what it may mean to others," replied Fischer, analysing the illustration adduced by Gandhiji. "It takes a great deal of irresponsibility to give vent to your feelings and slap the White man under the circumstances described by you. In India the situation is different. The White men are not so numerous here."

"You are mistaken," replied Gandhiji. "Why, one Englishman is killed and a whole village is razed to the ground as a reprisal. What vindictiveness!"

A CONUNDRUM ANSWERED

That finished the first day's discussion. But some conundrums about Gandhiji's attitude in regard to the Constituent Assembly continued to trouble Fischer's mind and he reverted to them in the course of his discussion the next day.

"If the Working Committee had reacted to your 'groping in the dark' or as you have called it your instinct about the long-term proposals, they would have rejected them."

"Yes, but I did not let them," replied Gandhiji.

"You mean you did not insist."

"More than that. I prevented them from following my instinct unless they also felt likewise. It is no use conjecturing what would have happened. The fact however remains that Dr. Rajendra Prasad asked me: 'Does your instinct go so far that you would prevent us from accepting the long-term proposals, whether we understand you or not?' I said, 'No. Follow your reason since my own reason does not support my instinct. My instinct rebels against my reason. I have placed my misgivings before you as I want to be faithful to you. I myself have not followed my instinct unless my reason backed it.'"

"But you have said that you follow your instinct when it speaks to you on occasions as, for instance, you did before certain facts that you undertook."

"Yes, but even in these cases, before the fact began, my reason was able to back my instinct. My reason failed my instinct on the long-term proposals."

"Then, why did you inject your 'instinct' into the political situation?"

"Because I was loyal to my friends. I wanted to retain my faith in the bona fides of the Cabinet Mission. So I told the Cabinet Mission also about my misgivings. I said to myself, 'Supposing they meant ill, they would feel ashamed.'"

A TESTAMENT OF FAITH

"You are strongly constitutionalist now. Is it for fear of the alternative — violence?" finally asked Fischer.

"No. If India is destined to go through a blood bath, it will do so. The thing I would fear is my own cowardice or dishonesty. I have neither. So I say, we must go in and work it out. If they are dishonest, they will be found out. The loss will not be ours but theirs."

"I think you are afraid of the spirit of violence. It is widespread. I wonder whether it has not captured the mood of the youth and you are aware of it, and you fear that mood."

"It has not captured the imagination of the country. I admit that it has captured the imagination of a section of the youth."

"It is a mood that has got to be combated."

"Yes. I am doing it in my own way. It is my implicit faith that it is a survival which will kill itself in time. It cannot live. It is so contrary to the spirit of India. But what is the use of talking? I believe in an inscrutable Providence which presides over our destinies — call it God or by any other name you like. All I contend is that it is not the fear of violence that makes me advise the country to go to the Constituent Assembly. It is repugnant in a non-violent attitude not to accept an honourable substitute for civil revolt."

Panchgani, 27-7-46

PYARELAL

HARIJAN

August 4

1946

9TH AUGUST

(By M. K. Gandhi)

9th August like 6th April, 13th April and 26th January is a red letter day in the battle of India's freedom. They are days for universal hartal in terms of Satyagraha, i. e. truth and non-violence. But today, considered in terms of Satyagraha, hartals are generally taboo and more specially so, on the coming 9th of August. They would be fitting if hartals are designed to signalize violence.

Two powerful voices have spoken: one of the President of the Congress, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and the other of the President of the Socialist Group, Shri Jaiprakash Narain. It is delicate for me to give my opinion when these two ardent lovers of their country speak in opposition. But as a Satyagrahi I must overcome the delicacy.

Jaiprakash Narain is a Congressman. It is an open secret that he was offered a seat on the Working Committee by Panditji, naturally under the belief that whatever views he entertained, he was too honest to be disloyal to the Congress in action. If, now, in spite of knowing the Congress President's views to the contrary, he adheres to his own opinion given to the contrary, it would appear to be an act of disloyalty to the Congress. If, therefore, he has not withdrawn from the false position, I hope, recognizing the aptness of my remarks, he will see the wisdom of retracing his steps.

The Working Committee, rightly or wrongly, has taken a step. It has been endorsed by the A. I. C. C. It is up to every Congressman to support the Congress going to the Constituent Assembly, by creating the atmosphere suitable for work in that Assembly. This I say even to those who distrust good faith in everything the British do. They may warn the Congress of the dangers they sense. This they were allowed, by the President to have the fullest latitude to do at the recent A. I. C. C. meeting. Anything in excess of that opposition is surely harmful for the country. I would consider as such the hartal on the 9th August.

The Congress cannot have the cake and eat it too. It must be left free, it must be helped, to develop freedom through the 'Constituent Assembly'. It will not be a waste of effort to honestly work the 'Assembly' for the purpose. The Congress must not kill the hen before it has laid.

Then mark the atmosphere in the country. There is senseless disorder as in Ahmedabad and elsewhere. There is a parody of Satyagraha in the show staged by Dr. Ambedkar. In Satyagraha the cause has to be just and clear as well as the means. The cause is certainly vague, even if the means are non-violent. I doubt the wisdom of the sympathetic paralysis of all business in Bombay and elsewhere, assuming the postal strike to be good on merits. Many would seem to have left off all thinking.

They seem to take up any nostrum without caring to examine its merits. To call for hartal in this atmosphere is to invite disorder. No disorder is conducive to the growth of independence. Considered from every point of view, I hope that 9th August next will see no hartal in India, but a peaceful and dignified, orderly celebration of the day as advised by the President of the Congress.

Panchgani, 27-7-'46

[P. S.: Before the despatch of this to 'Harijan' I saw to my joy the withdrawal by Shri Jaiprakash of his proposal for hartal on 9th August. I am glad that the spirit of discipline has dictated this withdrawal. I might have cancelled the foregoing but for the important incidental observations in it.

M. K. G.]

HEAL THYSELF

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A correspondent has written to me about the butchery that is going on in Ahmedabad. I give below the relevant portions from his letter.

"I wish to write to you about the means to be employed for putting down riots. About two months ago you wrote an article on Ahimsak Seva Dal—non-violent volunteer corps. But looking to the situation in the country, the suggestion will not do. Just as you have taught us how to fight against the British Government non-violently, you should go to some place of riot and show us the way of quelling riots in a non-violent manner by personal example. Supposing you were in Ahmedabad today and went out to quell the riots, any number of volunteers will join you. Two of our Congress workers Shri Vasantrao and Shri Rajabali went out in such a quest and fell a prey to the goonda's knife. They laid down their lives in the pursuit of an ideal and they deserve all praise. But no one else had the courage to follow in their footsteps. They have not the same self-confidence. If they had it, there would be no riots and, even if riots broke out, they would never assume the proportion and the form that the present day riots do. But the fact remains that such a state is merely an imaginary thing today.

"Your guidance and example can inspire many like me with courage and self-confidence. Once you have shown the way, the local workers will be able to follow it whenever occasion demands it. I feel that unless you set an example in action, your writings and utterances will not be of any use to the ordinary people, and even Congressmen, in organizing non-violent protection of society."

I like the suggestion mentioned above. People followed my advice and took to non-violent resistance against the British Government, because they wanted to offer some sort of resistance. But their non-violence, I must confess, was born of their helplessness. Therefore, it was the weapon of the weak. That is why, today we worship Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose and his Azad Hind Fauj. We forget that Netaji himself had told his soldiers that on going to India, they must follow the way of non-violence. This I have from the leaders of the I. N. A. But we have lost all sense of discrimination. To restore it, the I. N. A. men will have to live up to the ideal placed before them by Netaji. The work of those who believe in non-violence is very difficult in this atmosphere which is full of violence. But the path of true non-violence requires much more courage than violence. We have not been able to give proof of such non-violence. We might look upon the action of Shri Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi, Shri Vasant Rao and Shri Rajabali as examples of the non-violence of the brave. But when communal feelings run high, we are unable to demonstrate any effect of the sacrifices mentioned above. For that, many like Shri Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi will have to lay down their lives. The fact that no one else in Ahmedabad has followed the example, set by Shri Vasant Rao and Shri Rajabali shows that we have not yet developed the spirit of sacrifice to the extent of laying down our lives in non-violent action. The correspondent has rightly said that under these circumstances, I should act myself whether others join me or not. It will be disgraceful on my part to sit at home and tell others to go and lay down their lives. Such a thing cannot be an indication of non-violence. I have never had the chance to test my non-violence in the face of communal riots. It might be argued that it was my cowardice which prevented me from seeking such a chance. Be that as it may, God willing, the chance will still come to me, and by throwing me in the fire, He will purify me and make the path of non-violence clear. No one should take it to mean that sacrifice of my life will arrest all violence. Several lives like mine, will have to be given if the terrible violence that has spread all over, is to stop and non-violence reign supreme in its place. The poet has sung :

"हरि नो मारग छे ब्रह्मनो, नहीं कायरदु काम जोने ।"

"The path of Truth is for the brave, never for the coward." The path of Truth is the path of non-violence.

Panchgani, 26-6-'46

(From Harijansevak)

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. I have been repeating Ramanama according to your advice and I am getting better. I must add that the medical treatment for tuberculosis is also being followed. You have said that eating little and eating the right food enables a man to be healthy and promotes longevity. I have observed the rule about eating sparingly for the last twentyfive years. Why should I have fallen a prey to tuberculosis? Would you say, I should attribute this ill luck to some evil deed in this life or in the previous one?

You say a man can live up to 125 years. Then why should God have carried away Mahadevbhai, who was so useful to you? He observed the rule of eating moderately and having a balanced diet and he served you as his God. Why did he fall a prey to high blood-pressure? Why did Ramakrishna Paramahansa, who is looked upon as an incarnation of God, fall a prey to cancer, as deadly a disease as tuberculosis? Why was he not able to fight it successfully?

A. I have been expounding the rules of maintaining health as I know them. Spare and balanced diet may not be the same for everybody. It can be best worked out by the individual for himself through proper reading and careful thought. But that does not mean that the individual cannot make mistakes or that his or her knowledge is complete. That is why life has been called a laboratory. One should learn from the experience of others and go forward and if he is not successful, he should not blame others or even himself. One should not be too ready to find fault with the rule, but if after careful thought, one comes to the conclusion that a certain rule is wrong, he should be able to tell the right one and declare it.

So far as your own case is concerned, there may be several causes leading to your illness. Who can say whether you have made the right use of the five 'powers' in your own case? So long as I believe in the laws of nature as I know them, I have to say that you must have erred somewhere. As for Mahadev and Ramakrishna Paramahansa, to feel that even they must have erred somehow is fitter than to say that the laws are wrong. These rules are not my creation. They are the laws of nature according to experienced men. I believe them and try to live up to my belief. Man is after all an imperfect creature. How can he know the whole truth? That the allopathic doctors do not believe in them or, if they do, they do so in a different sense, does not impress me. What I have said, does not and should not in any way, detract from the greatness of the individuals mentioned.

Q. In 'Harijanbandhu' of 14-4-'46, you have said, "God is the Law and the Law-giver." I do not understand it. Laws are made by man and they keep on changing with time. For instance, Draupadi had five husbands and yet she was considered a sati. A woman who does that today will be considered immoral.

A. Law here means the law of God. Man interprets that law according to his understanding. For instance, the rotation of the earth is a law of nature. We are convinced of its correctness today. Yet before Galileo, astronomers believed differently. As for Draupadi, the Mahabharata in my opinion is an allegory and not history. Draupadi means the soul wedded to the five senses.

Q. God cannot be realized through reason. He has to be understood through faith. Do you believe in rebirth or is it that the Hindu seers propounded it, in order to enable people to appreciate the significance of good and evil deeds and derive some satisfaction from the belief?

A. God cannot be realized through the intellect. Intellect can lead one to a certain extent and no further. It is a matter of faith and experience derived from that faith. One might rely on the experience of one's betters or else be satisfied with nothing less than personal experience. Full faith does not feel the want of experience. The distinction between good and evil is not meant to act as a consolation. Nor is faith in God meant for that purpose. The seers have held that there is good and evil and there is rebirth. I think this theory of reincarnation is capable of being understood by the intellect.

Q. The Congress has been fighting the British Government non-violently. When Congressmen come into power, they shoot their own brothers who have gone astray and are causing trouble. Is it right? If the Congressmen in power have not the courage to lay down their lives, while attempting to put down the riots non-violently, does it not show that with the exception of a few individuals like Ravishankar Maharaj and Sane Guruji, the non-violence of Congressmen in general is the non-violence of the weak?

A. The question of violence and non-violence raised by you is an old question. I have said a lot in this connection. If like many others, non-violence does not appeal to your heart, you should discard it. I shall not find fault with you for that, and, if others do, you should not care. The principle is this: "That which has been propounded by the rishis, practised by the sages and appeals to one's heart should be followed and put into practice." The question might arise as to what one is to do, when the thing that appeals to one's heart is contrary to what has been propounded by the rishis and practised by the sages. The answer is, that in such a case the individual can follow his bent at his own risk. Many reforms and new discoveries have been made in this way. Our Shankaracharyas have supported the institution of untouchability but both our head and heart consider it a blot on Hinduism. We do not care, if others consider our belief to be wrong.

Q. From 1920 you have described the British Government's officials as the arms of Ravana. Congress Governments use these arms. Again, the laws made by the British Government say that it is an offence to beat a prisoner arrested on suspicion or for an alleged offence, in order to extort a confession or to frighten him. During the 1942 revolution, many like me were severely beaten after arrest. Should not the Congress Governments hold an inquiry into the police excesses thus committed?

A. I have severely criticized the British Government and do so still. But that does not mean that all police officials under the British Government must necessarily be devil's disciples even when they come under Congress Governments. No one has questioned Congress Governments' right to inquire into the police excesses in 1942 or even before. But such rights are not always exercised. We all know that there are times when wisdom lies in not exercising certain rights. The Congress has in general followed the policy of not inquiring into the kind of excesses mentioned by you. You should know that often such offences are difficult to prove. I believe the right of inquiry has been exercised in cases, where the offence was beyond doubt. But my advice is, let us not sit in judgment on the Congress ministries. The belief that the Congress has acted wisely in accepting power should suffice.

Panchgani, 25-7-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

Q. Whilst the food policy was in the hands of the Advisors to the Provincial Governors, there was no effective method of checking them. Things under the responsible Provincial Governments are different. Should it not be a matter of conscience with Congress ministers to get their rations from common rationing depots and take not a grain more from any other source? This will immediately have a far-reaching effect. Today all controlling centres for food grains or cloth have become public dens for thieving and corruption. Equipped with the moral force that the ministers will gain by acting as suggested, they will be able to fight out the evil with success.

A. This question is a consolidation of many letters of complaints. I wholly agree with the suggestion made in the question. I fancy that the suggested practice is already being observed, not only by the ministers but all other Government servants. I do not know of any other source, save the black market for getting supplies of foodstuffs. Of course, no exhortation can take the place of persons in authority, setting a good example. If they took their rations from the same stock as is given to the public, the keepers of stores will soon find that it would not pay to dole out rotten stuff to the public. The practice of the ministers and other high-placed men in England, taking their things in common with the public is, I am told, the usual thing, as it should be.

Panchgani, 28-7-'46

DECCAN CHIEFS IN CONFERENCE

The plan for the formation of a Deccan States' Union has been occupying the attention of the Chiefs of the Deccan States for sometime past. The Rajasaheb of Aundh with Appasaheb Pant, his Prime Minister, Shri Shankerrao Deo and some others saw Gandhiji in this connection recently during his stay at Panchgani. They invited Gandhiji to meet the Chiefs of the Deccan States later in an informal conference. Gandhiji consented. The meeting took place on Sunday, July 28, in the Servants of India Society's Library Hall. Among those present were the Rajas of Aundh, Phaltan, Bhore, Miraj (Senior), Jamkhandi and Kurundwad (Senior), Appasaheb Pant and Shri Satwalekar from Aundh, Shris Kore, Sathe and Thomre from Sangli, the Dewan of Bhore and representatives from Budhgaon and Ramdrug. Tatyasaheb N. C. Kelkar and Shankerrao Deo were also present on the occasion by special invitation.

CORRECT ATTITUDE

Gandhiji being invited to address the distinguished gathering said that it was a great pleasure to him to be able to meet the Deccan Princes. He had read the papers and the note prepared for his edification by the Raja Saheb of Phaltan. He did not wish to speak on the papers. It was a good thing that the Princes were seriously thinking in terms of the whole of India, rather than of themselves and of the protection they had all these years thought they were getting from the Paramountcy of the British Power. Only a few years ago the Princes felt that they could not be safe except under the Paramountcy of the British Crown. It seemed to have dawned on most of them that that was not the correct attitude. This was but natural, for they were after all sons of the soil. He, the speaker, had said openly on another occasion that the people of the States were slaves of slaves which the Princes were. They exercised their authority within their own principalities, so long as they were in the good books of the British Government. They were made or unmade at the pleasure of the British Crown. The Princes who had eyes opened to that vital fact were desirous of Indian Independence equally with the people of India. If then they felt that need, they did not want a union of the States but each State had first to form a union with its own people. Their people were the real power on whom they were to depend for their status. It became trusteeship if they became servants of their own people. If they took that attitude, they needed no terms with the Congress or with any other organization. The immediate need was an understanding with their own people.

He made bold to take up that attitude, though his might be a lonely voice. In his opinion, the Princes, as servants and trustees of their people, were worthy of their hire. It would then (but not before) be time to consider whether they and their people wanted a union among themselves. Such a union would be of a wholly different type from what they had conceived.

CREATION OF BRITISH RULERS

The speaker had a serious suspicion that the present proposal was a creation of the British Rulers, meaning the Political Agents. No blame need be imputed to them, if they advised such a union. They were brought up in no better tradition. They thought that when the British power was not in India, the Princes would fight amongst themselves. That fear was wholly unjustifiable. They honestly believed that before they retired, as they must within perhaps a few months, owing to force of circumstances, they should enable the Princes to consolidate their power by organizing them into a union.

It was his belief that if India was not merely to be independent of British control, but was to enjoy real freedom, which their country, by virtue of its ancient culture and tradition, was entitled to, it should grow from the bottom upwards, not be imposed from above. Otherwise, it would be a question of change of masters only. Instead of the English, there might be the Allied Powers or whosoever could impose himself on them. He did not look forward to that time. He looked forward to a time when India would come into her own because of her intrinsic merit. To that consummation the Princes could make a most handsome contribution.

If the Deccan Princes played their part and set a solid example, they would follow. For that purpose, the speaker repeated, they did not need the suggested union. If, on the other hand, at the back of their minds they had the idea that they would give the so-called responsible Government to the people to the ear and break it to the heart, then the proposed union would be a kind of military combination, after the manner of the European Powers. It would be used against the people despite their protestations. That Power would be useless against a first-class military Power. They would be the first to lay down their arms before a venturesome aggressor. The British had taken good care not to give them training that might enable them to resist a Power like themselves by force of arms.

What applied to the States applied to the whole of India. She would have to serve a long period of tutelage at the feet of the Western nations before she could become a first-class military Power. A quarter of a century's effort that the Congress had spent in teaching the country non-violence would in that event have been utterly wasted. That was not a prospect to which he could look forward with equanimity.

He had suggested to the Raja Saheb of Aundh that the Princes should, with necessary changes, copy the constitution of Aundh, if they wanted to take their due share in building up of a free India. That constitution was designed for the people. He, the speaker, would have liked it to go much further in such matters as the amount and control of the privy purse, etc. But all that had to come naturally. It could not be imposed. The working of that constitution, he added, had made considerable progress — though not all the progress — which the Raja Saheb of Aundh, his Prime Minister or he, would have liked.

After Gandhiji had finished, a discussion followed and questions were asked. "Unless we unite, not a single State would have a survival value," remarked one of them and asked for Gandhiji's opinion on that point.

Gandhiji replied, "I am prepared to join issue on it though mine is perhaps a solitary voice. Every village has a survival value. Why should not your villages and hence you, the Princes, if you will be part of the people? Aundh, one of the smallest among you, has a greater survival value than many of you. It depends upon you. So far as the people are concerned, they are one with the rest of India already.

"In an article that I have written for the Harijan, you will see my picture of Independence. In that picture, the unit is the village community. The superstructure of Independence is not to be built on the village unit so that the top weighs down on and crushes the forty crores of people who constitute the base."

"But we shall ask our people to draw up their own constitution. The plan of union that we have drawn up, is only intended as a blue-print for their consideration," explained another.

"With the best intention in the world," replied Gandhiji, "you will not be able to do that. You are brought up in a different tradition. Therefore, I suggest you should see Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru about it, if you will really let the people judge. He is the proper person to deal with this question as the President of the States' People's Conference. You should not be afraid to go to the States' People's Conference with your suggestions. Let the Conference decide finally. Their present policy is sound and not hostile to you, considered as servants and trustees of your people."

Q. "We are anxious to serve our mother country. But, we are so small that we cannot serve unless we merge into a union."

A. "Not in my picture of Independent India," replied Gandhiji. "A village unit as conceived by me is as strong as the strongest. My imaginary village consists of 1,000 souls. Such a unit can give a good account of itself, if it is well organized on a basis of self-sufficiency. Do not, therefore, think that, unless you have a big union, you will not be able to give a good account of yourself. If Princes are all of one mind and the interest of the people is first and themselves last, theirs will be a more solid union than the one now proposed."

VILLAGE REPUBLICS

Q. "What would you say if the States organized themselves on the basis of village republics first and then formed them into a union?"

A. "That would be excellent, but then you will speak a different language and proceed to work in an altogether different way."

Q. "But that may take a long time and, unless it is done by people outside first, our people will not take to it."

A. "I have said that the States can make the finest contribution to the building of India's future Independence, if they set the right example in their own territories. They as individual States being compact, homogenous units can well afford to make experiments in government. As it is, the Princes have taken the lead only in copying the bad points of the British system. They allow themselves to be led by the nose by their Ministers, whose administrative talent consists only in extorting money from their dumb, helpless subjects. By their tradition and training they are unfitted to do the job you have let them do. Therefore, my advice to you is: 'Make Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru your Chief Minister, if you are in earnest. Let him present you with an outline. He will naturally consult the people.'"

Q. "We want to organize ourselves into a union so that our people may have swaraj first without waiting for the labours of the Constituent Assembly to be finished, which may take time."

A. "That is the wrong way of going about the thing. If you are solicitous of the welfare of the people and want them to come into their own, give them the fullest liberty straightaway. By the time you have done that, the Constituent Assembly will have finished its work. The constitution which it will frame will not be for British India merely, but for the whole of India. That constitution will necessarily provide for a State union or unions, if it is desirable. You should assist them instead of anticipating them by forming your own union. Begin with the individual and you will not then go wrong."

"Are you," asked Tatyasaheb N. C. Kelkar, "opposed to the union, because it is suspect in your eyes?"

Gandhiji: "I began with that. But I do not oppose it on the ground of my suspicion. I suspect not you — A, B or C, but the circumstances. You do not know the danger and mischief you are running into. Hence my advice to you to hasten slowly."

Q. "If you stretch your argument, would it not apply equally to the district and taluq organization in the provinces? Why do not you ask for their dissolution?"

Gandhiji: "I am not asking you to dissolve anything that already exists — not that I am enamoured of the machinery of administration set up in British India. History tells us, it was devised mainly to facilitate revenue collection. You will follow it only at your cost. My point just now is: Do not do anything in the shape of unions. Leave that work to be done by the Constituent Assembly. As a Sanskrit poet says, जनारम्भो हि कार्याणां प्रथमं बुद्धिद्वयम् । (not to rush into new enterprises is the first mark of wisdom)."

Poona, 30-7-'46

PYARELAL

KHADI WORKERS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

I have two questions about Khadi workers before me. One of these is in connection with village workers. It is their duty to spend their time, mainly in spinning and making others spin. The new conception of Khadi work includes all the processes from the cultivation of cotton to the preparation of cloth. A worker who does all these intelligently and can mend the spinning wheel or the spindle, will never have any difficulty in earning his livelihood and teaching others to do so. Along with it, and without letting Khadi work suffer, the worker might treat simple ailments and attend to the sanitation of the village. Education has to be imparted through a craft. Therefore I do not consider it apart from Khadi work. Those who come for education must wear Khadi and get education through Khadi.

The second question is how long should a Khadi worker work as a paid worker. In my view he should be self-supporting from the beginning. If that is not possible, he should fix a time limit for himself. Five years is the utmost limit in my opinion. A worker who is to become self-supporting at the end of five years, should reduce his allowance progressively from year to year. He cannot expect to become self-supporting all of a sudden at the end of five years. It is an art which requires careful thought and management. He who really teaches others should certainly become self-supporting himself.

Panchgani, 28-7-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

CONTENTS		PAGE
CLOTH SHORTAGE	... M. K. GANDHI	245
AFTER FOUR YEARS	... PYARELAL	245
9TH AUGUST	... M. K. GANDHI	248
HEAL THYSELF	... M. K. GANDHI	248
QUESTION BOX	... M. K. GANDHI	249
DECCAN CHIEFS IN
CONFERENCE	... PYARELAL	250
KHADI WORKERS	... M. K. GANDHI	252

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 27

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, AUGUST 11, 1946

TWO ANNAS

WEEKLY LETTER

I

I. N. A. AGAIN

"Give us a chance. What would you have us do next?" said an I. N. A. Captain who came to see Gandhiji at Panchgani last week.

"You should give proof of the same courage and bravery here that you people displayed on the battle-field," replied Gandhiji. "There was perfect unity in the ranks of the I. N. A. Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs, Parsis, all communities were like blood brothers. There was no high or low, no Untouchable. Demonstrate that unity here. But I am afraid you will not be able to do so."

"Yes, we cannot, so long as the British power rules over us," replied the I. N. A. friend.

"Well, there is a lot that can be done in spite of the British. I have voluntarily become a bhangi. Who can prevent me from doing so? Shah Nawaz today is an Indian first and an Indian last. Nobody can prevent him from doing so. In fact, wherever he goes, he puts up with his Hindu friends. But even so, he realizes that he cannot achieve here what he could outside India. The I. N. A. men on returning to their homes take the complexion from their environment. They shed what they had learnt outside and it is difficult to prevent them from falling into the old ruts.

"Again, if you expect India to spend lakhs on you, that is not right. You should be like Garibaldi's soldiers who were promised by their leader only 'blood, toil and tears'. They tilled the land and supported themselves when not engaged on the battle-field. No one paid them a salary. You have been trained by the Britishers who spend lavishly. If you expect medals like Victoria Crosses and such prizes as the British can give, you will be disappointed. The starving millions of India cannot afford that. You have to become one with them and serve them. Today the man in the street is terrified of the military. The military man acts like a bully and there can be no appeal against his high-handedness. You have to prove that you are friends and servants of the people, so that they will not be awed by you."

"We befriend the people here as we did outside India," put in the I. N. A. Captain.

"That is good," replied Gandhiji. "But I tell you, your leaders are finding it difficult to control the I. N. A. men in India. There are petty jealousies and rivalries. 'If A can get something, why not I?'—that is the kind of feeling coming uppermost. It was different abroad. You had a very capable leader in Netaji. In spite of our sharp differences, I have always admired his burning patriotism, courage and resourcefulness."

"You have no idea of the deep love and admiration he had for you," interrupted the Captain. "What should be our contribution in the next struggle for Independence?" he asked next.

"The struggle for Independence is going on today. It has never stopped," replied Gandhiji. "But, if my will prevails, it will be a non-violent struggle. The lesson of the last 25 years of training in non-violence, has gone home to the masses. They have realized that in non-violence they have a weapon which enables a child, a woman or even a decrepit old man to resist the mightiest government successfully. If your spirit is strong, mere lack of physical strength ceases to be a handicap. Per contra I have seen the Zulus in South Africa with Herculean bodies tremble before a White child. White soldiers could go into the Zulu kraals and shoot men, women and children sleeping in their beds. There was no resistance in the Zulu and the physical strength could not make up for it."

A DEDICATION

On the 21st of July, Gandhiji had the satisfaction of witnessing the realization of one of his pet projects when Sheth Shantilal of Ahmedabad formally dedicated 'Satish Kunj' property for the use of the poor. Prime Minister Shri Balasaheb Kher and Ministers Shri Patil and Shri Tapase had specially come from Poona for the occasion. Speaking after the evening prayer, Gandhiji said that when he came to Panchgani under medical advice in 1944, after his release from detention, he found that there was no place where the poor and the destitute could put up, in order to take advantage of the beautiful climate. And what about the Harijans? He had received a long letter from one of them describing their woes. "It is all right so long as his identity is unknown. But the moment it is discovered, that he is a Harijan, he suddenly becomes a pariah. He is unwelcome everywhere. All doors are shut against him. The shopkeeper receives his money but sells him the rottenest stuff and cheats him into the bargain by giving him less than the full measure. Should the poor unfortunate object, he is insulted and told to be gone. The landlord won't have him and asks him to quit. Where is the poor man to go?" It was heart-rending. He felt he could not come and stay in Panchgani, unless there was a place where the Harijans would be welcome like all others. It had therefore given him great pleasure that Panchgani was at last going to have such a place. Sheth Shantilal of Ahmedabad had purchased the 'Satish Kunj' property for Rs. 45000 and had agreed to get it reconditioned and bear the running expenses of the institution for ten years. In the dharmashala which was going to be built, the poor of all communities including the Harijans, would be able to come and stay without any distinction of caste or religion. They would be provided free accommodation but would have to make their own arrangements as regards food etc. A Trust had been formed to look after the dharmashala, consisting of Sheth Shantilal of Ahmedabad, Sheth Mohanlal, Shri Bachharaj, Dr. Dinshah Mehta and Gandhiji. He would have liked the dharmashala, said Gandhiji, to be built out of funds, provided by the inhabitants of Panchgani itself. But finance was not everything. Although they had not contributed the money, they should give their blessings and co-operation. The institution would fail unless the people took active and genuine interest in it. He suggested that sisters from well-to-do families should visit the sick or the convalescent who might come to the dharmashala for a change of climate, soothe them by singing beautiful hymns and render them whatever service they could or was necessary.

The sanitary conditions in Panchgani were awful. In a climate like theirs there should never be any epidemics. Yet they had the plague only the year before and had to vacate the bazar which was indescribably dirty. There was water shortage in spite of a plentiful rainfall. Why could not the rain water be captured and utilized for water supply? In South Africa, where rainfall was scarce and there was a dearth of under-ground water supply, they had a reservoir in every house for storing rain water. It was the duty of all of them, most of all the Municipality and the Public Health Department to remedy these defects. The Prime Minister Shri Balasaheb Kher was there and was prepared to render them whatever help was necessary. If he were the Health Officer or the Chairman of the Panchgani Municipality, said Gandhiji, he would make the place so clean and neat that anybody might be able to lie down and sleep on the hill side in the open without any compunction. Today that was not possible, because of the Municipal insanitation. People spat and made nuisance here, there and everywhere indiscriminately. He spoke from knowledge, he said. Before he came under the Mahatmic handicap and was free to go into dharmashalas and other places of public utility without attracting crowds, he had occasion to study the conditions prevailing in those places. The insanitation, the filth and the stench of the public latrines and urinals of the railway stations and in the dharmashalas were simply awful. They could make Panchgani into a jewel among the hill stations, if only they did their duty.

SCAVENGING AS A FINE ART

He then proceeded to make some concrete suggestions. The first and foremost of course was sanitation and night-soil disposal. Having become a bhangi himself, he thought of it first. He had done a bhangi's job right from South Africa. He knew how to do it without becoming filthy himself. The sight of a bhangi carrying the night-soil basket on his head made him sick. Scavenging is a fine art. Not only must the cleaning be perfect, but the manner of doing it and the instruments used, must be clean and not revolting to one's sanitary sense. "You have only to see the privy I use. It is spotlessly clean without a trace of smell. That is so because I clean it myself. The municipal bhangi pours out the contents of the night-soil waggons over a cliff converting a beauty spot into a plague spot. If you become your own bhangis, not only will you insure perfect sanitation for yourself, but you will make your surroundings clean and relieve the bhangis of the weight of oppression which today crushes them. Do not imagine, that thereby you would deprive them of their living. Today we have reduced them to the level of the beast. They earn a few coppers but only at the expense of their human dignity. The same bhangi serves in the municipality as well as in your bungalow, with the result that he can do justice to neither. Look at him as he eats his food, cowering under the shadow of the latrine wall, surrounded by filth. It is enough to break one's heart. It should not be difficult for you to find a more decent avocation for him to follow."

HANDICAP OF FUNDS

The Nawab Saheb of Wai who had seen him earlier in the day had told him that they knew what to do, but that the municipality was too poor and the necessary finances were lacking. He had asked the Nawab Saheb, said Gandhiji, to send him a small note setting forth their handicap. He hoped to be able to show him that what they wanted to do and what needed to be done, need not be held up for lack of funds. After all, the various improvements which he has suggested would not require more than ten lakhs of rupees. He wanted to tell the rich folk who frequented Panchgani that it was up to them to provide that amount. In free and progressive countries, the gentry considered it their special privilege and duty to shoulder the burden of providing municipal amenities and improvements. It was only in India that people looked for every little thing to the Government. They must learn to shed that mendicant habit if, they aspired to become a free and self-respecting nation.

Then they should do something to improve the drainage. For that a suitable scheme would have to be prepared by an engineer. He hoped that the work would be taken up without delay.

Lastly, he hoped that something would be done immediately about the disposal of the night-soil. The present practice was a sin against man and God and its continuation even for a single day should be a matter of utter shame to them. He was sorry to tell them that Dr. Dinshah had reported that even after nearly a fortnight, things were as bad as they were on their arrival in Panchgani.

He hoped that when he came to Panchgani next year God willing, he would find things different. The gulf that separated the rich and the poor today was appalling. It had to be bridged. The rich must share all their amenities with the poor in the fullest measure. Their joining in the prayer-gathering would have gone in vain if it did not help them to realize and do their duty. Such prayer would be vain repetition which could do no good to them, to him or to anybody.

Poona, 30-7-'46

II

Gandhiji's stay at Panchgani this year did not extend to more than a fortnight. Even so, it provided welcome relief to his overworked system. The three days' stay at Poona, where he arrived on the 28th July was packed with three conferences—the Deccan Chiefs' conference and two conferences of the Industries and Educational Ministers respectively, from the various Provinces. An account of the Educational Ministers' conference will be given in the 'Harijan'. This left Uruli only four days.

LOKAMANYA TILAK'S ANNIVERSARY

The 25th anniversary of the late Lokamanya's demise which fell on the day Gandhiji reached Uruli, evoked poignant memories. Speaking, after the evening prayer, he recalled how he had gone to attend the Lokamanya's funeral on receiving the sad news over the telephone. The mammoth funeral procession was composed of Mussalmans, and Parsis no less than Hindus. He himself had got caught in the crush and narrowly escaped injury. Those were the days when our atmosphere was not poisoned by communal bitterness. Much water has flown under the bridge since then, but the memory of Lokamanya remains enshrined in the hearts and affection of his countrymen as ever before. The lapse of time has only added to his popularity. He is still with us, though he is physically no more. He has given us the mantra that Swaraj is our birthright. That birthright belongs equally to all. Like the Infinite it is inexhaustible. To divide it, is not to take away.

"May be that some questionable things are today being done in the late Lokamanya's name. That is the way of the world. Even divinity is not proof against abuse. The evil, however, remains with the evil-doer. It does not detract from the lustre of divinity.

India was today on the eve of attaining her birthright, Gandhiji went on to say. In his opinion, nature cure was an essential ingredient in the building of Swaraj of his conception. The attaining of true Swaraj presupposed the triple purification of body, mind and soul.

NATURE-CURING THIEVES

He could have hardly imagined when he uttered those words, that within twentyfour hours an occasion would arise to put that precept into practice. On the very next day a villager was brought to him with injuries on his body, received at the hands of thieves who had taken away ornaments etc. from his house. There were three ways, Gandhiji told the villagers of Uruli, of dealing with the case. The first was the stereotyped orthodox way of reporting to the police. Very often it only provided the police a further opportunity for corruption and brought no relief to the victim. The second way, which was followed by the general run of the village people, was to passively acquiesce in it. This was reprehensible as it was rooted in cowardice. Crime would flourish, while cowardice remained. What was more, by such acquiescence we ourselves became party to the crime. The third way, which Gandhiji commended, was that of pure Satyagraha. It required that we should regard even thieves and criminals as our brothers and sisters, and crime as a disease of which the latter were the victims and needed to be cured. Instead of bearing ill will towards a thief or a criminal and trying to get him punished they should try to get under his skin, understand the cause that had let him into crime and try to remedy it. They should, for instance, teach him a vocation and provide him with the means to make an honest living and thereby transform his life. They should realize that a thief or a criminal was not a different being from themselves. Indeed, if they turned the searchlight inward and closely looked into their own souls, they would find that the difference between them was only one of degree. The rich, moneyed man who made his riches by exploitation or other questionable means, was no less guilty of robbery than the thief who picked a pocket or broke into a house and committed theft. Only the former took refuge behind the facade of respectability and escaped the penalty of law. Strictly speaking, remarked Gandhiji, all amassing or hoarding of wealth, above and beyond one's legitimate requirements was theft. There would be no occasion for thefts and therefore, no thieves, if there was a wise regulation of riches and absolute social justice prevailed. In the Swaraj of his conception, there would be no thieves and no criminals, or else it would be Swaraj only in name. The criminal was only an indication of the social malady and since nature cure, as he envisaged it, included the triple cure for body, mind and soul, they must not be satisfied with merely banishing physical illness from Uruli, their work must include the healing of the mind and soul too, so that there would be perfect social peace in their midst.

THE WAY OF SATYAGRAHA

If they followed the nature cure way of dealing with the criminal, which, as he had already explained, was the way of Satyagraha, they could not sit still in the face of crime. Only a perfect being could afford to lose himself within himself and withdraw completely from the cares and responsibilities of the world. But who could claim that perfection? "On the high sea a sudden calm is always regarded by experienced pilots and mariners with concern. Absolute calm is not the law of the ocean. It is the same with the ocean of life. More often than not, it portends rough weather. A Satyagrahi would therefore neither retaliate nor would he submit to the criminal, but seek to cure him by curing himself. He will not try to ride two horses at a time, viz. to pretend to follow the law of Satyagraha, while at the same time, seeking police aid. He must forswear the latter, in order to follow the former. If the criminal himself chooses to hand himself over to the police, it would be a different matter. You cannot expect to touch his heart and win his confidence, if at the same time you are prepared to go to the police and inform against him. That would be gross betrayal of trust. A reformer cannot afford to be an informer." And by way of illustration, he mentioned several instances of how he had refused to give information to the police, about persons who had been guilty of violence and came and confessed to him. No police officer could compel a Satyagrahi to give evidence against a person who had confessed to him. A Satyagrahi would never be guilty of a betrayal of trust. He wanted the people of Uruli to adopt the method of Satyagraha, for dealing with crime and criminals. They should contact the criminals in their homes, win their confidence and trust by loving and selfless service, wean them from evil and unclean habits and help to rehabilitate them by teaching them honest ways of living.

Badlapur, 5-8-'46

PYARELAL

HARIJAN

August 11

1946

STRIKES

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The statement in the daily press that I had approved of the postal strike is not true. One day a postman asked to be allowed to just say 'Vande Mataram' to me. Kanu Gandhi brought him to me. The visitor, however, asked for my blessings for the postmen's strike which had just then commenced. I said to him that if the strike was justified and if they conducted themselves absolutely peacefully, they must succeed. This was no approval of the particular strike. Apart, however, from what I said and apart from the merits of the postmen's strike, I feel that as an expert in successful strikes of an absolutely peaceful nature, I owe it to the conductor of this strike as those of all others and the public to state the conditions of successful strikes.

Obviously there should be no strike which is not justifiable on merits. No unjust strike should succeed. All public sympathy must be withheld from such strikes.

The public has no means of judging the merits of a strike, unless it is backed by impartial persons enjoying public confidence. Interested men cannot judge the merits of their own case. Hence, there must be an arbitration accepted by the parties or a judicial adjudication. As a rule, the matter does not come before the public when there is accepted arbitration or adjudication. Cases have, however, happened when haughty employers have ignored awards or misguided employees, conscious of their power to assert themselves, have done likewise and have decided upon forcible extortion.

Strikes for economic betterment should never have a political end as an ulterior motive. Such a mixture never advances the political end and generally brings trouble upon strikers, even when they do not dislocate public life, as in the case of public utility services, such as the postal strike. The Government may suffer some inconvenience, but will not come to a standstill. Rich persons will put up expensive postal services but the vast mass of the poor people will be deprived during such a strike of a convenience of primary importance to which they have become used for generations. Such strikes can only take place when every other legitimate means has been adopted and failed.

In the present case we have National Provincial Governments. Postmen should consult these Governments before resorting to the extreme step. So far as I am aware, Shri Balasaheb Kher, Shri Mangaldas Pakwasa and Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel have intervened. If their advice has been rejected by the men, they have taken a serious and dangerous step. If all these powerful unions disregard their own Governments and the Working Committee members, they disown the Congress. They have a right to do so, if the Congress sells their interest.

Sympathetic strikes must be taboo until it is conclusively proved that the affected men have exhausted all the legitimate means at their disposal and until the Congress has been proved to have betrayed or neglected their interest or until the Congress has called for sympathetic strikes, in order to secure justice from obdurate and unsympathetic authorities.

One hears of strikes all over the country to paralyse the Government. This paralysis is an extreme political step, open only to a body like the Congress, not even to unions, however powerful they may be. If the Congress is the people's arm par excellence for the purpose of winning Independence, paralysing action should be retained solely in the hands of the Congress.

At the present moment, the Congress is engaged in making a success of the proposed Constituent Assembly. There are interminable difficulties in the way. Paralysing strikes must seriously hamper Congress action.

It follows from the foregoing that political strikes must be treated on their own merits and must never be mixed with or related to economic strikes. Political strikes have a definite place in non-violent action. They are never taken up haphazard. They must be open, never led by goondaism. They are calculated never to lead to violence.

Therefore, my humble suggestion to all strikers is to make a frank declaration of submission to arbitration or adjudication, to seek the guidance of the Congress and abide by its advice and for all sympathetic strikers to stop, whilst the Congress is engaged in making the contemplated Constituent Assembly a success and while Provincial National Governments are functioning.

Uruli-Kanchan, 3-8-'46

Proverbs on the Drink Evil

The following is culled from J. Gilchrist Lawson's The World's Best Proverbs and Maxims (Grosset and Dunlap):

Wine hath drowned more men than the sea—Publius Sirus.

The best cure for drunkenness is while sober to seek a drunken man (Chinese).

When wine is in, wit is out (Italian).

Bacchus kills more than Mars (German).

Drinking water neither makes a man sick nor in debt, nor his wife a widow—John Neale.

Drunkenness is an egg from which all vices are hatched.

Drunkenness is nothing but a voluntary madness.—Seneca.

Drunkenness makes some men fools, some beasts and some devils.

Intemperance is the doctor's wet nurse (German).
V. G. D.

THE MEANING OF NATURE CURE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Many persons wish to come to Uruli-Kanchan in order to learn nature cure. I prevent them. The work in this village is being done on behalf of the Trust, of which the three Trustees are Dr. Dinshah Mehta, Shri Jehangir Patel and myself. Dr. Dinshah Mehta is an experienced nature cure physician but his experience has been gained in cities. He used to take in poor people in his clinic in Poona, but he gave them just the same treatment as he gave his rich patients. The nature cure of my conception for the villagers is limited to rendering such aid as can be given to them through what can be procured in the village. For example, I would not need either electricity or ice for them.

Such work can only be for those like me who have become village-minded, whose heart even while they live in a city is in the village. Therefore, the Trustees have given over the work entirely to me. I have begun it but I have no trained personnel. It is another thing that I take help from Dr. Mehta, whenever I need it. I have found a good helper in Dr. Bhagavat whose heart is in the villages and who has adopted the simple life. Even though he is an allopath, he believes whole-heartedly in nature cure. No labour is beneath his dignity or too much for him. He never tires. The others are all new to the work but they are filled with the spirit of service. The work is new to me too. Shri Datar has generously given his house for our use, free of rent, and thus enabled the work to go on. But the house is too small to admit students. So far I myself have not been able to take up my abode permanently in Uruli-Kanchan. I hope, D. V. to spend six months in future in the neighbourhood of Poona and six in Sevagram. Therefore, those who are anxious to learn nature cure will understand that in the circumstances, it is quite impossible for them to come to this village.

Now to my conception of nature cure: I have from time to time written a little about it, but as the idea is developing, it will be a good thing to tell something regarding its limitations in Uruli-Kanchan. Human ailments, whether of village or town, are of three kinds, viz. bodily, mental and spiritual. And what applies to one individual applies generally to the other and also to society as a whole.

The majority of the inhabitants of Uruli-Kanchan are business folk. Mangs live on one side of the village, Mahars on another and people of the Kanchan caste on yet another. The name of the village is derived from this last group. There are some gypsies living here too, who are termed criminal tribes under the law. The Mangs earn their living by making ropes etc. They were well off during the war but have now fallen on bad days and are living from hand to mouth. The problem that faces the nature cure doctor is how to deal with the malady of the Mangs, which is by no means an ailment to be ignored. It is really the duty of the businessman in Uruli-Kanchan to stamp out this social disease. No medicines from any dispensary are going to avail in this case and yet it is no less poisonous a disease than cholera. Some of the tenements of the Mangs are fit only for a bonfire. But burning will not provide them with new dwellings. Where would they put their belongings, where would they seek shelter from rain and cold? These are the difficulties to be overcome and the nature cure physician cannot be blind to them. What can be done for the criminal tribes? They do not deliberately commit crime for the joy of it. They are victims of an age-long tradition and therefore labelled criminals. It becomes the duty of the residents of Uruli-Kanchan to free them from the evil habit. The nature cure man may not neglect this work. Such problems will continually face him. Thus on reflection we can see that the field of work for him is very wide and that it is work for true Swaraj. It can succeed through God's grace, only if all the workers and residents of Uruli-Kanchan are true and determined to reach the goal.

Uruli-Kanchan, 3-8-'46

(From Harijansevak)

SOUTH AFRICA

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The following news from South Africa will be of interest to the readers.

Rev. Michael Scott who has thrown in his lot with Indians in their struggle there, has written a note under the caption "Not by Might". It is already published in the dailies. It should make a special appeal to all Europeans. He adds in a personal note:

"The spirit which enshrined you and your movement here, will not be extinguished by the powerful and cunning forces which are now arrayed against it."

An English sister writes from Durban:

"I went along to the camp almost the first day just to give the campers a word of encouragement and was quite impressed by their cheerfulness and general attitude—it was the "real thing" like some of the Indian movements I have seen. Then I went to the court one day too and it seemed as though those on trial (apparently) were really the judges and the officials and the Government were in the dock. If you have seen the statements by some of the leaders, you will see they give the same impression.

"Rev. Michael Scott is a very good man. He is only about 40 years old and wears "shirts" as do many high Anglicans and is addressed as "Father Scott". He reminds me somewhat of C. F. Andrews.

"I am glad to know that Manilal is coming back. He will be a help to the leaders here, though, as a matter of fact, the struggle on the Indian side has been on a very high level up to the present. It is that that has drawn a group of Europeans to support the struggle but the number is not very large yet."

As I have said before, the battle will certainly go to our countrymen if they remain truly non-violent. Non-violence knows no defeat.

Another friend writes:

"You have heard of Mrs. Naidoo's passing. She met with an accident about three months before her death. During all that time the family could not get my phone number due to some error on the part of the exchange. Mrs. Naidoo wanted to see me but they could not contact me till the day after her death. I loved her. She was a sweet soul, a real friend and had a genius for home-making. There was always a beautiful atmosphere in the Naidoo home and one could drop in at any time, no matter how busy she was and always feel a welcome guest. And what a heroine she was! Think of the anxiety she must have gone through all the time the children were in India. I do hope that there will be a joint memorial to her and Thambe."

Incidentally I must mention that Mrs. Naidoo's husband was one of the first Satyagrahis during the days of our struggle there in my time.

Poona, 31-7-46

Notes

Decentralization

Appasaheb Pant of Aundh State writes :

"The British have forged an adequate instrument in the "Services" to help them maintain themselves in this country. To maintain a sort of peace and order, and, especially a "peace of the grave" that instrument may be adequate.

"But one feels that our growth into a true democracy will be more hampered than helped through the use of this instrument, we shall have to discard all this old machinery and through our own experience, create a new one that will aid us in the formation of an equitable and democratic way of life.

"For this purpose, one feels that the decentralization of administrative power is the first step. Human dignity and self-reliance arise only out of responsibilities shouldered by the people themselves. The habit to look to a central authority to protect us, to give us justice, to feed us, to clothe us, has to be eradicated if true democracy has ever to emerge. Through mistakes and suffering will we learn the value of moral principles in human relationship.

"Centralization of power and authority leads to totalitarianism and human bondage. The test of the Congress in office with this centralized power in hand, lies in devising ways and means to create decentralization which will enable ordinary human beings to manage their affairs themselves and in that process become more human, creative and therefore happy."

Appasaheb writes from experience, having had much to do with the administration of Aundh.

Poona, 30-7-46

M. K. G.

True Non-Violence

"During these last few days, in order to rest the brain, I have been reading a Scott novel, 'The Talisman'. Here is a passage from it which will strongly appeal to you :

"The scene is where Richard Coeur-de-Lion is describing to de Vaux how he had been about to put to death with his own hand Sir Kenneth of Scotland for supposed treachery :

'And yet de Vaux! it is strange to see the bearing of the man. Coward or traitor he must be, yet he abode the threatened blow of Richard Plantagenet, as our arm had been raised to lay knighthood on his shoulder. Had he shown the slightest sign of fear — had but a joint trembled or an eyelid quivered, I had shattered his head like a crystal goblet. But I cannot strike where there is neither fear nor resistance.'

"And it should be added here that neither was there hate. Sir Kenneth was a young and noble warrior second only to King Richard in physical built and strength. He stood penitent before Coeur-de-Lion for a misdeed into which he had been duped, but which honour bound him to accept. Scott describes him waiting for the blow to fall: 'Colourless, but firm as a marble statue, the Scot stood before him (the King), with his bare head' uncovered by any protection, his eyes cast down to the earth, his lips scarcely moving, yet muttering probably in prayer.'

"The three attributes, fearlessness, non-violence and freedom from hate which can overpower the strength and fury, even of a Coeur-de-Lion.

"You have always said, it is not the weapon which is at fault but the warrior who is wanting."

(From Mirabehn's letter)

Kasturba Gandhi National Memorial Trust

[A Brief note on the working of the Trust is given below.]

The Trust has at present 26 Trustees with Gandhiji as the Chairman and Shri A. V. Thakkar as the Secretary.

The Trust has an Executive Committee consisting of 12 members.

The following are the Holding Trustees :

Sir Purshottamdas Thakurdas

Shri J. R. D. Tata

Shri G. D. Birla

Shri Ambalal Sarabhai

Shri Kasturbhai Lalbhai

and Shri Shantikumar N. Morarji.

The Organizing Secretary of the Trust is Shrimati Suchetadevi Kripalani.

The Trust has an Advisory Medical Board as also a Shiksha Samiti.

All work in provinces is carried on by provincial agents who are all women.

The total collection up till now is Rs. 1,28,17,392-10-0

Total expenditure 2,01,866-2-10

As the object of the Trust is the welfare and education of women and children in rural areas only, it has been the policy of the Trust to carry on work in provinces and field centres only through the agency of women workers, so far as possible. Realizing fully well the dearth of trained and qualified women workers who may be ready to go and settle in villages, the Trust has mainly concentrated its attention on the training of women workers on the following lines

Nayi Talim, Improvement of Health Services,

Village Industries, Gramaseva etc.

To impart training in the above subjects, Grama Sevika training centres have been opened in the provinces for a period of 6 months or one year. The first all India training camp for provincial instructors was conducted for a month from the 5th of April to 4th of May, 1945 at Borivli, a suburb of Bombay. 90 trainees from all over the country attended this camp.

Training centres have also been started in the provinces of Bihar, Karnatak-Mysore (joint), Gujarat, Maharashtra, Bengal, U. P., Assam, Punjab, Rajputana, Mahakoshal, Kerala and Tamil Nad, where 15 to 35 trainees in each, are undergoing training in subjects such as domestic science, vegetable gardening, dairying, sanitation, games, Hindustani, Vastu-vijnan (charkha science), dietetics etc.

Besides, 9 women have completed three months' training in Balwadi education (Montessori course), 38 more are receiving Basic Education Teachers' training, a course of three months, and 35 have taken up a medical training course of 15 months.

Those who have already completed their course in gram-seva are expected to open centres for village work in their own districts or talukas. Eight such rural centres have been started in Maharashtra, 8 in Karnatak-Mysore and 26 in Bihar.

In the villages of Delhi, C. P., Tamil Nad and U. P. dispensaries for women and children have been opened and in certain places even maternity homes have been started. Similarly, in the villages of Punjab, Andhra, Orissa, Tamil Nad etc. basic schools have been opened.

DOCTORS CRITICIZED

(By M. K. Gandhi)

1. Whether it is not a matter of common experience that the diagnosis by doctors is a very uncertain quantity and varies from time to time in the same case and often from doctor to doctor, and many cases remain undiagnosed, until they recover or die?

2. Assuming that the diagnosis is correct, what useful purpose does it serve, if it cannot be followed by remedial measures which lead to a cure, even on paper. Medical books do not speak with a certain voice on this point. If nature cure alone is to be followed, why is a diagnosis needed at all, considering that it recognizes the unity of disease and not hundreds of diseases which the doctors believe in?

3. Do the doctors make any use of their knowledge of the body in prescribing medical treatment as distinguished from surgical treatment? If not, why should the doctors get credit for having once upon a time, read physiology and anatomy which are soon forgotten for want of use in actual practice? Are not the vaids entitled to equal credit or discredit for studying the physiology and pathology of tridosha and not making but a nominal use of it in actual practice?

4. Are not the defects attributed to the vaids, really due to the omission of its duty by the State to provide institutions for research etc.? How can the system be blamed for the fault of the individual or the Government? Even the doctors in private practice, carry out no research and very few of them even read about researches carried on abroad.

5. Does not the constant examination of Mahatmaji's body by the doctors, give them an undue and undeserved prominence in the public eye and so tend to put into the background the other systems of medicine which also have an equal, if not a greater, claim on Mahatmaji's attention?

These are Shri Brijlal Nehru's questions to which I reply as follows:

1. What the question implies is very true. Nevertheless doctors flourish. This phenomenon should make us all think.

2. My experience is that a correct diagnosis is followed by a remedial measure, answering the diagnosis. It will be wrong to blame medical books because they mention several alternative measures. The complicated human system does not lend itself to one certain remedy. It would be untrue to say that nature cure does not demand any diagnosis. As it believes in unity of disease and unity of care, diagnosis adopted in nature cure is much simpler. Unity of disease and unity of care is a good generalization. No nature cure man blindly applies earth poultices in all cases.

3. It is highly unfair to say that in their practice, doctors make no use of their knowledge of physiology and anatomy. No comparison can be set up between doctors and vaids for they employ wholly dissimilar methods of diagnosis. I am utterly ignorant of the value of the tridosha theory.

4. I am unable to subscribe to the condemnation of the State, for not providing institutions for research. I have always blamed the vaids' apathy in the matter of real research. The top ones are busy making money. The others are too ignorant to do so or are easily satisfied with what they find in the orthodox Ayurvedic books. I am sorry for this view. I come to it, in spite of my great regard for the Ayurvedic system and the Yunani which are suited to the soil.

5. I do not think that constant examination by medical friends of my body gives them undue or any prominence. They do not stand in need of any. They were all flourishing before I appeared on the scene. Nor does it tend to put into the background the other systems of medicine. I have friends among vaids and hakims. But they do not need elaborate or frequent diagnosis. I submit my body to the diagnosis which is unfortunately advertised but I do not submit it to the treatment by drugs. The treatment is principally confined to the use of the five agencies of nature, diet changes and massage.

My love of nature cure and of indigenous systems does not blind me to the advance that Western medicine has made in spite of the fact that I have stigmatized it as black magic. I have used the harsh term and I do not withdraw it, because of the fact, that it has countenanced vivisection and all the awfulness it means and because it will stop at no practice, however bad it may be, if it prolongs the life of the body and because it ignores the immortal soul which resides in the body. I cling to nature cure in spite of its great limitations and in spite of the lazy pretensions of nature curists. Above all, in nature cure, everybody can be his or her own doctor, not so in the various systems of medicine.

Uruli Kanchan, 4-8-'46

LETTER TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF PORTUGUESE INDIA

[The following is the text of Gandhiji's letter dated 2nd August, 1946, to H. E. Jose Bossa, Governor General of Portuguese India, in reply to his letter of the 18th July 1946, which has already appeared in the Press.]

Dear Friend,

It was kind of you to write to me in reply to what I had written in 'Harijan' about Goa's affairs. I suppose you know that I have visited Mossambique, Delagoa, and Inhambane. I did not notice there any Government for philanthropic purposes. Indeed, I was astonished to see the distinction that the Government made between Indians and the Portuguese and between the Africans and themselves. Nor does the history of the Portuguese Settlement in India prove the claim set forth by you. Indeed, what I see and know of the condition of things in Goa, is hardly edifying. That the Indians in Goa have been speechless is proof, not of the innocence or the philanthropic nature of the Portuguese Government but of the rule of terror. You will forgive me for not subscribing to your statement that there is full liberty in Goa and that the agitation is confined only to a few malcontents.

Every account, received by me personally and seen in the papers here in this part of India, confirms the contrary view. I suppose, the report of the sentence by your Court Martial of eight years on Dr. Braganza and his contemplated exile to a far off Portuguese Settlement, is by itself a striking corroboration of the fact, that civil liberty is a rare article in Goa. Why should a law-abiding citizen like Dr. Braganza be considered so dangerous as to be singled out for exile?

Though the politics of Dr. Lohia probably differ from mine, he has commanded my admiration for his having gone to Goa and put his finger on its black spot. Inhabitants of Goa can afford to wait for Independence, until much greater India has regained it. But no person or group can thus remain without civil liberty without losing self-respect. He has lighted a torch which the inhabitants of Goa cannot, except at their peril, allow to be extinguished. Both you and the inhabitants of Goa should feel thankful to the Doctor for lighting that torch. Therefore, your description of him as "stranger" would excite laughter, if it was not so tragic. Surely the truth is, that the Portuguese coming from Portugal are strangers, whether they come as philanthropists or as Governors exploiting the so-called weaker races of the earth.

You have talked of the abolition of caste distinctions. What I see has happened is that not only no caste distinction has been abolished but at least one more caste, far more terrible than the system "caste" has been added by the Portuguese rulers.

I, therefore, hope that you will revise your views on philanthropy, civil liberty and caste distinctions, withdraw all the African police, declare yourself whole-heartedly for civil liberty and if possible, even let the inhabitants of Goa frame their own government, and invite from Greater India more experienced Indians to assist the inhabitants and even you in framing such Government.

Yours etc.

M. K. Gandhi

[P. S. Since your letter was sent to the Press, I am publishing this in 'Harijan'. M. K. G.]

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

NATURE CURE AND MODERN TREATMENT

Q. Is there any room in your nature cure

1. for instruments such as the microscope, x-rays and others for purposes of diagnosis?

2. for the use of medicines which have been proved to be 75 per cent successful in the treatment of specific diseases as, for example, Quinine in malaria, emetin in dysentery, penicillin in pneumonia?

3. for instruction to people in the science of personal cleanliness, hygiene and sanitation, and the prevention of disease?

A. My nature cure is designed solely for villagers and villages. Therefore, there is no place in it for the microscope, X-rays and similar things. Nor is there room in nature cure for medicines, such as quinine, emetin and penicillin. Personal hygiene and healthy living are of primary importance. And these should suffice. If everyone could achieve perfection in this art, there could be no disease. And, while obeying all the laws of nature in order to cure illness, if it does come, the sovereign remedy ever lies in Ramanama. But this cure through Ramanama cannot become universal in the twinkling of an eye. To carry conviction to the patient, the physician has to be a living embodiment of the power of Ramanama. Meantime, all that can possibly be had from the five agencies of nature must be taken and used. They are earth, water, ether, fire and wind. This, to my mind, is the limit of nature cure. Therefore, my experiment in Uruli Kanchan consists in teaching the villagers, how to live clean and healthy lives and in trying to cure the sick through the proper use of the five agencies. If necessary, curative herbs that grow locally, may be used. Wholesome and balanced diet is, of course, an indispensable part of nature cure.

Uruli Kanchan, 2-8-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

CONTENTS		PAGE
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	253
STRIKES	... M. K. GANDHI	256
THE MEANING OF THE
NATURE CURE	... M. K. GANDHI	257
SOUTH AFRICA	... M. K. GANDHI	257
DOCTORS CRITICIZED	... M. K. GANDHI	259
LETTER TO THE GOVERNOR
GENERAL OF PORTUGUESE INDIA	M. K. GANDHI	260
QUESTION BOX	... M. K. GANDHI	260
NOTES:
PROVERBS ON THE DRINK EVIL	... V. G. D.	256
DECENTRALIZATION	... M. K. G.	258
TRUE NON-VIOLENCE	... MIRABEHN	258
KASTURBA GANDHI NATIONAL
MEMORIAL TRUST		258

HARIJAN

16 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 28

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, AUGUST 18, 1946

TWO ANNAS

HE LIVES

(By Sarojini Naidu)

On the eve of Mahadev Desai's fourth death-anniversary, my heart and mind are besieged by both pleasant and poignant recollections of the gifted and beloved being whose friendship was a privilege and whose comradeship a delight.

He was only twentyfive when Mahadev with the whole world before him, felt the magic call of the Mahatma's voice. I saw him when he first came bringing all the gold, frankincense and myrrh of his splendid youth and ideals, his rare literary talent and scholarship, his fervent patriotism, to lay at the feet of his great Master whom he served for twentyfive years with flawless devotion and fidelity.

How varied were his functions and duties in the course of his love discipleship to the Mahatma!

Innumerable pictures of Mahadev pass before my eyes in a swift pageant of memory: Mahadev as the leading inmate of Gandhiji's Ashram at Sabarmati, Wardha, Sevagram; Mahadev in laughing mood, the genial centre of an admiring circle, revelling in his lively wit and subtle humour; Mahadev with bent brows at his literary labours, translating beautiful thoughts, his own or his Guru's, into beautiful language; Mahadev in a gray shawl climbing the Viceregal steps in Delhi charged with a delicate political mission; Mahadev in London accompanying the Mahatma to the royal reception at the Buckingham Palace, a picturesque figure in his dazzling white Khadi; Mahadev with sweet and patient courtesy interpreting to groups of foreign pilgrims from Europe and America, the Near and the Far East, the lovely gospel of his Master whose inmost spirit he reflected as in a crystal mirror.

Most moving and enduring of all memories is the manner of his passing and the hours that followed his tragic end. Since the day of our arrests on the historic ninth of August and our removal to the Aga Khan Palace in Poona which was our prison, he seemed to be burdened and harassed by a prescient fear. The Mahatma's oft-repeated intention of a fast unto death might suddenly materialize in detention. On the night of the 14th August when all was still in our prison palace, Mahadev sat in my room till late talking with a strange sense of urgency as if time were limited. His conversation was a kind of brief and candid autobiographical review of his life, his experiences of his dearly cherished wife and son, but his main theme of course, was Mahatma Gandhi who to him was the living symbol of the deity. He seemed to be haunted by a curious and pressing sense of fatality that night. On the next morning he seemed to be miraculously restored to a buoyant sense of hope. He walked in the garden with Gandhiji and when he returned to the house he said to me: "I don't know why I am so happy today." Shortly after he came to my room with a jest on his lips to meet the doctor who had asked for him. In a few minutes still smiling, he said, "My head is reeling", and almost before we were aware of it, suddenly he passed away, beyond response to the voices that cried to him to wake up and speak.

How can my pen find words of sufficient grace or tenderness to describe the last ceremony and rites which were performed by the stricken Master for his most beloved disciple. With trembling hands Gandhiji washed the marble-cold body unaided, anointed it with sandal paste and decorated it with flowers whispering, "Mahadev, I thought you would do this for me. Now I have to do it for you . . ." In the golden August afternoon of the 15th a mournful little procession followed Mahadev's bier to the improvised burning ground in a corner of the palace grounds . . . What at dawn had been a living flame became at sunset a pyramid of smouldering silver-gray ashes, soon to be scattered on the breast of a nearby sacred river.

Mahadev has vanished from our sight, but is Mahadev dead in reality? Does he not live in the love of his Master and the heart of the country which he served with such rich sacrifice and achievement?

12-8-'46

IN MEMORIAM

(By C. R.)

It is now four years since the passing away of dear Mahadev Desai. Yet we have not been able to overcome the grief or the loss. Gandhiji is an essential figure in our life today, and we feel he has been maimed in an important limb. There is not a day that we pass through but something acutely reminds us of Mahadev's not being with us. He was one of those men whom no one could hope to replace. But in many cases, we are able to forget the dead through being absorbed in what others are doing. But in Mahadev's case, his service to the public through his devoted service to Gandhiji, was of that essential character, which does not admit of any kind of replacement.

12-8-'46

WEEKLY LETTER

"You have called mine a negative attitude," remarked a friend to Gandhiji. "But I am quite clear in my own mind. I do not mind the Congress High Command carrying on negotiations with the Cabinet Mission. But suppose the negotiations fail. What then? The British Government is prepared with its plan of action in that case. But we are not. It is my belief that we shall have to go through another struggle before freedom can be won. I find that you have a revolutionary mentality. I do not like himsa anymore than you. It is bad. My goal is the same as yours. Show a sure non-violent way of achieving our goal of Independence within a definite period and I shall most willingly follow you. In a way I do believe in ahimsa. A repetition of the 1932-37 pattern of struggle won't do. The leaders are put behind the bars at the very commencement of the struggle and then all contact between them and the masses ceases. It is not fair that we should sit in jails in comparative comfort and safety and expect the people to face the fire. The leaders should bear the brunt. Let there be, say, a hundred people with your name on the top followed by those of other front-rank Congress leaders to start a chain fast unto death, after giving due notice to the Government and, I am sure, before the list is exhausted India will be free." The interviewer added that he himself would in that event, be prepared to abandon his own programme and join the fast. His complaint was that no top-ranking Congressman with the exception of Jairamdas Daulatram had yet received a bullet, although perhaps hundreds had died in recent years of bullets and lathi charges at the hands of the police and the military.

Taking the last point first, Gandhiji replied: "If and when the call comes to fast unto death, I will do so irrespective of others joining or not. Fasting unto death is the last and the most potent weapon in the armoury of Satyagraha. It is a sacred thing. But it must be accepted with all its implications. It is not the fast itself but what it implies that matters. Have not even hypocrites been known to make a pretence of fasting? Such fasts are a plague and a nuisance. They do not count. If I fast and you can send a hundred or even ten men who would undertake it with a pure heart, I shall be happy. But such a fast should not be undertaken inside the prison."

"What I mean is that mere jail-going is not enough. People should remain outside and face repression. Nine young boys faced the bullets and died before the Secretariat at Patna. Think how it would have electrified the masses, if it had been Rajendra Babu instead of these poor boys," resumed the interviewer.

"I agree with you there. I have said before that merely filling the prisons is not enough. It is only the jail-going of the pure in heart that can bring Swaraj. In fact in 1922, my instructions were that no one was to follow me in jail and that all should spin and carry out in full the constructive programme. The eighteen-fold constructive programme, if carried out in its entirety will, in my opinion, render civil disobedience unnecessary. The people of Bardoli in 1922 solemnly promised to carry out the constructive programme, to banish untouchability and liquor from their midst and to make Khadi universal to the exclusion of mill cloth imported or Indian. They have failed to fulfil their pledge up till now."

"You say jail-going does not end the fight," proceeded the arguer. "We wanted to agitate for the abolition of the classification of political prisoners by the upper class prisoners voluntarily reducing themselves to 'C' class by refusing to accept privileged treatment. But some said that it was against your ideology. You wanted people to remain in the class in which they were placed."

"That is hardly correct," replied Gandhiji. "In fact I do not want even the distinction between the political and non-political prisoners. I stand for fair and humane treatment of all prisoners. But mine has been a lonely voice. Even when power was in our hands, we failed to abolish classification. I am the originator of jail-going as part of Satyagraha. My jail-going was born out of ahimsa and ahimsa and privilege go ill together. I have fought the Government from inside the jail. As it is, today all sorts of people go to jail. Inside the jail, they behave anyhow, even apologize and come out. Jail-going has become a farce."

THE STRIKE FEVER

"What should be done about the strikes?" The Premier of one of the Congress Provinces was discussing the present strike fever with Gandhiji the other day. He lamented the unwarranted prolongation of a particular strike.

"Does it mean that the Congress has lost its hold on the people?" asked Gandhiji.

"No, but the Congress has not spoken with one voice and that has created confusion in the public mind."

"If the strike is unjustified on merits, it should be unequivocally denounced," suggested Gandhiji.

"By whom?"

"By the Congress, of course."

"What do you mean by the Congress?" asked the friend. "The Working Committee might have. It has not."

"By Congress, I mean the 400 millions of India speaking through the Working Committee," replied Gandhiji.

A militant suffragette who happened to be present here joined in: "But the Working Committee no longer speaks with one voice, thanks to your choice which you have imposed upon the country. You have stifled democracy," she remarked.

Gandhiji explained that the present Working Committee was not his choice but that of the Congress President who had been democratically elected. His part consisted mainly in persuading the Congress President to exercise his choice unfettered by consideration of personalities or the old tradition. The present Working Committee could not stay there for a day if it did not reflect the mind of democracy. The only condition was that democracy should be wide awake and functioning. As an illustration, he mentioned the case of Mr. Churchill who, in spite of his unique victories and achievements, had been set aside by the British people the moment, he ceased to reflect the nation's mind. "The return of labour to power in such overwhelming strength is a great event in the history of political democracy. It has a lesson which we would do well to take to heart," he said.

Another in the company suggested that some sinister influence was at the back of the present strike fever. The motive was not economic but political. What was the remedy?

"You should reason with the strikers," replied Gandhiji, "warn them of the danger and resign if they or the people at large do not listen to you."

"But we owe a responsibility to the country. Shall we be justified in abandoning the country to sinister influences, who in fact want the Congress to go out of office and want to create chaos?" persisted the friend.

"That is the only way in which democracy can function," replied Gandhiji. "It will educate the people. Sinister influences will not flourish if popular support is not lacking. Once the people realize that the Congress won't carry on its rule by force, they will cease to act thoughtlessly or in an irresponsible manner and the sinister influence will be sterilized."

OH! FOR SOME RESPITE

"It is to be seen what Sevagram does for me," exclaimed Gandhiji, with a sigh when I saw him last at Uruli, groaning under the burden he was carrying. "It is, however, not the burden that matters," he added, "but absence of detachment. I have not yet learnt sufficiently to leave things to God. But that must not become an additional cause for worry, if one has a living faith in God." Thanks to the Working Committee meeting, there is an unusual influx of visitors in the Ashram at all hours of the day. They surround his hut and have forced him to put up curtains in front of his doors in order to escape their eager attention. He took advantage of their presence at the evening prayer on the day of his arrival, to drive home a lesson. The day's sacrificial spinning by the Ashram inmates is recorded after the evening prayer as part of the daily routine. "If I ask you how many of you spin, I am afraid, very few hands will go up," he remarked addressing the visitors. "You have just heard the Ashram inmates giving an account of the day's spinning at the end of the prayers. The reason is that spinning has become a part and parcel of the Ashram prayer. The conception of spinning as sacrifice has been linked with the idea of God, the reason being that we believe that in the charkha and what it stands for, lies the only hope of salvation of the poor." He had come to realize that it was difficult to earn one's livelihood through the charkha, but the villagers could easily spin for their own clothes. Because they had not realized the self-help principle in the matter of clothing, they showed a deplorable lack of it in other things too. It stultified even agriculture, so that they suffered destitution in the midst of plenty. "We have plenty of fertile land where we can grow fruits, vegetables and other foodstuffs. But we do not make full use of our opportunity. Instead of eating fresh, whole foods, we eat them denatured. We grow cereals and eat them after converting them practically into dust. God has given us everything we need and He has endowed us with intellect and the use of two hands. We could raise our food, grow cotton and prepare our own clothes, rear cattle and supply milk to our children. Yet we go hungry and naked. Our children are ill-fed and undernourished. Could there be anything more tragic?"

He compared the cities with the villages. The villages could subsist by themselves in regard to all the necessities of life. Not so the cities. They could neither grow their own food; nor produce cotton for cloth, nor keep cattle without the help and co-operation of the villages. And yet he knew of no village in India which was today self-sufficient. Sevagram should have been such a village. But it was still far from it. Our villagers were lazy and lethargic and killed time by gambling etc. If they tried to leave the wheel and concentrate on land exclusively, he warned them, they would soon find that it was not practicable. On the contrary, resuscitation of the wheel would help to revitalize agriculture by making them shed their inertia and apathy.

Referring to the unthinking admiration of the visitors who had literally laid siege to his hut the whole day, he described how it had driven him to desperation almost. He was sick of it. It could do no good either to him or to them. True admiration consisted in carrying out the wishes of the person one admired, not merely staring at him and thus wasting his time and one's own.

A CRUCIAL DECISION

A big step in educational reform was taken the other day when Shri Sriman Narayan Agarwal, the Principal and the Management of the Seksaria College of Commerce, Wardha, decided to make Marathi the medium of instruction in their college. To formally inaugurate the change, a function was held on the 9th instant, when several distinguished visitors, including the Prime Minister of C. P. with several of his colleagues and the Vice-Chancellor of the Nagpur University attended. The occasion was marked by an influx into Wardha of nearly ten thousand visitors from outside who threatened to throw the entire rationing system of the place out of gear. Originally the function was to have been held in the College Hall in the afternoon, when Gandhiji was to have addressed them. But the crowd was so undisciplined and unmanageable that the attempt had to be given up and Gandhiji addressed the gathering later at 6 p. m. in the open air. The idea was to combine the function with the public evening prayer.

Shri Ravishankar Shukla describing the etiology of the reform revealed how the Congress Ministry before it resigned office in 1940, had appointed a committee to go into the question of imparting university education through the mother tongue. The Committee had reported favourably. But in the meantime the Congress having gone out of office, its report was pigeon-holed by the Sec. 93 administration. It was only on the return of the Congress Ministry to office that it was unearthed. The Vice-Chancellor of the Nagpur University, in the course of his remarks significantly remarked that by 1949 it might be possible to make the mother tongue the medium of the entire university education in C. P.

FOUNDATIONS OF FREEDOM

Giving a severe castigation to the unruly crowd that had indulged in window smashing and would have smashed in the roof too if they could, in the afternoon, Gandhiji remarked that it augured ill for the Independence to come. The Working Committee which was holding its meeting in their city was considering how to win Independence for the people of India in the shortest time. It was not labouring for a change of masters. If the masses wanted to enjoy Independence, they had first to learn the secret of observing voluntary discipline. Otherwise discipline would have to be imposed upon them by the powers that be. That would not be Independence but its negation. Every people got the Government they deserved. If they indulged in hooliganism, so would the Government and its officials in the name of law and order. The result would not be freedom or Independence but a balancing of anarchies, each trying to keep the other in check. Voluntary discipline was the first requisite of corporate freedom. If the people were well-behaved, the Government officials would become their true servants. Otherwise they would ride on their necks, not without a semblance of justification. During the Boer War he had seen thousands of soldiers perform a noiseless march through a dense, topical jungle in the middle of the night, in pitch darkness for not even a match-stick was to be struck to light a cigarette, lest it should betray their movements to the enemy. The whole troop formation moved like one man in perfect silence and harmony. The need for discipline for a nation on its march towards Independence was infinitely greater. Without it, Ramarajya which meant the kingdom of God on earth would remain an empty dream.

The Principal and the Management of the Seksaria College had taken a big step in deciding to make the mother tongue the medium of instruction in their college. But the reform would be still-born if they were lazy or if the public did not co-operate.

A fear had been expressed, observed Gandhiji, that the propagation of Rashtrabhasha or the national tongue would prove inimical to the provincial languages. That fear was rooted in ignorance. The present step of the Seksaria College was a living refutation of that suspicion. Provincial tongues provided the sure foundation on which the edifice of the national tongue should rest. The two were intended to complement, not supplant each other.

He deprecated the suggestion that it would need a lot of research and preparation to enable them to impart technical education through the medium of the mother tongue. Those who argued like that, were unaware of the rich treasure of expressions and idioms that were buried in the dialects of our villages. In Gandhiji's opinion there was no need to go to Sanskrit or Persian in search for many expressions. He had been in Champaran and he had found that the village folk there, could fully express themselves with ease and without the help of a single foreign expression or idiom. As an illustration of their resourcefulness, he mentioned the word hava gadi which they had coined to denote a motor car. He challenged university scholars to coin a more poetic expression than that for a motor car.

One of the speakers had remarked that the reform would mean a saying of at least three years to the alumni of the college. But Gandhiji was of opinion that the saving in time and labour would be even greater. "Moreover," he added, "what they learnt through the mother tongue, they would easily be able to communicate to their mothers and sisters at home and thereby bring the latter into line with themselves. Woman had been described as man's better half. Today there was a hiatus between the thought world of men and women respectively in India, thanks to the intrusion of the foreign medium. Our womenfolk were backward and ignorant with the result that India was today like a patient with paralysis of the better side. India could not realize her full stature unless that handicap was removed.

Sevagram,
11-8-'46

PYARELAL

HANDLING MILK IN ENGLAND

The average Britisher lives up to the age of 60 as against less than 30, which is the average expectation of life in India. Infant mortality in Britain is about 50 per thousand as against over 150 in India. The death rate in Britain is about 12 as against over 24 in India. There are several factors, which contribute to this difference, one of these being that Britain is better fed than India. And no wonder, for the pre-war income per head in Britain was £100 or say 1300 Rs. as against 65 Rs. in India, i. e. over 20 times as much. The daily consumption of milk per head in Britain was 39 oz. as against 7 oz. in India, and increased during the war by 28 p. c. Not only is the quantity of milk consumed in Britain greater than in India, but in Britain they handle it with care, while we in India are slovenly and negligent. The following passage from E. J. S. Lay's Citizenship (MacMillan) describes the elaborate precautions taken at a convalescent home in England:

"The cows on coming in to be milked pass from the field to a firm platform of concrete, where they cannot be splashed with dirt. They enter the 'milking byre' by a door other than that through which the pails of milk will later be carried, and this door is so placed that the cows never cross any place, over which milk has to be transported. The byre is scrupulously clean with hard floors and walls and large windows above and at the sides. Each cow is carefully washed before milking begins, and a flow of clean water runs in the gutters of the byre. The milkman wears special clean clothes and takes almost as much care to be clean-handed for his task, as a hospital nurse. He milks into a pail with a curved top, into which no dirt or dust can fall.

"This pail of milk is now carried across a yard which cows never enter. It is poured into a large receptacle which stands high up on the wall of the byre and is reached by a short ladder. Thence it flows through a number of layers of close filtering material and passes by a pipe (which is sterilized after each period of use) to the interior of the dairy where it drips over a refrigerator and is received by way of another strainer into a large 'can.' It is now ready to be taken across to the home."

V. G. D.

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

THE CENTRAL POINT MISSED

The following questions have been given by a British Military Officer who read with great interest the article in the 'Harijan' of July 28, 1946, on 'Independence'. The Officer is a military engineer, widely travelled in America and Europe, and has seen with his own eyes the horrors of the war in Germany.

Q. 1. In this ideal State (there is no doubt that it is ideal) how can one be sure that outside aggression can be avoided? If the State has no modern army with modern weapons which are the product of the machine age, an invading army with modern weapons could overrun the country and subject the inhabitants to slavery.

A. The questioner, who claims to have read and re-read my article carefully and says he has liked it and is a military man, has evidently missed the central point of my article, viz. that however small a nation or even a group may be, it is able, even as the individual, provided that it has one mind as also the will and the grit to defend its honour and self-respect against a whole world in arms. Therein consists the matchless strength and beauty of the unarmed. That is non-violent defence which neither knows nor accepts defeat at any stage. Therefore, a nation or a group which has made non-violence its final policy, cannot be subjected to slavery even by the atom bomb.

WHY IN WANT OF FOOD?

Q. 2. India at the present time cannot grow enough food for its population. To buy food from abroad, India must sell other goods to pay for it, and in order to sell such goods, India must produce at competitive prices which, in my opinion, cannot be done without modern machines. How can this be done, unless the machine replaces manual labour?

A. The statement in the first sentence of the question is wholly wrong. I hold, in spite of opinions expressed to the contrary, that India is able at the present moment to grow enough food. I have previously stated the condition for growing enough food, viz. that the Government at the head should be National and a Government that knows its business and is capable of dealing sternly with all profiteering, black-marketing and, worst of all, laziness of mind and body.

The second part of the question really falls to the ground if my answer to the first is correct. But for the sake of dismissing the plea on behalf of modern machines as against human labour of which there is plenty in a land like India, I would say that if all the able-bodied millions work with one mind and with zeal, they could compete on their own terms with any nation, however well-equipped it may be with modern machines. The questioner should not forget that modern machines have up till now gone side by side with the exploitation of the machineless nations, dubbed weak. I use the participle 'dubbed' because they will refuse to be weak, immediately they realize the fact that they are even at the present moment stronger than the nation equipped with the most modern weapons and machinery.

SWARAJ THROUGH SPINNING

A Congressman writes:

Q. "You will perhaps agree that in spite of considerable publicity spinning and weaving have not yet found favour with the public to the extent to which they should have done. I think if every Congress Committee—at least those of the big cities—starts a sort of coaching class for the public for this purpose, it can do immense good. Many people—particularly the poor—do not take to spinning because they do not know spinning and weaving, what type of wheels are more convenient to use and give greater output, how these are properly operated upon, how best they should dispose of or utilize the yarn thus produced etc. If once or twice a week, some such classes are undertaken after proper publicity, and people are instructed in this technique by practical demonstrations, things should improve much. At least the experiment is worth a trial by the Congress. Even if regular classes are not held but a group or groups of experts of this technique undertake a tour and give demonstrations and instructions to the public for some days in each city, it can serve the purpose to a considerable extent."

Questions like the above often come to me from Congressmen. Since this is exhaustive, I reproduce it as it is. The signature is undecipherable. Therefore, I am unable to say to which province the questioner belongs. Surely it would have been appropriate if the writer had been good enough to frame his letter in Hindustani. The vast mass of Congressmen who are not on the Congress register but who are more Congressmen than the registered ones, do not know English and those who do, care less for spinning than for being on the Congress register, for reasons they know and which I need not specify. There is, however, a great deal in what the writer says. If all Congress offices became institutions for teaching the art of spinning from the anterior and posterior processes right up to the manufacture of khadi, I am quite clear that the face of the villages would be changed and Swaraj would be ushered in through the effort of the masses. I have shown in these columns, how it will be ushered in. These lines are written to emphasize the point made by the correspondent.

Sevagram, 8-8-'46

How to Think of God

A correspondent writes:

"You say that the rule should be that during prayers, everyone should sit with closed eyes and think of nothing but God. The question arises as to how and in what form we have to think of God?"

True meditation consists in closing the eyes and ears of the mind to all else, except the object of one's devotion. Hence the closing of eyes during prayers is an aid to such concentration. Man's conception of God is naturally limited. Each one has, therefore, to think of Him as best appeals to him, provided that the conception is pure and uplifting.

Sevagram, 10-8-'46

M. K. G.

A KHADI LOVER'S COMPLAINT

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A Gujarati Khadi lover living in South India writes as follows:

"In the Khadi Bhandar here, it is hard to get cotton, spindles, charkhas and their accessories. I have up till now been carrying on with my own cotton. The slivers from cotton bought here were not at all good. I discovered it was of poor quality after I had bought it. I found hand-carding (hulai) of it difficult and could not get anyone here to teach me either.

"I have just given my full quota of self-spun and self-carded yarn for 1946 to be woven into cloth. At first one could procure coupons for self-spun yarn and buy a certain amount of Khadi with it. The yarn given in is to be woven into saris and dhotis. How are we to buy cloth for our other requirements of underwear, sheets, towels etc.? I went to the Bhandar recently and they demanded the same number of hanks as the amount of rupees the cloth was worth. In addition I was told I had to be a member of the Bhandar. I spend 2 to 2½ hours daily in carding and spinning. If I can spare any more time, I devote it also to this work. But, in spite of all my labour, I shall never be able to produce enough yarn for my requirements. What am I to do? The fact that I am un-acquainted with the language is another difficulty. It would be easier if all the rules regarding Khadi were written up in Hindustani. Moreover, it seems impossible to get anything done without outside influence. Is one to call it one's misfortune or part of our nature? One needs some backing even to buy a spindle, to say nothing about a charkha. If the Charkha Sangh people themselves do not realize what difficulties one has to face in the matter of buying even small requirements, to whom can one turn for help?

"I spoke about this to a well-known Gujarati friend here. He got enraged. 'Gandhiji has constituted himself Viceroy. Why then should he listen to anyone? He does whatever comes into his head. Let him do so. We shall get Khadi from wherever we can and, what is more, we shall encourage un-certified Khadi. As for Pyarelalji, he only puts up to Gandhiji what he chooses and throws the rest into the waste paper basket.'"

The above angry criticism about my post does not need any comment, beyond saying that every worth-while letter is put up before me and that, if I were to be acquainted with or read every letter that comes, the whole of my time would be spent on the post and I would be rendered useless for my real work. But what has been said about Khadi demands consideration. That Sales Bhandars may disappear under the new scheme, only means that they should be converted into schools for teaching all the processes of Khadi. Therefore, cotton, charkhas, spindles and all other accessories of spinning, carding and ginning should certainly be available there. Above all the Khadi worker should be polite and obliging at all times. If he is not, it will mean the end of Khadi and it will be a tragedy if Khadi workers themselves were to be the cause of its death.

The criticism in the letter under reference can only be applicable to one or two Bhandars. This note is, therefore, only meant for those to whom it does apply. All such should early set their house in order.

Khadi wearers who spin regularly and give in their self-spun yarn for being woven into cloth should be, as they are, entitled to purchase against cash the amount of Khadi which, according to the A. I. S. A. rules, their above-mentioned yarn permits them to buy.

Sevagram, 6-8-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

RAMANAMA AGAIN

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A friend sends me a letter received by him for an answer. The letter is long. I have only copied here the relevant part:

"India is in his blood, but why should he cause resentment among his countrymen who are not of his religious faith, by holding daily prayer meetings and chanting Ramanama (meaning the name of Rama, the Hindu God)? He should realize that India is full of manifold faiths and most of the conservatives are apt to mistake him (and this is one of the pleas of the Muslim League), if he openly goes on talking in the name of the Hindu Gods. One of his pet terms is the establishment of Rama-Rajya (the rule of Rama). What would a devout Muslim feel about this?"

I must repeat for the thousandth time that Ramanama is one of the many names for God. The same prayer meetings have recitations from the Quran and the Zend Avesta. Devout Muslims, for the very reason that they are devout, have never objected to the chant of Ramanama. Ramanama is not an idle chant. It is conceived as a mode of addressing the all pervasive God known to me, as to millions of Hindus, by the familiar name of Ramanama. 'Nama' at the end of Rama is the most significant part. It means the 'nama' without the Rama of history. Be that as it may, why should an open profession by me of my faith offend anybody, much less the Muslim League? No one is obliged to join these meetings and having joined is not obliged to take part in the chant. All that the visitors are expected to do is not to mar the harmony of the meeting and to tolerate the proceedings even when they are not in sympathy with any part.

As to the use of the phrase 'Rama-Rajya,' why should it offend after my having defined its meaning many times? It is a convenient and expressive phrase, the meaning of which no alternative can so fully express to millions. When I visit the Frontier Province or address predominantly Muslim audiences I would express my meaning to them by calling it Khudai Raj, while to a Christian audience I would describe it as the Kingdom of God on earth. Any other mode would, for me, be self-suppression and hypocrisy.

Sevagram, 8-8-'46

WHAT A CHILD CAN TEACH US

(By M. K. Gandhi)

There is a little girl of five years of age in Madras named Aruna who, when I was there in January last, saw me spin and thereafter was seized with the desire to practise it. She is born in a home which has the khadi atmosphere. Her parents are not such as to force their child to do things. They are content to let her imbibe what she can, from the atmosphere surrounding her. When the child herself expressed a desire to practise spinning, they gladly gave her every encouragement. The result was that Aruna was able to produce one sliver after one day's labour and when she saw me spinning that sliver of her creation, her joy knew no bounds. I explained to her the defects in her first sliver and in order to remove these, her parents gave her every help. Since then the child has been making good slivers and spinning regularly. Thus this little one learnt two lessons at the same time, viz. to clean and card the cotton and make slivers and also to give to others the produce of her labour. Children often take money from their parents to give presents to others. Then the merit really accrues to the parents. It is a very different thing when the child gives out of the labour of its own hands in whatever form that be. And is that not the truest form of gift?

Sevagram, 9-8-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

IS GOD A PERSON OR FORCE?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A friend from Baroda writes in English:

"You ask us to pray to God to give light to the Whites in South Africa and strength and courage to the Indians there to remain steadfast to the end. A prayer of this nature can only be addressed to a person. If God is an all-pervading and all-powerful force, what is the point of praying to Him? He goes on with his work whatever happens."

I have written on this topic before. But as it is a question that crops up again and again in different languages, further elucidation is likely to help someone or the other. In my opinion, Rama, Rahaman, Ahurmazda, God or Krishna are all attempts on the part of man to name that invincible force which is the greatest of all forces. It is inherent in man, imperfect though he be, ceaselessly to strive after perfection. In the attempt he falls into reverie. And, just as a child tries to stand, falls down again and again and ultimately learns how to walk, even so man, with all his intelligence, is a mere infant as compared to the infinite and ageless God. This may appear to be an exaggeration but is not. Man can only describe God in his own poor language. The power we call God defies description. Nor does that power stand in need of any human effort to describe Him. It is man who requires the means whereby he can describe that Power which is vaster than the ocean. If this premise is accepted, there is no need to ask why we pray. Man can only conceive God within the limitations of his own mind. If God is vast and boundless as the ocean, how can a tiny drop like man imagine what He is? He can only experience what the ocean is like, if he falls into and is merged in it. This realization is beyond description. In Madame Blavatsky's language man, in praying, worships his own glorified self. He can truly pray, who has the conviction that God is within him. He who has not, need not pray. God will not be offended, but I can say from experience that he who does not pray is certainly a loser. What matters then whether one man worships God as Person and another as Force? Both do right according to their lights. None knows and perhaps never will know what is the absolutely proper way to pray. The ideal must always remain the ideal. One need only remember that God is the Force among all the forces. All other forces are material. But God is the vital force or spirit which is all-pervading, all-embracing and therefore beyond human ken.

Sevagram, 9-8-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

WHAT A FAST CAN SAVE

Indonesia has promised us 50,000 tons of rice
 = 2,240 ×  $\frac{1}{4}$  lakh lbs.
 = 1,120 lakh lbs.
 = 112 million lbs.

This is enough to feed 112 million adults for one day at the rate of 1 lb. per head.

Therefore, if 112 million adults fast one day, the result is the same as though we got 50,000 tons of rice from Indonesia.

Suggestion:

All adults, except the very aged, invalids and manual labourers should miss the evening meal on Saturdays.

There are 240 million adults in India, of whom 80 million are manual workers.

Therefore, if the average saving by an adult missing a Saturday evening meal is 8 oz., the total possible saving by all adults (except manual workers) missing 26 meals on 26 Saturdays during the remainder of the year would be 2080 million lbs. of cereals = .92 million tons of cereals.

This would remove the anticipated food deficiency. All parties, all Governments and all individuals, papers, etc. should make a drive for the observance of the Saturday evening fast. The sharing by the Indian population of the starvation which is descending on parts of the country will mean in fact sharing of food.

Thus that starvation can be staved off. Besides, those who observe the fast, will in most cases gain in health.

Even if the drive achieves only a 10% success, the grain saved would be 92,000 tons—substantially more than the quantity promised from Indonesia. These 92,000 tons would have been obtained at no cost to the nation, and would represent (on the other hand) saving not only in food but in expenditure by individual families.

(From the Daily Mail Bag)

HARIJAN

August 18

1946

MAHADEV DESAI

(By Jawaharlal Nehru)

It is difficult to write about one who was a dear friend and comrade and with whom are associated so many intimate memories. As I think of him, those memories revive and the past rises up bringing a procession of pictures of days gone by.

There are so many things we take for granted, even friends. Mahadev had become some kind of an institution for many of us. Quiet, able, efficient, hard-working, forgetful of self, utterly devoted, the more one knew him, the more he grew in one's estimation and liking. For nearly a quarter of a century, we knew each other and often we worked together at common tasks. What he did, he did well and thoroughly. He had the scholar's outlook and at the same time the human touch which endears. So our affection and admiration for him grew, and when suddenly he was no more, there was a gulf and a vacuum and a feeling of desolation seized us. For one who formed so much a part of our lives and our work was no more, a dear comrade had gone and there was no one to take his place.

Yet his memory endures and cheers and strengthens us for the days of trial are not over and the future is full of difficulty. How one wishes that Mahadev was with us now with his wise and friendly counsel.

Wardha, 10-8-'46

HIS LAST ARTICLE

[This is the last article written by Mahadevbhai in the Aga Khan Palace referred to in "Mahadev Desai—The Last Phase." P.]

THE HOUSE OF TRUTHFUL LEARNING

I wonder if the above is the right name for the institution, opened by Gandhiji on the eve of his departure for Bombay, for the training of Basic Education teachers. Literally translated the name would be The House of New Education. But I am tempted to give it the name at the top because of the spirit in which it has been conceived. For, Shrimati Ashadevi in requesting Gandhiji to declare it open not only recited verses from the Upanishads glorifying Truth, but said that the institution would have for its foundation nothing but that Truth. The verse specially containing the pledge so to say means: "I will utter (do?) the right, I will utter the truth. May it protect me."

That was enough to provide Gandhiji with a text for his speech that day, which became of a solemn religious character. This put me in mind of a speech Gandhiji gave in Switzerland in December 1931 before an audience of devout pacifists. It was in reply to the question, 'why do you regard God as Truth?' He said:

"In my early youth I was taught to repeat what in Hindu scriptures are known as the one thousand names of God. But these one thousand names of God were by no means exhaustive. We believe—and I think it is the truth—that God has as many names as there are creatures and, therefore, we also say that God is nameless, and since God has many forms, we also consider Him formless, and since He speaks through many tongues, we consider Him to be speechless and so on. And so, when I came to study Islam, I found that Islam too had many names of God.

"I would say with those who say 'God is Love'. But deep down in me I used to say that though God may be Love, God is Truth, above all. If it is possible for the human tongue to give the fullest description of God, I have come to the conclusion that for myself God is Truth. But two years ago I went a step further and said that Truth is God. You will see the fine distinction between the two statements, viz. that, 'God is Truth' and 'Truth is God'. I came to that conclusion after a continuous and relentless search after Truth which began nearly fifty years ago. I then found that the nearest approach to Truth was through love. But I also found that love has many meanings in the English language (at least?) and that human love in the sense of passion could become a degrading thing (also?). I found too that love in the sense of ahimsa had only a limited number of votaries in the world. But I never found a double meaning in connection with Truth and (not?) even atheists had not demurred to the necessity or power of Truth. But in their passion for discovering Truth, the atheists have not hesitated to deny the very existence of God—from their own point of view rightly. And it was because of this reasoning that I saw that rather than say that God is Truth, I should say that Truth is God... Add to this the great difficulty, that millions have taken the name of God X and in His name committed nameless atrocities. Not that scientists very often do not commit atrocities in the name of Truth... Then there is another thing in Hindu philosophy, viz. God alone is and nothing else exists, and the same truth you find emphasized and exemplified in the kalema of Islam. There you find it clearly stated that God alone is and nothing else exists. In fact the Sanskrit word for Truth is a word which literally means that which exists—Sat. For these and several other reasons that I can give you, I have come to the conclusion that the definition—Truth is God—gives me the greatest satisfaction. And when you want to find Truth as God, the only inevitable means is Love, i. e. non-violence, and since I believe that ultimately means and end are convertible terms, I should not hesitate to say that God is Love.

"Truth is what the voice within tells you. Those who would make individual search after truth as God, must go through several vows... If you would swim on the bosom of the ocean of Truth, you must reduce yourself to a zero." M. D.

HIS GREATEST CHARACTER

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The greatest characteristic I can think of about Mahadev Desai was his ability to reduce himself to zero, whenever occasion demanded it.

Sevagram, 12-8-'46

THE DISCIPLE AND HIS MASTER

A UNIQUE DISCIPLE

At the time of Mahadevbhai's cruel and untimely death in detention, Gandhiji was allowed to receive two condolence messages out of the hundreds that poured in from all over the country. One of these was from Shri Mathuradas Tricumji, an ex-Mayor of Bombay and a nephew of Gandhiji. There was one sentence in his letter which beautifully summed up the relationship between Bapu and Mahadevbhai. He said: "Lord Buddha had only one disciple and that was Ananda; so is the case of Mahadev with regard to you." Lord Buddha had thousands upon thousands of disciples. But Ananda towered head over shoulders above the rest. Similarly Mahadevbhai's gifts had given him a unique position among all those who have endeavoured to serve Bapu from close quarters. It is not an easy job. Mahadevbhai often used to tell me: "Living with Bapu is like living on the edge of a volcano. When the volcano will burst and blow you off, you never can tell." The reason is that Bapu towers so far above the level of all the rest, that those who surround him, often fall short of his expectations in spite of their best efforts to prove worthy disciples of the great master. Moreover, in spite of his great spiritual height, Bapu is very human. He does not expect to find perfection in those who come to him. But he does expect them to have a burning desire to attain perfection. The rate of progress that he expects from his associates varies in different cases and although he can overlook and forgive faults as big as a mountain, there are times when mere trifles assume mountainous proportions, especially in the case of those who are nearest to him.

HIS LIFE-LONG PRAYER

Mahadevbhai told me once: "My one prayer in life has been that I may die in Bapu's service, but I am aware of the fact that at any time, I might prove unworthy of it and have to quit at a moment's notice." I did not believe him: it seemed so inconceivable to picture Bapu without him. Yet during the few years of my association with Mahadevbhai and Bapu, I saw occasions when even Mahadevbhai was at the point of quitting, as for instance at the time of the Delang incident.

From Delang, Durgaben (Mrs. Desai) and Shrimati Kasturba had gone to Jagannath Puri and there as a result of their orthodox upbringing, they felt that they ought to visit the temples. So they went inside the temples, forgetting Bapu's teaching that caste Hindus should not visit temples if they were not open to Harijans. Mahadevbhai's young son of about twelve refused to go in. He stood outside and talked to the Pujaris, trying to show them the wrong of keeping the Harijans out. On their return from Puri, the story was told by somebody. None of us thought much of it, beyond patting young Narayan (Mahadevbhai's son) on the back for his courage and wisdom beyond his years. But Bapu took a very serious view of the whole thing. He gave a talk to Ba who humbly confessed her error and apologized for it. Bapu did not blame her. "I neglected her education and I must be held responsible for her mistakes, not she." Then he took Mahadevbhai to task for neglecting Durgaben's education. "You have taken interest in Narayan, so that he knows much more than an average boy at his age. Should you not have taken the same interest in Durga's education? What is the use of your writing articles in the Harijan on the subject of untouchability and opening of temples to Harijans, when you do not carry the message to your own home? Ba is too old to learn, but not Durga." Mahadevbhai tried to put up some sort of defence. It made matters worse. What had seemed a trifle to us all assumed such magnitude that Mahadevbhai actually packed up his things and got ready to quit. But he had become part and parcel of Bapu himself. His utility was so great, his dedication so complete that the catastrophe (Mahadevbhai's separation from Bapu whether by death or in life could not be termed anything else except a catastrophe) was averted. God granted his prayer and Mahadevbhai served Bapu till the very end. He died in harness on the 15th of August, 1942, serving his Master and serving his country with his last breath.

Soon after Mahadevbhai's death I asked Bapu one day, "Out of all the deaths that you have been faced with so far, has not Mahadevbhai's death affected you the most?" "Jamnalal, Maganlal and Mahadev, each one of them was unique in his own line," he replied. "I consider each one of them to be irreplaceable. But I will say this, that out of the three, Mahadev had chosen to lose himself completely in me. I might say that he had ceased to have an individuality apart from mine."

A CHARMING PERSONALITY

Although Mahadevbhai was old enough to be my father, his mind was so young and fresh that one could never look upon him as anything except as a friend or a brother. I saw him as a small child in 1919 for the first time. My brother Pyarelal had joined Gandhiji a short time before that. I have a clear recollection of Mahadevbhai at that meeting. He had struck me as being more loving and affectionate than anybody else in Gandhiji's camp. It was this characteristic of Mahadevbhai, this ability to win over people young and old, as soon as he came in contact with them, that made him so precious in Bapu's camp. It enabled him to lighten much of Bapu's burden by settling many domestic problems around Bapu. It also enabled him to introduce some valuable workers and friends to Bapu. I remember Bapu once telling me that it was Mahadevbhai who had brought Rajaji to him.

EARLY REMINISCENCES

Practically every one of Mahadevbhai's friends felt that he cared for him or her the most. To my mother, he was dearer than a son and to me he had become more than a blood brother. Soon after I joined Gandhiji in 1938, Mahadevbhai took to going out for early morning walks along with my brother and myself. My brother later dropped out. But I kept it on. During these walks Mahadevbhai told me many reminiscences of his early days. Little did I know that he would be going away so soon and so suddenly and I kept no record of those talks. I feel sorry for it now. He told me about his childhood and the loss of his mother at a tender age. He told me of his student days which he had spent in poverty and then as to how he had become a practising lawyer and later took to co-operative banking. Life was just becoming easy for him and his father was beginning to look forward to his own son soon becoming rich and influential, when Mahadevbhai came in contact with Gandhiji. He told me : "Bapu was just then drawing up the rules of conduct for the Ashramites. I felt deeply interested. I and Narhari used to go to the Ashram almost every evening. I had many interesting discussions on the subject with Gandhiji. I felt more and more drawn to him and his mode of life. But for some time, Bapu tried to keep me off out of regard for my wife and my father. But I persisted and at last Bapu yielded. I still remember the day when I received a brief post card from him. There was one sentence in it which made my heart leap with joy. He had said : 'I would love to have you by my side.'" Immediately he resigned from his job, broke up his household at Ahmedabad and became an inmate of the Satyagraha Ashram at Sabarmati. Whatever money he had saved was soon given over to the Ashram funds, and to the great distress of his father, Mahadevbhai took the vow of poverty.

TWENTYFIVE YEARS OF SELFLESS SERVICE

Right from the day of his joining Bapu to the day of his death, Mahadevbhai was constantly serving Bapu. Before he came, Bapu generally had no companion when he travelled about. He did all his work himself and needed 'no looking after' as he put it. "But Mahadev soon took charge of me. He looked after my luggage, he looked after my food, he washed my clothes and he did my secretarial work."

After Mahadevbhai's death at the Aga Khan Palace, I was rather hard worked for about a month till the Government sent my brother Pyarelal from Arthur Road Prison, Bombay, to stay with us. Before he came I attended to Bapu's and Ba's massage etc., cooked their food, washed the clothes, attended to my duties as the medical officer of the camp and did whatever secretarial work there was to be done. Somebody reported to Bapu that I was being overworked. I tried to reassure him. "Please do not worry about me, Bapu. It is good for me to keep busy." "I am really not worried," said he. "If you are confident that you can manage it all, I will not think anymore about it. After all Mahadev has done more than you in his time. He did not have to attend to massage etc. and the medical duties, but he washed my clothes when I put on a huge turban, of coarse Khadi, a thick Khadi dhoti, and a peran and an angarkha. The clothes washing that you do is child's play, compared to what Mahadev used to do. On top of that he had to cook for me, see people on my behalf, attend to the correspondence and write articles for Young India."

At another time Bapu told me : "One great quality of Mahadev was that he was always willing to do whatever work was entrusted to him and do it enthusiastically. Thus he became a good writer, a good cook and a good coolie. That is generally the fate of all those who come to work with me."

On that fateful morning of August the 15th, 1942, Mahadevbhai got up earlier than usual. He extracted moosambi juice for Bapu's breakfast and prepared tea and toasts for the rest of the family before we had got ready. The toasts were so nicely made that everybody complimented him on his skill. In his usual good humour he joked, "So now I will be able to get a Khansama's job anywhere." Mrs. Naidu retorted, "What is it that you are not in Bapu's household already, Khansama, bearer, secretary and what not?"

At another time Bapu said to me, "I am a good teacher. The proof is that my pupils have often outdone me in the things that I taught them." (This he was telling me in order to stimulate my interest in the study of Sanskrit which I had started learning from him in jail). I was reluctant to believe the statment. So Bapu started giving examples. "In South Africa I learned shoe-making first and taught it to others. But afterwards both Kallenbach and Maganlal made better shoes than myself. Similarly, I introduced spinning in the Ashram by learning it first myself and then teaching it to others. But now I am a back number among the spinners. Mahadev learnt it from me and he span so much better than I."

"But, Bapu, these are your side activities," I persisted. "Your chief work has been giving out original ideas and writing for Young India and Harijan." "As for giving ideas," replied Bapu, "I have some originality. But writing is a by-product. I write to propagate my ideas. Journalism is not my profession and even there, though Mahadev learned journalism from me, he came to have a more facile pen than myself."

DISCIPLE OR SON ?

Bapu is different from the other great sages of the past, in so far that he has renounced the world and yet he has not renounced it. He has not ceased to love his own children, but he has extended his paternal love to all those who come in contact with him. By becoming a universal Bapu (father), he has not ceased to be Bapu to his own children, but his children cannot and do not expect from him anything more than anyone of his associates and co-workers. Thus Mahadevbhai also found in Bapu a father in every sense of the term. He told me once that shortly after his joining Bapu in 1916, they were travelling together on a very hot and sultry night. Bapu lay down to sleep and Mahadevbhai started fanning him. He was tired and soon he himself fell asleep. When he woke up, he found Bapu fanning him. The weather had been so sultry that when Mahadevbhai fell asleep and the fanning stopped, Bapu woke up. So he sat up with a fan and fanned Mahadevbhai as a mother would do for her child.

Mrs. Naidu told me once that when Mahadevbhai joined Bapu, he was so handsome and so fresh that Bapu used to say "Mahadev is a rose". At that time Mrs. Naidu, nicknamed him Ghul-e-Gujarat (The rose of Gujarat).

BAPU'S BOSWELL

In spite of his deep learning, there was a child-like simplicity about Mahadevbhai. He was versatile and he was original. His one passion in life was to lighten Bapu's burden and interpret his ideas. If Bapu took up the subject of spinning, Mahadevbhai read up all the literature available on the subject and presented the substance of his study to Bapu in the form of articles for Young India or Harijan. If Bapu took up the subject of village industries or basic education or anything else, Mahadevbhai tried to study it and get to the very bottom of it, so that he could expand the ideas put forth by Bapu and enable the public to understand him better. He recorded his utterances and kept writing a sort of biography of Bapu in the form of his weekly letters in Young India and Harijan.

Soon after his death in detention, one day Bapu expressed his grief at the separation by saying: "He aspired to be my Boswell and yet he always wished to die before me. How could he do better? So he has gone and left me to write his biography instead." What an irony of fate! "It is cruel of children to wish for death before their parents. It is selfish," he remarked on another occasion. But his philosophy came to his aid. "I may not be able to convince others, but I do feel that death is never untimely in the real sense of the term," he said. "No one dies before he or she has finished his work in this world. Mahadev had put forth the work of a century in fifty years. So he has gone to his well-earned rest."

SHADOW OF THE FAST

The shadow of Bapu's fast in detention had begun to loom large some time before the August arrests. There were discussions on the ethics of fasting in Satyagraha. They deeply distressed Mahadevbhai. He was strongly opposed to the idea of Bapu going on a fast under any circumstance. He tried to argue it with Bapu. But when Bapu told him that if he has to fast, it will be in answer to a higher call, Mahadevbhai was left without an answer. But the idea continued to oppress him. During the four days that I was with him at the Aga Khan Palace, I often heard him give expression to his anxiety on that score. He simply could not bear the idea of Bapu going on a fast. Was it the emotional strain or the consequent changes in the higher centres which resulted in a standstill of the pump on that fateful morning of the 15th of August 1942?

THE LAST ACT

Whenever Mahadevbhai got ill, he used to send for me. I sometimes joked. "You are a great man, you should have big doctors attending on you. I feel so nervous to treat you." One day he became serious. "Sushila, you are my sister. I have confidence in you and would much rather die in your hands than in the hands of anybody else." Prophetic words! Little did either of us realize at that time that such a day was fast approaching.

It was a strange coincidence which resulted in my reaching Bombay just in time to be arrested with Shri Kasturba on the 9th of August, 1942. Bapu called it a work of Providence, even a miracle. We were kept in the Arthur Road Prison at Bombay for two days and taken to the Aga Khan Palace on the 11th. Bapu was drafting his letter to the Viceroy. It was drafted more than once. Mahadevbhai had to copy it each time. Seeing me there he remarked, "You will help me with this copying, won't you?" So I made one copy. After some further alterations, the final copy was made in Mahadevbhai's beautiful handwriting, signed by Bapu and handed over to the Superintendent of the Camp on the 14th of August for posting. That night Mahadevbhai gave massage to Bapu's head. I had a cold and had retired early.

15TH AUGUST, 1942—THE PREPARATION

As I have said already, Mahadevbhai got up earlier than usual. He had intended joining the morning prayers on that day, but was just too late for it. So he spent the time in shaving himself, clipping his moustache and his nails. Mrs. Naidu passed by as he sat in front of a full size mirror (of which there were any number in the Aga Khan Palace) performing these operations. She joked: "What is wrong with Mahadev today? He has suddenly become very particular about his appearance." No one could guess that it was for the last time.

Gandhiji used to go out for a stroll in the garden at about 7-30 every morning. On that day Mahadevbhai also joined us. "For the first time after coming here, I slept well last night and am feeling very energetic," he said. He talked of bringing out a collection of instances of non-violence in literature. Then he started talking of cases of sudden death. Years ago he had told me how his father had died suddenly. He had just become reconciled to his son having taken to a life of renunciation and was thinking of coming to stay with him for a few days. Mahadevbhai had sent him a copy of a book that he had written. He sat in an arm-chair reading the book, happy in the thought that it had been written by his son. Suddenly he put his head back and breathed his last. As I heard the story, a cold shiver ran through my spine. "I hope it won't happen with Mahadevbhai," I said to myself. I had clean forgotten the story but Mahadevbhai's talk that morning reminded me of it.

THE DRAMA ENDS

After the walk I started Bapu's massage. The I. G. P. had come and Mahadevbhai, Ba and Miraben had gone to Mrs. Naidu's room to meet him. From the distance we heard their laughter. Suddenly there was a lull and then somebody called me. I thought they wanted me to come and meet the I. G. P. As I was getting ready to go, Ba came in rushing, "Sushila, come quick, Mahadev is having a fit." I ran. There I found him lying in a bed looking white as marble having generalized convulsions. I learnt that as he stood talking, he had suddenly complained of feeling giddy. He was told to lie down and they had called me. I was by his side within a minute. I felt his pulse, it was not there.

I listened to his heart. There were no heart sounds. "Call Bapu," I said, and asked for some heart stimulant. The I. G. P. got for me whatever he could. I pushed in two injections, but to no effect. In the meantime Bapu had arrived. He stood by the bed-side calling out, "Mahadev, Mahadev." But for the first time Mahadev failed to answer him. "If he only opens his eyes and looks at me once, he won't go," said Bapu in anguish. But he had decided to go. He never opened his eyes. In spite of my medical knowledge, I vainly hoped that Bapu's presence might achieve what medicine had failed to do. But the age of miracles, if it ever existed, is over. The convulsions and the groans subsided. It was all over. The Civil Surgeon arrived, shook his head and went away. Ba looked at my face. "How is he? Sushila", she asked in a choked voice. What was I to say? "No more?" she asked and burst into sobs. Bapu came and consoled her. He was stricken with grief, but he had to be brave. "Let us have the prayers and then bathe the body," he said. So we sat down and recited the 18th chapter of the Gita, sang "Vaishnava Jana To" and then had 'Ramadhun'. The room where Mahadevbhai had sat in the morning shaving himself was vacated of furniture etc. The body was carried to Bapu's bath room and he bathed it with my help. It was painful to see him doing it with shaking hands. Then he looked round for a moment and said: "Mahadev has died as a prisoner, he must be cremated as one." So we wrapped the body in jail sheets and brought it out. The Superintendent had got a lot of flowers. Miraben arranged them around the body most artistically. She had prepared some sandalwood paste. Bapu put it on Mahadevbhai's forehead and sat down by his side. He and I recited the Gita by turns while preparations were being made for the cremation. I noticed that Mahadevbhai's eye on the side on which Bapu was sitting was half open. It was symbolical of Mahadevbhai's deep love and devotion to Bapu. Even in death he seemed to be gazing at his Master.

THE LAST RITES

The authorities had brought a lorry with police and Brahmins. They wanted to take away the body and cremate it by themselves. But Bapu would not have it. "No father can hand over the body of his son to strangers," he told them. "Mahadev was more than a son to me. I would like to perform his last rites myself. But if the Government cannot take me outside, I am prepared to hand it over to friends, but I won't hand it over to the jail officials." Although the Government hands over the bodies of murderers to their relatives and friends after hanging and lets them have a public funeral, it was not prepared to allow such a thing for a rebel however non-violent. They would not hand over the body to friends and relatives. There was a tenseness in the atmosphere. We all held our breaths. What will Bapu's reply be? Bapu sat thinking for a moment. Then he said: "I do not want to make the death of my son into a political issue. If the Government will not allow me to go out and cremate the body nor hand it over to friends, I will have the cremation here." It was a novel suggestion. Nobody had ever heard of a cremation taking place in the house. The I. G. P. sat upstairs telephoning the Government of Bombay. The Government of Bombay in their turn had to consult the Government of India. At last he came down. The Government had agreed to the cremation taking place in the compound. We heaved a sigh of relief. Mrs. Naidu went downstairs to select the spot.

The I. G. P. had asked if Bapu would like to send a message to Mahadevbhai's people. "Yes, I would like to send a telegram provided it is sent without mutilation," he replied. Then he dictated the telegram to me. He began, "Sorry." Then he stopped. "Why should I be sorry to announce such a noble death? No, scratch out 'Sorry' and write, 'Mahadev died suddenly . . .'" The message was delivered to the I. G. P. with a request to despatch it as an express telegram. As we learnt later on, it was delivered to the addressee by post after several weeks' delay.

At last things were ready for the cremation. Bapu followed the body with a staff in one hand and the pot of fire in the other. The Brahmin chanted some shlokas and performed some ceremonies. The body was placed on the pier and Bapu lighted the fire. Soon there was a big blaze. Ba sat at a short distance oblivious of everything else. With folded hands she kept on repeating, "Mahadev, my child, may you be happy wherever you are. Oh! why should Mahadev have gone and not I?" The Superintendent of the Camp, the Superintendent of Yeravda prison and the I. G. P. also sat there watching the earthly remains of that beloved personality being consumed by the flames.

At last we returned to the house. It was past 5 O'clock in the evening. Death had occurred between eight and nine in the morning. "Mahadev has lived up to the 'Do or Die' mantra," said Bapu. "This sacrifice cannot but hasten the day of India's deliverance."

Mrs. Naidu was convinced that it was the worry about Bapu's fast that had killed Mahadevbhai. "If ever a man laid down his life for another it was Mahadev," she said. "Like Jesus Christ he died that Bapu might live. Now Bapu must give up the idea of ever going on a fast." There was no talk of a fast at that time. Things developed in such a way that a fast became inevitable, but when it did come at last, it came in a modified form, so that though Bapu went almost to death's door, he was able to survive it.

The bones and ashes were collected on the third day. A platform about seven feet by three and a half feet and about three feet high was erected on the site. A small enclosure of stones was also made. Bapu visited the samadhi morning and evening. Fresh flowers were placed and in the morning the twelfth chapter of Gita was recited every day. "Mahadev's whole life was an uninterrupted song of bhakti (devotion)", said Bapu, "and it is only befitting that we should recite bhakti yoga at his samadhi. From being a disciple, Mahadev has become my teacher. I visit his samadhi every day in order to keep the example of his lifelong dedication to service fresh in my mind. Let us all pray to God that we may be able to follow in his footsteps."

S. N.

MAHADEV DESAI—THE LAST PHASE

In the case of two persons, the late Shrimati Kasturba Gandhi and the late Shri Mahadev Desai, the coming events of the fateful year 1942, cast very long shadows before. From the day she entered the gates of the Aga Khan Palace, Ba had a premonition that she was not going to come out of that place alive, and she never did. In the case of Shri Desai, the shadow was not that of his own approaching end but that of the danger to his Master for whom and in whom he lived and had his being. Ever since Gandhiji had hinted at the possibility of having to undertake a fast in the event of his imprisonment, the thought of it had haunted him (M. D.) like a nightmare. He struggled like a Titan to avert it. He one day asked me to go out for an evening stroll. "There is something that has been oppressing me. I want to discuss it with you," he said. "Ditto," I replied. This was not the first occasion when we had simultaneously felt the need of unburdening our minds to each other on the same subject. We discussed the pros and cons of the subject threadbare and found ourselves in complete agreement. "Now we must place our viewpoint before Bapu. I am going to do it tonight. You too must," he said to me. Accordingly two notes were prepared later and handed to Gandhiji 'according to plan'.

A WARNING SIGNAL

On our way back I chaffed him, "With all your diplomatic skill which has never failed you, can't you find a way out of the present emergency?" "We seem to be up against fate this time," he replied with a sigh. I continued the chaff. We talked about old times. But for once the smile had left his face. All of a sudden, he had an attack of giddiness and sat down by the roadside. "I don't know why, but my mind suddenly went blank," he said to me. The giddiness, however, passed away as quickly as it had come. But when we reached his house, the pulse was very rapid and feeble and the blood pressure extremely low. We did not know then that it was a mild onset of ventricular failure — what in medical books is described as Stokes Adam's syndrome, accentuated by excessive mental strain which was finally to claim him a couple of months later.

In the meantime the prospect of the 'Quit India' struggle continued to fill the air. It was going to be a "Do or Die" struggle, in which no quarter could be expected or asked for. Mahadev Desai was aware of it. He decided to get himself overhauled medically. Had not Gandhiji taught that for a Satyagrahi, to fall ill in jail was a shame? He was anxious to give a good account of himself in prison in the coming struggle for Independence, the biggest and the most momentous in the country's history. He dragged me too along with him to Bombay, although I was most unwilling. "A sacred duty cannot be evaded. Bapu will need us all this time. We must keep ourselves fit," he remonstrated. Without even telling me, he made an appointment for me with a leading pathologist. Himself he went through a series of tests, minus alas! the heart. Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel was going the next day to Wardha for the Working Committee meeting and wanted to discuss certain things with him on the way. The heart examination had to be given the go-bye.

THE LAST JOURNEY

Gandhiji's date of departure for Bombay had been fixed for the 5th of August. Mahadev Desai made thorough preparation for a hazardous Odyssey, cleared his desk and sent away to safe places important documents, diaries, note books etc., the honey distilled during a life time with a diligence exceeding that of the bee in the fable. He took his son with him to Bombay. The latter had resisted all proposals for a university education made by his father's numerous friends, including the late Shri Bhulabhai Desai. The father felt that he had nothing more precious to give to the boy than to initiate him into the historic August struggle. There had been a function in the Talimi Sangh at Sevagram, on the 4th, in which Gandhiji had spoken. Mahadev Desai made the young Narayan write out the Hindustani report of Gandhiji's address on the train and had the great satisfaction to find that the boy had not done it unworthily. He carefully whetted it and afterwards told me that he had awarded 75 per cent marks to Narayan for the performance.

The next three days were full of hectic excitement and ceaseless strain for everybody. A chance encounter with M. A. Mecklai who was an old friend of his, provided an opportunity for a last, eleventh hour, though abortive, peace effort. The correspondence relating to that effort has since been published and is now public property.

8TH OF AUGUST AT LAST

We were attending the A. I. C. C. meeting. Suddenly he turned to me. "No one knows what may happen tonight," he said. "All sorts of rumours are in the air. Bapu made a very important speech yesterday and will make another today. Much may depend on accurate reporting of the two speeches. Let us take no chance. You do yesterday's speech just now. I shall see to today's speech when we go home."

But when I saw him later after the A. I. C. C. meeting at about 11-O'clock at night, he was still occupied by visitors. He had been unable to steal even a moment's respite.

"Well, the die is cast. What shall we do now?" I asked.

"Bapu is sure to be arrested. Well, we shall issue forth tomorrow hand-in-hand and do something worthy."

Young Narayan and Kanu Gandhi had encountered him about half an hour ago. "We are no longer going to listen to you now, Kaka," the former said laughing. "Bapu said in the A. I. C. C. today that everybody was hereafter to be his own leader. We are now azad."

"But you have already anticipated Bapu and I you," replied Mahadevbhai. "My dear boy, I have no wish to take away your azadi."

Little did the boy realize that he was going to be independent of his father in a way nobody suspected — he least of all.

THEY COME

What followed is best told in his own words as recorded in the pages of his journal found among his posthumous papers:

"9-8-42. After the morning prayer I said to Bapu: 'There has been a spate of rumours and telephone messages, all to the effect that the arrests will take place tonight. Shri Arvind Pakwasa has further brought the news that barbed wire fence has been put up round the Aga Khan Palace where the detenus will be taken.' Mecklai even told me, 'You will be going to a lovely place. I myself would love to be there. I will go there to visit you.' Bapu said, 'After my last night's speech they will never arrest me.' But I feel ill at ease. I tried to get news about the Sardar on the telephone. The line was dead. Fear gripped me. I sent Swami Anand to try the telephone from the next bungalow. He quickly returned with the news that the Police Commissioner was coming to make arrests. The Police Superintendent came and made the arrests. There were warrants for Miraben and myself with offer to take Pyarelal and Ba into voluntary detention with Bapu. A special was waiting at the station. The whole of the Working Committee group and the members of the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee had already been taken into it.

"We were taken down at Chinchwad. The members of the Working Committee were made to get down first. In the course of a conversation with the Maulana and Jawahar a reference came up as to fast. They recognized it as a final step. Jawahar raised the point as to why secrecy was incompatible with ahimsa. 'You are free to interpret ahimsa in your own way,' replied Bapu.

"At Chinchwad Station we were taken into a motor car. Others were made to go into a lorry. Sorrow and grief were written large on Bapu's face. It was accentuated by the way in which Mehta was treated. They caught hold of him by his hands and feet and carried him to the lorry where a sergeant pushed him in.

"On reaching the palace I began to give Bapu a massage: 'After how many long years are you doing it?' Bapu asked. He slept for one and a half hours during malish and again at noon. He then began writing the letter to the Viceroy which he showed to me at night. But my eyes were heavy with sleep. At 9.25 he took silence.

SIX DAYS IN THE AGA KHAN PALACE

"10-8-42. Several further corrections were made in that draft. A second letter to Lumley was written about the sergeant and for newspapers. The letter was drafted once, twice, thrice. All of us suggested that the Mehta incident should not be over-emphasized.

"The Civil Surgeon came. Bapu's blood pressure stood at 142/88, weight 104 lbs.

"I suggested that Lumley's letter should be posted next day. It was decided that the other letter should be held over for further consideration.

"The goat did Satyagraha. Bapu said it would not be right to take her milk under the circumstances. Miraben had some difficulty in persuading him.

"11-8-42. While the letter was being revised, Ba and Sushila arrived. They brought a lot of news. The whole day we talked of the happenings outside. Lumley's letter was posted in the evening. At night Bapu described his experiences with Jones, Dalziel, etc. I had a talk with Col. Shah.

"12-8-42. After making several further alterations in the Viceroy's letter, I gave it to Sushila to make a fair copy of it. 'If Government gives me 7 years, I shall be able to do a lot,' said Bapu. I reminded him of what Satyamurti had said: 'Bapu, your real work will begin after India has got her Independence.'

"13-8-42. I jotted down several more suggestions in the copy of the letter to the Viceroy made by Sushila. Bapu read through it again. Two or three sentences were altered for clarification at Miraben's suggestion. Bapu asked the meaning of 'teleology' in 'teleological connection between bourgeois democracy, revolution and industrialism'. This led to a lot of discussion on teleology. Finally Bapu said: 'In other words, it amounts to arguing in a circle.' Then there was a discussion as to whether the preposition 'with' or 'of' should follow 'reek'. He asked Sushila the meaning of 'varicose veins' and the derivation of the word 'varicose'. The two letters were addressed to L. and L. (Lord Lumely and Lord Linlithgow). 'It only needs H. E. before the two Ls (HELL);' remarked Mrs. Naidu.

"Sushila wrote a prescription for Ba. The Superintendent was about to send it to the chemist. I said to Bapu: 'He is sending the prescription with Ba's name on top. It is like sending out the news that Ba is here and is ill. Bapu said: 'You should warn the Superintendent and ask him to strike off the names if he wants to.' The Superintendent was very grateful for the suggestion. He struck off the names and sent the prescription to the chemist.

"I made a toaster out of stray pieces of wire. Bapu asked: 'What is the Gujarati equivalent of 'Necessity is the mother of invention'?' I suggested: ગરજ એ શોધની બાજી છે.

"14-8-42. The letter to the Viceroy was posted.

"Today we asked for news about Sardar and Pyarelal. The reply was: 'There is no report about Sardar.' So he must be presumed to be well. He did not know whether Pyarelal was in Poona or not."

THE JOURNEY'S END

Here the Journal abruptly ends bringing to a close thirty years' sustained and unremitting labour. The life's candle was snuffed out on the morning of the 15th. The only other person whom I have known to be as punctual in keeping a day-to-day and hour-to-hour ledger of his life was the late Sheth Jamnalal Bajaj. The last entry in his diary was made just before he left for his daughter-in-law's house in Wardha never to return.

I was taken to the Aga Khan Palace exactly one month after Mahadev's death. Among his papers, along with the leaves of his journal reproduced above, there was the report of Gandhiji's last public utterance before the Talimi Sangh Teachers' Camp at Sevagram on the 5th. He could not take it up at Bombay while the A. I. C. C. session was on. So he did it at the first opportunity on reaching the Aga Khan Palace.

Remained Bapu's A.I.C.C. speeches. "Have you done Bapu's A. I. C. C. speech of the 7th?" he had asked me on the morning of the 9th August just before his arrest. "I am only half way through," I had replied. "And you?" I asked referring to the other speech he was to do. "Could not even touch it owing to telephone calls which kept me awake till 2 a. m.," he replied and thrust his notebook containing notes of his speech into my hands as he passed out of Gandhiji's room to meet the police commissioner who had come with warrants of arrest. But he was not the one to leave behind him even the unpaid debt of a "cock I owe to Asclepius." During his six days' detention he had done from memory the skeleton of Gandhiji's two A. I. C. C. speeches of the 7th and 8th August and a better skeleton of a speech I have yet to see.

His association with Gandhiji was to him a probation and discipline in life. As Gandhiji with great penetration observed, what his soul thirsted for was a devotional spirit. "It was in furtherance of that quest he came to me and not finding full satisfaction even with me (shall I say) he turned his back on me in the fulness of youth . . . to seek the realization of his quest in the bosom of his Maker."

"I say that man was made to grow, not stop; That help, he needed once, and needs no more; Having grown but an inch by, is withdrawn, For he hath new needs, and new helps to these. This imports solely, man should mount on each New height in view.

And in this striving, this converting air
Into a solid he may grasp and use,
Finds progress, man's distinctive mark alone,
Not God's and not the beasts': God is, they are,
Man partly is and wholly hopes to be."

(Death in the Desert)

Sevagram, 12-8-'46

PYARELAL

Horse Racing

I have written before regarding the ruination of men and money through horse racing but a very strongly-worded letter from a friend who says that gambling on the race course is not a lesser evil than the drink habit, constrains me to write again on this subject. The writer further says:

"Special trains are run for the races and are full of people who wear Gandhi caps, call themselves Congressmen and go there only to waste their money. Where does this money come from? We now have popular Ministries, but they too are silent and put up with the evil."

Although, in my opinion, gambling at races is not as great an evil as drinking of alcohol, one ought not really to draw comparisons. Less bad does not make gambling a good thing. I do not know all the intricacies of horse racing. All I can say is that if it is within the competence of a popular Government to put an end to the evil, it should certainly do so.

Sevagram, 9-8-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

M. K. G.

THE LIMIT OF INSANITATION

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Panchgani is a fine hill resort. The air itself is like medicine. Rajas and Maharajas do not frequent it like they do Mussooree and yet there has been no place where the poor could stay. Now at last if there is going to be a small haven for them, it would only be a tardy reparation. But if the present insanitary conditions continue, Panchgani will cease to exist as a health resort. I believe, the same is true of Mahabaleshwar too. I am of opinion that such conditions are due to our own fault, rather than to that of Government. I have heard doctors say that everyone knows how to observe personal cleanliness up to a point, but our people do not seem to know the A B C of hygiene and sanitation. The truth of this has to be admitted with sorrow. The following is a vivid account of Dr. Dinshah Mehta's observations regarding the lack of proper sanitary arrangements in Panchgani. I give it in the fervent hope that this disgraceful state of affairs will be remedied without undue delay:

"Dr. Savant accompanied me on the 19th July to the place, where the refuse of Panchgani is deposited. It is behind Sydney Point, about half a mile off the main road and one and a half miles from Panchgani Bazar. The main road passes in front of the Parsi Boys' School and because the wind happened to be blowing strongly in that direction, the smell was wafted right up to that spot. Sydney Point itself is a beautiful situation and if there were no nasty odours, the air would be health-giving. But no one goes there nowadays, even though a small motor road has been built. Only the grass blows in the wind. There are two houses just below the Point, but I was told that they remain vacant because of the stench, mosquitoes and flies.

"The garbage of Panchgani is all thrown by the side of the road and was lying there in large open heaps. It would be strange, if it were not full of germs and covered with flies.

"A little further on, I saw nightsoil in trenches. Four of these, each 10'x5'x3" were full. Some were empty. It appears that sweepers are too lazy and careless even to see that the nightsoil is actually thrown into the trenches. Much was lying outside. And I was told that if anyone remonstrates with them about this or any other matter, they go on strike. The Municipality and residents of Panchgani have, therefore, meekly to submit. Local sweepers refuse to allow outside scavengers to enter Panchgani.

"I have not yet been able to rid my nose and eyes of the smell and the nauseating sight. Anyone who goes there to inspect, must train these organs to stand the trial. On return he should take a bath and then go to sleep, in order to rest both mind and stomach or else he will have to send for a doctor!

"In order to improve the dreadful conditions, I submit the following suggestions:

1) All garbage and nightsoil should be properly thrown into trenches and covered over with at least double the quantity of clean earth,

2) or all should be burnt in an incinerator,

3) or septic tanks should be constructed and the overflow of water from these, should be used for the cultivation of a public vegetable garden,

4) or it should be made compulsory for every house-owner to build a septic tank in this domain. Used bath water can be employed for flushing these tanks. Standard plans for the construction of such tanks can be had from military contractors,

5) or a scheme for drainage and a pumping station should be undertaken. But for this, sufficient water is an essential. The water works scheme which the Panchgani Municipality has under consideration, would have first to come into being.

"The last is the most important and best suggestion but it requires both money and time. Meanwhile the least that can be done is to act forthwith on my first and second proposals."

Poona, 1-8-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

Notes

South Africa

The heroic struggle of the Indian settlers in South Africa continues with unabated zeal. It promises to be prolonged. The longer the resisters are made to suffer, the greater will be their glory and reward. It is true of all long suffering. What the Government of the Union of South Africa has done so deliberately is not going to be changed suddenly, even for the sufferings of the brave men and women. This is said not to damp the zeal of the fighters but to steel them for greater and longer suffering. Their spokesmen when they were in India were told in plain language that they must not expect the struggle to close quickly. Time runs always in favour of the sufferer, for the simple reason that tyranny becomes more and more exposed as it is continued. In reality it is never long. Sufferers need never lose hope whether their struggle appears to have a longer lease of life or shorter, when the result is a certainty.

Goa

The Goan authorities are going on merrily with their 'humanizing' activities by gagging the people of Goa. The latest instance is that of their 'court martial' sentencing Shri Braganza Cunha to eight years and deporting him to a far off Portuguese settlement in Africa for the crime of daring to assert his elementary right of civil liberty. Well has the Working Committee passed a resolution in condemnation of the policy of the Goan authorities which stands in striking contrast to the action of the French Governor who has encouraged the people to throw in their lot with the people in British India.

Sevagram, 12-8-'46

M. K. G.

COMPENSATION FOR MURDER

(By M. K. Gandhi)

I have been asked whether the brother or other near relatives of the late Bhai Rajabali should demand compensation in money from Government for his murder. The deceased himself would not have counted such a death as loss. As a matter of fact, it is murders such as this which, if wholly unavenged, will ultimately put an end to murder. The moment any compensation or revenge is sought, the good of the willing sacrifice is wiped out. And how then could the spirit of the deceased rest in peace?

Murder can never be avenged by either murder or taking compensation. The only way to avenge murder is to offer oneself as a willing sacrifice, with no desire for retaliation. Those who believe in this premise will never dream of demanding or taking any compensation for the loss of their dear ones. The principle of taking of life for life will, on the contrary, only lead to an increase of murders. This is apparent to all today. Revenge or compensation may furnish some satisfaction to the individual, but I am quite definite that it can never restore peace to or uplift society.

The question arises as to what the individual should do in a society where revenge is the rule. The answer lies not in precept but in example. And those alone can set the example who have been wronged. Therefore, the final decision must rest with Bhai Rajabali's relatives. My duty lay in pointing them the way of ahimsa as I know it.

Sevagram, 9-8-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

THE GOSPEL OF SELFLESS ACTION OR

THE GITA ACCORDING TO GANDHI

(Translation of the original in Gujarati, with an additional Introduction and Commentary)

By Mahadev Desai

With Gandhiji's Foreword

Price Rs. Four Postage Nine Annas

Navajivan Publishing House

P. B. No. 105, Ahmedabad

CONTENTS		PAGE
HE LIVES	... SAROJINI NAIDU	261
IN MEMORIAM	... C. R.	261
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	262
HANDLING MILK IN ENGLAND	... V. G. D.	264
QUESTION BOX	... M. K. GANDHI	265
A KHADI LOVER'S COMPLAINT	... M. K. GANDHI	266
RAMANAMA AGAIN	... M. K. GANDHI	266
WHAT A CHILD CAN TEACH US	M. K. GANDHI	267
IS GOD A PERSON OR FORCE?	... M. K. GANDHI	267
WHAT A FAST CAN SAVE		267
MAHADEV DESAI	JAWAHARLAL NEHRU	268
HIS LAST ARTICLE	... M. D.	268
HIS GREATEST CHARACTER	... M. K. GANDHI	268
THE DISCIPLE AND HIS MASTER	... S. N.	269
MAHADEV DESAI—THE LAST PHASE	... PYARELAL	273
THE LIMIT OF INSANITATION	... M. K. GANDHI	275
COMPENSATION FOR MURDER	... M. K. GANDHI	276
NOTES:
HOW TO THINK OF GOD	... M. K. G.	265
HORSE RACING	... M. K. G.	275
SOUTH AFRICA	... M. K. G.	276
GOA	... M. K. G.	276

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad

Subscription Rates—INLAND: One year, Rs. 6; Six months, Rs. 3; FOREIGN: One year Rs. 8 or 14. sh. or $, 3.

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 29

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, AUGUST 25, 1946

TWO ANNAS

KHADI ON TRIAL

Khadi has passed through several phases during its variegated history in the last twentyfive years. From being an antique rarity, it has become the symbol of India's non-violent struggle for independence or, as Pandit Jawaharlal put it, the 'livery of our freedom'. It became the basis of the biggest producers' and consumers' co-operative. But that was not enough. If it was fully to play the role envisaged for it, viz. serve as a foundation for a non-violent social order, capable of withstanding all shocks of time and chance, its basis has to be re-examined and transformed. This was done by a series of resolutions adopted by the A. I. S. A. under Gandhiji's direction on his release from detention. The principal change was transference of the emphasis from the commercial to the self-help aspect of Khadi. The essential function of the A. I. S. A. was defined to be educative. Khadi Bhandars, under the new orientation, were to be centres for imparting instruction in the various processes of Khadi production rather than depots for the sale of Khadi for money. The rule of realizing a part of the price of Khadi in yarn was introduced and the proportion was gradually stepped up. By a curious coincidence, simultaneously with these changes, the production of Khadi in the country showed a sharp decline, owing to the operation of a series of causes independently of these changes. Those who had taken to Khadi merely as a livery but never accepted the obligations inherent in it, began to experience an increasing difficulty in obtaining Khadi from the depleted Khadi Bhandars who rightly refused to supply it to those who did not co-operate in its production. To this must be added maladjustment, resulting from the change over during the transitional period and the post-war abnormal conditions. A friend was discussing these difficulties with Gandhiji the other day. He could not see the justification of enforcing rules that would restrict the supply of Khadi at a time, when the demand for it was widespread and daily growing. A vacuum had been created and it was up to the A. I. S. A. with its long experience and widespread organization to step in and fill it. Instead, it has chosen to stultify itself, so that even sincere and life-long wearers of Khadi were finding it difficult to provide themselves with Khadi, unless they span for themselves which in very many cases, their public duties did not allow them to do. Did it not, connote the failure of the A. I. S. A.'s new policy?—he asked.

IS NEW ORIENTATION A FAILURE?

"To appreciate fully the present policy of the A. I. S. A.," explained Gandhiji, "you have to take in its etiology. In the initial stages the emphasis was on bringing relief to the poor. Incidentally it provided a living link between the classes and the masses, and assumed a political significance. . . We cannot make further headway on those lines. We cannot, for instance, further increase the wages. Khadi won't bear it. So far, it was spun and woven by the masses. Now it must still be by the masses, but for their own use. The new policy of the A. I. S. A. has not failed. The latest figures show that it is steadily though slowly, making headway.

"There are difficulties. Weaving constitutes the bottleneck. We have not established a sufficient hold on the weavers. The fault, again, is mine. If I had from the very beginning, insisted on all, learning weaving along with spinning, things would have been different today. The working capital of the A. I. S. A. now stands at twenty-five lakhs. It has taken twenty-five years to reach that figure. During that period it had distributed over seven crores of rupees as wages among four and a half lakhs of the poor spinners and weavers, principally spread over twenty thousand villages of India. I do not know of another instance of such a huge turn-over on so little capital in such a wide area."

"That is good but by no means unique. The Chinese Indusco did better," remarked the friend.

"That is not a fair comparison," replied Gandhiji. "I studied in detention Nym Wales' book which was recommended to me. Indusco's activities were carried on under abnormal circumstances with the backing of the Chinese National Government. Besides, all its production was war-time production. You need not have gone as far as China for your illustration. The work of the Calicut Mission in South India would have provided a more apt instance. In each case the field was restricted. In the case of Khadi it is trying to serve the whole of India."

"We cannot today attract more artisans by offering better wages. The general level of wages in the country is already so high."

"We do not want to."

"You mean to say you want them to produce for self."

"Yes."

WHAT HE TOLD MR. CASEY

"How can that be made practicable," asked the friend.

"I explained that to Mr. Casey last year," replied Gandhiji. "I told him that by adopting my scheme, not only could we solve the cloth problem for Bengal, but for the whole of India. The essence of that scheme was that, instead of supplying textiles to the people, they should be taught how to make cloth for themselves and provided the necessary means —instruments, raw materials etc.—for the same. A reasonable time limit should be fixed after which no textiles would be rationed in the area covered by the scheme. In German East Africa, I am told, cloth shortage during World War No. 1 was actually met by the Negroes being induced to manufacture their own cloth. Whether that is so or not, if India made full use of her spinning and weaving tradition which is universal and the matchless hereditary skill of her artisans, she could not only solve her own difficulty but even help the world to meet the present crisis by releasing her mill production, for countries less favourably placed in the matter of cloth manufacture."

"The fact, however, remains that in spite of there being such an acute cloth scarcity, Khadi has failed to step into the breach," persisted the friend. "It has missed the bus."

"Thanks to Government interference," replied Gandhiji. "They arrested Khadi workers, burnt stocks of Khadi and put Khadi production under every conceivable handicap."

"The vacuum is growing. Production charges have already touched the ceiling and yet the wages that we can offer, are not adequate to attract even the unemployed."

"Where are these unemployed?"

"Well, there are one lakh of I. N. A. men."

"I made an offer to them. It has yet evoked no response. You can take the horse to the trough but you cannot make it drink."

NO COMPULSION

"Cannot Government formulate a scheme?"

"It has been done in Madras. It is under examination. Nothing can be imposed from above. Everything has to be worked from below. And those who work them should have faith and conviction and spirit of service. A Government ukase won't do the trick. Governments can assist. As I told Mr. Casey, I am prepared to work out my scheme if it is left to me and the Government accord necessary facilities. That offer still stands."

"The danger," interpolated the friend, "is that, if we stop the supply of textiles to any area, as envisaged in your scheme, it may accentuate the present discontent and even cause an upheaval. There are elements ready to pounce upon and exploit any excuse to foment discontent. Restriction on cloth supply might even be enumerated as an 'atrocities' as prohibition was by a certain section in Bombay. How can we contemplate or invite a disturbance like that? This is not a constructive approach to the question. It smacks of compulsion."

"Where is the question of compulsion?" asked Gandhiji. "As it is, there is not enough cloth to go the round. The stocks of cloth available for distribution being short of the demand, rationing becomes a necessity. The question is only of wise distribution. No stocks may be expected from outside for some time. America and England are making strenuous efforts to increase their cloth production. But it is all needed there. If we nationalize our textile industry and work it on a double shift basis, it would probably solve the problem of cloth shortage, but not of mass poverty. I won't then be able to press the case for Khadi, not because there would be no case but because I won't be able to carry conviction."

KHADI AND THE NEW ERA

"That is not my point," rejoined the friend. An element of compulsion there is in all governmental measures. Tariff, protection, excise duties—all these are disguised forms of compulsion. It becomes an evil when it is wrongly or unduly used. If a fundamentally unsound and unstable economic situation is sought to be propped up by governmental compulsion, there is danger that it will crash one day and spread ruin all around. I am wondering, if the organization of Khadi production on the present lines, is not an instance of that type, whether pure theory does not need to be tempered with a measure of practical realism to suit the changed conditions. For instance, the woollen manufactures in Kashmir, are not for self-use. They cater for the market for fancy goods outside Kashmir. They are extremely popular. Now, if we introduce machine carding, they can hold their own against all competition. But that would be against the fundamental Khadi principles. I have been thinking whether a compromise cannot be effected. To run cottage industries with man-power exclusively, has not much prospect of survival in this age of machinery. We may try to canalize economic trends, we may not run against them in a head-on collision. If we could run cottage industries with the help of cheap electricity, for instance, they would be able to hold their own without losing their essential character. After all, decentralized production is what we want. We might have projects for the development of cheap hydraulic power as an aid to irrigation schemes. They can be in operation in from six to ten years. It will then be possible to take electricity to every village. Shall we under those circumstances be able to work Khadi on the present lines? Normally speaking, supply should balance demand. But instead of establishing Khadi on a permanent basis, we are crippling it by artificial restrictions with the result that a lot of corruption and dishonesty has crept in. The same yarn is presented again and again at the Khadi Bhandars as a counterfeit token. Apart from its economic aspect, Khadi has come to acquire a cultural and political significance. People are anxious to adopt it as a uniform. Hospitals would like to have their linen preferably in Khadi. I. N. A. people would want to adopt Khadi uniform. But today, thanks to the new policy, Khadi is nowhere to be had. Only hypocrisy and dishonesty seem to flourish."

I AM NOT AFRAID

"It is open to all those who cannot or do not want to spin," replied Gandhiji, "to go in for mill cloth, whether Indian or foreign. I am walking with my eyes open. This is not the first time in the history of Khadi that demand has outstripped supply and vice versa. Each time heroic measures were adopted and the crisis was overcome. I do not expect a different result this time. Only, we must have faith and patience and the courage to apply the right remedy which is what I am doing at present. If in the process Khadi dies, I must be prepared to take even that risk."

"That is begging the question," rejoined the friend. "It won't go down with the people. We have got to adjust our policy to the popular need."

"I cannot do that. Having discovered the error, I must correct it. That may take time. Therefore, I have suggested the removal of the Khadi clause from the Congress Constitution. When it was sought to be removed unsuccessfully at the Assam Congress, it gave me satisfaction. Now I will encourage and welcome abolition. If it has intrinsic merit, Khadi will survive the Congress abolition. If it has not, it will deserve to go under."

"That, however, would not solve our fundamental problem."

"I am afraid I won't be able to convince you by argument. Time alone will show who was right."

DIAGNOSIS AND THE REMEDY

"You said weaving was the bottleneck," resumed the friend. A weaver weaving mill yarn, can today earn as much as Rs.3 a day. The spinner and the weaver of the handspun won't work for lower wages."

"I don't want him to," replied Gandhiji. "That is why I have recommended doubling of handspun yarn. If he depends on the supply of mill yarn, he is doomed. Millowners are not philanthropists to go on providing yarn to the hand-loom weaver when he enters into effective competition with them. But a weaver working on doubling handspun yarn will, in the end, be better off than the mill yarn weaver, for, the former will find steady employment all the year round."

"The very basis of textile industry has been revolutionized," continued the friend. "Now they are preparing synthetic textile fibres from coal, air and water. Felting of cotton fibres with the help of resins is taking the place of weaving. Unless we make sure that our Khadi policy rests on a sound practicable basis and fits into the over-all picture, Khadi is bound to fail."

"It may, but the labour expended on it won't have been wasted," replied Gandhiji.

CURE FOR PERPLEXITY

"No good effort is ever wasted", proceeded the friend. "But the latest orientation of your Khadi policy continues to perplex many a sincere Khadi lover and worker. Their perplexity ought to be removed. Some of them even talk of going in for uncertified Khadi."

"The perplexity won't be removed if they have no faith in Khadi," replied Gandhiji.

"So long as there is demand for Khadi, it ought to be fulfilled even if prices of Khadi have to be raised."

"That means that Khadi will become fancy goods. It won't be right to use a vast organization for such a purpose. Our duty is to find out and remedy if there is any fundamental defect in our Khadi policy and if in the process, it is found that Khadi is not basically a sound proposition, it should be given a decent burial. Today Khadi is on its trial. It will successfully emerge from it only by virtue of its inherent strength and if it lacks that strength, all bother about it will be love's labour lost."

"All I know," finally persisted the friend, "is that where there is widespread and genuine demand for a commodity and the supply falls short, it should be possible to devise ways and means to adjust the economic balance and satisfy the demand in question."

A TESTAMENT OF FAITH

Gandhiji replied: "I can only warn you of the danger. There was a time when we used machine-carded slivers for spinning. We might as well have used mill yarn. For, what is a roving but unspun yarn? If we had not broken away from it and had not introduced hand-carding, Khadi would have been defunct by now. The late Sir Gangaram said to me: 'Only give up the spinning wheel, concentrate on the handloom and I am with you.' He did not realize, what we know today, that the use of mill yarn is the principal stranglehold on the handloom industry. In handspun yarn lies its only salvation. If the spinning wheel goes, the handloom is bound to follow suit. Khadi will cease to have any value in my eyes, if it does not usefully employ the millions. Many of the "compromises" that have been suggested are such as to take away from it its essential character. The late Sir Fazalbai prophesied to me when I saw him thirty years ago, that Khadi was ultimately bound to fail. He is gone but Khadi has remained. May be a new era has now opened and Khadi is an anachronism in it. Only, I do not feel so."

Sevagram, 17-8-'46

PYARELAL

Notes

"Remember the Harijan"

A correspondent writes:

"Shri Ganesh-utsava started by the late Lokamanya is coming near; most of our ministers and leaders will be invited by various associations to speak on this occasion. I desire to suggest to the speakers that they should accept such invitations, provided that the management would allow, 'Harijans' to take part in the function; they should also make it a point to take at least one Harijan with them, when they go to address the congregation."

The above suggestion is apt. If caste Hindus really wish to stamp out untouchability, they should publicly associate Harijans with them, especially on such occasions as the celebration of Hindu festivals.

Sevagram, 16-8-'46

Goa

The following telegrams have been received regarding Shri Kakodkar's arrest and imprisonment:

"Purshottam Kakodkar arrested in connection recent Satyagraha movement Goa. In spite being political prisoner imprisoned dingy ill-ventilated cell in company criminals awaiting trials for murder robberies. Food supplied most ordinary insufficient being half normal meal. Expressed willingness to work for his meal. Also pleaded on behalf his other unfortunate companions in cell for better treatment. In respect food authorities turned deaf ear. He is on hunger strike since last three days. Authorities' attitude arrogant/offensive."

"Purshottam Kakodkar fifth day hunger strike. Condition precarious. Allowed see persons under guard. Attitude authorities unconcerned."

If the charges attributed to the Goan authorities are true, they reflect great discredit on them. It is to be hoped that the civil resisters of Goa will not be cowed down by any ill-treatment, however grave it may be.

I am not sure about the wisdom of the resorted hunger strike. Let me hope that it will produce the desired effect. In any case, having been undertaken, it must be prosecuted to the end.

Sevagram, 18-8-'46

M. K. G.

HARIJAN

August 25

1946

WHAT CAN VIOLENCE DO ?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

If newspaper reports are to be believed, responsible ministers in Sindh and other equally responsible Leaguers almost all over, are preaching violence in naked language. Nakedness is itself a virtue as distinguished from hypocrisy. But when it is a hymn of obscenity, it is a vice to be shunned, whether it resides in a Leaguer or any other person. Any Muslim who is not in the League is a traitor, says one. The Hindu is a kafar deserving the fate of such, says another.

Calcutta has given an ocular demonstration of what direct action is and how it is to be done.

Who is the gainer? Certainly not the Muslim masses nor the sober follower of Islam which itself means sobriety and peace. The very salute 'salam alaikum' means 'piece be unto you'.

Violence may have its place in life but not that which we have witnessed in Calcutta, assuming of course, that newspaper accounts are to be trusted. Pakistan of whatever hue does not lie through senseless violence. When I write of senseless violence, I naturally assume the possibility of sensible violence, whatever the latter may be. The Calcutta demonstration was not an illustration of sensible violence.

What senseless violence does is to prolong the lease of the life of British or foreign rule. I believe that the authors of the State Paper issued by the Cabinet Mission desire peaceful transfer of power to representative Indian hands. But if we need the use of the British gun and bayonet, the British will not go or, if they do, some other foreign power will take their place. We will make a serious mistake, if, everytime the British bayonet is used, we trot out the agent provocateur. No doubt he has been at work. Let us not ride that horse to death.

Calcutta has earned a bad repute of late. It has seen too many wild demonstrations during the past few months. If the evil reputation is sustained for some time longer, it will cease to be the City of Palaces, it will become the city of the dead.

Would that the violence of Calcutta were sterilized and did not become a signal for its spread all over. It depends upon the leaders of the Muslim League of course, but the rest will not be free from responsibility. They can retaliate or refrain. Refraining is easy and simple, if there is the will. Retaliation is complicated. Will it be tooth against tooth or many against one ?

Sevagram, 19-8-'46

MASS MURDER

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A friend writes :

"The food famine situation in Mysore and Rayalaseema is daily growing more serious. Unless imports pour in sufficient quantities, the local co-operative stores will fail to supply rations—starvation rations as they are, since only 8 oz. of rice is being given to peasants who need 24 oz. to keep them fit—to the peasant masses and I am afraid that we may have to be prepared to face deaths, due to starvation in November and December."

If even half of what he says is true, it is a sad reflection on our capacity to cope with food famine in a vast country like India where there is land lying waste or ill-used and water running rapidly into the sea for want of human ingenuity to dam and store it. The writer says that unless imports "pour in sufficient quantities", meaning undoubtedly that they come from outside India, "mass deaths due to starvation in November and December" are a certainty. I suggest to everyone concerned that if this happens, the Government of the country will be guilty of mass murder.

To look to outside sources for food supply is to invite starvation. Has it ever been made clear that India has no capacity for growing sufficient food between now and November? Need a vast country like India with its teeming millions starve, even if the whole world were to declare a blockade against it?

Sevagram, 16-8-'46

DISLOYALTY TO KHADI

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A correspondent writes :

"On 31st July 1946, at 6 p. m., 13 college students (Khadi wearers) headed by a prominent Congressman, who is also a councillor, came in the Khadi Bhandar. The sale was closed due to shortage of Khadi. Only a few pieces of Khadi were kept in the cupboard upstairs, as it was not possible to satisfy about 1500 Khadi wearers from these few pieces. They at once went up, took thirteen full pieces forcibly, asked the Manager to take money, and also without yarn, and on refusal of accepting money in protest by the Manager, they went away with the cloth.

"Was it not the duty of the Manager to lodge a complaint against them in the police, or what action should he have taken in preventing them from taking away the cloth?"

The Manager should really have resisted the looting, non-violently, even at the risk of losing his life. He is entitled to lodge a complaint against the miscreants, provided that all other avenues of voluntary return of the loot have been explored and have failed.

Rowdyism by students has become a byword. If "a prominent Congressman" encouraged them, it was a matter of shame. The use of looted Khadi betrays woeful ignorance of the elements of Swaraj and makes Khadi such a mockery.

Sevagram, 18-8-'46

CONGRESS MINISTRIES AND RURAL UPLIFT

Resumption of office by Congress Ministers in the Provinces is by no means an experiment in constitutionalism. The task before them is to realize the content of Independence for the masses which the Congress has envisaged. What should be the end of our economic policy and the nature of social organization that should be built up and what are the obstacles in the present economic and administrative organization in achieving the goal of rural prosperity — these were the questions that the Ministers for Industries from the various Provinces, who met in conference in the Council Hall at Poona on the 31st of July, set themselves to examine.

Gandhiji explained his approach to Village Industries in the course of a thirty minutes address. The conception underlying both the Nai Talim and the Village Industries programme, including Khaddar, was rooted in the same thing viz. concern for the dignity and status of the Village unit as against the big cities and of the individual against the machine. The concern was further augmented by the fact that India lives not in a handful of her big cities but in her 700,000 villages. The problem was of re-establishment of justice between the town and the village. As it was, the balance was heavily tipped in favour of the former to the disadvantage of the latter.

THE MACHINE AGE

"Ours has been described as the machine age," observed Gandhiji, "because the machine dominates our economy. 'Now, what is a machine?'—one may ask. In a sense, man is the most wonderful machine in creation. It can neither be duplicated nor copied." He had, however, used the word not in its wider sense but in the sense of an appliance that tended to displace human or animal labour instead of supplementing it or merely increasing its efficiency. That was the first differential characteristic of the machine. The second characteristic was that there was no limit to its growth or evolution. That could not be said of human labour. There was a limit beyond which its capacity or mechanical efficiency could not go. Out of this circumstance arose the third characteristic of the machine. It seemed to be possessed of a will or genius of its own. It was antagonistic to man's labour. Thus it tended more to displace man, one machine doing the work of hundred, if not a thousand, who went to swell the army of the unemployed and the under-employed, not because it was desirable but because that was its law. In America it had perhaps reached the extreme limit. He had been opposed to it, said Gandhiji, not from today, but even before 1908 when he was in South Africa surrounded by machines. Their onward march had not only not impressed him but had repelled him. "It then dawned on me that to suppress and exploit the millions, the machine was the device par excellence, it had no place in man's economy if, as social units, all men were to be equal. It is my belief that the machine has not added to man's stature and it won't serve the world but disrupt it, unless it is put in its proper place. Then, I read Ruskin's 'Unto This Last' during a train journey to Durban and it gripped me immediately. I saw clearly that if mankind was to progress and to realize the ideal of equality and brotherhood, it must adopt and act on the principle of 'Unto This Last'; it must take along with it even the dumb, the halt and the lame. Did not Yudhishtira — the Prince of Righteousness, refuse to enter heaven without his faithful dog?"

MINISTRIES AND THE A.I.V.I.A.

In the machine age these had no place. Under it the fittest alone survived to the exclusion and at the cost of the weak. "That is not my picture, of Independence in which there is room even for the weakest," observed Gandhiji. "That requires that we must utilize all available human labour before we entertain the idea of employing mechanical power."

It was with that background, that he was instrumental in founding the Talimi Sangh and the A.I.V.I.A. The object was to strengthen the Congress which claimed to be essentially the people's organization. The Congress had created these autonomous institutions. The Congress Ministries could requisition the services of these organizations always and without any compunction. They existed and laboured for the villagers who were the backbone of the Congress. But the Ministries were under no obligation. If they had no faith in what these organizations stood for, they should plainly say so through the Working Committee. To play with a thing when they had no heart in it, would be worse than useless. They should take it up, only if they believed with him that it alone held the key to the economic and political salvation of the country. They should not deceive themselves or others.

THE GOOD EARTH

The base and foundation of village industries was agriculture. "Years ago I read a poem in which the peasant is described as the father of the world. If God is the Provider, the cultivator is His hand. What are we going to do to discharge the debt we owe to him? So long we have only lived on the sweat of his brow. We should have begun with the soil but we could not do so. The fault is partly mine."

There were people, remarked Gandhiji, who said that no basic reform in agriculture was possible, without political power. They dreamt in terms of industrialization of agriculture by large scale application of steam and electricity. He warned them that trading in soil fertility for the sake of quick returns would prove to be a disastrous, short-sighted policy. It would result in virtual depletion of the soil. Good earth called for the sweat of one's brow to yield the bread of life.

People might criticize that approach as being slow and unprogressive. It did not hold out promise of dramatic results. Nevertheless, maintained the speaker, it held the key to the prosperity of both the soil and the inhabitants living on it. Healthy, nourishing food was the alpha and omega of rural economy. "The bulk of a peasant's family budget goes to feed him and his family. All other things come afterwards. Let the tiller of the soil be well fed. Let him have a sufficiency of fresh, pure milk and ghee and oil, fish, eggs, and meat if he is a non-vegetarian. What would fine clothes, for instance, avail him, if he is ill nourished and underfed? "The question of drinking-water supply and other things would come next. A consideration of these questions would naturally involve such issues, as the place of plough cattle in the economy of agriculture as against the tractor plough and power irrigation etc. and thus, bit by bit, the whole picture of rural economy would emerge before them. In this picture cities would take their natural place and not appear as unnatural, congested spots or boils on the body politic as they were today. "We stand today in danger of forgetting the use of our hands," concluded Gandhiji. "To forget how to dig the earth and tend the soil is to forget ourselves. To think that your occupation of the Ministerial chair will be vindicated if you serve the cities only, would be to forget that India really resides in her 700,000 village units. What would it profit a man if he gained the world but lost his soul into the bargain?"

Questions were then asked.

REMEDIES

Q. You have called cities boils or abscesses on the body politic. What should be done with these boils?

A. If you ask a doctor he will tell you what to do with a boil. It has to be cured either by lancing or by the application of plasters and poultices. Edward Carpenter called civilization a malady which needed a cure. The growth of big cities is only a symptom of that malady. Being a nature curist, I am naturally in favour of nature's way of cure by a general purification of the system. If the hearts of the city-dwellers remain rooted in the villages, if they become truly village-minded, all other things will automatically follow and the boil will quickly heal.

Q. What practical steps can be taken to protect our village crafts from the invasion of foreign and Indian manufactured goods under the present circumstances?

A. I can only speak in broad terms. If you have felt in your heart that you have taken office as custodians and representatives of the interests of the masses, everything that you do, your legislation, your executive orders, the instructions that you issue, will breathe concern for the villager. To protect his interests, you do not need the Viceroy's sanction. Supposing you want to protect the hand-spinner and hand-weaver against the competition of mills and solve the problem of cloth shortage for the masses, you will put aside red tape and send for the millowners and tell them that, unless they want you to go out of office, they must make their production policy conform to the requirement of the masses, whose custodian and representative you are. You will tell them not to send mill cloth to certain areas, which are put under hand production or produce a certain range of yarns and textiles which comes within the hand loom weaver's domain. If you are in earnest, your word will go home and they will willingly give their co-operation as they did recently, when they provided the required textiles for export to Indonesia, in return for Indonesian surplus rice for the relief of the Indian famine. But there must be that inner conviction first, everything else will then be all right. Sevagram, 8-8-'46

PYARELAL

CONGRESS MINISTRIES AND BASIC EDUCATION

The worst sabotage during the Sec. 93 regime following upon the resignation of the Congress Ministries in seven provinces in 1940 was that of the basic education plans, prohibition and the programme of rural rehabilitation and resuscitation of basic rural crafts that were launched by the Congress Ministries. Naturally, the first concern of the Congress Ministries on resuming office was to salvage what remained of their experiments and to take up the broken threads where they had left them.

The Education Ministers from the Congress Provinces met at the invitation and under the presidency of Shri Balasaheb Kher in a conference for the purpose in the Council Hall at Poona on the 29th and 30th July. Education Ministers from all the provinces had been invited. But from two, they could not attend. Gandhiji attended the conference for over one hour on the afternoon of the 29th. Although the basic education experiment had received a set back so far as Governmental and affiliated institutions were concerned, it was continued under the auspices of the Talimi Sangh, who, thanks to Gandhiji's prevision, was fully prepared for the emergency. With the completion of the first seven years, basic education came of age. In his first meeting with the members of the Talimi Sangh in 1944, after his release from detention, Gandhiji explained to them that a stage had been reached, when the scope of basic education should be extended. They would have to take post-basic as well as pre-basic training within their compass. Basic education must become literally education for life. Taking up the thread of the argument from that point, Gandhiji explained to the conference in the course of his address, on what line that extension should take place and what, according to him, the duty of the Ministers was in that respect. He was speaking in answer to the question of Dr. Zakir Hussain, who was anxious that in their overzeal, they should not take a bigger bite than they could chew. An over-ambitious programme, which they had not the means to implement, might prove a trap and danger.

"IF I WERE A MINISTER"

He knew clearly enough, said Gandhiji, what was to be done but he did not quite know how it could be done. So far they had their course mapped out for them, but now they had to sail on uncharted waters. He knew their difficulties. It was not easy for those who had been brought up in the old tradition, to break away from it at a stroke. If he were in the Ministerial chair, said Gandhiji, he would issue broad instructions that hereafter all educational activity of the Government should be on basic education lines. Adult education drives had been launched in several provinces. If he had his way, he would conduct them also through a basic craft. In his opinion, cotton spinning and the allied processes were crafts par excellence for this purpose. But he would leave the choice of the craft to the people concerned in each case in the certain belief that in the end that craft alone which had the necessary intrinsic merit would survive. It should be the job of the inspectors and other officers of the Education Department, to go among the people and teachers of schools and by persuasion and argument, educate them in the value and utility of the Government's new educational policy. That was their primary job, not to lord it over them. If they had no faith in it or if they were unwilling loyally to work out the new policy, he would give them the choice to resign. But he did not think that it would be necessary, if the Ministers knew their job and put their shoulder to the wheel. Merely issuing orders would not do the trick.

REORIENTATION OF UNIVERSITY EDUCATION

What he had said about adult education applied equally to university education. It must be organically related to the Indian scene. It must therefore be an extension and continuation of the basic education course. That was the central point. If they did not see eye to eye with him on that point, he was afraid they would have little use for his advice. If, on the other hand, they agreed with him that the present university education did not fit them for Independence but only enslaved them, they would be as impatient as he was to completely overhaul and scrap that system and remodel it on new lines consonant with the national requirement.

Today the youth educated in our universities either ran after Government jobs or fell into devious ways and sought outlet for their frustration by fomenting unrest. They were not even ashamed to beg or sponge upon others. Such was their sad plight. The aim of university education should be to turn out true servants of the people, who would live and die for the country's freedom. He was therefore of opinion that university education should be co-ordinated and brought into line with basic education, by taking in teachers from the Talimi Sangh.

The Ministers had accepted office as people's representatives. Their writ would not run beyond the four walls of the Council Hall, unless they could carry the people with them. What was taking place in Bombay and Ahmedabad today, was an ominous symptom, if it portended that the Congress had lost its hold over the people. Nai Talim was as yet a tender sapling but it held out big promise. Its growth could not be forced by ministerial ukases, if popular support was lacking. If, therefore, they could not command popular support, his advice to them would be to tender their resignations. They should not be afraid of anarchy. Theirs was only to do their duty according to their light and leave the rest to God. People would learn the lesson of true Independence even out of that experience.

He then invited questions. The first question was: "Can basic education be conducted minus the self-support basis?"

"You can certainly try," replied Gandhiji. "But if you ask my advice, I will tell you that in that event, you had better forget basic education altogether. Self-sufficiency is not an a priori condition but to me, it is the acid test. This does not mean that basic education will be self-supporting from the very start. But taking the entire period of seven years, covered by the basic education plan, income and expenditure must balance each other. Otherwise, it would mean that even at the end of their training, the basic education students will not be fitted for life. That is the negation of basic education. Nai Talim without the self-support basis would, therefore, be like a lifeless body."

Other questions and answers then followed:

Q. We have accepted the principle of giving education through a basic craft. But the Mussalmans are somehow opposed to the spinning wheel. Your emphasis on spinning is perhaps all right in cotton tracts. But do not you agree that it is unsuited to areas where the cotton crop is not grown? May not some other craft be substituted for it, in such places — agriculture for instance?

A. This is a very old question. Any basic craft to serve as a medium for education must answer the test of universality. As early as 1908, I came to the conclusion that to make India free and to enable her to stand on her own legs, the spinning wheel had to hum in every home. If England can become an exporter of textiles to India and to the whole world, although she does not grow a pod of cotton, I cannot understand why we cannot introduce cotton spinning in our homes, merely because cotton would have to be obtained from a neighbouring province or district. As a matter of fact, there is no part of India where cotton was not at one time grown. Localization of cotton cultivation in 'cotton tracts' is only a recent and anomalous development, forced upon India by cotton manufacturing interests at the expense of the poor tax-payer and cotton spinner of India. Even today tree cotton grows everywhere in India. Such arguments as yours, speak ill of our capacity for taking initiative, for our enterprise and resourcefulness. It would kill all manufactures if transportation of raw materials from another place were to be regarded as an insuperable handicap.

Moreover, to enable a person to clothe himself through his own effort, when the alternative is to go naked, is in itself an education. An intelligent pursuit of the various processes related to cotton spinning has besides, a very high instructional value. In fact, it covers the whole education of man as perhaps no other craft does. We may not today be able to dispel the doubts of the Mussalmans, as they are rooted in a delusion and delusion is a very real thing to its victim, while he is under its spell. But if our own faith is clear and firm, and we can demonstrate the success of our method, the Mussalmans will themselves come to us and ask to be taught the secret of our success. They do not seem to have realized that the charkha has done more for the poorest Mussalman masses than even the Muslim League or any other Muslim organization. The bulk of the weavers in Bengal are Muslims. Nor should it be forgotten, that Dacca owed its world-wide fame for its shabnams to the deftness and skill of Muslim women spinners and Muslim weavers.

The same applies to Maharashtra. The best cure for the delusion is to concentrate on the performance of one's own duty. Truth alone will endure, all the rest will be swept away before the tide of time. I must, therefore, continue to bear testimony to Truth even if I am forsaken by all. Mine may today be a voice in the wilderness, but it will be heard when all other voices are silenced if it is the voice of Truth.

THE VICIOUS CIRCLE

"To produce efficient teachers for Nai Talim would take time. What should be done to improve education in the schools in the meantime?" asked Avinashilingam Chettiar speaking in English. Gandhiji chaffing him for it suggested amid general laughter, that if he could not speak in Hindustani, he might whisper what he had to say into his neighbour's ear, who would render it into Hindustani for him.

"If you realize," he proceeded, "that the present system of education cannot bring India Independence but only serves to deepen her slavery, you will refuse to encourage it, irrespective of whether any other takes its place or not. You will do whatever you can, within the four corners of the principles of Nai Talim and be satisfied with that." If people did not want the ministers on those terms, it would be better for the ministers to resign. They could not possibly be party to catering for poison, because they could not provide or because the people did not relish life-giving food.

Q. You say that for Nai Talim we do not need money but men. But to train men we again need institutions and therefore money. How can we get out of this vicious circle?

A. The remedy lies in your own hands. Begin with yourself. There is a good English proverb: 'Charity begins at home.' But if you yourself will sit in an easy chair like a sahib and expect others of the "lesser breed" to get ready for the job, you will get nowhere. That is not my way. It has been my practice ever since my childhood, to begin with myself and my immediate environment in howsoever humble a way. Let us in this respect take a leaf out of the book of the British people. A mere handful of them came to and settled in India in the first instance and carved out an empire for themselves which is even more formidable in its cultural than in its political aspect, so much so that, today we are so infatuated with English that we hug it just as a slave hugs its fetters, even at the cost of the mother-tongue. Think of the faith, single-minded devotion, sacrifice and perseverance, which must have been at the back of it. It only shows that where there is a will, there is a way. Let us be up and doing with the firm resolve not to give up, come what may, and all the difficulties will melt away.

THE PLACE OF ENGLISH

Q. What is the place of English in this programme? Should it be made compulsory or taught only as an optional, second language?

A. I must cling to my mother-tongue as to my mother's breast, in spite of its shortcomings. It alone can give me the life-giving milk. I love the English tongue in its own place, but I am its inveterate opponent, if it usurps a place which does not belong to it. English is today admittedly the world language. I would therefore accord it a place as a second, optional language, not in the school but in the university course. That can only be for the select few—not for the millions. Today when we have not the means to introduce even free compulsory primary education, how can we make provision for teaching English? Russia has achieved all her scientific progress without English. It is our mental slavery that makes us feel that we cannot do without English. I can never subscribe to that defeatist creed.

Poona, 3-8-'46

PYARELAL

[The following resolution was passed by the Conference:

"The Conference of Education Ministers and Workers held in Poona on July 30th and 31st, discussed some of the most pressing educational problems before the nation and passed a few resolutions."

The last of these was:

"This Conference is of opinion that the physical well-being of children including adequate diet, medical care—both curative and preventive—and formation of health habits, forms an integral part of national education and necessary steps should be taken to introduce this educational programme in all primary and secondary schools—both basic and non-basic."

Ashadevi who has brought these adds that Ministers cannot implement them unless they are backed by popular support. To this end, she suggests the holding of a small conference of specialists such as educationists, medical men, nutritionists, social workers and workers for or in the villages. P.]

CONTENTS		PAGE
KHADI ON TRIAL	... PYARELAL	277
WHAT CAN VIOLENCE DO?	... M. K. GANDHI	280
MASS MURDER	... M. K. GANDHI	280
DISLOYALTY TO KHADI	... M. K. GANDHI	280
CONGRESS MINISTRIES AND RURAL UPLIFT	... PYARELAL	281
CONGRESS MINISTRIES AND BASIC EDUCATION	... PYARELAL	282
NOTES:
"REMEMBER THE HARIJAN"	... M. K. G	279
GOA	... M. K. G.	279

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 30

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1946

TWO ANNAS

ALTERNATIVE TO INDUSTRIALISM

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A correspondent writes :

"Do you then believe that industrialization of India — to the extent of India producing her own ships, locomotives, aeroplanes, etc. — is necessary? If not, will you kindly suggest the alternative means by which India shall discharge her responsibilities as a free and independent nation?"

"If you believe in the establishment of such industries, who should, in your opinion, exercise control over the management and the profits that will accrue?"

I do not believe that industrialization is necessary in any case for any country. It is much less so for India. Indeed, I believe that Independent India can only discharge her duty towards a groaning world by adopting a simple but ennobled life by developing her thousands of cottages and living at peace with the world. High thinking is inconsistent with complicated material life based on high speed imposed on us by Mammon worship. All the graces of life are possible only when we learn the art of living nobly.

There may be sensation in living dangerously. We must draw the distinction between living in the face of danger and living dangerously. A man who dares to live alone in a forest infested by wild beasts and wilder men without a gun and with God as his only Help, lives in the face of danger. A man who lives perpetually in mid-air and dives to the earth below to the admiration of a gaping world lives dangerously. One is a purposeful, the other a purposeless life.

Whether such plain living is possible for an isolated nation, however large geographically and numerically in the face of a world, armed to the teeth and in the midst of pomp and circumstance, is a question open to the doubt of a sceptic. The answer is straight and simple. If plain life is worth living, then the attempt is worth making even though, only an individual or a group makes the effort.

At the same time I believe that some key industries are necessary. I do not believe in arm chair or armed socialism. I believe in action according to my belief, without waiting for wholesale conversion. Hence, without having to enumerate key industries, I would have State ownership, where a large number of people have to work together. The ownership of the products of their labour, whether skilled or unskilled, will vest in them through the State. But as I can conceive such a State only based on non-violence, I would not dispossess monied men by force but would invite their co-operation in the process of conversion to State ownership. There are no pariahs of society, whether they are millionaires or paupers. The two are sores of the same disease. And all are men "for a' that".

And I avow this belief in the face of the inhumanities we have witnessed and may still have to witness in India as elsewhere. Let us live in the face of danger.

On the train to Delhi, 25-8-'46

THE PLACE OF MEDICINE IN NAI TALIM

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Being engrossed in her work and being considerate of my time, Ashadevi never takes it unnecessarily. She did, however, come to me for five minutes the day before my departure for Delhi, to ask whether, in my opinion, there was need for teachers in the Talimi Sangh to study medicine and whether she herself should have the same four or five years' course that doctors have.

I at once realized that in spite of utmost trying, it is difficult for one like Ashadevi who has taken her M. A. under the old system of education to break away completely from its influence.

I have no degrees to boast of. And I forgot long ago to attach any value to the little knowledge I acquired in a high school. And I have drunk deep at the fountain of nature cure. So I said to her :

"You say that the first lesson our children have to learn is how to keep fit and how to keep themselves and their surroundings clean in every respect. I say to you that all the medical knowledge you require comes into this. Our education is conceived for the crores of villagers, it is for their benefit. They live close to nature, but even so they do not know the laws of nature. What little they know, they do not carry out. Nai Talim is derived from our knowledge of the piteous condition of the villagers. We cannot, therefore, know much about this Nai Talim from books. What we have hitherto acquired is from the book of nature. In the same way, we have to learn village doctoring from nature too. The essence of nature cure is that we learn the principles of hygiene and sanitation and abide by those laws as well as the laws relating to proper nutrition. Thus does every one become his own doctor. The man who eats to live, who is friends with the five powers, earth, water, ether, sun and air and who is a servant of God, the Creator of all these, ought not to fall ill. If he does, he will remain calm relying on God and die in peace, if need be. If there are any medicinal herbs in the fields of his village he may make use of them. Crores live and die like this without a murmur. They have not so much as heard of a doctor, much less seen one face to face. Let us become really village-minded. Village children and adults come to us. Let us teach them how to live truly. Doctors aver that 99% of disease springs from insanitation, from eating the wrong food and from under-nourishment. If we can teach this 99% the art of living, we can afford to forget the 1%. They may find a philanthropic doctor like Dr. Sushila Nayyar to look after them. We need not worry about them. Today pure water, good earth, fresh air, are unknown to us. We do not know the inestimable value of ether and the sun. If we make wise use of these five powers and if we eat the proper and balanced diet, we shall have done the work of ages. For acquiring this knowledge, we need neither degrees nor crores of money. What we need are a living faith in God, a zeal for service, an acquaintance with the five powers of nature and a knowledge of dietetics. All this can be acquired without wasting time in schools and colleges."

On the train to Delhi, 26-8-'46

(From Harijansevak)

CONFUSION ABOUT RAMANAMA

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A friend writes:

"Regarding your suggested cure of malaria by Ramanama, my problem is that I do not understand how to rely on a spiritual force for my physical ailments. I am also not sure if I deserve to be cured and if I am justified in praying for my salvation, when there is so much misery amongst my countrymen. The day I understand Ramanama, I shall pray for their salvation. Otherwise I would feel more selfish than I do today."

This is from a friend whom I believe to be an earnest seeker of truth. I take public notice of his difficulty, as it is typical of that of many like him.

Spiritual force is like any other force at the service of man. Apart from the fact that it has been used for physical ailments for ages with more or less success, it would be intrinsically wrong not to use it, if it can be successfully used for the cure of physical ailments. For, man is both matter and spirit, each acting on and affecting the other. If you get rid of malaria by taking quinine, without thinking of the millions who do not get it, why should you refuse to use the remedy which is within you, because millions will not use it through their ignorance? May you not be clean and well because millions of others will not be so, ignorantly or may be, even cussedly? If you will not be clean out of false notions of philanthropy, you will deny yourself the duty of serving the very millions by remaining dirty and ill. Surely refusal to be spiritually well or clean is worse than the refusal to be physically clean and well.

Salvation is nothing more and nothing less than being well in every way. Why should you deny it for yourself, if thereby you show the way to others and beyond showing it, actually serve them in addition by reason of your fitness? But you are wholly selfish, when you take penicillin in order to get well, although you have the certain knowledge that the others cannot get it.

The confusion lying behind my correspondent's argument is obvious.

What, however, is true is that the taking of a pill or pills of quinine is much easier than gaining the knowledge of the use of Ramanama. It involves much effort as against the mere cost of buying quinine pills. The effort is worth making for the sake of the millions, in whose name and on whose behalf my correspondent will shut Rama out of his heart.

Sevagram, 17-8-'46

Notes

Goa

The game of hunting lovers of civil liberty is going on merrily in Goa. A small power because of its smallness often acts with impunity where a great power cannot. If the facts are as they have come to me, Shri Purushottam Kakodkar is fasting in his prison and may soon join the majority. As a believer unto death in Satyagraha, neither I nor any Satyagrahi should deplore the death. In such deaths of spotless victims lies the seed of true liberty.

But what of the Portuguese Power which boasts of philanthropy and alliance with the Roman Catholic Church? That Power will have to justify itself before man and God. The blood of the innocents (assuming the innocence of the victims) will cry out from their tombs or their ashes. It is more potent than the voice of the living, however powerful and eloquent.

On the train to Delhi, 26-8-'46

Cochin

I have read all that has appeared in the Hindu of 30th July about the announcement made by the Maharaja of Cochin. It is good as far as it goes. His Highness deserves congratulations for his courage. But good words do not carry us much further, unless they are accompanied by present action. It would certainly be a tremendous advance if the Maharaja were to make the beginning today, irrespective of what Travancore or other States do or do not do. Will Cochin become a part of what is called British Malabar today, the Maharaja keeping for himself no status other than what the free vote of the adult population of Cochin gives him?

Sevagram, 24-8-'46

Move on

On reading about my persistent darkness, a correspondent sends me the following lines of comfort:

"The path may be clouded

"Move on, for the orbit is fixed for your soul;

"And though it may lead into darkness of night,

"The torch of the Builder shall give it new light."

Savagram, 16-8-'46

English Notices

"You and Congress Governments advocate immediate discontinuance of English as the medium of instruction in this country. Will you not exert your influence through the Harijan to get all sign and direction boards, plates of offices, names of roads, streets, lanes, villages, schools, colleges, hospitals etc. written in the regional language of the district? A change in Government or semi-Government institutions will be a lesson to private shops, stores, saloons etc. to follow suit. Articles in the Company's and other Acts requiring a name-board in English must go."

I believe that nowadays the tendency is towards the use of the regional language on signboards etc. The correspondent is right regarding Government institutions and offices. Now that there are national Governments, the change should be introduced.

If any such rule exists in Company's or other Acts as referred to by the correspondent, it should certainly go.

On the train to Delhi, 25-8-'46. M. K. G.

Hindustani Prachar Examinations

"The examinations for the Hindustani Prachar Sabha, Wardha, had been announced to take place on September 15th. But owing to the postal strike, letters were not delivered regularly for nearly a month nor did the centres receive the examination books in time. In the circumstances, the time for examinations has been postponed to November 17th (Sunday). In view of the extra time afforded, it is hoped that advantage will be taken to open more centres and more examinees will be forthcoming. The last day for receiving applications for the examinations at the Wardha office is 30th September."

I endorse the hope that the extra two months gained by the postponement will mean more entrants for the examinations.

On the train to Delhi, 25-8-'46 M. K. G.
(From Harijansevak)

Kasturba Gandhi National Memorial Trust

In continuation of the list of provincial agents of the Kasturba Gandhi National Memorial Trust, already published in the 'Harijan', Gandhiji as the Chairman of the Trust has appointed the following provincial agents:

1. Delhi: Shrimati Vedkumari
2. Central India: Shrimati Rukmini Devi Sharma
3. Tamil Nad: Dr. Soundaram Ramchandran
4. Nizam's Dominions: Shrimati Gyan Kumari Heda
5. Maharashtra: Shrimati Prema Kantak

Wardha, 6-8-'46 SHYAMLAL

Errata

1. In Harijan of July 28, 1946, in the article 'Inspiring for Gramsevak', on p. 240, column two, line 4, read 1945 for 1935.

2. Same para, line 25, 'from the railway line' should read 'from the city'.

3. Second para, line 4, 'September 1943' should read 'September 1942'.

4. In Harijan of August 11, in the note on Kasturba Gandhi National Memorial Trust, on p. 258, the figure of Rs. 2,01,866-2-10 against total expenditure referred to expenditure through the Central Office only. To this must be added the following:

Expenditure through the Provincial Offices

Rs. 1,35,647-0-7

Advances that have nearly been spent

Rs. 80,681-7-10

Grand Total Rs. 4,18,194-11-3

5. In Harijan of August 25, 1946, in the article 'What can violence do?', on page 280, para three, last line read 'peace' for 'piece'.

ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI

(By M. K. Gandhi)

What English knowing Indian has not felt the shame and sorrow of his failure to discover an equivalent for an English word in either his mother-tongue or the national language? A Gujarati lad has an English-Gujarati dictionary in such a case to help him; similarly an Urdu or Hindi knowing lad has his dictionary to fall back upon. But for Hindustani, which is neither Persianized Urdu nor Sanskritized Hindi and which is the tongue of the common folk of the North, whether Hindu or Mussalman, a writer has no dictionary to fall back upon. An attempt will be made through a column at least of the Harijan each week to furnish for English a Hindustani word or two, spelt in both Nagari and Urdu scripts. An endeavour will be made to give the names of those who will contribute their labour to this fascinating task. This is pioneer work and therefore will, like all pioneer work, have defects. Those who detect them, will confer a favour by drawing the attention to them of the Editor. I would suggest to students that they copy out these words week by week in a note-book and add to or amend the attempt. They will find that the labour will combine recreation with instruction.

Only those English words which are in common use, have been selected from a standard English dictionary. In reading the following, the reader should also know that no claim is made that the equivalents are the best possible or that they are exhaustive. They are a help to the searcher. The plan for this week is that those who are helping me to conduct the Harijan have prepared the first list. Kakasaheb and Acharya Shrimannarayan looked at the selection. The first letters of their names "Ka" or 'Shri' have been given in parenthesis after the addition.

Sevagram, 23-8-'46

1. Abandon v. छोड़ देना, तजना, (का०) त्यागना (श्री०) ।
چھوڑ دینا، تھنا، (کا) نیاگنا (شری)
2. Abase v. झलील करना, घटिया बनाना ।
کھٹیا بنانا، چٹیا بنانا
3. Abash v. पानी पानी करना, शरमिदा करना, शरमाना, झपना, लजाना ।
शर्मन्दा करना, शर्मना, शरमाना, झपना, लजाना
4. Abate v. घटना, घटाना, नरम पड़ना (का०) ।
کھٹنا، گھٹانا، (کا) نرم پڑنا
5. Abbreviate v. छोटा करना ।
چھوٹا کرنا
6. Abdicate v. तख्त छोड़ना, राज-पाट छोड़ना ।
تخت چھوڑنا، راج پاٹ چھوڑنا
7. Abdomen n. पेट
8. Abduct v. मग लेजाना ।
بھگا لے جانا
9. Abide by v. पक्का रहना (वादे पर), पालन करना (वचन का), पाबन्द रहना ।
پکا رہنا (وعدہ پر)، پالन کرنا (وچن کا)، पाबन्द रहना
10. Ability n. लियानत
11. Able adj. लायक
12. Abnormal adj. गैर सामूली, अनरीत
13. Abolish v. मिटाना, छुटा देना, रद करना (का०) ।
مٹانا، چھुटा دینا، رد کرنا (کا)

HARIJAN

September 1

1946

IF I WERE THE MINISTER

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The talks with the Ministers concerned at Poona on 29th to 31st July on village-crafts and basic education have given rise to a lot of correspondence and private discussion. For the guidance of the Provincial Governments and others interested in the question of Khadi which has naturally occasioned the bulk of the correspondence and discussion, I set forth below my thoughts on the subject.

I refer the reader to my note in the Harijan of 28th April last. My views, then expressed, remain unaltered. One thing has created a misunderstanding. Some friends have read compulsion in that note. I am sorry for the obscurity. In it I had answered the question as to what representative governments could do if they wished. I had, I hope pardonably, assumed that such governments' notices too could not be interpreted as compulsion. For every act of a bona fide representative government would assume consent of the voters represented. The voters would mean the whole populace, whether registered as voters or not. With that background, I wrote that the government should notify to the villagers that mill cloth would not be supplied to the villagers after a certain fixed date, so as to enable them to wear Khadi prepared by themselves.

Whatever the meaning of my article of 28th April last, I want to state that any scheme adopted about Khadi, without the willing co-operation of those concerned, must mean death to Khadi as a means for attaining Swaraj. Then the taunt that Khadi was a return to the darkness and slavery of the Middle Ages would be true. But I have held the contrary view. Whilst Khadi under compulsion was a badge of slavery, Khadi intelligently and voluntarily prepared, primarily for one's own use, was easily the badge of our freedom. Freedom is nothing if it is not all-round self-help. I, for one, would have nothing to do with Khadi, if it were not a free man's privilege as well as duty.

A friendly critic asks whether Khadi thus prepared could also and at the same time be for sale. Yes, if sale is its secondary use; not, if manufacture for sale is its only or even primary use. That we began with sale of Khadi shows temporary necessity as well as our limited vision. Experience is a great teacher. It has taught us many things. Not the least is its primary use. But it is by no means the last. But I must leave this fascinating field of speculation and proceed definitely to answer the question put in the heading.

My first business as the minister in charge of revival of the villages as the centre of all governmental activity, would be to find out from among the Permanent Service honest and incorruptible men capable for the work. I would put the best among them in touch with the A. I. S. A. and the A. I. V. I. A., creations of the Congress, and bring in a scheme for giving the village-crafts the greatest encouragement. I would stipulate, there should be no compulsion on the villagers, that they must not slave for others and that they should be taught to help themselves and rely upon their own labour and skill for the production of articles of food, cloth and other necessities. The scheme would thus have to be comprehensive. I would instruct my first man, therefore, to see the Hindustani Talimi Sangh and see what it has to say.

Let me assume that the scheme, thus produced, contains a clause saying that the villagers themselves declare that they would not want mill cloth, say, after one year from a fixed date, that they require cotton, wool and necessary implements and instruction, not as a gift but to be paid for on the easiest terms. The scheme provides too, that it will not apply at once to the whole of any province but only to a part to begin with. The scheme further tells one that the A. I. S. A. will guide and assist the working of the scheme.

Being convinced of its soundness, I would give it legal form in consultation with the law department and issue a notification, fully describing the genesis of the scheme. The villagers as well as the millowners and others would have been party to it. The notification will show clearly that it is the people's measure, though bearing the Government stamp. The Government money will be used for the benefit of the poorest villagers, making the largest return possible to the people concerned. It will, therefore, be probably the most profitable investment in which expert assistance will be voluntary and overhead charges the least item. The notification will give in detail, the whole cost to the country and the return to the people.

The only question for me as minister is whether the A. I. S. A. has the conviction and capacity to shoulder the burden of creating and guiding a Khadi scheme to success. If it has, I would put my little barque to sea with all confidence.

On the train to Delhi, 26-8-'46

NOTICE

Readers will please note that a branch of the Navajivan Karyalaya has been recently opened at Delhi (Kucha Mahajani, Chandni Chowk). Copies of the four weeklies Harijan (English), Harijanbandhu (Gujarati), and Harijansevak (both in Nagari and Urdu scripts), of our Gujarati monthly, Shikshan ane Sahitya, and our publications will be available there. The subscriptions for the weeklies and the monthly will be received there. All sales in Delhi and New Delhi, of Harijan and its various editions will henceforth be handled by the branch office.

MANAGER

WEEKLY LETTER

I

MAHADEV DESAI DAY

The fourth anniversary of Mahadevbhai's death in prison was jointly observed by the various Sevagram institutions on the 15th of August. Beginning with a baitalik in the morning, the students and workers went round the Ashram singing Rabi Babu's songs dear to Mahadevbhai and dispersed after a final chorus in front of his hut. An exhibition of specimens of calligraphy and common spinning occupied the place of honour in the day's programme. His diaries, manuscripts, letters, all in his uniform print-like hand, provided a perfect feast for the eyes. Whether he wrote English, Gujarati, Sanskrit or Persian script, it carried the mark of distinction and elegance. Specimens of handwriting of other celebrities in the Congress and of numerous lesser lights in the Ashram, who had more or less successfully adopted him as their model in that respect, not to mention the students of the Basic School, completed the picture.

Gandhiji swears by little things on which, he has often averred, his life is built. Drawing attention to three aspects of Mahadev's life at the prayer gathering on the evening of the 15th, he remarked: "Friends and admirers of Mahadev Desai have been following the practice of observing his death anniversary by occupying themselves with something dear to him. His was a rich, gifted hand. He had many loves. Among these the spinning wheel held the first place. He span regularly and beautifully like the artist that he was. No matter how fatigued or overworked he was, he always found time for spinning. It refreshed him.

"Among his many accomplishments, not the least was his peerless handwriting. There he was master. Ramadas Swami in one of his couplets has likened beautiful handwriting to a lustrous pearl. The characters which Mahadev's pen traced were like a pearl without a flaw.

"His third quality which all should emulate and copy was his love of the Indian tongues. He was a linguist. He attained proficiency in Bengali, Marathi and Hindi and he learnt Urdu. In jail he attempted to learn Persian and Arabic under Khwaja Sahib M. A. Majid, who was a fellow prisoner."

Commenting on Rabi Babu's song that had been sung, Gandhiji observed: "The song which you have just heard was one of Mahadev's favourite songs. He has rendered it into Gujarati verse too.

When the heart is hard and parched up, come upon me with a shower of mercy,

When grace is lost from life, come with a burst of song,

When tumultuous work raises its din on all sides shutting me out from beyond, come to me, my Lord of silence, with Thy peace and rest.

When my beggarly heart sits crouched, shut up in a corner, break open the door of my mind, and come with the ceremony of a king.

When desire blinds the mind with delusion and dust, O Thou Holy One, Thou wakeful, come with Thy light and Thy thunder. — Gitanjali

That summed up the innermost yearning of the deceased's soul. May it do yours too. Mahadev's life was an inexhaustible well of virtues which you can all share. The sharing won't diminish its volume. That is the beauty of spiritual treasures. As the Upanishad says:

"पूर्णमदः पूर्णमिदं पूर्णात् पूर्णमुदच्यते ।

पूर्णस्य पूर्णमादाय पूर्णमेवावशिष्यते ॥"

PANDIT NEHRU AT SEVAGRAM

Availing themselves of Pandit Jawaharlal's presence at Wardha in connection with the Working Committee's meeting, the Sevagram group of institutions invited Panditji to meet them in the New Talimi Sangh Hall also known as Rabi Hall at Sevagram Ashram. These included the Khadi Vidyalaya, the Hindustani Talimi Sangh, the Go-Seva Sangh and the trainees under the Kasturba Gandhi National Memorial scheme. In a luminous little speech Panditji expressed great satisfaction at the pace at which the place had grown since he had visited Sevagram last. A busy hive of constructive activities institutions had sprung up where only a few scattered hamlets stood before. Great tasks awaited the trainees, who had come there for training, on their return to their respective fields of work, he said. It was no small task to raise the level of 40 crores of men, women and children. Papers, remarked Panditji, were full of politics these days. In a way it was natural. But they should remember that political independence only cleared the way for constructive work. It could not take the place of constructive work. "If we succeed in driving out the English and the condition of the country remains unchanged, we shall only have travelled farther to fare worse. Political independence will only remove the obstacles that hinder nation-building. Real work would only then begin. We must remove the poverty and unemployment that afflict our masses and ameliorate their condition in general."

"What is wealth?" asked Panditji and replied, "Not gold and silver." A traveller who lost his way in the desert could not eat or drink gold and silver. He would gladly exchange all the gold and silver in the world for a morsel of food and a drink of water to sustain life. Gold and silver only provide a handy medium for the exchange of useful commodities. A nation's wealth was measured not by the precious metal in its vaults but by the useful commodities it possessed and the capacity to produce them. A nation that had healthy and industrious men and women with the skill and talent to produce useful commodities, was a rich nation, although it did not own an ounce of gold or silver. On the contrary, a nation that lacked these was a poor nation in spite of all the gold and silver it might possess. A person who did not produce but only consumed was a parasite living upon the industry of others and became a burden to society.

"Today on the one side, we have the spectacle of the idle rich who do no work and on the other, the poor toilers who starve because they can get no employment. The numerous arts and crafts of the people which once flourished in this country, when India was free, have been killed and recurring famines ravage the land which today lies weak and exhausted as a result. That is our present plight. It has to be remedied. Not a single person should be without employment or means of sustenance. All should have equal opportunity for development and growth. All men are not equal in one sense—some are intelligent, others stupid, some weak, others strong. You cannot condemn a person for inefficiency when he has been denied the opportunity to develop efficiency. How can you expect a poor illiterate, half-starved villager to show the same capacity or efficiency as a well-fed person who has had all the opportunities for education and growth. It is not necessary that all men should be equal in every respect but all should have equal opportunity in life. Then alone can there be a fair appraisal of talent."

Capacity to earn money, went on the speaker, was no measure of talent. A money bag which a man made by exploitation at the expense of others was not an asset to the country. But a person who produced something useful, however commonplace, e. g. a table or a chair, added to the wealth of the country and was therefore an asset. It had become a fashion these days to attach exaggerated importance to academic education. It was also true that many of our distinguished public men, present and past, were drawn from the lawyer class. But it was a great mistake to think that Swaraj could be run with the help of academic talent alone. If all took to law, the country would be in a poor way. The country could do without a single lawyer but there would be a serious crisis if all the bhangis struck work for a single day. And yet this most useful member of society was dubbed as unclean and an inferior being. "Such is our topsyturvydom. India will need an army of trained workers, artisans, craftsmen, engineers, doctors and teachers to serve her people in the villages. We shall have to train them. That is what is being done here. I regard this work as being of first-class importance. A nation is not made great by a few distinguished personalities on the top but by raising the level of the whole mass of the people. Absence of outstanding personalities does not matter if the foundation is sure and strong. It is therefore of the utmost importance to strengthen the foundation. Gandhiji has done more than anybody else, to raise the level of the masses. But much more needs to be done in that direction. The students of today will be the teachers of tomorrow. If their training is neglected or otherwise defective, the foundation of Swaraj will be weak. The work that is being done here today, therefore, may not be outwardly very exciting or ostentatious but it is vital. It therefore delights me to see so many of you engaged in laying a solid foundation of the Swaraj to come."

THE RETURN OF THE NATIVE

When a man returns to his country after an exile of 30 years and more, for no other crime than love of the Motherland, he naturally becomes a legendary figure. In the case of Raja Mahendra Pratap, the legendary character is further strengthened by his bizarre appearance and still more bizarre personality. After numerous adventures in Afghanistan where he became an Afghan citizen, Germany, Russia and China, he found himself under Gen. Mac Arthur's custody in a war criminals' camp after the occupation of Japan by the American forces. In October last, when his fate hung in the balance, he occupied himself with drafting his plan of 'Universal Unity' which he sent to Gandhiji for publication. "Our Muslim brethren, those Indians who fought in the war, Princes and the English elements in the country can all co-operate in our Congress if we see the new changes in the world in the right perspective," he wrote. The manifesto was signed "M. Peter Pratap, Servant of Mankind, Founder of World Federation!" He himself refused to take part in the world war No. II, nor did he join hands with Netaji Bose or the late Shri Rash Behari Bose. In Japan he insisted on describing himself as a "Stateless subject" and thereby added to the difficulty of those who were trying to help him to return to India. He speaks English, German, Russian, French and Persian, besides several Indian languages. He believes in the unity of all religions and the religion of universal love after his own style. At Sevagram Ashram, when he came to see Gandhiji the other day, he recited at Gandhiji's invitation his cosmopolitan prayer, consisting of extracts from Hindu scriptures, Bible and Koran, in addition to the Buddhist prayer at the evening prayer gathering. At Wardha in Bajajwadi, where he was a guest with the Sardar, he forgot to eat his luncheon in reciting his prayer verses while others dined! A colourful if an eccentric personality, years ago he donated his fortune to finance the Prem Maha Vidyalaya at Brindaban of which he is the founder. His friends and workers of the Vidyalaya will be glad to welcome him back after such a prolonged absence. Sevagram, 19-8-'46

II

HIS SPIRITUAL LABORATORY

Utopias have a nasty knack of recoiling on the heads of their authors. In Swift's Utopia philosophers, scientists and mathematicians among them, made a mess of things. The scientists devoted all their time to "extracting sunbeams from cucumbers" or "growing grain from chaff", the days and nights of the philosophers were spent in inventing robot permutation and combination word-machines for producing philosophical systems to order, the mathematicians occupied themselves with abstruse mathematical speculations about the courses of the planets and the probable end of the world "till their eyes were fixed with horror"! The net result of it all, however, was that in the whole kingdom of Laputa not a wall stood erect, not a corner of a building but was crooked! Gandhiji is no Utopian. He is determined not to let his Ashram turn into another Laputa. It is no easy task that he has set to himself. "Politics I take easy," he once remarked. "They leave me unperturbed. For, I can cut my way through them by the 'sharp axe of detachment'." But the Ashram sucks him dry. It presents problems that would turn anybody's hair grey. Yet it has a fatal fascination for him. "I do not know why," he remarked on another occasion, "but whatever institution I touch, I end by converting it into an Ashram—I seem to know nothing else." The explanation is not far to seek. Truth and ahimsa with him are no cloistered virtues to be practised in a vacuum. They are meant to be of use to mankind in daily life.

The poet lamented that he found God in the "shining of the stars" and in the "flowering of the fields" but that "in His ways with men and world" he found Him not. As a votary of truth and ahimsa Gandhiji holds that he must realize his God of truth and ahimsa in his little world of Sevagram Ashram or not at all. It is his spiritual laboratory. He goes further and insists that he must be judged solely by his surroundings. "My truth and ahimsa should be deemed to have validity only to the extent that they are reflected in the people around me," he says. Naturally he has to tackle their taxing conundrums.

A HARD CASE

On our return to Sevagram Ashram after a few months' absence, one of the workers was found to have got mentally deranged. He was in that state when he first came. This was the second attack. He became uncontrollable and a decision had to be taken. The Civil Surgeon of Wardha was consulted. He said he could not keep him in the Civil Hospital but would look after him in the Jail Hospital. So in his own interest as well as in the interest of the Settlement, he had to be sent to confinement. For Gandhiji it was like drawing out a live tooth but there was no escape. He put his dilemma before the Ashram people. "He is a fine worker. After his recovery last year, he looked after the garden and kept the hospital accounts. He worked diligently and was happy in his work. Then he got malaria and was given a quinine injection because injection works quicker. He says the injection has gone to his head and is responsible for his mental affection. While I was working in my room this morning, I found him wandering to and fro outside, shouting and gesticulating. I went out to him and walked with him. He was quieted. But the moment I left him, he became uncontrollable again. He gets violent too and listens to no one. So he had to be sent to jail."

"It has naturally hurt me to think that one of our workers should be sent to jail. I may be asked: 'what about your Ramanama which you have claimed to be a cure-all?' Even in the face of this failure let me reiterate that my faith remains intact. Ramanama can never fail. The failure only means a lack in us. We must seek the cause of failure within us."

AHIMSA AND CLEANLINESS

Sanitation and cleanliness being the basic conditions of civilized life, great emphasis is laid upon them in the Ashram. But all sorts come there and some one, probably a raw newcomer, through ignorance or carelessness, wrongly used the latrine. It was brought to Gandhiji's notice. It grieved him. A mistake committed by any one member of society affected all the others. It was therefore everybody's duty to see that a latrine was always left clean and tidy after use. If proper care was taken, there should be no smell, no fly-breeding. Trench system for the disposal of night-soil had been held to blame for flies. He differed. Trench latrines with proper care should be perfectly safe.

In Bangalore in a hotel, Dr. Fowler used an interesting method. He collected night-soil in a reservoir. The solid and liquid matter was well mixed, then poured on to a mound and covered with dry earth from day to day. No one could guess whether the mound was just dry earth or something else. After due conversion, it was sold as manure, as clean looking as any. If fly-breeding could not be avoided, epidemics and diseases were bound to occur. Yet it was extraordinary to see how complacent our people were about it. The food on which a fly has sat, should be considered unfit for human consumption. It should be thrown away. But theirs was a poor country where the vast majority could not afford to throw away food. Therefore, it was their first duty in terms of ahimsa, to prevent fly-breeding at all cost.

The external cleanliness was only a step towards internal cleanliness. Dirt within was much more dangerous than dirt without. "We should be cent percent clean in our thoughts and actions. Otherwise, man becomes worse than the beast, for, a beast is a useful creature and deserves our respect and regard in its own place. An unclean man is undesirable in decent society."

PROBLEMS IN VILLAGE SANITATION

The fact that Sevagram is an unhealthy spot has always worried Gandhiji. It is situated in a hollow. The subsoil water rises almost to the ground level in the rainy season and creates problems in night-soil disposal, drinking water supply and malaria control. The incidence of malaria has grown less of late and health conditions on the whole have improved. Still Sevagram cannot be called a model, healthy village. On the 18th instant Dr. Sushila Nayyar, Secretary of the Advisory Medical Board under the Kasturba Gandhi National Memorial Trust scheme and Resident Doctor in charge of health arrangements in Sevagram Ashram and Village, called a meeting of doctor friends who had been kind enough to help her with their suggestions and guidance from time to time. Foremost among them was Dr. Jivraj Mehta who, in spite of his multifarious activities, always manages to find time for Sevagram. He has spanned the services of Dr. B. C. Dasgupta, the Health Officer of Bombay, Dr. Vishwanathan, the Malareologist for Bombay Presidency. Dr. Hassan, the new Public Health Minister of C. P. came with a batch of public Health Officers under him and they all went round the village and inspected its surroundings.

Thanks to the lack of co-ordination between the P.W.D. and the Public Health Department that characterizes our provincial administrations, the District Board has left a chain of straggling burrow pits on either side of the pucca road that they have built between Wardha and Sevagram. With a little foresight and planning, the chain of pits might have been a drainage canal and thus served a double purpose. As it is, burrow pits have become pest-holes. The water in them stagnates and breeds mosquitoes. Then there are a number of nullahs near about, leaving pools of stagnant water. The earth is black cotton soil which cracks in the dry sun after the rainy season and the water stagnates in the fissures and breeds mosquitoes.

As anti-malaria measures, the doctors recommended D.D.T. spraying of the houses in the village, leaving the regulation and desilting of nullahs to be handled as a land reclamation project by the department concerned.

As regards the disposal of night-soil, they were of the opinion that septic tanks were the only solution if we want to eliminate the bhangis as a class. They were strongly opposed to trench latrines except as an emergency measure during festivals and the like. Whatever the possibilities of trench latrines theoretically, in practice, it led to fly-breeding and in a place like Sevagram with high subsoil water, contamination of water was bound to occur. For disposal of refuse and cowdung they suggested composting. As for pure water supply, they suggested that protected wells should be built while other wells whose water supply was not safe, should be filled in.

The proposals were placed before Gandhiji by Dr. Jivraj Mehta. Gandhiji while thanking them all for the trouble they had taken, said, he was afraid, elaborate schemes costing large sums of money would not do. He wanted Sevagram to serve as a model and therefore, he wanted nothing there, which could not be multiplied in the 700,000 villages. If they could do that satisfactorily even in one village, it might solve the problem of the other villages of India. Otherwise progress would be at a snail's pace and ambitious planning in a few villages would only stand out as a monument of costly futility.

The project of land reclamation was therefore for the time being put into cold storage. D. D. T. spraying was already being carried on. Gandhiji suggested that it should be intensified. The Government could use the place as a centre for experimental survey and malaria control. They could build a few septic tanks as an experiment but he felt sure that trenching, properly carried out, must remain the solution in the vast majority of cases. Shri Aryanayakam of the Talimi Sangh had offered to make an experiment to see if trenching could not be done without fly-breeding.

UNTO THIS LAST

The doctors left in the evening somewhat nonplussed. Was it not Eugene Debbs who said that so long as there was an unreclaimed criminal, his business was to identify himself with him? A little incident that happened on the morning of the 25th, the day of Gandhiji's departure from Sevagram, furnished an insight into Gandhiji's mind. An Ashram inmate had come to say good-bye. He wanted to touch his feet. "Why should you want to touch my feet?" said Gandhiji. "Millions cannot do that and what millions cannot afford, we should voluntarily renounce. I go so far as to say that if ahimsa cannot be practised by the millions, I have no use for it for myself. But if they did not want to, although they could, I would hold on to it, even if I were all alone. People say that ahimsa is only for the saint and the seer. I think otherwise. If what they say is right, it ceases to have any value in my eyes. Similarly, if it were open to me alone to desire and strive to live for 125 years, I would not entertain that desire. But everybody can and should desire to live for 125 years, for the service of God and His creation. Self-interest too demands that. For, what would life be worth in a world, in which I am the sole survivor of all those I have worked with and known?"

Gandhiji had two little functions during the week with the trainees of the Hindustani Prachar School and of the Talimi Sangh respectively. But of these more in my next.

On the train to Delhi, 25-8-'46

PYARELAL

WE ARE ALL INDIANS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A Roman Catholic student from Goa had the sad experience of being told by some of his fellow students in Bombay that he was a Portuguese and therefore a foreigner. When he told them that the Roman Catholics of Goa had castes just like the Hindus, he was not believed. These transitory lapses will take place whilst we are shedding our narrownesses and claiming all to be free Indians, slaves neither of the British, nor of the Portuguese nor any other foreign rule. If the same students were wisely handled, they would be proud to know their friend as an Indian and not as a Goan and be known themselves as Indians, not Bombayites. Everyone's religion is his own concern but his nationality is a corporate thing, carrying with it important and far-reaching consequences. That even among converts, there are castes is a reflection upon Hinduism and should set every Hindu athinking and make him become, with me, a bhangi.
Sevagram, 23-8-'46

CONTENTS		PAGE
ALTERNATIVE TO INDUSTRIALISM	... M. K. GANDHI	285
THE PLACE OF MEDICINE IN NAI TALIM	... M. K. GANDHI	285
CONFUSION ABOUT RAMANAMA	M. K. GANDHI	286
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI	... M. K. GANDHI	287
IF I WERE THE MINISTER	... M. K. GANDHI	288
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	289
WE ARE ALL INDIANS	... M. K. GANDHI	292
NOTES:
GOA	... M. K. G.	286
COCHIN	... M. K. G.	286
MOVE ON	... M. K. G.	286
ENGLISH NOTICES	... M. K. G.	286
HINDUSTANI PRACHAR EXAMINATIONS	M. K. G.	287
KASTURBA GANDHI NATIONAL MEMORIAL TRUST	... SHYAMLAL	287

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad
Subscription Rates—INLAND: One year, Rs. 6; Six months, Rs. 3; FOREIGN: One year Rs. 8 or 14. sh. or $, 3.

HARIJAN

16 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 31

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1946

TWO ANNAS

SALES TAX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

I have received many letters in regard to the Sales Tax Act of the Bombay Presidency. Many arguments advanced against it are, in my opinion, thoughtless. Nevertheless, I placed some of the complaints before the Finance Minister. Shri Vaikunthbhai Mehta is a cautious and conscientious Minister. He has sent me a full reply.

It appears that this Act was framed before the popular Government came in. The present Ministry have made some essential changes in it. The letters received by me were full of criticism giving the impression that the present Government was wilful, indifferent to public opinion and the tax was already in vogue. As a matter of fact, not only has the collection of the Sales Tax not begun, but it has been postponed till October 1st and may be delayed still further if need be. Moreover, many articles of necessary use have been exempted, thereby showing that the Government has paid due attention to public objections and inconvenience. I am aware that there are people who hold that there should be no Sales Tax at all. A great deal has been said in favour of this view. But no government can exist if it were to listen to abstract objections. In other words, it is wisdom, in such cases, not to raise basic issues.

The Sales Tax is in vogue in many provinces. The main criterion in judging any tax should be that it does not hit the poor. It should also be seen that the money raised thereby, is used for the public good.

A popular ministry is responsible to the legislatures and cannot do anything without their consent. Every elected member in a popular legislature is responsible to his voters. Therefore, the voter who represents the public should ponder well before embarking on any criticism of the government of his creation. Moreover, one bad habit of the people should be borne in mind. They do not like any tax whatsoever. Where there is good government, the tax-payer gets full return for his money as, for example, the water tax in cities. No tax-payer could get water on his own for the same payment. But even so, and in spite of the fact that the tax is levied by the popular will, tax-payers always resent even paying such taxes. It is, of course, true that one cannot prove the benefit of all taxes as easily as the one I have cited as an example. But as society grows in size and complexity and the field of service also grows, it is difficult to explain to the individual tax-payer, how he gets his return for any particular tax. This much, however, is clear that taxes as a whole should stand for the general benefit of society. If this were not so, the argument that taxes were levied by popular will would not hold. To the extent that we are still under foreign rule, the Government is not wholly responsible to the people. But in the Provinces today the Governments are popular up to a large extent and we must judge the Sales Tax accordingly.

New Delhi, 29-8-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

A SILVER LINING

It is an ill wind that blows no one any good. If a full account of all the kind acts of neighbourliness were to be recounted, it would probably balance the dark deeds of violence perpetrated by the men who had temporarily sunk to the level of beasts recently in Calcutta. For if man has the divine in him, he should inherently be good. The following letter from a Mahomedan is heartening:

"I live in Ballygunje Place. On August 18th my house was threatened but my Hindu friends kept the mob in check. Towards evening, however, the educated Hindus of the locality were losing control. Mine is a family of 35, mostly women and children. It was not possible to remove them with excited hooligans running about. My family and I, therefore, took shelter in the house of a Hindu neighbour while another took charge of my belongings.

"The rowdy element got scent of it and threatened my friend. 'Turn them out, you cannot save them', was their demand. 'I know I cannot save them, but I can die before they are touched,' was the firm reply. Attempts were made by some of my League friends to remove me and my family from this locality but I refused to leave my place of shelter, backed by all the cultured Hindus of Ballygunje Place.

"My brother has two shops in this locality; these were saved by the Hindus while my brother and nephews worked in the local volunteer corps to fight hooligans whoever they might be.

I am convinced that we Muslims and Hindus can live together peacefully unless a clash is engineered."

Such instances of Muslims harbouring their Hindu friends are also on record. If all were to realize that the bond of humanity transcends all barriers of caste, creed and race, we would make life worth living and banish the spectre of fear which today haunts not only individuals and communities, but whole nations and is the root cause of hate.

New Delhi, 30-8-'46

A. K.

THE ECONOMICS OF KHADI.

In the issue of the 27th of June of the Eastern Economist, a journal edited by the well known economist Dr. P. S. Lokanathan, there is an article entitled 'Khadi Economy'. After giving figures of various kinds, this article seeks to prove that if the required quota of man power were to be employed in the production of Khadi necessary to clothe India, there would not be enough persons left for the other essential services such as railway, police, education, medicine etc." As a subsidiary industry for seasonal occupation, such as agriculture, Charkha certainly has a place among the cottage industries. But as an economic policy for the nation it spells pauperism."

The chief points raised in support of the argument are :

(a) India needs 800 crores square yards of cloth on the basis of 20 square yards per capita consumption.

(b) 3-30 crores of workers will be required to spin the necessary yarn.

(c) On the basis that a worker winds, warps and weaves  $2\frac{1}{2}$  yards cloth in 8 hours per day, 1.06 crores of weavers will be required.

(d) Ginning will occupy .16 crore, carding etc. about .42 crore, bringing the total man power necessary for only the manufacturing processes of Khadi to roughly 5 crores. In addition, 330 lakhs Charkhas will have to be renewed annually for which lakhs of carpenters will be required. 30 lakhs of workmen will have to be reckoned on for making 5 lakhs of looms. 55 lakhs of bales of 400 lbs cotton will be required. The labour required for producing, collecting and transporting this huge quantity of cotton and for making all the above-mentioned accessories can be safely estimated at at least 7 crores, representing 18% of the total population. If 40 per cent of the population is reckoned as the labouring quota, 16 crores may be taken as a rough figure for India. If Khadi employs seven out of these sixteen, only nine crores are left to grow food, build houses, exploit mines, govern, police and protect the country, provide health and educational facilities etc. Since agriculture alone absorbs more than 11 crores, the production of cloth and food between them, will take up more than the entire working population, what about the other services ?

We will try to answer the above arguments one by one. Let us take weaving first. The writer has stated that 1 crore 6 lakhs of weavers are required. If 'weavers' include all the helpers that a weaver requires, the figure is correct. Even before the war, there were a crore of weavers in India, so that there is not much increase of labour required in this section. Weavers today are not getting enough yarn to fulfil their needs. Khadi production would at once absorb all these unemployed.

The same applies to the argument regarding the production of spinning wheels, looms and other accessories. We have more than the requisite quota of looms and spinning wheels in India today. No new ones need be manufactured immediately. Moreover, a spinning wheel lasts a lifetime. Even if some new Charkhas have to be manufactured to begin with, there will never be any need to produce them by the lakh annually. Only a certain amount of repairing will be required.

The fact is that no special or greater number of artisans is required for the manufacture of wheels, looms etc. The experience of the A. I. S. A. shows that wherever Khadi is being produced and the production is increasing, the very persons who produce and repair agricultural implements produce and repair Khadi implements too. These artisans do not now get full time work. But if wheels and looms were to ply in every village, they would certainly get wholetime occupation.

We will not have to start cotton-growing in order to produce 800 crores square yards of Khadi and, therefore, the question of more labour for producing, collecting and transporting 55 lakhs of bales of cotton does not really arise. India today produces, collects and transports more than 60 lakhs bales of cotton. On the contrary, our plan is for every village to produce enough cotton for its own needs. If this is done, the cost and labour required by big textile millowners and businessmen, middlemen etc. for transport, ginning and pressing factories will all be ipso facto eliminated.

There remains the argument of 4 crores persons being required for spinning, carding, ginning etc. But the question of employing labour at the rate of 8 hours per day for this purpose does not come into the picture of Khadi economics. All this work will be done within the orbit of self-sufficiency and as a subsidiary occupation. We want every person to spin at least half an hour daily during his or her leisure hours. On the basis that we have a labouring population of 16 crores, we shall get 8 crores hours of work from them annually. The number of those who do not do outside labour, is 24 crores which includes children, the aged and women. If we remove from this number those who are too old and sick and all children under seven years of age, say 12 crores, we shall still have 12 crores in addition to the 16, who can give at least an hour per day to spinning and carding. Moreover, included in the 16 crores are 11 crores agriculturists who are idle for at least 3 months in the year (giving us on an average 2 hours daily in addition) and who can also help to spin and card. In this way we can easily get 42 crores hours of work from all these persons instead of the 32 we need. The 12 crores mentioned above can, if needed, give us more than one hour daily from their leisure hours, so that we can really produce more than the assumed quota without drawing on any further man power.

It will thus be obvious that no more man power than is already available, will be required for cotton growing to weaving for the whole of India. For spinning, carding and ginning can be done during the leisure hours of the general populace. No diversion of labour from other utility services is, therefore, necessary. In fact labour engaged in ginning, pressing factories etc. and textile mills to the tune of 10 lakhs will be released for other work.

Finally it may be claimed that the entire economic structure of India can and should be based on Khadi. If it is based on centralized large-scale industry, the villages of India will have no peace, no well-being and no plenty.

That Khadi is neither as beautiful nor as enduring as mill cloth and that it is much more expensive are all arguments that have been dealt with before on several occasions and, therefore, need not be refuted again here.

(From Harijansevak)

KRISHNADAS GANDHI

A WAIL FROM GOA

Shri Purushottam Kakodkar in the course of a Hindi letter dated 12-8-'46 to Gandhiji from Panjim Prison, Goa, describes how, while he was talking with a friend, on the main road, he was arrested at about 9 p. m. on Friday the 9th August by one Mr. Figardo, a Portuguese Police Official of Madgaon. On the 10th at about 10 o'clock he was brought under armed police escort to the Mamlatdar's kutchery, where he was interrogated by the Mamlatdar. In the course of examining him, the Mamlatdar lost his temper, used foul language and threatened "to do him to death." The same evening he was brought to Panjim Prison. According to his narration, food is served there twice a day, at noon and at night. Every time, it consists of rice, literally a handful, with little dal splashed on it, and a couple of spoonfuls of vegetables in addition to one or two papads. This is called "half ration", adha khana. When he drew the attention of a Portuguese Police Official to it, he was told that it was according to the rules and that he had no authority to give more. Even this provision is for 'beggars', not for those who have the means.

Shri Kakodkar proceeds.

"I took this food at midday today, although it was altogether inadequate. I have not committed any offence against society, yet have been made a compulsory guest of the Government. Whom can I ask to send me food from outside? I do not feel justified in sitting here like a drone and eating food provided by the labour of others. I am going to tell the authorities that I am prepared to work and that they must provide me with proper food."

Referring to conditions of jail administration, he says that sometimes, for hours, no watchman appears on the scene. The fault is not the watchman's but of the administration. The result is that prisoners who are locked up in the cells cannot attend to even the morning appointments regularly. For instance, when he gets up at 4-30 a. m. no watchman is anywhere to be seen and so he has to wait till 7 or 7-15 a. m. when alone he can answer the call of nature. Shri Kakodkar adds that he is suffering from piles which have flared up since his arrest owing to starvation, sleeplessness and too much chillies in the food.

New Delhi, 1-9-'46

PYARELAL

Errata :

(1) In Harijan of 18-8-'46, p. 261, column 1, para 3, line 2, read 'long discipleship' instead 'love discipleship'.

(2) Same number, same page, column 2, para 1, line 5, delete the word 'unaided'.

ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI

ENGLISH

HINDUSTANI

Abominable adj. मकरुह, नफरत (घृणा) के काबिल।
मकरो, फ़रत (ग़हरना) के काबिल

Abound v. भरपूर होना, मालामाल होना। भरपूर होना, मालामाल होना

Abridge v. खुलासा करना, घटाना, संक्षेप करना।
ख़लासा, ग़ैताना, संक्षेप करना

Abrupt adj. अचानक, यकायक। अचानक, यकायक

Abscess n. फोड़ा। फोड़ा

Absence n. गैरहाजिरी, अभाव (श्री० का०)।
ग़ैरहाजिरी, अभाव (श्री० का०)

Absolute adj. पूरा पूरा, पूरन (श्री०)।
पूरा पूरा, पूरन (श्री०)

Absolve v. माफ़ी देना, बरी करना।
माफ़ी देना, बरी करना

Absorb v. चूसना, घुल मिल जाना, सोख लेना, घुल मिलाना।
चूना, ग़ल मिल जाना, सूख लेना, ग़ल मिलाना

Abstain v. दूर रहना, बचना।
दूर रहना, बचना

Abstract v. निकालना।
निकालना

Abstract n. खुलासा।
ख़लासा

Abstract adj. खयाली।
ख़याली

Absurd adj. बेतुका, लचर, फ़सूल।
बेतुका, लचर, फ़सूल

Abundance n. रेलपेल, बहुतायत, बहुतायत (का०)।
रेलपेल, बहुतायत, बहुतायत (का०)

Abuse v. बुरामाला कहना, गाली देना, दुरुपयोग करना।
बुरामाला कहना, गाली देना, दुरुपयोग करना

Abuse n. बुरी रीत, गाली।
बुरी रीत, गाली

Abyss n. खड्ड, गढ़ा, रसातल।
खड्ड, गढ़ा, रसातल

Accent n. लहजा, जोर, भार।
लहजा, जोर, भार

Accept v. मानना, कबूल करना।
मानना, कबूल करना

Access n. पहुँच, रास्ता।
पहुँच, रास्ता

Accident n. वारदात, अकस्मात, घटना (श्री०)।
वारदात, अकस्मात, घटना (श्री०)

Accidentally n. adv. अचानक।
अचानक

Accommodation n. जगह, गुंजायिश।
जगह, गुंजायिश

Accompany v. संग होना या जाना, साथ हो लेना (का०)।
संग होना या जाना, साथ हो लेना (का०)

Accomplice n. साथी (गनाहमें)।
साथी (गनाहमें)

Accomplish v. पूरा करना।
पूरा करना

Accomplished adj. निपुण, कमाल, खूबीवाला।
निपुण, कमाल, खूबीवाला

According to prep. मुताबिक, अनुसार (श्री०)।
मुताबिक, अनुसार (श्री०)

According as prep. जैसे।
जैसे

Account n. हिसाब, बयान।
हिसाब, बयान

On account of कारण, वजहसे।
कारण, वजहसे

Account for v. हिसाब देना, जवाब देना, ठिकाने लगाना।
हिसाब देना, जवाब देना, ठिकाने लगाना

Accumulate v. जिकड़ा करना या होना।
जिकड़ा करना या होना

Accuse v. माथे थोपना (किसी के), जिलजाम लगाना।
माथे थोपना (किसी के), जिलजाम लगाना

Accustom v. आदत डालना।
आदत डालना

Achieve v. पा लेना, हासिल करना (का०)।
पा लेना, हासिल करना (का०)

Acid adj. n. खट्टा, तेजाब।
खट्टा, तेजाब

Acknowledge v. रसीद देना, पहुँच लिखना, मानना।
रसीद देना, पहुँच लिखना, मानना

HARIJAN

September 8

1946

ANTIDOTE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

After giving a graphic description of the recent unfortunate and disgraceful happenings in Calcutta, a writer asks: "What is our duty in such circumstances? The Congress gives no clear instructions to the rank and file in such crises. Sermons on non-violence from afar are of little use. To have offered non-violent resistance would have meant allowing all property to be destroyed and every Hindu to be killed."

The Congress Working Committee has given the clearest possible lead in the last sentence of its resolution published in the newspapers. Fratricide will not abate by "intimidation and violence but by mutual understanding, friendly discussion and, if necessary, by agreed arbitration." One does not need to believe in non-violence as a creed to perceive the truth of this practical proposition. If through deliberate courage the Hindus had died to a man, that would have been deliverance of Hinduism and India and purification of Islam in this land.

As it was, a third party had to intervene in order to still mutual savagery. Neither the Muslims nor the Hindus concerned have gained by the intervention. Supposing that the Calcutta virus extends to the whole of India and British gunpowder keeps the two from stabbing one another, the British power or its substitute will be in possession of India for a long time to come. The length will be measured by the period required by the parties coming to sanity. It will come either by an exhausting mutual fight, independent of the foreign element or by one party eschewing violence in spite of heaviest odds. Successful mutual strife is obviously impossible in the present state of general ignorance of the use of modern weapons and their inaccessibility. Non-violence does not require any outside or outward training. It simply requires the will not to kill even in retaliation and the courage to face death without revenge. This is no sermon on ahimsa but cold reason and the statement of a universal law. Given the unquenchable faith in the law, no provocation should prove too great for the exercise of forbearance. This I have described as non-violence of the brave.

Unfortunately for us, we are strangers to the non-violence of the brave on a mass scale. Some even doubt the possibility of the exercise of non-violence by groups, much less by masses of people. They restrict its exercise to exceptional individuals. Only, mankind can have no use for it if it is always reserved only for individuals.

Be that as it may, this much is clear that if the people are probably not ready for the exercise of non-violence of the brave, they must be ready for the use of force in self-defence. There should be no camouflage. Self-defence must be pure and simple. Then too it must never be cowardly or crude. It must, therefore, never be secret. Such is stabbing in the back and evading detection. I am conscious of the fact that we are a people unarmed and untrained in the use of arms. Opinions will differ as to whether it is good that we are in that position. There can be no denying the fact that no one needs training in the use of arms in self-defence. What is wanted for the purpose is strong arms and stronger will.

Doing injury to another is obviously violence but harbouring injury to another and yet unwillingness from cowardice to defend oneself or one's neighbour is also violence and probably worse than the first.

What then are the leaders to do? What are the new Ministers to do? They must ever seek to attain communal harmony — never under threats, ever for its own sake. I regard a Muslim or any Non-Hindu as my blood brother, not in order to please him but because he is born of the same mother Hind as I am. He does not cease to be my brother because he may hate or disown me. I must woo him even, it may be, in spite of himself. The new Ministers must resolve never to use British troops, no matter what their hue is, not even the police trained by them. They are not our enemies. But they have been hitherto used not to help the people but to keep them under the foreign yoke. They should now, as they can, be used for constructive purposes. The military are specially qualified for such work. They are trained and expected to bring into being canvas cities in a moment. They know what it is to procure and keep clean water and make perfect sanitary arrangements. No doubt, they know how to kill and be killed in the act. The public know this part of their work only too well. But it is by no means the most substantial part of their work. It is the background which should be prized, advertised and followed. The animal part of it is unhuman, the other part is essentially human and clean. Let us copy it and humanize the troops if we can. The attempt is worth making. It can only be made by those who are not deceived by the glamour that hangs round them and the awe they inspire. This is possible only when we have the courage to face death without revenge or retaliation in mind or deed.

New Delhi, 2-9-'46

For Readers

The 'Question Box' has become a regular feature of the Harijan. It tries to resolve the doubts of questioners as far as possible. But the post often contains questions which have been answered in one form or the other on more than one occasion. Readers should study the contents of 'Question Box' carefully.

Then there are letters asking for medical advice for sick people. The desire is there to answer such questions. But the fulfilment must take time. It is difficult too to satisfy incomplete postal inquiries. Ailing correspondents should wait awhile.

New Delhi, 2-9-'46

M. K. G.

HINDUSTANI V. URDU AND HINDI

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A Bombay Government circular of 16-8-'39 reads :

"It has been observed that the word Hindustani is being used indifferently for Hindi or Hindustani. Please note that Hindustani is different and distinct from both Hindi and Urdu, and when a reference to that language is to be made, it should be made as Hindustani only."

On 9th October 1940 a press note was issued :

"In September 1938 the Government of Bombay announced their decision to introduce the study of Hindustani in the schools of the Province. Steps were accordingly taken to implement that decision and the language is being taught in the primary schools, secondary schools and in the training institutions. In actual practice the teaching of the language in the schools has raised certain difficulties which have to be considered. The chief of them are lack of literature in the language, as it has yet to develop and the absence of suitable text books for use in schools. The Hindustani text books now in use, have been found to be defective, both in regard to the language used in them, which is said to contain too many words of Hindi origin and in regard to the subject matter of the lessons included in them, some of which are stated to be unsuitable for Muslim pupils. Besides, both Urdu and Hindustani have so much of a common vocabulary, that it has been suggested that it is unnecessary to insist on the teaching of Hindustani in Urdu schools. The Government having carefully considered the whole question have now directed that though there is no serious objection to the teaching of Hindustani in other institutions, Urdu educational institutions in the Province, i. e. the primary and secondary schools and training institutions, where the medium of instruction is Urdu, should be exempted from the inclusion of such teaching in the curriculum."

Another circular issued in 1941 exempts Hindi schools from the teaching of Hindustani, thus leaving Hindu schools where the medium is other than Hindi or Urdu for teaching Hindustani. What is the present Government of the Province, which is based on popular will, to do?

The answer is contained in the admission that the present Provincial Government is based on popular will. If the Hindi schools wish to have Hindustani, the national language, taught in the primary and secondary schools, it should be taught. Naturally the question has to be decided by the parents of the children, learning in these schools. If they do not want it and an attempt is made to impose it by force, the claim for being a popular Government cannot be sustained. I should certainly advise the parents to want their children to be taught it. It should never be forgotten that Hindustani is essentially a cross between Hindi and Urdu and written in both the scripts. If the parents want either only Hindi or Urdu and only one script, they cannot impose it on an unbelieving or unwilling Government. Either party has freedom of action.

The question whether Hindustani is or can be a national form of speech is irrelevant at this stage. The argument has, moreover, been examined often enough in previous issues of the Harijan.

Sevagram, 25-8-'46

NOT BY FORCE BUT BY FRIENDLINESS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Mr. S. Wolff writes from Palestine :

"I rejoiced very much, when I found in the Jerusalem newspaper Palestine Post, last Monday, the kind, peaceful words you had published in your Harijan just before the last most terrible outrage on 'King David' Hotel caused more than 150 casualties. Of course, I do very well understand your requirement towards my countrymen, that 'adversity would teach them lessons of peace', but, alas! most of the people do not understand this way. On the contrary, adversity inspires them to additional outrage of hate and anger and blind revenge on anyone in their reach, whether he is actually guilty or innocent in their terrible disaster and suffering.

"The state of these poor (indeed very poor!) resembles the desperate state of a man who neither believes nor hopes anything any longer and 'fights for life or death' because he 'has nothing more to lose' (as they themselves use to express it) and therefore, prefer to perform all that can be performed in order, at least, to die like 'heroes', not like 'coward nothing-doers'. Of course, they do not believe and can never be made to believe in your sublime weapon of holiness and Satyagraha although, as I once wrote you (on the 26th December, 1938), this is in full agreement with the views of our holy ancestors, and they ought to accept it even from the point of view of their own tradition, and I am quite sure, you do understand it. I remember that several years ago, you told or wrote (it was published here in one of the Hebrew newspapers) in a similar way, that we Jews have, it is true, absolutely no right to impose ourselves over Palestine, but if we nevertheless have the intrinsic desire to come to the land of our ancestors out of aspiration to fulfil here the holy principles of our great Prophets, we should do it only by trying to conquer the hearts of our neighbours and the whole of mankind through love, not by trying to impose ourselves over Palestine by the help of naked force."

Sevagram, 21-8-'46

THE GOSPEL OF SELFLESS ACTION
OR

THE GITA ACCORDING TO GANDHI

By Mahadev Desai

With Gandhiji's Foreword

Price Rs. Four, Postage Nine Annas

Available at :

Navajivan, Karyalaya, — P. B. 105, Kalupur, Ahmedabad; — 130, Princess Street, Bombay, 2; — 299 Sadashiv Peth, Poona 2; — Kanpith Bazar, Surat; — Lakhajiraj Road, Rajkot; — 641/11 Kucha Mahajani, Chandni Chowk, Delhi.

ARMAMENTS—AT WHAT COST?

I

Referring, in 1937, to the cost of rearmament on which many nations had launched before the war and in anticipation of it, John Gunther, in his Inside Europe gave the following figures of the cost of some of the pieces of armament:

"Bullets do not cost much. But if you shoot one million rounds an hour at £6 per thousand, the figures mount up. A rifle does not cost much—perhaps £5. But equip an army of one million men, and you have spent £5,000,000. A machine gun costs about £128. The French have about forty thousand of them. A 37 mm. field-gun costs about £200, and each shell about £3. The famous French 75's come to about £1,600 each. They are expensive and intricate, with fuses built like watches. Their shells cost £5 each, and in a single bombardment, some millions may be fired. A big tank, complete, costs about £16,000. A bombing plane may diminish your budget £20,000. A modern cruiser costs £2,200,000, an aircraft carrier £3,800,000, and a big battleship almost £6,000,000."

And he went on to say:

"The world according to the League of Nations, spent £835,360,000 on armament in 1934. In one year mind you. This sum is too astronomical for ready comprehension. . . . This figure more than doubled itself in two years. In 1937 the world bill for arms, was at least £2,000,000,000, believe it or not."

This was before the war. Since the outbreak of hostilities in 1939, the figures kept mounting up at such a speed that men lost count of them. To take but two instances, Britain was reported, at the end of 1941, to be spending on the war over £13 million per day. "The British Government is spending £48000,000 a day," wrote Time on January 5, 1942; and in U. S. A., according to the same authority, the Government spending, in December 1941, "reached a level of $72,000,000 each business day." The first United States budget for war expenses for the fiscal year 1943 (beginning July 1, 1942) was for $58,927,992,300, and the actual war expenses in the preceding year were $52,786,186,000, which was equivalent to $3,295 per hour, and was more than one-half of the estimated national income. President Roosevelt, in presenting the budget before the Congress said on January 6, 1942: "War costs money. So far we have hardly even begun to pay for it." Referring to the taxation that these expenses would require, Time made a cryptic remark, "The U. S. was going to have to pay through the nose" (Jan. 19, 1942).†

* The Singapore naval base "had cost the British Empire $400,000,000 and 19 years." Yet, at the time of the Japanese invasion, it was found that "it was useless, and so it had been evacuated before the first Japanese troops were sighted." The battleship Normandie (renamed the Lafayette after its capture by the U. S. A.), which was burnt in an accidental fire in an American harbour, was "a ship into which the French had poured $60,000,000 and some 2,500,000 man-days of labour."—Time, Feb. 16, 1942.

† "The President this week signed the most whopping appropriations bill of all time in any nation: a $26,495,265,474

II

Arms and ammunition, tanks and aeroplanes are destroyed, every day in modern warfare, at a rate which is incomprehensible. New models and designs are invented at such a feverish speed that armaments become obsolete before they are long in use. For it is not enough to manufacture them at a rapid rate or in large numbers: they must also be superior in destructive capacity to the enemy's armaments. As an American authority on aerial warfare (S. Paul Johnstone) said, "Military design progress follows a zigzag course—one side or the other obtaining a temporary advantage, shortly followed by improvement of design by the other side."

Of this race for the improvements in designs, an American military authority said four years ago:

"Man does not live by bread alone, nor do armies win by munitions. That nation which would impose its will upon another, or resist such imposition, must possess munitions not only in stupendous quantity, but of excellent quality, latest design, and operated by corps upon corps of super-specialists."†

Yet quality by itself does not suffice. Numbers are also as important. Said another American writer, Keith Ayling, in an article on 'The Truth about Air Power', in Harper's Magazine for February 1942: "Number is the keynote of air superiority. Produce the finest bomber in the world, and it is merely useful when you have a thousand of the type. At ten thousand it becomes efficient, at twenty thousand it is the super machine the designer intended." (Twenty thousand of only one type, in warfare where several types have to be put in action at a time!)

Calvin Goddard, the authority cited above, agrees in this opinion about the paramount need of large numbers in addition to the most up-to-date designs, and he gives a revealing account of how the Allies, in spite of their stupendous preparations, spread over a number of years, suffered from a woeful lack of both in the various types of armaments:

"In the fall of 1939, and throughout 1940, the German military machine met these requirements, while every object of its rude attentions proved appropriation bill to pay for the addition of 25,000 planes to the Navy's sky force and to enlarge the two-ocean Navy."

"In January (1942), the month when Donald Nelson's new War Production Board was set up, the Government cleared $11,652,000,000 in defence contracts—as much as in the four preceding months. . . . The Government actually spent $2,276,000,000 on arms—nearly $300,000,000 more than in December. To meet present production goals, by the end of the year, the Government must be spending more than $5,000,000,000 a month."—Time, Feb. 16, 1942.

"(In America) the sudden urgent demand for an unlimited number of planes has started a process of expansion which will increase factory floor space threefold, the number of workers fivefold, and multiply fabulously the monthly production figures."—Alden Stevens in The Nation (New York) Oct. 18, 1941.

"To train an army flier for three years in the United States Army, including salaries, equipment, and instructors, is said to cost $100,000 per man."—Haldore Hanson: Human Endeavour (1939) p. 158.

† Encyclopaedia Britannica—Book of the year 1941

lacking in one or more. All were inferior in air power, whereas air superiority was a sine qua non to success. It likewise soon became apparent that no contestant could gain and hold vital objectives, unless possessed of tanks, in numbers almost limitless. France boasted thousands, but mostly of the world war vintage. Unable to steel itself to the financial sacrifice incident to their replacement with others of modern design, France puttered along with what it had.* Britain was almost equally lacking in the foresight necessary to the junking of obsolete equipment, or to the adequate production of new and better types. Though making a magnificent gesture at rearmament, it remained a gesture only. Came the day of judgment, and the Swastika floated over Paris."

So much with regard to quality. As to numbers, he says:

"What miraculous properties were to be found in the munitions of 1940 as against those of 1939 — of 1914-18? None. In weapons themselves there was little new or startling. It was in their mass employment that the revolutionary appeared. In contrast with the homoeopathic pills in which formerly administered, force was now applied in heroic doses. An objective against which in 1918 an infantry attack would have been implemented by perhaps a score of tanks and as many aeroplanes, to succeed or fail after hours of bloody stalemate, with unnumbered casualties on both sides, was in 1940 overwhelmed in a matter of minutes by literally hundreds of bombing planes, followed by as many tanks, almost without loss to the attacker."

It should not surprise us that France was "unable to steel itself to the financial sacrifice, incident to their replacement with others of modern design," and that it "puttered along with what it had", when we bear in mind the figures that each type of armament would cost to make.** Moreover it had already spent huge amounts on the Maginot Line, and reposed a faith in it that proved pathetic. The result was, Calvin Goddard goes on to say:

"Germany gave short shrift to the modest fleets of Holland (200 ships), Belgium (400), and France (1200). And, as an example of what could happen, those who defied German will, Germany razed in two short hours (12 noon to 2 p. m., May 14, 1940), in a succession assaults by massed flights of bombers, no less than 26,000 buildings in the city of Rotterdam, a metropolis of 600,000, * "France," it has been said, "was prepared in 1914 for the war of 1871, and in 1937, France is perfectly prepared — for the war of 1914" — John Gunther (1937).

** "Just before the war started, according to the Federal Reserve bulletin for December, 1941 Britain's gold and dollar resources aggregated $4,483,000,000. Today (i. e. after two years of the war) there is only $547,000,000 available in this country (U. S. A.) with which the British Government can meet the many disbursements, not included under Lend-Lease.—Keith Hutchinson in The Nation dated March 7, 1942. Britain, which was till then, a creditor country, became a debtor country.

this after the Dutch Commander had made the official signal of surrender." *

This, however, pales into insignificance before the destruction of Berlin and other German cities on which thousands of tons of bombs were dropped by American bombers night after night, and the destruction of Hiroshima by a single atom bomb. And yet the atom bomb is not the last word in destructive warfare. It was said by Napoleon that the essential conditions of winning a war were: "First, money; second, money; and third, money." The truth of this remark is amply borne out by the events of the recent world war. §

Baroda, 12-6-'46

C. S.

WORK AS EDUCATION

"Work is or can be a very powerful educational factor."

— The Christian Newsletter of August 8, 1945 under the caption War and the School.

This is what Gandhiji has always been saying. By now a majority of those who have cared to think over the problem have no hesitation in admitting that education through work, meaning correlating knowledge to work, is the best way of imparting it. But perhaps few will be prepared to find that work itself without a word of correlated knowledge, is education, and education of the highest order. We had a chance of trying this out, in the Sevagram Basic School, with the seventh grade boys. The stress and storm through which the country passed after 9th August, 1942, the fact that the present batch was the first undergoing training under the basic scheme and constantly changing teachers, had left the boys in an almost wild state. It should be remembered that the experiment was confined to the cotton processes required in spinning and weaving. As the material was raw, its effects under efficient and scientific supervision were bound to be more pronounced. Again fortunately we were in a hurry to find out the standard reached by these students in the various processes, from the cleaning of the cotton to the manufacture of cloth, so that we might be able to plan for their Post-Basic Studies. So practically for nearly five hours daily, the boys were doing pure craft-work, under what are called factory conditions, i. e. keyed up to produce their maximum. The word 'factory' need not shock anyone in that, educationally the experiment proved a success.

Economically the result may be summed up as follows:

*Speaking of the Nankai University at Tientsin (China), Haldore Hanson says: "Rockefeller had invested $250,000 in its irreplaceable libraries and research institutes . . . All afternoon the planes shuttled back and forth. By nightfall the U. S. $2,000,000 University had been reduced to shattered stonework, resembling some ancient Babylonian city. What 5,000 years did to Babylon, the Japanese army accomplished in five hours." (Op. Cit., p. 64).

§ Most military officers agree that, if Napoleon should return to Europe today with the finest of his troops, he would be defeated by any second rate power, say Hungary or Rumania. Present-day armies have pushed Napoleon's style of warfare back to the kindergarten." — Haldore Hanson: Op. Cit., p. 160.

Student	Measurements of cloth produced	Punjam	Hours taken from the cleaning of cotton to the manufacture of cloth	Rate of income per hour
Madhu	8 yds. X 32"	13	138	0-0-11
Ganpat	8 yds. X 32"	13	123	0-1-1
Bakaram	8½ yds. X 36"	13	117	0-1-2
Gopal	8½ yds. X 27"	9	127	0-0-9
Hari	8 yds. X 32"	13	135	0-1-0
Atmaram	8 yds. X 32"	10½	115	0-0-11
Vaman	8½ yds. X 27"	9	102	0-0-11

N. B:— 1. In calculating the time taken, there has been a departure from the usual practice. If three boys, say, have done sizing, then the time taken to do it has been trebled when calculating man-hours. Usually the time taken by those who help in the process is not taken into account.

2. From the price of the cloth produced calculated at the A. I. S. A. rates, the price of cotton was deducted. The rest was all regarded as the income of the children.

These figures need no comment. In a country where the per capita income is only a few annas a day, a child of fourteen earning 1 anna (or nearly 1 anna) per hour is certainly revolutionary. Thus, spinning can and should become a subsidiary industry in periods of enforced idleness.

So far about the economic aspect. This result would have been of no value, if it did not mean also education, i. e., improvement of the mind. The educational results were more surprising. We were afraid lest by making them work for five or six hours a day, without correlating any recognized form of knowledge, we might just be 'slave-driving' the children. Really speaking, however, there should have been no such fear. Our experience amply bore out that the 'insignificant' processes of cotton cleaning, ginning, carding, spinning, etc. were full of immense educational possibilities.

Punctuality and a sense of time were the first things stressed, and they were enforced with the utmost vigilance. The time-piece was always in front of the boys, and they were taught to have the eye always fixed on this indicator of fleeting time. An accurate record was kept of the time when the work was begun, when it was stopped, when it was interrupted. Its relation to speed, etc. was noted. It was found how lazy we were apt to become when we had no record of time in minutes or even seconds. The boys themselves again and again saw the advantage of always keeping it in front of them. One of them said one day as he was happily and swiftly plying his wheel: "It is the first time that we have learnt the value of time." Those who know the village life and our want of time sense, would not be surprised by the remark.

Again, it was found that unless one was alert and worked with full concentration, production declined considerably. As talking during work was stopped, the production curve immediately went up. But simple concentration is not enough. One has to be constantly on the alert for any defect in the tools used or in the manner of carrying out the process which must be immediately remedied. Lazily allowing the ginning machine to creak on through absence of oiling or some cotton seeds having been caught between the rollers, may straightway reduce production by half. Again, one has constantly to be thinking how best to prevent waste and promote cleanliness of work. Take the simplest process, that of cotton cleaning. The first day the average speed of the class was 6 tolas per hour, because the boys lazily and 'happily' talked on during their work. Talking during the lesson hour is prohibited everywhere. This was lesson time. Talking was stopped and the output went up. We had to think out what extraneous matter or dirt should be removed from good cotton before carding and what would automatically be removed by carding, how to hold the cotton pod so that its fibres do not get pressed together, which would make both ginning and carding very difficult later, how to pull out extraneous matter and raw fibres, so that the largest number are pulled out at one and the same time, and without bringing along with them good fibres, how to place uncleaned cotton, cleaned cotton and waste cotton, so that the minimum time is taken to pick up uncleaned cotton, pull out the extraneous matter and drop both the refuse and cleaned cotton in their respective places in the quickest manner. And to do all this in a way, so that the whole place looks clean. In this way, this insignificant process, so far entrusted to ignorant female labourers for a pittance, was able to teach the boys to do some hard thinking, inculcate on them a sense and value of time, resourcefulness, cleanliness, economy, art of arrangement and, last but not least, an eye for detail. "These are small things," said Gandhiji once. "But big things evolve from small things. An eye for detail is absolutely essential, and it is our duty as educationists to develop it in the children."

The other processes provided equally good opportunities for inculcating the above-mentioned qualities on the children. They had, however, also their own especial contribution to make. Carding provides an excellent lesson in rhythm and muscle co-ordination, especially when done by the Bihar method. Moreover, those who have an experience of carding know what a lesson in discipline it is to teach a boy as he comes out of the carding class, a very sheep of a boy, all covered over with cotton fibres, to clean himself of cotton fibre before entering another class-room. Spinning develops sensitiveness of fingers and co-ordination of the two hands, and the eye. Weaving requires alertness, speed and, very often, infinite patience.

The Educational value of the other activities during these days were also fully exploited. Take cleaning, for instance. The boy who was deputed to clean the room, was given half an hour every day. He had not only to clean the class-room with its walls, its corners, its roof etc. but also to understand that the surroundings of which it was a part, must also be cleaned, and the work was examined with as much care and minuteness as a scientific experiment. In this way our habits of cleaning our own house and throwing the refuse in front of our neighbours, was sought to be remedied, and a sense of neighbourliness sought to be developed in these future citizens of rural India. Again, arranging asans everyday in new styles to suit the particular process in hand, provided good lessons in neatness and method.

But perhaps the most important lesson that was sought to be taught was that of co-operation. It is a lesson badly needed for reconstructing our villages and is one that can only be learnt through work. Work in the class-room was so arranged as to give the boys the sense that they would all sink or swim together, and it is surprising, how many opportunities for inculcating the spirit of co-operation can be found in that little world called the class-room where tuition consists in doing corporate work.

Within two months, the boys showed marked improvement in their general behaviour, which was visible to the whole Talimi Sangh community who had doubted the success of the experiment. The boys had become better disciplined and had done their work with great enthusiasm and joy. It was with pride and joy that they finally brought in their pieces of hand-woven Khadi.

We discovered that there was no conflict between the economic and the educational aspects. The close relationship between work and character was firmly established by various graphs, both individual and collective, which were elaborately maintained. The graphs showed steadily ascending curves. The improvement in production may be seen by the following figures for example:

Cotton-Cleaning		Ginning		Spinning
Date	Average speed per hour	Date	Average speed per hour	Date	Average speed per hour
9-1-'46	6 tolas	9-1-'46	40 tolas	18-2-'46	262 tars
12-1-'46	14 "	11-1-'46	44 "	21-2-'46	306 "
13-1-'46	21 "	12-1-'46	63 "	22-2-'46	316 "
17-1-'46	42 "	16-1-'46	72 "	25-2-'46	328 "
18-1-'46	69 "	21-1-'46	104 "	28-2-'46	340 "
				4-3-'46	345 "
				22-3-'46	365 "

Tar = 4 feet

This increased production in itself would be no demonstration of the success of the education through work but for the increased mental capacity of the pupils observed and narrated in the foregoing paragraphs. The distinction between the workshop and a school-room where tuition is given through work consists in the fact, that in the workshop the apprentice works mechanically and slaves at only a part of the work turned out, no regard being paid to his mental growth. In the school-room every pupil learns all the processes, not mechanically but organically, so that the full capacity of the man in him or her is drawn out at a given stage. Looked at thus, the measure of increase in each pupil's work is the measure of progress in education.

There was time when we were afraid of our schools being called workshops. But we are no longer afraid of the same: Only our schools will be both economically more productive and educationally more instructive. It would be a happy day when we can plant one such 'workshop' in every one of India's villages.

The Hindustani Talimi Sangh,

Sevagram, 1-7-'46

DEV PRAKASH NAYYAR

TWENTY RULES FOR DAIRY FARMS

[The following are points to be kept in mind by dairy farmers as summarized by the United States Department of Agriculture. They may be observed by our cow-keepers with suitable modifications.]

—V. G. D.J

THE COW

1. Have the herd examined at least twice a year by a skilled veterinarian. Promptly remove animals suspected of being in bad health. Never add an animal to the herd, until certain it is free from disease, especially tuberculosis.

2. Never allow a cow to be excited by fast driving, abuse, loud talking or unnecessary disturbance; do not expose her to cold or storms more than necessary.

3. Clean the entire body of the cow daily; hair in the region of the udder should be kept short by clipping.

4. Do not allow any strong-flavoured food like garlic, cabbage or turnips to be eaten except immediately after milking. Changes in feed should be made gradually.

5. Provide fresh, pure water in abundance, easy of access, and not too cold.

THE STABLES

6. Dairy cattle should be kept in a stable, preferably without cellar or storage loft, and where no other animals are housed.

7. The stable should be light (4 square feet of glass per cow) and dry, with at least 500 cubic feet of air space per animal. It should have air inlets and outlets, so arranged as to give good ventilation without drafts of air on cows.

8. The floor should be tight and constructed preferably of cement; walls and ceilings should be tight, clean, free from cobwebs, and whitewashed twice a year. Have as few dust-catching ledges, projections and corners as possible.

9. Allow no dusty, musty or dirty litter, or strong-smelling material in the stable. Haul manure to field daily or store under cover at least 40 feet from stable. Use land plaster daily in gutter and on floor.

MILK HOUSE

10. Have a light, clean, well-ventilated and screened milk room, located as to be free from dust and odours.

11. Milk utensils should be made of metal, and all joints smoothly soldered. Never allow utensils to become rusty or rough inside. Use them only for handling, storing or delivering milk.

12. To clean dairy utensils, use only pure water. First rinse the utensils in warm water. Then wash inside and out in hot water, in which cleansing material has been dissolved, and rinse again. Sterilize with boiling water or steam. Then keep inverted in pure air and sun, if possible, until wanted for use.

MILKING AND HANDLING MILK

13. Use no dry, dusty food just previous to milking.

14. The milker should wash his hands immediately before milking and milk with dry hands. He should wear a clean outer garment, kept in a clean place when not in use. Tobacco should not be used while milking.

15. Wipe the udder and surrounding parts with a clean damp cloth immediately before milking.

16. In milking, be quiet, quick, clean and thorough. Commence milking at the same hour every morning and evening, and milk the cows in the same order.

17. If any part of the milk is bloody, stringy or unnatural in appearance, or if by accident dirt gets into the milk pail, the whole should be rejected.

18. Do not fill cans in the stable. Remove the milk of each cow at once from the stable to the milk room. Strain immediately through cotton flannel or cotton. Cool to 50°F. as soon as strained. Store at 50°F. or lower.

19. Never mix warm milk with that which has been cooled, and do not allow milk to freeze.

20. A person suffering from any disease, or who has been recently exposed to a contagious disease, must remain away from the cows and the milk.*

STORY HOUR

[These stories are taken from G. F. Vallance's Stories that illustrate texts, Volume I. — V. G. D.]

I

Plague was raging in London, and Lord Craven was about to leave it for safety. A coach and six stood at the door. The nobleman was stepping into it, when a Negro postilion said to another servant, "I should suppose by my Lord's quitting London to avoid the plague that his God lived in the country and not in town." The Negro's speech struck Craven forcibly, and he said to himself: "My God lives everywhere and can preserve me in town as well as in the country. I will stay even where I am. The postilion has taught me a fine lesson. Lord, pardon my unbelief and distrust of Thy providence, which put me upon running away from Thy hand." So saying he ordered the coach to be put away, continued to live in town and helped sick neighbours, but never caught the infection.

II

One day when there was an explosion in Lanerch pit, Thomas and Bennet were in a part of the mine some distance from the place of accident, but they knew they must hurry to the shaft and get out. On they went through suffocating passages, but presently, Thomas who was ahead of his friend noticed that he was alone, and Bennet was not following him. He stopped and retraced his steps to find Bennet overpowered by gas. He shook him, raised him and once more started him on the way to the shaft, saying, "Run, man, run for your life." This time he put Bennet in front. By great effort Bennet reached the cage and was taken up. But Thomas who had gone back to save him did not come to the surface, the foul gas overpowered him, and he died in order that his friend might live.

"Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends" (John XV-13).

* The Business Encyclopaedia edited by Henry Marshall (Garden City Publishing Co., Garden City, New York).

III

A rich and miserly old man visited his rabbi who took him by hand, led him to the window and said,

"Look out there and tell me what you see."

"I see men, women and little children."

The rabbi again took the old man by hand, this time led him to the mirror and said,

"What do you see now?"

"Now I see myself."

Then the rabbi said, "Behold, in the window there is glass, and there is glass in the mirror too. But the glass of the mirror is covered with a little silver, and no sooner is the silver added than you cease to see others and see only yourself."

REVEALING FIGURES

The following facts and figures taken from a pamphlet entitled 'Food Crisis, 1946,' are of special interest in view of the food shortage:

Production of Foodstuffs in India (1945-46)

Rice	25.8 million tons
Wheat	8.3 " "
Gram	3.0 " "
Millets	7.5 " "
Maize	2.2 " "
Barley	1.7 " "

The above quantity has been found insufficient for the total population of India and the estimated deficit is 6 million tons."

The Punjab, C. P. & Berar, Sind, Orissa and Assam are not exporters of cereals in normal times. The deficit areas are the N. W. F. P., Bihar, U. P., Madras, Bombay, Bengal, the States of Travancore and Cochin, all of which have to import either wheat, rice, millet, or all.

The production vs. requirements of foodstuffs annually is as follows:

Foodstuff	Production million tons	Requirement million tons	Deficit million tons
Cereals	50	60	10.
Pulses	7	12	5
Vegetables & Fruits	Unassessed	At least double	..
Fish	0.6	9	8.4
Milk	22	35	13
Eggs	2660	146000	143340 (No.)

The following is a table of balanced diet for the maintenance of proper health:

Cereals	14 ozs.
Pulses	3 "
Green leafy vegetable	3 "
Root vegetable	3 "
Other vegetables	3 "
Fruits	3 "
Milk	10 "
Sugar & Jaggery	2 "
Vegetable oil, ghee etc.	2 "
Fish and meat	3 "
Egg	1 only

This diet yields about 2600 calories.

The adult Indian male requires	2600 calories
Female	2100 "
Child 12 & 13 yrs.	2100 "
" 10 & 11 "	1800 "
" 8 & 9 "	1600 "
" 6 & 7 "	1300 "
" 4 & 5 "	1000 "
Pregnant woman	2400 "
Nursing mother	3000 "

But how much do they get in comparison with other countries? The figures reveal a sorry tale:

Country	Calories per head per day
America	3,200
Great Britain	2,600
Germany (after the war)	1,600
Japan (under American occupation)	1,575
'Grim and dangerous level'	1,500

India and 960

No wonder the death rate and infant mortality figures are appalling:

Country	1942 Death rate per 1000	Infant mortality per 1000 births
Australia	10.5	39
Canada	9.7	54
America	10.4	40
Germany	12.7 (1940)	68
England	12.2 (1940)	54
Japan	17.6 (1938)	114 (1937)
India	22.0	163

and our expectation of life woefully short:

Country	Expectation of life at birth
	Males	Females
Netherlands	65.70	67.20 (1931-40)
New Zealand	65.46	68.45 (1934-38)
Sweden	64.30	66.92 (1936-40)
America	63.65	68.61
Denmark	63.50	65.80 (1936-40)
Union of S. A.	61.46	66.80 (1940)
Canada	60.90	64.70 (1940-42)
Ireland	59.00	61.0 (1940-42)
England	60.18	64.40 (1937)
Germany	59.86	62.80 (1932-34)
Italy	53.76	56.00 (1930-32)
Japan	46.92	49.63 (1935-36)
India	26.91	26.56 (1931)

"Place any other country under the same condition, with crippled industries, with agriculture subject to a heavy and uncertain Land Tax and with financial arrangements requiring one half of the revenues to be annually remitted out of the country, and the most prosperous nation on earth will soon know the horrors of famine," said R. C. Dutt years ago.

Too long has India groaned under the cruel foreign yoke. Mr. Winston Churchill and those of his ilk who talk pious platitudes about their concern for the minorities of India, should read these figures and pause before they dare to play the role of hypocrites. Not until our people are able to get enough to eat, can all our schemes for proper housing or roads or even education and health be of any real avail. Adequate and proper diet is the first requirement of man and to this end the energy of all Provincial Governments must be diverted forthwith if we are to live.

Poona, 1-8-'46

A. K.

A LIGHTER INTERLUDE

Gandhiji seldom has time for lighter interludes in his daily programme which, since his recent return to Sevagram after a long absence, has been more than full. But one such came his way yesterday when Shri Aryanayakam brought nine boys of the 7th class to meet him. These had all practically completed their seven years' course in the Sevagram Basic School. They were village lads from Sevagram and the neighbouring villages. Compared to those whom one sees working in the fields and who have never been to school, they were a heartening result of a first endeavour. They were clean, well-groomed, disciplined and well-mannered. Gandhiji cracked a few jokes with them which they entered into with merry laughter. One of them had the temerity to ask Gandhiji what type of boy of fourteen, he expected to be turned out after a seven years' course at a Basic School? Gandhiji seized the opportunity of telling them that if the school had done its duty by them, boys of fourteen should be truthful, pure and healthy. They should be village-minded. Their brains and hands should have been equally developed. There would be no guile in them. Their intelligence would be keen but they would not be worried about earning money. They would be able to turn their hands to any honest task that came their way. They would not want to go into the cities. Having learnt the lessons of co-operation and service in the school, they would infect their surroundings with the same spirit. They would never be beggars or parasites.

Sevagram, 21-8-'46

A. K.

A PROHIBITION ANTHOLOGY

[For the English quotations below I am indebted to Tryon Edwards' New Dictionary of Thoughts (Classic Publishing Company).]

— V. G. D. ]

1

सर्वं मद्यमपेयम् ।

आपस्तम्ब धर्मसूत्र १-५-१७-२१

"One shall not drink any intoxicant."

2

"There is scarcely a crime before me that is not directly or indirectly caused by strong drink."

Judge Coleridge

3

"He that is a drunkard is qualified for all vice."

Quarles

4

"Intemperance makes them engage in gambling."

Cotton

5

"Death wanted to choose his Prime Minister. Several courtiers presented their claims for the office, among these being various diseases and war. But Intemperance said, 'Give way, you pretenders. Am I not your parent?' The grisly monarch at once placed him on his right hand."

Dodsley.

6

"Drunkards kill themselves as much as those who hang or poison or drown themselves."

Sherlock

7

"I consider the temperance cause the foundation of all social and political reform." Cobden

8

एकतः सर्वपापानि मद्यपानं तथैकतः ।
चाणक्य (फ्रेंच) ३२

"All other sins on one side and drunkenness on the other balance each other."

9

मद्यपानात्परं पापं न भूतं न भविष्यति ।
चाणक्य (फ्रेंच) १२२

"There never was, nor shall there ever be a sin more heinous than drunkenness."

PREACHING TO EMPTINESS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Downes was a Seventh Day Adventist. He was a quack like me. He was my guest years ago in Durban. One day he said he must preach the simple life to those who cared to listen to him. He succeeded in borrowing a chapel hall for one hour in Mercury Lane and asked me to preside. I warned him that with me as chairman in the very early days of my life in South Africa, probably in 1894, he must not expect an audience. He would not heed the warning. Precisely at the advertised time Downes began his address to an audience of one. I asked him in vain to wait a few minutes for other comers. He would not be party to stealing God's time and unconcerned, he went on with his speech. So far as I remember, a few stragglers, under ten, came in during the speech. I happened to relate this experience to Horace Alexander whilst I was in Delhi. He gave me in return the stranger story of Stephen Grellet a Quaker, preaching to emptiness. I asked him to give me the authentic version for the readers of 'Harijan,' it being a rich experience of living faith in God. I reproduce below the story as sent by Horace Alexander:

"Stephen Grellet was a well-known Quaker preacher of the early nineteenth century. By origin a French emigre (Etienne de Grellet), after a residence in London, he emigrated again to America, and in later life undertook extensive travels in the Ministry on both sides of the Atlantic. The incident here recorded is not found in his own journal, but was vouched for by his daughter and is accepted as authentic by his most recent biographer (W. W. Comfort). But it cannot be exactly dated.

"S. G. 'waiting on the Lord to shew him His will' was directed by the spirit to take a long journey into the backwoods of America and preach to the woodcutters who were hewing timber in those parts. Seeking for direction to know where he should go, he pictured a part of the forest he had visited before, but which had left his mind, and a voice was heard in his own heart, saying distinctly but very gently, so that only he could hear it, 'Go back there and preach to those lonely men.' So he left his wife and home. As he proceeded on his way, a flood of happiness came over his soul. Coming near the place, he both trembled and rejoiced. But he found it 'silent and deserted.' The one big wooden hut that remained, had evidently not been used for many days. The woodcutters had moved on into the woods, and might not return for weeks. Could he have mistaken the voice? No, he could not believe that. What should he do? He put up a silent prayer. Through the windless silence of the forest came the answer: 'Give your message. It is not yours but mine.' So he strode into the building, went to the end of the room and stood on a form as if there were one or two hundred eager listeners and preached to the empty building with a power he had never known in his life before. He spoke of the Love of God as the greatest thing in the world, of how sin builds a wall between man and God, but the wall is thrown down in Jesus Christ, who longs to come and dwell with man. S. G. thought of the silent woodcutters, rough wild men, and felt love for each one. How much greater, then, must be God's love for them! He prayed aloud for them. Finally, utterly exhausted by his effort, he threw his arms on the boards in front of him and hid his face in his hands. A long time passed. The place was still deserted. He noticed a poor mug, left as if to mock him. In his heart he hated the mug, and compared it with the beautiful utensils in his father's aristocratic house in Limoges in France. Why had he renounced beauty and luxury to follow a voice that led him on fool's errands, to preach to nothing but a cracked mug? He wrestled with this mood, and overcame it. He took the mug, cleansed it carefully at a little stream, drank from it, ate some dry bread from his pocket, and felt himself enfolded in a sustaining life-giving presence. He rode home again like a man in a dream, conscious that he was not alone. Years later he was crossing London Bridge in a crowd of people, wearing his habitual Quaker hat and coat. Suddenly someone seized him and said in a gruff voice: 'There you are. I have found you at last, have I?' S. G. remonstrated: 'Friend, I think that thou art mistaken.' 'No, I am not. When you have sought a man over the face of the globe year after year, you don't make a mistake when you find him at last.' In a loud voice, regardless of the passers-by the man tells his story. He had heard S. G. when he preached to nobody. He had gone back that day to get his lever from the deserted settlement. He had thought S. G. a lunatic, standing on the bench, preaching to emptiness, but had listened through the chinks. 'Your words went through a chink in my heart, though its walls were thicker than those of any shanty.' He was ashamed to be seen, so slunk away back to the camp, and was miserable for weeks. Finally he got hold of a Bible. How the other men laughed! He found the passage about the lost sheep. 'It's share and share alike in the forest. I told the men all about it, just like you. I gave them no peace till everyone was brought home to God. Three went out to preach to other districts. At least 1000 have been brought home to the good shepherd by that sermon of yours which you preached to nobody.'"

Sevagram, 16-8-'46

GOA

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"With reference to Mr. Gandhi's short commentary on Goa in the Harijan of the 18th instant, where he gives the so-called "contrast" between French and Portuguese authorities, we have to state the following for your knowledge and publicity purposes:

"There is nothing more out of place as a comparison between French India and Portuguese India. The objects, administrative methods and the goal are absolutely dissimilar in their essence. The recent integration (1816) of the French possessions in India in the French Colonial Empire and its setbacks, have nothing in common with Portuguese India which for more than 400 years, has been benefited by the Portuguese administration, completely identifying its destinies with the Motherland.

"If the inhabitants of French India wish to identify their destinies with Free India (what has yet to be ascertained), the same does not happen in Portuguese India where the totality of the inhabitants wish to continue under the beneficial action of Portuguese administration which has been the cause of its material and moral progress to the point of Goa, being the pride of the Portuguese colonizing effort and part and parcel of the Motherland.

"These being the facts based on historical data, we trust you will publish the relevant corrections in your paper."

This letter to the Editor of the Harijan from the Head of the Government Information Bureau, Nova Goa, makes sorry reading. It is an example of the truth of the proverb, "Comparisons are odious." Surely there is not much to choose between French and Portuguese imperialism. The hands of imperialism are always dyed red. The sooner imperialistic powers shed their imperialism like Ashoka the Good, the better it will be for the groaning world. One may be pardoned for giving credit to France, where credit is deserved as it is in the case of French India, assuming, of course, the truth of the newspaper version of the statement of the Governor of French India. Moreover, it is ridiculous for the Head of the Government Information Bureau to write of Portugal as the motherland of the Indians of Goa. Their mother country is as much India as mine. Goa is outside British India but it is within geographical India as a whole. And there is very little, if anything, in common between the Portuguese and the Indians of Goa.

I have read also the contradiction of my statement about Shri Purushottam Kakodkar. I must adhere to it in spite of the contradiction of the Portuguese authorities in Goa. Here is what his wife says in her letter dated 24-8-'46:

"Shri Purushottam Kakodkar, Secretary of the Goa National Congress, was arrested while talking to a friend on 9-8-'46 by the Portuguese authorities. On the 10th he was removed to Panjim (Nova Goa). On the 11th and 12th, he was kept on half rations. When he learnt that the authorities were deliberately underfeeding him, he went on hunger strike on the 13th and was still fasting on the 20th.

"The Portuguese Government is undeterred in its policy and up till now (24-8-'46) no attention has been paid to the written request sent in by Shri Kakodkar for adequate food supply to himself and other prisoners."

I ask the Portuguese authorities whether they would allow a representative from the Harijan to meet Prisoner Kakodkar and ascertain facts for himself?

New Delhi, 29-8-'46

WEEKLY LETTER

THE LURID GLARE

"When the Ashram was first started in Kocharab we set before us certain ideals. Same ideals are before us today. What is our duty in terms of these ideals in the face of the conflagration that is raging in the country today? Let us be humble and confess that we have not got the strength today to meet all the expectations that the people entertain of us. But we are sincerely striving for it. If we had fully realized the principles for which we stand, we should have rushed into the blaze and offered the purest sacrifice which might have conceivably quenched the flames."—With these words Gandhiji took leave of the Ashram inmates at the final evening prayer gathering on the 24th. He was referring to the lurid happenings in Calcutta and elsewhere. He then proceeded to give his definition of a 'pure sacrifice'. It was not the thoughtless annihilation of the moth in the flame. Sacrifice to be effective must be backed by the uttermost external and internal purity. There is nothing that such sacrifice cannot achieve. Without the requisite purity, sacrifice is no better than a desperate self-annihilation devoid of any merit. Sacrifice must, further, be willing and it should be made in faith and hope, without a trace of hatred or ill will in the heart.

"Although we have fallen short of our ideal," he went on to say, "we have never been found wanting in honest endeavour. The art of jail-going we have learnt with the rest. But jail-going is only the beginning, not the end of Satyagraha. The acme of Satyagraha for us would be to lay down our lives for the defence of India's just cause. Let us then pray to God to give us the requisite purity and fearlessness in the true sense of the term, to make our sacrifice worthy of the altar. Then alone shall we be worthy of the name of the Ashram."

TEACHERS OF TOMORROW

In a previous issue was given Shri Mahadev Desai's summary of an address delivered to the trainees of the Basic Teachers' Camp at Sevagram by Gandhiji on the day previous to his departure for the A. I. C. C. meeting at Bombay in August '42. He again did the same on the 23rd August in anticipation of his departure for New Delhi, at the instance of Shri Aryanayakam. There were 79 of them from the various Congress Provinces sent by the Provincial Governments, 30 being sent on behalf of the Kasturba Gandhi National Memorial Trust. The function was held in the Talimi Sangh Hall, just where it was held four years ago. Shrimati Ashadevi who is the life and soul of the institution no less than her husband Aryanayakam, has by her artist touch introduced a whiff of Shantiniketan into her environment. A finished Sanskrit scholar, she is a fine singer too. But her most valuable contribution is, perhaps, the motherly love which she has infused into her work and with which she nourishes her little pupils of the basic school. She had got the Talimi Sangh Hall decorated in a simple but artistic manner befitting its surroundings. Beautiful designs in white had been drawn on the floor and for light there were rows of earthen lamps which filled the place with their mild, subdued glow that soothed the tired eyes and nerves after a strenuous day. The proceedings began with a prayer. After the pupil teachers had been introduced to Gandhiji he briefly addressed them. The main theme of his address was the educative value of useful, manual work. "One of the complaints that has been made by one of you," he remarked, "is that too much emphasis is laid here on manual work. I am a firm believer in the educative value of manual work. Our present educational system is meant for strengthening and perpetuating the imperialist power in India. Those of you who have been brought up under it have naturally developed a taste for it and so find labour irksome. No one in Government schools or colleges bothers to teach the students, how to clean the roads or latrines. Here, cleanliness and sanitation form the very alpha and omega of your training. Scavenging is a fine art you should take pains to learn. Persistent questioning and healthy inquisitiveness are the first requisite for acquiring learning of any kind. Inquisitiveness should be tempered by humility and respectful regard for the teacher. It must not degenerate into impudence. The latter is the enemy of the receptivity of mind. There can be no knowledge without humility and the will to learn.

"Useful manual labour, intelligently performed is the means par excellence for developing the intellect. One may develop a sharp intellect otherwise too. But then it will not be a balanced growth but an unbalanced, distorted abortion. It might easily make of one a rogue and a rascal. A balanced intellect presupposes a harmonious growth of body, mind and soul. That is why we give to manual labour the central place in our curriculum of training here. An intellect that is developed through the medium of socially useful labour will be an instrument for service and will not easily be led astray or fall into devious paths. The latter can well be a scourge. If you grasp that essential point, the money spent by your respective governments in sending you here for training will have been well-spent."

THE DAY

On the 2nd of September, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and his colleagues put on the crown of thorns as a matter of supreme duty. For Gandhiji it was a day of deep heart-searching. In the early hours of the morning, while most slept, he set down to draft a note for Pandit Jawaharlal as to the duty of the members of the new Government in this supreme hour. The substance of it he amplified later in the evening.

Hailing the auspicious day for which India had so long waited as a red letter day in India's history, in his address at the evening prayer, he described it as only a step towards full Independence which was yet to come. He congratulated and thanked the British Government for having resolved an age-old issue between Britain and India by peaceful settlement. Whatever it might have done in the past, this was no time for cavilling at old wrongs or reviving bitter memories.

A friend had asked him, proceeded Gandhiji, as to when the Viceregal Palace would be turned into a hospital for the poor as was promised by him in the presence of the British Ministers and Rulers of Indian States at the Second Round Table Conference in London. He had not forgotten that promise, he remarked. He stood by it still. Only the time for it was not yet. They could not today ask the Viceroy to vacate his Palace, while he still held office. Power had not yet been completely transferred into their hands. The Viceroy was still there with the army. Sooner, rather than later, complete power would be in their hands, if Pandit Nehru, their uncrowned king and first Prime Minister and his colleagues fully and worthily did their part. The Viceroy would then himself vacate his Palace and, to be sure, it would be turned into a hospital for the poor including the Harijans who were the poorest of the poor.

NO TIME FOR JUBILATION

It was not a day for rejoicing or jubilation, he reminded them. Their Ministers had reluctantly agreed to accept responsibility for the Interim Government without the Muslim League which was undeniably a powerful organization of the Muslims. The league had refused to come in. The Muslims were their brothers. Both Hindus and Muslims were sons of India. Our mortal mother who gives us birth is entitled to our reverence and worship. Such worship purifies the soul. How much more worthy of our common allegiance and reverence must be our Motherland then, the Imperishable Mother on whose breast we are borne and will die, he asked? "All those who are born in this country and claim her as their Motherland, whether they be Hindu, Muslim, Parsi, Christian, Jain or Sikh are equally her children and are, therefore, brothers, united together with a bond stronger than that of blood."

Today the Mussalmans, continued Gandhiji, looked askance at the Hindus. Rightly, or wrongly, the League had come to believe that the Hindus had bypassed and deceived it and was therefore angry. The Mussalmans were observing the day as a day of mourning. They did not cease to be their brothers on that account. One could not return one's brother's anger with anger. Whilst, therefore, they could not join the Mussalmans in their mourning, it was up to them, the Hindus, to try to come as close to them as possible and spare them provocation by abstaining from jubilation, rejoicing and other exuberant manifestations, such as feasting, illuminations etc. Exuberant manifestations were hardly in keeping with the solemnity of the occasion. The proper way of observing solemn occasions as enjoined by Islam, Christianity and Hinduism alike was by fasting, rather than feasting. They should utilize the occasion to turn the search-light inward and try to find out if they had really done their Muslim brothers any injustice. If there was any, it should be openly admitted and remedied.

At the same time he would respectfully tell the League, added the speaker, that it was neither logical nor right to regard both the British and the Hindus as their enemies and to threaten them with direct action. It could not ride two horses at the same time. If it non-cooperated with the British, it should imply co-operation among themselves. Why then should they non-cooperate with their own brothers? The Congress could never ally itself with Britain against the Muslims. It had today accepted responsibility for the Interim Government for the sole purpose of attaining freedom for all alike, including the Muslim League, not for any particular section or community. If a Minister joined the Cabinet to serve a sectional interest to the detriment of the rest or with a desire to injure any particular section, he was unfit to be a Minister. It was wrong for the Mussalmans to regard the Hindus as their enemies and seek to forget that they had lived together as good neighbours for centuries, were born in the same land, were nourished by the same soil and were destined to be returned as dust to the same soil. He would go so far as to say that the League attitude was un-Islamic. The remedy for injustice, if there was any, was to reason together or refer the dispute to arbitration in the last resort, if mutual discussion failed.

REDEEM OLD PLEDGES

What was the first duty of the Ministers, he next asked and replied that their first act should be to remember the Salt Satyagraha and remove the Salt Tax. It was on that issue that the country had given such a noble fight in 1930. It was the Dandi March that had electrified the whole country and brought women to the fore. It symbolized the Congress pledge to win freedom for the toiling masses. India's womanhood reached the high watermark during the Salt Satyagraha and extorted the admiration of the whole world. It was now time to redeem that pledge and make the poor man's salt as free as water and air. It was not the quantum of taxation but the fact of salt being free or not that made all the difference to the poor. Removal of the Salt Tax would take the message of Swaraj into the huts of the poorest without distinction of Hindu or Muslim, caste or outcaste and serve as an earnest of early termination of all oppression under which the masses have been groaning.

The second task before the Ministers was early realization of communal unity. That could not be done by a Government notification. The Ministers would have to live for it and die for it. If he had his way, remarked Gandhiji, he would declare that hereafter the military would not be used for the preservation of internal peace. Personally he would like to see even the use of the police banned for that purpose. People must find other means to prevent the communities from flying at each other's throat. If the worst came to the worst, they must have the guts to fight it out among themselves without external aid. He ventured to say that so long as they needed the help of British arms for their security, their slavery would continue.

Then there was the total eradication of untouchability. As early as 1920-21, the Congress had declared untouchability to be a blot on Hinduism. They were pledged to remove it root and branch. The conditions of life in the sweepers' quarters in all the big cities of India was a shame. Before this, he used to appeal to the Viceroy to improve them. Now it was the responsibility of the Interim Government and they could call the Ministers to account for it.

Lastly there was the pledge of Khadi to be redeemed to provide clothing to the poor villagers. The Congress by a resolution in 1920 had resolved that all of India's inhabitants must be clothed in hand-spun and hand-woven cloth to the exclusion of all other. The Congress was still pledged to it. They had not yet carried out that resolution. Instead, people grumbled that they could not produce yarn which was required for the purchase of Khadi under the new A. I. S. A. regulations. Wherefrom was the Khadi to come if people did not spin? asked the speaker. They could not get yarn spun for wages owing to an abnormal inflation of wages all around. They must spin for themselves. There was no other way. It was the solemn duty of the members of the Interim Government to redeem the pledge about Khadi and to see that nothing but Khaddar was used in their homes or in their offices. As for yarn required to purchase Khadi, he made them a sporting offer. The new A. I. S. A. rules allowed them to present yarn spun by friends for the purchase of Khadi but not yarn spun for wages. As their friend, he would, out of yarn presented to him by the people, undertake to provide them with all the yarn that they might require for the purchase of Khadi. There was no doubt a dearth of Khadi in the Khadi Bhandars; but he would try his best to carry out their orders. He, however, warned them that it might be only coarse Khadi for the present and they would have to be satisfied with that. He could not guarantee to provide them with fine Andhra Khadi. For that, they must wait till India was completely independent.

Gandhiji hoped fervently that the Interim Government would give the right lead and put India on the road to truth and purity and real Swaraj. In that endeavour he hoped, it would have the loyal co-operation of all Indians.

New Delhi, 3-9-'46

PYARELAL

SOUTH AFRICA

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Sir Shafaat Ahmed Khan who, but for the recent murderous assault on him, would have joined the Interim Government yesterday wrote on August 6th to me an interesting letter from which I quote as follows :

"My study of the Indian community while I was in South Africa, convinced me that but for your heroic work in the Union, the Indian race in that country would not have survived as a self-respecting community. You built up, cell by cell, the power of resistance in a highly gifted race and your work in that country is the inspiration of the Indian race in South Africa at the present time.

"My sole aim in South Africa was to lay the foundation of Indian unity in Natal. I do not think I succeeded completely in my aim but I am inclined to think that the heroic struggle which our race is carrying on at the present time, would have been impossible but for the dissolution of the Natal Indian Association and A. I. Kaje's Natal Indian Congress and the revival of the Natal Indian Congress, which you had founded in 1894. This was accomplished on August 29th 1943 and since that time, there has been only one political organization of Indians in Natal."

"The South African situation is complicated and owing to conventions of diplomacy, my lips are sealed. My despatches from South Africa which give a complete picture of the political situation for three years and are very exhaustive, cannot be published owing to conventions of international intercourse. . . .

"I came to the conclusion that no redress of our grievances in South Africa is possible unless we are masters in our own homeland and India is free."

In reply to my letter acknowledging receipt of the above, Sir Shafaat Ahmed Khan further writes :

"You will be glad to hear that since my return from South Africa, I have been busy preparing my speeches in South Africa and have added a section in my book, shortly to be published, on the history of the Indian community in South Africa. In this I have made bold to give a brief account of your work there and followed with the greatest interest your march to Volkhurst etc. . . .

"For more than three years — 1942-45, I wrote lengthy despatches to the Government of India on the South African problem and in April 1943 I warned them against General Smuts' policy and told them to take the strongest measures against the Union Government in connection with the Pegging Act. . . . Strong measures have been taken now, but I am afraid, it is too late. If the Congress forms a National Government soon and the new member in charge of the Department, decides to publish these despatches, particularly from April 1943 onwards, they will clear up numerous points for the next session of U. N. O. I am bound to say that the convention is that such despatches are not published unless and until there is rupture of relations between two countries. I offer no opinion as to whether they should be published at all. This is a matter which the new Government should decide."

New Delhi, 3-9-'46

Why Go Abroad ?

An Indian doctor went to America in order to learn Neuro-surgery, so that he might return and serve his people here. He has with difficulty secured a seat in the Columbia University and is working as a house surgeon.

He writes to ask me to influence students not to go abroad for the following reasons :

"(a) The amount our poor country spends on sending and training ten students abroad could be better utilized by securing the services of a first rate professor who could train 40 students as well as equip a laboratory.

"(b) Students who come here acquire basic knowledge in research but do not know how to equip a laboratory on their return home.

"(c) They have no chance of continued work.

"(d) If we have experts brought out, our laboratories will also get perfected."

I have never been an advocate of our students going abroad. My experience tells me that such, on return, find themselves to be square pegs in round holes. That experience is the richest and contributes most to growth which springs from the soil. But today the craze for going abroad has gripped students. May the extract quoted serve as a warning !

New Delhi, 2-9-'46

M. K. G.

CONTENTS	PAGE
SALES TAX ... M. K. GANDHI	293
A SILVER LINING ... A. K.	293
THE ECONOMICS OF KHADI	KRISHNADAS GANDHI 294
A WAIL FROM GOA ... PYARELAL	295
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI	295
ANTIDOTE ... M. K. GANDHI	296
HINDUSTANI V. URDU AND HINDI	M. K. GANDHI 297
NOT BY FORCE BUT BY FRIENDLINESS	M. K. GANDHI 297
ARMAMENTS—AT WHAT COST?	C. S. 298
WORK AS EDUCATION	DEV PRAKASH NAYYAR 299
TWENTY RULES FOR DAIRY FARMS	V. G. D. 301
STORY HOUR	V. G. D. 302
REVEALING FIGURES	A. K. 302
A LIGHTER INTERLUDE	A. K. 303
A PROHIBITION ANTHOLOGY	V. G. D. 303
PREACHING TO EMPTINESS	M. K. GANDHI 304
GOA	M. K. GANDHI 305
WEEKLY LETTER	PYARELAL 305
SOUTH AFRICA	M. K. GANDHI 308
NOTES :
FOR READERS	M. K. G. 296
WHY GO ABROAD ?	M. K. G. 308

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad
 Subscription Rates — INLAND: One year, Rs. 6; Six months, Rs. 3; FOREIGN: One year Rs. 8 or 14. sh. or $ 3.

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 32

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1946

TWO ANNAS

CONGRESS MINISTERS AND NON-VIOLENCE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Shri Shankarrao Dev writes:

"Many people do not understand why those who call themselves Satyagrahis, resort to the use of the military and the police, the moment they become Ministers of Government. The people feel that this is a breach of both the creed and the policy of ahimsa. This popular belief seems to be consistent with reason. The inconsistency between belief and action of the Congress Ministers and the exploitation of the same by their opponents, both Congress and non-Congress, makes it hard for our workers to stand up to the criticism.

"Generally speaking, Congress ahimsa has been the ahimsa of the weak. It was bound to be so in the present development of the country and this fact is well-known to you. You claim that there is a special fire in the ahimsa of the strong. At the same time you accepted leadership of the weak, in order to make them strong through the use of ahimsa. And, in spite of their weakness, governmental power has today come into their hands. It is impossible for them today to put down disturbances without the use of the police and the military, and if they tried to do so, they would not only not succeed, but they would not get the co-operation of the people either.

"I did once ask you, whether a Satyagrahi should take high office if it came his way and if he did, how should he promote non-violence? I hold that the person who has made non-violence his creed, should not take office and he will never be happy there. But there can be no such difficulty for those who have accepted ahimsa only as a policy. Many Congressmen have accepted office and you have permitted them to do so. The question arises as to whether you can expect those who believe in ahimsa, to act up to it, at least in their personal capacity, during disturbances. Further, having acquired strength through non-violence, how should it be used, in order to bring in a State, where there is need for the least government? If you cannot lighten our path towards the desired goal, Satyagraha will not be considered a full-fledged weapon."

From my point of view the answer is easy. I have been saying for some time, that the words "truth and non-violence" should be removed from the Congress constitution. But whether they are actually removed or not, let us assume that they are and then we shall be able to come to an independent judgement on the rightness or wrongness of any action. I am convinced that so long as we have to rely on the use of the military and even the police for preserving internal order, we shall continue to remain the slaves of either Britain or some other foreign power. It matters little then, whether the Government is in the hands of Congress or non-Congressmen. Let us assume that Congress Ministers are not pledged to non-violence. Let us further assume that Hindus, Mussalmans and others want military and police protection. If they do, they will continue to receive it. Those Ministers who are wedded to non-violence, must resign, since they would object to the use of the military and the police. The significance of it all is that so long as our people have not the wisdom to come to a mutual understanding, so long will goondalism continue and we shall not be able to generate the true strength of ahimsa within us.

Now as to how this non-violent strength can be created. I gave the answer to this question in the Harijan of August 4th, in replying to a letter from Ahmedabad. So long as we have not cultivated the strength to die with courage and love in our hearts, we cannot hope to develop the ahimsa of the strong.

There remains the question as to whether in an ideal society, there should be any or no government. I do not think, we need worry ourselves about this at the moment. If we continue to work for such a society, it will slowly come into being to an extent, such that the people can benefit by it. Euclid's line is one without breadth but no one has so far been able to draw it and never will. All the same it is only by keeping the ideal line in mind that we have made progress in geometry. What is true here is true of every ideal.

It must be remembered that nowhere in the world, does a State without government exist. If at all it could ever come into being, it would be in India; for, ours is the only country where the attempt has, at any rate, been made. We have not yet been able to show that bravery to the degree which is necessary and for the attainment of which there is only one way. Those who have faith in the latter, have to demonstrate it. In order to do so, the fear of death has to be completely shed, just as we have shed the fear of prisons.

New Delhi, 6-9-46

(From Harijansevak)

Notes

The Lowly Cow

A knowledgeable sister writes :

"Q. 1. With the exception of those cows or buffaloes that are in calf, cannot all others, whether in milk or not, be used to plough the land? This would be of immense help to the farmer but the general public is averse to the idea. What is your opinion?"

"Q. 2. There is a great dearth of pasture land in our country. It is difficult for the farmer to provide fodder even for useful cattle. Are you then in favour of the slaughter of all such animals as cannot be made use of or do you think, this slaughter should be forbidden by law?"

A. 1. The first question was put to me as long ago as 1915. I felt then as now, that if the cows referred to, were used for purposes of ploughing the land, it would not hurt them. On the contrary, it would make them strong and increase their yield of milk. But this benefit could only come about, provided the cow was treated as a friend and not cruelly, as cattle in our land so often are. This friendly treatment should of course be insisted on for animals from whom we take service. Every living being has to work within his or its limitations. Such work uplifts, never lowers either man or beast.

A. 2. The second question also has long since been answered by me. Cow slaughter can never be stopped by law. Knowledge, education, and the spirit of kindness towards her alone, can put an end to it. It will not be possible to save those animals that are a burden on the land or perhaps even man if he is a burden. New Delhi, 4-9-'46
(From Harijansevak)

Khaddar

Readers of the Harijan may well say that in the present atmosphere of mad frenzy, any talk of Khadi is meaningless, because many Khadi-loving persons live in cities and so far, the trouble is, by the grace of God, confined to cities. As a matter of fact, all city-dwellers are by no means party to the senseless strife, and those who truly love Khadi, must always be actuated by thoughts of peace. We have either to make Khadi universal among the masses or give up all dreams of non-violent Swaraj. Therefore, all who love and believe in peace, however fiercely the storm of communal strife may rage around them, will forget neither the spinning wheel nor Khadi. They may omit their meals but not the Charkha.

The request given below on behalf of the Charkha Sangh is thus quite proper. Such requests have been made by other Khadi-loving organizations too. Those who look upon Khadi in the above light, will act on the resolution passed by the A. I. S. A. as referred to below :

"1. The Trustees of the Charkha Sangh hereby appeal to all Khadi Bhandars and all Khadi lovers to try their utmost to secure 78,000 ordinary co-operators for the coming Seventy-eighth Khadi Jayanti, of which number, at least half shall be self-sufficient.

"2. By an ordinary co-operator is meant one who is a habitual Khadi-wearer and will donate at least 6 hanks of self-spun yarn annually to the Charkha Sangh.

"3. By 'self-sufficient' is meant one who, unless prevented by illness or other sufficient and unavoidable cause, regularly produces, whether spun by himself or through his family members or friends, at least 7½ hanks yarn, per month or 5 hanks, if he has done his own ginning, carding and slivering.

"4. The Charkha Sangh has also passed a resolution to the effect that in all Khadi producing centres, at least one square yard per person, according to the population, must be used by the people in the area. This much at least must be accomplished."

New Delhi, 4-9-'46

(From Harijansevak)

The Devadasi System

A correspondent writes :

"It is a well known fact that you are trying your best to uplift the Harijan community and even spending your most precious time in the Harijan Colony. But may I assure you that there are thousands of Devadasi girls of the Harijan community residing in Poona and Bombay and are leading a life of public prostitution. Why should this be so? Is it because these girls belong to low caste community and are induced to lose their moral character that they are neglected by the public and put to the shameful life of prostitution?"

"May I be justified in stating that this is a most important and urgent problem. Is it not possible to stop this illegal practice in the Bombay Province as in Madras and Madras by the Madras Government under the ruling of Section 366 A, 366 B, 372 and 373 of the Indian Penal Code, page No. 574?"

I have, on more than one occasion, written about the shame attached to the Devadasi system, whether in temples or in other places. "Prostitutes" is commonly supposed to apply to women of lewd character. But the men who indulge in vice are just as much, if not more, prostitutes than the women who, in many instances, have to sell their bodies for the sake of earning a livelihood. The evil practice should be declared illegal. But the law can only help up to a point. The evil exists clandestinely in every country in spite of the law. Vigorous public opinion can help the law as it also hinders. New Delhi, 2-9-'46

Untouchability and the Flush System

Q. Do you consider that the adoption of the flush system is one way of eradicating untouchability? If so, you would not presumably oppose its introduction on the basis of your dislike of machinery.

A. Where there is ample supply of water and modern sanitation, can be introduced without any hardship on the poor, I have no objection to it. In fact, it should be welcomed as a means of improving the health of the city concerned. At the moment, it can only be introduced in towns. My opposition to machinery is much misunderstood. I am not opposed to machinery as such. I am opposed to machinery which displaces labour and leaves it idle. Whether the flush system will remove the curse of untouchability, is open to grave doubt. This latter has to go from our hearts. It will not disappear through such means as has been suggested. Not until we all become bhangis and realize the dignity of the labour of scavenging and latrine-cleaning, will untouchability really be exorcized.

New Delhi, 2-9-'46

Harijans and Wells

Shri Hardev Sahay writes:

"Last evening (4-9-'46) in your address to the prayer gathering, you drew the attention of the public to the disability attached to Harijans in the matter of drawing water from public wells. After 25 years of incessant effort on their behalf, we have not yet succeeded in removing this disability. No one knows of their sufferings more than you.

"It is my humble opinion that now that Congress Governments are in power, they should forthwith proclaim their policy towards the Harijans and remove all such of their disabilities as they can by law. In this connection I should like to draw your attention to conditions in the Punjab. Leave aside the question of drawing water from wells, Harijans are not even permitted to obtain land for sinking a well for themselves. I would beg of you to appeal to the Punjab Government to provide wells for Harijans at State expense, wherever there are no facilities of drawing water or at least provide them with land for sinking wells for themselves. There are ever so many villages in the Punjab where, even if the Harijans are willing to spend their own money, they are not given the requisite land."

"There are a few places where the Government has started making wells for the Harijans; but they are wholly insufficient. It is surely the duty of the State to see that a proper supply of drinking water is available to all its citizens."

The writer is perfectly right in what he says. It is the duty of the Government to provide wells for the Harijans. It is not enough only to give the land; the Government should be responsible for sinking the wells.

New Delhi, 6-9-'46

(From Harijansevak)

M. K. G.

An Australian Experiment

Sometimes back a case was reported of effluent from a paper mill polluting the flow of a river in Orissa to the detriment of villages on its banks who drew their water supply from it. It presented a tough problem for the paper mill to tackle. A recent issue of the Australian Agricultural Newsletter describes an experiment, showing the value of mill-sludge as fertilizer. It says:

"A 250 acre dairy farm in Tasmania, Australia, has had its carrying capacity increased from 45 to 200 cows by sludge pumped from paper mills and then dispersed by irrigation channels. The sludge was previously spoiling water for landholders further down the stream.

"The sludge is residue after straw has been 'cooked' for eight hours, and looks like black liquid mud. It is diverted into eight miles of intricate channels, and dispersed for soil building. In 1937 it was directed over a useless stony outcrop which today is completely covered and carrying deep grass."

"The only weed," adds the bulletin, "the sludge has not exterminated from the property is artichoke thistle. In 13 years only four cases of sick stock have been noticed."

New Delhi, 7-9-'46

P.

Independence Celebrations

An Indian friend from Egypt writes:

"On the radio and from newspapers, we have heard the news that India is soon to get her Independence and that the event is to be celebrated all over the country. The Indian community here would like to join in the celebrations. But as we do not care to do so, unless you are wholly satisfied that the country really is independent, we will await hearing from you."

In reply, Gandhiji has written as follows:

"I have received your letter. You have done right to wait. What is there to celebrate until and unless we are really independent? The most that can be said today is that the door to Swaraj has been opened. But it would be wholly foolish to be content with this. Today Hindus and Muslims are fighting with each other in our cities. In these circumstances, Indians abroad can best help us on the road to freedom by standing for unity. You who live in Egypt, can make a valuable contribution in this matter."

New Delhi, 8-9-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

NATURE CURE A PANACEA

Q. It has been said that 'Nature Cure' can be applied to every disease. If so, can it cure short or long-sightedness, cataract and other eye diseases? Can one avoid spectacles? Can hernia, tonsils etc. which need the surgeon's knife be cured by Nature Cure?

A. I know that the claim attributed to Nature Cure has been made by its exponents. I do not count myself among them. This much, however, can be safely claimed. Disease springs from a wilful or ignorant breach of the laws of nature. It follows, therefore, that timely return to those laws should mean restoration. A person who has tried nature beyond endurance, must either suffer the punishment inflicted by nature or in order to avoid it, seek the assistance of the physician or the surgeon as the case may be. Every submission to merited punishment strengthens the mind of man, every avoidance saps it.

ENFORCED MARRIAGE

Q. A sister writes:

What is an unwilling girl to do when her parents insist either upon her marriage or leaving the parental home? Where is she to go, if she has not been educated enough to earn her own living? Whose protection is she to seek?

A. The question makes sad reading. It is wholly wrong of parents to force marriage on their daughters. It is also wrong to keep their daughters unfit for earning their living. No parent has a right to turn a daughter out on to the streets for refusal to marry. Let us hope that such cruel specimens are rare. To the girl concerned, my advice would be not to look on any labour with her hands, down to scavenging, as beneath her dignity. Women may not look for protection to men. They must rely on their own strength and purity of character and on God as did Draupadi of old.

New Delhi, 6-9-'46

HARIJAN

September 15

1946

WHAT TO DO?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A friend sends the following questions:

Q. 1. You have all along held and expressed the view that persons should observe strict non-violence even when attacked by hooligans or others. Does this hold good when women are attacked or outraged? If people are unable to follow your lead regarding non-violence, would you advise them to die as cowards or resist aggression with violence?

Q. 2. Should you not unequivocally condemn the dual role that the Muslim League is playing today? While, on the one hand, its leaders are openly preaching violence and jehad against Hindus, the same men continue, on the other hand, to hold office as Ministers, having a controlling hand on all the threads of administration, including police and justice.

Q. 3. Is there no constituted authority in India which can put a stop to this grave anomaly which is unprecedented in history?

Q. 4. Do you realize that if the present happenings are allowed to continue, civil war will become inevitable? How would you advise your countrymen to face such a catastrophe, if it comes?

A. 1. In a society of my imagination, outrage posited by the questioner cannot take place. But in the society in the midst of which we are living, such outrages do take place. My answer is unequivocal. A non-violent man or woman will and should die without retaliation, anger or malice, in self-defence or in defending the honour of his womenfolk. This is the highest form of bravery.

If an individual or a group of people are unable or unwilling to follow this great law of life, which is misnamed my lead, retaliation or resistance unto death is the second best, though a long way off from the first. Cowardice is impotence worse than violence. The coward desires revenge but being afraid to die, he looks to others, may be the Government of the day, to do the work of defence for him. A coward is less than man. He does not deserve to be a member of a society of men and women. Lastly, let me add that if women had followed or would now follow my advice, every woman would protect herself without caring or waiting for aid from her brother or sister.

A. 2. Of course, the dual role adverted to is unequivocally bad. It is a sad chapter in our national life. My condemnation is of universal application. Fortunately it is so bad that it cannot last long.

A. 3. The only constituted authority is the British. We are all puppets in their hands. But it would be wrong and foolish to blame that authority. It acts according to its nature. That authority does not compel us to be puppets. We voluntarily run into their camp. It is, therefore, open to any and every one of us to refuse to play the British game.

Let us also admit frankly that the British authority is struggling to quit India. It does not know how. It honestly wants to leave India but wants before leaving, to undo the wrong it has been doing for so long. Being in the position of 'the toad under the harrow', I must know where it hurts. I have been telling the authority, if it will undo the wrong quickly, to leave India to her fate. But those who compose the British service cannot realize this obvious fact. They flatter themselves with the belief that they know India better than we do ourselves. Having successfully kept us under subjection for over a century, they claim the right to constitute themselves judges of our destiny. We may not grumble, if we are to come into our own through the way of peace. Satyagraha is never vindictive. It believes not in destruction but in conversion. Its failures are due to the weaknesses of the Satyagrahi, not to any defect in the law itself. The British authority having decided to quit, (whatever the reason), will show growing defects and weaknesses. Parties will find that it is more and more a broken reed. And, when parties quarrel as Hindus and Muslims do, let one or the other or both realize that, if India is to be an independent nation, one or both must deliberately cease to look to British authority for protection.

A. 4. This brings me to the last question. We are not yet in the midst of civil war. But we are nearing it. At present we are playing at it. War is a respectable term for goondaism practised on a mass or national scale. If the British are wise, they will keep clear of it. Appearances are to the contrary. Even the English members in the provincial Assemblies refuse to see that they were given seats by the Act of 1935, not because it was right but in order that they might protect British interest and keep Hindus and Muslims apart. But they do not see this. It is a small matter. Nevertheless it is a straw showing the way the wind is blowing. Lovers and makers of Swaraj must not be dismayed by these omens. My advice is Satyagraha first and Satyagraha last. There is no other or better road to freedom. Whoever wants to drink the ozone of freedom must steel himself against seeking military or police aid. He or they must ever rely upon their own strong arms or what is infinitely better, their strong mind and will which are independent of arms, their own or other.

New Delhi, 9-9-'46

PROHIBITION

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The following extracts from Rev. E. Gordon's writing provoke thoughts on total prohibition :

"With famine facing the country, we cannot very well quarrel with sincere efforts for combating the menace, but why prohibition of foodstuffs such as, pastries, ice cream etc. which have real food value, and why talk of prohibition or severe reduction of supply of sugar to aerated water and other mineral water manufacturers and yet keep absolutely silent about the prohibition or severe reduction of cereals and sugar to the distilleries and breweries? Is the drinking of alcoholic liquors any less of a luxury than the eating of pies, pastries and cakes? Can even the most astute and ardent lovers of alcoholic beverages argue that these drinks are so essential to life that no reduction can be made in the amount of cereals and sugar required to make whisky, beer etc. ?

"Granted that there is a certain amount of food value in beer, is it equal in value to the barley that could be used in making bread or cakes ?

"The President of the United States has ordered a drastic cut in the quota of wheat to be issued to distilleries in the U. S. A. How can we from India plead with America to send us large quantities of grain to save millions from death by starvation, when no published statements assure us that grains, whether imported or grown in this country, will be used for intoxicating drinks ?

"We give our whole-hearted approval to the Congress Ministry of Madras in their desire to introduce prohibition as soon as possible. Notwithstanding all that anti-prohibitionists say about the failure of prohibition in the United States, if they would honestly look at the other side of the picture, they would find that the drinking is far worse now than it was then and the amount of spiritous liquors is increasing year by year. Other things being equal, we sincerely believe that under prohibition, India will forge ahead much quicker and more rapidly than she could without prohibition. Honestly tried and courageously and indefatigably enforced, she will prove to the world the extent to which liquor has dragged and is dragging down the nations of the world."

The Reverend gentleman is right. India has the capacity and the opportunity to lead the world in the matter of prohibition. Can she forego the revenue derived from this degrading traffic? She must, if she is to live. I have a hideous tale from South Africa, related to me by Satyagrahi Cachalia Junior, a worthy son of his deceased father who was a hero of the first Satyagraha campaign in that country. He tells me that a thoughtless agitation has brought to the Indian community, the freedom to drink, with the result that it is sapping their moral strength. I know what this deadly freedom means. On this issue there is no difference of opinion between Indians, Mussalmans and, shall I say, others in India, save the liquor interest.

I have no doubt that the loss of revenue which drains the moral and material means of the poor drinkers, will be more than balanced by the gain accruing to them from prohibition. Moreover, the military burden in defence of which the argument for the maintenance of the excise revenue has so far been used, cannot hold water in the New India, where that burden will no longer exist. The excise revenue must, therefore, be sacrificed without delay and without hesitation. No thought of the loss of this revenue, should interfere with the progress of this much-needed reform. Whether the happy conjunction between the Congress and the League takes place or not, the Congress Provinces should dare to do the right.

The positive side of prohibition must run side by side with the negative. The positive consists in providing the drinker with counter-attractions giving him health and innocent amusement.

New Delhi, 7-9-'46

REGARDING HINDUSTANI

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"The great and encouraging work that is being done on behalf of Hindustani is of real benefit to the country and a help towards attainment of freedom. The country that has no national language has no right to exist. But that is our unfortunate position today. And yet our leaders are not paying due attention towards this matter. In spite of your efforts, Congress workers do not put your advice into practice. You are aware that in our Congress Committee meetings as also in our legislatures, most people, including even those whose mother tongue is either Hindi or Urdu, prefer to speak in English. Is it not possible to make it compulsory for Congressmen to speak and carry on work whether in meetings or legislatures in Hindustani, just as it is made incumbent on them to wear Khadi? Of course, some latitude will have to be given to those who are wholly unacquainted with Hindustani, but even they should be given a definite time limit within which to learn the national language. My experience is that responsible Congressmen who know Hindustani prefer to speak in English. This must be stopped if we want the change to be universal. Today Congressmen are taking high office. There too they should try to carry on their work in the mother tongue."

The correspondent is quite right. The lure for English has not left us. And until it goes, our own languages will remain paupers. Would that the people's Governments everywhere would do their work either in the national or provincial languages! But to attain this, they must have language experts in their offices and the public must be encouraged to write in their provincial or the national language. We shall not only be saved much expense by adopting our own languages but it will also make things much easier for the general public.

New Delhi, 7-9-'46

(From Harijansevak)

HARIJAN WORK IN KISTNA DISTRICT

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Shri G. Ramachandra Rao writes a letter giving an account of his Harijan work. The following is a precis of it :

"We have taken up the problem of the use of public wells by Harijans. Section 126A of the Madras Local Boards Act of 1920 provides for the use, by persons of whatever caste or creed, of wells, tanks, reservoirs, water-ways etc. maintained by a Panchayat. It even imposes a fine of Rs. 100 on anyone who obstructs its operation. But the law is honoured in the breach where the Harijans are concerned. It is pathetic to see the latter often waiting in long queues for hours at a time in front of a public well for some generous non-Harijan to fill their pots with water. We chose Kankipadu village where a public well is maintained by the local Panchayat and explained to the leaders, not only the implications of the law but also their moral obligations. The response, after about three weeks of propaganda, being heartening, we called a public meeting where, owing to overwhelming support for the proposition, it was announced that in future Harijans would be allowed to use the well in question without molestation.

"The next morning, however, the Harijans themselves were found to be too timid to take advantage of the decision. It was a sad commentary on their mentality and we had to work hard to bring them to the well. As soon as they began drawing water, a reaction set in among the caste Hindus, the vast majority of whom, even at personal inconvenience, refrained from coming to the well. A few, however, remained staunch to their resolve and gradually the opposition was worn down. I had also to appeal to the Deputy Inspector of Local Board to explain to the people the implications of section 126A.

"This experience has encouraged us to take up similar work in other villages too, where Harijans have no facilities for obtaining water. I am of opinion that for the removal of such disabilities, moral persuasion and legal provision should go hand in hand. Absence of one renders the other inefficient. The existing Government acts dealing with social disabilities are vague and weak. This defect must be remedied and the Government of Madras, who have set aside one crore of rupees for Harijan work, might well utilize a certain sum for publicity of the provisions of the relevant laws already on the statute book. Execution of the law is as important as its passing."

Professor Rao deserves hearty congratulations for his assiduous work on behalf of the oppressed Harijans. His effort ought to be supported by the public.

New Delhi, 7-9-'46

WEEKLY LETTER

LAND WITHOUT SUFFERING

Gandhiji echoed the sentiment of the whole country when he remarked the other day after the evening prayer, that they had a right to hope that now their country would become the land where there was no sorrow and no suffering as described in the song which they had sung so often at the prayer. That consummation would not be brought about merely by their Ministers wearing the crown of thorns. That land, as the poet had sung, was within us. It was within the power of every one to raise him or herself above the sphere of sorrow and suffering by fulfilling certain conditions and if many people did that in India, we should realize the dream of a society in which there is no sorrow and suffering. But today alas! the people were filled with fear and anger. Brother quarrelled with brother and returned anger for anger and blow for blow. What could their Ministers do? Were they expected to send the military and the police to protect them? The whole atmosphere was rotten. Offices and staff had been multiplied a hundredfold. No wonder, bribery and corruption were rampant.

If they did not purify themselves within and without, they would make government impossible for their Ministers and displace the very men whom they had put in power.

Again how could their country become the land without sorrow and regrets while their bhangi brethren continued to be oppressed. It pained him to hear and read of the persecution of Harijans in villages. If there was an epidemic, they were beaten. They could not draw water from wells. They lived in hovels. This state of affairs may not exist in the country of our dreams. All human beings are one in the sight of God and they must look upon Harijans as no less members of the great human family than they themselves were.

It pained him to hear too that bribery and corruption were rampant among the bhangis themselves. They should not demean themselves by giving bribes to corrupt officials or their own foremen and jamadars etc. They should not look upon themselves as beggars at anyone's door. They must demand justice and fight for it, but with clean hands. And with their own Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and others as Ministers, they need have no fear that justice would not be meted out to them.

ALL EYES ON MINISTERS

Soon after the new Ministers took office, Gandhiji received a note in which some English friends had expressed the fear that the lovely gardens of the houses, formerly occupied by the members of the Viceroy's Executive Council, would now suffer neglect. There would be no flowers, grass would be allowed to grow anyhow where there were velvety lawns and the compound would be untidy. Carpets, chairs and other furniture would probably be ruined by oil or grease stains, the lavatories would be dirty etc. Gandhiji said that having lived in England and South Africa and known Englishmen well, he could be witness to the fact that cultured English people do understand and observe the laws of sanitation and hygiene. English officials were living in palaces as kings. They kept a huge staff of servants to keep their houses and surroundings clean. The people's leaders had gone to the Interim Government as their servants. They were of the people and one with them. There was no need for them to depend on a large staff of servants. They would be untrue to their calling, if they did. But they could and should keep their houses and surroundings spotlessly clean by self-help. The women of their household would be their caretakers with themselves and Gandhiji knew that not one of the leaders would hesitate to clean their own lavatories. A doctor lady had told him years ago, that while the Viceroy's House was a palace and spotlessly clean, the quarters of his staff of Harijans etc. were a very different show. The people's leaders would make no such difference. One of Jawaharlalji's personal staff—a Harijan—had been an M.L.A. They treated their servants as members of the family. Gandhiji would not be happy, unless the Ministers of the nation maintained the highest standards in every department of life and he was sure, they would not disappoint the nation.

A FOOLISH WASTE OF MONEY

One of the new Ministers was describing to Gandhiji the other day how Pandit Jawaharlal had to wade through a pile of 500 to 800 wires every day and an equal number was probably being received by the Viceroy. Characterizing the practice as a foolish waste of money as well as of the Viceroy's and their Ministers' precious time, in one of his prayer addresses, he described how at one time, people used to send wires to the King, little realizing that as a constitutional monarch, he was bound by the advice of his ministers.

Time was when the Viceroy was all-powerful and could do everything. But now he had of his own free will, relegated his powers to the Cabinet of which, like the King of England, he was the constitutional head. The King of England could not do anything without the consent of his ministers. The people of England had even beheaded one monarch because he went against their will. Gandhiji hoped that the people's ministers here would never do anything of the kind because they had in their possession the matchless weapon of Satyagraha, should occasion ever arise for its use. In any case, the people who sent these wires, should realize that apart from burdening the recipients and the telegraph offices, they were also wasting the people's money. The well-to-do imagined it was their money; but it really belonged to the starving masses whom they exploited.

BOMBAY'S SHAME

Gandhiji then turned with a heavy heart to the continued strife in Bombay. He did not know who killed whom. But it was tragic that some people even rejoiced that Hindus were now strong enough to kill in return those, who tried to kill them. He would far rather that Hindus died without retaliation, for, that was the only way to quench the fire of hatred. But today they had neither that valour nor that non-violence or love in their hearts. Demand for more and more military and police protection was pouring in from all sides. To quarrel among ourselves was bad enough. But far worse was to call in troops whom the British had trained and whose oath of allegiance was to the British King. He did not want the people to ask the Government anywhere for military and police protection. They must generate their own strength and not rely on anyone else. If they insisted on being provided with military and police help, the Ministers should resign rather than comply with a request that would strangle Independence at its very inception. Instead, they and their leaders should be willing to go into the fray themselves and lay down their lives for the sake of Hindu and Muslim honour. As for the military, they should be harnessed to all kinds of constructive work at which they were adepts. Let them grow more food for the starving millions and do all kinds of other work that was waiting to be done.

DELHI MUNICIPALITY

Some members of the Delhi Municipality and businessmen had come and complained, said Gandhiji, that in Delhi it was the Chief Commissioner's and Deputy Commissioner's raj. He had told them in reply that the remedy lay in their own hands. They should go to the Municipality for service only, with no personal end to serve. He was afraid, they would not be able to stand that test. They had many sins of omission and commission to answer for. As elected representatives in the Municipality, they were responsible for the Harijan hovels and the dirt and squalor of Delhi. Businessmen and contractors exploited the poor. If communal strife occurs in Delhi, it is the citizens who are responsible. The day for the Commissioner's raj is over. It must now be the people's raj, but the people must be alive to their responsibilities.

COMMUNAL STRIFE

Gandhiji brought his discourse to an end by expressing sorrow at the Qaid-e-Azam's recent utterances. He was the leader of a powerful organization and it behoved him to weigh every word he spoke. If he did, it would redound to his credit, it would be for the good of Islam, for the benefit of Hinduism too and for the welfare of India as a whole. But, said Gandhiji, each one was responsible for his own correct action and correct action on the part of everyone would make the Qaid-e-Azam act aright too.

The rising tide of communal hatred, passion and violence and as a result, false propaganda in the country made Gandhiji open out his heart to his audience on the day following. It had hurt him to hear some of the recent pronouncements of the Qaid-e-Azam and his lieutenants. They go on saying that they will take what they want by force. He wondered where this was going to lead the ship of State. Congressmen may have the reins of power come into their hands but this has only increased their duties and responsibilities a hundredfold. While Congress was in the wilderness, they were arrested, beaten and punished, even killed; but that is past history for the time being at any rate. If Congress had resorted to violence, they would have fallen. The only true suffering is that which does not retaliate and it alone can bear fruit. Moreover, the 40 crores of India, i. e. Village India did not think in terms of violence. They were slaves. The violence today was in the hearts of a handful of towns people. Gandhiji said that as a villager, he became one with the ocean of Indian humanity and Congress has taken office for the sake of this suffering humanity. He had espoused the Hindu-Muslim cause, long before he joined the Congress. Even as a boy at school he had many Muslim friends. He went to South Africa in charge of a case for Muslim friends of his brother. He went to South Africa to earn his living but he soon put service first. He became a coolie barrister in order to serve his labourer friends there and he really served Hindus through Muslims whose employee he was. Hindu-Muslim unity was part of his very being. The memory of those days, Gandhiji said, was full of fragrance for him. Even today, although alas! communal differences have raised their head there too, all were fighting as one man for Indian rights. He recalled stalwart Muslims who had joined the Satyagraha movement, especially Sheth Cachalia now gone, who said he would rather die than remain a slave. He, therefore, wondered and was hurt when the Qaid-e-Azam and his disciples called Hindus their enemies. He was not a Muslim but he claimed that Islam did not teach enmity to any man. If he was as he believed, a true Hindu, he was equally a good Christian and a good Sikh and a good Jain. No religion teaches man to kill fellow man because he holds different opinions or is of another religion, and yet this was what was being done. No one can look upon another as his enemy unless he first becomes his own enemy. The Muslim League leaders talked of forcing the Congress and the Hindus and even the British to yield to their demands. This surely was not the right way. He recalled with pride the days of the Khilafat and related the incident when the Ali Brothers wept tears of joy. Gandhiji was addressing a meeting of Hindus and said to them, 'If you want to save the cow, you must save the Khilafat, die for it if need be.' This brought tears of joy to the eyes of the Ali Brothers. What a sad change was there today! He longed for those days when Muslims and Hindus never did anything without consulting each other. What could he do to bring that state of affairs back again, was the question that was worrying him all the time. He made bold to say that for any Hindu or Mussalman to regard the other community as 'enemy' was not only disloyal but stupid too. He appealed to Englishmen too not to imagine that they could keep them apart. If they did, they were disloyal to both India and Britain. Hindus and Muslims were all one of the same soil, blood-brothers who ate the same food, drank the same water and talked the same language. They have to live together. The Qaid-e-Azam says, all minorities will be safe in Pakistan. There is already Muslim raj in the Punjab and Bengal and Sindh. But does it augur well for future peace if things happen in these provinces as threatened? Does the Muslim League imagine they are going to keep Islam alive through the sword? If so, they are much mistaken. The very word Islam means peace. And Gandhiji maintained that no religion worthy of the name, could exist except on terms of peace.

GIVE THEM TIME

He was being asked, said Gandhiji in his message, which was read out at the evening prayer gathering yesterday (Monday), as to when the Salt Tax was going to be removed. Why had it not been removed so far? The question denoted impatience. The Cabinet had only been in office eight days. Its Finance Member had not yet taken charge of his office and for this question, his arrival must be awaited. The Cabinet could do nothing without due deliberation. If anyone had the right to show impatience, it should be he, for, he was the originator of the idea of the anti-Salt Tax campaign. He also knew how best it could be abolished with the least loss of revenue. But he knew too that people must not be impatient and they might not worry the Cabinet into doing things in haste. They were people's representatives, working according to the people's wishes. They must have faith that the Salt Tax would go and he who had faith, could afford to be patient. There were many other things that the Cabinet had to do for the people as quickly as possible. If they continue to give them support, the Ministers would surely, in good time, do all that should be done.

New Delhi, 10-9-'46

PYARELAL

CONTENTS	PAGE
CONGRESS MINISTERS AND NON-VIOLENCE	... M. K. GANDHI 309
QUESTION BOX	... M. K. GANDHI 311
WHAT TO DO?	... M. K. GANDHI 312
PROHIBITION	... M. K. GANDHI 313
REGARDING HINDUSTANI HARIJAN WORK IN KISTNA DISTRICT	... M. K. GANDHI 314
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL 314
NOTES:
THE LOWLY COW	... M. K. G. 310
KHADDAR	... M. K. G. 310
THE DEVADASI SYSTEM	... M. K. G. 310
UNTOUCHABILITY AND THE FLUSH SYSTEM	... M. K. G. 310
HARIJANS AND WELLS	... M. K. G. 311
AN AUSTRALIAN EXPERIMENT	... P. 311
INDEPENDENCE CELEBRATIONS	... 311

HARIJAN

12 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 33

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1946

TWO ANNAS

PROUD OR INSANE ?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Who would not like to know Gujarat as proud ? It is permissible affectionately to call her insane. As I write these lines in sorrow, the picture that comes before my mind is not of proud but of insane Gujarat.

Shri Parikshitlal is a servant of the Harijans. He aspires in that capacity to serve Gujarat but is baffled by the madness that has seized her people. One hears of living Harijans but in Parikshitlal's story, Harijans dead are also untouchables. On the cremation ground, at any rate, there should be no distinctions between man and man. Once the dead body is reduced to ashes, all uncleanness vanishes. In spite of this, must Harijans be excluded from the common cremation ground ? After much difficulty the Mahajans of Navsari were persuaded to permit the body of an old Harijan to be cremated on the common ground. As a matter of fact, there was neither room for favour on one side nor for rejoicing on the other. But one has, at times, to be thankful for small mercies. It is well that the agitation in this case bore fruit.

The other instance is an unmixed tragedy. I do not propose to give the name of the village where it took place. The despicable part of it is that even if an epidemic breaks out among the cattle, it is the poor Harijans who are held responsible. The so-called caste Hindus will not take the trouble even to see the obvious cause of the disease. Grass grows in abundance during the rainy season. It is infested with all kinds of insects. The starved cattle go mad at the sight of green grass and devour it, insects and all. Is it any wonder that they fall ill and die ? The cause of the epidemic is obvious. The cattle of the Harijans suffer no less and yet the latter are held responsible for the calamity. They are subjected to maltreatment in the shape of abuse and assault from the caste Hindus. This, in brief, is the gist of a woeful tale, described in a letter before me. How I wish that my words could reach the ears of the villagers concerned !

Now that reformers are at the helm of government, much of the terrible ignorance of the villagers could be dispelled, if only the officials would make the effort. If the Mahajans shed their superstition and the Government and Harijan workers do their duty and the Harijans are roused from their slumbers, it will be possible to deliver Gujarat from this dreadful evil.

New Delhi, 13-9-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

UNCERTIFIED KHADI v. MILL CLOTH

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A Gujarati friend asks :

"Ever so many national organizations insist that not only should their staff be dressed in Khadi, but that even books should be Khadi-bound. Since certified Khadi can only be had from the recognized bhandars on payment of a certain quota of yarn, they naturally resort to uncertified Khadi. Is this right ? Is not mill cloth preferable to uncertified Khadi ? Is not insistence on Khadi that results in buying it from uncertified shops really a false pretence ?"

When, among other things, there is a dearth of Khadi, it is improper to insist on its use for purposes of bookbinding etc. When there was an abundance of Khadi, it was I who recommended its use for all such purposes. The entire Congress Camp in Ahmedabad in 1921, was bedecked in Khadi. Today it would be madness to attempt such a thing. Time and circumstances alter methods.

But I do not understand the writer's plea for mill cloth as opposed to uncertified Khadi. What is uncertified Khadi ? Is it not hand-spun and hand-woven cloth though uncertified ? That there may be fraud about it, is another matter. The Charkha Sangh cannot guarantee cent per cent purity in even certified Khadi. Nothing in this world is proof against deceit, has been true throughout the ages. Drawbacks in uncertified Khadi are well known. In it there is no fixity of wages to the spinners and the weavers. Those who sell it, make what profits they like. Often do persons set up shops, merely to spite the Charkha Sangh bhandars. Nevertheless, where there is no fraud, all cloth which is hand-spun and hand-woven must be called Khadi. What a person spins and has woven into cloth for himself, is not certified in the legal sense and yet it is Khadi in the highest and purest sense of the term. It would be a crime on that person's part, to use mill cloth instead of the cloth made from the labour of his own hands.

The upshot is that exclusion of mill cloth must be maintained. Uncertified Khadi should be avoided as far as possible, but where certified Khadi is not available and the choice lies between mill cloth and uncertified home-spun, preference should be given to the latter, assuming of course that it is pure Khadi. You may condemn, if you like, as uncertified, cloth made out of the labour of one's own hands; but the fact remains that it is a purer production than certified Khadi. And, if all span enough to have cloth woven for their requirements, what need would there then be for the Charkha Sangh ?

Heaven and earth would then ring with cries of victory to the Charkha Sangh.

New Delhi, 12-9-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

THE MOTHER OF KHADDAR

A retired economic botanist (for cotton and rabi cereals) to the U. P. Government in a letter to Gandhiji writes:

"In the past you have frequently emphasized the use of Khaddar for the general public, both in the villages and the cities. The Government Agricultural Departments in their zeal for the export of fine quality cotton and the supply of cotton bales to the local spinning mills instead of improving the local desi strains through the new Plant Breeding methods have adopted a line of discarding or relegating to the background our country cotton strains and replacing them with foreign American varieties as is found all over the Punjab. American cotton types are undoubtedly producers of better staples, fit for superior cloth of higher counts through mill manufacture. But our old desi strains have certain advantages of hardiness and acclimatization, viz. fitness for providing thatchings for roofs in the villages, in addition to providing raw material for local spinning of yarn and weaving of cloth on ordinary handlooms.

"By improving the desi varieties of cotton through modern scientific methods, it is possible to raise their spinning worth from 6 and 8 counts to about 22s."

The writer, who has been connected with the cotton breeding work in one of the provinces of Upper India, has been successfully evolving through cross fertilization methods in one of the Government Cotton Research Stations, a cotton strain with a quality of fibre fit for spinning from 18 to 22 counts. The fine quality cottons, he points out, mostly give a lower ginning percentage, i. e. the proportion of lint to seed; while short staple cottons give a higher ginning figure. He has been able to combine the better spinning quality of 22s with a pretty high ginning figure of 38 per cent of lint.

The friend goes on to remark:

"In the light of my almost 35 years of continuous and uninterrupted association with the cotton plant in India, supplemented by observations made personally in Egypt and the United States, I feel convinced that if proper efforts are made by devoting full attention to the study and improvement of the indigenous cotton strains, there are definite possibilities of getting unexpected and brighter results."

He has sent a sample of C520 which is a newly improved desi Bengal variety. On being turned into slivers by tunai, it has easily given yarn up to 40 counts.

The suggestion made by the writer is worthy of consideration by the Provincial Governments. The struggle between handicrafts and industrial production is not merely one between two sets of technical processes but between two dissimilar and competing systems of economy which, in many cases, are mutually exclusive. In the past economics favourable to handicrafts have too often been sacrificed to the requirements of mass production. The development of huge cotton tracts by the expenditure of millions of pounds, to provide long staple cotton to Indian and foreign textile industry, is an instance in point.

It is a well-known fact that the staple that is best suited for mill-spinning is not needed for hand-spinning. Hand-spinning can produce better results with the so-called lower grades of cotton. The fact was established through a series of interesting tests made at the time of the Paris Exhibition of 1864. The curious may turn to the pages of Forbes Watson for a detailed account of those tests. A hardy, improved, indigenous variety of cotton of fair staple and high ginning percentage and yield that can be grown individually for local consumption is the mother of Khaddar. It is the prime necessity for its success.

New Delhi, 7-9-'46

PYARELAL

SUGGESTIONS FOR JAILS

A friend who was at one time superintendent of a jail makes the following suggestions which are worth consideration for meeting the present food and cloth shortage:

1. Utilizing every bit of land in all jails, Borstal institutions, mental hospitals, reformatories etc. for cultivation of more tubers, e. g. potatoes, yams, carrots, radishes etc., which are rich in calcium, minerals and vitamins and could be substituted for rice or wheat at one meal.

2. Preventing waste in cooked food by providing a longer interval between the morning and evening meals and even restricting the prisoners to two meals in consultation with them.

3. Discontinuing the use of the best prisoners for the personal service of jail officials.

4. Paying more attention to and supervising more carefully the cultivation of eatables and cotton in order to reduce the quantity of food and cloth, purchased in the market.

5. Having ideal dairies in every jail and stopping jail officials from keeping cows. These officials may be permitted to purchase milk from jail dairies.

6. Securing co-operation, non-existent today, of departments of agriculture and livestock industries and veterinary in order to co-ordinate work.

7. Making use of the acres of arable lands attached to some jails for emergency use.

8. Introducing the compost system and stopping waste of manure from dairies.

9. Growing fodder for animals on the premises and acquiring grazing lands for each institution, the present misuse and abuse in the jail department at all stages to be stopped.

LEPROSY AND CONTAMINATION

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Dr. R. G. Cochrane, Principal of the Missionary Medical College for Women in Vellore writes:

"My good friend Mr. Jagadisan has brought to my attention a paragraph in the Hindu of Madras of August, the 26th. It reads: 'Bihar is going to have a separate jail for the leper prisoners, it is learnt, to save other prisoners from contamination. Arrangements are being made in the first instance, it is understood, to segregate about 100 such prisoners at Govindpur in the District of Manbhum. I was so pained by the news that I could not resist the urge to write to you, for, you have been a consistent champion of those who suffer from leprosy and indeed, of all persons in society who are undeservedly stigmatized. I feel that I should write to you and say that it will be a great pity if the Bihar Government were to build a separate jail for prisoners with leprosy. It is a gratuitous measure whose only effect will be the strengthening of the public's prejudice against leprosy. On examination, it is likely to be found that 80% at least of the prisoners with leprosy are non-infective, and, therefore, there is absolutely no reason, why these should be separated from the other prisoners. With regard to the prisoners who suffer from infective leprosy, the main precautions are that the prisoner should not come into contact with healthy persons, during night and should avoid, direct, close contact during the day. As leprosy is a mildly contagious disease, even its infective types, a prisoner with infective leprosy could be more easily dealt with than prisoners with other infective diseases. And yet, if the report is true, the Bihar Government is going to act on the fear of 'contamination'. The very use of this word indicates a mediaeval attitude to leprosy. It is a great pity that statements are being continually published to suggest that leprosy patients are contaminated in some way or other.

"We in Madras, enthusiastically supported by Mr. Jagadisan, are doing all we can to protest against the discrimination of the patient suffering from leprosy on the grounds of social stigma. It is no more of a disgrace to get leprosy than to get measles, and not until the general public realize that it is not a rapidly spreading plague, as it is commonly believed to be, shall we make any advance in the control of leprosy. I am very grateful to hear from Mr. Jagadisan that you have now put leprosy work as an integral part of the Nation's Constructive Programme. Your remark that the leprosy patient is as much a part of society as the tallest of us, moves me deeply. May I hope that India's leaders will follow your footsteps and do the right thing by the leprosy patient?"

It is to be hoped that the information about Bihar is not true and that, if it is, this letter of his will dissipate the fear of leprosy. "Superstitions die hard." In this land of faith and superstitions, both flourish abundantly. Hence, they often intermingle and the contamination of superstitions—a multitude—seems to have overlaid faith so much so that, it is hard to distinguish between the two. But my faith which burns too bright for the army of superstitions to touch it, tells me that leprosy is no contamination. We must learn the laws governing infectious and contagious diseases and obey them.

Dr. Cochrane is, I believe, a medical philanthropist. He knows a great deal about leprosy and lepers. I fancy that the National Governments will not be wrong in accepting his judgment that, of all the diseases of the kind, leprosy is the least among them. In its virulent form, it deprives a patient of his limbs and defies ordinary medical treatment. What nature does is yet unknown. But the ordinary man does not need to bother about this difficult matter. Enough if he realizes that a leper is as much his brother as any other, and he is on no account to be shunned.

New Delhi, 11-9-'46

COLLECTIVE PRAYER

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. You believe in mass prayer. Is congregational worship as practised today, a true prayer? In my opinion, it is a degrading thing and therefore dangerous. Jesus said: "When thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are, but enter into thine inner chamber and having shut thy door pray to the Father which is in secret." Most people in a crowd are inattentive and unable to concentrate. Prayer then becomes hypocrisy. The yogi is aware of this. Should not the masses, therefore, be taught self-examination which is the true prayer?

A. I hold that congregational worship held by me, is true prayer for a collection of men. The convener is a believer and no hypocrite. If he were one, the prayer would be tainted at the source. The men and women who attend do not go to any orthodox prayer house from which they might have to gain an earthly end. The bulk of them have no contact with the convener. Hence it is presumed, they do not come for show. They join in because they believe that they somehow or other, acquire merit by having common prayer. That most or some persons are inattentive or unable to concentrate, is very true. That merely shows that they are beginners. Neither inattention nor inability to concentrate are any proof of hypocrisy or falsity. It would be, if they pretended to be attentive when they were not. On the contrary, many have often asked me what they should do, when they are unable to concentrate.

The saying of Jesus quoted in the question, is wholly inapplicable. Jesus was referring to individual prayer and to hypocrisy underlying it. There is nothing in the verse quoted, against collective prayer. I have remarked often enough that without individual prayer, collective prayer is not of much use. I hold that individual prayer is a prelude to collective, as the latter, when it is effective, must lead to the individual. In other words, when a man has got to the stage of heart prayer, he prays always, whether in the secret or in the multitude.

I do not know what the questioner's yogi does or does not. I know that the masses when they are in tune with the Infinite, naturally resort to self-examination. All real prayer must have that end.

New Delhi, 14-9-'46

HARIJAN

September 22

1946

CHARKHA JAYANTI

(By M. K. Gandhi)

What is known as Charkha Jayanti is not Gandhi Jayanti even though the date always coincides with the day of my birth. The reason for this is clear. In ancient times the Charkha had nothing to do with Independence. If anything, it had a background of slavery. Poor women used perforce to have to spin in order to get even a piece of dry bread. They used to get such cowrie shells as the government of the day chose to throw at them. I remember in my childhood, watching the then Thakore Saheb of Rajkot, literally throw money to the poor on a particular day. I used to enjoy the fun which it was to me. I can picture in my imagination, how in olden times the poor spinners would have a few shells thrown at them which they would pick up greedily.

In 1908, in South Africa, I conceived the idea that if poverty-stricken India were to be freed from the alien yoke, India must learn to look upon the spinning wheel and hand-spun yarn as the symbol, not of slavery but of freedom. It should also mean butter to bread. It took very little to bring home this truth to Shri Narandas Gandhi and he has, therefore, understood the true significance of Charkha Jayanti. My birthday, so far as I know, was never celebrated before the date got connected with Charkha Jayanti. In South Africa where I had become fairly known, no one ever took any notice of it. It was here that it was joined with Charkha Jayanti. The English day of my birthday has also been included. Therefore, the Jayanti week this year, is being celebrated from 22-9-'46 to 2-10-'46. Narandas Gandhi has played the chief role in this and, as I write these lines, the days of celebration come to mind. In my opinion, however, the real celebration will come only when the music of the wheel which is the symbol of Independence and non-violence will be heard in every home. If a few or even a crore of poor women spin in order to earn a pittance, what can the celebration mean to them and what achievement can that be? This can well happen even under a despotic rule and is today visible, wherever capital holds sway. Millionaires are sustained by the charity, they dole out to the poor; may be even in the form of wages.

The celebration will only be truly worth-while when the rich and the poor alike understand that all are equal in the eyes of God, that each one, in his own place, must earn his bread by labour, and that the independence of all will be protected, not by guns and ammunition but by the bullets, in the shape of cones of hand-spun yarn, i. e. not by violence but by non-violence.

If we consider the atmosphere in the world today, this may sound ludicrous. But if we look within, this is the truth and the eternal truth. For the moment, it is Narandas Gandhi and other devotees of the Charkha, who are trying to demonstrate it through their faith. Let all understand and celebrate the Jayanti in the same spirit as fires these devoted workers.

New Delhi, 14-9-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

STOP IT

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A Hindi journalist writes to ask me that since a trilingual dictionary, such as is appearing in the Harijan is already on the market, where is the need of the latter? If the dictionary referred to answers the purpose, I agree that the Harijan effort is not worth-while. If such a dictionary is in existence, I shall be sorry and surprised that none of my co-workers was aware of the fact. Now I am trying to get hold of the book in question and if it answers my purpose, I shall certainly own the mistake and end the unnecessary labour.

Another friend, writing in English, has drawn my attention to the same dictionary and in addition, he complains that my Hindustani is in reality Urdu and, therefore, I am daily becoming more and more unpopular in the Hindi-loving world. The same criticism assails me from the Urdu world. They say that while I call my language Hindustani, I do nothing but displace Urdu words by Sanskritized Hindi ones. I welcome both criticisms. My Hindustani is neither Urdu nor Hindi. It is sought to be a proper mixture of the two. But the river that I desire to flow from the meeting of the waters of Hindi and Urdu is today, I admit, invisible. Scholars tell me that it flowed at one time but that, it has now disappeared. Be that as it may, the aim of propaganda for Hindustani is that the two languages, whose grammar is one but whose words are derived from different sources, should not remain apart, but should so mingle as to become one river. Success of this attempt depends on the labours of the Hindustani Prachar workers. If there is soundness in their effort, it will not have gone in vain. Ultimate success always rests in the hands of God. And, if we realize that He is the Doer as also the Destroyer, why should we worry?

This work has not been undertaken with a view to gaining popularity, with the people. True service seeks no praise nor is it frightened by criticism. That is no service which swells with pride at applause or withers under criticism. A true servant finds his reward in single-eyed service. I would, therefore appeal to my critics to help rather than find fault with me in this good work, so that the blending of the two streams may further enrich and enlighten this great land. It will not offend God if, in addition to calling Him 'Ishwar,' I name him 'Khuda' or 'Allah' and, at the same time, increase my knowledge of Him.

New Delhi, 13-9-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

TIRED OF SATYAGRAHA?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

News comes from Durban that a group of Indians has sprung up in South Africa, who have lost faith in Satyagraha. They cherish the dream that they can overthrow the rule of the White man there, only by joining forces with the Negroes, the coloured people, other Asiatics and European sympathizers and adopting violent means. The rumour, if there is any truth in it, is disturbing and a definite fly in the ointment. All, whether they believe in non-violence or not, should realize that Indians in South Africa gained world-wide esteem, simply because, in spite of being a handful, they showed infinite capacity for suffering and did not, through losing their patience, resort to sabotage and violence. They learnt the wholesome lesson that true well-being springs from suffering and that victory lies in unity. From my own experience, my firm advice to Indians in South Africa is that they should, on no account, be lured away into throwing aside the matchless weapon of Satyagraha.

This does not, however, imply that they are not to accept the help of the coloured people, Negroes and any other sympathizers or that they will not help them in their need, should occasion arise. The only condition is that Satyagraha should be their one and only weapon. If they go astray from the path of non-violence, they will conform to the description of the poor woman, who, as an Indian proverb goes, went in search of a son and succeeded in losing her husband!

New Delhi, 11-9-'46

(From Harijanbandhu)

PANDIT NEHRU'S STATEMENT

I am informed by a friend in Durban that my name has been freely used there by some people in support of a violent struggle, in place of the present non-violent campaign being carried on in South Africa and that the association of Africans and others for this violent struggle is being sought. I am surprised to learn this, because I am quite clear that it will be fatal for the Indians in South Africa to adopt violent methods in their struggle. If the non-violent method is desirable in India, it is far more necessary in South Africa in the conditions prevailing there. I have often asked Indians in South Africa, to co-operate with Africans there, and I hope they will do so. The issue raised in South Africa is something much more than an Indian issue. It is an issue which affects all Asians and, of course, all Africans. Therefore, this co-operation is necessary between all those affected. But co-operation can only be effective and succeed on the basis of peaceful methods and it would be folly to indulge in violence.

Acknowledgment

The treasurer of the A. I. C. C. asks me to say that he has received Rs. 2400 on behalf of the President of the Congress from the Indian community in Manila, Philippine Islands, for the purpose of famine relief.

M. K. G.

WEEKLY LETTER

IF I WERE A DICTATOR

"If I were a dictator, religion and State would be separate. I swear by my religion. I will die for it. But it is my personal affair. The State has nothing to do with it," remarked Gandhiji sometime back in answer to a question by a missionary friend who asked whether in Free India there would be complete religious freedom and whether religion would be separate from the State. "The State would look after your secular welfare, health, communications, foreign relations, currency and so on, but not your or my religion. That is everybody's personal concern." He then went on to describe his conception of religion. "You must watch my life, how I live, eat, sit, talk, behave in general. The sum total of all those in me is my religion," he said.

Asked which movement, e. g., women's, political, scientific or religious would have had the most far-reaching influence in the world of tomorrow and would be considered 50 years hence as having had the greatest impact on world affairs as a whole and for the greatest good of mankind, he said, it was wrong to bracket religious movement with the rest. "It is religious movement that would dominate the future," he added. "It would do so today but it does not, for religion has been reduced to a Saturday or a Sunday affair; it has to be lived every moment of one's life. Such religion, when it comes, will dominate the world."

"Do you feel there is any special significance in the increasing number and magnitude of labour strikes, especially in India of late?" he was asked next. "What do you think will be the outcome of this labour trouble in India?"

"Strikes have today become a universal plague," he replied. "There are strikes everywhere, America and England not excepted. But in India they have a special significance. We are living under an unnatural condition. As soon as the lid is removed and there is a crevice letting in the fresh air of freedom, there will be an increasing number of strikes. The fundamental reason for this spreading strike fever is that life here as elsewhere, is today uprooted from its basis, the basis of religion and what an English writer has called 'cash nexus' has taken its place. And that is a precarious bond. But even when the religious basis is there, there will be strikes, because it is scarcely conceivable that religion will have become for all the basis of life. So, there will be attempts at exploitation on the one hand, and strikes on the other. But these strikes will then be of a purely non-violent character. Such strikes never do harm to anyone. It was such a strike perhaps that brought General Smuts to his knees. "If you had hurt an Englishman," said Jan Smuts, "I would have shot you, even deported your people. As it is, I have put you in prison and tried to subdue you and your people in every way. But how long can I go on like this when you do not retaliate?" And so he had to come to terms with a mere coolie on behalf of coolies as all Indians were then called in South Africa."

AN INCIDENT AND ITS MORAL

Gandhiji has cultivated the habit of standing sentinel over himself every moment of his life. Daily he holds a silent tribunal within himself and calls himself to strict account before it for the littlest of his little actions. Nothing escapes his scrutiny and he shows himself no mercy. In fact he believes in viewing one's own shortcomings through a convex lens and those of others through a concave—the one occasion where exaggeration becomes a duty. An illustration of it was afforded the other day at the evening prayer. It has been an old practice of his to sell by auction after the evening public prayer, ornaments presented to him for the Harijan cause. He had discontinued the practice of late to save time. But it made him feel unhappy to think that he was saving his time at the cost of the Harijans who were his special wards and so, for the last 14 days, he has been disposing of one jewel every day, thereby nearly doubling the daily takings for the Harijans. Thus jewels worth Rs. 3071 in the aggregate have been auctioned at sums ranging from Rs. 100 to Rs. 400.

But on Saturday last, owing to rainy weather, the crowd was much smaller than usual. The prayer was held under a dripping shamiana and the daily auction was omitted. Afterwards Gandhiji blamed himself for it. Did it not betoken a lack of faith, he asked himself at the prayer gathering on the following day. He was afraid lest the auctions should not fetch a good price as the gathering was small. Why could he not have faith? His South African friend Downes, scheduled to speak from a church pulpit at 7 p. m. in Durban, began his address at the stroke of seven with an audience of one only. That was faith. "A man of faith," he concluded; "will remain steadfast to truth, even though the whole world might appear to be enveloped in falsehood. May God bless you with that faith is my constant prayer. Pray for me also that I too may find that faith in spite of temporary aberration."

A SIGN?

What originated as a brain wave in Kanu Gandhi's mind has succeeded beyond expectation. The eleven days' spinning course, announced by him, evoked an immediate response. 159 applications were received by the 11th, after which further admissions were closed in terms of the announcement. Many had consequently to turn back disappointed. Requests have since been received for a night class for those who cannot attend during the day-time and arrangements for the same are under consideration. Instruction is at present being given to them in spinning and the allied processes, beginning with hand separation of seed and tunai. The trainees come in two batches: one in the morning from 7 to 11 and the other in the afternoon from 2 to 5. Men predominate in the former, women in the latter batch. About 60 per cent of the men who attend in the morning are Government servants. Most of the trainees are from the well-to-do class and are obviously actuated by an altruistic motive. To see them bending over their work in sweltering heat under the thin shelter of a shamiana is a pure joy. The response was so unexpected that the organizers found it difficult to improvise proper implements in the beginning. The difficulty has since been overcome. Gandhiji inspects them at work daily in the morning and at evening and sums up his observations in the course of his address before the evening prayer gathering. In the course of his remarks yesterday he said that the sight of 144 of them attending the spinning classes daily, in the fullness of faith, made him hug the hope that one day the whole of India would be clad in Khadi. When he started the spinning revival of 1918, India was buying 60 crores worth of foreign cloth, excluding Indian mill cloth. This was the largest single import. Next came sugar with 18 crores and then hardware with 7 crores. Today, with the inflated prices the price of all mill cloth, indigenous and foreign, was probably 300 crores. Gandhiji asked his audience to ponder and realize what wealth this would mean to India, if 300 crores worth of cloth was produced by their own hands in the villages. There was a veritable mint of gold for them and if Khadi became universal, the villages would rise to unknown heights. Today our masses were poverty-stricken, without the luster of hope or intelligence in their eyes. The pure hands of the spinners could create this miracle for them and everyone could help. They should have understanding hearts and seeing eyes to detect the beauty in Khaddar even if it is coarse and not be allured by mill finery which could never clothe their nakedness in the true sense of the term. The only way to clothe their nakedness and drive away hunger was for them to grow their own food and make their own cloth. If this happy consummation could be achieved, the eyes of the whole world would be turned towards India. Today everything seemed to be going wrong in this land. He referred to the story that had appeared in the Press of the mad gunmen in Bombay who caused death of several innocent people. This shameful news must have been flashed across the radio to the world and they must hang their heads in sorrow. But, said Gandhiji, if they would only listen to him, all would be well with India. If all purified themselves and all thought of themselves as Indians, then they will have succeeded in learning the true lesson of the charkha.

In a written message in Hindustani, full of the fire of passion, that was read out on Monday, he observed: "Before the Charkha class in full swing, everything else appears dull and lifeless to me. For I behold my Rama dancing in every thread drawn. I find Swaraj in it. When I contemplate the strength of the yarn drawn by 40 crores of hands, my heart is filled with an ecstasy of joy. O, but 20 crores of Indians will not take to spinning," you say. Is it not a sign of our ignorance and lack of faith to refuse to believe in the possibility? Is it an impossible thing to expect every one of half the population to spin for an hour a day? If we have not the capacity to sacrifice even this much for our Motherland, what is our love of country worth?"

New Delhi, 16-9-'46

PYARELAL

OVER-POPULATION OR UNDER-PRODUCTION ?

It has become a fashion these days to ascribe the recurring famines in India to over-population. That theory has been challenged more than once and seems to have an escapist odour about it. Chapter and verse can be cited to show that India's undeveloped potential of food production is more than adequate to feed her growing population for a good while yet to come. A correspondent points attention to the following facts about our agriculture in this connection.

1. It has been demonstrated by experiments in Government Agricultural Farms that by sowing improved seeds, 29 per cent increase can be affected on the existing yield.

2. If the export of oil-seed, oil-cake, bones, etc. were stopped and the animal droppings saved for the soil as manure by providing the villagers with wood fuel instead of cowdung for domestic cooking etc., the existing crop output could be doubled.

3. By further development of canal irrigation and by building sufficient wells and tanks, two crops could be grown where at present, there is only one. Out of 245 crore acres in India, at present only 32 crores are under double crop.

4. A comparison of yield per acre in India and other countries respectively points to the same thing.

Here are figures for rice per acre :

Egypt	3447 lbs.
Japan	3909 "
Italy	4810 "
Formosa	2407 "
India	939 "

The figures for wheat are :

Japan	2010 lbs.
Italy	1374 "
Canada	1197 "
England	2085 "
India	774 "

5. Government statements further indicate that owing to lack of proper storage facilities, the annual loss of food grains due to the inroads of rats, insect pests, etc. comes to about 10 lakhs of tons per year.

6. The extent of cultivable land which is at present not under cultivation is 9 crore acres.

7. Lastly comes the invasion of 'money crops'. In 1900 the area under commercial crops was 165 lakh acres. In 1930 the figures rose to 240 lakh acres. During this period the land under oil-seeds increased from 130 lakh acres to 160 lakh acres. In 1942, 32% of the entire yield of oil-seeds and jute was for export, of linseed 71% and of groundnuts 15%. In other words, so much soil fertility was bartered away for commercial gain, without the possibility of returning in any shape or form to the soil what was taken out of the soil, thus impairing it permanently. This is not agriculture but downright robbery of the soil at the cost of posterity. If our agriculture could be rescued from the invasion of 'money crops' it would go a long way towards meeting the recurring threat of food shortage.

New Delhi, 7-9-'46

PYARELAL

RAMA THE SON OF DASHARATHA

(By M. K. Gandhi)

An Arya Samajist writes :

"How can the Rama whom you believe to be immortal, be Rama, the son of Dasharatha and the husband of Sita? I often attend your prayer gathering with this dilemma always confronting me and because of it, I am unable to join in the Ramadhun. This hurts me for you are right when you say that all should take part in it. Cannot you make the Ramadhun, such that all can join in the recital?"

I have already explained what I mean by all. It applies to all those who can join in it from the heart and recite it in tune. The others should remain silent. But this is a small matter. The important question is as to how Rama the son of Dasharatha can be deemed immortal. This question was raised by Saint Tulsidasa himself and answered by him. The answer cannot in reality be reasoned out. It does not lend itself to intellectual satisfaction. It is a matter of heart speaking to heart. I worshipped Rama as Sita's husband in the first instance, but as my knowledge and experience of Him grew, my Rama became immortal and omnipresent. This does not mean that Rama ceased to be Sita's husband; but the meaning of Sita's husband expanded with the vision of Rama. This is how the world evolves. Rama cannot become omnipresent for the man who regards him merely as the son of Dasharatha. But for the believer in Rama as God, the father of the omnipresent Rama also becomes omnipresent — the father and son become one. It may be said that this is all a matter of imagination. "To each man according to his faith", is all that I can say. If all religions are one at source, we have to synthesize them. Today they are looked upon as separate and that is why we kill each other. When we are tired of religion, we become atheists and then, apart from the little self, nothing, not even God, exists. But when we acquire true understanding, the little self perishes and God becomes all in all. Rama then is and is not the son of Dasharatha, the husband of Sita, the brother of Bharata and Lakshmana and yet is God, the unborn and eternal. All honour then to those who not believing in Rama as the son of Dasharatha still come to join in the collective prayers. This matter of Rama is one which transcends reason. I have merely tried to give to the reader my belief for what it is worth.

New Delhi, 16-9-'46

(From Harijansevak)

FOR AGENTS

Agents are requested to take note of the following :

1. Please remember that agents have to deposit with us an amount covering the price of their demand for two months. A month's deposit will be treated as fixed and the other as current. Every week the cost of the copies sent to them would be deducted from the current deposit.

2. The amounts for the deposits are usually sent by the agents by cheques. Please note that we do not accept cheques. The amount should be remitted either by M. O., Postal Order or by a bank draft.

MANAGER

Notes

Blank Minute Books

A student writes:

"It has become a fashion for all to pose as political workers. And politics consist in speeches and participation in election campaigns. You would be pained to know that the minute books of Congress Committees are entirely blank, except for proceedings of annual sittings. It is all power politics. Students also get drawn into its vortex. What is your ideal of a political worker?"

I have all along stressed the need for constructive work and to that end, I drew up a list of items for the guidance of all workers. I hold that if the constructive programme were worked with vigour and understanding, the result would be far more than mere political Swaraj. Speeches and election campaigns would be almost unnecessary, if our workers had established Congress in the hearts of the people through service. Then there will be more service than power and the weekly or fortnightly meetings of Congress committees will be filled with a recital of the activities and achievements of committees in the wide field of work.

New Delhi, 14-9-'46

Is It Not Cowardice?

Q. Non-violence in your opinion is not cowardice, but it is a form of resistance to injustice. You have admitted that it is wrong to arrest and imprison innocent persons which civil resisters are. And you have cheerfully courted arrest and imprisonment. Is this not inconsistent and cowardly?

A. Evidently you do not know the working of non-violence. An unjust law is itself a species of violence. Arrest for its breach is more so. Now the law of non-violence says that violence should be resisted not by counter-violence but by non-violence. Any breach of a law carries with it a penalty. It does not become unjust, merely because I say so. Nevertheless, in my opinion, it is unjust. The State has the right to enforce it, whilst it is on the statute book. I must resist it non-violently. This I do, by breaking the law and by peacefully submitting to arrest and imprisonment. I call such behaviour an act of bravery to the extent required. That imprisonment for a man like me today carries no suffering with it is irrelevant, if it may be assumed that ordinary prison-treatment would make no difference in my mental condition. Thus non-resistance in the case under discussion, is an essential condition of non-violence, not a symptom of cowardice. Resistance in the shape of refusing to be arrested etc. on the other hand, will in this case be certainly blustering, thoughtless violence and might be classified as cowardly brag. New Delhi, 14-9-'46

An Appeal to Correspondents

Some good people waste money on sending wires, asking me to secure seats on the Interim Government, others in matters of strikes in various places, yet others in matters of fasting. To all these I would say that they not only take unnecessary trouble and waste money but pile work on an overworked group of co-workers and helpers, without securing needed help from me. I have no wish to influence the National Cabinet in the choice of co-ministers and

I hold that it would be wrong on my part or anybody else's, to do so. The members of the Cabinet should be left undisturbed in their choice if they are to render national service in an efficient and honest manner. In matters of strikes and fasts, my views are well known. These should give sufficient guidance when and where required. It is impossible and improper for me to give opinion on incomplete and one-sided data. And I have no time for studying individual cases. I have only limited capacity left in me. I assure correspondents that it is being exercised to the full extent without needing further additions.

New Delhi, 15-9-'46

Karachi Khadi Bhandar

Numerous letters have been received with reference to the note in the Harijan of 25-8-'46 entitled "Disloyalty to Khadi". I am making inquiries and hope to announce the result as soon as they are completed.

M. K. G.

The Peace of the Charkha

Shri Vichitra Narayan has sent Gandhiji a letter from a doctor friend of his. Dr. Bhupal Singh no longer practises for his eyesight has become very weak. He has consistently served the poor. The gist of his letter, given below, is interesting.

He avers that he has found the charkha very efficacious in the treatment of nervous disorders. Patients suffering from such are generally unable to concentrate, they are mentally disturbed and disinclined to do any work. The doctor's experience is that in these cases the spinning wheel is of greater help than medicines. The hum of the charkha has a soothing effect, spinning needs concentration and the product of their labour seems to restore self-confidence in the patients. Mental improvement naturally has a salutary effect on the body too. The writer feels that diseases like hysteria and neurasthenia are more prevalent in cities where such health-giving activity as spinning is discarded. The incidence of nervous disorders in the villages is far less.

Dr. Bhupal Singh's faith in the charkha is of long standing. During his many years of practice, he often used to take yarn from paying patients for his fees instead of money. New Delhi, 16-9-'46
(From Harijansevak) A. K.

CONTENTS	PAGE
PROUD OR INSANE ? ... M. K. GANDHI	317
UNCERTIFIED KHADI .
V. MILL CLOTH ... M. K. GANDHI	317
THE MOTHER OF KHADDAR ... PYARELAL	318
SUGGESTIONS FOR JAILS	318
LEPROSY AND CONTAMINATION M. K. GANDHI	319
COLLECTIVE PRAYER ... M. K. GANDHI	319
CHARKHA JAYANTI ... M. K. GANDHI	320
STOP IT ... M. K. GANDHI	320
TIRED OF SATYAGRAHA ? ... M. K. GANDHI	321
PANDIT NEHRU'S STATEMENT	321
WEEKLY LETTER ... PYARELAL	321
OVER-POPULATION OR
UNDER-PRODUCTION ? ... PYARELAL	323
RAMA THE SON OF DASHARATHA M. K. GANDHI	323
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI	325
NOTES :
ACKNOWLEDGMENT ... M. K. G.	321
BLANK MINUTE BOOKS ... M. K. G.	324
IS IT NOT COWARDICE ? ... M. K. G.	324
AN APPEAL TO CORRESPONDENTS ... M. K. G.	324
KARACHI KHADI BHANDAR ... M. K. G.	324
THE PEACE OF THE CHARKHA ... A. K.	324

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad

Subscription Rates—INLAND : One year, Rs. 6; Six months, Rs. 3; FOREIGN : One year Rs. 8 or 14 sh. or $ 3.

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 34

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1946

TWO ANNAS

ELEVEN DAYS' CHARKHA CLASS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The important part of an account given to me by Shri Kanu Gandhi of this class is given below :

"This class was conducted in the Bhangi Colony from 11-9-'46 to 21-9-'46. 156 men and women and three children participated, ages varying from 8 to 75 years. Due to the re-opening after the summer holidays of the schools and in a few cases to illness the number in the end went down to 126. On the 11th day there was a 1½ hours examination held in which 110 persons, 51 women and 59 men, took part.

"Two separate classes were held daily in the morning and afternoon. The morning class from 7 to 11 was attended mostly by office-going persons who could only stay for 2 to 2½ hours. The afternoon class from 2 to 5-30 consisted for the greater part of women.

"The minimum and maximum tuition worked out at 16 and 40 hours respectively. 20 persons knew how to spin before they came to the classes but all the other processes were new to everyone. Owing to lack of spinning wheels etc. the trainees were not able to practise at home in the beginning, but when all the implements became available, they were able to fill this gap. The approximate speed per hour of spinning with 'tunai' of the learners who went in for the examination was as follows :

23 persons	60 rounds
22 "	75 "
10 "	90 "
17 "	100 "
8 "	125 "
5 "	150 "
1 person	239 "

"The count of yarn varied from 19 to 25. Few produced yarn of very poor quality. Coarse yarn was spun by those whose speed was the lowest.

"In order to create enthusiasm among the people an exhibition of all the processes of spinning was held on the 22nd instant. An entrance fee of one anna was charged. All Charkhas from the early village wheel to the modern Yeravda, Kisan and Magan Charkhas (the latter enables the drawing of yarn by both hands), the triangular bamboo Charkha were on view, as also implements of carding including, the bow with both gut and thread and the bamboo knife. There was also a special Charkha for spinning wool. An interesting sight was a one-armed man who was turning the Yeravda wheel with his foot and drawing the thread with his left hand. His speed was 240 rounds an hour. In one section there were exhibits of different species of cotton and yarn of various counts. A tree of devkapas was also on view as well as pictures of the different kinds of spinning wheels, takhis and carding implements. Near by lay a heap of 78 lakhs of hanks of yarn for presentation to Gandhiji. Harijan girls and boys from the Kasturba Balika Ashram and the Harijan Industrial School respectively as also workers from the Delhi Khadi Bhandar rendered valuable help. The public took a keener interest than had been expected. The exhibition was opened at 1 p. m. by Shri Jaiprakash Narain and was to remain open till 5 p. m. but owing to an immense crowd it was decided at 2-15 p. m. to stop all entries for 1½ hours and all the exhibits which had been arranged in a large hall originally had to be carried into the open.

"Competitions were held from 2-30 to 5 p.m. by Gandhi Ashram, Chandani Chowk, Delhi. These included spinning with all its processes, plain spinning, competition for children of 12 years, spinning with eyes closed and spinning without breaking the thread. The competitors, nearly 500 in number, were very enthusiastic.

"It was intended to hold the evening prayer preceded by collective spinning in which many of the leaders had promised to join in the exhibition premises. This became impossible owing to the huge unmanageable crowd. The collective spinning was, however, held in Bhangi Colony. Jawaharlalji, Badshah Khan, Rajendra Babu, Fakhruddin Sahib, Jagjiwanramji, Dr. Pattabhi and Shri Shankerrao Dev, all took part for about half an hour. Badshah Khan drew 66 rounds and Jawaharlalji 100. Figures of others are not available.

"It was a pure accident that the close of the spinning class coincided with the Charkha Jayanti. Rajendra Babu performed the flag hoisting in the morning in Bhangi Colony.

"Thanks for valuable help rendered to the spinning class are due to Shri Brijkrishna Chandiwala, Shri Krishnan Nair, Shri Kalkaprasad of Gandhi Ashram and to a worker sent specially for the purpose from Adampur Khadi Bhandar.

"Thanks for the loan of the hall and grounds for the exhibition are due to the Municipal Board and the Principal of the Bengali School."

In my opinion, this class has been of great value. The numbers of the learners, the class from which they came and the perseverance with which they worked are worthy of note. Thousands were drawn to see the small exhibition. Leaders joined in the collective spinning. All these should augur well for the future of Khadi. It is good to understand what perseverance can achieve.

New Delhi, 24-9-'46

(From the original in Gujarati)

FOOD RATIONING

A mistake is committed in the working of rationing in India. It consists in charging the cost of collection, transport, storage and distribution to the price of food. The resulting difference in price between what the producer gets and what the consumer pays is usually not less than 30 to 50 % (and often more) of the value paid to the producer. The results of this discrepancy in prices are :

1. The producer is unwilling to part with the grain due to the fear that when short of it, he will have to pay more than what he got.
2. The depressing influence on the producer who hesitates to expand his sowings due to the fear of Government control and interference.
3. The stimulus to the black market due to the wide margin of profit.

It is suggested, therefore, that the incidental costs of food control (collection etc.) should be charged to the Treasury and the food sold to the consumer at the rate paid to the producer.

In addition to this, the price of food should be fixed by law for 1 to 3 years ahead, so that the producer and the consumer both know what they will get or pay for food.

Such an apparently simple measure as the changing of the incidental costs of food control to the Treasury will have the following results :

1. knocking out the black market completely,
2. encouraging the 'Grow More Food' tendency,
3. inducing the producer to part with his product, because he knows that he will always get what he needs at the same rate,
4. reassuring the consumer as to his future cost of living, and
5. creating a tendency to a uniform and low price of the basic necessities of life.

The revenue necessary to pay the cost of food control on these lines can be created by imposing a progressive sales tax on all non-rationed and non-controlled articles and highest on luxury articles. Thus the articles of first necessity like food will be subsidized by the purchasers of non-essential and luxury goods.

The proposition can be expressed tersely : the purchaser of goods non-essential to the maintenance of life and health will have to contribute to the costs of collection, transport, storage and distribution of essentials, so that they reach the consumer at the lowest possible price.

Maurice Frydman

PARADISE LOST

My little room at the Valmiki Mandir had a window at the back which looked out on to open ground. Red rock and rough grass made a ridge of high land beyond which only the wide sky was visible. This was for me a continual comfort, to which was added the quiet society of Bapuji's goats, who had a habit of coming and standing under my little window.

When I was a tiny child, I lived in my grandfather's country house. There were three different walks for which my nurse would take me. One along the road to the town, one to the village, and one past a farm and up a country lane to the hills. There the birds sang and the wild flowers bloomed. Whenever my nurse asked me, which walk I would like to take, my answer was invariably "Up'i lane"—Up the lane towards the hills—for me that was the world of joy and beauty. In Delhi, fifty years later, there was no "Up'i lane", but at least there was a semblance of the countryside, and so my heart was ever through the little window, away from the rush and turmoil of the great city.

On the last day of my stay, I was obliged to go to Chandani Chowk for doing some necessary shopping. From all sides every sense was wounded. The din of traffic and shouting of harsh voices beat upon the ears, ugly sights of dirt and tawdriness hurt the eyes, and nasty smells invaded the nose. But worst of all, were the faces of the people, reflecting as they did, the blunted senses and hardened minds within.

And this is called civilization. To object to it is called 'putting the clock back'. Chandani Chowk is not a slum, it is looked upon as a grand highway and shopping centre !

That evening I took the train for Dehradun. Looking out of the carriage window at dawn, I felt as if Paradise were spread before my eyes. The air was so clear and fresh, the forest rich in its autumn verdure—and now came a brook of crystal water dancing and sparkling over its rocky bed with flowering bushes and tall, feathery grasses on its banks. The forest opened out into a broad glen, the sun had risen over the mountains to the east, and a glimmer of golden light in the opening of the forest, showed Gangaji winding her sacred way towards Haradwar. My heart sang with the birds of the forest in thanksgiving to God.

Then I thought of the city folks in Chandani Chowk surrounded with their own hideousness. Have they come to such a pass that they prefer that to this? Have their eyes lost the power to see God in Nature? Have their ears been so rasped that they can no longer detect the singing of the birds, let alone the voice of the Silence? And their noses, do they seek the city smells rather than the pure sweet air of the mountains? I looked at my fellow passengers—two educated young men. One was deep in a book, the other was tucked up in a corner smoking a cigarette. I thought to myself how, when they got to Mussooree, they would seek out cinemas, and there go into raptures over foreign scenery, flickering on a screen to the accompaniment of vulgar music. They would not turn their eyes in reverence towards the majestic snows of Kedarnath, nor would they listen to the voices of the wind wandering through the fragrant fir woods.

Alas for modern man! He is the victim of a fell disease, and glories in that sickness, calling it progress, enlightenment, knowledge!

9-9-'46

MIRABEHN

TRACTORS v. BULLOCKS

Tractor cultivation is a controversial question. Some people consider mechanization of agriculture the ideal goal for India, and some would not so much as look at a tractor.

There is a middle path during the development period.

In U. P. there are 79 lakhs acres of actually culturable waste lands. Much of this vast area is usar land which has become very hard, and in some cases needs extra deep cultivation in order to break up the kankar layer below the surface. There are other waste lands covered with tall deep-rooted grasses, and yet others especially in the terai, where even shrubs and small trees have to be uprooted.

For many years the cattle population of India has been deteriorating, and with the recent war, it has become alarmingly reduced owing to wholesale slaughter of animals for feeding the foreign armies (English and American), and prisoners of war. This means that, today, to try and deal with waste lands by means of bullock power would be so slow a process that it would be as good as useless. We have to overcome long years of administrative neglect in as short a space of time as possible, if we are successfully to stop the rot which is steadily undermining our countryside.

I would, therefore, advocate the use of tractors for bringing waste land under cultivation where it is situated in large blocks and is otherwise suitable. But after the land is reclaimed, I would not for a moment suggest that it should remain permanently under mechanical cultivation. The bullock is in every way economical for the Indian peasant. The bullock is fed from the products of the land, and gives in return valuable cowdung which is used for plastering of walls and floors, for fuel and for manure. The bullock can also be used for all kinds of work — carting, water-lifting and the like, whereas the tractor has to have expensive oil purchased for it from the bazar and it gives nothing back from its belly. At the same time the only kind of haulage it can do, is field cultivation on a broad outlay.

When we have developed village groves for fuel-wood, we do not want to find that cow-dung has been greatly reduced owing to the removal of the bullock from village cultivation. On the contrary, we want to find masses of cow-dung released for the impoverished Indian soil. Anyone who is familiar with Indian village life knows the part which cow-dung plays. Without it the whole village dwelling structure and economic life would become broken down.

So it comes to this, that tractors be used for big scale reclamation and, during the years that these lands are being brought into a good cultivated condition, every effort must be made to control and improve the breeding of the present herds of cattle in the province, so that ever-increasing quantities of good bullocks become available for cultivation purposes (see Note on Cattle Wealth).

Before closing this note, I would like to express a word of warning regarding tractors. At present the tractors are being obtained from abroad. This means that spare parts, extra to those supplied, will be difficult to get and very expensive. At the same time expert engineers and mechanics are very difficult to find in India today. This means that before any big scheme is handled, men must be thoroughly trained for taking up the job, and local workshops must be provided at the spots where the reclamation work is to be taken up.

The implements are the most troublesome part of tractor cultivation, as they frequently break or get out of order, and if we are to look to foreign countries for both the implements and their parts, tractor cultivation is bound to be a failure. Anyway, it would be a blot on our own Swadeshi zeal as a Province if we fail to turn out tractor implements, which can be manufactured in India.

MIRABEHN

Cattle Wealth

No scheme of land and village development in India can be successful, unless the cattle problem is vigorously tackled. Cows and bullocks have suffered very heavy casualties during the war, having been ruthlessly butchered for feeding foreign armies and prisoners of war. This has reduced to a most critical condition the already pitiable state of the country's cattle.

Cattle cannot be bred in a day, and four to five years must elapse before we can expect any visible result. It behoves us, therefore, to take up the matter without delay. But unfortunately delay is the order of the day in the country.

Government servants have, therefore, to take up this cattle development in a new spirit, if it is to succeed. And, if it fails, then all other rural development fails with it.

A project has been passed by the Central and Provincial Governments to be financed on a half and half basis, which envisages the organization of the goshalas in the Provinces for improved cattle breeding. If this scheme is properly worked, great strides can be made in the right direction.

MIRABEHN

THE GOSPEL OF SELFLESS ACTION OR THE GITA ACCORDING TO GANDHI

By Mahadev Desai

With Gandhiji's Foreword

Price Rs. Four, Postage Nine Annas

HARIJAN

September 29

1946

FOOD SHORTAGE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

There is nothing so depressing as when fear pervades the atmosphere. I remember an occasion when the waters of the Sabarmati were rising fairly high and a message said to be from Sardar Patel was received after midnight to the effect that inside of an hour the Ashram would be covered with the rising waters and that we were likely to be drowned in them if we did not vacate. It was a most anxious time for all of us men, women and children. A sigh of relief went up to heaven when it was discovered that after causing some loss to property, the angry waters had begun to subside and that no loss of life need be feared.

Precisely in the same manner the danger of shortage reported from authoritative quarters bids fair to demoralize us into a panic which would be more fatal than real starvation. Such was my plight when a paragraph in the papers was read to me that of all the places in the world its intrepid Diwan had seriously contended that Travancore had a storage of food grains only for a fortnight. Knowing Travancore so well, I imagined all sorts of calamities, not merely for Travancore but for all India. Travancore with its luxuriant growth of edible tubers, coconut and fish had no need to starve for a single day, even though it might have no other supply from the other parts of India. My faith in Travancore kept me whole. And to my joy I discovered that the shortage was not of food but of wheat and rice only. Travancore can grow rice, not wheat. So far as the cereals are concerned the inhabitants of Travancore are rice eaters. They take to wheat with difficulty and under stress. Would that the present distress could make us shed our provincialisms and induce all India habits so as to make us feel fully at home, no matter which part of India we happened to find ourselves in. For the moment, however, my object would be fully served if all responsible men in India would definitely tell the people in their respective provinces, districts and states, not to look beyond India for supply of food but to grow what they can themselves and learn to eke out a living from their own produce. And, if the numerous authentic letters I receive are an indication of things as they are or should be, we need fear no starvation for want of life-giving vegetables plus a little milk for vegetarians and fish, flesh or fowl for non-vegetarians.

Let India realize that as yet we have no appreciable quantity of food from outside our shores. Many are willing to help but they are themselves for the most part sufferers or have more calls on them than they are able to cope with. The transport difficulty is very real for all of them and our own will commence when the foodstuff reaches our shores. Internal transport and distribution constitute a problem by themselves. It is, therefore, practical wisdom to brace ourselves for the struggle and declare with one voice our resolve that we shall grow our eatables for ourselves and perish bravely in the attempt if we must.

This is the only way and no other.

New Delhi, 21-9-'46

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

WHAT USE AHIMSA?

Q. Wherever in the world today one casts one's eye, there is nothing but violence and power politics to be seen. And this obtains even in democratic countries like England and America. Have you pondered as to what your ahimsa can do under such circumstances?

A. It is true that power politics exist everywhere; but you are very much mistaken if you imagine that true democracy obtains either in America or England. The voice of the people may be said to be God's voice, the voice of the Panchayat. But how can there be the voice of God where the people themselves are the exploiters as England and America are? They live on the coloured races by exploiting them. If the voice of the people is the voice of God, they will be above party. His scales will ever be evenly weighted with truth and non-violence. This statement embraces my reply. My ahimsa is neither maimed nor weak. It is all-powerful. Where there is ahimsa, there is Truth and Truth is God. How He manifests Himself, I cannot say. All I know is that He is all-pervading and where He is, all is well. There is, therefore, one law for all. Wherever in the world Truth and Non-violence reign supreme, there is peace and bliss. That these exist nowhere shows that they are hidden from man for the time being. But they cannot disappear for ever. That faith must sustain the faithful.

SHOULD FOREIGNERS BE WELCOME?

Q. You say that Independent India will not fear foreigners who decide to live here as Indians. But has this happened in any country? Where nationalism has been predominant, will you not admit that a certain amount of racial arrogance will remain? Can even an Independent India escape from it?

A. My faith that we need have no fear is unshakable. I can give strong evidence in support of it, but I do not think there is any need here for me to do so. This much only must be remembered that all foreigners will be welcome to stay here, only if they look upon themselves as one with the people. India cannot tolerate foreigners who wish to remain here with safeguards for their rights. This would mean that they want to live here as superior persons and such a position must lead to friction. It is inconceivable that the present friction between Britain and India should exist, if India became free. There is no freedom for India while the friction subsists. New Delhi, 19-9-'46

(From the original in Gujarati)

DO NOT ELIMINATE TRUTH AND NON-VIOLENCE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A correspondent who sends his name and describes himself as devoted to service writes:

"I read your Harijanbandhu regularly. Recently in your reply to Shri Shankarrao Dev you have said: 'I have been saying for some time that the words "truth and non-violence" should be removed from the Congress constitution.'

"If this happens in the existing circumstances, people will lose their faith in Congress because they will feel that so long as it was not in power it was thought best to adhere to truth and non-violence but now that power has come it contemplates removing these words from the constitution. They might even infer that the removal is being resorted to in order to counter the Muslim League's threat of direct action.

"If these words are eliminated from the constitution, Congress will fall from the high pedestal which these means alone have secured for it. It will lose in prestige. You have always said that you yourself cannot go forward one step without truth and non-violence and is it not their adherence to these that makes the public think of Congressmen as trustworthy, merciful, full of the spirit of service and bravery? The tree must perish if its roots are destroyed. You must see to it that the roots go deeper and deeper and are not eradicated.

"Therefore, I feel that you should compel every Congressman to follow these principles and if he refuses, he must leave the Congress."

How can I, the champion of ahimsa, compel anyone to perform even a good act? Has not a well-known Englishman said that to make mistakes as a free man is better than being in bondage in order to avoid them? I believe in the truth of this. The reason is obvious. The mind of a man who remains good under compulsion cannot improve, in fact it worsens. And when compulsion is removed all the defects well up to the surface with even greater force.

Moreover, no one should be a dictator. Even the Congress cannot force its members to follow truth and non-violence. These have to be accepted willingly from the heart.

I have been recommending the elimination of these words from the constitution for over a year, long before the Muslim League contemplated direct action which makes no bones about himsa or ahimsa. Thus my recommendation has no connection with the League's resolution. But I have no help for those who invariably attribute sinister motives to my words.

I have strong grounds for my recommendation. Congress may not cover untruth and violence under the guise of truth and non-violence. Is not this an all-sufficing reason? If Congressmen were no hypocrites, nothing could be better than that Congress should adhere to these two pillars.

I could never wish the Congress, the moment it comes into power, to discard the very ladder by which it has climbed so high. I believe that if Congressmen, while in power, renounce truth and non-violence, the lustre surrounding the Congress will grow dim.

We must all guard against one mistake. There is no rule against following what is not in the constitution. Indeed my hope is that when these words are removed all, or a large majority of Congressmen will heartily follow truth and non-violence even to the point of death.

The writer has forgotten to mention one thing which I should like to clarify. The words in the constitution are 'peaceful and legitimate'. I have no right to interpret them as truthful and non-violent, if they don't bear that meaning. Congress has adopted them as a policy, not as a creed. The question of my right to retain or eliminate them does not arise. But whilst it lasts, policy is tantamount to creed and hence becomes obligatory. Of course, my recommendation has no meaning if 'peaceful' can be interpreted as violent and 'legitimate' as untruthful.

New Delhi, 21-9-'46

(From the original in Gujarati)

Notes

Congress Ministers, not Sahib Log

A Congress worker asks:

"Should the Congress Ministers live in great state like their English predecessors? Will it be right for them to use Government cars for private work?"

From my point of view there can be only one reply to both the questions. If the Congress wants to continue as a people's organization, the Ministers cannot live as sahib log nor use for private work facilities provided by Government for official duties.

New Delhi, 20-9-'46

(From the original in Hindustani)

Not Sentiment but Reason

Prof. Brij Narain has devoted two columns of the Lahore Tribune in support of the Salt Tax. I dare not combat his arguments though they make little appeal to my lay mind. He has come to the gratuitous conclusion that I ask for repeal on grounds of sentiment rather than reason. He reminds me of armchair politics and philosophy. Salt Tax hits not only men, women and children, but also fish and cattle. Reason demands its immediate repeal. It is not the amount of the tax that kills, it is the monopoly and all it means that kills the poor villager and his cattle. Imagine what would happen if the poor were prohibited from breathing air or drinking water without permission of the Government. The condition as to salt is not radically different. The scientist has not taken the trouble to study what this prohibition to prepare salt even for one's own consumption has cost India.

Prof. Brij Narain will not allow the Congress to be nationalistic enough even to warrant its abolishing a monopoly which presses heavily upon all the poor people without distinction, unless the Professor ignorantly imagines that the Muslims have no poor to think of.

New Delhi, 22-9-'46

M. K. G.

About Khadi Bhandars

Since I wrote on happenings in the Karachi Khadi Bhandar, I have received several letters about other Bhandars also. The gist of these is given below :

1. Khadi in Bhandars is available only to friends of those in charge or to those who have influence.

2. Even if the Bhandar is replete with Khadi, the reply the ordinary customer often gets is that there is none.

3. Some Bhandars have no facilities for having yarn woven into Khadi, while others cannot supply Charkhas and their accessories.

4. In the circumstances Khadi workers in many Bhandars earn wages for doing no work. Time and again one's yarn is not accepted on the plea that it is too coarse.

It would not be right to console oneself by saying that all these complaints are untrue. Such conduct as described is unwise, callous and disloyal. None of these defects should obtain in any Bhandar, much less in Khadi Bhandars. How can Khadi command respect, if its servants behave in the manner described? It is to be hoped that every Khadi Bhandar will become a model of service and thereby not only raise itself but also maintain the honour that Khadi carries.

New Delhi, 22-9-'46

M. K. G.

(From the original in Gujarati)

Superfluous Rations

An acquaintance in Delhi tells me that she and her husband are both wage earners and their joint income is in the neighbourhood of Rs. 500 p. m. They happen to have no children. She is able to save enough from their wheat ration to entertain a number of people every week without any difficulty. The woman in question suggested that a survey of families in Delhi—and this really should apply to all towns—might be taken and those persons who can afford to reduce their cereal rations should cede their quota.

Much can be done by voluntary endeavour if the will is there. During this crisis all entertainment should cease, whether public or private and, in any case, no foodstuff made out of cereals should be allowed to be served.

New Delhi, 22-9-'46

A. K.

FOR AGENTS

Agents are requested to take note of the following:

1. Please remember that agents have to deposit with us an amount covering the price of their demand for two months. A month's deposit will be treated as fixed and the other as current. Every week the cost of the copies sent to them would be deducted from the current deposit.

2. The amounts for the deposits are usually sent by the agents by cheques. Please note that we do not accept cheques. The amount should be remitted either by M. O., Postal Order or by a bank draft.

MANAGER

WEEKLY LETTER

WITH AN ENGLISH JOURNALIST

"India is on the march to Independence, it is coming whether there is an agreement between the Muslim League and the Congress or not. No one can stop it. It is her destiny. She has bled enough for it." In these words, Gandhiji who avoids giving press interviews these days reiterated his faith in India's destiny to a foreign press correspondent who was lucky enough to break through his (Gandhiji's) self-imposed cordon of silence and had a talk with him in the course of his morning walk in the yard of the Sweepers' Colony. The correspondent's question was whether co-operation between the Congress and the League would not help the attainment of Indian Independence and was not therefore desirable. "Of course, if there is heart-cooperation between the two, the progress will be quicker and smoother," added Gandhiji. "But it must be real heart unity—not a make-believe."

Gandhiji, who claims kinship with pressmen and therefore their friendship, began by telling this friend what he considered to be the function of journalism. "There are occasions when a journalist serves his profession best by his silence," he observed.

"But it is a journalist's job to purvey facts and let the public judge for itself," the friend argued. Did not Gandhiji believe in the capacity of the average man to judge correctly provided he had enough knowledge of facts? But Gandhiji demurred. "Not knowledge of facts. What passes for facts is only impressions or estimates of things and estimates vary. Hence one gets different versions of the same event." As an illustration he mentioned the parable of the seven blind men of Hindustan, each one describing the elephant differently and each one believing himself to be right. "What is really needed to make democracy function is not knowledge of facts but right education. And the true function of journalism is to educate the public mind, not to stock the public mind with wanted and unwanted impressions. A journalist has, therefore, to use his discretion as to what to report and when. As it is, journalists are not content to stick to facts alone. Journalism has become the art of 'intelligent anticipation of events.'"

"As a public man and a social reformer," continued Gandhiji, "it is for me to judge when to say something and when to hold my tongue." The best contribution that he could make to world peace, he added, speaking of himself, was to be forgotten. "What the world needs is not words but action. Actions and thoughts tell far more than speech. And this applies to all men both great and small."

A HEAVY BROADSIDE

The friend poured in his broadside. What did he think of Russia? "Russia is an enigma to me," replied Gandhiji. "It hurts me to think (if the reports are true) that a country which stood for the people has turned into an imperialist power."

But I may not pass judgment on a great people and a great man like Stalin. I lack the data."

"Was the world progressing? Had the making of life and struggle for existence easier in the modern world resulted in the dulling of man's instincts and sensibilities?"

"If that is your comment, I will subscribe to it," replied Gandhiji.

"And the atom bomb?"

"O, on that point you can proclaim to the whole world without hesitation," exclaimed Gandhiji, "that I am beyond repair. I regard the employment of the atom bomb for the wholesale destruction of men, women and children as the most diabolical use of science."

What was the antidote? Had it antiquated non-violence? "No," was Gandhiji's reply. On the contrary, non-violence was the only thing that was now left in the field. "It is the only thing that the atom bomb cannot destroy. I did not move a muscle when I first heard that the atom bomb had wiped out Hiroshima. On the contrary, I said to myself, 'Unless now the world adopts non-violence, it will spell certain suicide for mankind.'"

"What would be your fatherly advice to a young man about to launch into the world," Gandhiji's interviewer asked next.

"To hold his tongue," replied Gandhiji and added, "was it not Shakespeare who said, 'Lend everybody thine ear, thy voice to none?'"

"You followed that policy fairly in your own case," put in the friend.

"Yes," replied Gandhiji. "I used to think in my early days that I was a dunce and an idiot, that I should never be able to speak. Now I feel thankful for that disability."

"You have been a fighter all your life. What has fighting done for you?" next asked the friend.

"It has braced me for the next struggle," replied Gandhiji. "Fighting has done me good. What it has done to others, I do not know."

"Considering that the difference between the Muslim League and the Congress has narrowed down to one or two basic issues," remarked the friend, reverting to the earlier topic, "would it not be better to make a little sacrifice to secure agreement?"

"You cannot sacrifice a principle to gain a doubtful advantage," replied Gandhiji.

"After hearing both sides of the controversy," finally remarked the friend, "an outsider feels at sea. The only course, it seems, is to suspend judgment under the circumstances."

"When two parties cannot agree and both are sincere in their convictions it is clear one of them must be wrong," replied Gandhiji. "Both cannot be right. The world must be the arbiter in that case. It dare not withhold judgment. It has often been found in the progress of non-violence that even people who want to be perfectly just come to wrong judgment."

Before taking leave the friend tendered Gandhiji congratulations in advance on his coming birthday.

"I attach no importance to it," replied Gandhiji. "Every day one is reborn. I, at any rate, am."

THE SEVENTYEIGHTH BIRTHDAY

Without being aware of it, it seems he was uttering a prophesy. A little incident in connection with the birthday celebration on the 22nd instant dramatized it for all. The anniversary programme in the Sweepers' Colony consisted mostly of spinning activities in one form or another — spinning being so close to his heart and that of the late Kasturba Gandhi, the date of whose demise by chance coincided with the 78th birthday anniversary of Gandhiji according to the Indian calendar this year.

The day's programme was to open with a flag hoisting and salutation ceremony which was to be performed by Dr. Rajendra Prasad. A local friend who was in charge of the day's programme had planned to have refreshments served to Harijan children and the volunteers after the ceremony. Gandhiji came to know of it just by chance early in the morning. It gave him a shock. As is his wont he turned the searchlight inward to look for the cause. It seemed to him that the inwardness of the Charkha had been forgotten by his comrades. "The music of the Charkha murmurs sweetly," he explained at the evening prayer gathering, "that we were all one, born to be equal sharers in the goods of the earth with no one higher or wealthier than the other. Yet the world is today full of inequalities of wealth and invidious distinctions of high and low. This is folly. In our arrogance we forget that we are all one day going to be levelled with the dust by death that knows no distinctions." The second lesson was that we are to earn our bread by the sweat of our brow — what a Russian savant has called "bread labour" and the third was that if we are one of and with the people, we should refuse to give food to those who are not in need or to take more than we need for health. If we all did that there would be no scarcity of food in this land and we would refuse to look across the seas for food stuffs. Yet his nearest comrades were about to make the mistake of serving refreshments after the jhanda-vandan by Dr. Rajendra Prasad to volunteers and Harijans who were not in need of such. Was it not criminal to fritter away foodstuffs that would serve to keep alive twenty men, to provide titbits to Harijans and volunteers who were certainly not suffering pangs of hunger? They were deceiving themselves if they thought that thereby they served the Harijans. The real hunger of the Harijans which needed to be satisfied was not for morsels of food but for decent living as self-respecting, equal citizens for a square deal as human beings, for freedom from fear, inculcation of clean and sanitary habits, thrift, industry, education. That required perseverance, self-sacrifice and patient intelligent labouring on our part. If they gave him money to feed Harijans he would refuse to accept it, he remarked. For, he did not want to make beggars and idlers of them. He pointedly referred to the fact that Dr. Rajendra Prasad was their Food Member who wanted to save for the famishing every morsel of food. In the circumstances he very much questioned whether the oversight of his comrades was not due to his being lax with himself. Was he not allowing himself to partake rather too freely of the fruits that were placed before him? The lesson of yesterday, he concludingly remarked was a grave warning for all, if we are to learn truly the lesson of the Charkha.

HEART SEARCHING

Gandhiji is in the habit of giving menu instructions separately for each meal—the menu being strictly regulated according to his physical condition, conditions of rest and work in prospect, mental strain and such other factors. That evening he scribbled out instructions that the juice of sour limes instead of the usual orange juice was to be served with his milk. What right had he to use oranges when he could possibly do with sour limes and jaggery?

His diary that night contained the following significant entry: "The inwardness of the spinning wheel seems to have been forgotten. I was angry. I have to consider what my duty under the circumstances is. It seems to be so very hard to maintain detachment of mind in the midst of this raging fire. My heart searching continues." "I am filled with agitation," he remarked to a close comrade in the course of a talk. "Why could not I suffer this inner anguish with unruffled calmness of spirit? I am afraid I have not the detachment required for living up to 125 years. That also explains why Charkha and Khadi are making such slow progress. Success of Khadi is impossible without infinite patience. A burning passion coupled with absolute detachment is the key to all success."

New Delhi, 24-9-'46

PYARELAL

CRIMINAL WASTE

The following is the gist of a long letter from one who writes from personal knowledge. The writer gives five instances of the mismanagement and inefficiency of those concerned which result in a colossal loss of foodgrains.

1. Entire lack of suitable storage for foodgrains which are thus exposed to destruction by rats, insects, etc.

2. Exposure of foodgrains to rain in mandis, railway goods, platforms and in front of retail shops.

3. Exposure of grain in uncovered heaps in mandis and in front of retail shops, so that millions of birds etc. feed on it all the year round.

4. Use of old, worn-out bags as containers for foodgrains with resultant loss in transport by spilt grain and pilfering.

5. The prevalent practice of marketing grain in an uncleaned state whereby not only the producer and consumer lose but there is unnecessary loss in transport.

The loss caused through lack of suitable storage alone is reckoned at 3½ million tons and from the other four causes at 1½ million, making a total of 50,00,000 tons every year. Lack of proper storage, apart from causing loss of 5 to 10% in weight of the foodgrains because of rats and insects eating the best portion, is responsible also for deterioration in the quality due to exposure. Grain merchants are apathetic, while authority is dilatory and inefficient, if not unconcerned.

The writer recommends that grain merchants must be compelled by law to provide themselves with suitable storage accommodation for foodgrains. No trading license should be granted or renewed unless proper storage is in existence. 50% of the loss could be stopped at once by plastering floors and walls, whitewashing, cleaning and disinfecting ceilings, making doors rat-proof and in some cases lining the walls with burnt brick of existing stores in mandis. Government should be the first to set an example in the matter of erecting permanent storage units and letting the people see the accruing benefit.

Between Lahore and Lyallpur the writer recently saw thousands of bags of wheat lying uncovered in open trucks or between rail tracks in heavy rain and not a single one of the Government officials on the spot responsible for the safety of the grain, took the trouble to raise a finger to prevent the perishing on that particular day only of 40,000 maunds of wheat. The same applies to other places all over the country. Waste of spilt grain could be stopped by making compulsory the use of double new bags as containers for grain.

It would be desirable to have the grain cleaned at the place of production. This would enable the producer to receive full value for his grain and use the small grain and screening for cattle and chicken as well as constitute a large saving in road and rail transport.

The Government is spending Rs. 150 crores for the purchase of food and allowing the equivalent of that sum in foodgrains to be destroyed in our own country.

In addition the writer refers to what has already been commented on more than once in these columns in regard to the wanton waste of food in our homes, the necessity for growing more food on every available scrap of land, of surveying what cultivable land can be tilled forthwith and water whether by wells or other means provided. He also recommends the stoppage forthwith of the use of cowdung as fuel in cities and proper use of all kinds of refuse for manure.

New Delhi, 19-9-'46

A. K.

[All the suggestions made by the writer can and should be adopted at once, if a major disaster is to be averted.

M. K. G.]

CONTENTS		PAGE
ELEVEN DAYS' CHARKHA CLASS ...	M. K. GANDHI	329
FOOD RATIONING ...	MAURICE FRYDMAN	330
PARADISE LOST ...	MIRABEHN	330
TRACTORS V. BULLOCKS ...	MIRABEHN	331
FOOD SHORTAGE ...	M. K. GANDHI	332
QUESTION BOX ...	M. K. GANDHI	332
DO NOT ELIMINATE TRUTH AND
NON-VIOLENCE ...	M. K. GANDHI	333
WEEKLY LETTER ...	PYARELAL	334
CRIMINAL WASTE ...	A. K.	336
NOTES:
CATTLE WEALTH ...	MIRABEHN	331
CONGRESS MINISTERS, NOT
SAHIB LOG ...	M. K. G.	333
NOT SENTIMENT BUT REASON ...	M. K. G.	333
ABOUT KHADI BHANDARS ...	M. K. G.	334
SUPERFLUOUS RATIONS ...	A. K.	334

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad

Subscription Rates—INLAND: One year, Rs. 6; Six months, Rs. 3; FOREIGN: One year Rs. 8 or 14. sh. or $ 3.

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 35

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1946

TWO ANNAS

THOU TOO BIHAR!

(By M. K. Gandhi)

It is a grim irony of fate that Bihar, which did so well during the golden days of Satyagraha, should now disgrace itself by criminal lawlessness. If the news published is authentic, chain-pulling and stopping trains without cause has become a common occurrence in Bihar with the result that the trains rarely run to time. Passengers consider it superfluous to buy tickets for train journeys. Under a national government, they argue, payment should be unnecessary. Jai Hind is regarded as a cry for loot and murder.

I do not know what truth there is in these charges which are as wild as they well can be. I know some parts of Bihar where persons do not distinguish between things lawful and unlawful. I have even heard the argument that I am largely responsible for the prevailing lawlessness, not only in Bihar, but throughout India. I need hardly say that it is a thoughtless charge. The lawlessness, if it can be so described, that I have advocated is like prescribing wholesome and necessary food for the body. Behind my 'lawlessness' there is discipline, construction and well-being of society. It is an effective protest against unjust and injurious law or act. It can never take the form of selfish evasion of a duty. It is a duty never to pull the alarm chain except in well-defined and rare emergencies and never to travel without due payment for the class in which we travel. Loot, arson and murder have never been part of my programme of so-called lawlessness. The answer to the argument that whilst my programme may be good enough for a select few, it can never be for the masses, lies in the question whether I am expected to starve the masses of good food for fear of their taking bad or poisonous food.

I have purposely entered upon what appears to be a personal note, not at all in self-defence, but in order to drive the point home that what is said to be going on in Bihar is administration of rank poison. That way lies not self-rule but licentiousness, not independence but helpless dependence, not life but suicide. Is Bihar of Brijkishoreprasad and Rajendraprasad that I have known and lived in come to the pass described above? Let the public workers of Bihar not permit the senseless destruction of the fair work of construction done with patient toil. Bihar, beware!

New Delhi, 29-9-'46

SOME POSERS

The Secretaries of the National Congress took advantage of the recent A. I. C. C. session to arrange a meeting of the presidents and secretaries of the various Provincial Congress Committees with Gandhiji. The meeting was held in the building of the D. A. V. School, Delhi. Gandhiji spoke in Hindustani. Instead of delivering an address he invited questions. The following are the more important questions and their replies:

Q. Wrangling and corrupt practices have today become a common feature of our elections. What should be the attitude of Congressmen with regard to the elections?

A. What you say only shows that we seek leadership instead of being servants of the nation. There can be no room for wrangles, when service is the ideal. Congressmen should realize that only a few can become leaders, the goal for all Congressmen to set before themselves can only be to qualify as true servants of the nation. An institution that suffers from a plethora of leaders is surely in a bad way. For instance, if every Khudai Khidmatga aspired to become the chief, it would make the life of Badshah Khan hell besides disrupting the Khudai Khidmatgar organization itself.

If Congressmen lived up to the creed which they professed, viz. the attainment of Swaraj through truthful and non-violent means, paraphrased in the Congress constitution by the words "peaceful and legitimate", there should be no wrangling and no corruption. The existence of election wrangles and irregular practices is thus only a proof that the Congress policy of "attainment of Swaraj through 'peaceful and legitimate' means" is honoured more in the breach than in the observance. I have, therefore, suggested that it should be dropped in the amended constitution that is to come into being. Pending the setting up of the new constitution I have suggested a plan of work which does away with further elections for the time being and which requires all Congressmen to be active servants. If it is adopted it should cut across all our difficulties and troubles.

Q. Very few minorities' representatives have been returned at the elections. What remedy do you suggest?

A. Minorities being a minority, their representation in the Congress organization will naturally be proportionately less. If they feel dissatisfied, they can keep out of the Congress without ceasing to be Congressmen as I have done. It is my claim that I am not less a Congressman but more by reason of my ceasing to be even a four-anna member of the Congress. At Faizpur Congress the question was raised by Mrs. Anasuyabai Kale at a gathering at which I was present. On interrogation it was found that the number of those who were four-anna members was very small. But in reply to the question as to how many in the gathering were not four-anna members, a forest of hands went up. These are real Congressmen seeking no reward but seeking ever to serve it. Bereft of them it would dwindle into a parlour show. The only worthy aim of a Congressman can be to belong wholly to the Congress, never to capture and dominate the Congress. If everybody took up the correct attitude there would be no minorities and majorities. To try to 'capture' the Congress would be to kill the Congress. And a Congressman who is worthy of his salt would die rather than be guilty of the murder.

Q. The policy of the Interim Government is to keep down the prices of food grains. Would it not adversely affect the production of food grains?

A. I want to reduce the prices of food grains still further. I claim to be a peasant myself and I know that only a fraction of the price paid by the consumer actually reaches the grower of food. It should be the business of the Interim Government to see that the tiller of the soil gets full value of his produce and that every pie paid by the consumer reaches the peasant's pocket or else it should get out. The Interim Government can never be guilty of wishing to provide cheap grains to the consumer at the expense of the grower of food. The trouble with the cultivator is not low prices but the middleman.

Even in Khadi production I set the target of 8 as. a day for the spinners. We actually reached the rate of 4 as. in spite of the objection that dear Khadi would spell the ruin of Khadi production. That illustrates my attitude towards the producer. I would eliminate the middleman altogether. It is he who today sponges upon the agriculturist. Otherwise, there is no reason why the peasant should starve. At the same time a peasant who profiteers or exploits the black market belies his calling. He is no less an exploiter than the Zamindar.

Q. The growth of parties in the Congress is having a very adverse effect on the Congress organization. What is the remedy?

A. There can be only one party in the Congress, i. e. that of Congressmen and no other. That is not to say that there is no room in the Congress for individuals or groups holding different opinions. I do not believe in dead uniformity. "All men are born equal and free" is not Nature's law in the literal sense. All men are not born equal in intellect, for instance, but the doctrine of equality will be vindicated if those who have superior intellect will use it not for self-advancement at the expense of others, but for the service of those who are less favoured in that respect than they. Today there are all sorts in the Congress. That is why I have suggested the removal of the words "peaceful and legitimate" from the Congress objective. That need not mean abandonment of truth and non-violence by Congressmen. The object is only to purge out hypocrisy. It jars. Let those who believe in the doctrine of the sword openly avow it. To take the name of non-violence when there is sword in your heart, is not only hypocritical and dishonest but cowardly. Our non-violence vis-a-vis the British Government has been the non-violence of the weak. Otherwise, why should there be all these wrangles among ourselves? We try to justify the disorganization and chaos in our midst by pointing to the example of "squatters" in England, forgetting that blind imitation would not help us. There is nothing more demoralizing than fake non-violence of the weak and impotent. If we had the requisite non-violence in us, our public life would be characterized by utmost toleration. There will then be room for as many parties as there are opinions. Differences of opinion would be an indication of healthy independence of mind which is the law of life, not party intrigues and party strife. The latter are incompatible with independence.

Q. How should the Hindu-Muslim question be tackled?

A. I must own defeat on that point. I know that mine is today a voice in the wilderness and yet I claim that mine is the only practicable solution. I can never subscribe to the view that because certain members of a particular community have indulged in inhuman acts, therefore the whole community may be condemned outright and put beyond the pale. The Muslim League may call Hindus names and declare India to be Dar-ul-Harb, where the law of jihad operates and all Muslims who co-operate with the Congress as Quislings fit only to be exterminated. But we must not cease to aspire, in spite of this wild talk, to befriend all Mussalmans and hold them fast as prisoners of our love. It would be a present possibility if Hindus in their lakhs offered themselves to be cut to pieces without retaliation or anger in their hearts. Non-violence is today rightly laughed out of court as Utopian. Nevertheless, I maintain that it is the only way to keep Hinduism alive and India undivided. The history of the Congress non-violence for the last twentyfive years has taught us nothing, if it has not taught us that.

Q. How can we counteract the activities of the Communists, who are openly opposing the Congress?

A. The principle which I have laid down vis-a-vis the Hindu-Muslim question also holds good in respect of the Communists. By "Muslim" I mean the Muslim League. For, not all the Muslims are Muslim Leaguers. The Muslim Leaguers have today raised the slogan that ten crores of Indian Muslims are in danger of being submerged and swept out of existence, unless they constitute themselves into a separate State. I call that slogan scare-mongering pure and simple. It is nonsense to say that any people can permanently crush or swamp out of existence one fourth of its population, which the Mussalmans are in India. But I would have no hesitation in conceding the demand of Pakistan if I could be convinced of its righteousness or that it is good for Islam. But I am firmly convinced that the Pakistan demand as put forth by the Muslim League is un-Islamic and I have not hesitated to call it sinful. Islam stands for the unity and brotherhood of mankind, not for disrupting the oneness of the human family. Therefore, those who want to divide India into possibly warring groups are enemies alike of India and Islam. They may cut me to pieces but they cannot make me subscribe to something which I consider to be wrong.

The question of the Communists stands on a slightly different footing. They seem to have made trouble-shooting their profession. I have friends among them. Some of them are like sons to me. But it seems they do not make any distinction between fair and foul, truth and falsehood. They deny the charge. But their reported acts seem to sustain it. Moreover, they seem to take their instructions from Russia, whom they regard as their spiritual home rather than India. I cannot countenance this dependence on an outside power. I have even said that we should not depend even on Russian wheat in our present food crisis. We must have the ability and courage to subsist on what our soil can give us rather than depend on foreign charity. Otherwise, we shall not deserve to exist as an independent country. The same applies to foreign ideologies. I would accept them only to the extent that I can assimilate them and adapt them to the Indian scene. But I must refuse to go under them.

My formula for the Communists, therefore, is that I would prefer to die at their hands, but I will not retaliate.

New Delhi, 30-9-'46

PYARELAL

Example to Follow

Shri Parikshitlal Majumdar, Secretary, Gujarat Branch of Harijan Sevak Sangh has opened since June last a hostel for college boys in the building of the Gujarat Vidyapith with 16 boys, out of whom 12 are Harijans — Vankars, Chamars, Garadas and Nadias, and 4 Savarna Hindus — Patidars, Patanwadias and Baniyas. They live and dine together on full equal terms having a common mess and common life. They study in different colleges in Ahmedabad — Arts, Science and Law. The Harijan boys are paid a stipend by the Government at Rs. 25 p. m. and the non-Harijan boys pay for their own boarding expenses. The Gujarat Sangh will have to pay for the house rent and sanitation charge and for the initial expenses and has provided Rs. 1,000 per annum for the same. This is an excellent example of the removal of untouchability by inter-dining and by having a common life. It is to be hoped that other provinces will follow suit and open many such hostels.

Delhi, 15-8-'46

A. V. THAKKAR

'GANDHI VICHAR DOHAN'

This book has become almost a standard work for those organizations and individuals who believe in the constructive programme and are desirous of understanding the essence of Gandhiji's thought. The original in Gujarati has been through four editions and translations of it in Hindustani and other Indian languages have also been printed more than once. One publishing house has asked my permission to do an English translation.

It is necessary to clarify some points in this regard. I have been unable since 1939-40 to look through again and amend the book. Gandhiji's thought has progressed much during the last six or seven years. It will, therefore, be necessary, in the light of this progress, to rewrite certain portions of the book. It may even be necessary to add some chapters.

In my opinion, there would even be a risk of misinterpreting Gandhiji's thought, if the Vichar Dohan were to be reprinted as it is. It will, therefore, be best to have neither a reprint nor a translation. I feel I ought to say something about an English translation of the book. At my request Rajkumari Amrit Kaur did translate the whole book and Gandhiji even read the beginning portions of it. Rajkumari is known to be able to write English well. Nevertheless Gandhiji was of opinion that a literal translation of the book in English would not be fitting and he suggested that it would be better if a free English rendering embodying all the essence of the book could be presented to the public. Such a rendering can only be done by Rajkumari or others like her who can express themselves in the English language. Those who wish to publish the book in English will realize that a mere translation will not satisfy Gandhiji.

The question as to who should re-edit the book now remains to be considered. I am afraid I may not be able to do the work. I requested my co-worker, Shri Narhari Parikh to do so. He has agreed but he also is full of work and his health is not good. If some one well versed in Gandhian thought would help him, only then would the task be finished well in time. It should be remembered that up till now the book has been perused by Gandhiji before publication. It is hoped that this may be done in future also. Therefore, it is not possible to say when the next edition can be brought out. It is enough for the time being to realize that no reprints or translations are possible before revision.

One thing more. It is absolutely necessary to get the permission of the Navajivan Karyalaya for publishing this book in any language.

Sevagram, 28-9-'46

K. G. MASHRUWALA

(From the original in Hindustani)

THE GOSPEL OF SELFLESS ACTION OR THE GITA ACCORDING TO GANDHI

By Mahadev Desai

With Gandhiji's Foreword

Price Rs Four, Postage Nine Annas

HARIJAN

October 6

1946

HAND-SPINNING v. MILL-SPINNING

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Sometime before the Provincial Ministries throughout India were formed, I had heard that quotas of spindles were offered to the Provinces on pain—if a particular province did not take its quota—of the refused quota being transferred to the other Provinces. Now that the Provincial administrations are in full swing, the question has arisen as to whether these Governments can admit new mills and, at the same time, promote hand-spinning on a national scale. My answer is emphatically in the negative, if the encouragement of hand-spinning is meant to be sincere. Behind the India-wide quota is the fundamental belief that mills alone can and must supply India's needs for cloth and that hand-spun may be permitted to exist for the fastidious few. That was not how hand-spinning was conceived in Congress resolutions and that certainly is not the way that the A.I.S.A. has progressed. If the national Governments have come to the conclusion that hand-spinning has and should have no future, they should not waste a single rupee along the lines followed by the A. I. S. A. If, on the other hand, they share the belief of the A.I.S.A., they should forego their quota even if the foregoing should involve some initial loss. The loss will be demonstrably for the future gain of the masses.

Another question has arisen as to why the Working Committee should not, at any rate, declare a uniform policy to be followed by all the Congress Provinces. There is nothing to prevent the Committee from doing so. But it is open to them to say that the Congress policy has been enunciated times without number. Each Province has to measure its own belief in the Congress scales. The Working Committee might not go into details.

Then why may not the Central Government lay down a policy? The answer is obvious. The Central Government represents all India and all parties. It may not, therefore, lay down any exclusively Congress policy, much less a policy in a matter wholly within the jurisdiction of the Provinces. It would be an unwarranted interference with the rights of Provinces.

Looked at from all points of view, in the matter of Khadi as of prohibition and other subjects allotted to the Provinces, the Provinces must evolve along their own lines. They will miserably fail, if they look to the Working Committee to guide them. The Central Government simply has not the right, even if it had the unholy wish.

New Delhi, 30-9-'46

THE RIGHTS OF HARIJANS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

I have received letters from Harijan friends and some have been to see me too. Now that power has come into the nation's hands, they feel that there should be more than one Harijan minister. Their population ratio demands at least three. Moreover, they claim representation in every department on this basis. It would be wrong, they say, to hold that there are not enough able persons among them. They maintain that the rule of capability is by no means applied to non-Harijans. They can cite instances of nepotism.

I am not ready to admit the correctness of all they say. My mind works quite differently. Man is master as far as performance of his duty is concerned and I hold that his rights really spring from duties properly performed. Such rights alone are befitting as also lasting. If every non-Harijan who had ability was able to exercise his rights, society would be disrupted. Performance of duty was open to every one. The field of service is immense. Few can become masters and he fails who seeks to become master. I know, however, that people do not act as I have suggested. Hence there is a general scramble for power. And many are turned away disappointed. Holding the views I do, I have tried to act on them for the last fifty years. I am uninterested in the unbecoming struggle for power. My sole advice to Harijans is that they should think only in terms of their duties and rights will follow as surely as day follows night.

New Delhi, 27-9-'46

(From the original in Gujarati)

SCAVENGERS' LOT

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Q. You have doubtless written on this subject before but I would like you to say a word again in regard to the duty of municipal and other authority as well as private employers in the matter of providing Bhangis with the proper means of scavenging. Unless water-tight iron pails are provided, for example, the drippings during the rainy season, through baskets or gunny bags, fall on the unfortunate workers. All scavenging should really be able to be done without soiling the hands or any part of the body. If this were so, the work would assume a dignity which it does not carry at the moment. Along with the supply of proper means of scavenging, sweeping etc. the Bhangi needs instruction. It is a matter which local and provincial authority should take up in the cause of cleanliness.

A. I would advocate bye-laws requiring authorized receptacles, brooms, etc. which would avoid physical handling of dirt and would also prescribe simple working costume. Inspectors or overseers will be trained for this humane and sanitary work instead of being expected to exact work anyhow. The result of the present system is maximum of insanitation and minimum of work plus bribery, corruption and bad manners.

New Delhi, 30-9-'46

HOW ?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A correspondent writes :

"You are aware of the backward States of the Simla Hills. The Raja Saheb of Rampur Bushahr is a man of orthodox views. Recently a young man of a high caste Hindu family married a Koli girl. The Lambardar of the village (Mandhol) brought the matter to the notice of the ruler. The Raja Saheb has sentenced both husband and wife to six months' imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100 each. Such action is intolerable and retards progress. Some others who were contemplating inter-caste marriages have been deterred.

"Must we wait till autocracy is wiped out?"

The rule of one man over many is intolerable. It must end. "How" is the question. The way is for the many to begin to live. To cut off the head of one ruler is easy enough. Remember the legend of Ravana. He had ten heads. As soon as one was cut off, another popped up in its place. The moral is that no cutting off of heads becomes necessary in the presence of a living demos. The one will respond and submit. In the given instance the couple will cheerfully undergo the sentence. Only many should follow their example, if the tie is not lustful bondage but a bond of love born out of the zeal for reform. If the reformers do not wish to suffer imprisonment, they should migrate to a free place where they can live without let or hindrance.

New Delhi, 30-9-'46

WEEKLY LETTER

AN AMERICAN INTERLUDE

Of a more intimate and personal nature than the conversation with an English journalist which I recorded last week were the questions put to Gandhiji by an American journalist who saw Gandhiji at about the same time. The talk covered a wide range of subjects from Gandhiji's personal philosophy and his views on predestination to the future of Congress Ministers in the Interim Government and the prevention of third world war.

"Are you full of the joy of life? Why do you want to live for 125 years?" was the first question asked by this friend. He was surprised when Gandhiji told him that his desire to live up to 125 years was not for "enjoyment" but service. "Both are not the same," he explained and proceeded to expound to the puzzled interviewer the doctrine of "enjoyment through renunciation" as set forth in the Ishopanishad.

"When did your real enjoyment of life begin," asked the friend next.

"When I was born."

"No. I mean when did that pattern of life begin, when service became a joy for ever."

"When I understood the inner meaning of life."

"Is that India's speciality?"

"The only speciality of India is her poverty as America's is her glamour of riches," replied Gandhiji.

"May not there be occasions when one may have to compromise ideals with expediency?" next asked the friend.

"No, never. I do not believe that end justifies the means."

"Is it possible that your activities may some day be removed from the political field?"

"Perhaps you do not know," replied Gandhiji, "that I felt compelled to come into the political field because I found that I could not do even social work without touching politics. I feel that political work must be looked upon in terms of social and moral progress. In democracy no part of life is untouched by politics. Under the British you cannot escape politics in the good sense. It embraces the whole life. All who breathe must pay a tax. That is British rule in India. Take the salt tax for instance. It concerns everybody. The collector of revenue and the policeman are the only symbols by which millions in India's villages know British rule. One cannot sit still while the people are being ravaged."

"Then your job will never be finished," remarked the friend.

"It will be finished only with my death. I must be watchful, whether it is the foreign government that is in power or indigenous, if I am a social reformer in the true sense of the term. This is applicable to all."

"When people attain power they grow away from the people. What about here?"

"Let us hope and pray that this will never happen here. I have likened our people's office-acceptance to wearing a crown of thorns and pretty sharp thorns at that."

AN ASSORTMENT

The friend then passed on to a variety of subjects.

What did Gandhiji think of the students' strikes?

"It seems to be a universal malady, an epidemic," replied Gandhiji.

Did Gandhiji ever feel depressed?

That word was not to be found in Gandhiji's dictionary. "I believe in an over-ruling power as I believe I am talking to you just now. This may be unreal, but that is real. It dominates me and enables me to remain calm even in the midst of storm."

Gandhiji's questioner next asked his opinion about predestination.

"It is a much-abused word," replied Gandhiji. "It is true that we are not quite as free as we imagine. Our past holds us. But like all other doctrines this may well be ridden to death."

This provoked the question as to how one could overcome the unpleasant effects of one's predestination since predestination was a reality. "By taking the pleasant with the unpleasant in perfect detachment and thereby sterilizing the unpleasant of its sting, even as you have tackled the problem of the prickly pear by removing its thorn through judicious selection and cultivation and converting it into edible fodder for cattle," replied Gandhiji.

"How to prevent the next war?" was the friend's last question.

"By doing the right thing," replied Gandhiji, "irrespective of what the world will do. Each individual must act according to his ability without waiting for others if he wants to move them to act. There comes a time when an individual becomes irresistible and his action becomes all-pervasive in its effect. This comes when he reduces himself to zero."

"If the third war comes," added Gandhiji, "it will be the end of the world. The world cannot stand a third war. For me the second war has not stopped, it still goes on."

THE DARKENING SHADOW

Reports of killings and stabbings everywhere continued to darken the horizon during the week. "We are passing through trying times," observed Gandhiji in the course of one of his prayer addresses. "There is news of stabbings in Calcutta, Dacca, Allahabad, Bombay and so on. What is more, all this is done in the name of religion. How stabbing and murder of the innocents, whether aggressive or retaliatory, can help the cause of religion, I fail to understand. The spirit of religion requires us to make Him witness of our littlest of little acts. In Mira's song that has just been sung at the prayer, the devotee prays to God to come to his aid and deliver him from distress. For He alone can do so, none else. Let us pray to God then to deliver us from our distress. If our prayer is sincere, we will rely on Him entirely and put away the sword. And if even one party did so, violence would cease."

An esteemed Bengali friend, continued Gandhiji, had put him some questions as to how they should act at such times as Calcutta had recently been through. His reply was that the Hindus and Muslims should both cease to rely on the use of the knife and the stick for their protection and make suffering without retaliation their shield and they will be safe. Gandhiji said that he was daily receiving letters from friends to say that some relative or other had died. He wrote to all that they should not mourn nor should they expect him to mourn with them. "If we have a living faith in God, we will realize that it is the mortal body that perishes, never the immortal spirit within. Man is born to die. Death is the natural corollary to birth." So whether God sent them natural death or whether they were killed by the assassin's knife, they must go smiling to their end. There would not then be knives or sticks in evidence everywhere as they were today. Gandhiji, therefore, asked all to pray to God to vouchsafe to them the living faith that enables one to put oneself entirely under His protection without reliance on any outside help and to remember that He never fails His devotees.

HINDUSTAN BOY SCOUTS' ASSOCIATION

He reiterated his faith before the members of the Hindustan Scouts' Association, who with Pandit Hridayanath Kunzru their National Commissioner and Pandit Shri Ram Bajpai their National Organizing Commissioner, had a brief meeting with him after the evening prayer on the 29th of September. His last meeting with them was in 1940, when they held a rally at Sevagram. They told him that their present strength was nearly three lakhs. "Why are there stabbings and rioting in the country then?" Gandhiji asked, twitting them. It was up to them, he told them, to interpose a living wall of flesh between the infuriated groups and individuals and stop the bloodshed by shedding their own, if necessary.

WILL THEY DO IT?

Khadi, prohibition and the abolition of untouchability have for many years been part and parcel of the Congress programme. To carry them into effect requires not intelligence so much as faith and determination and utmost purity of purpose. It gave Gandhiji particular satisfaction to announce in the course of one of his evening prayer addresses that Shri T. Prakasam, the Premier of Madras, and his Ministry had undertaken to carry out big schemes in regard to all the three in the Madras Presidency. Before giving his final approval to the scheme about Khadi, Gandhiji had asked for an assurance that no more mills would be created. It appears that before the National Government had been set up at the Centre, the old Executive Council had allocated quotas of spindles to the various provinces. If a province failed to utilize its quota, they were informed, it would be apportioned to other provinces that might apply for it. In fact there was quite a scramble for obtaining licences. But Gandhiji warned the Congress Ministries that their Khadi schemes would be a sham and an eyewash if at the same time they went on planting fresh textile mills in their respective provinces. If they invested crores of rupees in setting up new textile mills the latter would naturally be the first charge on their attention and the public would refuse to take their schemes about Khadi seriously.

Congress leaders have to be true to their word and pure of heart. They may not be tempted by crores. They must be willing to go smiling to the gallows, if need be, for the sake of principles. Textile mills had been started everywhere even before the last war. The Provinces were being asked to start new ones. The machinery for them would be costly but the money that was supposed to follow in their wake was the lure. Gandhiji explained how he thought textile mills were as poison for village India and therefore to be avoided. People might wonder how he lived as a guest of a millowner—but these millowners had, in spite of his views, taken him in as one of their family, and non-violence demanded tolerance and love for all even if they differed from one. Shri Prakasam had promised Gandhiji that he would not be tempted with new textile mills for Madras and he would even hope to eliminate the existing ones as soon as the Khadi spirit prevailed.

At the same prayer gathering Gandhiji spoke about the food situation owing to the unexpected failure of arrangements for the import of food grains from abroad. Dr. Rajendra Prasad had the heart of gold. He would share his last crust of bread with the poor. The moment he heard a cry of distress from the South he got rice from wherever he could in India and promised them supplies. Gandhiji asked

Shri Prakasam how his province could ever starve. He knew well the people of South India. His first introduction to the latter was in South Africa through a poor indentured labourer Balasundaram whose case he had sponsored. During the historic march into the Transvaal they only got a pound and a quarter of bread and an ounce of sugar and during the resistance march he heard them singing and cooking edible shrubs picked up from the grass around them. There was a land which produced the banana, the cocoanut, the yam, the tamarind and chillies. What more did they want? They, with their intelligence and resourcefulness, could easily learn to do without rice, if they were asked to do so. Gandhiji had asked Shri Prakasam not to worry Shri Rajen Babu and he had promised he would not. It behoved everyone today, wherever they were, to be self-reliant and resourceful, brave and willing with intelligence and determination to face the food crisis. If all joined forces it would be well with India.

A TEST OF FAITH

Wherever Gandhiji goes, he has the knack of surrounding himself by an atmosphere of spinning and Khadi. In response to eager and persistent demand, Kanu Gandhi has opened another spinning class for one week as from the 30th September. This time, thanks to the experience of the previous venture, the teachers are better prepared and all implements for teaching too are available. The entrance fee as before is Re. 1 with an additional rupee as safe deposit to insure continuity and steadiness of attendance.

It was intended not to admit more than 30 persons at a time to the classes. But 38 came on the very first morning and 34 in the afternoon. There were 21 men and 17 women in the morning and 14 and 20 respectively in the afternoon. "This shows," remarked Gandhiji in the course of his Monday written message, "that there is enough faith and enthusiasm in a certain part of the public. Is the fault then of the teachers or that of the times that spinning has not become universal? To put the blame on the times in which we live is a mark of defeatism. Faith and diligence should rise above circumstances. If all work were to be carried out on this basis and in this spirit, God would surely reward our labours."

SOME HIGHLIGHTS

It was a privilege during the week to be visited by Shri Nandlal Bose and Shri Gurudayal Mullick from Shantiniketan. The latter treated the prayer gathering to soulful singing of one of his favourite Sindhi songs. A free rendering of it is given below:

"Thy house is very beautiful. Thou art omnipresent.

"If I look at the starlit sky Thou art there.

"Thou art the moon in the firmament.

"The market place is full of human beings.

"Thou art the life within them.

"Thou art in the idols of the temples. Man perceives Thee even in stones.

"Thou art in the surging waves of the ocean.

"Thou art the pilot of the ship's pilot.

"Seeing Thee everywhere man worships Thee.

"And in worshipping Thee all wants are fulfilled."

There was also, during the week, a meeting with the presidents and secretaries of the various Provincial Congress Committees when Gandhiji answered some important questions that were put to him. The more important of these questions with Gandhiji's answers will be found given elsewhere in this issue.

I must not here omit to take note of the spate of visitors to foreign countries at the various conferences that has occurred of late. Some of them have even been asking for Gandhiji's blessings. I cannot do better than reproduce the reply sent by Gandhiji to one of them:

"I dislike this craze for the West. What this army of men and women will bring I shall watch. Only do not seek my blessings for what I dislike. My opinion you know."

New Delhi, 1-10-'46

PYARELAL

A GOOD WAY

The following is the gist of a correspondent's letter from Dalhousie:

"I want to bring to your notice a recent happening in a village in Chamba State because I do not think any magistrate has ever acted in this way before. A certain number of goondas got drunk one day. They looted shops, beat some people and threatened to burn the shops when remonstrated with. The shopkeepers got frightened and closed their shops and asked for protection from State authority. A special magistrate was sent to the village to round up the culprits. He instructed the police to take every precaution to see that only the actual miscreants were caught and no innocent persons involved. The shopkeepers refused to open their shops until the goondas were arrested thus causing great inconvenience to the village folk and this they did in spite of assurances from the magistrate that their property would be properly protected. All persuasion having failed the magistrate, instead of resorting to the law and forcibly having the shops opened, undertook to fast for the sake of the villagers. This action had a magical effect. All the shops opened on the next day, the culprits were rounded up and calm prevailed."

New Delhi, 27-9-'46

A. K.

[If this story is true, it just shows what a mighty weapon fasting can be in the armoury of the official class. — M. K. G.]

(From the original in Hindustani)

FOR AGENTS

Agents are requested to take note of the following:

1. Please remember that agents have to deposit with us an amount covering the price of their demand for two months. A month's deposit will be treated as fixed and the other as current. Every week the cost of the copies sent to them would be deducted from the current deposit.

2. The amounts for the deposits are usually sent by the agents by cheques. Please note that we do not accept cheques. The amount should be remitted either by M. O., Postal Order or by a bank draft.

MANAGER

Notes

Co-operatives in Kerala

Sjt. Kelappan came to see me two days ago and informed me that co-operative movement was going strong and had become very popular in Kerala. If the societies are sound, it was heartening news that Sjt. Kelappan gave me. I, however, expressed my serious doubts. The secret of successful co-operative effort is that the members must be honest and know the great merit of co-operation and it must have a definite progressive goal. Thus holding a certain sum of money in co-operation for the sake of making more money by charging exorbitant rates of interest is a bad goal. But co-operative farming or dairying is undoubtedly a good goal promoting national interests. Such instances can be multiplied. I wonder what these numerous Kerala societies are. Have they honest inspectors who know their work? It may be mentioned that such movements have often proved disastrous when management has been dishonest and the goal questionable.

New Delhi, 29-9-'46

Guruvayur

Who does not know this historic struggle? Sjt. Kelappan had threatened to fast for the opening of this temple to Harijans. He suspended it on my strong advice and assurance that I would fight for it. Then followed a successfully carried out referendum which resulted in an overwhelming vote of caste Hindus in favour of the opening. But the Zamorin protested helplessness. Later, I went to Guruvayur and a great public meeting signified its decided opinion in favour. I had the pleasure too of meeting the Zamorin who courteously reiterated his helplessness. Other Kerala temples have been opened. Travancore has set a brilliant example by its great State proclamation. The Meenakshi and Palni temples are open. Why should Guruvayur yet remain closed? Surely no Satyagraha should now be necessary? It is up to the Provincial National Government to see that the opinion of the great bulk of the temple-going public is not defeated by legal technicalities. It is a thousand pities that even at this time of the day there are temples in India which shut out Hindus, mis-called Untouchables.

New Delhi, 29-9-'46 .

A Deed of Mercy

A Pathan, an ex-I. N. A. man, now employed by a firm, tried to defend a lad of 10 years. His entreaty was in vain. The assailants stabbed both the boy and the Pathan. The boy died. The Pathan lives. The deceased boy's father offered Rs. 4,000 as a reward for his bravery. He refused saying he tried to do his duty and would not take the reward offered. Would that such instances were multiplied!

New Delhi, 28-9-'46

M. K. G.

RIDING TWO HORSES

(By M. K. Gandhi)

There are a fair number of members of the Tanti caste in Utkal. Legally they are looked upon as Harijans. They are well known as Pan-Tantis. Many of them have gone to Kolhan in Singbhum District for earning a livelihood. They do not look upon themselves as Harijans with the result that they are not included among the Harijans of Bihar. They do not get themselves enlisted in Government records as Harijans. It is right that they do not. Why should there be any desire to be classed as Harijans? What benefit can accrue therefrom except that they would get the right of voting as also some help from the Government and the Harijan Sevak Sangh in the matter of education etc.? Is it proper to be classed Untouchables for selfish ends? The very idea should sicken one. One may not stoop so low even for the sake of a livelihood.

A Tanti need not be a Pan-Tanti. Today we have popular governments whose duty it is to help all backward classes in the matter of education etc. as they do in the case of Harijans.

It was the British Government that created a separate class called Scheduled Castes. In the eyes of popular governments there can be no distinction between rich and poor, literate or illiterate, high or low. All are one and there can be no distinctions on the score of religion either. All are Indians.

The Tantis should not try to count themselves as Harijans, they should not hanker after Government service. Whatever is possible for the crores must also be possible for the Tantis and all others. My advice to the Tantis of Kolhan is that they should reform and raise themselves by means of honest work and the more fortunate should help them to do so.

New Delhi, 28-9-'46 .

(From the original in Hindustani)

CONTENTS	PAGE
THOU TOO BIHARI ... M. K. GANDHI	337
SOME POSERS ... PYARELAL	337
'GANDHI VICHAR DOHAN' ... K. G. MASHRUWALA	339
HAND-SPINNING v.
MILL-SPINNING ... M. K. GANDHI	340
THE RIGHTS OF HARIJANS ... M. K. GANDHI	340
SCAVENGERS' LOT ... M. K. GANDHI	340
HOW? ... M. K. GANDHI	341
WEEKLY LETTER ... PYARELAL	341
A GOOD WAY ... A. K.	343
RIDING TWO HORSES ... M. K. GANDHI	344
NOTES:
EXAMPLE TO FOLLOW ... A. V. THAKKAR	339
CO-OPERATIVES IN KERALA ... M. K. G.	344
GURUVAYUR ... M. K. G.	344
A DEED OF MERCY ... M. K. G.	344

HARIJAN

16 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 36

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1946

TWO ANNAS

WEEKLY LETTER

TESTING TIME

A friend, who has just returned from England after several months' stay there, was describing to Gandhiji the other day the splendid spirit which the British people are showing in tiding over the food crisis. Everybody is tightening his belt, no one complains. The rich are proud to share equally with the poor the hardships which are the price of victory. It is a testing time for all and everybody is trying to rise equal to the occasion.

It is no less a testing time for us, Gandhiji has been reminding his prayer gatherings during the week. After half a century of ceaseless struggle we seem to be at the threshold of the Promised Land. The excitement of struggle keeps one going while it is on. But the real test comes when the din and dust of battle have subsided and we are brought face to face with the great tasks that lie ahead. What is the equipment that we shall need to realize the contents of Swaraj for which we have striven so arduously and long? Uttermost humility and shedding of self is what we require at this juncture, says Gandhiji.

THE SPINNING WHEEL

"In the song that has just been sung," he remarked, "the poet says that he who loses 'self' finds God." If we understand its significance, we really do not need anything more. This is what the spinning wheel teaches us. You might ask how it is possible to find God through the spinning wheel. As I have told you before, the spinning wheel enables us to identify ourselves with the crores. The millionaires imagine that money can bring them anything in the world. But it is not so. At any moment death might come and snuff them out. Some are being stabbed daily but losing one's life that way is not the same thing as shedding 'self'. One has to learn to efface self or the ego voluntarily and as a sacrifice in order to find God. The spinning wheel rules out exclusiveness. It stands for all, including the poorest. It, therefore, requires us to be humble and to cast away pride completely.

It holds the key to Swaraj. But can one spin for Swaraj and yet not be filled with subtle pride? If pride is there, spinning won't bring one the Swaraj of the spirit or the realization of God.

"When self is shed the change will be reflected in our outward behaviour. It will show in the littlest of our little acts. The whole outlook on life will be changed. Everything we do will be undertaken not for little self but for all."

"The hymn goes on to say," concluded Gandhiji, "that to find God one need not go out anywhere. He resides in our hearts. But if we instal self or ego there we dethrone 'poor' God. I have here used the epithet 'poor' advisedly. For, although He is the King of Kings, Most High, Almighty, yet He is at the beck and call of anyone who has reduced himself to zero and turns to Him in uttermost humility of spirit. Let us then become poor in spirit and find Him within ourselves."

"COME THOU IN A SHOWER OF MERCY"

When will this orgy of madness end? Killings in Calcutta, stabbings in Dacca, Agra, Ahmedabad and Bombay. To it must now be added the technique of poisoning. Must India go in for this crowning infamy? Or, is India's destiny to illustrate to the world the truth of the old Indian saying that greatest corruption leads to greatest pessimism and crime? Gandhiji poured out his soul's anguish over these dark happenings in the course of his address at the evening prayer gathering on the 2nd October, his birthday according to the English Calendar. Mrs. Nandita Kripalani, the grand-niece of the Poet, had just sung in her melodious voice the Poet's song:

When the heart is hard and parched up, come upon me with a shower of mercy.

When grace is lost from life, come with a burst of song.

When tumultuous work raises its din on all sides shutting me out, come to me, my lord of silence with thy peace and rest.

When my beggarly heart sits crouched, shut up in a corner, break open the door, my king and come with thy regalities.

When desire blinds the mind with delusion and dust, O thou holy one, thou wakeful, come with thy light and thy thunder.

"It is almost as if God has sent a special message to me and to us in this hymn today," he commented. "The springs of life in India appear to be dry today. We would be foolish to imagine that all is well because we have a Congress ministry at the Centre." It was, he proceeded, as if God has come to us with His awful light and His thunder to awaken us at a time when our minds are blinded with delusion and dust.

GOA

He, however, did not wish to harp on the mutual stabbings, bad as they were. To illustrate how dry the fountain of life had gone, he took the audience's mind to the little island of Goa, which was part and parcel of India. News had come that Dr. Ram Manohar Lohia had been arrested on arrival there and put in solitary confinement. Shri Kakodkar had a little while ago been tried for pleading for civil liberty and sentenced to 9 years' imprisonment with the prospect of being sent across the seas. Dr. Lohia was a scholar and while he might not be of the same way of thinking as Gandhiji, that did not mean that he, the speaker, had nothing to do with his case. His arrest and the happenings in Goa must affect his hearers as they did him. He had had some correspondence with authority but to no avail. Their Chief Minister, Pandit Jawaharlalji, was trying in his own way. It was humiliating for any Indian to be told he could not go to Goa as he was a foreigner. Goa was just as much a part of India as Kashmir or any other State and it was intolerable that a man like Dr. Ram Manohar Lohia should be treated as a foreigner having no right to enter Goa or any other part of India not directly under British rule.

INNER MEANING OF DUSSEHRA

In the face of such indignities and with the spiritual bankruptcy staring them in the face, what right had they to celebrate Dussehra with feasting and processions and other marks of jubilation, he asked his audience the next day. Could there be rejoicing in a country where daily stabbings were taking place and brother hated brother? Dussehra was the celebration of Rama's victory over Ravana but his victory was not achieved by violence. When Vibhishana asked Shri Ramachandra how unarmed, unshod, without any armour, he was going to defeat the heavily armed and mighty Ravana with his chariots, Rama's reply was that it was faith and purity that were going to win the battle. His bow was his self-control. His victory was the victory of good over evil. Gandhiji advised them to spend Dussehra quietly at home in prayer if they had understood the real meaning of religion and Dussehra.

He was receiving, Gandhiji went on to say, letters of abuse saying that his doctrine of non-violence was emasculating the Hindus, that he was no Mahatma, that he was injuring them and leading them astray. The speaker said, he never laid claim to being a Mahatma. He was an ordinary mortal as any one of them. He hoped he had never injured anyone. What he told them he told them for their own and the universal good. He had said that if they could not act non-violently they should defend themselves violently rather than be cowards. But the ability to die smiling at the hands of a brother without retaliation, physical or mental, was the highest bravery. In no case was it right to spoil for a fight. That was no self-defence. It was bad for them, bad for the country and utter disloyalty to their leaders. It was hindering them in their march towards Swaraj. Gandhiji reiterated that today no one had a right to feast and eat one morsel more than necessary. If they behaved in a disciplined manner India would live. If they did not, then India would die and they would be unable to hold their heads high.

OUR NEIGHBOURS THE AFGHANS

It was a seer who in an inspired moment envisaged the sending out of armies not of occupation but of non-violence for service to other countries, to take to them the fruits of culture and the arts of peace. Like many other countries Afghanistan is in the grip of economic shortages, particularly of cloth. An S.O.S. was received the other day through the Afghan Agent-General by Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru enquiring whether India could not do a friendly turn to Afghanistan by providing them with cloth. Jawaharlalji referred the Afghan request to Gandhiji. Luckily Gandhiji had received an intimation only a few days ago from the Punjab that they had for disposal a stock of Rs. 2½ lakhs worth of Khadi. Gandhiji mentioned the fact to the Afghan Consul who saw him on Sunday the 6th of October. Later the Afghan friends examined some samples of printed and dyed Khadi and said they would be immensely pleased to have what could be spared. They also enthusiastically welcomed Pandit Jawaharlalji's suggestion that India might send a batch of organizers and technical experts to teach them to organize hand-spinning and the manufacture of Khadi in Afghanistan itself. They visited Kanu Gandhi's spinning class and were agreeably surprised to learn that little boys and girls could pick up the art within a week's time. Afghanistan had two cotton mills with an output of nearly 6 million yards. A sort of Khadi was produced there but it was very coarse. Weaving was still a live art but cotton spinning has fallen into desuetude. American long staple cotton was grown in Afghanistan in quantities above and beyond their present-day textile requirements and part of it was exported to India. Wool spinning was fairly universal. And in the long winter months everybody had enough enforced leisure which, if properly utilized, could enable Afghanistan to become self-sufficient in the matter of clothing.

Panditji is the first Minister in the land, remarked Gandhiji in his prayer address. He cannot turn a deaf ear to anyone's need. Today they had to confess with shame that they had gone mad and were fighting with each other. People from all over the world were wiring to congratulate India on having come thus far towards independence through non-violence. How then could they be enemies of anyone? Their Badshah Khan was a Pathan. His brother Pathans across the border had come to ask for cloth. It was India's duty to help them. This river of love could and should flow from India. Time was when India not only clothed herself but her muslins were famed throughout the world for their exquisite texture. Today they were naked in their own country and all through their own laziness. Money could buy neither grain nor cloth in a country which should feed and clothe herself with ease. Gandhiji claimed that if they put their shoulders to the task and took to spinning they could fulfil not only their own but the needs of the world in the matter of cloth.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

Birthday greetings have a significance all their own, not for what they say about the persons concerned but the comment they provide on the ideals, hopes and aspirations of the time one is living in. Is not an age known by the way in which it honours its heroes? The following excerpts from some of the birthday greetings received by Gandhiji will serve as an index of what the world of today is aching for:

"You have dedicated so many years to the cause of Indian freedom that I hope you may live long (to 125 at least) to see the results of your labours come to a full fruition of happiness for your people.

"These are difficult days but nevertheless we are progressing in the right direction.

"A few short steps and the final act will have been completed and then we can all rejoice together in the accomplishment of Indian freedom."

Here is another:

"Gandhiji! The month of October brings the anniversary of your birth into this world of conflict—conflict between the powers of good and evil. I send you my salutations and my heartfelt good wishes. May you see during the coming year, still further fulfilment of your prophetic vision. May it bring a further advance of Freedom and of Peace to your beloved country. Our inspired poet, William Blake wrote:

"I give you the end of a golden string
Only wind it into a ball
It will lead you in at Heaven's Gate
Built in Jerusalem's wall.

"Jerusalem was the symbol used by Blake of his vision of the Kingdom of Heaven which he believed would be finally established on earth. And his golden thread was the practice of forgiveness.

"In this faith you and the poet Blake are kindred souls, and you also have put this thread into our hands, which is for each of us to unwind in our day-to-day practice—the thread which will bring us safely through the intricate maze of circumstance, and release us into the 'Kingdom of Heaven'.

"Your life and being have enriched the human race and will always remain as part of the Light which shines in the darkness. May all faith and joy be yours at this time of the celebration of your Birthday."

But one of the most touching is from distant America:

"Today at lunch I got the urge to write and tell you that small towns, like Forty Fort where I live, all over the world have been made better because of your life.

"Perhaps it is not so strange after all that you, Hindu leader, should remind the world and Palestine to adopt the methods of Jesus, our Christ. Jesus lives today and perhaps he speaks through you.

"To me it is one of my great blessings that I have lived in the same generation with you.

"You feel and know, I am sure, that the world is getting better and, that we are drawing closer to the people of India and China."

AT LAST?

It is darkest before dawn. Things have a knack of growing worse before they become better. It would almost seem as if in answer to the prayers and good wishes of an aching world, dark clouds that have so long darkened the Indian sky are going to lift after all. As this is being written there are indications that the last gap in the National Interim Government is going to be filled up by the Muslim League coming into the Cabinet. Conversations were going on, remarked Gandhiji at today's evening prayer in his written Monday message in Hindustani, which led one to hope that the Muslim League would join the Cabinet. He wanted all to pray that this time the union between the Congress and the Muslim League would be even deeper and more lasting than in 1916 and during the Khilafat movement and brother would no longer abuse or kill brother and all would live at peace.

New Delhi, 7-10-'46

PYARELAL

ROWDYISM RUN RIOT

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A correspondent from Jubbulpore describes the rowdyism exhibited by a section of the Hindus at a benefit performance in aid of the local convent school for girls. A Hindu friend actually organized the show. The actors in the little drama were all girls from the convent. Towards the end there was a scene in which an orphaned girl, tired of the world, was praying to God. Angels appeared and advised her to have faith in her Christ and the play ended with a hymn in praise of Jesus. This was the signal for pandemonium. The Hindus who created the disturbance raised a hue and cry against Christianity, the organizer who tried to speak was unable to make himself heard and money for the tickets was demanded back. The writer asks whether this scene could have taken place if the hymn sung had been in praise of Shri Krishna instead of Jesus.

If what the correspondent says is true, the behaviour described was wholly unworthy. It betrayed extreme intolerance. Those who do not like things that do not coincide with their notions need not patronize them but it is ungentlemanly to behave like less than men when things are not to their taste.

New Delhi, 5-10-'46

HARIJAN

October 13

1946

THE DANGER OF 'VANASPATI'

(By M. K. Gandhi)

"In Harijan of 14-4-'46 you supported Sardar Datar Singh's plea regarding a ban on 'Vanaspati'. There were several suggestions in that article which, had they been acted upon, would have checked the evil. But unfortunately no action has been taken. In the Punjab, in Akola, Shegaon and Kurnool, permission has actually been given for starting new factories. At any rate, this should be stopped. In the Punjab the Government has not even ordered the colouring of 'Vanaspati'."

The above is the substance of a letter to me. I have advisedly put 'Vanaspati' in inverted commas. It ought really to be Vanaspati Ghee. No one can have any quarrel with Vanaspati which means the leaves of flowers, fruits and vegetables. But when it presumes to pass as something else, it becomes a poison. Vanaspati is not and can never be ghee. If ever it were to become ghee, I would be the first loudly to proclaim that there is no further need for real ghee. Ghee or butter are the fat contents of milk drawn from an animal. To sell vegetable oil or butter in the form and name of ghee is to deceive the Indian public. It is thoroughly dishonest. It is the clear duty of tradesmen not to sell any product of this nature in the guise of ghee and no government should countenance such sale. The crores of India today get neither milk nor ghee nor butter, nor even buttermilk. No wonder that mortality figures are on the increase and there is lack of energy in the people. It would appear as if man is really unable to sustain life without either meat or milk and milk products. Anyone who deceives people in this regard or countenances the fraud is an enemy of India.

New Delhi, 6-10-'46

(From the original in Hindustani)

Dolapalki (Bridal Conveyance)

The Hindus of Garhwal District are so ignorant that they do not allow Harijan bridegrooms to ride or sit in any conveyance and pass in front of temples, public squares or the residential quarters of high caste Hindus. An evil custom like this should not really be tolerated today. One friend suggests that perhaps the best way to dispel ignorance would be to have a law enacted. This should be done. And, in any case, whenever a Harijan bridal procession is taken out, these unfortunate people should be afforded police protection. The district authorities should issue notices that no interference with the same shall be permitted. Anyone who tries to stop or causes to have stopped any such procession will be liable to punishment.

New Delhi, 6-10-'46

(From the original in Hindustani)

M. K. G.

A WORD TO PUNJAB

A knowledgeable person from the Punjab writes that the control on export of cattle from that province which had been imposed in 1944 expires on the 30th September and Government has no intention of reimposing it. Pure milk, butter, ghee, etc. are difficult to procure in the market, the quantity and quality of the cattle wealth of the province is rapidly deteriorating. While in 1940 the proportion of cattle stock to that of the population was 55 per hundred, it had reduced in 1945 to 51 per hundred. The matter of export is, therefore, of vital concern.

Export generally takes place to the larger cities like Calcutta and Bombay. Traders sell cattle to milkmen at enormous profits. The latter, as soon as the cows are dry, pass them on to the butcher's knife. Drs. Smith and Wright, both experts, have expressed themselves against export in the clearest terms. Dr. Pepperall who came to advise the Government of India on the question of milk wrote as follows:

"It would be far better for the Punjab to retain its cattle and arrange instead to send evaporated milk in time to Bombay or Calcutta rather than export cattle that are usually slaughtered within a few months and replaced at great cost. The economic advantage to the country would be great. Animals could be retained in surroundings where they would be well fed and cared for and their milk when delivered in time ought to be much cheaper than locally produced milk apart from being quite safe from a health point of view. It is recommended that this development be pursued with the utmost energy as it is considered to be the most practicable method of supplementing city supplies, saving valuable cattle from premature slaughter, reducing the price of milk, preventing adulteration and bringing to an end the maintenance of cattle in city stables."

The correspondent hopes that the Provincial Government, the members of the Assembly and the general public will take up this matter which is of common interest. Not only should the export be restricted but full advantage should be taken of the facilities which the Railway Board, according to the correspondent, are willing to offer in the matter of bringing back dry cattle to the Punjab. The eastern districts of the Province have, perhaps, the best stock in the whole of India, but unless a sensible policy is adopted the province stands in danger of losing its cattle wealth. The disastrous effect of this on both health and agriculture needs no comment.

New Delhi, 30-9-'46

A. K.

Wells Thrown Open

Gandhiji refers in Harijanbandhu to a letter from Shri Kalyanji Mehta saying that many wells were thrown open to Harijans in the Surat District. He remarks that while this news is good so far as it goes, it is also an exhibition of our shame that so many thousands still remain to be thrown open. It has delighted him to have the news that prohibition and other constructive work has been started in the provinces.

New Delhi, 8-10-'46

S. N.

DECIMALIZATION OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

My opinion on this subject is as follows :

1. I entirely agree that there should be a uniform standard of measurements of various types throughout the country. The chaos complained of in the letter of the Government of India is indefensible.

2. At the same time it is also necessary that two standards of measurements should not be allowed to prevail side by side, as it does at present in respect of the pound and the seer. This is even more confusing and provides better opportunity for sharp practice than the prevalence of a different local scale.

3. It is true that the decimal system has some advantages in large-scale calculations, and allows mechanical reckoners to be used. It is used for all types of calculations in the domain of science, except those relating to measurement of time and angles. The metric system has been adopted internationally and is also widely used in ordinary affairs in several parts of Europe. If decimalization is to be uniformly resorted to in India, I think we should adopt the metric system totally. I do not consider it desirable to have decimalization of an independent Indian style.

4. But I definitely hold that the use of decimals presupposes wide literacy and the use of paper and pen. To the illiterate, the chauthai (quarternal) system is much simpler and has several advantages over the decimal one. I am of opinion that all subdivisions of an upper unit should be made on the quarternal system for our country. As  $\frac{1}{2}$ ,  $\frac{1}{4}$  and  $\frac{1}{8}$  are perfect decimals, it does not clash with the decimal system. May be, after a decade or two, it may be possible to make a change over to the decimal system completely.

5. But, at present, there does not exist any regularized application even of the chauthai system in the several standards of measures. Thus the rupee is sub-divided into 64 parts (not to mention the pie), the seer into 80, the tola into 32 or 96 in different patterns, and so on. The Indian system of lineal measurements has been completely supplanted by the British system of a thoroughly irregular pattern. As its square and cubical measurements have also an importance on the system of weights, its irregularity is a very great handicap. It is, therefore, necessary that the chauthai system should be applied in a regular manner in standardizing various tables.

6. Accordingly, my suggestions are :

(i) Indian tables should be re-arranged on the chauthai system in a uniform and regular manner for all tables of measurements, its scope being limited to the sub-divisions of its standard unit.

(ii) The standard unit of every measurement should be linked to the International Metric system, instead of the British system.

It is possible to achieve this in more ways than one. One important point requiring to be settled in this connection is whether the new standards might be allowed to depart considerably from the prevailing ones; for instance, whether we might fix upon a seer of say 800 or 960 or even 312 grams, in place of the present one, which is approximately 933 grams. So also in respect of the gaj. The importance of the C. G. S. lies in the fact that the gram is linked with volume (being the weight of 1 cc. of water). If this is to be achieved in the Indian system also (which is quite possible), some measurements would have to be radically altered. The question is, how far is the Government prepared to favour radical alterations? If the policy is to depart as little as possible in respect of important current-units, the basis of equalizing Indian measures to the metric system will be of one type. It might involve the reckoning of more decimal places than what might be regarded comfortable. If a radical departure is made the basis might be simpler. After working at it in a number of ways, I find that it would be worthwhile pursuing this work only if the Government is agreed on the two principles mentioned above and indicates in a general manner its policy on the question set forth in this paragraph. Sevagram, 22-9-'46

K. G. MASHRUWALA

GROW MORE PALMS

Fifteen years ago, the prohibition campaign sponsored by the Indian National Congress included destruction of palm trees utilized for drawing intoxicant toddy. It was not then realized that the fault was not of the palms which really yield a sweet, non-intoxicant, healthy beverage called nira. The fault was of the owner who converted it into intoxicating toddy. Therefore, the rational remedy will be to reform the owner rather than kill the palms. The palm trees play a double function. Besides the benefit they give as trees, they give also gur and sugar from palms. Good many articles of everyday use like baskets, brooms, brushes, fans, caneware, etc. are made from the different parts of the palm tree. Edible fruit is yielded by the date and palmyra palm. Annually one maund of gur is yielded by a palmyra tree and  $\frac{1}{5}$  maund by a date palm in alternate years. The trees unlike sugarcane need no irrigation, manuring or protection from wild animals. When once planted the palms live for more than fifty years and continue yielding gur. The palms can be raised on non-agricultural waste land and need no fertile fields like sugar-cane. When newly planted, it takes nearly 10 years for a date and 15 years for a palmyra palm to begin yielding nira — sweet sap.

All possible effort must be made to grow more and more palm trees to produce enough palm gur. The planting must be done systematically. Ten feet distance ought to be left between every two trees. If the palms are grown like a jungle, the yield of nira will be adversely affected. The intervening space may be used for growing cereals without harm to either the trees or the crops.

Maganwadi, Wardha

GAJANAN NAIK

NEW EDUCATION IN ENGLAND

I have been turning over the pages of a recently published volume on education in England from the pen of Mr. M. L. Jacks, Director of the Department of Education at Oxford University (Total Education, Kegan Paul), and find that the educationists in England are faced with problems similar to ours, and that the solutions they propose are not without interest for us in India.

It is a common complaint in India that our education is purely intellectual, and neglects body as well as character-building. Similarly Mr. Jacks says, 'On the one side is the mind, a proper subject of education. On the other side is the body, and we have not thought it proper to educate that.' But it should be our object in the school to 'synthesize all a child's capacities, physical, moral, intellectual and spiritual.' As Mr. F. C. Happold observes in Citizens in the Making (Christophers), 'the discovery that both children and adults can best be trained by being taught to think with their whole bodies and not with their brains, is one of the educational discoveries of our age.' But this discovery has been made by only a few, namely 'the teachers who have paid attention to Physical Education (of which Physical Training is only a part).' They have discovered that 'in the young an increase in physical alertness is always accompanied by an increase in mental alertness; that the control of the body, which is learnt from an intelligent course in Physical Education, broadens out into a control of the passions and impulses, and of the mind and the knowledge which it gains; that problems of discipline become notably fewer and tend to solve themselves; that old intellectual interests are enlarged and take on a new vividness, and that new interests are created; that an awareness of self as an undivided whole is engendered, and that with this awareness there goes a new self-respect.' This is the experience not only in England but in other countries as well, as for instance in Czechoslovakia, where 'the Sokols, using gymnastics and callisthenics as instruments of physical, moral and intellectual regeneration, developed . . . into a movement for the renewal of a whole people and became the centre and crystallization of national sentiment. All these are instances of the co-education of mind, body and spirit, and of the whole human being in action; he becomes a controlled being, with his knowledge and skill, no less than his health and strength, controlled in the interests of his whole self.' As a striking picture of the education of the whole child, Mr. Jacks cites the case of a boy intent upon a piece of carpentry: in the visualization and appreciation of an end which is both useful and beautiful, in the thinking out of the proper means for its accomplishment, in the accuracy of measurement, the manual skill, and the manipulation of a tool which are required, in the demands upon the senses of sight and of touch, in the economical and controlled use of physical strength, and in the obvious determination of the will to exclude all distractions and concentrate the whole self upon the job—in all this, intellectual, moral and physical powers are brought into play and operate as one, and the finished article is the self-suppressive and creative act of the whole boy.'

It will not do to neglect the physique of our children. As Mr. Jacks forcibly puts it, a school should be first and foremost a health centre, where the indivisible health of body, mind and spirit may be fostered as one operation. 'Indifferently played games can never meet the necessities of the case. Every school should have a department of Physical Education, and we should in time be able to devise for the age of sixteen a physical test to correspond to the intellectual test represented by the School Certificate examination, and by dovetailing the one into the other to produce something which will approximate more closely to a test of the whole child.'

'Physical illiteracy' which afflicts most of our students will be a thing of the past when schools attend to the bodies of our children as well as to their minds.

Along with language and other subjects of the school curriculum Mr. Jacks deals with arts and suggests that the study of dress, embroidery, colour-printing, decoration, architecture and costume would be suitable for girls, and the practice of book-crafts, lino-cuts, wood-work, metal work, modelling, constructional and free drawing for boys. This may be all right in England, but in India as our ideal is the revival of the old self-sufficient, self-reliant and independent village republic, we must concentrate on food and clothes which constitute the basic necessities of man all the world over. Every child at school should 'be placed in charge of a small piece of ground where he or she can grow flowers, vegetables and the like. But this would not be possible in every place; in quite a number of places the ground required for the purpose may not be available. Spinning however does not present any such difficulty and should therefore be practised in every school along with or without gardening.

Schoolmasters no less than schoolboys should receive training in handicraft as well as physical training. Dealing with conditions in England, Mr. Jacks says, 'Man is a "skill-hungry animal", and yet this hunger is rarely satisfied: the starvation is due to the fact that a training in manual or bodily skills has been widely neglected in schools and these skills have been regarded as the Cinderellas of the curriculum. They can only be rescued from this status, if we so train our teachers that they will be competent both to practise and to foster them: and this competence is likely. . . . to be an increasingly important part of every teacher's equipment.' This competence may be important in England, but it is essential in India.

V. G. D.

WHAT CAN POOR NATIONS DO?

I

With increasing mechanization, an English writer wrote in 1940, the existence of the small State, and one may add the poor State too, became precarious.

"The small State might survive as an interesting relic, like the blacksmiths' shops, then disappearing slowly from our villages. The future lay with the large Powers. They could afford to have a Krupps or a Creuzot to supply their armies, to have fleets which would protect their nationals abroad . . . The smaller countries might maintain certain standards, as did the older craftsmen, but they were the earthenware pots floating in the stream as the iron pots. In times of stress they would hope to survive under the protection of the Great Powers."<sup>1</sup> . . .

"Unfortunately the development of scientific armaments has increased the relative weakness of the small, and especially of the non-industrial, countries."<sup>2</sup>

"The degree of military power," said Oswald Spengler, "is dependent on the intensity of industry. Countries industrially poor are poor all round; they, therefore, cannot support an army or wage a war; therefore, they are politically impotent; and, therefore, the workers in them, leaders and led alike, are pawns in the economic policy of their opponents."<sup>3</sup> Some people even before the outbreak of the war had begun to think in terms of a partition of the world into a few large blocks of political and economic hegemony.<sup>4</sup> Under this dispensation, can the smaller and poorer nations exist except as bond-slaves? That is what has happened to the vanquished and also the smaller nations of Central Europe. Gandhiji foresaw this when he said in 1938: "It does appear to me that small nationalities cannot exist in Europe with their heads erect. They must be absorbed by their larger neighbours. They must become vassals."<sup>5</sup>

II

What chances have these smaller and poorer nations in violent warfare? In the first place, as Gunther has said, "only highly industrialized countries can profitably manufacture appreciable quantities of arms. These countries sell to those less industrialized. Ninetyeight per cent of the total arms

1. G. T. Garratt: Europe's Dance of Death (1940), p. 44.

2. Ibid., p. 321.

3. Man and Technics (1932), p. 92.

4. "The drift of events will be in the direction of a partition of the world among a small number of gigantic imperialist States or empires, which will show much trade between their various constituent countries, but will be intense rivals of each other, both politically and economically." — P. H. Asher: National Self-sufficiency (1939), p. 57.

"In the modern world weak States may be a menace . . . Nations and peoples possessing laws and territories have duties and responsibilities to others as well as rights from others. In the future, any nation that becomes a menace to another through failure to protect its boundaries, will be occupied by other defenders or even lose its sovereignty." — J. O. Downer in Current History for July, 1942.

5. Harijan, Oct. 8, 1938 exports to the world comes from ten countries." Even England and Russia could not have carried on the war without a constant supply of arms from America. These have to be paid for; even Allies do not give them free. "He did not suggest on behalf of India", said the former head of the Indian Purchasing Mission in America on his return to India in 1942, "that these supplies be made as a gift; no country to his knowledge was receiving such material as a gift." And arms have to be purchased in a ceaseless flow, and have to be continually replaced by newer designs if they have to be effective. Arms which were new yesterday are obsolete and out of date today. For example, the rifle with which soldiers of many poorer nations are armed at present, is today no better than the lathi or the bow and arrow before the ultra-modern weapons, and is fast being relegated to the limbo. As Calvin Goddard says.

"Another definite trend was toward an increased allotment of heavy weapons (machine guns, anti-tank guns and light mortars) to both infantry and cavalry organizations. One result, rather startling in its implications, was that the infantryman who, ever since the supersession in centuries past of the pike by the firearm, had been first musketeer and later rifleman, relinquished probably for all time his traditional weapon. For, by the end of 1940 two-thirds (during the world war, only one-fourth) of the enlisted personnel of a United States army infantry organization had been deprived of their rifles and assigned to the service of the newer agents of mass destruction. Not only was the old order changing; it was all but unrecognizable in the new."<sup>6</sup>

An idea of how huge the cost of constant replacement of arms would be can be gained from just one instance of what the United States did during the war to meet air-bombing on battleships. "The U. S. Navy, taking stock of happenings overseas, came to the conclusion that its fleet was decidedly lacking in anti-aircrafts arms and armour, and requested a special appropriation of $300,000,000 to remedy deficiencies."<sup>7</sup> What small or poor country could ever think, or possessed the means, of undertaking such expenses before which even big, militarized nations like England and France quailed?

III

And the skill to use these arms? It is not acquired in a day. To quote but one instance of the results of unskilled and clumsy handling of modern weapons:

"Compared to the loss of 700 Japanese planes, the Chinese have sacrificed 1,100 bombers and pursuit ships according to American airplane salesmen.

6. Encyclopaedia Britannica Book of the year 1941.

7. "Where only a few years back two and three machine guns per aeroplane were considered ample, six, eight and twelve guns, at least half of them 50-calibre supplemented by at least one automatic quick-firing cannon, were considered indispensable." — C. Paul Johnstone. Ibid.

At least 40 per cent of the losses were due to crack-ups by incompetent pilots. One batch of eighteen American bombers assembled by Curtis-Wright mechanics in Hankow was safely flown by Chinese pilots to Chengtu, but the pilots forgot to lower their retraceable landing gear. Every plane had its belly bashed in."<sup>8</sup>

IV

Nor must we forget that weaker nations cannot always get arms even on payment of money. Abyssinia could not import them during the Italian invasion. Republican Spain could not purchase them from England and France, while her opponents got them from Germany and Italy. China could not, for three years before America's entry into the war, get them from Britain and the U. S. A., while to quote an American journal, "the U. S. A. furnished 56.8 per cent (in value) of all war goods shipped to Japan; and the British Empire chipped in with 22.1 per cent."<sup>9</sup> These Powers would not offend the stronger among the combatants; their so-called neutrality worked to the detriment of the weaker party. As a result, Abyssinia and Republican Spain went under; and Madame Chiang Kai-shek wrote in an agony of disappointment and despair:

"If unhappily for the democracies as well as for China, we were defeated in the end, at least the world ought to know that we were beaten not because of lack of courage—either moral or physical courage—but because, by the concerted action of the democracies, China was strangled to death by an economic noose fashioned by Japan out of British appeasement, American profiteering and French fear."<sup>10</sup>

V

Again, there is a greater price than money to be paid for the purchase of armaments and armed assistance. The case of the Balkans before the war is an apt illustration of it. The tale may be briefly told. After the world depression, British and American credits and markets that were available to the Balkan countries contracted, and the latter had to sell their food grains to Germany, who paid them a part of the money in cash and kept the balance in credit. Later on, arms were offered for sale to the creditors at much cheaper rates than other goods, and the latter could not resist the temptation, also fearing the loss of the German market if they did not take the armaments. "The Nazis calculate," said an English writer, "that Dr. Schacht's technique of forced sale of arms to the small countries of South East Europe will have important political and military results." "(These countries) armed by Germany will be dependent on further supplies of arms from there in the event of war. Having bought Nazi cannon, they will be dependent on Nazi goodwill for spare parts from Germany, and the four submarines and destroyers which Greece is contemplating buying from Germany will depend on Nazi training to man them," and thus "political dependence will follow inevitably." "In fact these countries had been virtually reduced to the position of Germany's vassals before they succumbed to her superior prowess. Here is a lesson which no nation lacking arms can overlook except at its own peril."

VI

Look from any angle as we may, it is obvious that in violent warfare, the smaller and physically weaker nations have no chance to survive except as vassals, or on the sufferance, of Powers which are larger and more skilled in scientific destruction. All honour to the heroic peoples who, counting no cost too great for the preservation of their freedom, challenged the might of the aggressors in an armed combat, and fell fighting against overwhelming odds. But their bravery and valour did not avail them. Smaller and weaker nations may retain their freedom on account of fortuitous circumstances—their peculiar geographical situation, the mutual jealousies of bigger Powers or their inability to gulp down large chunks of territory at a time, etc.—but least of all on the strength of the meagre arms that they may possess. For in an armed conflict, it is Might that will triumph and not Right.<sup>12</sup>

Baroda, 14-6-'46

C. S.

12. "As a tribunal for ascertaining the rights and wrongs of a dispute, war is crude, uncertain and costly. It is true that the world war ended, as I still believe, in a victory for Right. But it was won not on the merits of the case, but on a balance of resources and of blunders . . . chance is the supreme judge in war and not Right. There are other judges on the bench, but Chance presides. . . . But let all who trust justice to the arbitrament of war bear in mind that the issue may depend less on the righteousness of the cause than on the cunning and craft of the contestants. It is the teaching of history, and this war enforces the lesson. And the cost is prohibitive. It cripples all the litigants."—David Lloyd George: War Memoirs Vol. VI (1936), pp. xiii—xv.

THE GOSPEL OF SELFLESS ACTION
OR

THE GITA ACCORDING TO GANDHI

By Mahadev Desai

With Gandhiji's Foreword

Price Rs Four, Postage Nine Annas

Available at:

Navajivan Karyalaya, — P. B. 105, Kalupur, Ahmedabad; — 130, Princess Street, Bombay, 2; — 299 Sadashiv Peth, Poona 2; — Kanpith Bazar, Surat; — Lakhajiraj Road, Rajkot; — 641/11 Kucha Mahajani, Chandni Chowk, Delhi.

8. Haldore Hanson: Humane Endeavour (1939), p. 156.

9. Fortune (New York) for February 1942. cf.: "The Japanese airplanes that did the killing were manufactured in the United States." — Edgar Mowrer, Mowrer in China (1938), p. 94. "It was indeed sad for an American to realize that this daily slaughter of innocent non-combatants with the single purpose of terrorism was largely being accomplished with materials furnished by American companies for a price." — Ibid. p. 44. "Anyone with a flair for statistics can compute how many dollars of profit the U. S. received for the death of each Chinese." — Haldore Hanson: Op. cit., p. 369. See also Edgar Snow: Scorched Earth (1941), p. 43.

10. China Shall Rise Again (1940), p. 335-6.

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

IS NOT SERVICE WORSHIP?

Q. Would it not be better for a man to give the time he spends on the worship of God to the service of the poor? And should not true service make devotional worship unnecessary for such a man?

A. I sense mental laziness as also agnosticism in this question. The biggest of Karmayogis never give up devotional song or worship. Idealistically it may be said that true service of others is itself worship and that such devotees do not need to spend any time in songs etc. As a matter of fact, bhajans etc. are a help to true service and keep the remembrance of God fresh in the heart of the devotee.

HOW TO REMOVE UNTOUCHABILITY?

Q. A Madras Harijan writes that while removing the ban on temple entry and on use of public wells, giving scholarships for education etc. are all good in their own way, the real way to remove all traces of the curse of untouchability is to abolish cheris and separate living quarters for Harijans.

A. It sounds well to say that untouchability will go by the board if Harijans are allowed to live wherever they choose. So far as I am aware there is no general law in existence which relegates Harijans to living in special quarters. It is an evil custom that forces them to do so. The custom is breaking down but very very slowly. Meantime it is the duty of everyone to get rid of it. It is a question of moving the hearts of people. Supreme sacrifice, can achieve the desired result. Has not Tulsidas said:

"Through sacrifice Brahma created the world,

"Through sacrifice Vishnu protects,

"Through sacrifice the whole of creation is sustained,

"Therefore, Bhavani, go and perform sacrifices."

When one with that supreme gift is forthcoming, the taint will disappear and religion will be purified and saved.

IS RAMANAMA ANOTHER NAME FOR CHARMS?

Q. My nephew was ill. His relations did not resort to medicines but to spells and charms for his cure. It cannot be said that these did any good. Your mother too must have indulged in these things. Now you talk of Ramanama. Is it not the same as spells and charms?

A. I have, in one form or another, answered this question before now. But it is as well to do so again. My mother gave me medicines so far as I remember. But she did believe in spells and charms. Learned friends have faith in them. I have not. And because I have no belief in such things, I can say fearlessly that there is no connection between Ramanama of my conception and jantar mantar. I have said that to take Ramanama from the heart means deriving help from an incomparable power. The atom bomb is as nothing compared with it. This power is capable of removing all pain. It must, however, be admitted that it is easy to say that Ramanama must come from the heart, but to attain the reality is very difficult. Nevertheless, it is the biggest thing man can possess.

New Delhi, 5-10-'46

(From the original in Hindustani)

RURALIZING UNIVERSITY EDUCATION

We often regret that educated people are loath to remain in villages and that rural folk, once they get any education, hanker after urban life. This hankering after town life is there, mainly because the present education, imparted especially in the Universities, leads to urban vocation, trades and industries and has little relation to rural occupations. When graduates set the fashion of migrating from the villages to the towns, other lesser educated persons follow their example, and would rather starve in the towns than live happily in the villages. If the leading educated people, the graduates, should be enabled to look to decent living in rural parts, the whole system of University education should be ruralized. Of course, it will be almost an impossible task to ruralize our present Universities because of their too well-established traditions and vested interests. But it should not be difficult for the State as well as private benefactors, to establish new universities in the villages with the avowed object of enabling intelligent village young men and women to pursue higher studies in subjects, which are intimately connected with their immediate living and to conduct research in these subjects, so as to enhance their knowledge of rural occupations and increase their efficiency in carrying them on.

Till recently, we were importing mainly manufactured articles from foreign countries. In recent years we have been importing even the barest necessities of subsistence, namely, rice, wheat and various other grains from abroad. We are depending upon America for dried potatoes too. In a country which produced the celestial cow, we are short of milk and have to depend upon foreign people, to export to our country powdered milk. Is it really impossible for us to grow even enough food in our country with which we can subsist? If we change our institutions of higher learning, so as to subserve rural interests, or rather, start and maintain such institutions in villages, for studying and investigating village occupations and industries and for enabling the graduates produced, to follow these rural occupations and industries throughout their life and thus be leaders of thought and action in villages, a great revolution in our methods of life and work, can be produced in less than a decade. The State should hereafter spend large sums of money towards these ends. Our philanthropists and temples and maths should devote their munificence and surplus funds for the same objective. If the temples will not voluntarily part with their surpluses for such humanitarian purposes, legislation should be resorted to compel them to do so. While culture should not be sacrificed, rural colleges and universities should embark upon a rich programme of education in rural vocations.

After the High School (which also should be ruralized), the rural pupils should be given opportunities of studying in rural junior colleges of two years' duration, at the end of which successful students should be granted a degree which may be called the 'Associate in Science' or 'Associate in Arts' (A. Sc. or A. A.), depending upon the optional subjects they study. The medium of instruction should be the chief regional language. Compulsory subjects will be the chief regional language and one foreign language (modern prose only) which, in our present circumstances, will be English. Optional subjects could be any three from either Group A (for A. Sc.) or Group B (for A. A.). Two-thirds of the time should be devoted to the study of the optional group.

GROUP A—SUBJECTS FOR A. SC.

1. Agriculture.
2. Horticulture.
3. Sericulture.
4. Dairy Farming.
5. Poultry Farming.
6. Sheep-breeding.
7. Bee-keeping.
8. Fisheries.
9. Rural Textiles.
10. Rural Sanitation and Hygiene.
11. Rural Home Economics including Nursing.
12. Rural Electrical Engineering.
13. Rural Communications including Civil and Mechanical Engineering.
14. Rural Building Trade and Architecture.
15. Rural Manufactures like Pottery, Utensils, Paper, etc.

GROUP B—SUBJECTS FOR A. A.

1. Rural Sociology.
2. Rural Economics.
3. Rural Reconstruction.
4. Rural Education.
5. Statistics with reference to rural subjects.
6. Retail Selling and Distribution.
7. Rural Banking and Co-operation.

Wherever possible and necessary, instruction in the designing and construction of the machinery needed for the particular occupations or trades should be arranged for. As far as possible, the machinery needed should be produced in the region itself. In the India of the future, there will be need for a 'lingua franca'. Hindustani should be expected to be this language, which should, therefore, be taught compulsorily, though it may not be an examination subject.

After the two-year junior college course, a two-year senior college course should be set up, the successful completion of which should be marked by the award of the B. Sc. or B. A. degree. Studies on a higher level than for the A. Sc. or A. A. will be pursued here in the very subjects or in allied subjects of direct utility to the village folk.

Research degrees, M. Sc. and Ph. D., should also be instituted. Particular topics of importance to rural betterment should be taken up for investigation by the graduates, and the results should be published in the form of theses written in the regional language for the immediate benefit of the people engaged in the respective pursuits. Then only will university work be purposive; and no education is worth much if it is not meaningful and useful to the nation at large.

The main object of the preparation of the Associates and Graduates in these rural universities should be to enable them to follow the occupations or trades to eke out a livelihood. If, however, services of experts are required by the State, for promoting nation-building activities, the alumni of the rural universities should be preferred, because they, having been bred up and educated in rural areas, will be better fitted for the service of the ninety per cent of the population of the country, who reside in villages.

It is estimated that, out of a million people, about 23,000 are of very superior intelligence, who will profit by university education. Assuming that another 27,000 people out of a million could be expected to profit by the higher studies, 50,000 persons can be reckoned to be for higher intellectual work. A tenth of this number, namely, 5,000 may be expected to be in the university classes. A rural university, therefore, for a million population, should not be regarded as extravagant. There are countries like Canada and U. S. A., where there is a university for a much smaller number of people. That is one of the reasons, why people of those countries are economically more advanced than we are.

These rural universities should be open to adults of all ages. Passing by individual subjects, as and when the students desire, should be encouraged. Special classes to suit the time of the village folk before or after their daily work should be organized. No fees should be charged in the rural universities, and the cost incurred should be defrayed from State funds and private benefactions. The expenditure should be regarded as an insurance against famine, pestilence and disease. These colleges and universities should be real community centres. Then and only then, will our rural life be culturally rich and economically efficient.

K. N. KINI

M. A., Ph. D. (Columbia), Bangalore

[There is much truth in what Dr. Kini says. He should put himself in touch with Dr. Zakir Hussain and the Aryanayakams and devote his energies to evolving a workable scheme. I see no difficulty in existing universities conforming to the requirements of the villagers, who are India, instead of turning out indifferent imitators of the West.

— M. K. G.]

MUD HUTS.

India lives behind mud walls and earth is by far the most common structural material in this country. It is bound to remain so for at least several generations, if not for ever. The problems of food and clothing are being tackled strenuously while the problem of housing is left in abeyance, because it seems to be less urgent. It is much more baffling too.

Yet the health of the people requires a radical solution of the housing problem and the stupendous task of rebuilding the seven lakhs of Indian villages has to be undertaken. The country is not rich enough to think in terms of brick and stone, cement and plywood, asbestos and metal. Commonsense points to earth as the universal building material. But the existing mud houses are not what we would like India to live in. Houses are required to be tall and spacious, bright, harmonious and salubrious. Can such houses be built out of mud?

Fortunately the reply is in the affirmative. Improved methods of mud house construction exist. There is a very ancient way of building mud walls known all over the world. By this method the Spanish peasants were building their villages at the time of Hannibal and the Colorado settlers are building their houses even now. France has many such houses, built centuries ago and still going strong and so has China and even in India the ancient kings built fortresses on the same principle, although by a different method.

To understand well the advantages of the method described, let us first examine the ordinary method of mud wall construction.

Mud is dug up and after breaking the clods is properly wetted with water and sometimes straw is added. The mixture of mud and water is usually allowed to rest overnight and the walls are erected by adding wet mud layer after layer. The walls are usually made thinner at the top. The quantity of water being very considerable, the water, as it dries, causes innumerable small cracks to appear throughout the thickness of the wall, which reduces very considerably the strength of the wall and facilitates insect penetration.

A slightly improved way of building mud walls is to prepare sun-baked bricks before and build the walls out of such bricks.

In both cases the wall is weak and porous. It is usually left as it is or just plastered with cowdung or whitewashed.

The method suggested radically differs from the usual in the quantity of water added. Only so much water is added as is required to make the earth stick together when a handful is pressed very hard by hand. Here the minimum is the optimum, all excess of water must be avoided.

The earth is clay sand and gravel. The ordinary red loam is quite good, sandy soil can be improved by adding clay and clay requires an addition of sand and gravel. Usually the best earth is found at the foot of the hill—a mixture of silt, sand and sharp gravel. But the method is applicable to a very wide variety of soils. Organic matter in soil should be avoided as far as possible and all pieces of roots, straw etc. removed carefully.

The principle consists in compressing the earth very hard by repeated ramming with special tools between parallel planks. The water acts only as a lubricant, and the repeated hammering with a V edged rammer results in converting the mass of earth into a kind of conglomerate similar in consistency to something between laterite and soft limestone. The conglomerate hardens with time and will last for centuries, if protected against direct impact of heavy rain and running water.

The tools are few and simple and can readily be made by the village craftsmen. They consist of a square, a plumb-rule, a set of rammers of various shapes and of a set of wall and corner forms made out of planks and held together by strips of wood or iron.

On a foundation of stone or brick (to protect the bottom of the wall against running water) the planks (10 feet long and 3 feet broad usually) are fitted up and spaced to the thickness of the wall. Softened and slightly moistened earth is thrown between the planks in layers of about 2" thick and rammed very hard till the thickness of the layer is reduced to about half. Then fresh layers are added and a portion of the wall is thus built up. When the space between the planks is filled up, they are shifted and another portion of the wall is built in the same way. Corners and partitions are built by fitting up the mould with special corner pieces.

A mixture of slaked lime with sand thrown on the wall has proved to be a good protection against rain. When the monsoon is very heavy, the walls can be waterproofed from outside with hot tar or asphalt, over which a lime finish can be applied.

The tools and moulds can build many houses. They can be owned by the village Panchayat and lent to the villagers who want to rebuild their houses. The work can be done entirely with one's family labour or with the help of the neighbours on the basis of mutuality. The structure is cheap, strong, lasting and can be built high, straight and square, so that after finishing with lime and sand wash it is impossible to make out that the wall is made of mud only.

The walls can take any kind of roof, including the heavy mud roof, which is an interesting subject by itself.

The conglomerate method has a drawback, which in India is a blessing in disguise; it consumes labour only. There is nothing to buy in it, as far as walls go.

Assuming the village Panchayat is in possession of a set of moulds and ramming tools, which are lent to the house-holders in rotation, the entire village can be rebuilt in the course of time with the least amount of cost and trouble. The various Provincial Governments may sanction to supply the villages with the necessary equipment at a quite moderate cost of about Rs. 300 per village subject to adherence to a master plan for the village in accordance with its social, economic and sanitary needs.

The conglomerate method of construction lends itself to a vast variety of designs as the same set of moulds and tools can build a house of any shape and size.

The very substantial results obtained with the conglomerate method can be further improved by adding certain substances to the water used for wetting the earth. Also the tools and the construction of moulds can be further improved. Experiments are being carried on and the results will be made known in due course.

MAURICE FRYDMAN

CATTLE IMPROVEMENT

The following is the gist of a long article by Sardar Datar Singh. He says that inasmuch as India is primarily an agricultural country the improvement of cattle means nothing more nor less than the development of agriculture. India possesses over 29% of the world's cattle population and yet the production of milk per capita is very low. It works out at 7 ounces per head per day here as against 56 and 45 respectively in New Zealand and Australia. 20 to 30 ounces per day is the minimum required according to dietary standards so that our output would have to be more than trebled. The average quantity of milk yield per cow per year is only 750 lbs. which too is sadly below standard. The root cause of this low yield is malnutrition. Against the total estimated annual requirements of 270 million tons roughage and 50 million tons of concentrates only 175 and 3.75 million tons are available respectively. In addition there is wastage in storing, drying, harvesting and preparation of food and fodder.

I. The Sardar makes the following suggestions in regard to proper feeding :

(a) The cultivation of fodder crops must be increased by encouraging cultivators to put more acreage aside for this purpose. The most nutritious and high yielding fodders should be cultivated and in addition a number of perennial grasses can be introduced, such as Elephant, Guinea, Rhodes as also leguminous crops, e. g. Berseem and various types of beans which make good mixtures with non-leguminous crops.

(b) The conservation of fodder crops and elimination of waste through silage, also improved methods of drying fodder.

(c) The provision of good and ample grazing areas. Grazing lands having diminished greatly in area, it is imperative to adopt some system of controlled grazing on existing lands. Pastures available on canal banks can also be utilized with advantage.

In this connection the Sardar emphasizes the importance of utilization of land under forests. It has been estimated that 107 million acres of land is under forests in India as compared to 362 millions of cultivated land. Very little use has been made of this vast forest wealth. For example, out of about 33 million head of cattle in the U. P., only about one million make any use of these grazing areas. The number of cattle in the whole of India is 97 million out of which 8½ million only may be said to be using forest pasture lands. Plans are afoot which visualize doubling of the present forest area in terms of square miles of forest in British India. The theory that opening of forest areas will have a destructive effect on plantation is quite incorrect. Experiments have shown that grazing in itself when properly regulated is not only not an evil but will even "allow the vegetation to follow out its natural progress towards an ecologically higher type of plant community." The systematic planning of forest lands for grazing on economic and scientific lines is, therefore, a vital necessity.

II. The question of judicious breeding is of very great importance. For this the Sardar suggests :

(a) The supply to each area of a requisite number of bulls of a breed suited to the locality concerned. Caretakers should be appointed to put these animals in an enclosure in the evenings and the villages concerned should be responsible for their feeding. The caretakers should preferably be trained stockmen who can render first aid to the bulls as well as assist in case of cattle epidemics.

(b) The castration of undesirable bulls.

(c) An increase in the number of stud bulls which is ridiculously below India's requirements.

The need is at least one million and if these have to be replaced every four years, as they should be, it means that a quarter of a million bulls have to be supplied every year. This would necessitate the maintenance on special breeding farms of no less than 600,000 cows and 10,000 bulls but as this is neither feasible nor economically sound the Sardar suggests making full use of the existing organizations and institutions such as goshalas and pinjrapoles. If properly reorganized this could, at a very conservative estimate, provide 25,000 stud bulls annually as well as the same number of bullocks and 50,000 improved female calves every year.

III. The control of contagious diseases is of great import. Over 30 million cattle die annually from rinder pest, haemorrhagic, septicaemia, black quarter and anthrax. Strict attention should be paid to both preventive and curative measures. The average villager should not only be educated in the care of cattle but proper medical aid should also be made available to him.

New Delhi, 27-9-'46

A. K.

CONTENTS		PAGE
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	345
ROWDYISM RUN RIOT	... M. K. GANDHI	347
THE DANGER OF 'VANASPATI'	... M. K. GANDHI	348
A WORD TO PUNJAB	... A. K.	348
DECIMALIZATION OF WEIGHTS & MEASURES	K. G. MASHRUWALA	349
GROW MORE PALMS	... GAJANAN NAIK	349
NEW EDUCATION IN ENGLAND	V. G. D.	350
HINDUSTANI DICTIONARY :
INSTALMENT-IV	... M. K. GANDHI	351
WHAT CAN POOR NATIONS DO?	C. S.	355
QUESTION BOX	... M. K. GANDHI	357
RURALIZING UNIVERSITY EDUCATION	... K. N. KINI	357
MUD HUTS	MAURICE FRYDMAN	359
CATTLE IMPROVEMENT	... A. K.	360
NOTES :
DOLAPALKI (BRIDAL CONVEYANCE)	M. K. G.	348
WELLS THROWN OPEN	... S. N.	348

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 37

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1946

TWO ANNAS

HINDU PANI AND MUSLIM PANI

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A stranger travelling in Indian trains may well have a painful shock when he hears at railway stations for the first time in his life 'ridiculous sounds about pani, tea and the like being either Hindu or Muslim. It would be repulsive now that the Government at the Centre is wholly national and a well-known Indian in the person of Asaf Ali Saheb is in charge of Transport and Railways. It is to be hoped that we shall soon have the last of the shame that is peculiarly Indian. Let no one imagine that Railways being under a Muslim, Hindus may not get justice. In the Central and Provincial Governments, there is or should be no Hindu, Muslim or any other communal distinctions. All are Indians. Religion is a personal matter. Moreover, the members of the Cabinet have set up a wholesome convention that they should always meet at the end of the day's work and take stock of what each member has done. It is team work in which the members are jointly and severally responsible for one another's work. It is not open to any member to say that a particular thing is not his work because it is no part of his portfolio. We have a right therefore to assume that this unholy practice of having separate everything for every community at railway stations will go. Scrupulous cleanliness is a desideratum for all. If taps are used for all liquids there need be no compunction felt by the most orthodox about helping themselves. A fastidious person may keep his own lota and cup and receive his milk, tea, coffee or water through a tap. In this there is no interference with religion. No one is compelled to buy anything at railway stations. As a matter of fact many orthodox persons fast for water and food during travel. Thanks we still breathe the same air, walk on the same mother earth.

All communal cries at least at railway stations should be unlawful.

As I have often said in these columns trains and steamers are the best media for the practical education of the millions of travellers in spotless cleanliness, hygiene, sanitation and camaraderie between the different communities of India. Let us hope that the Cabinet will have the courage to act up to their convictions and may confidently expect the hearty co-operation of the Railway staff and the public in making this much needed reform a thorough success.

New Delhi, 12-10-'46

DR. LOHIA AGAIN

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Dr. Ram Manohar Lohia's letter to the Chief Judge of the Goa High Court deserves more than passing attention. I copy it below from the daily press:

"At the time of my arrest, I had not, so far as I know, violated any Goan law. I may have been intent on doing so but that is irrelevant. The police officer at Collem walked into my compartment, asked me no questions and put me straightaway under arrest. International law, as it stands today, probably empowers the Portuguese Government to arrest and deport anyone whom they consider an undesirable alien but they are surely not empowered to hold him in prison unless he has actually violated some law. The Portuguese Government have in the past declared me as alien and taken up their stand on a provision in International Law with regard to me. They owe me an apology and damages for illegal imprisonment or else they must give up their attempt to apply International Law as between Goa and the rest of Hindustan. Furthermore, between September 29 and October 2, they kept me in a cell, which has probably as much ventilation as just keeps a man alive. They owe me an added apology and damages for this kind of treatment.

"I continue to be held in solitary confinement, although under better conditions and I am not taken out of my cell except for bath and I am held incommunicable. These add to the illegality of my imprisonment."

Let no one laugh at Dr. Lohia's presumption in asking for damages. If he had power behind him, the Goan authorities would quickly apologize and offer to pay damages. It is not an unusual thing for big powers to ask for damages and obtain them for injury or insult done even to insignificant subjects. Dr. Lohia is not a little man. Well, India has a National Government. I am sure they are as sensitive as any can be. I should not be surprised if they have lodged their protest and asked the Goa Government to mend their manners. Anyway, let the force of public opinion be behind the National Government and the injured Dr. Ram Manohar Lohia. The injury done to him is injury done to our countrymen in Goa and through them to the whole of India.

New Delhi, 13-10-'46

THE DAIRY INDUSTRY OF INDIA

The following points worthy of serious consideration, most of which have not already been printed in these columns, are taken from Mr. Pepperall's report last year on the dairy industry of India.

The vastness of the problem will be evident from the following figures:

Number of producers of milk in both village and urban areas is 210 and 1.8 lakhs respectively.

Milch cattle in India are one third of the world total (219 million).

Similarly, the consumer population is 400 million.

Mr. Pepperall recognizes at the outset that the question of the cow must be looked at from the point of view of village India. The requirements for India are different from Europe inasmuch as, for example, the cow must continue to be a dual purpose animal.

I. In the matter of milk production his conclusions are:

(a) the buffalo must be considered complementary to and not as a substitute for the cow upon whom falls the double duty of producing males for draught work as well as milk,

(b) the increase of milk must come from the better management of indigenous stock rather than by importing foreign bulls. Cross breeding with the latter has not been justified by experience. Dr. Pepperall commends the results achieved at Sevagram with the Gaolao breed. He also recommends more use of bulls bred in Government farms. Bulls must be of selected breeds and placed under competent control as far as care and use of them are concerned,

(c) on the assumption that existing village conditions will prevail with minor modifications for at least the next decade and bullocks will be required for irrigation, agriculture, transport purposes etc., the cow must continue to be a dual purpose animal.

II. Great stress is laid on proper feeding. Dr. Pepperall says: "Accepted standards of animal nutrition would place the bulk of India's dairy cattle in the category of acute malnutrition."

(a) The proper feeding of cattle is a science in which villagers should be educated.

(b) Berseem possesses great advantages over Lucerne grass and enough attention has not been paid to its potentialities.

(c) Fodder grown on pasture land should be cut rather than allow daily peregrination of cattle over a comparatively small area which involves much waste. When green fodder is available, oil cake, cotton seeds and other concentrates should be used sparingly.

(d) Concentrates may not be sold and a ban on export of all such needs rigid enforcement.

III. Animal management is not given due attention.

(a) "Whilst the position of actual milking animals is rarely satisfactory, the situation of dry stock is one of absolute neglect." The remedy lies in increase of grazing areas and the ban on export of cattle food. Economic means will, however, have to be found to enable owners of cattle to buy the additional food supply. Much loss of milk accrues by the practice of preventing animals from getting in calf for a long period.

(b) Mr. Pepperall refutes the Indian claim from experience in other countries that calves cannot be weaned within a day or two after birth. As other suitable foods are available for calf-rearing, endeavours should be made to encourage the practice of early weaning.

(c) The producer of milk must get a satisfactory price for his produce. At the moment there are the widest fluctuations in price varying from Rs. 10 to Rs. 30 per maund. This must be remedied in order to inspire general confidence.

IV. Methods of production imply clean, airy sheds with impervious floors combined with hygienic methods of drawing, storing and handling milk. Mr. Pepperall was rightly appalled at "the squalor, filth, ignorance and indifference towards hygienic principles and revolting personal habits, allied to official apathy". Apart from no proper housing, the animals have no pure water supply provided for them. Their surroundings are horribly insanitary; the milk is brought to market in open galvanized cans; the milk market is crowded with people chewing betel nut, smoking, chewing and spitting. Milk is tested by the prospective buyer dipping his hand in it to judge the amount of fat (or added water). This applies to many large cities which were visited by Mr. Pepperall as also villages. There is no understanding of the fact that milk is a highly valuable food, subject to easy contamination. It is just as any other merchandise. Small wonder then that an official report on a test of milk in Bombay shows a bacteria count of 36 millions per c. c. These pages of the report make sad reading.

V. Adulteration needs no comment. It is a universal evil and needs drastic remedies. It goes hand in hand with corruption. Adulteration also bans 'pasteurization' which would enable milk to be transported some distance without injury. Since milk cannot be kept more than 5 to 6 hours in its raw state, it has to be disposed of with the minimum of delay. Suitable areas within transportable distance from cities should be explored for milk production on a large scale and a special rail service may be provided.

VI. With the exception of military dairy farms and some concerns such as that of Dayalbag and probably a few private-owned ones, dairies do not really exist in India. They should come into being. All the simpler items of equipment can easily be produced in the country.

Mr. Pepperall condemns the expansion of the military dairy farms at the expense of civilian supplies. Their activities should be fitted into a general food policy for the country.

VII. He considers that manufacture of milk products such as evaporated and powdered milk should be undertaken in remote rural areas. "Large irrigation projects in the Punjab and Sind Provinces represent the best location for manufacture because of the intensive cultivation and density of milk production which would result." He is wholly against the export of cattle from the Punjab. He advocates the stimulation of manufacture of ghee in villages as a village industry and holds it wrong to deliver milk to distant centres for manufacture and thereby deprive the rural population of valuable by-products and further lower their nutritional standards. Mr. Pepperall does not, however, advocate the manufacture of butter in India as the milk thus utilized is required for liquid consumption. Cheese and butter should be imported from Australia and New Zealand.

VIII. Mr. Pepperall is in favour of Standardization of milk but only by responsible organizations.

IX. He advocates cheap milk schemes and would place the question of cost as secondary when the health and well-being of the population is a consideration. "The present cattle population, if properly fed, should be capable of providing the whole community with a daily supply of milk on the basis of 1 lb. for each nursing mother and child and 8 oz. for adults."

X. Regarding price of milk no uniformity exists. It is worthy of note that the retail price of milk in Bombay and Calcutta is exactly double that of England. He recommends a fixed price for the producer which need not necessarily be high, so long as it is assured and the lowest price that can be arranged for consumers.

XI. In the matter of subsidies, Mr. Pepperall suggests financial assistance on a large scale but in the shape of loans.

XII. Finally he stands for research which has been sadly neglected in India. In this sphere he would give priority to "immediate investigation into the causes of and a search for a remedy for the loss of stamina of cattle maintained in wet areas" as also to scientific study in the matter of "manufacture from some indigenous raw material of a suitable and cheap milk container to replace the imported bottle".

The result of Mr. Pepperall's investigations reveal :

- (a) stock in a state of semi-starvation,
- (b) animal management very poor,
- (c) milk production steadily decreasing,
- (d) producers mostly illiterate, indebted and poverty-stricken,
- (e) price of milk the highest in the world,
- (f) average income amongst the lowest in the world,
- (g) widespread adulteration of milk,
- (h) total ignorance of sanitation and complete indifference to hygienic standards,
- (i) corruption and a low standard of integrity, generally speaking,
- (j) apathy of the general public,
- (k) serious neglect of their duties by the public bodies, and
- (l) dairy equipment almost non-existent.

The definite and urgent need for a milk policy has been clearly demonstrated. It is up to the Governments, both Central and Provincial, to take up the matter at once if the health of the population and the cattle wealth of an agricultural country are not further to deteriorate.

New Delhi 4-10-'46

A. K.

HOW TO MAKE THE WHEEL GO

Certain things catch the fancy of the public from time to time and become the rage. This is as applicable to the spinning wheel as to many other things. It has been sold by the lakh. But where are these charkhas today? Why are they not plying? That is the question we have to ask ourselves. How to make the charkha go is the problem. It will be a good plan to examine the main causes of why spinning has not become universal and examine the remedies for removing the apathy.

1. The charkhas that are for sale are not always in good working order.

2. When they go wrong there is no one to put them right.

3. After selling the charkha the seller loses all contact with the buyer.

4. Good slivers are not available.

5. There is no arrangement for weaving of yarn given in.

The above defects naturally damp the enthusiasm of the spinners. How can they be remedied?

1. Every sales depot should be able either to put right any defect in a spinner's charkha or replace it with a new one. Charges should be maintained at a minimum. At the same time every spinner should be enabled to acquire the knowledge of putting his own spinning wheel in order.

2. The bhandar should register in its books the name and address of every buyer.

3. A printed leaflet of instructions as to how and where to remedy defects should accompany every wheel sold.

4. Reduction in price should be made if there is any defect discovered in the charkha sold. Such repairs should be done without charge. Often it would be wise to give a new charkha for a damaged one brought to a bhandar.

5. Tunai should be taught. The sale of ready-made slivers should be stopped. Instead, cotton with the seed should be sold.

6. So long as a loom does not ply in every home the bhandar must be able to arrange for weaving yarn brought to it.

The upshot of it all is that Khadi Bhandars must give up being sales depots and instead become workshops having true servants of the nation.

KANU GANDHI

[Shri Kanu Gandhi's note is worth study. It should be borne in mind that the charkha is not like either the small or large machines of the West. There crores of watches are produced in a few special places. They are sold all over the world. The same tale applies to the sewing machine. These things are symbols of one civilization. The charkha represents the opposite. We do not want to universalize the charkha through mass production in one place. Our ideal is to make the charkha and all its accessories in the locality where the spinners live. Therein lies the value of the spinning wheel. Anything that goes wrong with it should be put right on the spot and the spinners should be taught how to do so. To teach them is the duty of the Charkha Sangh. Unless we proceed in this manner Khadi will not be able to replace mill cloth. M. K. G.]

New Delhi, 12-10-'46

(From the original in Hindustani)

HARIJAN

October 20

1946

REAL INDIA

(By M. K. Gandhi)

If my frequent wanderings throughout India of the villages have not deceived me, it can be confidently asserted that the 700,000 villages get and want no police protection. The solitary Patel to a village is a terrorist lording it over the villages and is designed for helping the petty revenue collector to collect revenue due to the Ma-Bap. I am not aware of the policeman having aided the villagers in protecting their goods or cattle against depredations of man and beast. The Police Patel is not to be blamed for what he is. He has been chosen for his task which he does well. He has not been taught to regard himself as the servant of the people. He represents his master the Viceroy. The change at the top has not yet permeated the most distant village. How can it? It has not come from the bottom. The Viceroy still retains legal and military powers to remove and even to imprison his ministers. The latter have no power, legal or other, to imprison the Viceroy. Even the Civil Service is still under his control. It is not suggested that the Viceroy does not mean to shed all power nor that he does not wish the most distant village to realize that he is determined under instructions from Whitehall to shed every vestige of British control in the quickest time possible.

The relevance of all this writing is for showing that we do not yet learn from the village in which India lives that every Indian, man or woman, is his or her own policeman. This he or she can only do when neither harbours mischief against his or her neighbour, no matter what religion he professes or denies. If unfortunately the politically minded will not or cannot go as far as suggested here, he must at least shed all fear and resolutely deny himself all protection whether from the military or the police. I am positive that India will not come into her own unless every home becomes its own castle not in the sense of the ages known as dark but in the very ancient true sense that everyone has learnt the art of dying without ill will, or even wishing that since he cannot someone else will do away with the would-be assassin. How nice; therefore it would be if every one of us had this lesson burnt into us. There is much proof in support of the lesson, if we will take the trouble to examine the proof.

New Delhi, 12-10-'46

FIFTH FREEDOM

To four freedoms promulgated by President Roosevelt during the World War II, the Rt. Hon'ble J. H. Hofmeyer, in his address as the Chancellor at the Graduation Ceremony of the University of Witwatersrand added a fifth, viz., freedom from racial and colour prejudice. Said the Rt. Hon'ble Hofmeyer:

"It is a mockery for us to talk of ourselves as a free people, to acclaim ourselves as the inheritors of a tradition of freedom, while we are as a nation to so large an extent the slaves of prejudice, while we allow our sense of dislike of the colour of some of our fellow South Africans to stand in the way of dealing fairly with them, while we let ourselves become the victims of the anti-Semitic doctrines which were a most important part of the Nazi ideology that we have fought to destroy. By way of illustration of what prejudice means in South Africa, I cannot do better than refer to the growing tendency to describe as a Communist—and therefore one who should be condemned by bell, book and candle—anyone who asks for fair play for all races, or who suggests that non-Europeans really should be treated as the equals of Europeans before the law.

"The plain truth, whether we like it or not, is that the dominant mentality of South Africa is a Herrenvolk mentality—the essential feature of our race problems is to be found in that fact. The true solution of those problems must be sought in the changing of that mentality. Ten years ago it was announced with a great flourish of trumpets that we had found a solution of our native problem—but there was no change of our Herrenvolk mentality. I said then, in an address delivered at this University, that it was futile to make such a claim. Today there are few people who would not agree that I was right. At this time when we are dealing with the Indian problem, though we may be able to settle certain aspects of it, it would be just as futile to claim that we can solve it, while in relation to it also that mentality continues to prevail to so great an extent as is obviously the case today.

"Freedom from prejudice—that is not the least of the freedom for which we must fight. We are paying a heavy price for our sub-servience to it today. Part of that price is material—undoubtedly we are the poorer as a nation because of our unwillingness to make full use of all our human resources. Part of it is being paid in the form of loss of international esteem and goodwill. We cannot hide our prejudices away in a cupboard from inspection by others. More and more the searchlight of the nations is being directed at us. More and more South Africa is suffering because its policies and dominant attitudes of mind do not measure up to what are coming to be accepted internationally as standards of values. But our chief loss is moral loss.

"As long as we continue to apply a dual standard in South Africa, to determine our attitude towards, and our relationships with, European and non-European on different ethical bases, to assign to Christian doctrine a significance which varies with the colour of men's skins, we shall suffer as a nation from what Plato would have called the lie in the soul—and the curse of the Iscariot may yet be our fate for our betrayal of the Christian doctrine which we profess!"

He ended with the exhortation: "May you be prepared to say with Thomas Jefferson: 'I have sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man'."

One only hopes these sentiments will not be forgotten by the speaker and his Chief General Smuts when the case of Indians in South Africa comes up before the U. N. O.

New Delhi, 13-10-46

PYARELAL

WEEKLY LETTER

STATE OWNERSHIP V. CONTROL

The annual meeting of the A. I. S. A. which was held on the 8th, 9th and 10th inst. at Harijan Colony, Kingsway, brought home the fact that with the advent of the National Government several things that were so far regarded from a theoretical plane have entered the realm of practical possibility. About 80 members participated in the proceedings. One of the questions discussed was about the exclusion of mill cloth from certain areas and laying an embargo on the erection of new textile mills in order that mill cloth should not compete with and kill Khadi. Gandhiji had suggested that in certain areas where the people are prepared to try out the experiment of self-sufficiency in cloth, the Government should prohibit the entry of mill cloth. He had also advised the Provincial Governments that if they were serious about making Khadi universal, they should not erect new textile mills nor permit them to be erected. They could not spend crores on new mills and yet expect the villagers to take their Khadi schemes seriously. The villager was a shrewd person. He would at once begin to suspect their bona fides, if they talked to him of self-sufficiency in cloth and at the same time allowed new textile mills in their province.

A member suggested that the A. I. S. A. might pass a resolution requesting the Government to nationalize all new textile mills and the existing ones also as soon as practicable. Gandhiji demurring to the suggestion explained that they could not ask the Government to nationalize new textile mills when they were telling them that Khadi and the erection of new mills could not go together. Shri T. Prakasam the Premier of Madras had already made an announcement to the effect that no new textile mills would be erected in the Madras Presidency. They might ask for the nationalization of the existing mills but he himself preferred putting them under strict State control to taking charge of and running them as a State concern. As a believer in non-violence he believed in trusteeship. He wanted a peaceful conversion of mill owners, so that the mill owners and their employees would all come under social control voluntarily. That meant that though, for instance, X might continue to be the legal owner, he would only take such commission out of the profits for himself as was warranted by his services and sanctioned by the people. The real owners would be the labourers in the mills. In one of the Tata concerns the labourers were reported to have become profit-sharers. Shri J. R. D. Tata's speech in that connection was worthy of perusal. He (Gandhiji) considered such solution to be the best. Several mill-owners had assured him that they were ready to co-operate in any such scheme, if required, and would prevent further expansion of their textile mills. He deprecated the idea of joint control of the mill industry by the Government, the A. I. S. A. and the mill owners. "Our job is not to run mills but to ply the little wheel by the hand. Why should we spend time in discussing a thing which lies outside our sphere of action. I would not shed a single tear if all the mills were to close. If mills flourish, Khadi must die. It might still function as a supplementary occupation for the relief of the poor. But for that you do not need a big organization like the Charkha Sangh." He would, he concluded, be perfectly satisfied if the State exercised control over the textile mills in consultation with them and so far as possible according to their advice.

QUESTION OF SUBSIDY

The question of giving subsidy to Khadi also came up for discussion. The weaving of hand-spun yarn is becoming more and more difficult. The handloom weavers prefer to weave mill yarn. The weaving charges are so high as to render even self-sufficiency Khadi too expensive. "Would it not be advisable," asked Shri Jajuji, "to ask the Government to give those who spin for themselves a subsidy so as to reduce the charges of weaving for self-spinners?" Gandhiji's reply was that they should not ask for subsidy but ask the Government to help in supplying cotton, the necessary implements and the services of teachers and technical experts to those who would take to spinning for their own cloth requirements. He did not want to have it said that the Charkha Sangh was cashing its influence to make the Government squander money on the whims of cranks and faddists. He wanted no favour for the Charkha Sangh which must stand or fall on its merits. He wanted everybody to feel that nothing had been given, at the instance of the Charkha Sangh, which had not been paid back tenfold.

NO COMPULSION

Another member suggested that the weavers should be required to weave a certain amount of hand-spun yarn and unless they did that the quota of mill yarn should not be given to them. Any kind of compulsion, replied Gandhiji, would only create a revulsion against Khadi. It would then cease to be 'the livery of freedom'. "The spirit of independence is in the air. The weaver might well refuse to be compelled."

"There is control in everything—food, cloth, etc.," argued Jajuji. Why cannot joint control be introduced with regard to weavers?"

"I do not like the idea," replied Gandhiji. "We do not use compulsion with regard to spinners."

We cannot use it for weavers. Let us go to the root of the difficulty. Our initial mistake was that we took to spinning, but neglected weaving. If we had adopted universal weaving along with spinning, all these difficulties would not have arisen. The remedy is to improve the yarn so that the weavers have as little difficulty in weaving as possible. We should reason with the weavers and explain to them that dependence on mill yarn must kill their avocation in the end. Mill owners are no philanthropists. They would draw the noose tight round the handloom weaver's neck the moment they come within effective range of competition with mill cloth.

"If we have faith in the charkha, we must forge ahead undismayed by these temporary bottlenecks. The number of handlooms weaving hand-spun will increase in due course. We have got enough artisans and indigenous skill in our country to produce all the cloth that we require for ourselves."

SNAIL'S PACE?

Jajuji: "This means that the work must go on as before at snail's pace. Our scheme of making 4 lakhs of people self-sufficient in cloth in a short time in this way will not succeed."

Gandhiji: "If it does not, the fault will be ours."

Jajuji: "That is right in the ultimate sense. But circumstances also count."

Gandhiji: "It is man's privilege to overcome adverse circumstances. Is not conquest of nature the slogan of the age we are living in? If circumstances alone had counted, Germany and Japan would have won the war. Let us in this respect take a leaf out of the book of the English people who do not know what it is to admit defeat. We have to cultivate austerity and penance in our life. There is nothing that the power of penance cannot achieve."

UNCERTIFIED KHADI V. MILL CLOTH

"You have taught us to be straight and above board in everything," asked another member. "Is it not dishonest to wear uncertified Khadi and be known as a Khadiwala when one does not fulfil the conditions of wearing Khadi? Is it not better to be honest and use mill cloth instead?"

Gandhiji replied that he did not approve of uncertified Khadi, but he was of opinion that Khadi, so long as it was genuine stuff, was preferable to mill cloth. All uncertified Khadi was not dishonest. For instance, people who spin for themselves or their family and have their yarn woven do not use certified Khadi. Yet such Khadi is of the highest merit. Certified Khadi carries the guarantee that the rules of the A. I. S. A. have been observed, as for instance paying to the spinners a certain minimum wage. Khadi, even when the spinners were not paid the standard A. I. S. A. wage, was preferable to mill cloth. The higher wages paid to labourers in the spinning mills were more apparent than real. Mill cloth was  $2\frac{1}{2}$  times cheaper than Khadi today. Experts had told him that if the mill industry did not receive special privileges and concessions in several ways, which it today enjoyed, mill cloth would not sell cheaper than Khadi. For instance, we provide cheap transport facilities to the mills to enable raw materials and mass produced finished goods to be taken from one place to another. Again, enormous sums have been spent on growing long-staple cotton or on starting technical institutes and on research work. No one had bothered to do anything for any of the seven lakhs of India's villages. So the mills were today actually being subsidized in some shape or other. "Remove all that and then see whether mill cloth is cheaper than Khadi."

He could not possibly encourage uncertified Khadi, continued Gandhiji, but mill cloth should be absolutely taboo. "A day might come when the A. I. S. A. might stop issuing certificates. Anybody would then be free to sell Khadi. That would be inevitable when Khadi becomes universal. The Charkha Sangh will then function as the custodian of the ethics and the general policy of Khadi. Its business activities will cease. People must become honest by habit and insist upon meticulous honesty on the part of the producers of and dealers in Khadi so that only genuine stuff is sold and bought."

"I have called Khadi and the charkha the symbols of non-violence. But it is said there is dishonesty even in certified bhandars. I wish it were not so. But there is no denying the fact that it is true of some."

"I have objected to the term vegetable ghee because it is not ghee. It should be labelled as vegetable oil. Similarly, I cannot tolerate that cloth which is not Khadi, i. e. is not hand-spun and hand-woven, should pass as such. The ultimate remedy lies in the buyer's hands. "Buyer beware" is a sound legal maxim for all to remember."

A HARD TESTING GROUND

In one of his public addresses, Gandhiji once described public life of his conception as a testing ground and probation for the cultivation of the highest spiritual qualities in man. How hard a testing ground it can prove was brought home to him and us all the other day when in the course of his delicate mission during the week he found himself nodding. His nod consisted in being over-hasty, in reading a paragraph hurriedly though there was no occasion for hurry. He fancied it was alright when it was not. Luckily the mistake was detected in time and no harm came out of it. But it shook him to his depths. It was the first experience of its kind in his long life, he remarked. Was it a sign of creeping senility in his 78th year? Then he had no business to be in public life. He arraigned himself before the tribunal of his conscience and accused himself of gross negligence "which is criminal in a public man." Not satisfied with it he made a confession of his error before the evening prayer gathering when he explained to them the anatomy of his error through a befittingly high-powered lens.

IMPORTANCE OF CONFESSION

"I have ever followed the maxim," he began, "that one should not let the sun to go down upon one's error without confessing it. No mortal is proof against error. Danger consists in concealing one's error, in adding untruth to it in order to gloss it over. When a boil becomes septic you press out the poison and it subsides. But should the poison spread inwards, it would spell certain death. Years ago, in Sabarmati Ashram, we had several cases of small-pox. All those in which the eruption came out escaped. But in one case it did not come out, the whole body became red and inflamed and the poor patient died. Even so it is with error and sin. To confess an error or sin as soon as it is discovered is to purge it out."

According to his life's practice, proceeded Gandhiji, as soon as he had discovered his mistake in the present case he had admitted it to his friends. But he could not rest till he had blazoned it to the whole world by speaking to them. "Friends may say that it was no sin but mere oversight—a trivial mistake. I draw no distinction between error and sin. If a man commits a bona fide mistake and confesses it with a contrite heart before his Maker, the merciful Maker sterilizes it of all harm. Throughout my long life I do not remember a single instance of anybody having suffered harm as a result of my bona fide mistakes."

"What penance shall I make for it?" asked Gandhiji of himself and replied: "To resolve never to let it happen again. This is the only way to really expiate for an error."

DEATH-BED REPENTANCE

"There is a saying in English that there is none so fallen but can redeem himself, if only he has the will. We have the promise that no matter how far gone in sin the sinner may be, God will forgive him, if he confesses his sin and repents of it even with his last breath. I believe in future life and in the continuity of Karma through successive births. What we sow here we must reap elsewhere—there is no escape. But if one repents, even on one's death-bed the repentance will burn away sin and sterilize it of consequences. Pray for me, therefore, that I may never commit such a mistake again in my life."

He ended by expressing the hope that they would all learn a lesson from his example and never be hasty or careless in their actions. Whilst the confession had relieved his mind of a burden, it had badly shaken his confidence in his ability to live up to 125 years and it might be a long time before his self-confidence would return. As an aid to introspection and in order to conserve his energy he has since taken to indefinite silence for all normal purposes and breaks it only to address the evening prayer gatherings or whenever it may be necessary for his present mission to Delhi.

HIS SILENT PRAYER

What fills the depth of his silence? A fleeting glimpse was afforded today when he scribbled out a short Monday message to be read out at the evening prayer gathering. "Man should earnestly desire the well-being of all God's creation and pray that he may have the strength to do so. In desiring the well-being of all, lies his own welfare; he who desires only his own or his community's welfare is selfish and it can never be well with him." Gandhiji said that it is essential for man to discriminate between what he may consider to be good and what is really good for him.

PLENTIFUL HARVEST

If the results of Shri Kanu Gandhi's third spinning class which concluded after six days on Saturday last is an indication, the harvest is verily plentiful, the lack is only one of labourers.

22 women and 28 men attended as it was decided not to admit a larger number. The speciality about the examination this time was that entrants came from two other classes that were held in other places. One of these was for Harijan women, twenty of whom attended. Seven of these went in for the examination. 12 women were taught in another centre, 3 of whom came for the examination which was conducted for 1½ hours and included all the processes up to spinning. The results were as follows:

22 persons span over 50 rounds including all the processes, 9 span over 80 rounds, 4 span over 100 rounds. The count was from 12 to 30.

Among those who took the full course were Mr. Norman Cliff of the News Chronicle, London, and Mr. Andrew Freeman of the New York Post. Both of them resolutely learnt to squat on the ground and to draw a fairly even thread from slivers of their own making. Both of them have purchased charkhas and hope to keep up their spinning.

No more classes will be held in the Bhangi Colony. But some of those who have learnt the art are opening classes in their own localities. The District Committee of Ward No. 9 is opening a Charkha Club and a class from the 16th October.

New Delhi, 15-10-'46

PYARELAL

Notes

English-Hindustani Dictionary

A friend asked me the other day as to why the above-named glossary does not appear in the Harijan Sevak. I told him it appeared only in the Harijan and he was very disappointed. I explained to him that it was meant for the English-knowing public and, therefore, was not published in either the Gujarati or Hindustani editions. But anyone who wished to, could buy the glossary page by remitting postage stamps worth one and a half annas. They could buy the back numbers too.

New Delhi, 12-10-'46

M. K. G.

(From the original in Hindustani)

Wrong

A correspondent from Madras writes that Congressmen in many places collected funds for Gandhi Jayanti celebrations. People subscribed largely. But the accounts of the money collected have not been audited and the public are not aware how the money has been spent.

If this is true, it is wholly wrong. Money given for charity belongs to the public. Gandhiji has again and again said that such money is a public trust. It should be carefully guarded and spent for the public good. It goes without saying that accounts of every pie should be kept.

New Delhi, 11-10-'46

A. K.

(From the original in Hindustani)

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

ONENESS OF COSTUME A CURE?

Q. "In these last four weeks, I have seen so much bloodshed and firing that it has left a bitter taste in my mouth. Every day since the riots started, I have been on duty as a magistrate trying to maintain the peace. Now, more than ever before, I am convinced of the necessity that we should insist on every Indian wearing the same nationalist dress—as you remember I had broached the subject before but at the time you had not approved of the idea. Why is it that none of the stabbings have been of people wearing a shirt and pant? This should be conclusive proof that the dress causes the difference in religion to be accentuated. Your reply to this through the Harijan for others like me who think that communal riots would disappear within a short time on our wearing the same kind of dress would be most appreciated."

A. I publish this as from a well-versed, well-meaning friend. These three qualities combined do not necessarily make for clearness of thought. What is wanted is not oneness of costume but oneness of hearts. We have only to look at Europe to demonstrate the emptiness of the idea that oneness of costume will enable us to get out of the mess we are in. Ill will is like an ill wind. It must go and be replaced by the fresh and bracing wind of good will.

THE SMOKING EVIL

Q. While you have all along written very strongly in favour of prohibition, you have not spoken either often enough or with equal emphasis in the matter of smoking. This evil is increasing with alarming rapidity and even children are increasingly getting addicted to it. The crores that are literally burnt by smoking could be so well utilized in wise ways in our poor land.

A. The taunt is true but not new. The reason for want of equal emphasis is to be sought in the fact that smoking has attained alarming respectability. When a vice reaches that state it becomes difficult to eradicate. This admission does not mean that we should not agitate for abatement of the nuisance. How to do so and when is the question. I am sorry to have to confess my inability to answer it.

THE CURSE OF DOWRY

Q. The demand for dowries in the marriage market is growing. None is immune from this injustice. The richer the parent of the prospective bridegroom, the heavier is the demand of the dowry. The problem, now is such that many marriageable girls cannot be married and the state of their parents can better be imagined than described. Popular Governments should help to check the evil through the law.

A. It is a curious phenomenon the questioner notices. Education not only does not improve the situation but makes it worse. The affected class has to wake up before the curse destroys the class which in its terrible weakness shamelessly betakes to it. Let them ceaselessly and restlessly agitate. I know no other way.

WHY THIS SECRECY?

Q. Can you say why, when mutual slaughter between brother and brother is going on, the names of the respective communities should be withheld?

A. I confess that the question has often occurred to me. There seems to me to be no reason for this hush hush policy save that it is a legacy from the autocracy which, let us hope, the national Governments have displaced. Those who ought not to know, know who stabs whom. And those who should know are kept in the dark. I am sure there are many Hindus and Muslims and even members of other communities taking pride in being Indians first and last without ceasing to be devoted followers of their own religions and who love to do their best to dissuade blind fanatics from making mischief. I know many such. They have no means of ascertaining facts except through the press. Let darkness be exposed to light. It will be dispelled quicker.

New Delhi, 12-10-'46

DEADLY EMBRACE

(By M. K. Gandhi)

In Bombay a Hindu gave shelter to a Muslim friend the other day. This infuriated a Hindu mob who demanded the head of the Muslim friend. The Hindu would not surrender his friend. So both went down literally in deadly embrace. This was how it was described to me authentically. Nor is this the first instance of chivalry in the midst of frenzy. During the recent blood bath in Calcutta, stories of Muslims having, at the peril of their lives, sheltered their Hindu friends and vice versa were recorded. Mankind would die if there were no exhibition any time and anywhere of the divine in man.

Shri Balasaheb Kher, the Premier of Bombay, has described in glowing terms the instance of two youths rushing to still the wrath of a Muslim mob and meeting what they knew was certain death. They met Death as their true friend. Let no scoffer deny the inestimable value of such sacrifice—sacred deed. It would be mock sacrifice, if every such act ended in success, so-called. The certain moral is that, if such instances are sufficiently multiplied, the senseless slaughter on either side in the name of religion will stop. One indispensable condition is that there should be no hypocrisy, no mock heroism. Let us appear as we are.

New Delhi, 15-10-'46

CONTENTS	PAGE
HINDU PANI AND MUSLIM PANI	M. K. GANDHI 361
DR. LOHIA AGAIN	M. K. GANDHI 361
THE DAIRY INDUSTRY OF INDIA	A. K. 362
HOW TO MAKE THE WHEEL GO	KANU GANDHI 363
REAL INDIA	M. K. GANDHI 364
FIFTH FREEDOM	PYARELAL 364
WEEKLY LETTER	PYARELAL 365
QUESTION BOX	M. K. GANDHI 368
DEADLY EMBRACE	M. K. GANDHI 368
NOTES:
ENGLISH-HINDUSTANI DICTIONARY	M. K. G. 367
WRONG	A. K. 367

HARIJAN

12 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 38

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1946

TWO ANNAS

BRIJKISHORE BABU

The death of Brijkishore Babu after a prolonged illness removes a seasoned and war-worn fighter from Gandhiji's Old Guard of Satyagrahis. His name recalls one of the most glorious chapters in the history of Satyagraha in India. It was during the Champaran mass Satyagraha struggle that Gandhiji first contacted him. As yet comparatively an obscure figure in Indian politics, he had gone to Champaran at the importunity of an equally obscure man — Rajkumar Shukla. There was a general outcry against the tyranny of the notorious compulsory indigo plantation which reduced the cultivator to a virtual serf of the European indigo planter. It was a century-old evil, well entrenched behind powerful vested interests and the false tradition of White prestige. Before entering into the fray Gandhiji consulted the local leaders connected with the movement. Besides the late Brijkishore Babu there was Rajendra Babu, who had already won his laurels at the Bar and was tipped for a High Court Judgeship, and a band of half a dozen lawyers. Brijkishore Babu was regarded by them all as their chief.

After a night's full discussion Brijkishore Babu and his followers threw in their lot with Gandhiji.

"But you will have to cease to regard yourselves as lawyers or leaders," Gandhiji told them. "You will have to become copyists and translators. Your main job will be to interpret and translate."

"We shall take time to consider," replied Brijkishore Babu, speaking for them.

The next day he communicated their decision to Gandhiji. They never wavered. Paying a glowing tribute to his memory in his after-prayer discourse the other day, Gandhiji told his audience how instead of sending a message of condolence, he had said in his wire to the deceased's relatives that they should rejoice that Brijkishore Babu had been relieved of his suffering by merciful death. He referred to his firm, unwavering faith and iron will. "Once his mind was made up, he never changed or looked back." He had strong, saving common sense. A shrewd politician, the shrewdest perhaps in Bihar, he had earned the reputation of being a skilful manager of the party machine before he came into contact with Gandhiji. His devotion to Gandhiji was boundless. He sent his daughter Prabhavati even before she became the wife of Shri Jaiprakash Narain to the Sabarmati Ashram. She became as Gandhiji's own daughter. Brijkishore Babu was a star of no mean lustre in the firmament of Bihar and his memory would ever be cherished.

New Delhi, 18-10-'46

PYARELAL

Notes

How to Combat Unholy Boycott

A correspondent from Mercara (Coorg) writes to say that many youthful reformers do not believe in animal sacrifice offered to the village gods. Therefore, he says, the villagers have threatened to boycott them. What are the reformers to do?

Reformers all over the world have no easy task. The threatened boycott should have no meaning for the reformers. They must be ready and willing to submit to the hardships entailed by the boycott. They should on no account be angry with the villagers who honestly believe in superstitious practices. It is a question of the real education of the people. These village gods have no existence except in the villagers' imagination. Unmindful of the boycott, they should calmly persevere in their reasoning with the villagers, rendering them all the time such services that the villagers may be in need of. Patience and perseverance will overcome the mountains of difficulties that may face the reformers. The reformers may not summon police assistance against the villagers.

New Delhi, 18-10-'46

Ways of Violence

A straight line is one. Non-violence is a straight line. Lines that are not straight are many. A child who has learnt how to handle a pen can draw as many lines as he wishes. He won't draw a straight line except perhaps by chance. Several readers ask me whether in the violence "permitted" by me several things mentioned by them could be included. Strange to say all the letters received are in English! The writers should re-read my article and they will at once know why I cannot answer those questions. I am unfit probably for the simple reason that I have never practised violence. Above all I have never permitted violence. I have simply stated two grades of bravery and cowardice. The only thing lawful is non-violence. Violence can never be lawful in the sense meant here, i. e. not according to man-made law but according to the law made by Nature for man. Though violence is not lawful, when it is offered in self-defence or for the defence of the defenceless, it is an act of bravery far better than cowardly submission. The latter befits neither man nor woman. Under violence, there are many stages and varieties of bravery. Every man must judge this for himself. No other person can or has the right.

New Delhi, 18-10-'46

The Coming Congress Session

A basketful of letters are before me in connection with the Mccrut Congress session to be held shortly. The correspondents complain of the 'lavish' expenditure that is advertised to be incurred in connection with it. I must refuse to sit in judgment upon the doings of the Reception Committee. I have neither the wish nor the required leisure for study in facts. The following however, I can say without the necessity of studying facts and figures. It may be of some use to the Committee.

There should be no tamashas. The Congress session is any day a serious business to be tackled seriously. There can be no side-shows. Crowds should not be attracted. The fact of the Congress session being held is by itself enough attraction.

All illuminations should be strictly avoided. Food to be provided should be of the simplest kind requiring little or no fat and sugar in its preparation. Uninvited guests should bring their own provisions or refrain from coming.

Sanitary arrangements should be perfect and serve as a lesson to all comers. Sight-seers should be discouraged.

New Delhi, 19-10-'46

Why These Tears ?

In his letter of birthday greetings to me, Principal Kalelkar relates an interesting and instructive Chinese story, of which I give below the following translation for the benefit of the readers of the Harijan :

"Dr. Wellington Koo, at one of his meetings in London, once narrated a sweet story about a Chinese family. The eldest member of the family was considered, as with us, the head of the family. As such he had the right to use an ancient family stick by way of punishment whenever necessary. Once a hundred-years-old man used the stick on the back of his seventyfive-years-old son. Tears ran down the withered cheeks of the son. The father asked the cause of the tears which he had never before seen him shed on a similar occasion. The son replied, "Father, your stick has lost its original force. Your feebleness hurts me. Hence the tears."

Kakasaheb was present when the letter was received. I gave it to him to read and he gave me the following story as having been told to him by a Tamil friend :

"One day a High Court judge of Madras is said to have gone out with a friend at the end of the day's work instead of going home as usual. When, therefore, he reached home late in the evening he met his mother standing in the doorway waiting for him. "Why have you come late ?" asked the old lady with a slap on his face. Tears rolled down the son's cheeks.

The friend remarked that it was but natural that a grown-up learned man like him should feel insulted on being slapped like that. It was strange on the mother's part to have slapped him.

"No, there was no insult in that slap," promptly replied the judge. "It is my proud privilege to receive a slap from my revered mother now and then. My eyes became wet only because I missed this time the strength that used to be in her slap. Evidently she has grown old and weak. Should not that hurt a dutiful son ?"

New Delhi, 18-10-'46

(From the original in Gujarati)

Fireworks during Diwali Days

I have received several letters complaining of the use of fireworks to celebrate Diwali. The complaints are justified. I wrote against this practice in the columns of the now extinct Navajivan. I do not know whether the writing had any effect. At present when fire surrounds us, surely there can be no Diwali. It is sinful to have fireworks of joy or illuminations or parties consuming sweets and the like while millions are starving.

New Delhi, 18-10-'46

(From the original in Gujarati)

What About Dakore ?

A friend from the Kheda District, who keeps bhangi men and women in his house as his own brothers and sisters, writes : "Big temples in Madras are being thrown open to Harijans. Is it not strange that the deluded Gujarat should not throw open the Dakore temple ?" If the deluded Gujaratis become sane, Dakore temple can be thrown open today. But if Gujarat must find joy in hugging a shameful custom, who can prevent her ?

On the Trustees of the Dakore temple rests a heavy responsibility.

New Delhi, 18-10-'46

(From the original in Gujarati)

M. K. G.

Errata :

In the article "Some Posers" in the Harijan of 6-10-'46, page 339, column 1, para 2, line 3, "trouble-shooting" should read "trouble-making."

On page 350 in the Harijan of 13-10-'46, column 2 line 6 for self-suppressive read self-expressive. In column 2, para 3, line 2, after 'arts' add 'and crafts.'

THE GOSPEL OF SELFLESS ACTION

OR

THE GITA ACCORDING TO GANDHI

By Mahadev Desai

With Gandhiji's Foreword

Price Rs Four, Postage Nine Annas

Available at:

Navajivan Karyalaya, — P. B. 105. Kalupur, Ahmedabad; — 130, Princess Street, Bombay, 2; — 299 Sadashiv Peth, Poona 2; — Kanpith Bazar, Surat; — Lakhajiraj Road, Rajkot; — 641/11 Kucha Mahajani, Chandni Chowk, Delhi.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE A. I. S. A. ON 10-10-46

1. The A. I. S. A. believes out of its own experience that the means of bringing about conditions in which there will be no scarcity of cloth as is now prevailing in India and other countries of the world such as Malaya etc., lies in the utilization of the spinning wheel and the handloom. India is the only country where the manufacture of Khadi from hand-spinning and hand-weaving has been going on from ancient times and where today, in the face of the extensive existence of cotton mills, pure hand-spun and hand-woven Khadi is being produced through the A. I. S. A.. During twentyfive year's working of the A. I. S. A. nearly seven crores of rupees have been distributed as wages to the poor spinners and weavers.

2. Those Governments that realize the importance of village industries and want to do Khadi work will have to work along the following lines :

(a) A five year plan should be made in which all the students of all the primary, middle and normal schools should be taught spinning. At least one handloom should work in every school. Basic education should be introduced in these schools in the quickest possible time and on the largest possible scale.

(b) Multi-purpose co-operative societies should be started through which the Khadi programme should be executed as a part of village reconstruction work.

(c) Steps should be taken to grow cotton in those areas where it is not a cultivated crop at present. Proper arrangements should be made so that spinners may easily get kapas, and all spinning accessories.

(d) Khadi experts should be trained and research work should be conducted for the improvement of Khadi work.

(e) In some form or other spinning should form a part of village uplift work and therefore the employees of the Co-operative, Education and Agriculture departments as also of the District Boards, Local Boards, Village Panchayats, etc. would have to pass the preliminary examination in Khadi (Khadi Pravesh). No fresh appointments should be made unless the applicant passes the above examination.

(f) There is no control at present on hand-woven cloth made from mill yarn. This should be controlled.

(g) Only hand-spun yarn should be used in the looms of the Textile Department and in weaving schools. Spinning and weaving should be conducted in jails.

3. Provincial Governments and States are, therefore, requested to universalize the use of Khadi by the adoption of the above measures along with others. The A. I. S. A. and its branches are ready to help to the fullest extent in carrying out the above programme.

4. Mill owners are requested to help in the carrying out of this important work. The Governments and mill owners in consultation with the Charkha Sangh should so arrange that mill cloth should not be sent to those areas where spinning and hand-weaving work is possible. In addition to this, they should see that no new mills are set up and that no new spinning and weaving machinery is indented for the existing mills. The management of the cotton mills should be conducted under the advice of the Charkha Sangh and the Government. There should be no import from abroad of any cotton yarn or cloth. The Governments should make the necessary enactments to give effect to the above and carry them out.

CULTURAL CONQUEST

For over 20 years I have seen little of fashionable Indian society or Government circles. All my life in India has been spent amongst Indian Indians. But last spring, when, in the hope of being able to bring some benefit to the peasantry, I took up the job of Honorary Special Adviser to the U. P. Government, "Grow More Food", I found myself plunged into new surroundings. Strange looking people, each trying to look more English than the other, were on all sides. I looked in despair at my office staff. Mill cloth everywhere, shirts tucked inside ugly English-cut trousers, foreign style coats on, in spite of oppressive heat, and Bata shoes tightly fitting the feet. This was bad enough, but when I began to ask their names I found they were all Misters: Mr. Sharma, Mr. Varma, Mr. Gupta and so on, and when they spoke of anyone they all said Mister so and so. Then came the peons and chaprasis, obsequiously saying 'Hazur, hazur', and my discomfiture was complete!

The embarrassment was mutual. When I refused to be called "Miss" or "Madam", they groped like foreigners for Indian forms of address, and when I began to dictate letters, and, eliminating "Mister", substituted "Shri" and "Saheb", it necessitated re-typing many pages, because the foreign habit had become too deeply engrained to disappear forthwith.

After a few days I started out on a long tour of western U. P., and then a new set of troubles faced me. The Inspection Bungalows and Circuit Houses were all furnished in purely English (in India) style. Stuffy smelling sofas and chairs, quantities of tables, large fashionable beds, with rails or panels along the top, so that you could not throw your arms above your head on a hot night—and the nights were hot enough in May and June—bad smelling carpets on the floors harbouring years of dirt and dust, gauze in the windows keeping out all fresh air, and worst of all unsteady commodes (which are a nightmare for those who do not like to sit in European style) placed in every bathroom, and always in close proximity to the living rooms. As to the kitchens the less said about them the better.

Is it not time that these unsuitable customs in speech, dress and mode of living, quit India along with the raj they represent?

MIRABEHN

HARIJAN

October 27

1946

HAND-SPUN V. MILL CLOTH

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The Premier of Madras has fallen foul of the big capitalist interests such as the Chamber of Commerce and even some Congressmen. I have had cuttings sent to me from the Madras Press. I am sorry to say that the criticism seems to me to be interested and ignorant.

My name has been dragged in the controversy. That I sponsor the Premier's scheme should not affect a dispassionate discussion of the very simple problem.

The simple question is merely this: Can Khadi become universal in Madras if encouragement is given by the Madras Government to new mills being erected or old ones being so expanded as to enable them to double production? Are the villagers expected to be so simple as not to understand that it would be merely playing with Khadi, if mill cloth heavily aided is to be dumped down in their midst, probably at a rate cheaper even than cotton required to weave a particular length of Calico? This happened when Japan sent her Calico to India.

The Madras Scheme is undoubtedly meant to utilize a part of the idle hours of the villagers for spinning sufficient yarn to clothe themselves. Is it chimerical to induce and expect the people to utilize their idle hours to do useful, national, honest labour?

It will be time to declaim against the Madras Government when there is a feasible scheme to find useful and more remunerative employment for all who need work. It is hardly an honourable pastime to dismiss from consideration honest servants of the nation by dubbing them idealists, dreamers, fanatics and faddists.

Let not capitalists and other entrenched personages range themselves against the poor villagers and prevent them from bettering their hard lot by dignified labour.

The great flaw about new mills in the Madras scheme was detected by me. It was when the Textile Commissioner was convinced of the absurdity of the two things running side by side and the feasibility of the scheme as envisaged by the A. I. S. A. that he ventured to recommend it to the Madras Government. His reputation will be at stake if it is impracticable or unworkable, not the critics.

This is work for democracy by a democratic Government.

Hence the scheme must be popular at least where it is to be tried.

It must not be one man's scheme but the whole Government's.

It must have the backing of the Legislature.

In no case may it smack of compulsion.

It must be intrinsically practicable and of benefit to the masses.

These conditions of success are all reduced to writing. The Government have accepted them in toto after, I understand, full discussion with experts and among themselves.

Let it be remembered that the existing Madras mills will not be touched at present. That the whole mill industry will be affected, if the scheme spreads like wild fire as I expect some day such a thing must, goes without saying. Let not the largest capitalist rue the day when and if it comes.

The only question then worth considering is whether the Madras Government are honest and competent. If they are not, everything will go wrong. If they are, the scheme must be blessed by all and must succeed.

New Delhi, 17-10-'46

THE TRAVAIL

A friend was discussing with Gandhiji the other day the recent gruesome happenings in Calcutta. His sensitive and refined spirit shrank from the very idea of narrow communalism. What filled him with anguish was not the loss of life so much, deplorable as it was, as the degradation of the human spirit that had resulted from the Calcutta happenings. "Even those who never thought in terms of communalism are now becoming communal-minded. But that was not all. The madness has spread."

As Gandhiji sat listening to the stories that came from Bengal, his mind was made up. "If I leave Delhi," he remarked, "it will not be in order to return to Sevagram, but only to go to Bengal. Else, I would stay here and stew in my own juice."

He consulted two friends from Bengal that evening about it. "Allow us to go there first and report," said they. "Give us a chance to do our bit and then, if necessary, you can come." Gandhiji agreed.

In the course of the talk, one of them asked Gandhiji whether he would recommend fasting to check the orgy of communal madness that was spreading in Bengal. Gandhiji's reply was in the negative. He narrated how a valuable colleague from Ahmedabad had invited him to immolate himself. "We believe in the non-violent way but lack the strength. Your example would steady our wavering faith and fortify us." The logic was perfect and the temptation great. "But I resisted it and said 'no'. There is no inner call. When it comes, nothing will keep me back. I have reasoned with myself too about it. But I need not set forth my reasons. Let people call me a coward if they please. I have faith that when the hour arrives God will give me the strength to face it and I won't be found unready."

THE WAY OF THE CROSS

"Fasting cannot be undertaken mechanically," he proceeded. "It is a powerful thing but a dangerous thing if handled amateurishly. It requires complete self-purification, much more than what is required in facing death with retaliation even in mind. One such act of perfect sacrifice would suffice for the whole world. Such is held to be Jesus' example."

"The idea is," he continued, "that you appropriate to yourself and assimilate the essence of his sacrifice, symbolically represented by the bread and wine of the Eucharist. A man who was completely innocent offered himself as a sacrifice for the good of others, including his enemies and became the ransom of the world. It was a perfect act. 'It is finished' were the last words of Jesus, and we have the testimony of his four disciples as to its authenticity.

"But whether the Jesus tradition is historically true or not I do not care. To me it is truer than history because I hold it to be possible and it enshrines an eternal law—the law of vicarious and innocent suffering taken in its true sense."

He then proceeded to show how the lesson of Jesus could be applied to the present situation. "A Hindu and a Mussalman braved the fury of the maddened crowd in Bombay and went down together literally clasped in a fatal embrace but refused to desert each other. Rajab Ali and Vasant Rao Hegishte similarly fell to mob frenzy in the attempt to quell it. "What came out of it?" people might ask, "the fire still continues to rage." I do not think for a moment it has gone in vain. We may not see the effect today. Our non-violence is as yet a mixed affair. It limps. Nevertheless, it is there and it continues to work like a leaven in a silent and invisible way, least understood by most. It is the only way." As a further illustration of his remarks he recalled the history of the Champaran Satyagraha. There had been several bloody risings within half a century preceding it against the infamous compulsory indigo plantation. But each attempt had only resulted in fastening the rivets tighter than ever before. Then came the Champaran mass Satyagraha, untainted by acts of violence, and a century-old evil was overthrown in less than six months.

"Go forth, therefore," he concluded. "I have done. I won't detain you for a day longer. You have my blessings. And I tell you there will be no tears but only joy, if tomorrow I get the news that all the three of you are killed."

"It will be pure joy to be so killed," they echoed.

"But mark my words," he resumed. "Let there be no foolhardiness about it. You should go because you feel you must and not because I ask you to."

"That goes without saying," they answered together as they took leave to go forth and face the flames.

IN GOD'S HANDS

Remarked Gandhiji at the evening prayer gathering that day that he had received numerous messages from Bengal inviting him to go there and still the raging fury. Whilst he did not believe that he had any such capacity, he was anxious to go to Bengal. Only he thought it was his duty to wait till Pandit Nehru's return and the meeting of the Working Committee. But he was in God's hands. If he clearly felt that he should wait for nothing, he would not hesitate to anticipate the date. His heart was in Bengal.

New Delhi, 18-10-'46

PYARELAL

ELOQUENT FIGURES

(By M. K. Gandhi)

When Shri S. Venkateswaran, the Provincial Textile Commissioner, was in Delhi specially for the purpose of the Madras Khadi scheme, I asked him to give me his own figures on the assumption that Madras had no mills and had to clothe the whole Presidency in Khadi.

Here are the figures which speak for themselves:

"Population of Madras Province	53 millions
Number of families in the Province	13-25 millions
53,000,000
4

Quantity of handspun yarn that each spinner can spin every day, working 1 hour per day	3/8 of a hank
Total quantity of yarn that will be produced per family per month of 30 working days	11-1/4 hanks
$\frac{3}{8} \times 30 = 90/8$

(One spinner for each family)

Production of handspun yarn per family per annum	= 135 hanks
= $12 \times 11-1/4$	= $9-9/14 = 9-64$ lbs.
	or 10 lbs. roughly equal to 30 yds. of cloth
	(width 44" average)

Total production of Khadi cloth in the Province	$30 \times 13-25 = 397-5$ million yards
---	---

Quantity of Khadi cloth required for clothing the entire population at 20 yds. per adult and 10 yds. per child
37 millions $\times 20$	= 740 million yards
16 " $\times 10$	= 160 " "
	900 million yards

Percentage of production to the requirements of cloth	44-1%
---	-------

"It seems to follow that we cannot get enough hand-spun yarn for meeting the cloth requirements in full unless each family contributes a spinner working, in the average, for about 2-1/2 hours daily, or unless we can secure about five spinners for every two families in the Province.

"Handlooms required: On the assumption that an average weaver, even after due training, cannot weave more than five yards daily, or 125 yards per month (allowing five days, every month, for festivals and other days of rest), the number of looms required for the production of 900 million yards is 6,00,000. The number of handlooms weaving cotton yarn in this Province now is only a little over 5,00,000. The number of cotton yarn looms will, therefore, have to be increased by at least 75,000 to make the Province self-sufficient in terms of Khadi."

Is it extravagant to expect every five persons out of eight to spin one hour per day, say for love of the country of their birth?

New Delhi, 18-10-'46

WEEKLY LETTER

THE ORGY OF MADNESS

The week's events were not calculated to lift the darkness that had descended on Gandhiji's spirit and to which I referred last week. "I am trying to take my bearings, to see where I stand," he casually remarked the other day in the course of a conversation. He has since been pouring out his anguish in a series of prayer gathering addresses. There was first the flood havoc in Assam. Thousands had been rendered homeless, property worth lakhs had been destroyed and many lives lost. That was an act of God. But far worse than the news from Assam was the fact that an orgy of madness had seized a section of humanity in Bengal. Man had sunk lower than the brute. Reports were coming through that the Hindus, who are in a very small minority there, were being attacked by Mussalmans. Ever since he had heard of the happenings in Noakhali he had been furiously thinking as to what his own duty was. God would show him the way. He knew that his stock had gone down with the people so far as the teaching of non-violence was concerned. They still showered affection upon him. He appreciated their affection and felt thankful for it. But the only way in which he could express his thanks and appreciation was to place before them and through them the world the truth which God had vouchsafed to him and to the pursuit of which his whole life was devoted, even at the risk of forfeiting their affection and regard. At the moment, he felt prompted to tell them that it would be wrong on the part of the Hindus to think in terms of reprisals for what had happened in Noakhali and elsewhere in East Bengal. Non-violence was the creed of the Congress. It had brought them to their present strength. But it would be counted only as a coward's expedient if its use was to be limited only against the British power which was strong and while violence was to be freely used against our own brethren. He refused to believe that they could ever adopt that as their creed. Although the Congress had an overwhelming majority of the Hindus on its membership rolls, he maintained that it was by no means a Hindu organization and that it belonged equally to all communities. He had told Acharya Kripalani, who had succeeded Pandit Nehru in the Presidentship of the Congress, that it was going to prove no feather-bed for him. If the Chief Minister of the Cabinet had to wear a crown of thorns, the Congress President would have to lie on a bed of thorns. The late Sir Syed Ahmed had called Hindus and Mussalmans the two eyes of India. The Congress President could not possibly discriminate between the two. He was pledged to equally serve both. He, the speaker, had therefore asked him to proceed on a mission of peace to East Bengal to teach people the art of dying without killing. It should be his privilege to demonstrate it by his personal example. He was going there with his wife not to protect one party but to stop the fratricide which threatened to overwhelm India. It was a good beginning for Acharya Kripalani and his wife. Sarat Babu, the brother of the late Subhas Babu, was going with them. He knew no barriers of caste or creed. Some years ago he was staying at Sarat Babu's house. He came to know how Subhas Babu used to look up to Sarat Babu.

The fair name of Bengal was being tarnished — Bengal that had given them so much, Bengal the home of Gurudev whose bhajan they had just heard sung. That hymn asked God to make the devotee wide-hearted and fearless. It was with that hymn on their lips that they were going and it was the audience's duty to wish them every success.

A WORD TO THE MUSLIM LEAGUE

He appealed to the Muslim League too to turn the searchlight inward. They had decided to come into the Interim Government. He hoped they were coming in to work as brothers. If they did, all would be well. And just as he had exhorted Hindus not to slay Mussalmans nor harbour ill-will towards them, so he appealed to the Muslim League, even if they wanted to fight for Pakistan, to fight cleanly and as brothers. The Qaid-e-Azam had said that minorities would be fully protected and everyone would receive justice in Pakistan. It was as good as Pakistan where they were in the majority and he implored them to treat Hindus as blood brothers and not as enemies. It boded ill for Pakistan if what was happening in East Bengal was an earnest of things to come. He hoped both Hindus and Muslims respectively would stand mutually as surety and pledge themselves to see that not a hair of the head of the minority community in their midst was injured. Unless they learnt to do that, he would say that their assumption of the reins of power was a mere blind. What was going on in Bengal was not worthy of human beings. They had to learn to be human beings first.

NOT STRAIGHT

Gandhiji's hope that the coming of the Muslim League into the Interim Government would prove to be a good augury was, however, destined soon to receive a rude shock by the inclusion of a Scheduled Caste name in the list of the Muslim League's nominees. It might be supposed, Gandhiji remarked after the evening prayer on Wednesday last, that a man like himself ought to be glad that another seat had been given to a Harijan. But he would be deceiving himself and Qaid-e-Azam Jinnah if he said so. The latter had said that the Muslims and Hindus were two nations. The League was a purely communal organization. How then could they nominate a Harijan to represent them? Gandhiji feared their whole mode of entrance into the Cabinet had not been straight. He could not sense any generosity in the nomination of a Harijan in their quota of five seats especially when he read what was happening in East Bengal. He was, therefore, forced to wonder whether they had come into the Cabinet also to fight. He hoped, nevertheless, that his fears would prove to be wrong and that they would work there as brothers, out to serve India as a whole. He hoped too that the Harijan member would prove a worthy son and servant of India.

WOMEN'S ORDEAL

"It is not death that matters but how you meet death," he remarked on another occasion. To die at the hands of one's brother is a privilege, provided you die bravely. But what about women who were being abducted and forcibly converted? That no one could be 'converted' forcibly was here beside the point. "And why should Indian women feel so helpless? Is bravery the monopoly of men only? Women of course do not generally carry swords though the Rani of Jhansi did and outdid all her contemporaries in the valour of the sword. Still all cannot become Ranis of Jhansi. But all women can emulate the example of Sita whom even the mighty Ravana dared not touch. Ranis of Jhansi could be subdued."

"Let no one dismiss the example of Sita as legendary," he proceeded and gave the example of Olive Doke who dared to go and live among the unclad primitive Negro tribes in the heart of Africa without fear of molestation. It was that higher type of valour which he wanted Indian womanhood to cultivate. The military and police might protect them from abduction but what about those who had already been abducted or who might be abducted in spite of the police and the military. They ought to learn to die before a hair of their head could be injured. He averred that it was possible for a woman to put an end to herself by choking or biting the tongue.

DEATH BEFORE DISHONOUR

The next evening he had to revise the technique suggested above. Dr. Sushila who had heard him the day before had told him—and Dr. B. C. Roy who saw him the next morning confirmed her statement—that one could not end his life by choking or biting one's tongue. The only way known to medicine for instant self-immolation was a strong, poisonous dose. If this was so, he, the speaker, would advise every one running the risk of dishonour to take poison before submission to dishonour. He had, however, heard from those given to yogic practices that it was possible by some yogic practice to end life. He would try to inquire. His was not an idle idea. He meant all he had said. The very fact of steeling oneself for death before dishonour braced one for the struggle. Woman in our country was brought up to think that she was well only with her husband or on the funeral pyre. He would far rather see India's women trained to wield arms, said the speaker, than that they should feel helpless. The vogue of carrying daggers and revolvers by women was on the increase. He knew, however, that arms were a poor weapon when it came to the matter of defending one's honour against odds. Arms were a symbol of one's helplessness, not strength. When one was deprived of them, generally there was nothing left but surrender.

He then referred to a letter received from a Muslim friend to the effect that he (Gandhiji) was ready to condemn atrocities by Muslims but preferred to be silent when Hindus committed them. He could only say that the charge was baseless. To him all human beings were like his blood brothers.

DECENTRALIZING KHADI ORGANIZATION

I wrote at length last week about the various questions that were discussed at the last meeting of the Charkha Sangh. Another question that was discussed was about the devolution of the authority of the Charkha Sangh to local Khadi organizations. It was suggested that the formulation of Khadi policy for each unit of area should be left entirely to local bodies which should be completely independent of the central organization. Gandhiji, while he was entirely in favour of the maximum decentralization of initiative and responsibility, was opposed to the creation of local committees of untrained men and women to take the place of Khadi workers. For organization of Khadi work what was needed was a body of technicians and experts, men endowed with business talent and filled with the spirit of service. There was no room in it for personal ambition or power politics. The latter had become the bane of the Congress. To get rid of corruption in the Congress organization he had suggested that it should convert itself into an organization of workers. To introduce an element of democracy into Khadi work would be to kill Khadi. The Charkha Sangh was not a democratic organization in the sense the Congress was. It was an organization created by the Congress for the building up of democracy. Like the Directorate of the Bank of England, it was a business organization first and last. Only it was motivated by an altruistic, not profit motive. A business organization of a democratic body could not be bound by the procedure of the democratic vote.

"We want to disperse in the villages," proceeded Gandhiji. "A Khadi worker can have no use for any other sanction save such as persuasion and service can command. The moment he seeks to arm himself with any other, he kills Khadi."

"To make Khadi universal," finally asked a friend, "you need to inspan the co-operation of everybody."

Gandhiji replied that since Khadi workers were expected to be full servants of the people, their worth if there was any could create public opinion in their favour. The need was not for a committee of members who may be a hindrance rather than help, whereas if service drew supporters they would be a powerful help.

"What would be the authority of the A. I. S. A. after Khadi became decentralized?" was another question.

The answer came quick. It was that the authority of the Sangh would be merely moral and, therefore, more potent than at present. Its function would not be to provide money or material but only to smoothen the way for Khadi work by the creation of a moral sanction. It would lend the Khadi workers the use of its name but not seek to impose its will upon them. Its moral authority would be available to anybody who accepted its policy. Even its present assets would be put at the disposal of any unit that was ready and considered fit to claim autonomy, provided only that it guaranteed the right use of the assets allotted to it and bound itself to return the same after a certain period. The Charkha Sangh would have the right of inspection but even that would be at the will of the autonomous unit.

New Delhi, 18-10-'46

PYARELAL

CHARKHA MANDAL

1. Members of the Charkha Mandal will give six hanks of yarn per year or 320 rounds per month. The condition is that the yarn should be spun on the days fixed by the Mandal and at the place fixed for community spinning. The members will have to make their own slivers by tunai and spin them. They will be called Associates.

2. An Associate will pay Re. 1 as admission fee and further give 320 rounds of yarn per month, spun as in clause 1. He will remain an Associate so long as he gives the monthly quota of yarn.

3. The Mandal should make rules as to the time and frequency of community spinning. Anyone who fails to give the quota of yarn for 2 months will be struck off the roll. If he wishes to become a member again, he will have to pay the admission fee a second time. No one will be able to become a member a third time in the same year.

4. Efforts should be made to open such mandals in every mohalla, village and small town. There may be a central office for each district or province.

5. It is the intention to fix a national day for every month in the whole country, when community spinning should be held at the respective mandals at one and the same time.

6. Efforts are being made to start spinning classes along with the mandals in various places. At these classes the various processes beginning with hand-ginning with a rolling pin, tunai, slivering and ending with spinning will be taught. The admission fee will be one rupee. Those who join the Mandal within a month of learning these processes in the Charkha class will not have to pay an additional rupee for admission to the Mandal. They will only have to give 320 rounds of yarn.

7. Although the yarn spun every month will belong to the Mandal, the spinner in question will be able to buy Khadi with that yarn. The Associates will have the first preference in getting Khadi.

KANU GANDHI

[The Charkha Mandal has evolved out of the three spinning classes held in the Bhangi Colony. How I wish such mandals would spring up all over the country! Before that can happen a number of mandals should be opened in Delhi. There are several clubs for play and enjoyment. Why not have many mandals for national work? —M. K. GANDHI]

New Delhi, 18-10-'46

(From the original in Hindustani)

AN ATTRACTIVE PICTURE

There is a tiny national Grama Vidyalyaya in the village of Gambhira in Gujarat. Eight students of this school aged from 13 to 17 observed Gandhiji's birthday anniversary by spinning among themselves 36,920 rounds or 578 hanks of yarn in 1,275 man-hours from the 16th of August to the 21st of September. Generally they spin for one hour every day. Besides this, on Gandhiji's birthday, six wheels were kept plying without a break for 24 hours, turning out 43 hanks, while one spinning wheel was kept going non-stop for 77 hours producing 30 hanks. In all 651 hanks of 20 to 32 counts were spun.

The spinners have all written letters to Gandhiji giving a charming account of their school and surroundings.

The students of the Nutan Rashtriya Grama Vidyalyaya themselves sweep the school and clean their latrines. Off and on they do scavenging in the village itself. They are proud of it too. Writes one of them: "I have always felt that even if we can render no other service to the country, we can contribute our mite by keeping the school building and its surroundings neat and clean. It is pure joy." Another takes pride in the fact that they are all taught to be above narrow prejudices and the feeling of distinction between man and man. They wear Khadi woven from yarn of their own spinning. They have laid out a flower garden for themselves. A girl student describes how on Gandhiji's birthday they built a model of Gandhiji's hut which they decorated with yarn spun by themselves and how they swept clean the village on that day. But to their sorrow they found, while returning after the flag salutation ceremony, that the villagers had already spoiled the roads and footpaths. "They do not seem to realize the importance of cleanliness and sanitation," she bewails.

Other letters indicate a keen interest on the part of the students in the various local problems such as the Harijan question, deterioration since the last five or six years of the village land owing to floods, erosion and so on.

New Delhi, 14-10-'46

PYARELAL

CONTENTS	PAGE
BRIKISHORE BABU	369
RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY
THE A. I. S. A.	371
CULTURAL CONQUEST	MIRABEHN 371
HAND-SPUN V. MILL CLOTH	M. K. GANDHI 372
THE TRAVAIL	PYARELAL 372
ELOQUENT FIGURES	M. K. GANDHI 373
WEEKLY LETTER	PYARELAL 374
CHARKHA MANDAL	KANU GANDHI 376
AN ATTRACTIVE PICTURE	PYARELAL 376
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI—
INSTALMENT V	377
NOTES:
HOW TO COMBAT UNHOLY
BOYCOTT	M. K. G. 369
WAYS OF VIOLENCE	M. K. G. 369
THE COMING CONGRESS SESSION	M. K. G. 370
WHY THESE TEARS?	M. K. G. 370
FIREWORKS DURING DIWALI DAYS	M. K. G. 370
WHAT ABOUT DAKORE?	M. K. G. 370

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 39

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1946

TWO ANNAS

WHO CAN BE A TRUSTEE ?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The task that the A. I. S. A. has undertaken is so vast and great that it calls for a most careful consideration of the qualifications required for a trustee of the A. I. S. A. In my opinion they should be as below :

1. No one should be a trustee merely in name or for the sake of name.

A trustee should have the faith that in a country like India where crores remain unemployed for 4-6 months in the year, everybody can easily be clad in self-spun cloth and need not touch any other if all those who are physically fit spin for a reasonable time every day, say on an average an hour per day.

2. A trustee who has this unshakable faith would spin regularly to set a good example to others and for the satisfaction of contributing his or her mite to the service of the country.

3. He or she will try his or her best to attune his or her life with the life in the villages of India.

4. India is made of villages, but our intelligentsia has neglected them. A trustee of the A. I. S. A. would try his or her utmost to remedy the handicaps from which our village life suffers. In doing so he or she should remember that village life must not become a copy or appendage of city life. The cities have to adopt the pattern of village life and subsist for the villages.

5. If a trustee's husband is connected with the mill industry, she should engage a weaver out of her personal money to weave yarn spun by herself or her friends and relatives and use the cloth thus produced.

6. A trustee should read all the literature about hand-spinning and hand-weaving and understand the economic and moral significance of these crafts. He or she should further understand how they can be universalized and explain it to others.

7. A trustee should study and understand the history of the A. I. S. A. from the beginning to date and how it has revolutionized the various processes of cloth manufacture.

These are my ideas. They cannot be obligatory unless the Sangh approves them. I shall welcome all helpful suggestions by way of amendment or addition.

New Delhi, 27-10-'46

(From the original in Gujarati)

Notes

Abducted Girls

Q. You have called attention to the fact that girls who are forcibly abducted have not erred and that society would be wrong in penalizing them. In further exposition of your views, would you tell us, if any ceremony purporting to be one of marriage forced on unwilling victims of such outrage, should be considered binding in any way, against the will of the girls concerned? Is it not right that both society and the family should be broad-minded enough to receive them back? In the case of unmarried girls abducted or forced to undergo such mock ceremonies of marriage, should not a special effort be made by society not only to reclaim them, but to help them to contract marriage in the normal manner and thus be completely vindicated and restored to the fold?

A. You are right. All you say follows from my remarks referred to by you. I have no doubt that girls forcibly abducted have committed no crime, nor incurred any odium. They deserve the pity and active help of every right-minded man. Such girls should be received back in their homes with open arms and affection and should have no difficulty in being suitably matched.

New Delhi, 24-10-'46

English into Hindustani

This fortnightly attempt is proving its use. Its defects are not unknown to me. It is a labour of love for the Rajkumari. Insistence on such an effort was mine. I was anxious to give to the lovers of the blend of Hindi and Urdu something ready-made. The hope then was that the vocabulary will be the joint effort of perhaps half a dozen co-workers. But it could not be. It had to be made where I was. My lot happened to be cast in Delhi. The attempt was not to be interrupted. The Rajkumari took it up with rare passion. But she is no scholar of Hindustani. She produces every fortnight what labour of love can. When and if the labour is completed and the time comes to publish the vocabulary in book form, it will undergo revision and errors and defects will be removed. Friends will therefore please continue to send their corrections and suggestions which where acceptable will be adopted at the time of revision. The chief thing to be borne in mind is that the student may have by him a ready though not scholarly companion to refer to in case of need.

New Delhi, 25-10-'46

M. K. G.

A TIMELY INTERVIEW

[The following is the text (as published by the Associated Press of America) of an interview which Gandhiji gave to Mr. Preston Grover on October 21, 1946 at the Sweepers' Colony, New Delhi.]

EAST BENGAL

Mahatma Gandhi declared in an interview today that the Muslim League Ministry in Bengal should be able to control the outbreak of disorders in East Bengal in which a good few thousands have been driven from their homes and an undetermined number killed or kidnapped.

"Control will depend on the Ministry," he said, referring to the Bengal Ministry of which the Muslim Leaguer H. S. Suhrawardy is head. "If the Muslim League wanted to control it, I should think that it could." He recalled that the Muslim League "has the overwhelming percentage of Muslim voters on their side."

He described the Bengal outbreak as "heartbreaking".

His comments on the outbreak of robbing, burning and looting in East Bengal were made in his small room in the Untouchable Colony where he has lived most of the time since the arrival of the British Cabinet Mission in March. He sat on a thin mat with a small sloping desk before him and I sat on the floor while he talked of many things including America, the New Government in India, South Africa and his own health.

He announced again his intention of visiting the troubled areas in Bengal after his meeting on October 23 with Pandit Nehru and the Working Committee where they will discuss problems created by the entry of the Muslim Group into the Central Ministry.

"The fact that I go there will satisfy the soul and may be of some use," he said.

"Will the Muslims listen to you?" he was asked.

"I don't know," he said. "I don't go with any expectation, but I have the right to expect it. A man who goes to do his duty only expects to be given strength by God to do his duty."

To a question as to when this type of disturbances would end in India he replied:

"You may be certain that they will end. If the British influence were withdrawn they would end much quicker. While the British influence is here, both parties, I am sorry to confess, look to the British power for assistance."

RECONSTITUTING THE INTERIM GOVERNMENT

Turning to the affairs of the Interim Government, Mahatma Gandhi regretted the statement of Raja Ghaznafar Ali Khan, Muslim League selection for the Central Government. To Raja Ghaznafar Ali Khan's statement that the League was going into the Interim Government to fight for Pakistan, Mr. Gandhi said:

"That is an extraordinary and inconsistent attitude. The Interim Government is for the interim period only and may not last long. While it is in office it is there to deal with the problems that face the country—starvation, nakedness, disease, bad communications, corruption, illiteracy. Any one of these problems would be enough to tax the best minds of India. On these there is no question of Hindu or Muslim. Both are naked. Both are starving. Both wished to drive out the demon of illiteracy and un-Indian education.

"There is not much time to elapse between this Government and that to be set up by the Constituent Assembly. The time will be shortened if both apply their will to the completion of the work on the Constituent Assembly.

"The Constituent Assembly is based on the State Paper. That Paper has put in cold storage the idea of Pakistan. It has recommended the device of 'grouping', which the Congress interprets in one way, the League in another and the Cabinet Mission in a third way. No law-giver can give an authoritative interpretation of his own law. If then there is a dispute as to its interpretation, a duly constituted court of law must decide it."

"But if the Muslim League do not accept the court interpretation?"

"They cannot impose theirs on others. If they do, they put themselves in the wrong box. The alternative is to come to blows. We are all savages and come to blows often when we don't agree. Yet we are all gentlemen. This is so whether in America or Europe."

MADRAS KHADI PLAN

Asked for his reaction to the decision of the Madras Ministry which has decided against any expansion of the cotton mills industry in the Province in order to promote the Gandhian plan for home spinning and weaving, the Mahatma said:

"I think it is the finest thing going. If you want to follow this logically, then you must follow it through."

Asked whether it would then be logical to 'follow through' to the extent that mills presently in the Province would be stopped, he replied that if in time, through the progressive programme, the mills came to have no customers, then they would quit—"unless they chose to sell outside India."

He assailed the Natal Sugar Mills industry as responsible for bringing indentured Indians there to work and thus creating the segregation problem.

FUTURE OF BRITISH CIVILIANS

To a question as to what would become of Englishmen in the service of the Government of India, Gandhi said:

"I think that India has use for every one of them who is loyal to India and to Indian traditions and conditions and who will be above temptation and corruption. I don't want to say that they should be disloyal to England. That is not the point. They should not be disloyal to India. These things should not conflict, but it has happened in history. Most have come here to serve the country of their birth by exploiting India. That is hypocrisy. It is dishonest. There is no room for dishonesty in any service or outside it."

A MESSAGE TO AMERICA

Asked if he had any message for America, he said:

"Dislodge the money God called Mammon from the throne and find a corner for poor God. I think America has a very big future but in spite of what is said to the contrary, it has a dismal future if it swears by Mammon. Mammon has never been known to be a friend of any of us to the last. He is always a false friend."

Mahatma Gandhi, who has passed 77 years of age, said today that he was "shaken" in his belief that he would live to be 125 years, as he had so often said.

He attributed his uncertainty to loss of "equanimity" a few weeks ago because of an unwarranted use of fruits which his co-workers had contemplated during a ceremony in connection with his birthday. He said that he was feeling as well as he had a right to feel, but was uncertain of attaining his goal of 125.

"I am shaken in that belief, although not because it is illegitimate. But there are well defined limits to the fulfilment of that wish. If you do not fulfil those limits, then you may not attain the wish. For the time being, I feel dislodged. I have not attained the necessary equanimity. I don't want to live 125 years or even one year on nostrums, medicines and that kind of thing. I want to live a life of service in my present way.

"That is possible provided you have equableness under every circumstance. Nothing should irritate you. I am not able to say today that nothing irritates me, or has irritated me."

He said he had thought calmly of living until 125 "until a few days ago," when he had a "rude shock". It was on the occasion of his birthday by the Hindu calendar, which came this year ten days ahead of October 2, the day of his birthday by the ordinary calendar. Rajendra Prasad, the Food Member in the Cabinet, had come to preside at a flag raising in connection with the birthday, and on that occasion, I was told, "monkey nuts, raisins etc. were to be served to the Harijan children and volunteers in the camp."

"I flared up, madly," the Mahatma said. "I lost my balance. You can use any adverb or adjective you like to describe it."

He said he considered it an insult to the Food Minister to give food needlessly in his presence to children and others "who were not in need."

"It was then I discovered my failure. This loss of self-control has cost some years of my life—which it will be possible to regain if I regain my equanimity—or gain it. That is the humbler way to say it."

His anger flared up, he said, because "every morsel of food has to be husbanded. If we do it, there will be no shortage."

"India is the last country in the world that should be short of food if our rulers knew their business—and there was no black-marketing."

THE GOSPEL OF SELFLESS ACTION OR

THE GITA ACCORDING TO GANDHI

By Mahadev Desai

With Gandhiji's Foreword

Price Rs Four, Postage Nine Annas

Available at:

Navajivan Karyalaya, — P. B. 105. Kalupur, Ahmedabad; — 130, Princess Street, Bombay, 2; — 299 Sadashiv Peth, Poona 2; — Kanpith Bazar, Surat; — Lakhajiraj Road, Rajkot; — 641/11 Kucha Mahajani, Chandni Chowk, Delhi.

SINDH BANS SATYARTH PRAKASH

(By M. K. Gandhi)

One had thought that the ban on Satyarth Prakash had lapsed, never to be renewed. But the hope was a dupe. Here is the renewed ban:

"Whereas it appears to the Government of Sindh that Chapter XIV of the book in Sindh entitled "Satyarth Prakash" contains matter which promotes feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects—

"Now, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by Section 99 A of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, the Government of Sindh hereby declares to be forfeited to His Majesty every copy wherever found of the book in Sindh entitled "Satyarth Prakash" written by Swami Dayananda Saraswati and published by Professor Tarachand D. Gajra, M. A. on behalf of the Pratinidhi Sabha, Sindh, Karachi, and all other documents containing copies, reprints or translations of, or extracts from Chapter XIV of the said book on the grounds that in the said chapter the author,

(a) ridicules some of the religious beliefs of the Muslims;

(b) misrepresents and reviles the teachings of the Quran;

(c) attacks and belittles the authority of the Prophet Mohammed; and

(d) generally contains matter calculated to hurt and which hurts, the religious susceptibilities of Muslims."

It is wider in application than before. The lapsed ban made it criminal to print or publish the book containing Chapter XIV. The renewed ban makes the possession of such a copy a crime. I cannot help feeling that the ban is senseless and is calculated to wound the susceptibilities of the Arya Samajists all the world over. Satyarth Prakash enjoys the same status for the Arya Samajists as the Quran for the Muslims and the Bible for the Christians. It is possible to understand a ban on contemporaneous controversial literature, though at this time of the day popular Governments are reluctant even then to use their power. But it seems to be mischievous to ban a scriptural book. I would, therefore, urge the Sindh Government to withdraw the ban in question. The Sindh translation of Satyarth Prakash is not a new publication. Is it to be contended that a book that has passed through so many editions and has been translated in most of the languages of the world has been now found to contain matter "which promotes feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects"? The virtue of toleration is never strained, especially in matters of religion. Differences of religious opinion will persist to the end of time; toleration is the only thing that will enable persons belonging to different religions to live as good neighbours and friends. Religion never suffers by reason of the criticism fair or foul of critics; it always suffers from the laxity or indifference of its followers.

New Delhi, 26-10-'46

HARIJAN

November 3

1946

A WISE STEP

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Shri G. D. Tapase, Minister for Backward Classes (Bombay) has sent me a copy of the Bombay Harijan (Removal of Social Disabilities) Act just passed by the Bombay Legislature. I give below the most relevant clauses :

"3. Notwithstanding anything contained in any instrument or any law, custom or usage to the contrary, no Harijan shall merely on the ground that he is a Harijan —

(a) be ineligible for office under any authority constituted under any law; or

(b) be prevented from —

(i) having access to or using any river, stream, spring, well, tank, cistern, water-tap or any bathing place, burial or cremation ground, any sanitary convenience, any road, or pathway which the members of all other castes and classes of Hindus have a right to use or have access to;

(ii) having access to or using any public conveyance licensed by the Provincial Government or any local authority to ply for hire;

(iii) having access to or using any building, well, cistern or place used for charitable or public purposes maintained wholly or partially out of the revenues of the Province or the funds of a local authority;

(iv) having access to a place of public amusement or a place of public entertainment;

(v) having access to a shop which the members of all other castes and classes of Hindus have a right to have access to;

(vi) having access to or using any place set apart or maintained for the use of Hindus generally but not for the use of any particular section or class thereof;

(vii) enjoying any benefit under a charitable trust created for the benefit of Hindus generally but not for the benefit of any particular section or class thereof.

"3A. No person in charge of any of the places referred to in sub-clauses (i), (iii), (iv), (v) and (vi) or any conveyance referred to in sub-clause (ii), or clause (b) of section 3 shall impose any restrictions on a Harijan or act in a manner as to result in discrimination against him.

"4. No court shall in adjudicating any matter or executing any order recognize any custom or usage imposing any civil disability on any Harijan merely on the ground that he is a Harijan.

"5. No local authority shall in carrying out the functions and duties entrusted to it under any law recognize any custom or usage referred to in section 4.

"6. Whoever —

(a) prevents any person, by reason of his being a Harijan, from having access to or using any of the places referred to in sub-clauses (i), (iii), (iv), (v) and (vi) or any conveyance referred to in sub-clause (ii) of clause (b) of section 3 or from enjoying any benefit under a charitable trust referred to in sub-clause (vii) of clause (b) of the said section or abets the prevention thereof; or shall, on conviction, be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months or with fine which may extend to Rs. 200 or with both.

(b) imposes any restriction on a Harijan or acts in a manner so as to result in discrimination against him or abets any person to impose such restriction or to act in such manner

"7. If any person who has been convicted of any offence punishable under this Act is again guilty of the same offence he shall be punished on the second conviction with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months or with fine which may extend to Rs. 500 or with both and if he is again so guilty shall be punished on the third or any subsequent conviction with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year and shall also be liable to fine which may extend to Rs. 1,000."

The author of the measure has kindly supplied me with the text of his speech delivered on his introducing the measure. From it I note below the most poignant passages.

"This untouchability amounts to irrationality. As soon as a Harijan is born, untouchability applies to him. . . . As a Harijan he is born, as a Harijan he lives all through his life and as a Harijan he dies. . . . However clean he may be, however wise he may be, however superior he may be, to the so-called orthodox Hindus he is not a superior being. The worst of it is that even after his death his dust and ashes are not allowed to mingle with the dust and ashes of the others. . . . The agonies of the Untouchable are further aggravated by the fact that he is treated as an Untouchable not only by the caste Hindus but even by Christians, Muslims and others. . . . To my mind the Bill gives a sanad, a charter, to the Harijans for the exercise of certain social, civic, fundamental rights."

It is worthy of note that the Bill was passed without opposition worth the name, from the Hindu side. That is a good augury for the successful working of the Act. And yet it would not do to be over-sanguine about it. Unfortunately for us, we know that we pass resolutions by acclamation and allow them to become dead letter. The greatest vigilance will have to be exercised by the Government and the reformers in the strict enforcement of the law.

It is no use blinking the fact that the reign of irrationality referred to by the author of the relief bill is still very much to the fore in India. It is not merely in regard to untouchability but many other things. Reformers, therefore, have to watch the demon and utilize their watchfulness, courtesy and tact in dealing with those who are possessed by the demon.

New Delhi, 25-10-'46

PLUCKY STAND

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Papers received from Natal contain among other things a remarkable correspondence between the Mayoral Secretary of Durban and the Natal Indian Congress Secretary. A committee has been formed for making arrangements for the royal visit to Durban proposed to take place in the month of March next year. The main committee has established a sub-committee to deal with the question of joining the coloured and non-European sections of the population of Durban. For the purpose, the Committee invited the Natal Indian Congress to appoint two representatives to serve on the sub-committee so as to give their advice and assistance to enable the Indian community to see Their Majesties and the Royal Princesses.

To this invitation the Joint Hon. Secretary of the Natal Indian Congress (Meer Saheb) sent the following plucky reply on the 11th September last:

"I am directed by my Executive to state that while the Indian community has the greatest respect for Their Majesties and the Royal Princesses, it must be noted that the Indians of South Africa are at the present moment passing through the most critical period in their history. A series of colour discriminatory Acts depriving us of our elementary human rights during the last half century has culminated in the passing of the Asiatic Land Tenure and Indian Representation Act, 1946, passed in the teeth of the strongest opposition ever voiced by our community. The action of the Union Government in thus oppressing a voteless section of its population has plunged the whole Indian community in a state of grave unrest. Recent trends in colour legislation leave no room for doubt as to what is in store for people of colour in this country. The colour of a man's skin has become the sole criterion of judging human qualities.

"As a result of all this the Indian community of South Africa resolved on the 13th June 1946 to launch a campaign of passive resistance against colour discrimination in the laws of this country. This peaceful protest still goes on and 627 of our people, including National leaders like Dr. Yusuf Dadoo and Dr. G. M. Naicker have been sent to jail where they are treated like common criminals. Some of them have served their sentences and have been released after being subjected to inhuman treatment, but hundreds still remain behind prison bars and many more continue to be sent to prison daily.

"While the Indian community finds itself in such an unhappy situation in a part of His Majesty's Empire, it is most unreasonable to expect Indians to participate in any rejoicing or celebrations in honour of Royalty. In the circumstances we cannot but suggest that you advise Their Majesties to postpone their visit until such time as there is peace and goodwill in South Africa between the rulers and the ruled, the White and the non-White, the represented and the unrepresented, the privileged and the under-privileged, so that all who constitute the South African nation can equally share, not only its burdens, but also its rewards."

The Natal Indian Congress Executive is to be congratulated on the reply. The Royal visit can evoke no feeling of joy among those who are fighting for their self-respect in South Africa in the making of which they have had no mean share. Let us hope that the Royal visit will be postponed to a more propitious time when the colour bar has become a thing of the past. Such self-denial on the part of Their Majesties will be quite in keeping with the direction which the King and Queen recently issued to substitute in the National Anthem the following new verses:

"Nor on this land, but be God's mercies known, from shore to shore.

"Lord make the nations see, that men should brothers be,

and form one family, the wide world over."

for the antiquated and indefensible verses:

"Oh, Lord our God arise, scatter his enemies, and make them fall.

"Confound their politics, frustrate their knavish tricks.

"On Thee our hopes we fix, God save us all."

New Delhi, 25-10-'46

UN-ISLAMIC

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Sheikh Saheb Hassan-ud-Din, former President of the All India Majlis-e-Ahrar has issued the following to the Press:

"The news of awful and inhuman occurrences which are coming from East Bengal cannot be welcomed by any true Muslim nor can these deeds be considered praiseworthy or Islamic. Compare the actions of the majority of the Muslims of this territory with the injunctions given to the Chief Commander at the time of leaving Medina by the first Caliph. In these the protection of the civil population, the respect for the chastity of the non-Muslim women and the veneration of the places of worship is dwelt upon. On the other hand abundance of slaughter, arson and forcible conversion of young women and their shutting up in the harems are such shameful actions as cannot be tolerated by any civilized people. I really feel a heart-felt sorrow that this state of affairs is the consequence of political dishonesty and bungling by which, for the attainment of a particular end, the emotions of a people have been infuriated, but eyes have been shut as to the responsibility regarding their control. Certainly no Government can tolerate such a state of affairs for any length of time.

"A question arises at this stage whether the power of the army and the police is its remedy or the mutual respect, confidence and co-operation between the people living in a country. I consider that for the creation of a peaceful and tranquil atmosphere in Bengal, the Muslims of India generally and the Muslims of Bengal especially should come to the front as there is a Muslim majority in the province. To keep the minority satisfied and to prepare them for a life free from worry and tension is the first duty of the Muslim majority.

"Unfortunately in Bengal the leadership of the Muslims has fallen to the lot of a group dissociated from moral virtues and gentlemanliness. In the light of the golden principles inculcated by Islam, other Muslims should come forward and face all the dangers to wean the misled and excited brethren in this region into good and sympathetic neighbours. It is emphasized that the work cannot be accomplished by a free use of rifles and machine guns, nor by turning the non-Muslim houses into forts for protection in self-defence. The common people must be freed from the dominance of the goonda element and the people made to live a peaceful and gentle life by softening their hearts by reason. This can be accomplished better by the Muslims themselves.

"For this end the All India Majlis-e-Ahrar-e-Islam is ready to send its parties of disciplined volunteers at once to the affected places so that the misguided brethren may be brought round to the right path as early as possible and the foundations of a permanent peace be laid in the province.

"I know that in this path there are various difficulties to be faced, but to true Muslims in the carrying out of the duty hardships and tribulations have never counted nor would now be any obstacles. For the accomplishment of necessary arrangements I have started talks with Maulana Ataulah Shah Bukhari, President, All India Majlis-e-Ahrar, Maulana Abul Kalam Azad and Maulana Hussain Ahmed Madni, President, All India Jamiat-ul-ulema-i-Hind. By the grace of God the first batch would be leaving Delhi very soon."

Maulana Saheb himself issued the following four days ago:

"Hopes that Bengal would be able to recover early from the tragedy of the Great Calcutta Killing have been shattered by the terrible events now taking place in Eastern Bengal. The non-official report of arson, murder, pillage and oppression makes horrible reading. The Government communique states that incidents have taken place but does not accept all the details contained in the non-official report.

"The Government account is bad enough, but if these details are proved, it constitutes a terrible indictment of the people responsible for the outrage. All civilized society is based on the protection of the life, property and faith of its members. This applies even more to the protection of the honour of women. Anybody who fails to respect women's honour condemns himself to the charge of bestiality. Minorities have a special claim in all these respects, and it is the duty of the majority so to act that all fears of the minority are allayed. There is neither bravery nor credit if a majority tyrannizes over a minority.

"What is most regrettable is that the name of religion has been dragged in for committing atrocious deeds. There are reports of forcible conversions and forced marriages. No religion, least of all Islam, permits the use of force and violence in matters of faith. The days of the early Caliphs who represented the spirit of Islam in its pristine purity were remarkable for toleration, security and protection guaranteed to minorities like the Jews and the Christians. In fact, the Jews who were prosecuted in all the Christian countries of Europe throughout the Middle Ages, could find safety and security in the Muslim kingdom of Spain and later in Turkey.

"Calumniators of Islam have at times tried to suggest that its phenomenal expansion was due to the use of compulsion and force, but they are refuted by the unequivocal injunction of the Quran that there shall be no compulsion in the matter of faith. Those who act against that teaching are, therefore, guilty of the worst possible disservice to the cause of Islam and the Mussalmans.

"I would urge all Mussalmans and Hindus who love their country and community to ponder calmly and dispassionately on the situation. They have to live together in this land and no Government can tolerate lawlessness and disorder for long. If there are any communal riots, sooner or latter the Government would put them down by the use of the police and if necessary the army. But this would only suppress the disease, not cure it.

"The only method of eradicating these evils is for the majority in an area to guarantee the security of the minority. If, instead of waiting for the police and the army to come and forcibly suppress disorder, responsible men of the major community stand against the miscreants and protect the life, property and honour of the minority in that area, the whole atmosphere of the country will change.

"I would make a special appeal to Muslim brethren in East Bengal. Islam enjoins the protection of one's neighbour as one's religious duty. In Noakhali and other districts of Eastern Bengal, Muslims are in an overwhelming majority. Let men of goodwill in these areas unite and declare that they will protect their neighbours with their lives, and that nobody shall harm a single Hindu except over their dead bodies."

The value of these statements lies not so much in the numbers of Muslims supporting it, but in the fact that these Muslims of undoubted repute in Islam have no hesitation in condemning in unmeasured terms the nefarious deeds of the Muslims in East Bengal. It would be wrong to stigmatize the doers as goondas. These perpetrators of wrong are undoubtedly misled by men who should know better. There is little wonder that the atrocities have taken place when one bears in mind the poison that is instilled into the credulous minds of simple-minded Muslims.

In order to meet the evil, the sane element in Islam must not only speak out its mind, but act accordingly and promptly. It would be interesting to know whether the former President of the All India Majlis-e-Ahrar has been able to send the contemplated body of volunteers to undo the mischief.

New Delhi, 23-10-'46

WEEKLY LETTER

FORCIBLE MARRIAGES AND CONVERSIONS

"What about those who have been abducted or forcibly converted or married under duress against their will?"—the question has been deeply exercising Gandhiji's mind as it must have been of thousands of people. Replying to questions that had been put to him on this subject during the last 24 hours Gandhiji in his prayer address on Sunday the 20th of October said that he had no hesitation in maintaining that forcible conversion was no conversion at all nor abduction a bar to the return to her home of the abducted girl. He held that no purification or penance was necessary in such cases. Hindu society was wrong when it imposed penance on such persons. They had not erred. He had lived for years among Muslims and Christians. They had all assured him that there could be no compulsion in religion. Those who resorted to it did not deserve to be called men of religion. In one sense he and his audience who believed that God was one and that there was no other and who believed that Mohammed was one of His messengers were Muslims. But if any one forced them or him to recite the Kalma they would flatly refuse to obey and take the consequences.

It was his fervent hope that all good Muslims would stand up against the practices reported from the affected area in East Bengal.

A HYSTERICAL DEMONSTRATION

Excitement is natural when passion runs high. But let not our indignation, however righteous, get the better of our logic and reason and lead us into self-contradictory courses. Just before the evening prayer on Thursday last, a crowd of excited youngmen carrying placards and shouting slogans, came to demand redress for East Bengal and invaded the prayer ground in the Sweepers' Colony. They wished their voice to reach the members of the Working Committee which was meeting in his room. Gandhiji told them that it had already reached them. His own place, he knew, was in Bengal. He assured them that the heart of every man and woman who believed in God was bleeding for Bengal. He admonished them for creating a disturbance at prayer-time and asked them to be clam and join in the prayers.

Somebody shouted that they could not pray when their house was burning. Gandhiji made that the subject of his prayer address.

The regular prayer was not recited. Gandhiji said their minds were not calm enough for it. Ramadhuna was sung and as usual had a calming effect on the gathering. Although the regular prayer had to be given up it was in his heart, said Gandhiji, and he was sure it would reach God.

Referring to the remark of the young man who had used the metaphor of a house on fire, Gandhiji said that the duty of the owner of the house or his servant was that when the house was burning he should concentrate on putting out the fire and not lose his head. He alluded to the legend about King Janaka who remained calm and unperturbed when the report was brought to him that his capital was burning, because he had done all he possibly could before and after the accident and therefore could rest secure in his faith in God. If he had lost his head and run to the place of accident he would only have assisted the flames by distracting attention. They were pained at the news of women's suffering in East Bengal, said Gandhiji. But they had so lost their heads that they had themselves failed to be considerate towards the women in the audience. They had scared them away from the prayer ground. They had occupied the place where women sat every day. It was a strange way of demonstrating their sympathy with the outraged womanhood of East Bengal. He hoped that they would see the irony and inconsistency of it.

Our women were easily scared away. It was so more or less all the world over. He wanted our women to learn to be brave. His advice to them to commit suicide rather than allow themselves to be dishonoured had been much misunderstood. They could keep a dagger for self-defence if they wished to. But a dagger was no use against overwhelming odds. He had advised them to take poison and end their lives rather than submit to dishonour. Their very preparedness should make them brave. No one could dishonour a woman who was fearless of death. They had two ways of self-defence—to kill and be killed or to die without killing. He could teach them the latter, not the former. Above all he wanted them to be fearless. There was no sin like cowardice.

But there was a moral code even for those who believed in violence. He did not wish them to copy the methods said to have been adopted in East Bengal. They must have read Maulana Saheb's statement and the statement issued by the ex-President of the All India Majlis-e-Ahrar. They had said that Islam did not permit forcible conversions or abduction and molestation of women.

A SERMON ON FAKIRI

Thakkar Bapa, the near octogenarian, and Shri Balasaheb Kher, the Premier of Bombay, have more than one thing in common. Both have dedicated themselves to the service of lost causes—Harijans, Bhils, Dublas and other Adivasis and so on. Few people are perhaps aware that even while he was practising as a solicitor Shri Balasaheb Kher was rendering yeoman service to the tanners and leather-workers in the suburbs of Bombay. He is also associated with the activities of the Adivasi Seva Mandal in Bombay. Both of them attended Gandhiji's prayer gatherings and at Gandhiji's request sang hymns after the prayer. Shri Thakkar Bapa who seems to have stolen the secret of perennial youth and refuses to allow years to dry up the "genial current of his soul", sang a bhajan whose refrain was: "My mind is set on fakiri." Using that as text of his after-prayer address Gandhiji remarked that if they were to follow out what he had been saying during the two previous evenings and prefer death to dishonour, they had to have the heart of a fakir, not the fakir of old who went about with a staff and a beggar's bowl. That was a time when there were rich and poor. Then there was room for beggars. Society's thought had advanced since, though practice had not kept pace with the thought. The society of the future was to be a society in which there was to be no distinction between rich and poor, or colour and colour, or country and country. In that society what was needed was purity of heart and purity of the spirit. Thakkar Bapa was such a fakir who had dedicated his life to the 'down-trodden classes, Harijans and Adivasis such as Bhils, Santhals, Khasis and those who were described as aboriginals. If the audience could imbibe that spirit, they would never be found guilty of suffering dishonour. He did not have in mind merely the dishonour of women. He would want them to regard black-marketing and cheating the poor also as a species of dishonour and would like them to prefer suicide to dishonour. He knew he horrified some people by expressing these views. But he would be guilty of wrong-doing if he suppressed from them what he believed implicitly. They could not defend their honour, if they had not the purity and austerity of which Bapa had sung so soulfully and of which he was an incarnation.

Equally characteristic of the singer was Tukaram's hymn sung by Shri Balasaheb Kher the evening following. In it the devotee says that he would prefer blindness to vision which could enable him to harbour evil thoughts. Similarly, he would prefer deafness to hearing evil speech. The devotee winds up by saying that his soul yearns only for one thing namely, the name of God.

A DARK DIWALI

The festival of Diwali has come upon a people in mourning. Thousands of homes in Bengal have been darkened by arson, pillage, death of near and dear ones and worse. Fratricide has degenerated to a sub-human level. Things have been done in the name of religion which make one hang down one's head in shame and lose faith in human nature itself. How could there be feasting or illuminations when the atmosphere is rent with wailing, lamentation and woe of helpless and martyred innocence? Starvation and nakedness stalked the land, Gandhiji grimly remarked, in his written message to the prayer gathering on Monday last. On top of that they were quarrelling amongst themselves. He had written and said enough on the subject. Yet he could not help repeating that in these days those who were pure should become purer, those who were sinners should wash off their sins. All should save as much food as possible and spin as much as they could, so that there might be more cloth. To save food was as good as producing it. To spin was to help reduce the nakedness of India. He who was truthful took the world a step forward. "Let these things engage all our energies," he concluded. "It should be clear to us that these are not days of festivity or merry-making."

A NEW YEAR'S MESSAGE

He followed it up with New Year's message on Friday following. "India is passing through a difficult time," he remarked. "As a matter of fact the whole world is passing through a crisis and India is no exception.

"What help do we need to meet this crisis?" he asked. According to the teaching of the Gita the first requisite for spiritual conduct was fearlessness. On New Year Day people made some good resolve. He wanted them to make a firm resolve to shed all fear. Without fearlessness all other virtues were turned into dust. Attainment of truth, or non-violence was impossible without fearlessness.

Fearlessness did not mean arrogance or aggressiveness. That in itself was a sign of fear. Fearlessness presupposed calmness and peace of mind. For that it was necessary to have a living faith in God.

In the song that had been sung before them, Gandhiji concluded, the devotee says that divorced from God, he is a most worthless creature. God is his refuge all along. He who takes refuge in God has no fear.

"EKLA CHALO"

He again emphasized that moral after the evening prayer yesterday, the text for his discourse being provided by Mrs. Nandita Kripalani who tunefully sang Gurudev's celebrated song "Ekla Chalo Re." The burden of that hymn, commented Gandhiji, was that the devotee should have the strength to walk alone in the face of difficulties however great. If he realized that God was ever with him, he would not feel lonely. The bhajan was not meant for evil-doers. They could not walk alone.

The League members, he continued, had come into the Cabinet. He hoped that they had come with the firm resolve to make a success of their business. The Government of the country lay in the hands of these fourteen men. They had to find food and clothing, provide for the education of the crores and fair transport facilities for them and be responsible for peace and order in the country. "Let us all pray that they will be able to work as one team, all their dealings will be above board and corruption and jobbery will be things of the past."

New Delhi, 27-10-'46

PYARELAL

CONTENTS		PAGE
WHO CAN BE A TRUSTEE ?	... M. K. GANDHI	381
A TIMELY INTERVIEW	...	382
SINDH BANS SATYARTH	...
PRAKASH	... M. K. GANDHI	383
A WISE STEP	... M. K. GANDHI	384
PLUCKY STAND	... M. K. GANDHI	385
UN-ISLAMIC	... M. K. GANDHI	385
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	387
NOTES :
ABDUCTED GIRLS	... M. K. G.	381
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI	... M. K. G.	381

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 41

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1946

TWO ANNAS

WEEKLY LETTER

A DILEMMA

Four more days were to elapse before Gandhiji could actually leave for Noakhali. As harrowing details of the happenings in Noakhali trickled through, they added to the existing tension. Bakr Id was close at hand and it was the wish of the Chief Minister of Bengal and his colleagues that Gandhiji should prolong his stay in the city at least till the Id festival was safely over. The root of the trouble, it was represented to him, lay in Calcutta. If the peace could be stabilized in the Metropolis, it would have a salutary effect all over. Gandhiji acquiesced. The whole of India was faced with a difficult situation, that of Bengal was still more so, he remarked in his after-prayer address on Friday last. He had been asked as to what their duty was under the circumstances. According to the scriptures, that was dharma which was enjoined by the holy books, followed by the sages, interpreted by the learned and which appealed to the heart. The first three conditions must be fulfilled before the fourth came into operation. Thus one had no right to follow the precepts of an ignorant man or a rascal even though they commended themselves to one. Rigorous observance of harmlessness, non-enmity and renunciation were the first requisites for a person to entitle him to lay down the law, i. e. dharma.

He had told them what he considered to be his duty. But they had to judge for themselves what their duty was. He did not ask them to follow him but he pointed out to them the way to discover what their duty was in the difficult position they found themselves in. The Gita had told them that if they only waited on God, they would know the way.

A HAPPY INSPIRATION

The visit of the four Ministers of the Interim Government to Calcutta to help further the peace efforts was a happy inspiration. It had a salutary effect and for the time being at least an impending crisis was averted. As their visit coincided with that of the Viceroy it gave rise to all kinds of speculation. Would they ask the Viceroy to intervene or would they exert pressure on the Bengal Governor to make the Bengal Ministry take more effective measures? In a series of after-prayer addresses Gandhiji impressed upon the people how the desire of retaliation and the tendency to look to the Viceroy or the Governor, the military and the police, for protection were incompatible with Independence to which they were all pledged. The Viceroy's powers vested in the Cabinet, the Governor's in the Bengal Ministers. If they wanted lasting peace, it must come from the people's hearts. He had been proclaiming from the housetops that no one could protect them except their own stout hearts. No one could ever dishonour the brave. Retaliation was a vicious circle. If they wanted retaliation they could not have Independence. "Supposing someone kills me, you will gain nothing by killing someone else in retaliation. And, if you only think over it, who can kill Gandhi except Gandhi himself? No one can destroy the soul. So let us dismiss all thought of revenge from our hearts. If we see this clearly we shall have taken a big stride towards Independence."

A PLEA FOR SANITY

The warning came none too early. Already there were rumblings of a storm in Bihar. The cry for reprisals had gone forth. Gandhiji devoted his next address to show the illogicality and irrationality of that cry.

From his earliest childhood he had learnt to dislike the wrong, never the wrong-doer. Therefore, even if the Muslims had done any wrong, they still remained his friends, but it was his duty to tell them that they had done wrong. He had always applied that rule in life with regard to his nearest and dearest. He held that to be the test of true friendship. He had told them on the previous day that revenge was not the way of peace, it was not humanity. The Hindu scriptures taught forgiveness as the highest virtue. Forgiveness became a brave man. A learned Muslim friend had come to see him on the day before. He had told the speaker that the teaching of the Quran was also similar. If a man kills one innocent person he brings upon his head the sin, as it were, of murdering the entire humanity. Islam never approves of but condemns murder, arson, forcible conversions, abductions and the like.

If they could not be generous enough to forgive a person who gave them a slap, remarked Gandhiji, they could give him one in return. He could understand that. But if the miscreant ran away and the injured party slapped his relation or co-religionist by way of retaliation, it was below human dignity.

If someone abducted his daughter, the speaker continued, was he to abduct the abductor's or the abductor's friend's daughter? He held it to be infamous. Muslim friends had condemned such acts in Noakhali. But what was he to say of Bihar, if what he was told was true? He was pained beyond measure to hear of the reported happenings in Bihar. He knew the Biharis well. The cry of blood for blood was barbarous. They could not take revenge in Bihar for the happenings in Noakhali. He was told that some Muslims, who were running away from Bihar in panic, were murdered by Bihari Hindus. He was shocked to hear it. He hoped that the report was not true. It was contended that the Mahabharata advocated the way of retaliation. He did not agree with that interpretation. The lesson of the Mahabharata was that the victory of the sword was no victory. That great book taught that the victory of the Pandavas was an empty nothing.

He told them of the talk he had with Saheed Saheb, their Prime Minister. Years ago he had met him at Faridpur. Saheed Saheb then took pride in calling himself the speaker's son. He knew they had many grievances against their Prime Minister. But the latter had given him his assurance that he wanted peace. It had grieved him to alienate his Hindu friends. He the speaker, could not disbelieve that assurance till it was found to be untrue. He had by giving that assurance put himself to test. The golden way was to be friends with the world and to regard the whole human family like members of one family. He who distinguished between one's own family and another's, miseducated the members of his own and opened the way for discord and irreligion.

RUMLINGS FROM BIHAR

Immediately on seeing the report of the conflagration in Bihar in the Press, Gandhiji sent a wire through the Chief Minister to Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru who with his three colleagues had proceeded to Patna from Calcutta. The latter wired in reply that the situation was tense and grave in many parts but Government were doing their utmost to bring it under control. He himself with his colleague Sardar Abdur Rab Nishtar had decided to stay on in Bihar as long as it might be necessary. "The Congress belongs to the people," commented Gandhiji in his silent day's written message to the prayer congregation. "The Muslim League belongs to our Muslim brothers and sisters. If Congressmen fail to protect Mussalmans where the Congress is in power, then what is the use of a Congress Premier? Similarly, if in a League Province the League Premier cannot afford protection to the Hindus, then why is the League Premier there at all? If either of them have to take the aid of the military in order to protect the Muslim or Hindu minority in their respective provinces, then it only means that none of them actually exercises any control over the general population when a moment of crisis comes. If that is so, it only means that both of us are inviting the British to retain their sovereignty over India. This is a matter over which each one of us should ponder deeply."

He deprecated the habit of procuring moral alibi for ourselves by blaming it all on the goondas. "We always put the blame on the goondas. But it is we who are responsible for their creation as well as encouragement. It is therefore not right to say that all the wrong that has been done is the work of the goondas."

QUIT INDEPENDENCE ?

He repeated the warning on the next day even more forcefully. The Hindus might say : did not the Muslims start the trouble? He wanted them not to succumb to the temptation for retort but to think of their own duty and say firmly that whatever happened, they would not fight. He wanted to tell them that the Muslims who were with him in the course of the day had assured him that they wanted peace. They were all responsible men. They said clearly that Pakistan could not be achieved by fighting. If they continued quarrelling with each other, Independence would vanish into thin air and that would firmly implant the third power in India, be it the British or any other. India was a vast country, rich in minerals, metals and spices. There was nothing in the world that India did not produce. If they kept on quarrelling, any of the big powers of the world would feel tempted to come and save India from Indians and at the same time exploit her rich resources.

They wanted Independence. They were ready to sacrifice their all for the Congress, the organization which had done so much for India. Were they going to undo all that the Congress had done for more than the last 60 years? He had told them they could return blow for blow if they were not brave enough to follow the path of non-violence. But there was a moral code for the use of violence also. Otherwise, the very flames of violence would consume those who lighted them. He did not care if they were all destroyed. But he could not countenance the destruction of India's freedom.

The reports of the happenings in Bihar were awful if true. Pandit Jawaharlal had told the guilty parties that the Central Government would never tolerate such barbarism. They would even use aerial bombing to put it down. But that was the way of the British. The Congress was an organization of the people. Was the Congress to use the foreign mode of destruction against the people whose representative it was? By suppressing the riots with the aid of the military, they would be suppressing India's freedom. And yet what was Panditji to do if the Congress had lost control over the people? The better way, of course, was to give up the reins of Government, if the people were not amenable to discipline and reason.

To retaliate against the relatives of the co-religionists of the wrong-doer was a cowardly act. If they indulged in such acts, they should say good-bye to Independence.

TO BIHAR

Fallen upon evil times as we are, we have to be thankful even for small mercies. Everybody heaved a sigh of relief when it was known that the Bakr Id had passed off quietly all over India. But the news from Bihar had set Gandhiji at war with himself. It was in Bihar that mass Satyagraha in India was born. It was in Bihar that his political career in India had practically commenced. And now it was the people of Bihar, for whom he had indefatigably laboured and who had showered upon him such love and affection — Bihar of Brijkishore Babu and Rajendra Babu — that had gone mad and besmirched the fair name of India. He had declared times without number that if the people of India should run amok against the English, they might find him dead. How could he be a witness to the same in regard to innocent Mussalmans who were after all our countrymen, our own kith and kin. "I went on spare, milkless diet, principally for reasons of health soon after coming to Calcutta. The happenings in the country induced me to prolong it. Now Bihar will send me to complete fast if things do not radically mend," he wrote in a letter to Rajkumari Amrit Kaur on Sunday the 4th. "There will be no time limit," he added. "Do not agitate yourself but be really glad that I feel I have the strength to go through the ordeal and live up to my creed." On the following day in a letter to Pandit Jawaharlal he wrote: "The news from Bihar has shaken me. My own duty seems to me to be clear. A deep bond unites me with Bihar. How can I forget that? If even half of what one hears is true, it shows that Bihar has forgotten humanity. To blame it all on the goondas would be an untruth. Although I have striven hard to avert a fast, I can do so no longer. . . . My inner voice tells me, 'You may not live to be a witness to this senseless slaughter. If people refuse to see what is clear as daylight and pay no heed to what you say, does it not mean that your day is over?' The logic of the argument is driving me irresistibly towards a fast. I, therefore, propose to issue a statement that unless this orgy of madness ceases, I must go on a fast unto death. The fast may have to be delayed for some time. When you asked me at Delhi about it, I had replied that I was not thinking of it at the time. All that has now changed. You can strive with me, if you think differently. Whatever you say will carry weight with me. But knowing as you do my temperament, I am sure you will approve of my proposed step. In any event you will go on with your work without a moment's thought about my possible death and leave me in God's good care. No worry allowed." But neither Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru nor the Sardar to whom he had caused a copy of the letter to be sent tried to dissuade him. They understood better the magnitude of the stake. It was nothing less than India's Independence. Pandit Jawaharlal sent him word from Patna over the telephone that he did not think it was necessary for him (Gandhiji) to go to Bihar at present. He added that his (Panditji's) own place was in Bihar rather than in Delhi. "I am going to stay on here as long as it may be necessary." On the morning of the 6th, just before he was leaving for Noakhali, Gandhiji issued the statement foreshadowed in the letter to Pandit Nehru that has since appeared in the Press.

Chaumuhani, 8-11-'46

PYARELAL

GREEN CROSS SOCIETY

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Red Cross Society one is aware of. It had at one time only military associations and used to have an imperialist flavour. Now it has expanded into civil work and covers every form of first-aid work for the relief of suffering humanity. Nevertheless its activities are largely confined to cities. It has hardly touched Indian life.

England is a country for lost causes: humanitarian and even strange causes. One such is represented by the Green Cross Society for the wild life heritage. Mrs. M. H. Morrison is its Hon. Secretary (41, Asmuns Place, London, N. W. 11).

The Society aims at the U. N. O. identifying itself with it. The following resolution is to be submitted to the U. N. O. for acceptance:

"(a) That U. N. O. ideals should include immediate effort in each country to delimit the area of any suitable National Park incorporating Nature Reserves for the protection of unique and valuable wild life — Flora, Fauna, Avifauna, with the distinctive terrain upon which these depend.

"(b) And, further, that the world at large should consent to an International Park, or World National Park in South America, Africa or Asia. If in Asia, then upon, around or within — it is suggested — the immense mountains encircling Tibet: Britain, China, India, Russia and U. S. A., appointing Custodians and acting as Trustees."

Reasons adduced for inviting the U. N. O. to pass the foregoing resolution are:

"1. That a stand must now be made against the maddening encroachments of Materialism.

"2. That the idealism and realism of the United Nations Organization should include an urge to all the world and to each nation to protect our heritage of Wild Life — its beauty, grandeur and interest — wild birds, wild animals, wild flora (flowers, plants, trees) and wild country or landscape: to protect our heritage wherever possible; and with special care within the Nature Reserves of National Parks.

"3. That the United Nations will jointly set an example to the component nations by claiming its own World Nature Park, or International Park in South America, Africa or Asia. If in Asia, then upon, around, or within the immense mountains encircling Tibet. In this case Britain, China, India, Russia and U. S. A. might appoint Custodians and act as Trustees to prevent disastrous and disfiguring exploitation.

"4. And, further, that such "Far Horizon" can give direction and cohesion to friends, allies, sympathizers and well-wishers gathering in groups along the way for the march and drive on toward the distant goal."

Among the numerous signatories to the resolution are Sir Alfred J. Munnings, President, Royal Academy of Arts, Dame Laura Knight and the world famous George Bernard Shaw.

Mrs. Morrison would like the signatures of leading Indians and other leaders in Asia and Africa. Those who would endorse the resolution should put themselves in communication with Mrs. Morrison.

Sodepur, 2-11-'46

HARIJAN

November 17

1946

A CHALLENGE TO FAITH

[The following are questions put by the Associated Press of America correspondent and Gandhiji's answers (6-11-'46). PYARELAL]

Q. 1. In view of recent Indian history — 1942 unrest, I. N. A. movement and unrest, R. I. N. mutiny, Calcutta-Bombay disturbances, movements in Indian States such as Kashmir and recent communal riots — can it be said your creed of non-violence has failed, insofar as non-violence has not taken roots in Indian life?

A. This is a dangerous generalization. All you mention can certainly be called himsa but that can never mean that the creed of non-violence has failed. At best it may be said that I have not yet found the technique required for the conversion of the mass mind. But I claim that the millions of the 7,00,000 villages of India have not participated in the violence alluded to by you. Whether non-violence has taken roots in Indian life is still an open question which can only be answered after my death.

Q. 2. What should one do in his day-to-day life — that is, what is the minimum programme — so that one can acquire non-violence of the brave?

A. The minimum that is required of a person wishing to cultivate the ahimsa of the brave is first to clear one's thought of cowardice and in the light of the clearance regulate his conduct in every activity, great or small. Thus the votary must refuse to be cowed down by his superior, without being angry. He must, however, be ready to sacrifice his post, however remunerative it may be. Whilst sacrificing his all, if the votary has no sense of irritation against his employer, he has ahimsa of the brave in him. Assume that a fellow passenger threatens my son with assault and I reason with the would-be-assailant who then turns upon me. If then I take his blow with grace and dignity, without harbouring any ill-will against him, I exhibit the ahimsa of the brave. Such instances are of every day occurrence and can be easily multiplied. If I succeed in curbing my temper every time and though able to give blow for blow I refrain, I shall develop the ahimsa of the brave which will never fail me and which will compel recognition from the most confirmed adversaries.

THE SPINNING WHEEL AND THE ATOM BOMB

Mr. Andrew Freeman of the New York Post, who took lessons in spinning with Kanu Gandhi, followed up the subject on return from his assignment in the N. W. F. P. tour with Pandit Nehru by an interview with Gandhiji. He had come to Gandhiji with the assumption that the spinning wheel had a cultural and therapeutic value especially for the malaise from which the West was suffering and which had culminated in the atom bomb.

"Has the spinning wheel a message for America? Can it serve as a counter weapon to the atom bomb?" he asked.

"I do feel," replied Gandhiji, "that it has a message for the U. S. A. and the whole world. But it cannot be until India has demonstrated to the world that it has made the spinning wheel its own, which it has not done today. The fault is not of the wheel. I have not the slightest doubt that the saving of India and of the world lies in the wheel. If India becomes the slave of the machine, then, I say, heaven save the world."

"India," he continued, "has a far nobler mission, viz. to establish friendship and peace in the world. Peace cannot be established through mere conferences. Peace is being broken, as we all see, even while conferences are being held."

"It seems so tragic," remarked Mr. Freeman. "India must lead the way and India is in turmoil. If any country can really take up the wheel, it is India. Do you think it will?"

"It is doing so," replied Gandhiji, "but I confess the process is very slow. Pandit Nehru called Khadi the 'livery of our freedom'. It cannot be that, so long as it is the consolation of cranks and paupers only. There are many things that are not possible for man to accomplish. But everything is possible for God. If there is no living power called God, the spinning wheel has no place."

"Those who spin are not called cranks here?" asked Mr. Freeman with some concern.

"No. I used that expression to anticipate what Americans would say. I allow myself to be called by that name to protect myself. I was described by a friend as a 'practical idealist'."

"As a fairly intelligent human being and an American I can only say," remarked Mr. Freeman. "that though many Americans would call spinners cranks, there are not a few who are thinking hard. Something has to be found, that would save civilization from destruction. Life must be simplified."

"Human personality cannot be sustained in any other way," replied Gandhiji. "I stand by what is implied in the phrase 'Unto This Last'. That book marked the turning point in my life. We must do even unto this last as we would have the world do by us. All must have equal opportunity. Given the opportunity, every human being has the same possibility for spiritual growth. That is what the spinning wheel symbolizes."

"Would you like the American to take to the spinning wheel?" he again asked.

"Yes," replied Gandhiji. "But I do not know whether it will be taken up by anybody before it is well established here. If, on the other hand, India adopts it for clothing itself, I won't need to tell the world. It will adopt it of itself. Today there is such an onslaught on India of Western machinery that for India to withstand it successfully would be nothing short of a miracle. I must confess that today everything seems to point to the contrary. Look at our internecine quarrels."

"But you have not given up hope?"

"I cannot so long as I have faith in that living Power, who is more with us than we know. But let me ask you a counter-question. Has America with all its Mammon-worship abolished unemployment, poverty, corruption, Tammany Hall?"

"The answer is obvious."

Gandhiji continued: "Has England? Has it not still to grapple with the problems that baffle her? It is a very curious commentary on the West that although it professes Christianity, there is no Christianity or Christ in the West or there should have been no war. That is how I understand the message of Jesus. There is much ignorance and superstition in India. But deep down in us is that faith in God—the instinct for religion."

"All newspapermen and others have sensed that," remarked Mr. Freeman. "But I must confess there are moments when I feel it is hopeless. Look at the recent attack on Pandit Nehru in the tribal area from which I have just returned, and the happenings in East Bengal. You too must at times have felt the hopelessness of it all. Would you say Islam has repudiated its teacher as Christianity of today has its Jesus?"

"I have said so openly" replied Gandhiji. "Where is Mohammed and his message which is Peace?" I said recently at a public gathering that if Mohammed came to India today, he would disown many of his so-called followers and own me as a true Muslim, as Jesus would own me as a true Christian."

"How can we bring man back to God or the teaching of Jesus or that of Mohammed?" asked Mr. Freeman next.

"I might give the answer," replied Gandhiji, "that Jesus gave to one of his followers: 'Do the will of my Father who is in Heaven, not merely say Lord, Lord.' That holds true of you, me and everybody. If we have faith in the living God, all will be well with us. I hope not to lose that faith even to my dying day. In spite of my numerous failings and shortcomings of which I am but too well aware, my faith in God is burning brighter every day. If it did not, I would take the same prescription that I gave to women threatened with dishonour and with no prospect of help or escape viz. commit suicide."

"Have you thought of the Charkha as a therapeutic agent?" finally asked Mr. Freeman, reverting to his original theme.

"Yes," replied Gandhiji. "I have read some literature on the subject sent to me by a Glasgow professor. A retired Superintendent of a jail in Bengal too wrote to me describing the use of the spinning wheel for curing lunatics, particularly by virtue of the soothing effect of its rhythmic motion."

"I propose to interpret the Charkha to Americans as a 'thinking machine'," remarked Mr. Freeman in conclusion. "I found while I was attending my spinning class that if alone with it, it made me think. If only Americans could get down to spin they might be able to do some thinking for which otherwise they get no time. It might make them forget the atom bomb."

New Delhi, 26-10-'46

PYARELAL

THREE Fs

Foodgrains, fats and fuel are the triple support of life in the villages. There is at present a scarcity in respect of all the three. A friend sends the following suggestions to meet the triple scarcity. Although meant primarily for the Punjab, they are equally applicable to other parts of India where similar conditions prevail:

1. A lot of land on the banks of rivers and nullahs is at present overrun by rushes and reeds only. If it could be cleared up with the help of the military, it could be used for growing wheat, barley, gram and musoor. The soil is extremely fertile and would yield bumper crops, besides providing straw in plenty for the cattle.

2. Similarly, there is a lot of uncultivated land along the railway lines and roads. If the military department could either itself undertake it or make available for irrigation the equipment or heavy-oil burning vehicles that can be adapted to this use, all this waste land could immediately be reclaimed and brought under cultivation.

3. There are lots of dry areas in the Punjab which are at present under scrub. With a little labour the scrub can be cleared and castor oil grown in its place. It is a very hardy plant and can subsist mostly by drawing moisture from the air. Castor oil is the base par excellence for the manufacture of soap and will serve to relieve the consumption of mustard, gingelli, groundnut and other edible oils which are at present being used in soap manufacture.

4. Owing to scarcity of wood fuel, cattle dung and other farm-yard manure in the villages are used for burning, resulting in the progressive impoverishment of the soil. A systematic effort should therefore be made to have reserves of trees planted along roads and on canal banks to provide fuel and timber for building.

His other suggestions include brick and cement lining for canals to reclaim thousands of acres of land that have become decadent owing to water logging and excessive salinity resulting from seepage, also checking the evil of excessive fragmentation of land which is strangulating cultivation in many parts on the one hand and consolidation of uneconomical holdings, power irrigation and so on.

Sodepur, 30-10-'46

PYARELAL

HINDUSTANI

The question of our national language has become as intricate as that of Swaraj. We did not work out beforehand what problems would face us in the process of building up a free nation. The result is that we have been confronted by a whole lot of them like a legion of ghosts.

For sometime we tried to popularize Hindi as our national language. We said Urdu was included in Hindi and tried to retain the Arabic and Persian words commonly used in Hindi.

Then there came a time when Urdu scholars tried to eliminate all simple Hindi words from Urdu and replace them with Persian and Arabic ones. Ordinary Urdu became Urdu-e-moulla which the man in the street found hard to understand. At the same time some Hindi scholars too set about eliminating commonly understood Persian and Arabic words and replaced them with Sanskrit ones.

We tried to check both these tendencies and simplify the language. But we found that it was not enough. Although Hindi and Urdu to begin with were one and the same, they became two separate and distinct dialects in course of time. Today they are so different from each other that it is not easy at once to fuse them into one.

We have defined the national language as that language which is commonly spoken by the Hindus and Muslims in their everyday life in the villages of North India and which is written in both Nagari and Persian scripts.

Some people ask us to define North India where Hindustani is the language of the people. We have to leave out Bengal, Assam, Orissa, Sindh and Kashmir. That leaves us Punjab, Rajasthan, U. P., Bihar and Mahakoshal. The villagers of these parts do not speak the current Hindi or Urdu. Local dialects are used in some parts.

In Maharashtra, Gujarat, Bengal, Bihar, Karnatak, Tamilnad etc. the same language is spoken in the home and in the bazar. There is some difference between the spoken and the written language, but all can see that basically it is the same language. Things are, however, different when we turn to Hindi or Urdu. The Hindi that Shri Amarnath Jha, Shri Tandonji, Shri Viyogi Hari, Rajendra Babu, Birlaji, Sardar Tara Singhji etc. speak when addressing a meeting is not the same as they speak at home. The tongue in which they speak in their homes is so different from the language of the press and the platform that the latter would hardly be understood in their homes.

The Muslims of the Punjab speak Urdu at public meetings, but in their homes they use a dialect called Derewali or the Punjabi. Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan will speak in Pushtu, Sheikh Abdulla in Kashmiri and Dr. Syed Mahmud in Bihari. This system of having one language for the home and another for outside is not found in any other part of India.

Again in the U. P. a few Hindus while talking among themselves use Hindi, but if a Muslim joins them they will at once revert to Hindustani. The Hindus of U. P. can speak simple Hindi and simple Urdu which they call Hindustani. The result is that the Muslims of the Punjab, U. P. or Bihar, can talk in Hindustani wherever they go. A plausible attempt is sometimes made to show that whilst "Hindustani is the language of the area extending from the Punjab to Bihar, Hindi is an artificial creation of the Hindus, meant to keep the Muslims and Hindus apart". The fact is that the Hindus in these parts are good enough to talk to the Muslims in simple Urdu called Hindustani for the sake of the latter's convenience.

The Hindi which is said to be an artificial language by the Muslims does not belong to a different category in regard to its origin and evolution from other provincial languages like Bengali, Marathi and Gujarati. No one will say that Bengali, Marathi and Gujarati are artificial languages. Then why is Hindi an artificial language? The various provincial languages were evolved in the normal process of history. To separate Hindi from the rest and dub it as artificial is not just.

The only fault of the Hindi-speaking people was that instead of speaking Hindi both in their homes and outside, they spoke their local dialect in their homes. For instance, there are several dialects in Rajasthan. There are two or three dialects in Bihar. Chhatisgadhi and Bundelkhandi are quite different from each other. To call Hindi one's mother tongue and not use it in one's home is indeed anomalous. And if the use of local dialects is to be continued, then, in this age of democracy, simple literature for the common man will also have to be got ready in those dialects.

Difficulties arise when one tries to find out the historical definition of Hindustani. People ask you, "Tell us in which part of India is Hindustani spoken by the common people? Where is the literature in Hindustani? Is there a single daily, weekly or monthly written in Hindustani, the language which is going to be our national language? Leave aside Gandhiji's Harijansevak and Pandit Sundarlalji's Naya Hind. These are creations of yesterday. We have yet to see how North India takes to them."

In order to steer clear of all these complications, we shall reply that in the Punjab, Rajasthan, Mahakoshal and Bihar a language called Hindi is prevalent. There are several newspapers and monthly magazines etc. published in this language and it has a vast literature which will grow from day to day.

In these very provinces Urdu is also prevalent, more in some parts, less in others. Hindus and Muslims publish newspapers etc. in this language, produce literature and serve it with loving affection. The body of Hindi and Urdu is the same but the former derives nourishment from Sanskrit and the latter from Persian and Arabic. Thus both these languages are used in North India. They should be an amalgam of the two and popularized as Hindustani.

This can only happen if Hindi and Urdu are simplified in the first place. They can be simplified to such an extent that but for the script there should be no difference between the two. The process which led to the evolution of Hindi and Urdu as separate languages will have to be reversed in order to reunite them and fuse them into one. If in a sentence of ten words, five words have to be put in brackets to indicate the equivalent in Hindi or Urdu, such a language will not be easy to read. The best thing to do would be to use simple Urdu for such literature as is published in the Persian script and introduce in it commonly understood Hindi words and for the Nagari script use simple Hindi with commonly understood Urdu.

By torturing Hindi and Urdu in order to forcibly amalgamate them, a sort of language may be evolved, but very few will have the patience to read it. Hustling won't quicken the pace. By giving up high pressure and adopting a simple, harmless technique we will be able to draw together the good elements of both. We must leave the two forms to take care of themselves and not rest till an amalgam is produced. If people will do this much, the rest can then be left to time and nature.

Those whose mother tongue is neither Hindi nor Urdu will have to learn both the two scripts.

KAKA KALELKAR

(From the original in Hindustani)

EXCISE DEPARTMENT IN C. P.

The outstill system of liquor production and distribution may be described as one entailing the manufacture of liquor by Government through the agency of licensed manufacturers, who are also retailers of the same. In ordinary times and in ordinary circumstances liquid liquor meant for public consumption is manufactured in a central distillery—either one or two or three—situated in central places in the Province. Under the outstill system, hundreds of such small distilleries are located in various districts, where the restrictions are fewer, and at the same time the liquor produced here is much cheaper than the distillery liquor.

It need not be said here that under the outstill system, the manufacture and consumption of liquor is increased several times the normal consumption for two reasons: (1) the number of those small distilleries is nearly 500 in 1946 as against two or three big distilleries in the Province, (2) the liquor sold in the outstill shops is much cheaper than the distillery liquor. I cannot say how much cheaper, but roughly speaking the price of the outstill liquor is about one fourth or thereabouts of the distillery liquor. Thus it does not require any saying that these two factors lead to an enormously large increase in the liquor consumption.

Unfortunately these outstills are located in the areas inhabited by Aboriginal tribes like Gonds, Korkus, Pardhans etc. They are not located in any other district.

I give below the list of districts and the number of outstills located in each of them in 1946. This is enough to show that the six districts chosen for the purpose are those which are predominated by the Tribal people:

Districts	Outstills
Chanda	81
Mandla	175
Raipur	45
Bilaspur	89
Drug	49
Balaghat	39
Bhandara	5
Total	483

In the year 1939 the number of outstills in the Province was 159. As a result of some change in the policy, probably by the first Congress Ministry of 1937-'39, the number was reduced in the year 1940 to 69 only, and it remained the same the following year 1941. Subsequently, owing to war conditions and perhaps a change in the Excise policy a sudden change for the worse occurred. The number 69 of 1941 went up to the figure 486 or seven times in the year 1945 and it stands at the figure 483 in the current year 1946.

I give below the figures year by year:

1939	159
1940	69
1941	69
1942	207
1943	248
1944	457
1945	486
1946	483

No doubt there has been a plethora of money in the rural parts of the Province due to inflation, and there has been, therefore, a larger provision of liquor. Specially in the Tribal areas, which is a synonymous term for backward areas, a large supply creates a large demand. The greatest sufferers from drink and the increased drink have been the 30 lakhs of Tribal people in the Province. Under the name of want of transport of the distillery liquor, the Tribal or Backward areas are flooded with thousands and lakhs of gallons of cheap liquor as Government policy.

The increase in the excise revenue from country spirit and toddy only due to their enormous liquor and toddy consumption is not quoted by me in detail. But I give below the figures of revenue for three prominent years:

1939	Rs. 33,76,516
1945	1,64,17,653
1946	1,08,89,479 (for the first 6 months only)

Thus it is evident that in 1945 the revenue from country spirits and toddy only had increased five times during the period of six years from 1939. The revenue in 1946, first half year, has been nearly 109 lakhs. Thus during the whole of the year 1946, it may be surmised that the revenue from the country spirit and toddy only will not be less than two crores, or in other words six times the revenue of 1939. The pity of it is, all this increased excise revenue has been got from the pockets of the poorest section of the people viz. the Tribal people, who form about one fifth of the total population.

A. V. THAKKAR

[This is a scandalous abuse of authority for raising revenue. Let us hope that now that the Government is representative in C. P. as elsewhere, this abuse will be set right.]

On the train to Calcutta, 29-10-'46 — M. K. G.]

HOW VILLAGES CAN MANUFACTURE THEIR CLOTH

(By M. K. Gandhi)

After reciting the scheme which I copied in the Harijan of 4-8-'46, from his letter to me Shri Manu Subedar has given his argument in support of the scheme in the Rast Rahbar. I copy below two relevant paragraphs from the interesting article:

"I do not advocate this scheme for any sentimental or spiritual value of hand spinning, though undoubtedly there is some charm in the traditional restoration of the Charkha in every home as it existed for centuries, but because of the stark economic necessity of clothing the rural people, who would otherwise go without this elementary requirement of life. If cotton is put at their door, with the hands, which God has given them and with the skill, which could be acquired in less than a week, they ought to be able to help themselves and save womenfolk from a distressing situation. Not only will the cloth produced under the above scheme be cheaper than the black market, but it would be cheaper than the mill cloth for the reason that many items, which go into the price of the mill cloth to the consumer, would be eliminated. Amongst these are profits of the mills and of the middleman distributor of cloth, the cost of transport of cloth and cotton both ways, the cost of supervision and management, and interest charges and depreciation. Since the labour upto the stage of the yarn would be contributed and the labour charges for weaving would be in kind, even in normal peace time cloth produced under these conditions would be cheaper than factory cloth. For a poor country, what is required is not labour-saving devices, but capital-saving and profit-saving devices, such as is set forth in this scheme.

"I would invite the leaders to note that in the above scheme not only is there co-operation under the guidance of the village Panch and complete self-government, free from any interference of anybody outside, but there is the seed of the kind of economic revolution, which we seek in this country. Millions of men and women, as good as you and me, are not able to get full work for the full year. Their standard of life has been progressively pressed down by forces, which they do not understand. Charity can possibly alleviate their lot, but is bound to pauperize them and take away their self-respect. It is the scheme put forward here, which would enable them to feel that they are getting something for themselves with their own labour. They would not feel hurt about it. The amount of State assistance involved in the proposal is so miserably small per head and is actually lower than the cost incurred by the State for many other purposes for the benefit of other groups and grades of the Indian population. The further advantage in this scheme is that it would be automatic in so far as in some villages it would take root quickly and they may want another bale inside a month. In other villages it might take them three or four months. Some of the villages will probably supply all their requirements by this method in the next few months and may have something to spare, and indeed I would not consider it wrong, if cloth produced under these circumstances after it was found to be in excess of the requirement of the village, which has produced it, was made available in the larger cities for sale to the general public. I would, however, sound a warning that the scheme would break down if individual exploitation is permitted. The surplus should not be dealt with except through the village collectively and should not be brought to the city except through the Government agency, which lands the bale at the door of the village. Nor should it be sold in the cities except at the Government retail shop. In other words, the middleman should never be able to lay his hands on this, or he will destroy what the energy and the co-operation of the villagers has produced, as he has destroyed so many handicrafts and so much that was good in India in the past."

In a letter in Gujarati Shri Subedar says:

"If my scheme is not adopted we may have the sorrowful spectacle of womenfolk going without cover and therefore remaining indoors.

"The hard-heartedness which mill-owners and middlemen have exhibited require some such immediate remedy as I have suggested.

"You have rightly said that the removal of the salt tax will drive home to the millions of villagers the truth that our Sarkar has now the reins of Government in its hands. Will they not also realize this truth if the villages have cotton delivered at their homes on the easiest terms possible so that with a little corporate labour they can clothe themselves without difficulty?"

New Delhi, 23-10-'46

CONTENTS		PAGE
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	401
GREEN CROSS SOCIETY	... M. K. GANDHI	403
A CHALLENGE TO FAITH		404
THE SPINNING WHEEL AND THE ATOM BOMB	... PYARELAL	404
THREE F's	... PYARELAL	405
HINDUSTANI	... KAKA KALELKAR	406
EXCISE DEPARTMENT IN C. P.	... A. V. THAKKAR	407
HOW VILLAGES CAN MANUFACTURE THEIR CLOTH	M. K. GANDHI	408

HARIJAN

12 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 40

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1946

TWO ANNAS

A FRIENDLY OVERTURE

"We are today suffering from a double evil — suppression of facts and concoction," remarked Gandhiji to a Director of an influential British daily paper who had come to see Gandhiji at New Delhi and told him that his paper was anxious to do a friendly turn to India. "It does not pay to emphasize news about riots. My paper does not," he had remarked. But Gandhiji told him that he and his paper would be doing a real service to India not by suppressing relevant facts but by presenting them truthfully, without bias or prejudice. "Truth never damages a cause that is just," he said.

Replying to another question as to when the present trouble would end, Gandhiji remarked that it was bound to go, though he did not see any signs of abatement just yet. "There are interested parties fomenting it."

"Mine may be a voice in the wilderness today," he added, "but I maintain that so long as British troops are here, both Hindus and Mussalmans will continue to look up to them for help and the trouble will continue. Nothing worse could happen to a people struggling to be free."

BRITISH TROOPS AN OBSTACLE

This shocked the British conscience of the friend, "The Britisher would like his troops to go out quicker. Who obstructs?" he asked.

"Who else but the British themselves, unless you can show that it is physically impossible to effect immediate withdrawal," replied Gandhiji.

After some parrying the friend admitted that the British commercial and other vested interests in India and their henchmen stood in the way of their withdrawal. He was, however, still doubtful as to the function of British troops in the maintenance of law and order. "You say, there can be no peace while they are here. Yet everyday there is an increasing demand for them for the maintenance of peace. The complaint is that they are not sufficiently used."

"That is the very reason," replied Gandhiji, "why they should be withdrawn. Their presence, in my opinion, does not act as a preventive measure but becomes punitive. Where they are used to maintain law and order, it is after the trouble. Future historians will bear this out. Order will be restored in East Bengal too. But after what slaughter, what suffering?"

"No," he continued. "The British troops are in India not to protect India but to protect British interests which were imposed on India and which are now so well entrenched that even the British Government cannot dislodge them. The British did not come here as philanthropists, nor is there any altruism in their continued stay here or the continuation of their troops, all that might be claimed to the contrary notwithstanding."

TO END WAR

The conversation then turned on the question of war. "How do you think the succession of wars such as we have witnessed of late can be stopped?" he asked.

"I have no doubt," replied Gandhiji, "that unless big nations shed their desire of exploitation and the spirit of violence of which war is the natural expression and atom bomb the inevitable consequence, there is no hope for peace in the world. I tried to speak out during the war and wrote open letters to the British people, to Hitler and to the Japanese and was dubbed a fifth columnist for my pains."

"But non-violence might take a long time to act. But for the second front there probably would have been no Russia," argued the friend.

"All these are arguments dictated by reason," replied Gandhiji. "It is not permitted me to think in these terms or else I would be denying my faith which today burns brighter than ever in spite of all the bitter experiences that I have had. History provides us with a whole series of miracles of masses of people being converted to a particular viewpoint in the twinkling of an eye. Take the Boer War. It has given to the English language the word 'Maffeking'. People went mad on the Maffeking Day. Yet inside of two years the whole British nation underwent a transformation. Henry Campbell Bannerman became the Premier and practically all the gains of war were given up." The recent Labour victory at the polls was another instance in point. "To me it is a sufficient miracle that in spite of his oratory and brilliance, Churchill should cease to be the idol of the British people who till yesterday hung on his lips and listened to him in awe. All these instances are enough to sustain the faith of a believer like me that when all other powers are gone one will remain, call it God, Nature or whatever you like." His own faith in the triumph of non-violence he likened to that of the witnesses in the Second Coming of Christ. It was to take place within the lifetime of the witnesses though it has taken two thousand years and yet remains a distant dream. Faith could think in no other terms.

Sodepur, 30-10-'46

PYARELAL

HARIJAN SERVICE IN CENTRAL INDIA, 1944-45

So far as Harijan service is concerned, Central India is exceptionally fortunate in its ruling princes, at least three of whom, Maharaja Yeshwantrao Holkar of Indore, Maharaja Jivajirao Shinde of Gwalior and Maharaja Gulabsingh of Rewa, have issued proclamations making a declaration of Harijan rights. The Gwalior proclamation was made on 4th May last year. These three States alone have a population of about 70 lakhs and cover an area of over 50,000 square miles. Thus Central India is more progressive than Kathiawad where in Lathi alone the State has made such an announcement. Is it too much to expect in 1946 that other States will not think it below their dignity but will deem it a privilege to follow the example set by tiny Lathi?

The Indore Branch of the Sangh observed Harijan Day on 1st March 1945, when Harijans were admitted to temples and to two Hindu restaurants. Rai Bahadur Sheth Hiralalji has on behalf of the mill-owners announced that they would spend five per cent of their profits in building houses for the workers including Harijans. Let us hope that this sum which now amounts to about 75,000 rupees will be spent before the next report is out. Land to the extent of 250 bighas was obtained for Harijan settlers. The Branch has established a hand-made paper factory employing several Harijan families and the report under review is appropriately printed on Indore-made paper. It has also installed two new-model oil ghanis worked by Harijans. Every place where waste paper is readily available should have a hand-made paper industry and pure oil ghanis of course must be there in every place, large or small, without exception.

The Gwalior Branch conducted well-directed propaganda at the Sinhastha Fair in Ujjain and received the very welcome support of Acharya Janakidasji of Hanuman-gadhi, Ayodhya, among other Sadhus. Shri Krishnadas Date who had taken to politics last year has returned to his old love, Harijan service, to which he devoted the purse presented to him.

The Bhopal branch under Lala Mulkrajaji and Shri Mehnot financed itself independently of the Central India organization.

Badwani State has declared the public schools and wells open to Harijans and will now, it is hoped, take active steps to implement its declaration. Panna and Ajaygadh authorities must see to it that Mehtars and Basors are permitted to exercise their right of travelling by public buses. Ajaygadh, Bijawar and Charkhari have still to arrange to give maternity leave to Harijan women workers.

In Tikamgadh there was an inter-dinner attended by Savarna Hindus and Harijans.

We shall close this review with a final comment. The statement of accounts shows that while about 11,000 Rs. was spent on schools, hostels, scholarships and medical aid to Harijans, as much as 6,000 Rs. was spent on administration and propaganda. It should be our aim to increase the former figure and reduce the latter from year to year.

V. G. D

PROHIBITION IN C. P.

According to the report of the Excise Commissioner for C. P., in the latter half of 1937, the Congress Government in C. P. decided to adopt the policy of total prohibition of liquor including toddy. To implement this policy the Central Provinces and Berar Prohibition Act was passed and brought into force from April 1938. In the year 1940, the area under Prohibition totalled 22,285 sq. miles representing approximately one-fourth area of the whole province. Prohibition was withdrawn from Katni-Murwara town from 1st January, 1945, but it has been decided by the present Government to reintroduce it with effect from 1st October, 1946 and to extend it, so as to cover an additional total area of 17,360 sq. miles.

The total area under prohibition thus is 39,645 sq. miles and covers a little less than half the province, the total provincial area being 98,369 sq. miles.

During the current financial year Government will lose about 45.5 lakhs on account of extension of prohibition. Government further proposes to make the whole province dry within a very short period, thus sacrificing a revenue amounting to about Rs. 1½ crores from liquor and toddy.

The Excise staff have been instructed to take help, if necessary, from local M.L.As. and Congress Committees in the prevention and detection of offences under the Prohibition Act. To prevent illicit distillation, rules have been framed restricting the possession of mahura, the most-important base for the distillation of liquor, to not more than 5 seers and requiring permits and licenses for its possession and sale in larger quantities. These rules have already been enforced in the Wardha and Akola districts from 15-8-46 and will be extended to other Prohibition areas after experience has been gained of their working in these districts.

Other proposed measures to make Prohibition effective are:

1. To set up new Anti-Drink Committees in dry areas and revitalize old ones and establish temperance committees in the wet areas to prepare the ground for prohibition. It is further proposed to organize caste panchayats and recreation centres to further temperance work.

2. To carry on anti-drink propaganda by magic lantern slides, anti-drink posters and by issuing prohibition literature. A sum of Rs. 50,000 has been sanctioned for this purpose.

3. 75,000 leaflets explaining the provisions of the prohibition Act of 1938 and 15,000 large size notices, specifying the areas in which prohibition has been introduced, have been printed in various languages and supplied to Deputy Commissioners and Railway authorities for exhibition.

4. Government servants addicted to drink have been transferred from 'dry' to 'wet' areas in the interests of effective enforcement of prohibition. The latest report on the effects of pre-war prohibition says :

"General reports indicate that prohibition has undoubtedly improved the moral, physical, social and economic condition of the ex-addicts, although the increased cost of living has counter-balanced the savings from prohibition. They now look healthier and happier and their children are well clad and better fed. The women folk particularly appreciate the benefits of prohibition since it has brought peace and happiness to their homes. They now find their husbands more trustworthy and steadier in their work and they can exert healthier influence on their unintoxicated husbands in dissuading them from becoming victims of other vices."

Let us hope that the rosy picture will now prove rosier because of the advances suggested by the past.

New Delhi, 14-10-'46

PYARELAL

ARTIFICIAL PRACTICES IN AGRICULTURE

It has now become an accepted maxim that for the maintenance of health what is needed is not merely good looking food but healthily grown food. The latter depends on soil health. Just as the quantity of flesh on a person's body is no indication of his health, the size and yield of the crop is no guarantee of its health-giving quality. Artificial manures might produce prize crops in respect of yield and the size of the grain, but the food thus raised is found to be lacking in certain vital principles and animals fed on it show signs of ill health and malnutrition. To the controversy of artificial versus natural manure a valuable contribution has now been made by Friend Sykes, a highly successful Wiltshire farmer in Humus and Farmer (Faber).

Two years ago Farmer Sykes began rearing cows, pigs and race horses that won national fame. A long run of achievement, however ended with disaster.

"To show the way to other breeders," says the News Review "his champion herd of black and white Freisian cattle was submitted to the then new tuberculin test. Two-thirds proved to be diseased, although their milk yields had been phenomenal. Convinced that the trouble was due to crops grown with artificial manures and to the feeding of 'concentrates' instead of natural foods, he sold out.

"Buying Chantry, highest farm on Salisbury Plain's eastern end, Sykes started again in 1936 with a new 'natural' system. Of his thin, poor and rabbit-infested acres a friend said: 'This is not farmland—it is just space-out-of-doors.' But in fewer than ten years the black down land yielded mammoth crops, champion beasts.

"No factory cattle foods, no artificial manure, was Sykes' rule. Early disease on the farm was defeated by ploughing, which brought about health-giving fertility. Subsoiling 2 ft. down released valuable minerals which deep-rooting plants brought to the surface. New methods of haymaking and harvest improved fodder with startling effects on the large livestock population.

"Most important of all, Friend Sykes used humus (scientifically rotted animal and vegetable refuse) to manure his land. The highly complex bacterial life of the soil was enriched, instead of poisoned by chemicals.

"The fashionable approach to soil is not biological but chemical," objects Sykes. "One hundred years of interested propaganda by vested industrial interests has pushed to the fore this 'artificial' view." He contends that artificial manure produces food "which reduces vitality so low that resistance to disease is becoming less and less."

According to him, "we are approaching the greatest of all menaces that have ever faced civilization—the day when soil fertility in almost every country will be a thing of the past."

Here are Sykes' views on other artificial practices which threaten to contribute to this impending doom:

"Artificial insemination may prove to be one of the most mischievous practices that so-called scientific agriculture has ever dared to play with.

"Sewage emptying into the sea is, scandalous and abominable wastefulness. It should return to the land.

"Artificially dried grain often will not make bread. Sterility in women coincides with the introduction of the white loaf. Nothing is so important to man than that he should speedily return to the consumption of the whole wheat bread.

"Burning straw instead of ploughing it back into the soil is one of the most heinous crimes any farmer can commit.

"Many farmers keep cows indoors closely tied by the neck for five months in the year, feed them with concentrated foods the cow's digestion was never intended to cope with, and then expect the beasts to keep healthy."

New Delhi, 14-10-'46

PYARELAL

THE GOSPEL OF SELFLESS ACTION OR

THE GITA ACCORDING TO GANDHI

By Mahadev Desai

With Gandhiji's Foreword

Price Rs. Four, Postage Nine Annas

Available at:

Navajivan Karyalaya, — P. B. 105, Kalupur, Ahmedabad; — 130, Princess Street, Bombay, 2; — 299 Sadashiv Peth, Poona 2; — Kanpith Bazar, Surat; — Lakhajiraj Road, Rajkot; — 641/11, Kucha Mahajani, Chandni Chowk, Delhi

HARIJAN

November 10

1946

TO BIHAR

To Bihar,

Bihar of my dreams seems to have falsified them. I am not relying upon reports that might be prejudiced or exaggerated. The continued presence of the Central Chief Minister and his colleague furnishes an eloquent tale of the tragedy of Bihar. It is easy enough to retort that things under the Muslim League Government in Bengal were no better, if not worse and that Bihar is merely a result of the latter. A bad act of one party is no justification for a similar act by the opposing party, more especially when it is rightly proud of its longest and largest political record. I must confess, too, that although I have been in Calcutta for over a week, I do not yet know the magnitude of the Bengal tragedy. Though Bihar calls me, I must not interrupt my programme for Noakhali. And is counter-communalism any answer to the communalism of which Congressmen have accused the Muslim League? Is it Nationalism to seek barbarously to crush the fourteen percent of the Muslims in Bihar?

I do not need to be told that I must not condemn the whole of Bihar for the sake of the sins of a few thousand Biharis. Does not Bihar take credit for one Brajkishore Prasad or one Rajendra Prasad? I am afraid, if the misconduct in Bihar continues, all the Hindus of India will be condemned by the world. That is its way, and it is not a bad way either. The misdeeds of Bihari Hindus may justify Qaid-e-Azam Jinnah's taunt that the Congress is a Hindu organization in spite of its boast that it has in its ranks a few Sikhs, Muslims, Christians, Parsis and others. Bihari Hindus are in honour bound to regard the minority Muslims as their brethren requiring protection, equal with the vast majority of Hindus. Let not Bihar, which has done so much to raise the prestige of the Congress, be the first to dig its grave.

I am in no way ashamed of my ahimsa. I have come to Bengal to see how far in the nick of time my ahimsa is able to express itself in me. But I do not want in this letter to talk of ahimsa to you. I do want, however, to tell you that what you are reported to have done will never count as an act of bravery. For thousands to do to death a few hundreds is no bravery. It is worse than cowardice. It is unworthy of nationalism, of any religion. If you had given a blow against a blow, no one would have dared to point a finger against you. What you have done is to degrade yourselves and drag down India.

You should say to Pandit Jawaharlalji, Nishtar Sahab and Dr. Rajendra Prasad to take away their military and themselves and attend to the affairs of India. This they can only do, if you repent of your inhumanity and assure them that Muslims are as much your care as your own brothers and sisters.

You should not rest till every Muslim refugee has come back to his home which you should undertake to rebuild and ask your Ministers to help you to do so. You do not know what critics have said to me about your Ministers.

I regard myself as a part of you. Your affection has compelled that loyalty in me. And since I claim to have better appreciation than you seem to have shown of what Bihari Hindus should do, I cannot rest till I have done some measure of penance. Predominantly for reasons of health, I had put myself on the lowest diet possible soon after my reaching Calcutta. That diet now continues as a penance after the knowledge of the Bihar tragedy. The low diet will become a fast unto death, if the erring Biharis have not turned over a new leaf.

There is no danger of Bihar mistaking my act for anything other than pure penance as a matter of sacred duty.

No friend should run to me for assistance or to show sympathy. I am surrounded by loving friends. It would be wholly wrong and irrelevant for any other person to copy me. No sympathetic fast or semi-fast is called for. Such action can only do harm. What my penance should do is to quicken the conscience of those who know me and believe in my bona fides. Let no one be anxious for me. I am like all of us in God's keeping.

Nothing will happen to me so long as He wants service through the present tabernacle.

Sodepur, 6-11-'46

Your Servant

M. K. GANDHI

CRUELTY TO THE DUMB CREATION

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A Mysorean draws my attention to

"a small matter which however literally means life and death to the unfortunate dogs and cattle impounded in the Bangalore City pounds. The conditions there are very bad and the poor animals imprisoned for no fault of theirs are not properly fed nor given water. The lethal apparatus for the killing of dogs is out of order since some time and no attempts seem to have been made to repair it. The crude and cruel method of poisoning the animal is resorted to."

I have had the misfortune to advise the destruction of stray dogs. But that had to be, if men would be so cruel as, out of a false sense of pity, to feed pariah dogs and permit them to become a menace to the neighbouring population. But my advice can never include impounding such dogs and torturing them as those mentioned by my correspondent seem to have been. Humanitarian instinct demands destruction of such animals in an instantaneous and painless manner. I would love to hope that there is exaggeration in what the correspondent has stated. Anyway, the Municipality in question and all such other institutions should mend their manner if they do not satisfy the test demanded by humanity.

On the train to Calcutta, 29-10-'46

VILLAGE INDUSTRIES

(By M. K. Gandhi)

A friend, who is a thinker, writes in connection with village industries :

"Several of your ideas, good in themselves, are presented to the public in such a form as to call for a high standard of ethical sense in the people to whom they are addressed. The fact, however, is that the common man is actuated in his conduct only by necessity or self-interest. An economic order based on an appeal to sentiment or man's "higher nature" alone cannot last. The reason, why after all these years of effort the Khadi programme has failed to show a more substantial result, lies in the fact that your followers, the British vested interests, the mill-owners and cloth dealers were all ruled by their essentially selfish human nature.

"I too want society to be based on high moral principles of honesty and straight dealing between man and man. But I feel that it is not possible till we can eliminate altogether the spirit of commercialism or the profit motive. Just now there are so many control, — control over food, over transport and so on. The time is opportune for a big step forward.

"The Bombay Government has set up a committee for village industries. It includes Shri Manu Subedar, Shri Lakshmidas Asar and Shri Dhotre. My scheme is as follows :

"Taking each village or a group of two or three villages as a unit, the population can be divided into children, women, old people and able-bodied and healthy young folk. Then, there are those who are unfit to put in regular hours of work or work all the year round and lastly the unskilled lot, lacking means or skill or both for the pursuit of any particular vocation.

"Of these the children could easily be made to work for 3 to 4 hours a day, provided the work is not of a fatiguing nature. The remaining half of the day they could have to themselves for attending school.

"The children should be paid at the rate of one anna and the adults four annas per day from the day they begin to work. As they acquire more skill the wages of the children should be increased up to 5 annas and those of the adults up to 8 annas per day.

"The manufacture in one village should be confined to one kind of goods only, so that in about two months' time the workers will acquire skill and avoid making mistakes. The manufactured article should be such as can be utilized locally. The State should arrange to supply raw materials and appoint two or three experts to train the workers. The State should also undertake to popularize the manufactured goods and arrange for their transport and cheap distribution to the poor consumer.

"In the case of many articles thus manufactured the cost will be less than if they were manufactured in big factories. One reason for their cheapness would be the economy in wages. The savings should, therefore, be utilized for the benefit of the workers.

If, as a result of the able-bodied people being more and more absorbed in agriculture, railways and other such occupations, fewer hands are left for cottage crafts and production falls it would not matter.

"This scheme will enable millions to add to their income and make the two ends meet without throwing them on the unemployment dole or loss of self-respect. This social insurance scheme is in accordance with our Indian culture and is based on my personal experience of 35 years. It enables even men and women without any kind of special skill or previous training to eke out a living. Those who wish to earn more can take to more lucrative occupations, if they can find any. But none need feel stranded.

"The children can in this way not only be taught a craft but also get their education in addition. The expense should be charged to the scheme.

"Some features of the scheme are :

"It converts a large proportion of unskilled labour in the country into skilled labour.

"By bringing transport, stores, accounts etc. under State control, we eliminate completely the commercial motive from a vast field of the average man's life.

"One or two crores of men, women and children engaged under this scheme would put 25 to 50 lakhs of rupees into their pockets every day and thus millions will feel the glow of new life.

"The labour that is at present going to waste will be utilized for producing goods worth one to two crores per year.

"The State will obtain raw materials at the cheapest rates by buying straight from the producers. Whatever the State buys would be bought at cost price.

"Should a problem arise calling for consultation with a specialist or a technical expert, his services should be requisitioned for a specified period and he should be paid remuneration for that period.

"The man who is engaged to keep stores, accounts etc. should be made responsible for the education of the children as well. After two or three years, the education should be carried on by the monitor system, that is to say, the senior boys should teach the junior ones and the teacher should teach the senior boys only.

"This teacher should also keep about 50 commonly used drugs. For instance, allopathic drugs like Tr. iodine and ayurvedic drugs like myrobalan supplied by the State to each village, along with the relevant literature. These drugs should be sold to the villagers at the cheapest rates.

"The following is a list of some of the household articles that can be manufactured in this way :

"Cloth	Match stricks
Paper	Empty tins made of
Pencils, pen holders, etc.	cardboard and tin
Wire articles made out	Litho-label printing of pins etc.	Masala
Soap	Papad, wadi, etc.

Earthenware	Cots
Pottery	Combs
Buttons	Brushes, broom-sticks etc.
Glassware — bangles	Pen-knives, table-knives
Registers, book-binding	scissors, etc.
Agricultural Implements	Leather goods
Gur	Ink
Nails	Glue
Hair Oil	Lac
Boot Polish	Musical instruments
Metal Polish	Fountain pens
Phenyle	Bicycles, parts of
Caps	watches
Chappals	Stockings, banyan, etc.
Utensils of daily use	Candles
String, cord, straps	Mirrors
Toys	Play things."
Small wooden articles

The above letter presents a fascinating picture and deserves careful consideration. One thing is obvious. The writer has given the first place to cloth. It is the only article, in the list, of universal use. The various processes involved in Khadi production can engage millions of adults and children and enable them to earn a fair amount. This includes the weavers. The weavers live in the cities today. The middleman exploits them. If the people's Government could supply them with all the yarn they require it would simplify things for them and put their vocation on a stable basis. They would not then need to live in the cities. But this is beside the point.

My difficulties are two. One is whether it is possible to sell hand-made articles as cheaply as machine-made ones. The second is that out of the articles that have been enumerated in the scheme there is hardly any except Khadi which can become universal. They will not, in a large measure, be consumed locally and so will have to be sold in the cities. This is as it should be. The villagers should develop such a high degree of skill that articles prepared by them should command a ready market outside. When our villages are fully developed there will be no dearth in them of men with a high degree of skill and artistic talent. There will be village poets, village artists, village architects, linguists and research workers. In short there will be nothing in life worth having which will not be had in the villages. Today the villages are dung heaps. Tomorrow they will be like tiny gardens of Eden where dwell highly intelligent folk whom no one can deceive or exploit.

The reconstruction of the villages along these lines should begin right now. That might necessitate some modification of the scheme. The reconstruction of the villages should not be organized on a temporary but permanent basis.

My second difficulty is that in the scheme under question craft and education have been divorced from each other. Craft, art, health and education should all be integrated into one scheme. Nayi Talim is a beautiful blend of all the four and covers the whole education of the individual from the time of conception to the moment of death. Therefore,

I would not divide village uplift work into watertight compartments from the very beginning but undertake an activity which will combine all four. Instead of regarding craft and industry as different from education I will regard the former as the medium for the latter. Nayi Talim therefore ought to be integrated into the scheme.

On the train to Calcutta, 29-10-'46

(From the original in Gujarati)

WEEKLY LETTER

THE CALL

After much travail, deep thought and considerable argument, Gandhiji fixed the date of his departure for Bengal for the 28th of October. "I do not know what I shall be able to do there," he remarked in the course of an argument with a very esteemed friend, who made an eleventh hour effort to dissuade him from setting on such a long journey just then. "All I know is that I won't be at peace with myself unless I go there." He then went on to describe the "power of thought". "There are two kinds of thoughts—idle and active. There may be myriads of the former swarming in one's brain. They do not count." He likened them to unfertilized ova in a spawn. "But one pure, active thought, proceeding from the depth and endowed with all the undivided intensity of one's being, becomes dynamic and works like a fertilized ovum." He was averse to put a curb on the spontaneous urge which he felt within him to go to the people of Noakhali. Speaking before the evening prayer gathering on Sunday last at New Delhi, Gandhiji said that he was leaving for Calcutta the next morning. He did not know when God would bring him again to Delhi. He wanted to go to Noakhali from Calcutta. It was a difficult journey and he was in poor health. But one had to do one's duty and trust in God to make the way smooth. It was not that God necessarily and always removed hardships from one's path, but He did always enable one to bear them.

He did not want anyone to come to the station, he continued. India had given him enough affection. It needed no further demonstration.

He was not going to Bengal to pass judgment on anybody. He was going there as a servant of the people and he would meet Hindus and Muslims alike. Some Muslims looked upon him as an enemy today. They had not done so always. But he did not mind their anger. Were not his own religionists angry with him at times? From the age of seventeen he had learnt the lesson that all mankind, be they of any nationality, colour or country were his own kith and kin. If they were God's servants, they had to become servants of all His creation.

It was in that capacity that he was going to Bengal. He would tell them that Hindus and Muslims could never be enemies, one of the other. They were born and brought up in India and they had to live and die in India. Change of religion could not alter that fundamental fact. If some people liked to believe that change of religion changed one's nationality also, even they need not become enemies.

Sufferings of women had always melted his heart. He wanted to go to Bengal and wipe their tears and put heart into them, if he could. In Calcutta he would try to see the Governor and the Prime Minister Mr. Suhrawardy and then proceed to Noakhali.

He was proceeding under auspices none too happy. He referred to the ugly demonstrations before the Viceroy's House on the day before when Jawaharlalji and some of his colleagues in the Interim Government were abused and insulted. It was bad. Why should such things happen when the two parties, the Muslim League and the Congress, had formed a coalition at the Centre? Praise or abuse made no difference to the leaders who wanted to serve them to the best of their ability. But the people had to behave.

"Let us all still pray and hope that all the Ministers will be able to work as a team. If India can speak with one voice, she will be the greatest country in the world and every true Indian must wish her to attain that status."

THE JOURNEY

The journey proved to be as strenuous as some of us had feared. It was after 12 years that he was travelling on this line. Naturally there were mammoth crowds at all big stations on the way—at Aligarh, Tundla, Cawnpore and Asansol, the whole platform was like a swarming ant-heap of humanity. They clambered on the roof, choked the windows, broke glass, smashed in the wooden shutters and yelled and shouted till one's ears split. They pulled the alarm chain again and again to obtain darshan, making it necessary to disconnect the vacuum brakes. The station authorities tried to drive them away by directing against them the water hose from the hydrant overhead. It made no difference to them; only it flooded the compartment! At Aligarh the rags in the grease box of the brake began to smoulder and emit volumes of thick, acrid smoke which filled the compartment. It was with the utmost difficulty that one could manage to get through the crush and report to the railway authorities. If fire had broken out one wonders how the party could have got out of the compartment at all with all the luggage.

Later in the evening Gandhiji sat with his fingers thrust into his ears to keep out the shouting and the din when they became unbearable. And yet when it was suggested to him that he might allow the lights in the compartment to be switched off to discourage darshan-seekers he turned down the suggestion. The only way he could requite the simple faith of the masses was, he said, by serving them with his last drop of energy and never to put his personal comfort before what he considered to be his duty towards them.

AT SODEPUR

Gandhiji's train arrived at Liloah five hours behind time. From the station he was driven straight to Shri Satish Das Gupta's Khadi Pratisthan Ashram at Sodepur which he reached at 5-30 in the evening. A crowd of several hundred had gathered there from round about Sodepur for the evening prayer. The advertised time for prayer was 5-30 p. m. But Gandhiji was able to attend prayer only after 7 p. m. In his prayer discourse he told them how he had never dreamt that he would be coming back to Sodepur so soon. But God had sent him in their midst again. The train had arrived five hours late. He called that also the will of God. No doubt there were big crowds at Aligarh, Khurja Road, Cawnpore and other big stations and the train was detained as a result. But he literally believed in the old maxim that not a blade of grass moves but by His will. Some might say that all his talk about God was a make-believe which he used as a blind to cover his hypocrisy. All he could say was that he was not aware of any hypocrisy in himself. He spoke what he believed to be God's truth. As regards his future plan Gandhiji said that he had come to Calcutta with a blank mind to do His will. What he would do here and how long he would stay in Bengal he did not know. God would indicate to him the next step on reaching Noakhali.

The next day, owing to his engagements in Calcutta with H. E. the Governor and the Prime Minister, he had again to apologize to his audience for coming late to the prayer meeting. "He who gives all his time to the service of the people, his whole life is an unbroken round of prayer," he remarked. He did not however, wish thereby to diminish the importance of fixed time for prayer. There was a difference between community prayer and individual prayer. He was sorry, he had not been able to do justice to the former. It was generous of them to have waited for him with such exemplary patience and it filled him with joy and faith and confidence in regard to the task before him. But he could not forgive himself so easily for his failure to keep punctually the prayer appointment with them.

He drew their attention to the Viceroy's appeal, issued in the name of the whole Cabinet of which the Viceroy was the President and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru the Vice-President and which consisted of both Congress and Muslim League representatives. In that appeal the Viceroy, on behalf of himself and his colleagues, had appealed that the two major communities of India should bury the hatchet and become one at heart. The unity should be genuine, not imposed by the military or the police. The speaker had come to Bengal for that purpose. He took no side. He could only side with truth and justice. He wanted them all to pray with him for the establishment of heart unity between the Muslims and the Hindus. Their name would be mud in the world, if they degraded themselves by fighting among themselves like wild beasts.

A FAINT RAY OF HOPE

Speaking on the third day of his arrival here, Gandhiji was able to tell his audience at the evening prayer meeting that he saw a faint ray of hope that peace might be established between the communities. He had met H. E. the Governor, and his Chief Minister twice. The visit to the former was more or less in the nature of a courtesy call. His main business was with the Chief Minister. As one drove through the deserted streets with garbage heaps, at places banked up nearly two feet high against the pavements, and entire rows of gutted shops and burnt-out houses in the side-streets and by-lanes as far as the eye could reach, one felt overcome with a sinking feeling at the mass madness that can turn man into less than the brute. By its very nature this state of things cannot last. Human nature won't stand it. As Abraham Lincoln said, "You cannot fool all the people for all time." There seem to be indications that the people are already beginning to sicken of the carnival of blood and bestiality. They had been fighting amongst themselves like wild beasts. The fighting could do no good to Calcutta, Bengal, India or the world.

To make peace between quarrelling parties, the speaker said, had been his vocation from his early youth. Even while he practised as a lawyer, he tried to bring the contending parties together. Why could not the two communities be brought together? He was an optimist, he said.

From them he wanted only this help: that they should pray with him that this mutual slaughter might stop and the two communities might really become one at heart. Whether India was to become divided or remain one whole could not be decided by force. It had to be done through mutual understanding. Whether they decided to part or stay together, they must do so with goodwill and understanding.

He could never be party to anything which might mean humiliation or loss of self-respect for anyone. Therefore any peace to be substantial must be honourable, never at the cost of honour.

In this he was only echoing the sentiment expressed to him by a prominent Muslim who had seen him. This friend had said: "We must reach our goal, whatever it might be—Pakistan or undivided India—without bloodshed or fighting. I go so far as to say that if it cannot be reached except through bloodshed and fighting amongst ourselves, it is not worth reaching."

THE GRIM RESOLVE

"Why do you want to go to Noakhali? You did not go to Bombay, Ahmedabad or Chhapra, where things have happened that are infinitely worse than Noakhali. Would not your going there only add to the existing tension?" Was it because in these places it was the Muslims who had been the sufferers that he did not go there and would go to Noakhali because the sufferers there were Hindus?—he was asked by a Muslim friend the other day. Gandhiji's reply was that he made no distinction between Hindu and Muslim. He would certainly have gone straight to any of the places mentioned by the friend, if anything approaching what had happened at Noakhali had happened there and if he felt that he could do nothing without being on the spot. It was the cry of outraged womanhood that had peremptorily called him to Noakhali. He felt he would find his bearings only on seeing things for himself at Noakhali. His technique of non-violence was on trial. It remained to be seen how it would answer in the face of the present crisis. If it had no validity it were better that he himself should declare his insolvency. He was not going to leave Bengal until the last embers of the trouble were stamped out. "I may stay on here for a whole year or more. If necessary, I will die here. But I will not acquiesce in failure. If the only effect of my presence in the flesh is to make people look up to me in hope and expectation which I can do nothing to vindicate, it would be far better that my eyes were closed in death." He had mentally prepared himself, he added, for abstention from the Congress session, if necessary. He had similarly disengaged himself mentally from all his responsibilities in respect of Sevagram and Uruli—his latest love.

But with all his impatience to get to Noakhali he had to announce on the fourth day at the prayer gathering that he would not be able to leave for Noakhali on the next day as he had intended to. The Prime Minister had sent him word that the train for him could not be arranged so soon. He hoped to leave on Saturday or Sunday. In the meantime he would try to render whatever service he could to the metropolis.

Sodepur, 1-11-'46

PYARELAL

Dola Palki

The Dola Palki dispute in Garhwal should be set at rest seeing that the U. P. Government are said to have passed orders for prompt measures to be taken against those who would interfere with Harijan bridegrooms riding on ponies or using any other form of conveyance in spite of custom to the contrary trotted out by objectors.

On the train to Calcutta,
29-10-'46

M. K. G.

CONTENTS		PAGE
A FRIENDLY OVERTURE	... PYARELAL	389
HARIJAN SERVICE IN CENTRAL INDIA, 1944-45	... V. G. D.	390
PROHIBITION IN C. P.	... PYARELAL	390
ARTIFICIAL PRACTICES IN AGRICULTURE	... PYARELAL	391
TO BIHAR	... M. K. GANDHI	392
CRUELTY TO THE DUMB CREATION	... M. K. GANDHI	392
VILLAGE INDUSTRIES	... M. K. GANDHI	393
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	394
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI— INSTALMENT VI	...	397
NOTE :
DOLA PALKI	... M. K. G.	396

HARIJAN

12 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 42

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1946

TWO ANNAS

WEEKLY LETTER

Gandhiji would have liked to travel to Noakhali by ordinary third class, but the Bengal Government had arranged a special train for him. They had also deputed Shamsuddin Saheb, the Minister for Commerce, Nasrullah Khan Saheb, Parliamentary Secretary to the Chief Minister and Abdur Rashid Saheb to accompany him. To look to his convenience and ensure Government help whenever it might be required, the Chief Minister had himself intended to accompany him, but was held up in Calcutta. There were huge crowds at Kushtia, the Home of Shamsuddin Saheb, Hacpur and Goalando. At all these places Gandhiji delivered brief addresses, explaining the object of his visit.

From his early youth he had made friends with people of all communities. He had never made any distinction between Hindu, Muslim, Parsi and others. When as a boy he attended the High School at Rajkot, he did not remember a single occasion of a quarrel with a Muslim or Parsi boy in the school.

During the Khilafat days he used to say that Maulana Shaukat Ali carried him in his pocket. He did not wish to fight. At the same time he could never countenance peace at the cost of honour or self-respect. He stood for peace, honourable to both the parties. If any party did wrong, he would not hesitate to tell it plainly to their face. That was the duty and privilege of friendship. He had been a fighter all his life and he would fight oppression and wrong with his last breath, no matter who the wrong-doer was.

He recalled his previous visit to East Bengal during the Khilafat days. Those were the days of Hindu-Muslim unity, when the Muslims vied with the Hindus in claiming the Congress as their own. Congress belonged to all. But he was not going to East Bengal this time as a Congressman. He was going there as a servant of God. If he could wipe away the tears of the outraged womanhood of Noakhali, he would be more than satisfied.

They were all Indians — Hindus and Mussalmans. They could not live in Independent India as enemies. They had to be friends and brothers. He would go to Noakhali and stay there till Hindus and Muslims again lived as blood brothers that they were, and must always remain.

He was hopeful that his tour would have a good effect and the Hindu-Muslim unity of the Khilafat days would come back. In Khilafat days no one talked of dividing India. Now they did so. But partitioning, even if it was desirable, could not be so achieved. It could not be retained except by the goodwill of the people concerned. The Bengal Ministers had assured him that the Muslims did not believe in getting Pakistan through force.

At Goalando, Gandhiji took steamer and steaming down the Padma 80 miles reached Chandpur at evening. Chandpur, the native place of that super-octogenarian Congressman the late Babu Hardayal Nag, called up poignant memories. Two deputations, one of Muslim Leaguers and the other of Hindus, met Gandhiji here. But I must reserve an account of these meetings till my next. At 2 p. m. the party reached Chaumuhani where Gandhiji has fixed up his headquarters for the present.

THE ALL-HEALING BALM

At Laksham there is a refugees' camp. And it was to the refugees that Gandhiji's words were addressed through the crowd that had assembled at the platform to hear him and have his darshan. "I have not come on a whirlwind propaganda visit. I have come to stay here with you as one of you. I have no provincialism in me. I claim to be an Indian and therefore a Bengali even as I am a Gujarati. I have vowed to myself that I will stay on here and die here if necessary, but I will not leave Bengal till the hatchet is finally buried and even a solitary Hindu girl is not afraid to move freely about in the midst of Mussalmans."

"The greatest help you can give me is to banish fear from your hearts," he told them. And what was the talisman that could do that for them? It was his unfailing mantra of Ramanama. "You may say you do not believe in him. You do not know that but for His will you could not draw a single breath. Call Him Ishwar, Allah, God, Ahura Mazad. His names are as innumerable as there are men. He is one without a second. He alone is great. There is none greater than He. He is timeless, formless, stainless. Such is my Rama. He alone is my Lord and Master."

He touchingly described to them how as a little boy he used to be usually timid and afraid of even shadows and how his nurse Rambha had taught him the secret of Ramanama as an antidote to fear.

"When in fear take Ramanama. He will protect you," she used to tell him. Ever since then Ramanama had been his unfailing refuge and shelter from all kinds of fear.

"He resided in the heart of the pure always. Tulsidas, that prince of devotees, whose name has become a household word among the Hindus from Kashmir to Cape Comorin as Shri Chaitanya's and Shri Ramkrishna Paramahansa's in Bengal, has presented the message of that name to us in his immortal Ramayana. If you walk in fear of that name, you need fear no man on earth, be he a prince or a pauper." Why should they be afraid of the cry of 'Allaho Akbar'? The Allah of Islam was the protector of innocence. What had been done in East Bengal had not the sanction of Islam as preached by its Prophet.

Who could dare to dishonour their wives or daughters, if they had faith in God? He, therefore, expected them to cease to be afraid of Mussalmans. If they believed in Ramanama they must not think of leaving East Bengal. They must live where they were born and brought up and die there if necessary, defending their honour as brave men and women. "To run away from danger, instead of facing it, is to deny one's faith in man and God and even one's own self. It were better for one to drown oneself than live to declare such bankruptcy of faith."

Why should they feel secure only under the protection of the police and the military? "If you ask the military, they will tell you that 'God' is their protector. I want you, therefore, to be able to tell Shamsuddin Saheb that you no longer need the protection of the police and the military which may be withdrawn, but would rather put yourself under the protection of Him, whose protection they all seek."

CHAUMUHANI

Chaumuhani has normally a population of not more than 5,000. But at the evening prayer gathering that was held here in the compound of the Hindu Vidya Mandir on the first day of Gandhiji's arrival, there was a gathering of not less than 15,000. Large numbers had come from places round about Chaumuhani. About eighty per cent of these were Muslims. The town itself has remained free from the worst communal excesses, but round about it the whole area has been ablaze. Speaking after the prayer Gandhiji poured out his soul to the gathering, particularly to the Muslim section, for over twenty minutes. He told them how he had toured East Bengal in the company of the Ali Brothers during the Khilafat days. In those days the Muslims felt that all that he said was right. If the Ali Brothers went into a women's meeting they went blindfolded. He was allowed to go with his eyes open. Why should he blindfold himself when he went to his mothers and sisters? He had no desire to go among the purdah ladies. But the Ali Brothers insisted that he must go. The women were eager to meet him and they were sure that his advice would do good to them. In South Africa he had lived in the midst of Muslim friends for twenty years. They treated him as a member of their family and told their wives and sisters that they need not observe purdah with him. He had become a barrister in England but what was a dinner barrister worth? It was South Africa and the struggle that he had launched there that had made him. It was there that he discovered Satyagraha and civil disobedience.

He had come to them in sadness. What sin had Mother India committed that her children, Hindus and Muslims, were quarrelling with each other? He had learnt that no Hindu woman was safe today in some parts of East Bengal. Ever since he had come to Bengal, he was hearing awful tales of Muslim atrocities. Saheed Saheb, their Prime Minister, and Shamsuddin Saheb had admitted that there was some truth in the reports that one heard.

"I have not come to excite the Hindus to fight the Mussalmans. I have no enemies. I have fought the British all my life. Yet they are my friends. I have never wished them ill."

He heard of forcible conversions, forcible feeding of beef, abductions and forcible marriages, not to talk about murders, arson and loot. They had broken idols. The Muslims did not worship them nor did he. But why should they interfere with those who wished to worship them? These incidents are a blot on the name of Islam. "I have studied the Quran. The very word Islam means peace. The Muslim greeting 'Salaam Alaikum' is the same for all whether Hindus or Muslims, or any other. Nowhere does Islam allow such things as had happened in Noakhali and Tipperah." Saheed Saheb and all the Ministers and League leaders who met him in Calcutta had condemned such acts unequivocally. "The Muslims are in such overwhelming majority in East Bengal that I expect them to constitute themselves the guardians of the small Hindu minority. They should tell Hindu women that while they are there, no one dare cast an evil eye on them."

It was time for namaz when Gandhiji finished speaking. As usual his address was going to be explained to the gathering in Bengali when there was a clamour from the Muslim section of the audience for a brief recess to enable them to perform their namaz and come back in time to hear the translation in Bengali. This was done. The namaz was performed in one corner of the compound after which they all came and heard the address rendered into Bengali by Shri Satish Babu.

A MUSLIM SPEAKS

Shamsuddin Saheb addressed the gathering after the prayer on the next day. He spoke in forceful Bengali for over half an hour. He warned them that if the issue of Pakistan versus Hindustan was going to be settled by mutual slaughter of the Hindus where Muslims were in a majority and vice versa there would be neither Pakistan nor Hindustan, but only slavery. If they really wanted Pakistan, it was up to the Muslims of Noakhali who constituted seventyfive per cent of the population to guarantee the safety and security of the twentyfive per cent Hindu minority living in their midst. No Government that was worth its name could stand silently by and let the majority community oppress or exterminate the minority community. Neither the Muslim League Government of Bengal nor the Congress Government of Bihar could tolerate what had happened of late in these provinces respectively. By doing what they had done in Bengal they had driven the Muslim League Ministry to employ the military against the civil population of East Bengal with all that it implied. The Muslim League has never sanctioned arson, looting, abduction, forcible conversion or forcible marriages. All that was un-Islamic. The Quran clearly stated that there can be no compulsion in religion. He was there to declare to them that a forcible conversion was no conversion at all nor had a forcible marriage any validity and these mock marriages and conversions should be deemed to have made no difference whatsoever in the status quo of the persons concerned. Force settled nothing. America had devised the Atom Bomb and with its help crushed its opponents. But had it brought peace to the world? In Noakhali it was the Mussalmans who had oppressed the Hindus and it was up to them to wipe off that blot from the fair name of Islam. He appealed to the Mussalmans of Noakhali to set the Hindus at their ease and restore confidence to them so that they might return to their homes with a feeling of security. They could have no heart to cast their lot with the miscreants who must pay the penalty for their crimes and it was the duty of the Muslims in general to help the authorities to trace them and bring them to book. What was done was done. He hoped that out of the ashes of the conflagration the edifice of abiding Hindu-Muslim unity would be rebuilt in Bengal.

That night Shamsuddin Saheb with his colleagues from Calcutta and some local prominent Muslims saw Gandhiji and discussed the question of refugees, particularly the question of persuading them to return to their respective villages. One of the friends suggested that in order to restore confidence Hindu leaders should reinforce the appeals of the Muslims to the refugees to go back to their villages. Gandhiji replied that that was not the right way to dispel the apprehension and distrust of the Hindus which was well-grounded. He would not be able to advise them to return to their homes unless there was at least one good Hindu and one good Mussalman for each village who would stand guarantee for their safety and security and who would be prepared to immolate himself before a hair of their head was touched. It was for the Muslim League leaders who were also members of the Government to say whether such men would be forthcoming. There was no other way to restore confidence after all that had happened. They all agreed with Gandhiji's suggestion and said that they would do their best to give effect to it.

Chaumuhani, 10-11-46

PYARELAL

STORY HOUR

(Concluded from page 302)

[For IV I am indebted to Spanhoofd's Lehrbuch der Deutschen Sprache (Heath) V. G. D.]

IV

One pleasant morning in spring a merry shepherd boy was tending sheep in a valley and singing and dancing for joy. The King who was hunting in the neighbourhood saw him and asked him how it was that he was so merry. The boy did not recognize the King and answered, "Why should I not be merry, since our King is not richer than I am?"

"Really?" exclaimed the King. "Tell me then all the things you possess."

"The sun we see every day in the beautiful blue sky," said the boy, "shines for me as brightly as for the King. Mountains and valleys display the same beautiful green, the same lovely flowers bloom for me as well as for him. I have enough to eat every day. I have clothes which cover me and I earn as much as I need. Can you tell me what more the Prince has?"

The King was pleased with the answer and said, "You are right, my boy, and you can tell other people that the Prince himself told you so."

V

When Socrates was kicked by a rude citizen in the presence of his friends, one of them expressed surprise at his not resenting the insult. Socrates replied, "Shall I then feel offended and ask the magistrate to avenge me if I also happen to be kicked by an ass?"

A WIFE SPINNING FOR HER HUSBAND

Pandit Banarasidas Chaturvedi, the veteran journalist, has been editing an excellent Hindi magazine Madhukar devoted to the conservation of Bundelkhand folk-lore and to the prosecution of the Constructive Programme. In its issue No. 4, volume III, Madhukar quotes from Swatantra an old song of Bundelkhand in which a wife whose husband is away from home addresses her friend as follows:

जेजु वे ने मिले ननदीके बीरना

खोजी डारी बस हमार ।

अपने अँगनवामें रहँटा बरौती

कतती नन्दो सूत ।

अपने पियाको पगरी बनौती

जैसो कमलको फूल ।

मरी सभामें सोहे स्वामीकी पगरी

सेजियामें बिन्दिया हमार ॥

"Friend, I do not meet my sister-in-law's brother and my life is ebbing away. If he was here, I would place my wheel in the courtyard and spin fine yarn. This yarn I would get woven into a turban for my beloved, as beautiful as the lotus flower. With that turban on his head he would make his mark in the King's court, and the auspicious tilak (mark) on my forehead would thus become fully significant."

Hardly a hundred years ago wives not only fed their husbands, they also clothed them. As Shri Muralidhar of Dinod in Hissar District tells us (Madhukar IV, 23-24), in his childhood he had seen all the girls of the neighbourhood meet together and spin while basking in the sun in the cold season. These meetings were called dhupia from dhup (heat), and the girls sang as they plied their wheels. They held similar meetings at night at other times of the year and these evening sessions were called suratia (सुरतिया). Even now a spinning wheel is an essential part of the bride's dowry in Hissar, and the bride is dressed in hand-spun and hand-woven cloth.

V. G. D.

HARIJAN

November 24

1946

A VENTURE IN FAITH

Early in the morning on Wednesday last Gandhiji announced to his party an important decision. He had decided to disperse his party detailing each member, including the ladies, to settle down in one affected village and make himself or herself hostage of the safety and security of the Hindu minority of that village. They must be pledged to protect with their lives, if necessary, the Hindu population of that village. His decision was not binding on any one of his party, he said. Those who wanted to, were free to go away and take up any of his other constructive activities. "Those who have ill-will against the Mussalmans or Islam in their hearts or cannot curb their indignation at what has happened should stay away. They will only misrepresent me by working under this plan."

So far as he was concerned, he added that his decision was final and irrevocable and left no room for discussion. He was going to bury himself in East Bengal until such time that the Hindus and Mussalmans learnt to live together in harmony and peace. He would deprive himself of the services of all his companions and fend for himself with whatever assistance he could command locally.

That evening he explained his idea further to the party. A discussion followed in which Shri Thakkar Bapa and Shrimati Sucheta Kripalani also took part. His ahimsa would be incomplete, he argued, unless he took that step. Either ahimsa is the law of life or it is not. A friend used to say that the Ahimsa Sutra in Patanjali, Ahimsa Pratishthayam Tatsannidhau vairatyagah (अहिंसा-प्रतिष्ठायां वैरत्यागः) was a mistake and needed to be amended and the saying Ahimsa Paramodharmah (अहिंसा परमो धर्मः) ought to be read as Himsa paramodharmah (हिंसा परमो धर्मः); in other words, violence, not non-violence was the supreme law. If at the crucial moment he lost faith in the law of non-violence, he must accept the deceased friend's amendment which appeared to him to be absurd.

"I know the women of Bengal better than probably the Bengalis do. Today they feel crushed and helpless. The sacrifice of myself and my companions would at least teach them the art of dying with self-respect. It might open too the eyes of the oppressors and melt their hearts. I do not say that the moment my eyes are closed theirs will open. But that will be the ultimate result, I have not the slightest doubt. If ahimsa disappears, Hindu Dharma disappears."

"The issue is not religious but political. It is not a movement against the Hindus, but against the Congress," remarked one member of the party.

"Do you not see that they think that the Congress is a purely Hindu body? And do not forget that I have no water-tight compartments such as religious, political and others. Let us not lose ourselves in a forest of words. How to solve the tangle—violently or non-violently—is the question. In other words, has my method efficacy today?"

"How can you reason with people who are thirsting for your blood? Only the other day one of our workers was murdered," said another of the company.

"I know it," replied Gandhiji. "To quell the rage is our job."

Another member asked whether it was right to invite people to return to their villages under the prevailing conditions which involved a considerable amount of risk. Gandhiji's reply was that there was no harm in asking them to return to their villages if the Muslims of that village collectively guaranteed their safety and their guarantee was backed by one good Hindu and one good Mussalman, who would stay with them in that village and protect them by laying down their lives, if necessary. If there was that much guarantee, the refugees ought to return to their homes and face whatever risk there might be. If they had not the courage to live on these terms, Hinduism was doomed to disappear from East Bengal. The question of East Bengal is not one of Bengal alone. The battle for India is today being decided in East Bengal. Today Mussalmans are being taught by some that Hindu religion is an abomination and therefore forcible conversion of Hindus to Islam a merit. It would save to Islam at least the descendants of those who were forcibly converted. If retaliation is to rule the day, the Hindus, in order to win, will have to outstrip the Mussalmans in the nefarious deeds that the latter are reported to have done. The United Nations set out to fight Hitler with his weapons and ended by out-Hitlering Hitler.

"How can we reassure the people when the miscreants are still at large in these villages?" was the last question asked of Gandhiji.

"That is why," replied Gandhiji, "I have insisted upon one good Mussalman standing security along with a good Hindu for the safety and security of those who might be returning. The former will have to be provided by the Muslim Leaguers who form the Bengal Government."

In a letter to a friend Gandhiji wrote from Dattapara: "The work I am engaged in here may be my last act. If I return from here alive and unscathed, it will be like a new birth to me. My ahimsa is being tried here through and through as it was never before."

Khajirkhil, 16-11-'46

PYARELAL

OVERPROOF IS ADMISSION

It was at Chandpur too that Gandhiji first directly contacted the local Muslim mind in regard to the East Bengal happenings. A deputation consisting of several prominent Muslim Leaguers of Tipperah District met him at Chandpur on board the Kiwi before he entrained for Chaumuhani on the morning of the 7th November.

One of them remarked that no disturbances had taken place in Chandpur Sub-Division. The rush of refugees to Chandpur was due to panic caused by false press propaganda. The number of Hindus-killed by the Muslims was only 15 while double that number of Muslims had died as a result of firing by the military who were mostly Hindus.

Another member of the deputation who is an M. L. A. was even bitter about the fact that the Hindus were still evacuating and their rehabilitation was being 'obstructed' by the Hindu workers who encouraged them to migrate in order to discredit the Muslim League Government and paralyse the administration.

Shamsuddin Saheb who was present at the meeting along with Nasrullah Saheb and Abdul Rashid Saheb interposed that it was no use isolating Chandpur Sub-Division and ignoring what had taken place elsewhere in the district. Equally irrelevant to their present argument was their reference to the military firing.

When they had finished, Gandhiji replying remarked that if what they had said was to be taken at its face value, then it amounted to this: that the Muslims had committed no excesses. The mischief had all been provoked by the excesses of the police and the military who were harassing the Mussalmans and it was they, therefore, who together with the panic-mongering Hindus were the real culprits. That was too big a pill for anybody to swallow. Why had it become necessary to call the military, if no disturbances had taken place? A deputation of 20 to 25 Hindus had a meeting with him in the morning. They had told him awful tales of what had happened in Tipperah and Noakhali. Similar tales have been pouring into his ears ever since he had set foot in Bengal. Even Muslim Leaguers had admitted that terrible things had been done. They disputed the figures which they feared were exaggerated. He was not concerned with numbers. Even if there was a single case of abduction, forcible conversion or forcible marriage, it was enough to make every God-fearing man or woman hang down his or her head in shame.

He was not going to keep anything secret, Gandhiji proceeded. He would place all the information which he might receive before the Ministers. He had come to promote mutual good-will and confidence. In that he wanted their help. He did not want peace to be established with the help of the police and the military. An imposed peace was no peace. He did not wish to encourage people to flee from their homes in East Bengal either. If the mass flight of the refugees had been deliberately planned to discredit the Muslim League Ministry, it would recoil on the heads of those who had done so. To him it seemed hardly credible. He suggested that the right course would be to make a clean breast of the matter. "It is far better to magnify your own mistake and proclaim it to the whole world than leave it to the world to point the accusing finger at you. God never spares the evil-doer."

The gentleman who had spoken first thereupon admitted that he had heard of some cases of arson and looting but the looting had taken place after the occupants had fled. The deserted houses offered too strong a temptation to the hooligans.

"But why should people flee from their homes?", asked Gandhiji sharply. "People do not do so normally. Everybody knows that an unoccupied and unprotected house is bound to be looted by some one or the other. Would any one risk the loss of all he owns just to discredit the League?"

Still another member of the deputation remarked that only one per cent of the people had indulged in acts of hooliganism. The rest of the 99 per cent were really good people and in no way responsible for the happenings.

"That is not a correct way of looking at it", replied Gandhiji. If 99 per cent were good people and had actively disapproved of what had taken place, the one per cent would have been able to do nothing and could easily have been brought to book. Good people ought to actively combat the evil, to entitle them to that name. Sitting on the fence was no good. If they did not mean it, they should say so and openly tell all the Hindus in the Muslim majority areas to quit. But that was not their position as he understood it. The Qaid-e-Azam had said that the minorities in Pakistan would get unadulterated justice in Pakistan. Where was that justice? Today the Hindus asked him if Noakhali was an indication of what they were to expect in Pakistan. He had studied Islam. His Muslim friends in South Africa used to say to him: "Why not recite the Kalama and forget Hinduism?" The speaker used to say in reply that he would gladly recite the Kalama but forget Hinduism never. His respect and regard for Hazrat Mohammed was not less than theirs. But authoritarianism and compulsion was the way to corrupt religion, not to advance it.

Shamsuddin Saheb agreeing with Gandhiji quoted a verse from the Quran to the effect that there can be no compulsion in religion. He had told the Mussalmans, he said, that if they wanted Pakistan they must mete out justice to the minority community and win its confidence. "By doing what you have done you have killed Pakistan," he had told them.

"Mr. McInerny, the District Magistrate of Noakhali, in a leaflet he has issued," resumed Gandhiji, "has said that he will assume, unless the contrary is conclusively proved, that anyone who accepted Islam after the beginning of the recent disturbances was forcibly converted and in fact remained a Hindu." If all the Muslims made that declaration it would go a long way to settle the question. "Why should there be a public show of it, if anybody genuinely felt inclined to recite the Kalama? A heart conversion needs no other witness than God." Mere recitation of the Kalama while one continued to indulge in acts which are contrary to elementary decency was not Islam but a travesty of it. That reminded him of the Plymouth Brothers who invited him to embrace Christianity because then he would be free to do anything he liked since Christ redeemed the sins of those who accepted Him. As against that there was the conclusive verse of the New Testament. "Not everyone who says Lord, Lord, with his lips comes to Me." It was therefore up to the leaders of the Muslims to declare that forcible repetition of a formula could not make a non-Muslim into a Muslim. It only shamed Islam.

"All that has happened is the result of false propaganda," argued one member of the deputation who had not hitherto spoken.

"Let us not make a scapegoat of false propaganda," replied Gandhiji. "False propaganda would fall flat if we are all right."

Finally one of the deputationists remarked that they were all prepared to go into the interior along with the Hindu leaders to restore peace and confidence but the latter distrusted them.

Gandhiji replied that that did not matter. He would gladly accept their offer. "You and I will visit every village and every home in the interior and restore peace and confidence."

Dattapara, 15-11-'46

PYARELAL

AMONG THE SAVARAS OF ORISSA

Swami Bhairavanand, originally a native of Jodhpur, has made his home in the uplands of the Cuttack District amongst an aboriginal tribe, called Savaras, in the valley of the Goddess Chandi at a place called Chandikhoh. He has built a temple to the goddess in this forest land where he prays morning and evening. At his instance a Marwadi friend has built a Dharmashala and a temple to Mahadeva. Water is brought by means of a 3" pipe into a pucca tank from a natural hill-spring near by. It is delightfully refreshing to bathe in this pure water which is made to flow from the mouth of a cow.

About three years ago a small primary school was started for Savara children and Brahmachari Bhairavanand was put in charge of it. I could not have believed that progress was possible in the short space of three years, until I had seen things for myself.

Those who are familiar with the Ramayana will remember the Sabari woman who was simple enough to offer plums to Shri Ramachandra after having tasted them herself first to see whether they were sweet. The Savaras in Cuttack District are simple folk, literally hewers of wood. Their women go, axe in hand, to the forest and carry faggots of wood to sell as fuel in the neighbouring villages for a mere four or six annas at the most. This constitutes their daily earning. The children do all kinds of household work such as city folk cannot imagine and the parents do not, therefore, like to spare them to go to school. Swami Bhairavanand has, however, made himself so popular with the Savaras by serving them in times of distress and getting occasional good meals from his rich friends for this under-nourished humanity that he has succeeded in drawing their children to his school. To the children also he gives parched rice at midday and clothes twice a year. From 30, three years ago, the number of children attending school has risen to 100. A single teacher institution has developed into a three-teacher one with good buildings for both school and residential staff.

The free hostel started for the Savara boys, however, had to be closed because the parents could not afford to spare the children for 24 hours. "When we hire our boys of 10 and 12 years of age to the agriculturists, they are not only fed and clothed free, but they get from Rs. 2 to Rs. 5 p.m. in addition. If you want to keep our boys as boarders, you must be prepared to give them something more than free food." This argument is only too true from the point of view of the poor Savara. He reminds me of the arguments propounded by the late Maharaja of Darbhanga against Shri Gokhale's Bill for Free and Compulsory Education in 1911. He said that the agriculturists simply could not afford to spare their children for schooling for even four or five years on end. It can easily be understood how much harder it is for the Savaras, who do not own an inch of land and have to depend on cutting fuel and grass for their livelihood throughout the year, to spare their children.

The real fact is that the devoted services of thousands are required in order to make useful citizens of the lakhs of children of the 25 million aboriginal population in India. Some Congress Provincial Governments have opened a special portfolio for the aboriginal tribes. It should be the rule and not the exception to spend lakhs every year for the education and material advancement of these backward people, in particular those sections who live in unapproachable hills and forests. Out of the total population of 25 million 20 reside in the uplands and plains of India and the remaining five in secluded forests and on hills. They need befriending.

A. V. THAKKAR

[The moral is that basic education, i. e. education through craft, is the education that India needs.

—M. K. G.]

New Delhi, 25-10-'46

NOTICE

Change of address to be effective for the week should please be intimated to us by Tuesday. Please quote the subscriber number with the intimation.

Please note that change of address cannot be effected twice within one month.

Subscribers are not enrolled for a period of less than six months.

MANAGER

PROHIBIT HORSE RACING AND FOOTBALL POOLS

The gambling instinct has its roots deep down in human nature. There were gamblers in Vedic times to whom the Rishi Kavasha Ailusha addresses the following words in the Rig Veda (X-34-13):

अक्षैर्मा दीव्यः कृषिमित् कृषस्व ।

"Do not gamble with dice, but till the land."

In Mahabharata times Kshatriyas were addicted to gambling and were foolish enough to believe that they were bound to accept an invitation to gamble even as they must accept a challenge to fight.

अहूतो न निवर्तेत द्यूतादपि रणादपि ।

But things improved later on with the result that on the eve of British rule gambling like drink presented nothing like a problem to our people.

The British brought horse races and the stock exchange with them to India. As betting is not much in evidence in our country, we are not in a position to pronounce judgment on its evils. But competent British observers believe that "betting is an even more serious social evil than excessive drinking" (Hugh Martin's Christ and Money, S. C. M.). In view of the magnitude of the evils of the practice generally and the grave risk of placing temptations in the way of the weak, Mr. Martin holds that even trivial and occasional bets are undesirable. He thinks that the arguments for total abstinence in the case of drinking apply more strongly to betting. The Church should not give countenance to the habit by organizing raffles in connection with bazaars. Ballots for hospitals are undesirable and "destroy the true spirit of giving for the sake of the worthiness of the object to be helped."

The case against betting is summarized by Mr. Martin in a single sentence: "In any legitimate transaction there is a benefit to both the parties; in betting one of the parties gains without giving anything in return." Betting differs from stealing only in the circumstance that in betting the loser agrees to pay if he loses. A person has the right to get money by giving something equivalent in work or otherwise or by receiving a gift. But betting means getting something for nothing; it is gain through the loss of another.

So also gambling whether in games or on the stock exchange is undesirable. "Difference" transactions are definitely unsocial in character. "The gambling habit, persisted in, produces a feverish passion as harmful as drug-taking and as destructive of the sense of right and wrong."

In a story by Conrad the hero won a big prize in a lottery. Having won once he was sure he could win again. The Passion captured him. "The lottery is eating him up," remarked a friend of his. Mr. Martin testifies that it is the story of thousands.

Mr. Martin's conclusion is that whether for his own sake or for the sake of others, betting is not one of the ways in which a Christian will spend his money.

If Christians have learnt in the school of experience that betting is bad for them, it is equally bad for Hindus and Mussalmans. Hindus are bound to follow the Vedic advice already cited, and Mussalmans dare not disobey the Holy Quran, which condemns gambling as strongly as it condemns drink:

"They question thee about strong drink and games of chance. Say: In both is great sin." (II-219)

"O ye who believe: Strong drink and games of chance . . . are an infamy of Satan's handiwork."

"Satan seeketh only to cast among you enmity and hatred by means of strong drink and games of chance, and to turn you from remembrance of Allah and from (His) worship." (V-90)

(M. Picthall's translation)

Even J. M. Keynes the hard-headed economist suggested prohibition of book-makers along with that of alcoholic spirits.

Our ministers would do well to accept Keynes' suggestion as well as resist the invasion of English football pools, which has just commenced as may be gathered from newspaper advertisements.

V. G. D.

AN INDIAN VILLAGE FIGHTS AGAINST FAMINE

The village of Belgatta is a typical village of the Deccan plateau of South India. It is some four hundred miles from Cape Comorin, over a hundred miles from the west coast, over two hundred miles from the east coast. Its annual rainfall is just above 20 inches. It is a purely agricultural village, relying for food in normal times mainly on its own production of millets and pulses, eked out with mango fruit and bananas, to say nothing of toddy tapped from the toddy-palm. The peasants also grow some cotton, ground-nuts, castor and other oils, and by selling these products they can purchase cloth, rice and a few other things: not much to live on, but enough to thank God for.

"In normal times." But how rarely, when everything depends on the weather, does the normal occur! 1945 was exceptionally abnormal. The rains completely failed. The crops withered in the ground. Even the trees lost their leaves. The cattle starved. Owing to short-sighted war-time policies, the surplus from earlier years had all been disposed of. The village had nothing to fall back on, and nothing to look forward to except famine. For nearly twelve months the spectre of starvation has been round the corner; sometimes it was within whispering distance. Today it is further off, almost banished. Not only are the new crops good, and ripe for harvest; but the State Government (Belgatta is in the State of Mysore) after a perilously slow and unconvincing start, has taken adequate measures to feed the needy people only just in time.

Mysore alone could not do it. Though the administrative machinery had to be devised on the spot, the food had to come from much further off. Scarcely fifty miles away, in western Mysore, where three or four times as much rain comes each year from the west as Belgatta gets, and where the rains did not fail in 1945, there was a small surplus of rice, but this was soon consumed. Belgatta, like hundreds of other Deccan villages, had to look for imports from distant parts of India, and from overseas. This whole village whose inhabitants have never seen the sea, or a great city, or a great river, has been saved by the united action of the continents. Let us go inside the village food depot and see. Here are bags of wheat flour from Australia. Here is wheat from Canada, and maize from the United States. A recent assignment, which the local officials greeted with curiosity, was "Egyptian millet". When the bags were opened, it proved to be not some unknown and unpalatable cereal, but their own familiar jowary or jola, whose tall, brown seed heads are now nodding hopefully in the fields and all round the village. And there is a recent arrival of Burma rice. Surplus States and Provinces of India, such as Assam, Hyderabad and Sind, have sent their quotas. All the world has been conspiring together to save the humble villagers of Belgatta from starvation.

I was meditating on this theme as we drank cups of coffee in the postmaster's house. But he gave me something else to meditate on, with the sudden observation: "The benevolence of God has sent us the rain at the right time." As the minds of these people have turned from dread to hope, they give thanks, not mainly to Australia or America or Egypt or Burma, but to God.

There are other things I like about this village. Two shy and solemn little girls have been presented to me, who have been cured, one of skin trouble, the other of indigestion, since they had regular multi-vitamin pills. They are typical of many others. And then one of my companions introduces me to a young medical graduate who is living in the village (too many Indian medical men confine their attentions to wealthy fee-paying townspeople), who I find is serving five villages. "Has the food shortage increased the incidence of disease?" I ask him. "Of course it has," he replied, "especially skin diseases and intestinal troubles." When, an hour later, a medical man of higher rank, with three years' army service in Europe, assured me that he had been touring all the worst districts for five weeks and had found no evidence of any increase of disease—"unless possibly a little skin trouble"—I had no difficulty in deciding which to believe when the doctors disagree. To be fair to the senior doctor, perhaps one should add that he and his staff had cause for congratulation that in a time of semi-starvation, when in many places it was hard to find any good water to drink, no major epidemic has broken out.

Belgatta is a village of hope. And it is surrounded by other villages of hope today. But that district is not all India. The millets, which are the staple food of these Deccan villages, are almost ripe. But a couple of hundred miles away live millions of Madras peasants, still surviving on a precariously inadequate ration, who are short of rice. Even in Mysore they plead "Send us more rice." The South Indian rice will not be ready to market till January or February, 1947. Meanwhile fitful rice shipments come from overseas—Burma, Siam, Java; and some from Assam, Orissa or else-where in North India. Can that uncertain stream be kept up, and amplified with sufficient wheat from America, to keep these millions alive? We do not know. And behind South India and its continued need lies a big question mark covering Bengal. Increased distribution of milk and multi-vitamins to children all over South India is helping to hold back the threat of famine. Last week I saw scores of little children in Travancore lapping up their milk and coming back for more. But the cry is still for "Rice and wheat, rice and wheat". Men of every nation can still be persuaded to help their unseen brothers in distant lands—thanks be to God, who moves their hearts and minds and wills.

Chitaldrug, September, '46

HORACE ALEXANDER

[I would only add to this thanksgiving essay that God helps those who help themselves. The villagers must be taught to grow more food themselves. Then help from outside will come and will be welcome. — M. K. G.]

On the train to Calcutta, 29-10-'46

THE GOSPEL OF SELFLESS ACTION OR

THE GITA ACCORDING TO GANDHI

By Mahadev Desai

With Gandhiji's Foreword

Price Rs. Four, Postage Nine Annas

Available at:

Navajivan Karyalaya, — P. B. 105, Kalupur, Ahmedabad; — 130, Princess Street, Bombay, 2; — 299 Sadashiv Peth, Poona 2; — Kanpith Bazar, Surat; — Lakhajiraj Road, Rajkot; — 641/11 Kucha Mahajani, Chandni Chowk, Delhi.

CONTENTS		PAGE
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	409
STORY HOUR	... V. G. D.	411
A WIFE SPINNING FOR HER HUSBAND	... V. G. D.	411
A VENTURE IN FAITH	... PYARELAL	412
OVERPROOF IS ADMISSION	... PYARELAL	413
AMONG THE SAVARAS OF ORISSA	... A. V. THAKKAR	414
PROHIBIT HORSE RACING AND FOOTBALL POOLS	... V. G. D.	415
AN INDIAN VILLAGE FIGHTS AGAINST FAMINE	HORACE ALEXANDER	415
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI	— INSTALMENT — VII	417

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad
Subscription Rates — INLAND: One year, Rs. 6; Six months, Rs. 3; FOREIGN: One year Rs. 8 or 14. sh. or £. 3.

ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI INSTALMENT — VII

ENGLISH	HINDUSTANI
Bicephalous adj.	दो-सिरा । दो-सरा
Bicycle n.	बाइसीकल, पैरगाड़ी । बाइकल, पायरी
Bid v.	बोली लगाना; कहना; हुक्म या आदेश देना । बोल लگانा; کہنا, حکم یا آدش دینا
Bide v.	देखो Abide । Abide
Bidet n.	आवदस्तकी चौकी । آب دست کی چوکی
Biennial adj.	हर दो साल । ہر دو سال
Bier n.	जनाजा । جنازہ
Biflorate adj.	जिस पर दो फूल हों । جس پر دو پھول ہوں
Biform adj.	जिसके दो रूप हों । جس کے دو روپ ہوں
Bifurcated adj.	जिसकी दो टहनियाँ हों, दो-शाखा, दुसँगा । جس کی دو ٹہنیاں ہوں, دو شاخا, دو سانگا
Big adj.	बड़ा, भारी, लम्बा-चौड़ा; महत्त्वपूर्ण, जरूरी । بڑا, भारی, لمبا-چوڑا; مہتر پورن, ضروری
Big with child	हामिला, गर्भिणी । حاملہ, گرہینی
Big business n.	पूँजीवालों या सरमायादारोंका कारबार । پونجی والوں یا سرمایہ داروں کا کاروبار
Big game n.	बड़े जानवर (शेर, हाथी वगैरा)का शिकार । بڑے جانور (شیر, ہاتھی وغیرہ) کا شکار
Big wig n.	बड़ा आदमी । بڑا آدمی
Big words n.	डोंग, शेखी । ڈینگ, शेखी
Big, to get too, for one's boot v.	असिमांनी वन जाना, सिर फिर जाना, दिमाग चढ़ जाना । ایمانی بن جانا, سر پیر جانا, دماغ چڑ جانا
Big, to talk v.	डोंग मारना, शेखी बघारना । ڈینگ مارنا, शेखी बघारना
Bigamist n.	दो जोरुवाला । دو جوړو والا
Bight n.	खलीज, खाड़ी । خلیج, کھازی
Bigotry n.	कट्टरपन, हठधर्मी, तअस्सुव । کٹرن, ہٹہ دمری, تعصب
Bike n.	देखो Bicycle । دیکھو
Bilateral adj.	दो पहलू, दो तरफ़ । دو پہلو, دو طرفہ
Bile n.	सफ़रा, पित्त; चिड़चिड़ापन । سفرہ, پیت, چڑچڑاپن
Bilge n.	जहाजका पेंदा; पीपेका, पेट । جہاز کا پندا; پیپے کا پٹ
Bilge water n.	गन्दा पानी, जो जहाजमें जमा हो जाता है । گندہ پانی, جو جہاز میں جمع ہو جاتا ہے
Bilingual adj.	दो ज़बानों या भाषाओंमें लिखा या कहा हुआ; दो ज़बानोंमें बोलनेवाला; दो ज़बानों या भाषाओंका । دو زبانوں یا بھاشاؤں میں لکھا یا کہا ہوا; دو زبانوں میں بولنے والا; دو زبانوں یا بھاشاؤں کا
Bilk v.	ठगना; हाथसे निकल जाना । ٹھگانا; ہاتھ سے نکل جانا
Bill n.	मसविदा कानून; हिसाबका परचा; बिल; अदितहार; चोंच; अर्जी दावा; दरौती, हँसिया । مسودہ قانون; حساب کا پرچہ; بل; اشتہار; چونج; عرضی دعویٰ; دراتی, ہنسیا
Bill of exchange n.	हुण्डी । ہنڈی
Bill of fare n.	खानोंकी फेहरिस्त या सूची । کھانوں کی فہرست یا سوجی
Bill of health n.	सेहतनामा, स्वास्थ्य-पत्र (मुसाफ़िरोके लिखे) । صحتنامہ, سواستہ پتر (مسافروں کے لئے)
Bill, to have a clean, of health v.	स्वस्थ या तन्दुरस्त होना । سوسہ یا تندرست ہونا
Bill of trading n.	जहाजके मालकी बिल्टी । جہاز کے مال کی بلی

Bill of mortality n.	मौत या मृत्युपत्र । موت یا مرتیو پتر
Bill of rights n.	हक्क या अधिकारकी सनद । حقوق یا ادمکار کی سند
Bill of sale n.	विक्रीपत्र, वयनामा । بکری پتر, بنامہ
Bill-poster or sticker n.	अदितहार लगानेवाला । اشتہار لگانے والا
Bill v.	प्रोग्राममें रखना; अदितहार लगाना । پروگرام میں رکھنا; اشتہار لگانا
Billet n.	चिट्ठी, परचा; सिपाहियोंके ठहरानेका हुक्म; सिपाहियोंके ठहरानेकी जगह; ठिकाना; नौकरी; जलानेकी लकड़ीका कुन्दा । پتھی, پرچہ; سپاہیوں کے ٹھہرانے کا حکم; سپاہیوں کے ٹھہرنے کی جگہ; ٹھکانا; نوکری; جلانے کی لکڑی کا کوندا
Billiards n.	अंडा खेल, बिलियर्ड । انڈا کھیل, بلیریڈ
Billingsgate n.	गाली-गलौज । گالی گلوچ
Billion n.	दस खरब । دس کھرب
Billow n.	बड़ी लहर । بڑی لہر
Billy goat n.	बकरा । بکرا
Bimetalism n.	दुधाती शुसूल (सोना और चाँदी दोनोंके सिक्कोंका दौदमाती اصول (सुना और चाँदी दोनों के सिकों का रोज) । دو دھاتی اصول (سونہ اور چاندی دونوں کے سیکوں کا رواج)
Bin n.	पीपा (अक्सर लकड़ीका), अनाज, शराब, कोयला, व बिया (अकर लकड़ीका) अनाज, शराब, कोयला, व कूड़ा रखनेके लिये । پپا (اکثر لکڑی کے لئے), اناج, شراب, کوئلہ و کڑا رکھنے کے لئے
Bind v.	बाँधना, लपेटना; पक्का करना, जकड़ना; पाबन्द करना, मुचलका देना, बचन लेना; कब्ज करना । باندھنا, لپٹنا; پکا کرنا, چکڑنا; باند کرنا, چکڑنا; پھنکنا; پھنکنا
Binding, book n.	جلد سازی । جلد ساز
Binder n.	चौड़ी पट्टी । چوڑی پٹی
Binder, book n.	جلد ساز । جلد ساز
Binding n.	जिल्द; पाबन्दी; बन्धन । جلد; پابندی; بندھن
Binding adj.	लाजिमी, जरूरी । لازمی, ضروری
Binocular n.	दूरबीन । دوربین
Binomial adj.	द्विपद, दो अदबी । دو ادبی, دو عددی
Biography n.	जीवन-चरित्र, जीवन-कथा, जिनंदगीकी कहानी, जियन चरित, जियन कहा, जियन की । جیون چریت, جیون کہنا, جیون کی
Biology n.	जीवन-विद्या, जिल्म-ह्यात । جیون ویدا, علم حیات
Bioscope n.	चलचित्र, हिलती तस्वीर (पुराना सिनेमा), बायस्कोप । چل چتر, ہلتی تصویر (پراٹا سینما), بائسکوپ
Biped n.	दोपाया जानवर या प्राणी । دو پایا جانور یا پرائی
Birch v.	बेतसे सजा देना, मारना । بنت سے سزا دینا, مارنا
Bird n.	चिड़िया, पक्षी, परिन्दा । چڑیا, پکھی, پرندا
Bird, a little, told me	मुझे किसीने कहा । مجھے کسی نے کہا
Bird, old n.	सावधान या तजरबेकार आदमी । ساولدان یا تجربہ کار آدمی
Bird, a, in hand is worth two in the bush	नौ नकद । نور نقد تیرہ ادھار
Bird is flown	चिड़िया खुद गयी; कैदी भाग गया । چڑیا از گئی; قیدی بھاگ گیا
Birds of a feather n.	अक ही थैलीके चढ़े-बढ़े । ایک ہی تھلی کے چڑے
Birds, kill two, with one stone v.	अक पंथ दो काज । ایک پتہ دو کاج
Bird of passage n.	मौसिमी चिड़िया, फ़सली बटेर । موسمی چڑیا, فصلی بٹر

Bird of prey n. شکاری چیریا (جیسے، باز) ।
 شکاری چیریا (جیسے باز)
 Bird fancier n. پक्षی-پ্রেमी، چیریا پالنے والا ।
 پکشی پریمی، چیریا پالنے والا
 Bird lime n. لاسا । لاسا
 Bird's nest n. چوہنلا । گھونسلہ
 Bird seed n. چیریا کا دانا । چیریا کا دانا
 Bird's eye view n. اُوچے سے دیکھنا؛ ہوا جی نچارا، سرسری نظر
 اُوچے سے دیکھنا، ہوائی نظارہ سرسری نظر
 Birth n. پیدائش، جنم؛ بংশ، घरانا، खानदान ।
 پیدائش، جنم؛ بংশ، گھرانہ، خاندان
 Birth, new n. نئی زندگی، نیا جنم ।
 پید کرنا، جتنا
 Birth, to give, to v. पैदा करना, जनना ।
 جنم دن، سالگرہ
 Birthday n. जन्मदिन, सालगिरह ।
 پیدائشی نشان
 Birth mark n. पैदाबिशी निशान ।
 جنم بھومی، جنمस्थान، पैदाबिशीकी जगह
 Birth place n. जन्मभूमि, जन्मस्थान, पैदाबिशीकी जगह ।
 جنم بھومی، جنمस्थान، پیدائش کی جگہ
 Birth right n. पैदाबिशी हक, जन्मसिद्ध अधिकार ।
 پیدائشی حق، جنم سدمہ ادھکار
 Biscuit n. बिस्कुट । بسکٹ
 Bisect v. बीचसे काटना, दो बराबर टुकड़े करना ।
 بیچ سے کاٹنا، دو برابر ٹکڑے کرنا
 Bishop n. लाट पादरी ।
 ایک قسم کی دھاتو بستہ
 Bismuth n. अक क्रिस्मकी धातु-विस्मथ ।
 ارنا عینا
 Bison n. अरना भैंसा ।
 ٹکڑا، جरा، कुछ; छोटा सिक्का; रोटीका टुकड़ा; निवाला;
 ٹکڑا، ذرا، کچھ؛ چھوٹا سک؛ روٹی کا ٹکڑا؛ ٹوالا؛ دھانہ
 Bit, to take the, between the teeth v. काबूसे बाहर हो जाना (खास तौर पर चोबेका) ।
 قابو سے باہر ہو جانا (خاص طور پر چوہے کا)
 Bit, to put the, in the mouth v. लगाम देना, काबूमें रखना या रहना ।
 لگام دینا، قابو میں رکھنا یا رکھنا
 Bit, to give a, of one's mind v. साफ-साफ कहना, खरी-खरी सुनाना ।
 صاف صاف کہنا، کھری کھری سنانا
 Bit, to do one's v. किसी काममें हिस्सा लेना या शामिल होना, हाथ बँटाना ।
 کسی کام میں حصہ لینا، یا شامل ہونا، ہاتھ بٹانا
 Bit, a, of a किसी कदर, थोड़ासा, जरा सा ।
 کسی قدر، تھوڑا سا، ذرا سا
 Bit by bit थोड़ा-थोड़ा करके, धीरे-धीरे ।
 تھوڑا تھوڑا کر کے، دھیرے دھیرے
 Bit, not a बिलकुल नहीं ।
 بالکل نہیں
 Bit, every, as बिलकुल ही वैसा ।
 بالکل ہی ویسا
 Bit, wait a inter. जरा ठहरो ।
 کئی، کنیا
 Bitch n. कुत्ती, कुतिया ।
 Bite v. दाँतसे काटना, काट खाना; डंक मारना, बसना; दुःख देना, लगना, चुभना, सुँह मारना; पकड़ना; ठगना ।
 ڈانٹ سے کاٹنا، کاٹ کھانا؛ ڈنک مارنا، ڈنسا؛ دکھ دینا، لگانا
 Bite, to, the dust or ground v. गिरकर मर जाना; अपनेको खलील करना; रेंगना; जमींदोज होना ।
 گر کر مرجانا؛ اپنے کو ذلیل کرنا؛ رینگنا؛ زمین دوز ہونا
 Bite, to, one's lips v. होंठ चवाना, गुस्सेको रोकना ।
 مونہ چھڑانا، غصے کو روکنا

Bite, to, off more than one can chew v. शक्ति या ताकतसे बाहर काम हाथमें लेना ।
 شکتی یا طاقت سے باہر کام ہاتھ میں لینا
 Bitten, to be, with v. किसी चीज या खयाल पर बीवाना हो जाना ।
 بالہ مارا ہوا
 Bitten, frost पाला मारा हुआ ।
 چبھتی ہوئی باتیں
 Biting words n. चुभती हुआ बातें ।
 کڑوا، تیکھا؛ नापसन्द, नागवार; दर्दनाक; शोकमय; क्रोधा, तिकहा; नापसन्द, नागوار; دردनाक; शोकमय, तिर
 Bitter, to shed, tears v. जार-जार रोना ।
 Bitter, the, end n. आखिर या अन्त तक; मरते दम तक ।
 آخر یا انت تک؛ مرنے دم تک
 Bivouac n. कौजका रातका पड़ाव ।
 فوج کا رات کا پڑاؤ
 Bizarre adj. अनोखा, अजीब ।
 انوکھا، عجیب
 Blab v. बकबक करना; मेद या राज खोलना ।
 بک بک کرنا؛ بید یا راز کھولنا
 Black adj. श्याम, काला; अँधेरा; मैला; बहुत बुरा ।
 شام، کالا؛ اندھیرا؛ میلا؛ بہت برا
 Black, to be in the, book of v. किसीकी नजरमें बहुत बुरा होना ।
 کسی کی نظر میں بہت برا ہونا
 Black in the face गुस्सेमें होना ।
 غصے میں ہونا
 Black ball, to v. काला गोला डालना (चुनावमें खिलाफ राय देना) ।
 کالا گولہ ڈالنا (چناؤ میں خلاف رائے دینا)
 Black-hearted adj. काले दिलवाला, सियाह दिल ।
 کالہ دل والا، سیاہ دل
 Blacken v. काला करना, कलंक लगाना ।
 کالا کرنا، کلنک لگانا
 Black despair n. सख्त मायूसी, बड़ी निराशा ।
 سخت مایوسی، بڑی نراشا
 Black list n. जराब लोगोंकी फेहरिस्त या सूची ।
 خراب لوگوں کی فہرست یا سوجی
 Black looks n. गुस्सेकी निगाह; कहरमरी नजर ।
 غصے کی نگاہ، قہر مری نظر
 Black leg n. धोखा देनेवाला (झुठ्ठोंमें); वह मजदूर जो हड़तालके समय मालिकका साथ देता है ।
 دھوکھا دینے والا (گھوڑ دوڑ میں) وہ مزدور جو ہڑتال کے سیم مالک کا ساتھ دیتا ہے
 Black mark n. कलंक, बदनामी ।
 کلنک، بدنامی
 Black market n. काला बाजार ।
 کالا بازار
 Black and blue बदनमें जो नील (मार या चोटसे) पड़ी हो ।
 بدن میں جو نیل (مار یا چوٹ سے) پڑی ہو
 Black and tan n. अबलक ।
 ابلی
 Black and white adj. काली और सफेद तस्वीर (जो सिर्फ स्याहीसे खींची गयी हो) ।
 کالی اور سفید تصویر (جو صرف سیاہی سے کھینچی گئی ہو)
 Black and white, in लिखा हुआ, छपा हुआ, कलमबन्द ।
 لکھا ہوا، چھپا ہوا، قلم بند
 Black art n. जादू-टोना ।
 جادو، ٹونا
 Black eye n. चोटसे नीली आँख ।
 چوٹ سے نیلی آنکھ
 Black magic n. काला जादू ।
 کالا جادو
 Black maria n. जेल गाड़ी, कैदियोंकी गाड़ी ।
 جیل گاڑی، قیدیوں کی گاڑی
 Blackguard n. बदमाश, दुष्ट ।
 بدعاش، دشت
 Blackguard v. गाली देना; बदनाम करना ।
 گالی دینا، بدنام کرنا
 Black lie n. सियाह झूठ ।
 سیاہ جھوٹ

- Blackmail v. بھرا یا دھمکا کر روپیہ وصول کرنا ।
Blackout v. ब्लेक आؤٹ, اُंधیرا رکھنا; گول کر جانا (کوئی بات, خبر) ।
Blacksmith n. لہار ।
Black sheep n. خوتا آدھی, بھرا آدھی, "کالی مہ" ।
Black hole n. کال-کوٹری ।
Bladder n. ماسانا, مٹھاس; ہوا سے پھولی ہوئی تھیلی ।
Blade n. پتی (घास या अनाजकी); धार या फल (चाकू, तलवार, बौराका) ।
Blame v. दोष लगानا, खिलजाम लगाना ।
Blanch v. सफेद करना, सफेद हो जाना ।
Bland adj. कोमल, नरम, सुशगवार ।
Blandish v. तारीफ करना, फुसलाना, सुशामद करना ।
Blank adj. खाली, सादा, कोरा ।
Blanket n. कम्बल, कमली, लोअी, गरम चादर ।
Blanket v. कम्बल खुदाना; दबा देना (मामलेको) ।
Blanket, wet n. निराशा, नाखुम्मेदी; ठण्डा कर देना (खुसाहको) ।
Blare n. तुरमकी आवाज, शोर-गुल ।
Blare v. ललकारना; जोरसे बिलाना; अडाना (बल्लोका) ।
Blaspheme v. कुफ्र बकना; अश्वरकी निन्दा करना ।
Blast n. तेज हवाका झोका; खूँची आवाज, धमाका; बला ।
Black in full जोरों पर; पूरे जोरसे ।
Blast v. नष्ट करना, झुलसाना, बारूदसे खुदा देना ।
Blatant adj. शोर मचानेवाला; अधम मचानेवाला ।
Blaze n. लपट, लौ, भड़क, चमक, जगमगाहट, शोला ।
Blaze v. दहकना, भड़कना, चमकना; दरख्तों पर सफेद निशान लगाना ।
Blazon v. मशहूर करना, खबर फैलाना; शान दिखाना ।
Blech v. सफेद करना, सफेद हो जाना ।
Bleak adj. सर्द, शीतल; खुला हुआ, बे-ओट; सूना, सुनसान; वीरान, खुजाह ।
Blear adj. धुंधला ।
Bleat v. में-में करना, सिमियाना ।
Bleb n. छाला; बुलबुला ।
- Bleed v. लहू } निकालना; लहू } निकालने देना; खून बहाना, कल्ल खून } होना; खून चूसना, मुँडना; दिल दुखना ।
Blemish n. बब्बा, दाग, कलंक; धुटि, मुकस, औब ।
Blend v. झुल-सिल जाना, अंक होना; मिलाना ।
Bless v. आशीर्वाद या दुआ देना, आसीस देना; पवित्र करना, पाक बनाना; प्रशंसा या तारीफ करना; गुण गाना; बरकत देना, मुकदस करना ।
Blight v. सुरक्षा देना, कुम्हला देना; बुरा असर डालना; खुरमने न देना ।
Blind adj. अन्धा; जाहिल, अज्ञान, बेसमझ; बन्द ।
Blind n. झिमिली, परदा; धोखा; आड, ओट ।
Blind alley n. बन्द कूचा, बन्द गली ।
Blind door n. जुना हुआ दरवाजा ।
Blind letter n. पत्र या खत, जिस पर ठीक पता न दिया हो ।
Blind of an eye adj. काना ।
Blind side, one's n. वह पहलू जिसकी हिफाजत या रक्षा न हो; अचेत, ग्राफिल ।
Blind stitch n. (जो सिलाजी अंक तरफ ही नजर आवे) तुरपाजी, तुरपन ।
Blind, to be, to v. किसी बातसे बेखबर होना या खुसे देख न सकना ।
Blind, to turn a, eye to v. जान-बूझकर न देखना, देखनेकी खिच्छा न रखना ।
Blink v. पलक मारना, आँखें मिचमिचाना; थोड़ा देखना, आँख मीचकर देखना; टिमटिमाना ।
Blinkers n. अंधेरी, अधियारी (जो घोड़ोंकी आँखों पर डाल देते हैं) ।
Bliss n. परमानन्द, कल्याण, सुख, खुशी ।
Blister n. आबला, छाला, फफोला ।
Blithe adj. खुश, खिन्दादिल, आनन्दित ।
Blizzard n. बर्फकी आँधी, बर्फका तूफान ।
Bloated adj. फूला हुआ; चिकना-चुपका ।
Block v. रोकना, रुकावट डालना; बन्द करना ।
Block n. कुन्दा, लड्डा (लकड़ीका), तख्ता; आड, रोक, रुकावट; मकानोंकी कतार ।

Blockhead n. बेवकूफ, सुल्ल, मूर्ख, बेवमन ।

Block, chip of the old n. बेटा, जो बाप जैसा हो, जिसमें अपने वंश या खानदानके गुण या बुराबियाँ हों ।
 بیٹا جو باپ جیسا ہو، جس میں اپنے بئش یا خاندان کے گون یا برائیاں ہوں

Block letters, to write in v. हरअक अक्षरको अलग-अलग लिखना ।
 ہر ایک اکھر کو الگ الگ لکھنا

Blockade n. बेरा, नाकाबन्दी; रोक ।
 گھیرا, नाकबندی; روک

Blond n. गोरे रंगका; भूरे बालोंवाला ।
 گورے رنگ کا; भूरे बालोंवाला

Blood n. रक्त, खून, लहू; नसल, वंश, कुल, खानदान; शेखी मारनेवाला; रिश्ता, स्वभाव, मिजाज; हत्या, वध, खून, कत्ल ।
 رکت, خون, لہو; نسل, بئش, کل, خاندان; شیخی مارنے والا; رشتہ, سوجھا, مزاج; ہتیا, بدم, خون, قتل

Blood and iron, a man of n. सल्लदिल, कठोर ।
 سخت دل, कठोर

Blood feud n. खानदानी बैर, कबायली झगडा ।
 खानदानी बैर, कबायली झगडा

Blood guilty adj. खूनी, हत्याका अपराधी ।
 खूनी, हत्याका अपराधी

Blood heat n. शरीर या जिस्मकी हरात ।
 शरीर या जिस्म की हरात

Blood-hound n. जासूसी कुता; जासूस ।
 जासूसी कुता; जासूस

Blood is thicker than water 'अन्धा बाटे रेवरी, फिर-फिर अपनों को दे' ।
 अन्धा बाटे रेवरी, फिर-फिर अपनों को दे

Blood letting n. खून लेना, खून बहाना ।
 खून लेना, खून बहाना

Blood money n. खूनकी गवाहीका रुपया ।
 खून की गवाही का रुपया

Blood orange n. लाल गूदेकी नारंगी ।
 लाल गूदे की नारंगी

Blood poisoning n. खूनमें सहर पैदा हो जाना ।
 खून में सहर पैदा हो जाना

Blood red adj. खून-सा लाल ।
 खून सा लाल

Blood relation n. सगा, हक्कीकी ।
 सगा, हक्कीकी

Blood, royal n. शाही नसल ।
 शाही नसल

Bloodshed n. रक्तपात, खूँरेजी ।
 रक्तपात, खूँरेजी

Blood shot eye n. बहुत दुख या लाल आँख, खूनी आँख ।
 बहुत दुख या लाल आँख, खूनी आँख

Blood sucker n. खून चूसनेवाला जानवर (जैसे, जोंक), खून-चूस ।
 खून चूसनेवाला जानवर (जैसे, जोंक), खून-चूस

Blood thirsty adj. खूनका प्यासा ।
 खून का प्यासा

Blood vessel n. रग, रक्तकी नाली, नाड़ी ।
 रक्त की नाली, नाड़ी

Blood worm n. लाल कीड़ा (जिसे मछली पकड़नेके लिये काँटेमें लगाते हैं) ।
 लाल कीड़ा (जिसे मछली पकड़नेके लिये काँटेमें लगाते हैं)

Blood, bad n. बैर, रंजिश ।
 बैर, रंजिश

Blood, blue n. अँचे कुल या खानदानका ।
 अँचे कुल या खानदानका

Blood out of a stone, one cannot draw पत्थरको पहर को जोंक नहीं लगती ।
 पत्थर को जोंक नहीं लगती

Blood up, to have one's v. गुस्सा होना; लड़ने-मरने पर तैयार होना; तैशमें आ जाना, झगडाना ।
 गुस्सा होना; लड़ने-मरने पर तैयार होना; तैशमें आ जाना, झगडाना

Blood, flesh and शरीर, जिस्म, जिस्मानियत ।
 शरीर, जिस्म, जिस्मानियत

Blood, fresh n. नया खून ।
 नया खून

Blood, in cold adv. जान-बूझकर; बेरहमी या निर्दयतासे ।
 जान-बूझकर; बेरहमी या निर्दयतासे

Blood, to run in the v. खूनमें होना ।
 खून में होना

Blood, own flesh and अपना सगा ।
 अपना सगा

Blood, first taste of n. पहली लडाही; पहली बार मुँहमें खून पी लाना; पहली बार मने में खून लकना ।
 पहली लडाही; पहली बार मुँहमें खून पी लाना; पहली बार मने में खून लकना

Bloom n. फूल; फूलका खिलना; ताजगी; चेहरेकी लाली; सुन्दरता, बहार ।
 फूल; फूलका खिलना; ताजगी; चेहरेकी लाली; सुन्दरता, बहार

Bloom v. फूलना, फलना, खिलना; बहार पर आना ।
 फूलना, फलना, खिलना; बहार पर आना

Blossom n. फूल, पुष्प, कली, कोपल ।
 फूल, पुष्प, कली, कोपल

Blossom v. फूलना, फलना, खिलना, बहार पर आना ।
 फूलना, फलना, खिलना, बहार पर आना

Blot n. धब्बा, दाग, कलंक; स्याहीका धब्बा; डैब, नुक्स ।
 धब्बा, दाग, कलंक; स्याहीका धब्बा; डैब, नुक्स

Blot out v. मिटाना; दूर करना; निकाल डालना; नाम-निशान न रखना ।
 मिटाना; दूर करना; निकाल डालना; नाम-निशान न रखना

Blotting paper n. स्याहीचूस, स्याहीसोख ।
 स्याहीचूस, स्याहीसोख

Blotch n. धब्बा; कुसी; धब्बा ।
 धब्बा; कुसी; धब्बा

Blouse n. कुरता, कुरती ।
 कुरता, कुरती

Blow n. मुक्का, धूँसा; चोट, सदमा; आफत, विपत्ति; हवाका मका; गहना; चोट, घम; अफ, रब; हवाका झोंका ।
 मुक्का, धूँसा; चोट, सदमा; आफत, विपत्ति; हवाका मका; गहना; चोट, घम; अफ, रब; हवाका झोंका

Blow, at one adv. अकदमसे, अकही बारमें, अकही चोटसे ।
 अकदमसे, अकही बारमें, अकही चोटसे

Blow v. फूँकना, हवा भरना; सँस चढ़ना, हँफना; फूलना, खिलना; सुलगाना; छिनकना; बजाना; हवासे शुब जाना ।
 फूँकना, हवा भरना; सँस चढ़ना, हँफना; फूलना, खिलना; सुलगाना; छिनकना; बजाना; हवासे शुब जाना

Blows, to come to } v. मार-पीट करने लगना, मुक्का-मुक्की मार पिट करने लगे ।
 मार-पीट करने लगना, मुक्का-मुक्की मार पिट करने लगे

Blows, to exchange } v. मार-पीट करने लगना, मुक्का-मुक्की मार पिट करने लगे ।
 मार-पीट करने लगना, मुक्का-मुक्की मार पिट करने लगे

Blow great guns v. जोरकी आँधी चलना ।
 जोरकी आँधी चलना

Blow hot and cold v. आगे-पीछे होना; सात-पाँच करना; कमी कुछ और कमी कुछ कहना ।
 आगे-पीछे होना; सात-पाँच करना; कमी कुछ और कमी कुछ कहना

Blow off steam v. फालतू भाप (शक्ति, बल)को खर्च कर डालना; सुबाल निकालना ।
 फालतू भाप (शक्ति, बल)को खर्च कर डालना; सुबाल निकालना

Blow one's own trumpet v. डींग मारना, अपने मुँह डींग मारना, अपने मने में मथोर बतना ।
 डींग मारना, अपने मने में मथोर बतना

Blow out v. बुझा देना, बुझाना ।
 बुझा देना, बुझाना

Blow over v. हो चुकना, गुजर जाना, टल जाना ।
 हो चुकना, गुजर जाना, टल जाना

Blow up v. फूल जाना; फुलना; भस्म हो जाना; शिबकना; बारूदसे फुलाना ।
 फूल जाना; फुलना; भस्म हो जाना; शिबकना; बारूदसे फुलाना

Blow out one's brains v. बुद-कुकी या आत्महत्या करना; सिरमें गोली मार लेना; सिरके परखचे बुझा देना ।
 बुद-कुकी या आत्महत्या करना; सिरमें गोली मार लेना; सिरके परखचे बुझा देना

Blowzy adj. लाल मुँहका, भद्दी शकलका ।
 लाल मुँहका, भद्दी शकलका

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 43

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1946

TWO ANNAS

GANDHIJI'S PRESS STATEMENT

On the eve of his departure for Shrirampore Gandhiji issued the following statement to the Press:

I find myself in the midst of exaggeration and falsity. I am unable to discover the truth. There is terrible mutual distrust. Oldest friendships have snapped. Truth and ahimsa by which I swear, and which have to my knowledge sustained me for sixty years, seem to fail to show the attributes I have ascribed to them.

To test them, or better, to test myself, I am going to a village called Shrirampore, cutting myself away from those who have been with me all these years, and who have made life easy for me. I am taking Prof. Nirmal Kumar Bose as my Bengali teacher and interpreter and Shri Parsuram, who has been my most devoted, selfless and silent stenographer.

The other workers, whom I have brought with me will each distribute themselves in other villages of Noakhali to do the work of peace, if it is at all possible, between the two communities. They are, unfortunately, all non-Bengalis except little Abha. They will, therefore, be accompanied by one Bengali worker each as teacher and interpreter, even like Prof. N. K. Bose will be to me.

Distribution work and selection work will be done by Sri Satish Chandra Dasgupta of the Khadi Pratisthan. My ideal is to live in a local Muslim League family, but I see that I must not wait for that happy day. I must meanwhile establish such contacts with the Muslims as I can in their own villages. My suggestion to the League Ministers is that they should give me one honest and brave Muslim to accompany one equally honest and brave Hindu for each affected village. They should guarantee at the cost of their lives if need be, the safety of the returning Hindu refugees. I am sorry to have to confess that without some such thing it seems to me difficult to induce them to return to their villages.

From all accounts received by me, life is not as yet smooth and safe for the minority community in the villages. They, therefore, prefer to live as exiles from their own homes, crops, plantations and surroundings, and live on inadequate and ill-balanced doles.

Many friends from outside Bengal have written to me to allow them to come for peace work, but I have strongly dissuaded them from coming. I would love to let them come if and when I see light through this impenetrable darkness.

In the meantime, both Pyarelal and I have decided to suspend all other activities in the shape of correspondence, including the heavy work of the Harijan and the allied weeklies. I have asked Shri Kishorlal, Shri Kakasaheb, Shri Vinoba and Shri Narhari Parikh to edit the weeklies jointly and severally. Pyarelal and I may, if our work permits, send stray contributions from our respective villages. Correspondence will be attended to from Sevagram.

How long this suspense will last, is more than I can say. This much, however, I can. I do not propose to leave East Bengal till I am satisfied that mutual trust has been established between the two communities and the two have resumed the even tenor of their life in their villages. Without this there is neither Pakistan nor Hindustan — only slavery awaits India, torn asunder by mutual strife and engrossed in barbarity.

No one need at present be disturbed about my low diet. On receipt of the following wire from Dr. Rajendra Prasad:

Letter received. Have already wired quiet. There have been no incidents for a week now. Situation satisfactory. Most earnestly desire resumption of normal diet. Myself going Delhi 19th, I resumed goat's milk from yesterday and propose to revert to normal diet as early as the system permits. The future is in God's keeping. Kazirkhil, 20-11-'46

OUR LAHORE BRANCH

Readers will please note that a branch of the Navajivan Karyalaya has recently been opened at Lahore (Bright View Building, Royal Park, McLeod Road). Copies of our four weeklies: Harijan (English), Harijanbandhu (Gujarati), Harijan-sevak (Hindustani in Nagari script) and Harijan-sevak (Hindustani in Urdu script), as also copies of our Gujarati monthly, Shikshan ane Sahitya, and our publications will be available at the place. Subscriptions for the weeklies and the monthly will also be accepted. All sales of the Harijan and its various editions at Lahore will henceforth be handled by the branch office.

MANAGER

WEEKLY LETTER

Emerald green fields of paddy meet the eye just now in Noakhali District wherever you go. There has been a bumper crop this year such as has not been known for the last twelve years. But nature's bounty has been more than offset by the sadistic cruelty of man. The crop is in ear and about to ripen but a number of those who sowed them are not there to reap or garner. Some have been killed. Others have fled for safety to various refugee camps.

The question of the repatriation of the refugees is worrying the authorities as well as the various relief organizations. Unless they return to their homes early, they might lose the paddy and the betel nut crop which in their absence might be bagged by others. The problem bristles with difficulties. They have lost their all, they have no houses to live in. Without means of subsistence and without even a roof over their heads for shelter, where are they to go? they ask. Above all, where is the guarantee that they would be safe if they returned to their villages? To clear the atmosphere of terror and re-establish mutual confidence and goodwill is the problem of problems.

TRAGEDY OF GOPAIRBAG

On the 8th instant Gandhiji accompanied by the Parliamentary Secretaries Janab Nasrullah Saheb and Abdur Rashid Saheb, Mr. McInerny the District Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police, Noakhali, motored from Chaumuhani to the village of Gopairbag. Here, buried deep in the midst of thick groves of slender arecanut and cocoanut palms whose tall tops seemed to meet overhead, are scattered five clusters of huts occupied by Hindu families, in the midst of nearly fifty times that number of Muslim families. One of these is a Patwari's house. Silken plantain leaves spread out in graceful arches under a sapphire blue sky. The loveliness of nature was spread all around. The air was delightfully fresh and cool. But the human scene that met the eye froze one's blood. There had been murder and arson. The place of worship had been desecrated. The corpses of slaughtered men were piled up in a heap in one corner of the courtyard and burnt. Charred remains of what was once flesh and blood bore witness to the grim tragedy. There were blood stains on the doorsteps of some of the houses. The kutchra floors in many houses had been dug up presumably in search of hidden cash or jewels. The odour of death still hung over the place. It was a picture of desolation. Three girls had been abducted from the house, two of whom were still missing.

DATTAPARA

On his way back at evening Gandhiji halted at Diwanbari at Dattapara where tact and presence of mind combined with good luck had enabled the Diwanji family to escape from the fate of the Patwari family at Gopairbag. The place itself has at present been turned into a refugee camp holding about 6000 refugees. Gandhiji discussed here with the district authorities the question of repatriation of the refugees to their respective homes. Some local Muslim League members had also been invited and took part in the discussion.

Addressing a meeting of Hindus and Muslims at evening, Gandhiji told them that it was a shame for both the Hindus and the Mussalmans that the Hindus should have to run away from their homes as they had done. It was a shame for the Muslims because it was out of fear of the Muslims that the Hindus had run away. Why should a human being inspire another with fear? It was no less a shame for the Hindus to have given way to craven fear. He had always said that man should fear none but God. The Government officials accompanying him were all anxious that they should return to their homes. To feed and clothe thousands in one place involved difficulties for the refugees as well as for the Government. The Government officials were ashamed of the fact that such things should have happened in their jurisdiction. He wanted them to forgive and forget what had happened in Noakhali and Tipperah. That did not mean that they were to become cowards. But it served no useful purpose to keep on recalling the unpleasant past. He hoped and prayed that the Hindus and Muslims of these parts would become friends once more. He knew the Hindus had suffered a lot and were suffering still. He would not ask them to return to their homes till at least one good Muslim and one good Hindu came forward to accompany them and stand surety for their safety in each village. He was sure there were plenty of good Hindus and good Muslims in these parts who would give the necessary guarantee.

A Muslim friend from the audience said they had already given them the assurance that they would look after them but the Hindus would not listen to them. Gandhiji replied that they should try to understand and appreciate the reasons of the Hindus' distrust and overcome their fear. A Hindu refugee got up and asked how they could have confidence in the assurances of the Muslims any more. When the trouble was threatening they had promised to look after them but had failed to protect them afterwards. Besides where were they to go and stay? They had lost their all. Were they to go back and stay in the jungles? And when fifty good Muslims in the village had failed to save them on the previous occasion, how would one good Muslim do so now? Gandhiji replied that the Government would see that their huts were rebuilt and they had food and clothing when they returned to their homes. Whatever might have happened in the past, if now one good Muslim and one good Hindu took the responsibility for their safety in each village, they could rely on their word backed as it would be by the collective invitation of all the Muslims in the village. If they were still afraid they were cowards and not even God could help the cowardly.

The next day Gandhiji shifted his camp to Dattapara in order to be able to visit more affected villages in the interior. After the evening prayer he addressed a huge gathering in which about 80% were Muslims. It was a passionate appeal to their conscience. He talked to them of the purifying alchemy of God's name which was more potent even than the proverbial philosopher's stone. He asked them to search their hearts and tell him whether they really wanted the Hindus to come back and live in their midst as friends and neighbours. If they wanted them back, they should stand guarantee for their safety and self-respect, assure them that their daughters, sisters, and mothers would be regarded like the Muslims' own daughters, sisters and mothers. If not, they should plainly tell him so and he would ask the unfortunate refugees to migrate. But he himself would stay in their midst till their hearts were converted, live on what they might provide him and die there if necessary. The full text of the speech is reproduced elsewhere in these columns.

Several written questions were submitted to him at the end of the meeting. One of them was: how could the refugees have the confidence to go back when the hooligans who had harassed them were still at large? Gandhiji replied that it was the duty of the Government to round up the hooligans but his advice to the refugees was to leave the Government to attend to its duty. If the good Muslims invited them back wholeheartedly, they should return.

FURTHER INTO THE INTERIOR

The 11th was Gandhiji's day of silence. All the same he visited the villages Noakhola, Sonachak and Khilpara, all in the Lakhimpur Thana. The journey was partly by motor and partly by boats which were punted with difficulty in khals that were choked with thickly tangled masses of water hyacinth. At Noakhola 8 people were said to have been murdered including a schoolboy of 15. Four skulls and charred remains of the bones were scattered all over the place. The houses had almost all been burnt down. In the house where the boy was murdered his school books and freshly written exercise books were strewn over the floor. The betel nut and the coconut trees surrounding the houses were scorched. Those that were not killed or did not run away were said to have been converted including a deaf-mute who by piteous signs showed the tuft of hair in a piece of cloth which had been removed from his head and to which he still clung. The few women that remained were all weeping and wailing in a heart-rending manner. At Sonachak the place of worship had been desecrated and set fire to. Broken images lay on footpaths and in the debris inside the ruined temple. In this village too the same piteous weeping and wailing of women met Gandhiji.

In a written message that was read out at the evening prayer gathering Gandhiji poured out the anguish which the sights which he had seen had filled him with. Wherever he had gone he had seen burnt houses and heard stories of looting and forcible conversions. Hindu women were without the auspicious vermilion mark on their heads and foreheads and without their conchshell bangles. How he wished that all Muslim brothers would condemn these atrocities with one voice so that the Hindus could go back to their homes and live there as they used to before the disturbances. Their houses would be rebuilt before they could go back. The Muslims should help in that. Such he believed was the injunction of the holy Quran too.

The next day at the evening prayer gathering which mostly consisted of refugees, Gandhiji again referred to the question of repatriation. The Moulvi Saheb, the Vice President of Union No. 6, who had addressed them before him had invited them in the name of the Mussalmans to return to their homes. But it was not so easy in action as it was in speech. Everyone was anxious to see the two communities live in peace and harmony once again. For that it was not necessary that they should have the same religion. He had seen awful sights of destruction. He had seen the terror-stricken faces of the sufferers. They had been forcibly converted once and they were afraid the same thing would be repeated. He wanted them to shed that fear. He alone deserved to live who refused to give up God's name. They must learn to face death rather than give up Ramanama. He was not enamoured of the military and the police. The function of the police was to arrest thieves and dacoits, that of the military to guard them against foreign aggression. The police and the military could not teach them to cease fighting among themselves and live as friends. He referred to the scheme for repatriation but it could work only if the Muslim League wished to have peace and fully co-operated. Shamsuddin Saheb was coming in two or three days. They would hear from him what the League Government wanted to do.

Visits to the village of Gomatoli and Nandigram completed Gandhiji's programme in the Lakhimpur Thana. In Nandigram the same scene of devastation that was seen in Noakhola and Khilpara confronted one. About 600 houses had been burnt down. Twisted and blackened pieces of corrugated sheets that once constituted roofings littered the ground among heaps of cinders and debris. A school building, a hostel and a hospital were reduced to ashes. Scorched coconut and arecanut palms marked the site of arson. The temple belonging to the leading family of the village had been desecrated here too.

A CRUEL JOKE

Gandhiji shifted his camp from Dattapara to Kazirkhil on the 14th afternoon. On the way he stopped at Shahpur where a public meeting had been arranged. Gandhiji had been told that there would be a big gathering at Shahpur. But someone had spread the rumour that he would be accompanied by the Superintendent of Police, the District Magistrate and an armed guard who would utilize the occasion for making arrests with the result that very few people were in evidence when Gandhiji arrived there. "It is a cruel joke," remarked Gandhiji. For so far as he was concerned he had never wanted any police or district authority to accompany him. But the authorities said they could not take the risk of letting him go about unprotected.

It had been brought to his notice that in several places, while the local Mussalmans professed to be

(Continued on p. 426)

HARIJAN

December 1

1946

THE FIRST LESSON

Mr. McInerny, the District Magistrate of Noakhali, addressing Gandhiji's evening prayer gathering at Dibanbari (Dattapara) made a pithy remark. As after a natural calamity like an earthquake, floods or an epidemic involving large masses of people, so after riots, the first requisites of rehabilitation and relief are food, clothing, shelter and primary medical aid. But of far greater importance than these is courage which is the basis of all virtues. Nothing could have been more opportune, he added, than Gandhiji's visit to Noakhali in the present juncture. For, courage cannot be doled out like rice or other items of relief. It has to be evoked from within and who could do it better than Gandhiji?

THE ONLY WAY

He could have little idea at that time that Gandhiji had anticipated him in that regard even before he had set foot on the soil of the Tipperah District. The first lesson was delivered at Chandpur when a group of 20 to 25 workers including the son of the late Babu Hardayal Nag and several representatives of various relief organizations met him in the dining saloon of the Kiwi on the morning of the 7th November. "What goes against the grain in me," Gandhiji told them, "is that a single individual can be forcibly converted or a single woman can be kidnapped or raped. So long as we feel we can be subjected to these indignities, we shall continue to be so subjected. If we say we cannot do without police or military protection, we really confess defeat even before the battle has begun. No police or military in the world can protect people who are cowards. Today you say, thousands of people are terrorizing a mere handful, so what can the latter do? But even a few individuals are enough to terrorize the whole mass, if the latter feel helpless. Your trouble is not numerical inferiority but the feeling of helplessness that has seized you and the habit of depending on others. The remedy lies with you. That is too why I am opposed to the idea of your evacuating from East Bengal en masse. It is no cure for impotence or helplessness."

"East Bengal is opposed to such a move," they replied.

"They should not leave", Gandhiji resumed. "20,000 able-bodied men prepared to die like brave men non-violently might today be regarded as a fairy tale. But it would be no fairy tale for every able-bodied man in a population of 20,000 to die like stalwart soldiers to a man in open fight. They will go down in history like the immortal five hundred of Leonidas who made Thermopylae." And he quoted the proud epitaph which marked the grave of the Thermopylae heroes:

Stranger! Tell Sparta, here her sons are laid,
Such was her law and we that law obeyed.

A FALSE CRY

"I will proclaim from the housetops," he continued, "that it is the only condition under which you can live in East Bengal. You have asked for Hindu officers, Hindu police and Hindu military in the place of Muslim. It is a false cry. You forget that Hindu officers, Hindu police and Hindu military have in the past done all these things—looting, arson, abduction, rape. I come from Kathiawad—the land of petty principalities. I cannot describe to you to what depths of depravity human nature can go. No woman's honour is safe in some principalities and the chief is no hooligan but a duly anointed one."

"These are cases of individual depravity. Here we have got this on a mass scale."

"But the individual there is not alone. He is backed by the machinery of his little State."

A POOR CONSOLATION

"He is condemned even by his compeers. Here such acts are not condemned by the Muslims."

"I have heard nothing but condemnation of these acts from Saheed Suhrawardy downwards since I have come here. Words of condemnation may tickle your ears. But they are no consolation to the unfortunate women whose houses have been laid desolate or who have been abducted, forcibly converted and forcibly married."

"What a shame for Hindus, what a disgrace for Islam," he exclaimed warming up. "No, I am not going to leave you in peace. Presently you will say to yourself, 'When will this man leave us and go?' But this man will not go. He did not come on your invitation and he will go on his own only, but with your blessings, when his mission in East Bengal is fulfilled."

"It is a part of their plan for Pakistan," put in one member of the deputation.

"It is midsummer madness and they have realized it. They will soon sicken of it. They have already begun to."

"Why do not they come here then and set this right?"

"That stage will come. Sickness only marks the crisis. Convalescence must precede cure." "You see I am a nature-curst," he added with a sardonic laugh in which all joined.

THE FALLACY OF NUMBERS

"But here we are a mere drop in the ocean," remarked another friend resuming the discussion.

Gandhiji replied that even if there was one Hindu in East Bengal, he wanted him to have the courage to go and live in the midst of the Mussalmans and die if he must like a hero. He should refuse to live as a serf and a slave. He might not have the non-violent strength to die without fighting. But he could command their admiration if he had the courage not to submit to wrong and died fighting like a man. "There is not a man.

however cruel and hard-hearted, but would give his admiration to a brave man. A goonda is not the vile man he is imagined to be. He is not without his noble traits."

The friend who was leading the argument however was still sceptical. "A goonda does not understand reason," he said.

"But he understands bravery," replied Gandhiji. "If he finds that you are braver than he, he will respect you."

ARMOURY RAID TRADITION

"You will note," continued Gandhiji, "that for the purposes of our present discussion I have not asked you to discard the use of arms. I can't provide you with arms. It is not for me to provide arms to the Chittagong Armoury Raid men," he remarked chaffing them. "The most tragic thing about the armoury raid people," he added "is that they could not even multiply themselves. Their bravery was lop-sided. It did not infect others."

That started a discussion on the Chittagong Armoury Raid group.

"No wonder it could not," answered one of the party. "They were condemned."

"By whom? I may have—that is a different thing."

"The people did do. I am myself an Armoury Raid man."

"They did not. You are no Armoury Raid man or, you should not have been here to tell these things. That so many of them should have remained living witnesses of the things that have happened is in my eyes a tragedy of the first order. If they had shown the same fearlessness and courage to face death in the present crisis as they did when they made that raid, they would have gone down in history as heroes. As it is, they have only inscribed a small footnote in the page of history. You will see I am not, as I have already said, asking you just now to unlearn the use of arms or to follow my type of heroism. I have not made it good even in my own case. I have come here to test it in East Bengal. I want you to take up the conventional type of heroism. You should be able to infect others—both men and women—with courage and fearlessness to face death when the alternative is dishonour and humiliation. Then the Hindus can stay in East Bengal, not otherwise. After all, the Mussalmans are blood of our blood and bone of our bone."

"Here the proportion of Mussalmans and Hindus is 6 to 1. How can you expect us to stand against such heavy odds?"

"When India was brought under British subjection, there were 70,000 European soldiers against 33 crores of Indians."

"We have no arms. The Government backs them with its bayonets."

"The odds were much heavier against the Indians in South Africa. The Indian community there was a mere handful in the midst of an overwhelming majority of Europeans and Negroes. The Europeans had arms. We had none. So we forged the weapon of Satyagraha. Today the Indian is respected by the White man in South Africa, not so the Zulu with all his fine physique."

"So we are to fight with arms anyhow?" the friend finally asked.

"Not anyhow," replied Gandhiji. "Even violence has its code of ethics. For instance, to butcher helpless old men, women and children is not bravery but rank cowardice. Chivalry requires that they should be protected even at the cost of one's life. The history of early Islam is replete with such instances of chivalry and Islam is all the stronger for them."

BRAVERY OR BRUTALITY?

"Would you permit the Hindus to take the offensive?"

"The people of Bihar did and brought disgrace upon themselves and India. They have set the clock of India's independence backward. I have a right to speak about Bihar. In a sense I feel closer to Bihar than to Bengal as fortune enabled me to give a striking demonstration of the non-violence technique in Champaran. I have heard it said that the retaliation in Bihar has 'cooled' the Muslims down. They mean it has cowed them down for the time being. They forget that we can play at a game. Bihar has forged a link in the chain of our slavery. If the Bihar performance is repeated or if the Bihar mentality does not mend, you may note down my words in your diary: Before long India will pass under the yoke of the Big Three with one of them probably as the mandatory power. The independence of India is today at stake in Bengal and Bihar. The British Government entrusted the Congress with power not because they are in love with the Congress but because they had faith that the Congress would use it wisely and well, not abuse it. Today Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru finds the ground slipping from under his feet. But he won't let that happen. That is why he is in Bihar. He has said he is going to stay there as long as it may be necessary."

"Biharis have behaved as cowards," he added with deep anguish. "Use your arms well, if you must. Do not ill-use them. Bihar has not used its arms well. If the Biharis wanted to retaliate, they could have gone to Noakhali and died to a man. But for a thousand Hindus to fall upon a handful of Mussalmans—men, women and children—living in their midst is no retaliation but just brutality. It is the privilege of arms to protect the weak and helpless. The best succour that Bihar could have given to the Hindus of East Bengal would have been to guarantee with their own lives the absolute safety of the Muslim population living in their midst. Their example would have told. And I have faith that they will still do so with due repentance when the present madness has passed away. Anyway that is the price I have put upon my life, if they want me to live. Here ends the first lesson."

Kazirkhil, 18-11-46

PYARELAL

WEEKLY LETTER

(Continued from p. 423)

anxious that peace should be re-established, they were not prepared to do anything for it or give any guarantee, unless the Muslim League leaders asked them to. Gandhiji recognizing the reasonableness of their suggestion referred to a statement of Qaid-e-Azam Jinnah which he had read that morning. He did not like everything in that statement but there were some things in it which should commend themselves to all. In that statement Qaid-e-Azam Jinnah had said: "If the Mussalmans lose their balance and give vent to the spirit of vengeance and retaliation and prove false to the highest codes of morality and preachings of our great religion Islam, you will not only lose your title to the claim of Pakistan but also it will start a most vicious circle of bloodshed and cruelty, which will at once put off the day of our freedom and we shall only be helping to prolong the period of slavery and bondage." He had further said: "We must prove politically that we are brave, generous and trustworthy, . . . that in the Pakistan areas the minorities will enjoy the fullest security of life, property and honour just as the Mussalmans themselves, nay even greater." He would like them, remarked Gandhiji, to ponder over that statement, if on examination they found that his quotation was correct. Murder, loot, arson, abduction and forcible marriages and forcible conversions could not but prolong India's slavery. If they kept on quarrelling among themselves, if they looked to the police and the military for protection, they would be inciting the third party to rule over them.

HEART AGONY

At Kazirkhil Gandhiji's camp has been fixed up in a partially devastated house. The miscreants were not able to burn down the place completely. An advance party of Shri Satish Babu's men had cleaned it up and made it habitable. There was a small gathering for the prayers in the compound of the house. Addressing them after prayer on the first day Gandhiji said he found indescribable peace in the natural scenery around him but he found that peace missing on the faces of the men and women. And how could they have peace after all that they had been through? He found a number of guards standing there to protect him and his party. Against whom were they to protect him? He was not used to go about with a guard. He had toured in Bengal unprotected before this. "But today the authorities would not let me do so. It is a matter of sorrow and shame for me and more than me it should be a matter of shame for the Mussalmans of East Bengal."

Even the schools and temples had been destroyed, he proceeded. Shamsuddin Saheb, their Minister, did not like it. The happenings in East Bengal, he said, had hurt him deeply. The hearts of the people had to be purged of hatred. For that their (the Mussalmans') help and cooperation was necessary.

THIS FRATRICIDE

This fratricide was more awful than anything in his experience, he said. He had carried on a grim struggle for 20 years in South Africa and for the last 30 years in India. But this mutual slaughter had non-plussed him. He did not know how he could induce the two communities to live in peace and harmony again. He had come to Bengal to find a solution for the problem. Bengal was a big province. If the communal problem could be solved here, it would be solved elsewhere also. If he succeeded here, he would go away from Bengal with a new lease of life. If not, he wished God to remove him from this earth. He did not wish to leave Bengal empty-handed. The word "pessimism" was not to be found in his dictionary.

The Muslims butchered the Hindus and did worse things than butchery in Bengal, he proceeded, and the Hindus butchered the Muslims in Bihar. When both acted wickedly it was no use making comparisons or saying one was less wicked than the other or who started the trouble. If they wished to take revenge they should learn the art from him. He also took revenge, but it was of a different type. He had read a Gujarati poem in his childhood which said: "If to him who gives you a glass of water, you give two, there is no merit in it. Real merit lies in doing good to him who does you evil." "That," concluded Gandhiji, "I consider noble revenge."

He had read a story about one of the earlier Caliphs. A man attacked the Caliph with a sword. The Caliph wrested the sword from the assailant's hands and was going to kill him when the assailant spat on his face. The Caliph thereupon let him go free because the indignity had filled him with personal anger. This produced a great impression upon the assailant, and he embraced Islam. One who was forcibly converted to Islam ceased to be a man. To recite the Kalma through fear was meaningless.

A CALL TO INTROSPECTION

The prayer meeting of the fifteenth was held in the maidan in front of the school building at Ramganj. In his address after the prayer Gandhiji reiterated and emphasized his previous day's appeal. He could talk to them of nothing but sorrow and suffering these days. Wherever he went he saw awful sights of destruction. There were no tears in his eyes. He who shed tears could not wipe those of others, but his heart did weep. He had come with the hope that he could have a frank talk with the Mussalmans and that they would repent of their misdeeds and request the Hindus not to leave their homes. If the repentance was genuine, the Hindus would recognize their sincerity and regain lost confidence. But he could see that the Hindus and the Muslims of East Bengal had been embittered against one another. He would not go into the reasons thereof. But the Muslim brethren would permit him to say that so far as he knew, in East Bengal they had been the aggressors. The Hindus were mortally afraid of them. At Chaumuhani, continued Gandhiji, Muslims came to his meeting in large numbers, larger than the Hindus. But he did not know why they were avoiding him after the first meeting at Dattapara. It hurt him. He wanted the few Mussalmans who were present in the meeting to carry his message to the rest. A Muslim sister who had been going about meeting the leading Muslims in these parts had said that the Muslims told her plainly that they wanted orders from the League leaders before they could promise to befriend the Hindus or attend Gandhiji's meetings. The exodus of the Hindus was still continuing. If the Muslims assured them that they were neighbours, friends and brothers, sons of the same soil, breathing the same air and drinking the same water, that the Hindus had nothing to fear from them, the exodus would stop and even those who had left their homes would return. Even animals were friendly to those who befriended them. But man was made in the image of God. To justify his inheritance, man had to return good for evil. Whosoever was the fault, this truth applied to both the parties. The Muslims wanted orders from the League. He could understand it. There was a League Government in the province. But that did not mean that the Government should be inimical to those outside the League.

He reiterated what he said about Qaid-e-Azam Jinnah Sahab's message on the previous day. They should search their hearts and ask themselves if they had lived up to that message. "So far as I know, Islam does not permit forcible conversion and atrocities on women. What good can a mere repetition of the Kalma do to one whose heart does not accept Islam? You should ask your leaders, therefore, whether you are to be friends with the Hindus or enemies and tell me. If you wish to be enemies, the Hindus should be asked to leave East Bengal. For myself, I have come to stay in East Bengal till there is reconciliation between the two."

Kazirkhil, 17-11-'46

PYARELAL

A PROHIBITION ANTHOLOGY

(Continued from No. 31, Page 304)

[For reference to the text in 10, I am indebted to Macdonell and Keith's Vedic Index; for 11 to S. Hicks' Difficulties (Duckworth); for 13 to Mosley's Night Haunts of London (S. Paul); for 14 to Hiralal Jadavrai Buch's Devibhagavata (G. M. Vaishya); and for 16, 17 and 18 to Norman E. Richardson's The Liquor Problem (Methodist Book Concern, New York). V. G. D.]

10

सुरां पिबन् . . . ब्रह्महा चैते पतन्ति ।

छान्दोग्य उपनिषद् (५-१०-९)

"The murderer of a Brahmin, the drunkard . . . these fall (from grace)."

11

Not 95 per cent of all the crime which has come before me during my long years on the bench should be attributed to drink, but 99 per cent of it.

Lord Brampton.

12

Syphilis and use of alcohol as beverage together are responsible for more than half the disease and early death of the mature population of Europe.

E. Ray Lankester in Kingdom of Man

13

"One of the chief incitements to unchastity is indulgence in alcoholic drinks."

National Council for Combating Venereal Diseases.

14

प्रभासे यादवाः सर्वे . . . . . ॥ ३ ॥

ते पीत्वा मदिरां मत्ताः कृत्वा युद्धं परस्परम् ।

क्षयं प्राप्ता महात्मानः पश्यतो रामकृष्णयोः ॥ ४ ॥

देवीभागवत २-८ ।

"At Prabhasa, all the Yadavas took liquor, in a fit of intoxication fought among themselves and met their doom. Balarama and Krishna saw this but were helpless.

15

Alcohol kills more men than war, and kills them in a dishonourable manner. —Cardinal Mercier

16

Many (drinking places) depend upon the debauching of women as a source of indirect revenue.

North American Wine and Spirit Journal,
(March 1913)

17

"In the tug of war between life and death, drink pulls on the graveyard side."

18

If the drink habit could be eradicated from the nation, this court might close its doors at any rate for the greater part of the time.

Lord Gorell, President of English Divorce Court
V. G. D.

THE MESSAGE OF KHADI

If every village, and every home in it, becomes self-sufficient in the production of food, clothing, other village manufactures and animal husbandry and avoids unnecessary interdependence while not excluding mutual co-operation wherever desirable, society will naturally become self-reliant and free. Competition being replaced by mutual co-operation in such a society there will be equality in the true sense of the term. Such a society must be a non-violent society.

To establish a non-violent social order in the early childhood of the human race was perhaps not possible. But when the human race has come of age, it should naturally become non-violent. With the progress of knowledge and science, an awakened and virile society will spontaneously come to realize that non-violence is the rule of life and that therein alone lies safety. Experience is the best teacher. Non-violence, arrived at as a result of experience, is likely to prove enduring. If even after all it has gone through during the last five to ten thousand years of its history, the human race does not turn to non-violence it is doomed indeed.

A non-violent order cannot be established by mere preaching. It requires healthy living and a particular type of organization and a particular outlook on life. The systems of Government that one sees in the world today are incompatible with a non-violent society. Instead of relying on the best in human nature, they rely on its baser side such as selfishness, greed, fear, pride etc. These tendencies are fostered by the twin expedient of punishment and reward. Living under such a system degrades one. It could not be otherwise. Our life has become unnatural and with that our ideals and thinking. Society is sick.

A man suffering from scabies experiences great relief when he scratches his skin. It does not therefore mean that the desire to scratch is a healthy one. Similarly the fact that the present day culture satisfies certain cravings and appetites of ours does not mean that it is healthy. He whose mind is filled with the craving for sex indulgence is impervious to argument however forceful. Edward Carpenter wrote a masterly book describing the present disease and its cure. But it fell flat. Society did not mend its ways. Two world wars in one generation have brought the world to the brink of destruction. Spiritual culture is India's heritage, though today India itself seems to have repudiated it. May it not be India's privilege still to return to it and point the way to others? It is in that hope that Gandhiji has set to work out the ideal of self-reliance and self-sufficiency for India's villages.

In spite of the progress that science has made, better communications and close financial and economic ties among the various countries of the world, there is shortage of food and clothing all over. A system which has given rise to such a grave situation must be reformed. That can only be done by accepting the principle of non-violence which in the economic field is translated as self-reliance, and of which Khadi is the supreme symbol.

KAKA KALELKAR

(Abridged by S. N. from the Original in Gujarati)

AN APPEAL TO CONSCIENCE

The following is the text of Gandhiji's speech delivered in Hindustani at the prayer meeting at Dattapara on the evening of the 10th November:

"Whether you believe me or not, I want to assure you that I am a servant of both the Hindus and the Mussalmans. I have not come here to fight Pakistan. If India is destined to be partitioned, I cannot prevent it. But I wish to tell you that Pakistan cannot be established by force. In the bhajan that was just sung the poet has likened God to the philosopher's stone. The proverbial philosopher's stone is said to turn iron into gold. That is not always desirable. For instance, if all the rails of the railway track were turned into gold by the touch of the stone, the trains would not be able to run over them. But the touch of God purifies the soul. That is always desirable.

"That philosopher's stone is within us all. All that I wish to tell my Muslim brethren is that, whether they live as one people or two, they should live as friends with the Hindus. If they do not wish to do so, they should say so plainly. I would in that case confess myself defeated. The refugees cannot stay on as refugees for ever. The Government cannot go on feeding them. And what sort of feed are they getting? Less than half the daily ration of cereals to keep an able-bodied man alive, no fish, no vegetables, nor anything else to supplement it. It is not possible for them to exist like this for any length of time. If, therefore, the Muslims do not want them back in their villages, they must go elsewhere.

"But even if every Hindu of East Bengal went away, I will still continue to live amidst the Muslims of East Bengal and eat what they give me and what I consider lawful for me to partake of. I will not bring my food from outside. I do not need fish or flesh. All that I need is a little fruit, vegetables and some goat's milk. As far as goat's milk and cereals are concerned, I would take them again only when it pleases God that I should do so. I have given it up and would not resume it till the Hindus were really penitent of what they had done in Bihar.

"For a thousand Hindus to surround a hundred Mussalmans or for a thousand Mussalmans to surround a hundred Hindus and oppress them is not bravery but cowardice. A fair fight means even numbers and previous notice. That does not mean that I approve of their fighting. It has been said that the Hindus and the Muslims cannot stay together as friends or co-operate with each other. No one can make me believe that, but if that is your belief, you should say so. I would in that case not ask the Hindus to return to their homes. They would leave East Bengal and it would be a shame for both the Mussalmans and the Hindus. If, on the other hand, you want the Hindus to stay in your midst, you should tell them that they need not look to the military for protection but to their Muslim brethren instead. Their daughters and sisters and mothers are your own daughters, sisters and mothers and you should protect them with your lives. I addressed them in the refugee camp yesterday. The District Magistrate Mr. McNerny told them that all mankind being descended from Adam and Eve, they were all members of one family—relatives, whatever, their race or religion. So they should live together as relatives.

"One man is said to have returned to his village last evening after the prayer meeting. He found his house surrounded by Muslims. They would not let him take his property. How can I, under these circumstances (if they are true), ask anyone to go back? You should ponder over what I have said and let me know what you really wish. I shall advise the Hindus accordingly.

"I am told and I believe that there are many good Muslims who would welcome the Hindus back but the goondas stand in the way. I wish to tell you that if the good Muslims spoke out with one voice and acted according to their professions, the so-called goondas would become ineffective and would mend their ways."

Kazirkhil, 16-11-'46

PYARELAL

CONTENTS	PAGE
GANDHIJI'S PRESS STATEMENT	421
WEEKLY LETTER ... PYARELAL	422
THE FIRST LESSON ... PYARELAL	424
A PROHIBITION ANTHOLOGY ... V. G. D.	427
THE MESSAGE OF KHADI ... KAKA KALELKAR	427
AN APPEAL TO CONSCIENCE ... PYARELAL	428

HARIJAN

Pages 16

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 44

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1946

TWO ANNAS

IMMORTAL MALAVIYAJI

(By M. K. Gandhi)

There is a saying in English, "The King is dead, Long live the King". Perhaps it can be said with greater aptness though in a different setting of the great and good Malaviyaji whom death has kindly delivered from physical pain and to whom his body had ceased for some time to give the work he would gladly have taken from it. Can we not say of him "Malaviyaji the adored of Bharatvarsha is dead, Long live Malaviyaji?" His unremitting toil from his early youth to ripe old age has made him immortal. His services were many but the Benares Hindu University, styled in Hindi as Kashi Vishwa Vidyalaya must for all time be counted as his greatest and best creation. If it is more popularly known as the Benares Hindu University, the fault was not his, or, if it was his, it was due to his magnanimous nature. He was a servant of his followers. He allowed them to do as they wished. I happen to know personally that this spirit of accommodation was part of his nature, so much so that at times it took the shape of weakness. Only he was a powerful man. And has not his own special favourite Bhagawata said that no fault accrues to the powerful? But it is a defect which can easily be remedied now. Every stone of that majestic structure should be a reflection of true Hindu Dharma or culture. The institution must not in any shape or form reflect the glory of materialism as of the West that we are familiar with, but it should be a true reflection of the glory that is spiritualism. Is every pupil a representative of pure undefiled religion? If he is not, why not? This University will be judged, as all universities should be, not by the number of pupils studying at it at a given time but by their quality, however few in numbers they may be. I know that this is easier said than done. Nevertheless, it is the foundation of this University. If it is not that, it is nothing. Hence it is the clear duty of the progeny of the deceased as also his followers to give it that shape. It is essentially the function of the university to assign Hindu religion its status in the body of the religions of the world, as it is its function to rid it of its defects and limitations. The devotees of the deceased should regard it as their special duty to shoulder this burden.

Malaviyaji has left an imperishable memorial of himself in the Kashi Viswa Vidyalaya. To put it on a stable foundation, to secure its evolutionary growth, will surely be the most suitable memorial that can be erected by us to the memory of the great patriot. He spared no pains in making a big collection for his pet child. Everyone who reveres his memory can give a helping hand to the labour of continuing the collection.

So far about his outward activity. His internal life was purity exemplified. He was a repository of kindness and gentleness. His knowledge of religious scriptures was very great. He was by heredity a great religious preacher. He had a marvellous memory and his life was as clean as it was simple.

His politics I must leave alone as also his other manifold activities. He, whose life was singled out for selfless service and who had many gifts, would naturally stand for limitless activities. I have ventured to single out what has appealed to me as his most prominent service. And to give a real helping hand in making the institution a living example of true Hinduism will only be done by those who will try to imitate sincerely the purity and simplicity of his life.

Srirampur, 23-11-'46

(From the original in Hindustani)

ACHARYA KRIPALANI'S ADDRESS

[Important as it is, it is difficult to reproduce the entire text of Acharya Kripalani's Presidential address delivered at the Plenary session of the 54th Indian National Congress at Meerut on November 23rd last. But we reproduce below a few very pertinent extracts from it. Ed.]

THE CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAMME

Even when we have achieved our goal of complete independence, we must not think that our task is done. National liberty is precious indeed. It is the very breath of a nation's life. But however important, it is a negative achievement — a removal of external shackles. It is merely the hindrance of a hindrance. It is quite possible that when an individual's shackles are removed, he may use his new-found freedom to his own injury. If we are wise we will not rest content merely with the removal of external restraints, but will so order our affairs that the freedom we gain is translated into concrete good to our people. This means that our revolutionary zeal, even while it destroys the old order must constantly achieve creative expression in constructive activity.

BUILDING WHILE DESTROYING

This constructive effort should be nothing new for us. Our revolutionary movement, based as it is on non-violence, is unique in history. Usually, political revolutions have aimed at the destruction of the old order. Their strategy has been designed to capture power. All constructive effort to remould the nation's life has been done after the old order was completely destroyed and power captured. This process has inevitably led not to one but a series of revolutions before things could settle down and constructive effort begin. Not unoften, the process has led to civil war and ultimately to dictatorship. Both civil war and dictatorship have a tendency to defeat the aims of a revolution. It was so in the French and Russian revolutions.

The Congress under Gandhiji's lead has avoided over-emphasis on mere destruction or on the capture of power. It has, on the other hand, laid great emphasis on the constructive programme. Its destructive and constructive programmes have been worked side by side for the last 26 years. Indeed, for Gandhiji the only effective preparation for civil disobedience is the intensive carrying out of the constructive programme. Now that Congressmen are at the helm of affairs in many provinces, and even at the centre, we have some sort of a national government, it should not be difficult to intensify our effort and realize the full possibilities of the constructive programme as enunciated by Gandhiji and accepted by the Congress.

DEMOCRACY AND NON-VIOLENCE

The content of our Swaraj has been getting clearer and clearer for us as our national struggle has progressed. Long ago we decided against the tactics of mere destruction and capture of power. We therefore discarded the use of the pistol and the bomb. We decided that our revolution must be an open conspiracy and it must progressively bring in the masses. It must, therefore, necessarily be non-secretive and non-violent. A revolution brought about by the masses and that non-violently implies democracy. Our Congress organization therefore has a democratic constitution. As a matter of fact, if democracy is to be real and effective and not merely formal and institutional, it must be based on non-violence. And non-violence if it is not a mere form or lip-expression, must necessarily lead to democracy. Non-violence and dictatorship are contradictory. We cannot today change this democratic character of the Congress, nor will it be desirable to do so. Let it therefore be clear that we are pledged to political democracy and our Swaraj shall be democratic. It shall not be the rule of an individual however great or a family however glorious. Nor shall it be the Swaraj under one particular caste, creed or class. It shall be the rule of the people, by the people, for the people.

We have seen that political democracy the world over tends to become a mere form, if it is not broad-based on some sort of economic equality. The democratic note ceases to have much meaning in a society where there are great inequalities of wealth. We know that the smaller countries of Europe like Norway, Sweden and Denmark, enjoy a more real democracy than the big capitalist countries for the simple reason that their democracy rests on a larger measure of economic equality.

But economic equality may be of the communist order based on centralized big industry, or it may be democratic and based upon a fair degree of decentralization.

I believe that economic equality in a society whose economic system rests exclusively on big industry, inevitably leads to the concentration of power in the hands of a few. It leads to bureaucratic and dictatorial exercise of power. The rulers in that case not only regulate the political but also the economic life of the people. If political power has a tendency to corrupt the holders of power, this tendency is doubly increased by the combination of political and economic power in the same hands.

Capitalism killed democracy because the capitalist class wielded, directly or indirectly, political power. Communism puts in the hands of the political dictator and bureaucrat the entire control of economic power. Herein lies as great a danger to democracy as under capitalism.

DECENTRALIZATION OF INDUSTRY

Therefore, if democracy is to survive, it must discover a means of avoiding concentration of economic power in the hands of the ruler or rulers, however selected or elected. Even a political democracy can be a dictatorship if there are no spheres of free activity left to the individual. The historical role of the Congress in the economic field has been its bold advocacy of decentralized industry. Ever since the Bengal Partition movement, our political thinkers have stressed the importance of reviving village and cottage industries. After Gandhiji's advent in Indian politics, this advocacy has gained emphasis and has been translated into a concrete programme of national reconstruction. We have therefore at this stage clearly to define the content of our economic Swaraj which must be in the direction of as much decentralization as is possible under the present circumstances. Nor may we forget that decentralization alone will help effectively to solve the problem of the chronic unemployment of the vast majority of our agricultural population.

NATIONAL PLANNING

The Congress appointed in 1939 a Planning Committee under the Presidentship of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. This Committee has been at work for several years. It has collected facts and figures. It is time that its labours are utilized. But these cannot be utilized unless the Congress makes up its mind as to what industries are to be centralized and what decentralized. Unless that is done each province will go its own way. I am afraid that already there is a kind of competition even among the Congress provinces in the field of big industry. Each province wants to introduce as many mills and factories as possible. We had thought that the cloth industry was the one most eminently suited for decentralization. But even here each provincial government is vying with the other to set up new cloth mills. Some people believe that in the present state of scarcity of cloth all means of increased production must be utilized. They however fail to see that this necessarily creates new capitalist vested interests. As a khadi worker I believe that with less capital and less effort and in a shorter time more can be accomplished by a systematic encouragement of the charkha and the handloom than by opening new mills. I have taken the example of the cloth industry. But it is time that we took counsel among ourselves and decided what industries might best be worked on centralized and what on decentralized basis.

THE SCOPE OF ELECTRICITY

When I talk of decentralized industry, I do not necessarily mean the application of mere hand power. Electric power may well be utilized for increasing the scope and efficiency of the worker in his own home and village. That this decentralized industry will eliminate periodical waste of national wealth consequent on industrial conflicts, strikes and lock-outs is too obvious to be mentioned. To the extent that these conflicts are avoided, there is good neighbourliness among the people. This decentralized industry may be organized on a co-operative basis. There should be production and distribution co-operatives. If production co-operatives are not immediately possible, distribution co-operatives can certainly be started by public bodies and the provincial governments. The village worker does not find so much difficulty in producing goods as in marketing them.

AGRICULTURE AND OUR FOOD PROBLEM

Our agriculture too must largely follow the pattern of decentralized industry. It must chiefly consist of peasant proprietorship, with a provision that no plot shall be sub-divided, whether on account of inheritance, debt or any other cause, beyond what would maintain a village family. Decentralized industry and agriculture must supplement and complement each other. The latter too should be managed, as far as possible, on co-operative basis, both for farming and marketing purposes.

The food problem, which assumed dangerous proportions during the War, continues to be our great concern even to-day. We are still dependent on what foreign countries may choose to dole out to us. This dependence on the foreigner must be eliminated where the most primary needs of existence are concerned. With appropriate agricultural reform it should not be difficult to feed the present population of India and any immediate increase. Our agricultural production is extremely low. The best plan to avoid famine and the threat of famine in the future is to divide the country in such agricultural regions or units, big or small, as would be self-sufficient so far as the essentials of human nutrition are concerned. Care must be taken that these regions produce what may constitute a scientifically balanced diet. The health of our agricultural population, the back-bone of our nation, cannot be improved unless the peasant has two square meals a day consisting of food which is properly adjusted to form a scientifically balanced diet. Proper food is the first condition of rural health and hygiene. In the matter of balanced diet more research is needed. But enough has been done, thanks to Gandhiji's efforts, to make a useful beginning.

At the Centre we have today our esteemed leader Babu Rajendra Prasad, a careful and conscientious Minister in charge of the Department of Food, and I have no doubt that he will not only enable us to tide over our present difficulties, but ensure such arrangements for the future as would never oblige us to go a-begging for our food at foreign doors.

NO EXPLOITATION

To sum up then, the historical evolution of our freedom movement, pledged as it is to non-violence and the good of the masses, demands a social order free from exploitation, functioning democratically and tuned to international co-operation and peace. Such a society will be in consonance with the highest ideals of the age and time we live in. The Congress under Gandhiji's lead has been working for these objects. Today it must define the objects more clearly and work more consciously towards their realization and utilize its newly acquired power towards that end.

* * *

NATIONAL UNITY

Today we have some kind of a national government at the centre and provinces have their popularly elected governments. In a short time we shall be assembling to form a new constitution for India. Freedom, if not achieved, is surely in sight. The British can no longer deny it to us, whatever their intentions. If today we miss our goal, the fault shall be ours. It will be due to the mistakes of commission and omission we make at this critical juncture. The greatest danger to a patient is not when the disease is active but when he is convalescing. The doctor's vigilance is relaxed and he has to take care of himself. We are in that critical condition; and the worst of it is that our enemies are clever and vigilant. The greatest strength of British imperialism in India is that it has been possible for it to carry out its nefarious designs through the instrumentality of the Indians themselves. India was conquered by Indian money, Indian resources, Indian soldiers and often with Indian brains. Our tragedy has been our divisions and differences and a tendency to subordinate larger national interests to those of caste, creed and party. We give to the smaller units the loyalty that is due to the whole. Herein lies our greatest weakness.

(Continued on p. 439)

HARIJAN

December 8

1946

THE "DO OR DIE" MISSION

On the road of Satyagraha there is no stop, no resting place. One must always move on and onward on or else retrogress. Gandhiji's decision which I described as A venture in faith in the last issue of the Harijan was taken at Dattapara. On returning from Dattapara, where I had to stop for a day on account of urgent business when Gandhiji shifted to Kazirkhil, I found that he had moved another step forwards. He must live in a Muslim household, if a good Muslim Leaguer approved of by the Bengal Ministry would be prepared to receive him as a member of the family. He discussed the question with Goffran Sahab, the Minister for Civil Supplies, who saw him on the 16th and asked him if he could recommend him to any. The latter was taken aback at Gandhiji's living stripped of all his companions in the midst of those who would not know how to look after him. "I shall look after myself. I shall need nobody's service," argued Gandhiji. "Then, I am afraid, I must say that no Mussalman family is prepared to receive you," replied Goffran Sahab laughing. But Gandhiji was not to be put away easily. He expatiated on it in his discourse after the evening prayer. He was in the midst of a Muslim population in Noakhali, he said. He did not like the idea of staying with Hindu friends. He would like to see if he could stay with a League Mussalman. "My requirements are very few. All I want is cleanliness, clean water, permissible food and the freedom to pray to God in my own way." The idea was that if the Hindus saw him living with a Muslim League friend, they would probably get back their confidence and return to their homes more readily. "The Muslim friends will have an opportunity to examine me at close quarters and find out whether I am an enemy or friend."

But he did not want to postpone his new "Venture in Faith" till a Muslim household was ready to receive him. "When I was in detention in the Aga Khan Palace," he remarked one day, "I once sat down to write a thesis on India as a protagonist of Non-violence. But as I proceeded with my writing I could not go on. I had to stop. There are two aspects of Hinduism. There is on the one hand the historical Hinduism with its untouchability, superstitious worship of stocks and stones, animal sacrifice and so on. On the other, we have the Hinduism of the Gita, the Upanishads and Patanjali's Yoga Sutra which is the acme of ahimsa and oneness of all creation, pure worship of one immanent, formless, imperishable God. Ahimsa which to me is the chief glory of Hinduism has been sought to be explained away by our people as being meant for sannyasis only. I do not share that view. I have held that it is the way of life and India has to show it to the world. Where do I stand? Do I represent this ahimsa in my person? If I do, then deceit and hatred that poison the atmosphere should dissolve. It is only by going into isolation from my companions, those on whose help I have relied all along, and standing on my own crutches that I shall find my bearings and also test my faith in God"

To Sevagram Ashram people he wrote:

"I am afraid you must give up all hope of my early returning or returning at all to the Ashram. The same applies to my companions. It is a herculean task that faces me. I am being tested. Is the Satyagraha of my conception a weapon of the weak or really that of strong? I must either realize the latter or lay down my life in the attempt to attain it. That is my quest. In pursuit of it I have come to bury myself in this devastated village. His will be done."

On the 20th Gandhiji broke up his camp at Kazirkhil, Columbus-like, to face the dark unknown, accompanied only by his stenotypist, Shri Parsuram and Prof. Nirmal Kumar Bose, his Bengali interpreter. Before embarking the little group round him held a short prayer when his favourite hymn "Vaishnavajana to tene kahiye" was sung. Many voices were husky, many eyes dim with tears as the tiny country boat bearing him disappeared beyond the bridge, in the direction of Shrirampur.

Following upon his departure the members of his party dispersed themselves one by one in various appointed places. A map showing the area covered and the various centres where Gandhiji and the members of his party are stationed will be found elsewhere.

The hut where he was put up in Shrirampur is in an open sunny clearing in the midst of thick groves of stately arecanut and cocoanut palms. Round about it is spread out a grim scene of arson and devastation. He has given up his warm immersion bath and for the first two days did his own massage. Since his arrival he has had several meetings with Shamsuddin Sahab and others and a conference with about 30 representatives of the Hindus and Muslims of Ramganj at Ramganj. As a result they were able to evolve a plan for the re-establishment of peace and communal harmony. The Ministers gave a solemn word of honour that they meant to implement it. The plan was put before the public at a public meeting that was held in the village of Chandipur on the 23rd November.

Gandhiji speaking at the close of the meeting uttered the following significant words:

"Here are elected Muslims who are running the Government of the Province. They have given you their word of honour. They would not be silent witnesses to the repetition of shameful deeds. My advice to the Hindus is to believe their word and give them a trial. This does not mean that there would not be a single bad Mussalman left in East Bengal. There are good and bad men amongst all communities. Dishonourable conduct could break any Ministry or organization in the end. . . . If you want real peace there is no other way except to have mutual trust and confidence. Bihar, they say, has avenged Noakhali. Supposing the Muslims of East Bengal or the Muslims all over India make up their minds to avenge Bihar, where would India be? . . . After all if the worst came to the worst, you can only lose your lives. Only, you must do so as brave men and women. . . . If Shamsuddin Sahab and his companions do not mean what they have said, you will know. I for one would not wish to be a living witness to such a tragedy."

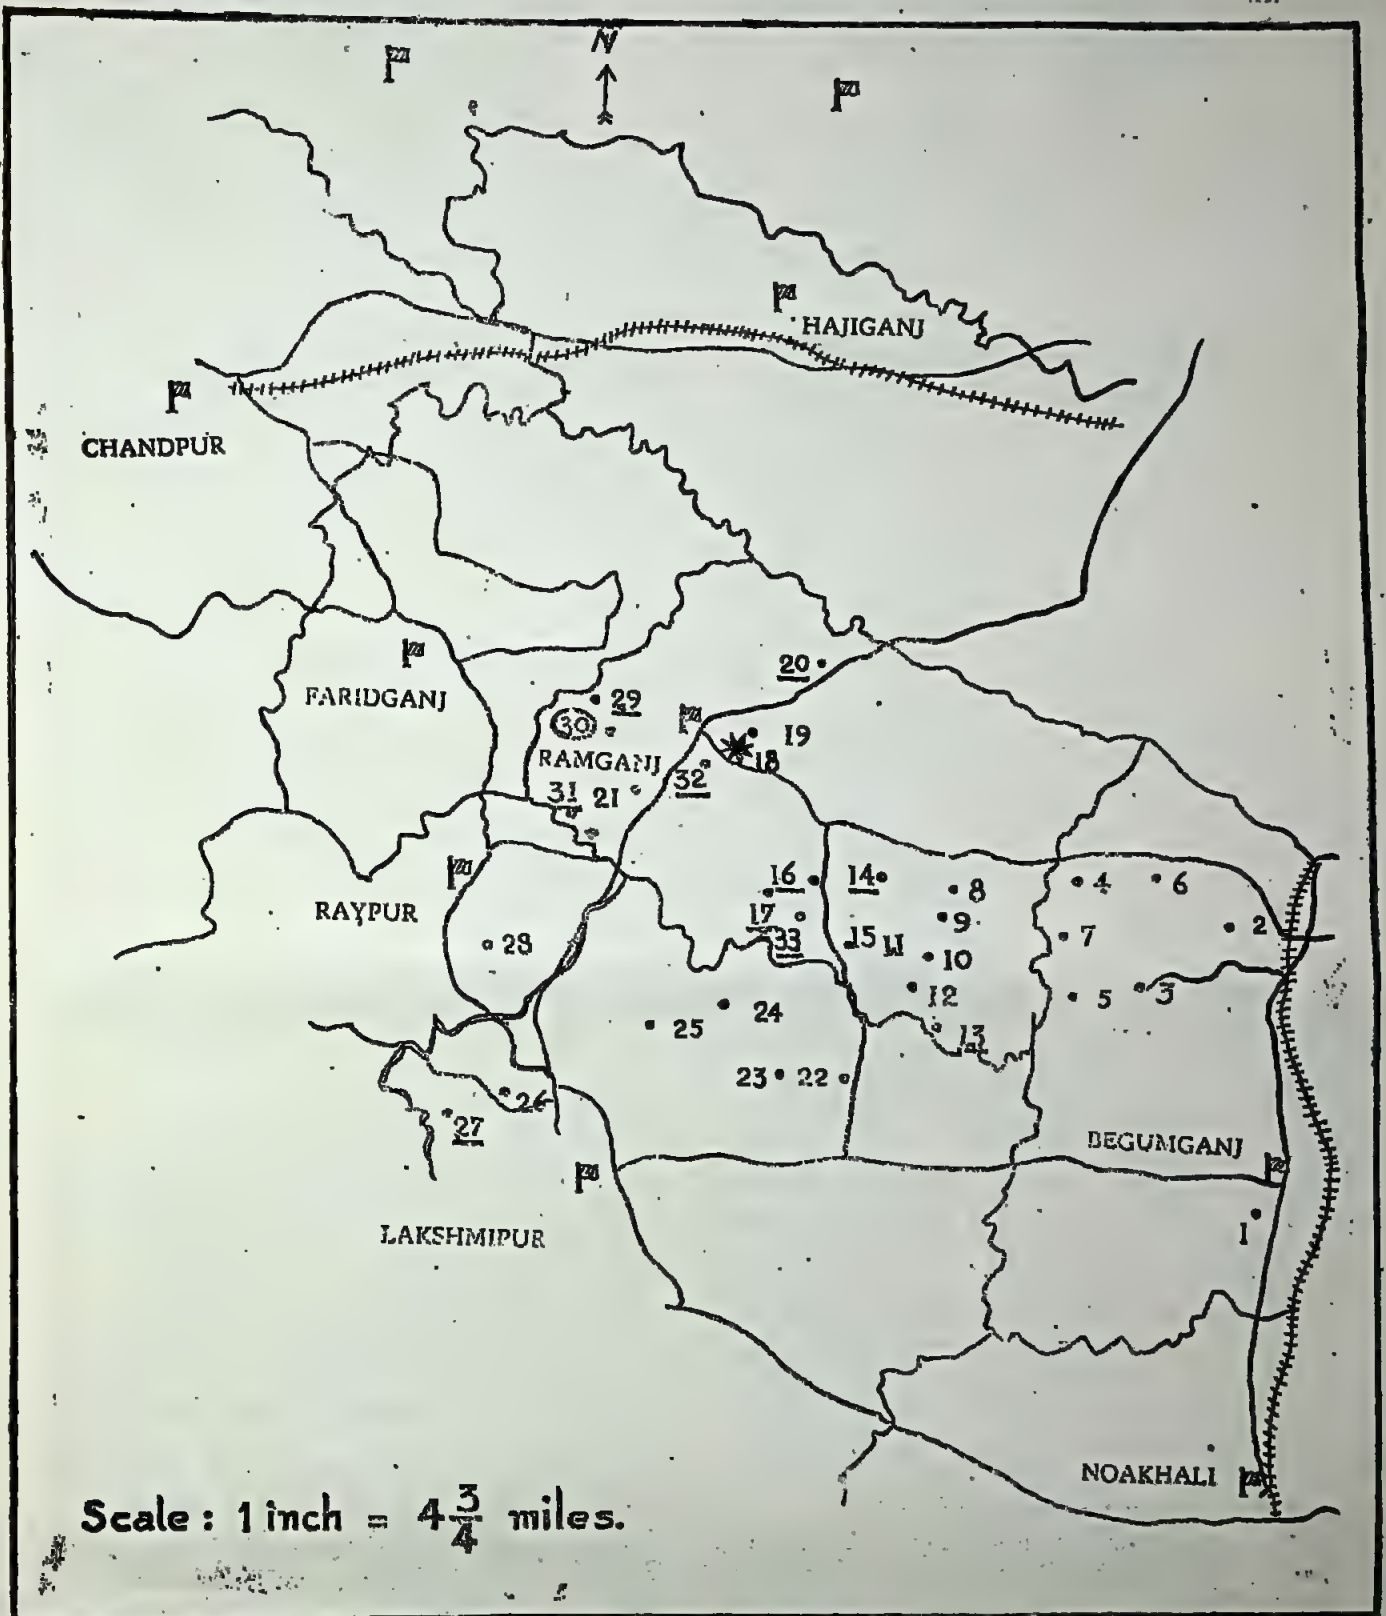

Kazirkhil, 24-11-'46

PYARELAL

MAP

[Part of East Bengal where Gandhiji and his party have stationed themselves to fulfil the "do or die" mission.]

1. Chaumuhani
2. Sonaimuri
3. Amishapara
4. Joyag
5. Gobindapur
6. Amki
7. Naori
8. Chatkhil
9. Tabga

10. Noakhola
11. Sonachaka
12. Khilpara
13. Gomatali
14. Dasgharia
15. Gopairbag
16. Sahapur
17. Karpara

- *18. Kazirkhil
19. Nandanpur
20. Paniala
21. Chandipur
22. Dattapara
23. Baralia
24. Nandigram
25. Bejoynagar

26. Dalalbazar
27. Charmandal
28. Shibpur
29. Sandora
30. Shrirampur
31. Changirgaon
32. Angrapara
33. Bhatialpur

* The village from which Gandhiji left for Shrirampur.

O The village Shrirampur where Gandhiji has stationed himself.

Numbers underlined are villages where members of Gandhiji's party have distributed and stationed themselves.

"LINE CLEAR" IN PUBLIC INTEREST

Whenever the Viceroy has to send a telegraphic message from Delhi or Simla, orders are issued, "clear the line". The public can make use of the telegraphic service on condition that the Viceroy is given first preference. When the Viceroy used to travel by train all train services were held up to let the Viceregal special pass without delay.

During the war the requirements of the military were given first preference at the cost of public requirements. And how can anyone object to it when a war is on?

There is a parable in the Upanishads about the rival claims to superiority of the various sense organs and the vital air. The eyes struck work for a year. The blind man however carried on. The ears went on strike. The deaf man got on all right. The nose, the tongue and the others then followed suit by turn. Life went on without them. Finally the vital air threatened to leave and there was a general trepidation. "You are superior to us all. Please do not go. None of us can exist without you," they cried with one voice.

For centuries in India, Government and society have neglected the masses, i. e. the very soul of the nation. That is a suicidal policy. The Kisan, the labourer and the handicraft worker does not get enough to eat. In our homes all have the best of life except the women folk. In the country all have a place except the Adivasis, the original inhabitants of the land. They have been driven into the jungles and several tribes amongst them have become extinct. The agriculturist who bears the weight of the earth on his shoulders has been pushed to the bottom rung of the ladder. The king and his officials, citizens and public leaders, doctors, lawyers and engineers, all the so-called respectable people, live by exploiting the Kisan and the labourer. The burden of taxation, no matter what the nature of the tax may be, falls ultimately upon them. But this exploitation cannot go on for long. Gandhiji has told the industrialists that they can take up any industry they like but should leave out those universal occupations which serve the primary needs of life and which can be taken up by the masses with little capital and skill. In this there is no question of charity on the part of the capitalists. It is just a matter of giving the "line clear" to those from whom all power flows. Today the masses do not know their own rights and interests. They do not understand who is sucking away their life-blood like a leach. They are not conscious of their own strength. Therefore, they are today like beggars instead of being the real owners. Therefore, Gandhiji has become their unpaid solicitor and has given notice to the capitalists that wherever the masses can manage it, they should be allowed to work out the scheme of Khadi and village industries. "Do not bring your mills there to rob the poor of their employment. Do not send mill cloth where Khadi can be produced. You can prepare rails, gramophones and radios, engines, motor cars and aeroplanes but leave agriculture and dairy farming, cloth manufacture and other village industries to the people of the villages. Give them the benefit of your knowledge, technical and organizing skill, but do not uproot them from their natural surroundings. Life itself is education for them and life is based on industry. Agriculture, cloth-weaving and other village industries, dairy farming, bee-keeping are some of the useful occupations which can be utilized to develop the intellect of the villagers. Do not take your killing education to the villages. Nayee Talim is life-giving. It is constructive and creative. It develops the intellect and the skill of the fingers by educating the hand. It should be made to cover the whole country. After giving the "line clear" to Nayee Talim, other forms of education and industries can find their place.

Gandhiji tells the Government, public leaders and the capitalists and industrialists, "You have money and power but the villagers have the advantage of numbers. Their capital is labour. When they become aware of the value of their capital, they will rule life. You cannot afford to antagonize them. Their patience is well nigh exhausted. Wake up, therefore, before they are driven to desperation. Give them the "line clear".

He does not ask for the destruction of cloth mills. He says: "Do not erect new mills and do not expand the present ones. Do not send mill cloth where Khadi can be produced. If you must have mills, do not let them compete with Khadi. Wherever there are mills see that the labour gets enough to eat and has its other basic needs satisfied."

Gandhiji has told the Government and public leaders that today they rule the destiny of the millions. Unless they keep the latter's welfare in the forefront in all their activities, a day might come when the millions might take their own and the country's destiny in their hands. When excited masses get ready even to commit suicide, there is revolution. A blind revolution will destroy the land-holders and the capitalists, the Muslim League and the Hindu Mahasabha, the Viceroy and the Governors alike. They will all tremble in their shoes if such an emergency arises. And those who go about with daggers today, if they survive till that time, will hide themselves in holes. Therefore, Gandhiji has given the warning to wake up in time. Give the masses life-giving constructive education before they get on to the path of destruction. Public workers and Government servants should all get ready to train the people on the lines of Khadi and village industries. They should learn the art themselves and then teach it to others. Good of the people is the hub round which everything else should revolve. Instead of the Viceroy getting the line clear, it is the masses who should get it.

(From the Original in Gujarati) KAKA KALELKAR

ACHARYA KRIPALANI'S ADDRESS

(Continued from p. 431)

Of all the political virtues, unity is the greatest and the most important, provided this unity is not superimposed by force but is natural and spontaneous. In this the British excel not only the Indians but also other European nations. At every critical moment of their history, the British have ignored religious, party and class differences. Even as early as the 16th century when sectarian differences led to religious wars and the Catholic hated the Protestant more heartily than either of them hated the non-Christian, as soon as England was threatened by the Spanish Armada sent by a Catholic Emperor, English Catholics, even though persecuted, stood shoulder to shoulder with their Protestant countrymen to repel the foreign invasion. This has continued up to the present time. In the last war, the Socialists had no hesitation to work under reactionary, snobbish, caste-ridden Churchill when the national emergency made it necessary for them to do so. But in India small differences produce unbridgeable gulfs. Common points are forgotten, petty disagreements over-emphasized. We must, if we have to live and progress as a nation, check this inherent centrifugal tendency.

COMMUNAL DIFFERENCES

Today the greatest danger to our freedom are the communal differences, specially between the two major communities, the Hindus and the Muslims. The foreigner has taken the fullest advantage of these in the past. Today he finds it his last trump card. He is playing it cleverly and subtly. It is unhistorical, unscientific, unethnical and unnatural to think that the Hindus and the Muslims are two nations. Their interests, social, political and economic, are identical. Their common points are innumerable. Their differences can be easily counted and are only skin-deep. The foreigner cannot distinguish the Hindu from the Muslim except by the accident of dress, and that too only if he is familiar with sartorial differences which change from province to province. India, outside India is considered one whole. No conqueror ever thought himself safe until he had brought the whole of it under his sway. No native ruler ever thought his kingdom complete and rounded off until he had established his hegemony over the whole of this ancient land. Only those periods of Indian history have been most productive when the whole of India was united under one Government, whether it was under the ancient Maurya and the Gupta dynasties or again under the Moghuls.

Even though the present alien rule has dwarfed Indian genius by an unnatural system of foreign education and the denial of all opportunities of initiative, yet by the mere fact of uniting India under one common misrule, it has released the creative energy of the nation in various fields of thought and action. There has been an Indian renaissance. To think of India then as divided into two nations, Hindu and Muslim, is retrograde and reactionary. It is dividing what nature and history have united.

I have my own grand-nephews and nieces in Sind who are Muslims. They love me as well as do my Hindu grandchildren. I cannot imagine that I as a Hindu am an Indian and they as Muslims belong to a different nationality. One of them, a pretty little bride, wrote to me recently thus: "We offer you our sincerest congratulations on your attaining 'the highest honour which any Indian can aspire to.' May you long adorn the Congress gadi with distinction and service. We are, of course, staunch Muslim Leaguers, but we pray that there should be a rapprochement between the Congress and the League." (Italics are mine).

THE THIRD PARTY

In this connection I would like to repeat to Indian Muslims the words of my predecessor in office. In his presidential address the Maulana Saheb said: "Do we, Indian Muslims, view the free India of the future with suspicion and mistrust or with courage and confidence? . . . . No present declaration for the future, no constitutional safeguards can be a remedy for our doubts and fears. We are then forced to tolerate the presence of a third power. This third power is already entrenched here and has no intention of withdrawing, and if we follow the path of fear and suspicion, we must needs look forward to its continuance. But if we are convinced that for us fear and doubt have no place, and that we must view the future with courage and confidence, then our course of action becomes quite clear. We find ourselves in a new world which is free from the dark shadows of doubt and vacillation, inaction and apathy, and where the light of faith and determination, action and enthusiasm never fails." To this as a student of history I would only add that it was not want of faith and determination that made Islam great. Today in India the Muslim League works in fear and suspicion and infects the whole Muslim community with it. When the Muslims came into India from beyond the mountains, they came only in their thousands. They were not afraid of the teeming millions of Hindus. They came in the might of their faith and enthusiasm. Today they form a fourth of the population. It is wrong to say that they are a minority. As the Maulana Saheb rightly put it, "In the texture of Indian politics nothing is further removed from the truth than that the Indian Muslims occupy the position of a political minority. Politically speaking the word minority does not mean a group that is numerically smaller and therefore entitled to special protection. It means a group that is so small in numbers and so lacking in other qualities that give strength that it has no confidence in its own capacity to protect itself from the much larger group that surrounds it. . . . Thus this is not a question merely of numbers, other factors also count. . . . In four out of eleven provinces, there is a Muslim majority. If British Baluchistan is added, there are five provinces with Muslim majorities. Even if we are compelled at present to consider the question on the basis of religious grouping, the position of the Muslims is not that of a minority only. If they are a minority in seven provinces, they are in a majority in five. This being so, there is absolutely no reason why they should be oppressed by the feeling of being a minority."

I, therefore, hold that a Hindu who believes a Muslim to be an alien not only does wrong to his religion but is an enemy of the freedom and progress of India. On the other hand, if a Muslim who is flesh of our flesh and bone of our bone, believes and acts as if he were an alien on Indian soil, he does equal harm to his community and to the nation. We have almost everything in common except religion which should be a personal matter. To fight on questions of faith is the way of a barbarian. I know the present fight between the Hindus and the Muslims is not a religious fight. It is purely a communal conflict. It has nothing to do with political or economic issues that concern the masses of both the communities. The masses act as tools in the hands of the clever and often unscrupulous politicians. But whatever the causes, we must recognize the fact of the existing tension and bitterness, and steer our course so as to avoid any major conflict.

RETALIATION AND REPRISAL

If I must warn communities against the use of initial violence to settle their differences, I must warn them no less against the use of violence by way of retaliation and reprisal as was the case in Bihar. Two evils do not cancel each other. And these reprisals and retaliations fall on innocent victims, even if the original attack was against those who really had done wrong and deserved punishment. But as a matter of fact in communal violence, whether provocative or retaliatory, only the poor and the helpless suffer. The authors of the trouble always manage to go scot free. In civil strife, as in war between nations, the unrestrained and diabolical use of violence will succeed only in producing the equivalent of the atom bomb which will annihilate both the Hindus and the Muslims.

Violence is ugly and futile in any case, but the unorganized hysteric violence of the mob is worse than futile. It is fatal to the very cause on whose behalf it is invoked. I am afraid that if the present orgies of provocation and retaliation continue, the Muslim League leadership will soon be unable to control its followers, even if it should decide to. And so might the Congress, though the Congress leadership has done its best to save the people from this hysteria of violence. If that happens then Indians will be divided into two armed camps of communal fanatics and the Britisher will stand guard over them both with his bayonet. The day of India's freedom will be indefinitely postponed.

MUTUAL TOLERATION

If we are to be worthy of freedom we must learn to live together and respect each other's sentiments. The Hindu and Muslim minorities are scattered all over this country. No amount of police or military protection can permanently and effectively protect them from the wrath of the majority communities if the latter lose all sense of moral obligation towards them. If no Hindu's life, property and honour are safe in a Muslim-majority area and no Muslim's in a Hindu-majority area, then civilized life becomes an impossibility. Even Mr. Jinnah's dream of Pakistan, though it has made the problem what it is, holds out no prospect of its solution, for it leaves the minorities where they are.

I hope however that the leaders of the fanatics among both the communities will have more sense and humanity than to take recourse to desperate and mediaeval remedies. The problem is easy of solution if only we accept the obvious fact that if there are two nations in India, they are the exploited and the exploiting of both or all the communities. The Hindus and the Muslims have a common enemy, and that is poverty, disease, and ignorance. If only we realize what we really are, there need be no quarrel between us.

I have laboured this point at length, because this is the greatest stumbling block in our path to freedom and progress. Even at this late hour I hope, now that the Muslim League is in the Central Government and shares responsibility with the Congress, the orgies that were enacted in Calcutta, East Bengal, Bihar and to a lesser degree elsewhere, will be nightmares of the past. We shall write anew on a clean slate of brotherly love and cooperation as children of a common motherland.

CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY

We shall soon be meeting in the Constituent Assembly to frame a constitution of free India. It will be a democratic constitution and will be federal in character. We may not however forget that in the administrative as in the economic field, centralization, more than is absolutely necessary, is inimical to liberty. It is good, therefore, that the provinces in free India shall have the maximum autonomy consistent with external and internal security. But some of our provinces are each as big as a country in Europe. There may be over-centralization in the administration of the provinces, which too we must avoid. Long ago, how long history does not record, the Indian genius worked out the village and local panchayat. It remained our fort through many a turbulent period. Kings and dynasties fought and failed, empires rose, ruled, misruled and disappeared, but the villager's life maintained its even tenor, away from the din of battle and the rush of rising and falling empires. He had a village State which protected his life and property and made civilized life possible. Progressively, we must delegate to the village panchayat judicial powers, in petty criminal and civil cases; the local police too might be put under the charge of the panchayat. If we build upon this village unit of self-government, rehabilitate it to the altered conditions of today, we shall be working in consonance with the genius of our people. This is the natural and the easy way. Merely to copy the West should not be our object. We may also not forget that the West has made, more specially in the big countries, democracy complex and expensive. West has evolved the official red-tape which makes the democratic machinery cumbersome and slow-moving. All these drawbacks we must try to avoid in the new constitution that we may devise.

Our judicial system must be simple and effective. The law's delay and expense and complicity must be avoided. Also there must be ample provision made for the enjoyment of civil liberties. They must be protected even from the arbitrary action of a democratic and representative government. We may not forget that power corrupts even the patriot in office. Ample provision, consistent with the larger interests of the country and the masses, must be made for the protection of minorities. Their language and culture must have free scope for development. There must be absolute tolerance in matters of faith and religion. Every individual and every group must be free to propagate his and its ideas, consistently with the maintenance of peace and public morality.

CONCLUSION

It is our great good fortune that we of this generation have been afforded an opportunity to be the instruments of a noble cause. It is not merely the freedom of our people from foreign yoke that we are called upon to strive and work for. Such an opportunity has come to many people in history. Ours is a unique opportunity. It is to win our freedom by non-violent and truthful means and to work for high ends by moral means. Ours is the opportunity to bring about a fusion of different castes and creeds and racial and religious types. Ours is the opportunity to unify what appear to be differing and conflicting cultures. We have to work to build up unity in diversity and produce a mosaic of many colours. We have to combine various and dissonant sounds and notes to produce a symphony that was never before heard on land or sea. We may not forget that today humanity must find a peaceful solution to its conflicts, social, economic, political, racial and cultural, or perish. There can be no violent solution. Violence has over-reached itself. It threatens to destroy the patient with the disease. Some other method must be found. India has found the method and tried it to some purpose, under a leadership that comes once in many centuries. It is a new method. There have been lapses. But remember no revolution in history was less costly in the loss of life, property and the dislocation of normal life, and created less hatred and strife than the Indian revolution, which, if we are not negligent, is on the verge of success. But whether immediate success crowns our efforts or not let us not forget that we are engaged in a good and great cause. In such a cause there can be no ultimate failure. But if the cause is to succeed, the agents working for it must themselves be good and great. Slavery works neither for goodness nor for greatness. But the darkness of centuries can be removed the moment the light is brought in. In India the light has been lit. Let us keep it steadily burning and let us follow its lead and all shall yet be well with us. — Vanda Mataram.

THE MOTHER'S DISTRESS

Once upon a time there was a mother, who was deeply religious. She visited daily all the temples in the village, and respectfully bowed before them, not omitting even the church and the mosque.

At home she had a collection of what apparently were curiously shaped stones, beads, coins, dolls, etc., but were worshipped by her as gods. And though she worshipped all the gods she had heard of, she had also an undefinable realization that there was only one God behind all these gods, and that He was good and loving. And, she also raised before her mind a vague picture of life after death.

And though her ideas and fancies were indistinct, and her vocabulary for giving expression to them poorer still, they were sufficient to give her faith, hope, love, strength to endure hardships, perform her duties, and keep her virtuous and honest.

Now, the Mother had several children, grandchildren and great-grand-children. And they had been all brought up with love, in the religious atmosphere of the Mother. And though some of them were as simple of faith as the Mother, several had received "education", and come into contact with the heads of different temples, and scholars of various religions and philosophies. And so, some of them called themselves, Shaivas, some Vaishnavas, some Jains, and some were worshippers of one God, and some of three, and some of a legion. A few had adopted Christianity and Islam. There were some who believed in image-worship, and some who did not. And there were also some who denied God, and called their ultimate principle Matter. But they were all religion-minded, though curiously enough, with some of them the effect was that the more religion-minded they grew, the less religious they became in their social behaviour. And the very zealous amongst them often debated about their various tenets and modes of worship and the right way of life. And at times their zeal brought so much heat in their debates, that they would come to blows and worse. And the more they became convinced of the truth, the infallibility and the perfection of their own particular systems, the more intolerant they became of those of their brothers and cousins of different persuasions. And each tried to convert the Mother to his particular doctrines and to ask her other children to do the same. But the simple Mother said, "Son, I am old and ignorant. Let me go my own way, and let each of you go his own way. Only be virtuous and honest and love your brothers and their children, and respect their tenets, even as you do your own, and it will be all right with all of you."

But in course of time, in their zeal for religion they forgot their relationship, and began to look upon one another as if they were strangers and enemies. And so blows developed into bitter fratricide, each trying to exterminate his brother and his progeny of a different faith, or forcing them to accept his own.

And when one of them had committed an atrocity, he came to the Mother boasting how successfully he had destroyed or injured some of her children or grand-children for the vindication of Truth, before which blood-relationship was of no consequence. And he expected that the Mother would congratulate him for his religiousness. But the Mother would weep for the loss of her dear ones, and rebuke him for his heartlessness and inhumanity.

And this wailing and rebuke was regarded by the injured children as a permit to inflict similar injuries upon their assailant's family. And they in turn would go to the Mother and describe gleefully how they had avenged the wrong done to them expecting that the Mother would be gladdened by the tidings.

But the Mother wept again and rebuked these children also. For, she was the Mother of both, the assailants as well as the victims, and could not feel happy over the loss of any. And she was in deep agony, and with fast and prayer piteously clung to God for the peace, which her children had deprived her of.

Should there be any wonder that the Mother felt as she did? As a mere Hindu or a mere Muslim, or even as a congressman, thinking nationally but still feeling communally, you might regard with excitement or satisfaction in turn the barbarities perpetrated by one community upon another, and plan in terms of communal organizations. But just think for a moment of what the common Mother of all feels about your alternate anger and complacency and your communal boasts and slogans. Look into her eyes, and you will find her weeping and in intense agony.

And if you are unable to think of the common Mother look into the eyes and the heart of Gandhiji, and you will realize the Mother's distress.

Vapi, 24-11-46

K. G. M.

WEEKLY LETTER

THE LESSON CONTINUED

The lesson in fearlessness which Gandhiji began at Chandpur, when a deputation of Hindu workers waited upon him, was continued even in more forceful language at Chaumuhani and elsewhere. In fact it has become the central theme of all his talks. "The tragedy is not that so many Muslims have gone mad," he remarked to a friend who saw him at Chaumuhani, "but that so many Hindus in East Bengal have been witnesses to these things. If every Hindu in East Bengal had been done to death, I would not have minded it. Do you know what the Rajputs did? They killed their womenfolk when they issued forth to sacrifice themselves on the battlefield. The surviving ones immolated themselves by mounting the funeral pyre before the fortress fell rather than allow themselves to be captured and dishonoured. There is nothing courageous in thousands of Mussalmans killing out a handful of Hindus in their midst, but that the Hindus should have degraded themselves by such cowardice, i. e. being witnesses to abduction and rape, forcible conversion and forcible marriage of their womenfolk, is heart-rending."

"How can we create a sense of security and self-confidence," asked the friend.

"By learning to die bravely. Let us turn our wrath against ourselves. I am not interested in getting the police substituted by the military or the Muslim police by the Hindu police. They are broken reeds."

"To whom should we appeal—the Congress, the League or the British Government?"

"To none of these. Appeal to yourselves, therefore, to God."

"We are men—made of flesh and blood. We need some material support," finally he asked.

"Then appeal to your own flesh and blood. Purify it of all dross," replied Gandhiji.

ANATOMY OF FEAR

He described the anatomy of fear in minute detail in the course of a written message which was read out to the prayer gathering at Kazirkhil on the evening of the 18th (Monday). In fact it has become the central theme of all his addresses these days. "The more I go about in these parts," he observed, "the more I find that your worst enemy is fear. It eats into the vitals of the terror-stricken as well as the terrorist. The latter fears something in his victim. It may be his different religion or his riches he fears. The second kind of fear is otherwise known as greed. If you search enough, you will find that greed is a variety of fear. But there has never been and will never be a man who is able to intimidate one who has cast out fear from his heart. Why can no one intimidate the fearless? You will find that God is always by the side of the fearless. Therefore, we should fear Him alone and seek His protection. All other fear will then by itself disappear. Till fearlessness is cultivated by the people there will never be any peace in these parts for the Hindus, or for the Mussalmans."

AN OUTSPOKEN UTTERANCE

Goffran Saheb, the Minister for Civil Supplies, and the Minister for Agriculture, Ahmed Hussain Saheb with a number of Parliamentary Secretaries and Muslim League friends met Gandhiji on the evening of the 16th to discuss with him the rehabilitation proposals of the Government. After the prayers Goffran Saheb, who belongs to the Noakhali District where he served as Public Prosecutor before he became Minister, addressed the gathering. He was deeply pained, he said, by what had happened in the District and so were the Mussalmans of East Bengal. He had toured in the affected area from the 16th and could say that the happenings occurred between the 10th and the 16th. There was no doubt that excesses had been committed in East Bengal. He was most anxious that the miscreants should be brought to book, only he did not want the innocent to suffer. He assured the Hindus of East Bengal that neither the Government nor the Muslim League wanted the Hindus to go away from East Bengal just as the Congress did not wish the Muslims in Bihar, United Provinces, Central Provinces, Madras and Bombay to leave their homes and go somewhere else. The League wanted to prove that it knew how to run the Government justly by according equal treatment to the Hindus and the Muslims. How could they think of leaving East Bengal where they were born and brought up? The Hindus and the Mussalmans had always lived together as friends. The Hindus called him 'bhai', 'uncle' and so on. Why should there be enmity between the two now? He requested them on behalf of the Mussalmans to return to their homes without any fear. When their confidence came back the military and the police would be sent away as neither the Hindus nor the Mussalmans had much faith in them. He desired that the Muslims should entreat the Hindus to go back to their homes.

At this point the speech was interrupted for a few minutes as it was time for Namaz. As at Chaumuhani, the Namas was performed at the outskirts of the prayer gathering where the Muslim members of the audience repaired. After the Namas Goffran Saheb spoke for a few minutes again. He told the audience that orders had been passed not to arrest anyone while coming to Gandhiji's meeting, at the meeting, or while returning home from the meeting.

Gandhiji, addressing the meeting after Goffran Saheb, began by referring to Shamsuddin Saheb's speech at Chaumuhani a few days ago. They had now heard Goffran Saheb. The Ministers wanted them to live together as friends. The police and the military could not protect them. God alone could protect them. They had, therefore, to look to each other for their safety. Goffran Saheb had told them that the Government did not wish the Hindus to leave East Bengal. Awful things had no doubt happened but they should let bygones be bygones. They must turn a new leaf. When one had suffered as they had, one was liable to become filled with suspicion. But that had to be overcome. A member from the audience had requested him, said Gandhiji, to allow him five minutes to reply to Goffran Saheb's speech which, he said, required correction in several places. But Gandhiji replied that he was afraid he could not allow the meeting to be turned into a public debate. Whatever was said at the meeting was said in good faith and to do his work. But if the friend in question sent him a letter, not couched offensively, he would gladly forward it to Goffran Saheb. He rebuked the audience too for not observing a pin-drop silence while the Muslim members of the audience were performing Namaz. Culture and good breeding required that they should observe silence when others said their prayers. There should be mutual respect. All worshipped the same God, whatever their religion. He was glad to see the Congress and the League flags flying together in the prayer ground. Both had great significance. They should realize as Qaid-e-Azam Jinnah Saheb had said that if they kept on quarrelling among themselves the country would remain a slave country and Pakistan would vanish into thin air. He was receiving threatening letters, said Gandhiji. Some Muslims feared that he had come to suppress them. He could assure them that he had never suppressed any one in all this life. They asked him why he had not gone to Bihar. He had declared his resolve to fast if Bihar did not stop the madness. He was in constant touch with Bihar. Pandit Jawaharlalji, Doctor Rajendra Prasad and others had assured him that his presence there was not required. Bihar, he understood, was practically peaceful now. Tension was still there, but it was going. The Muslims were returning to their villages. The Government had taken the responsibility to build the houses of those who had been rendered homeless. He was also receiving angry telegrams from Hindus asking why he did not fast against the Muslims for the happenings in Bengal. He could not do so today. If the Mussalmans realized that he was their friend, he would be entitled to fast against them also. If he was to leave East Bengal he would go only after peace ruled the breasts of the Hindus and the Muslims. He had no desire to live any longer; otherwise.

DASGHARIA

On the morning of the 17th Gandhiji visited the village of Dasgharia, two miles from Kazirkhil, where he was met by a large number of women. They had all been forcibly converted and now reverted to their own religion. The District Magistrate had issued orders and advertized the fact, remarked Gandhiji, that forcible conversions, i. e. conversions out of fear, would not be recognized by law. He, the speaker, did not know if every one of those who had been converted forcibly had been restored to Hinduism. If not, it should be done, if they wanted to replace the present bitterness between the two communities by cordiality.

Some abducted girls were still missing. They should be returned without further delay. A dhoby had brought to him his boy of one year this afternoon. He had recovered the child after a month from a Muslim with police help. It was the duty of the Muslim brethren to put an end to such acts. They should make a frank confession of error in the past and promise to avoid it in future. He, who tried to hide his mistakes, could never rectify them. He himself was a votary of truth. Even when he practised law, he told his clients to tell him the truth if they wanted him to take up their case. He would not plead for a false case. The result was that only true and bona fide cases were brought to him. He had long ceased to practise law and had even been struck off the rolls of the Bar register for the offence of sedition. But he continued to follow the same principle. His advice to the Hindus and the Muslims was to get rid of all evil in themselves. Without that they would not be able to live in peace or have respect for one another.

Gandhiji's remarks at the prayer meeting which Goffran Saheb had addressed had some curious repercussions. At the prayer gathering on the 17th evening no woman came and very few Hindus, the majority of those present being Muslims. Speaking after the prayer, Gandhiji observed that he had heard that because he did not allow a gentleman to reply to Goffran Saheb's remarks there and then in the meeting, the Hindus were annoyed and had boycotted the meeting. He was unrepentant. He never said or did anything merely to please others. He had always taught that one should do one's duty irrespective of the reaction it may have on others. A man who always did what he believed to be right never feared anyone.

Later the secretary of the Local Relief Organization came to him and told him that they had not boycotted the meeting but as it was Sunday and the Bazaar-day the women were afraid to come out as there would be many Muslims including goondas about.

Speaking at the prayer meeting on the 19th evening which was held at Madhupur, Gandhiji observed that a friend had told him that the explanation was a make-believe. If they had boycotted the meeting he did not mind it. They owed him no apology on that account. And if they had stayed away out of fear, certainly no apology was due to him. But it was a shame for them to be so afraid. Were the men also such cowards that they had stayed away out of fear? Were the Muslims going to eat them up? If they were such cowards, they were not worthy of living in this country. The sister who had gone to him in the morning to request him to hold a women's meeting at Madhupur had put before him three questions. The first question was that in spite of all their efforts they were unable to rescue some of the abducted women. He had told her that she should write to him about it and he would forward the letter to Saheed Suhrawardy. He could even write to the Prime Minister directly. It was a matter which brooked no delay. Secondly she said there were some women in the villages who wanted to come away but they wanted a military escort. He never could be a party to that. He had told the Prime Minister that he for one was not enamoured of the police and the military and that he could withdraw it at any time. The Hindus and the Muslims should be free to break each other's heads if they wanted to. He would put up with that. But if they continued to look to the police and the military for help, they would remain slaves for ever. Those who preferred security to freedom had no right to live. He wanted the women to become brave. To change one's religion under threat of force was no conversion but rather cowardice. A cowardly man or woman was a deadweight on any religion. Out of fear they might become Muslims today, Christians tomorrow and pass into a third religion the day after. That was not worthy of human beings. It was up to the men workers to tell the women that they would be their escort and would protect them with their lives. If still the women were afraid to come away, there was no help for them. He had come to proclaim from the housetops that the women had to become brave or else die. They should make use of the calamity that had befallen them to cast out the demon of fear. Lastly the sister had asked as to how they could advise the refugees to go back to their homes. He would not ask them, replied Gandhiji, to go back under police or military protection. They had run away out of the fear of the Muslims. Therefore, it was the Muslims who had to come forward and reassure them that they would regard them as their own mothers, daughters and sisters and protect them with their lives. Everybody, continued the speaker, must be entitled to retain his or her own religion without interference. All worshipped the same God although under different names. "If I see my God in this tree and worship it, why should the Muslims object?" It was wrong for anyone to say that his God was superior to that of another's. God was one and the same for all. Hence his formula that from every village one good Hindu and one good Muslim should stand surety for the peace of the village. Then and then alone would he ask the refugees to return and the Ministers had liked his suggestion.

Kazirkhil, 24-11-'46

PYARELAL

To The Reader

The reader knows by now the circumstances under which Shri Vinoba, Kakasaheb Kalelkar, Kishorlal Mashruwala and Narhari Parikh have been asked by Gandhiji to look to the editing of the Harijan weeklies during the time he, Pyarelalji and other members of his party are engaged in the very important task of restoring friendliness among the Hindus and Muslims of Bengal. The four have been asked to carry out this duty jointly and severally. But it so happens that all the four are at present in widely different places and unable to meet together. Shri Narhari Parikh alone is at Sabarmati and most easily available to me. The articles written by any of them will, therefore, come to me without having been previously seen by another of them before they go to the press.

Generally, Gandhiji and Pyarelalji do not allow anything to be published in the Harijan without having personally examined the matter. This will not be possible at present. The reader will, therefore, please not assume that any opinion on any matter expressed for the time being in the columns of these weeklies has had the approval of Gandhiji or Pyarelalji before its publication.

MANAGING EDITOR:

Errata

In the Harijan of 24-11-'46 on p. 412 in the last paragraph of 'A wife spinning for her husband' for સુરભિ read સુરભિ.

CONTENTS		PAGE
IMMORTAL MALAVIYAJI	... M. K. GANDHI	429
ACHARYA KRIPALANI'S ADDRESS		429
THE "DO OR DIE" MISSION	... PYARELAL	432
MAP	...	433
"LINE CLEAR" IN PUBLIC INTEREST	... KAKA KALELKER	434
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI—
INSTALMENT—VIII	...	435
THE MOTHER'S DISTRESS	... K. G. M.	441
WEEKLY LETTER	... PYARELAL	442
NOTE:
TO THE READER	MANAGING EDITOR	444

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 45

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1946

TWO ANNAS

A SIGN OF PROGRESS

(By M. K. Gandhi)

Though I have noticed it in the Gujarati columns of the Harijanbandhu from a different source, at the risk of repetition in another form I must quote from a touching letter from Shri Parikshitlal Majmudar addressed to Shyamlalji, a copy of which has been sent by the latter.

"I am very glad to inform you that after all, by the grace of God, the ice is at last broken. I am writing this from Bardoli of which you have heard. I can assure you that this year during the Gandhi Jayanti week nearly 40 public wells have been freely opened for the Harijans. Mind you, no pressure has been applied. People have taken to this programme of their own will. It has not been possible for our workers to attend all the places, but local people have invited Harijans and taken them to the public wells. I am still receiving further reports. I myself have attended some functions and personally have become a witness to the marvellous change. I thank God for it. No doubt, it is Gandhiji's efforts and the recent writings that have brought this change. Young men in villages have come forward and helped, the elders have remained behind, but they have either blessed the occasion or kept mum but nobody has opposed. I may further inform you that numerous of inter-communal dinners have been held. There was one such big dinner at Nadiad, the real capital of the Kaira District. Nearly 450 people, out of whom nearly 250 were caste Hindus brought cooked food from home and sat in front of the Ramji temple which has been built for the sweepers by Thakkar Bapa in 1928. 200 sweepers also joined and there was a merry party. Rationing regulations were not broken as people brought food from home. But it was a big gathering, unknown of its kind in the Kaira District.

"One prominent well has been opened in Kadi, a citadel of orthodoxy and 150 people dined with Harijans at Padra in Baroda. There are numerous such incidents but I cannot enumerate them at present.

"I should love to write a long letter in Gujarati to Bapa in this connection but it is difficult for him to read it. Please read this to him if possible."

Of course, compared to what we want to achieve, this progress is a miserable show. But seeing that Gujarat has been so far behindhand in this matter of removal of untouchability, the little progress of which Shri Parikshitlal takes note with pardonable satisfaction is pleasant, if it is permanent and is a precursor of better things to come. Every nail driven into the coffin of untouchability is a step in the right direction towards the purification of Hinduism.

Srirampur, 30-11-'46

QUESTION BOX

COMMUNALISM IN MODES OF ADDRESS

Q. I appreciate the efforts made by the Congress administrations to end communal cries of "Hindu water (or tea)" and "Islami water (or tea)" on railway stations. But, at the same time, does not the practice of using different modes of address for Hindus and Mussalmans, such as Shri, Shriyut or Shriman for Hindus and others, and Janab and Saheb for Mussalmans, started by Gandhiji himself and followed by Congressmen generally, indicate and encourage similar communal separatism,—even though used respectfully? It seems to me that the truth of the matter is that we, that is the members of the various communities, are unable to completely shed the communal consciousness from within us, with the result that we cannot help betraying ourselves somewhere or other in our acts. Will you please give your opinion?

A. It is a good question. Personally I am unable to reconcile myself with communal modes of address.

But having regard to the mistrust prevailing at present among the communities, there is no proper atmosphere for suggesting a change. The mere fact that the suggestion comes from a member of one community might be regarded sufficient for its rejection by another. Yet, if any reader suggests a common mode of address of Indian origin which promises to be acceptable to all, it could be considered.

Personally I would be satisfied by referring to all men as "Bhai or Bhaiji A, or Bhai A-ji, or Bhai A Saheb" and all women as "Bai or Baiji A, or Bai A-ji, or Bai A Saheb", whatever their community—Ji and Saheb being used or dropped as the writer or speaker wished. But the practice started by Gandhiji will be followed in the Harijan weeklies, until he directs otherwise.

Vapi, 7-12-'46

K. G. MASHRUWALA

ACHARYA KRIPALANI'S CONCLUDING ADDRESS

[In the previous number of the Harijan we reproduced some very pertinent extracts from Acharya Kripalani's presidential address delivered at the 54th plenary Session of the Indian National Congress held at Meerut on the 23rd November last. We reproduce below equally pertinent extracts from his concluding speech before the delegates assembled at the Session. — Ed.]

APPEAL FOR UNITY

I told you and repeat that we in India—whether we are Hindus, Mohammedans, Parsis, Christians or followers of any other faith—cannot leave this country. There is no other country that can be ours. We have to live together. Let us live in peace and brotherhood. If we do not so live, nature will make us suffer and after great sufferings we will have to reconcile ourselves to the fact that those whom God united, nobody can separate.

Any Hindu, who offends a Mussalman is doing injustice to his community and his country and any Muslim who offends a Hindu is destroying his religion and the freedom of his country.

NON-VIOLENCE THE ONLY WAY

At the end I would permit myself to address a few words to my younger friends. I have learnt non-violence from Gandhiji. I do not hesitate to tell you that I used to believe in violence and belonged to a group of revolutionaries in 1906 and 1907. Even in the days of my revolutionary life, I hope, I was a brave man and I would not have hesitated to mount the gallows, but I never felt so fearless, so bold, so strong, as when I accepted the creed of non-violence from Gandhiji.

If this country is to rise, it will rise by non-violence and by no other method. We are divided into so many groups—political, economic and religious—that if we use violence against the foreign enemy, we are sure to use that violence against each other also. They who live by the sword shall perish by the sword.

The world has introduced the atom bomb, but something worse will come, unless it takes stock of what it has been doing hitherto.

SUPERIOR METHOD

I do not condemn people because they use violence. Non-violence is a new creed, but I want to place it before you because I have tried both the methods and found that non-violence is the superior method. The light has been lighted and it will guide us whether you wish it or not. If you are going to solve your problems by untruth, by crooked diplomacy, the world's problems will not be solved. In one word the difference between Socialism and Gandhism is that Gandhiji says that the means shall be as pure as your ends are high. High aims cannot be served by crooked means.

This in a nutshell is the difference between Western Socialism and this Eastern Socialism of this old Bania. The world will not be safe from war or strife or bloodshed until this doctrine is accepted, whether you accept it today or tomorrow or after a century. But remember, that the century will be a troublesome century for humanity.

CONGRESS RESOLUTIONS

[Below are reproduced four of the resolutions passed by the Indian National Congress at its 54th Session held at Meerut, on the 23rd and 24th November, 1946. — Ed.]

1

RETROSPECT

This Congress, meeting after six and a half years of war and upheaval and frightfulness, pays its homage to the memory of all those who have given their lives in the cause of India's freedom and all those who have suffered in the struggle for freedom and the emancipation of India's millions.

During these years the world war raged in all its fury, and in India the armed might of an alien imperialist power tried to crush the spirit of freedom and the passionate desire of the Indian people to gain independence. The Indian people resisted this ruthless onslaught and through travail and agony demonstrated their will to freedom. The complete failure and incompetence of an out-of-date political and administrative system resulted in famine which took its toll of millions of lives.

The end of the World War has not brought peace to the world and the appearance of the atom bomb as a weapon of war, with its frightful and horrible powers of destruction, has brought to a crisis the immoral and self-destructive elements of the present day political, economic and spiritual structure of the world. Civilization is likely to destroy itself, unless it gives up its imperialist and acquisitive tendencies and bases itself on the peaceful co-operation of free nations and on the maintenance of the dignity of man.

In India, as elsewhere, the period of transition from the old world, has demonstrated its failure to the new, to which millions look with hope and for which they strive is full of peril, and reactionary forces are everywhere trying to prevent the establishment of a new order of peace and freedom. This Congress has always stood for the full co-operation of free nations and for the removal of political and economic inequality between nations and peoples. India has been and is today the crux of the problem of freedom of subject peoples. On the complete emancipation of the Indian people depends the freedom of vast numbers of others in Asia, Africa and elsewhere. World peace and progress depend upon the solution of the Indian problem. This Congress, therefore, reiterates its firm determination to continue the struggle for India's complete freedom till she becomes an independent nation cooperating with others on an equal basis for the establishment of peace, freedom and progress everywhere. India, by virtue of her past her present position and her potential power, cannot accept a secondary position in the comity of nations.

For more than sixty years the National Congress has led the people of India towards this ideal and through struggle and constructive effort it has built up the strength of the Indian people. It has based itself on high ideals and endeavoured to put before the nation moral standards of conduct both on the individual and on the political plane because it was convinced that greatness of achievement comes to a nation only by keeping high objectives before it and by pursuing methods which are worthy of a great people. In these days of bitter and tragic internal conflict and a lowering of these ideals, this Congress reiterates its faith in the high destiny of India and the ideals which have moved the Indian people. Any weakness, complacency or straying from the straight path to freedom may well imperil the independence for which the people of India have struggled and which is now within their grasp.

The Congress, therefore, calls upon the people to put an end to internecine conflict and to face internal and external dangers as a united people in the spirit in which they have fought in the past for India's independence. That struggle has not ended and may yet require many sacrifices.

2

SOUTH AFRICA

The Congress endorses the resolution passed by the All India Congress Committee on July 6, 1946, congratulating the South African Indians on their resistance to the segregation policy of the White people of that country, and records its satisfaction at the excellent work done by the Indian Delegation to the U. N. O. General Assembly exposing the narrow racialism of the South African Government to the full glare of world opinion. This Congress emphatically refutes the suggestion of Field Marshal Smuts in this connection that the Indian people are also guilty of racialism such as is shamelessly indulged in by the South African Government. The Indian people and all their leaders are energetically engaged in working out the fullest equality to all the nationals inhabiting this large and great country in all walks of life, political, social and economic, and laws of this country discountenance any discrimination whatsoever, whereas the policy of the South African Government and the White minority of that country is flagrantly racial and discriminatory and is a menace to world-peace and civilization.

3

EAST AFRICA

The Indian National Congress endorses the resolution of the Working Committee passed on August 6, 1945, regarding the situation in East Africa. The Congress views with great concern the attempts made in that country to make permanent the restrictions of the war-time period and converting them into a permanent anti-Indian law. The recorded admissions of even the confirmed enemies of Indian progress prove that Indians were in East Africa before any European set his foot on that soil and fully support the claim of the Indians in East Africa that the laws reserving the highlands for the White people and restricting the rights of Indians are most immoral and unjustifiable.

4

COMMUNAL STRIFE

The Congress views with pain, horror and anxiety the tragedies of Calcutta, in East Bengal, in Bihar and in some parts of the Meerut District. The acts of brutality committed on men, women and children fill every decent person with shame and humiliation. These new developments in communal strife are different from any previous disturbances and have involved murders on a mass scale as also mass conversions enforced at the point of the dagger, abduction and violation of women and forcible marriage. These crimes, apparently for political purposes, put an end to all sense of security and are ominous to the peace, tranquility and progress of India.

The responsibility for this widespread brutality must rest with the preaching of hatred and violence for political purposes and the degradation and exploitation of religion for political ends. Responsibility must also rest with those who claim to possess special responsibilities and who, in spite of warning, failed to discharge them and allowed matters to proceed to the extreme limit of endurance.

The Congress would warn the country against all propaganda of violence and hatred. It is not by these methods that the differences between the various communities in India can be settled. They can only be settled by peaceful means. The attempts of the Congress to work out a peaceful and just solution of the communal problem have been repeatedly thwarted by the Muslim League. The advocacy and use of violence will injure the interest of the country as a whole as well as sectional interests. The Congress also warns all communities against revenge and reprisals. The continuance of a vicious circle of reprisal would mean playing into the hands of the internal and external enemies of the nation.

The immediate problem is to produce a sense of security and rehabilitate homes and villages which have been broken up and destroyed. Women who have been abducted and forcibly married must be restored to their homes. Mass conversions which have taken place forcibly have no significance or validity and the people affected by them should be given every opportunity to return to their homes and to the life of their choice.

The Congress reiterates its conviction that the only solution of the communal problem is complete independence from foreign control and appeals to the people not to allow communal passion to sidetrack the national struggle at this last stage of our march to freedom.

Hindustani Prachar Examinations

Hindustani Prachar examinations held on behalf of the Hindustani Prachar Sabha, Wardha, will be held on Sunday, the 16th of February, 1947. Applications from candidates desiring to appear at these examinations should reach the Wardha office through the respective centres with the necessary fees on or before the 15th January 1947. Information about rules for opening new centres and for examinations, names of text books prescribed for the various examinations and other relevant information can be had from the Wardha office.

AMRITLAL NANAVATI
Examination Secretary,

Hindustani Prachar Sabha, Wardha

HARIJAN

December 15

1946

POWER POLITICS IN RELIGION

Whenever enthusiastic apostles of a religion have been seized by the ambition to propagate it by taking the State under their control, blood-shed and inhuman barbarities have followed. In ancient times when the king was supreme in the State, the most convenient method was to induce him to accept that faith, and then to get him to proclaim it as the faith of the realm. This was accompanied with special benefits for its acceptors and penalties for the rejectors. The degree of penalty varied from a simple extra tax to excommunication, imprisonment, mutilation of limbs, torturous death, confiscation of property, exile, forcible conversion of women and the weak, and various other forms of devilry which sadistic ingenuity could invent. It was also sought to be propagated in other countries with the help of fire and sword.

When Devadatta, one of the disciples of the Buddha became estranged from him and decided to form a rival sect, he conceived the idea of taking Ajatashatru, one of the sons of the king of Magadha, under his influence. After doing so, he instigated him to put old king into prison, and install himself on the throne. Then, with his assistance he plotted several times to kill the Buddha himself and persecute his followers.

The story of Prahlad — poetically rendered so as to appear the life-story of a single individual — is a detailed account of barbarous persecution of one religious sect by a ruler owning bigoted allegiance to another.

The history of every important religious sect all the world over relates similar stories of persecution, suffered at the hands of the sect wielding political power and in turn inflicted by it upon others, when it itself (if at all) acquired similar power. Thus in India, the Vediks, the Bauddhas, the Jains, the Lingayats, the Shaivas, the Vaishnavas, the Sikhs, and several of their sub-sects have each suffered persecution at the hands of the sect in power, and (if they have at all ever acquired political power) inflicted in turn similar sufferings upon the followers of rival sects. Similarly, in Europe and Western Asia, the Crusades, the Jehads the persecution of the Christians by the Jews and the Romans at one stage, and of the Jews by the Christians at another, the blood-curdling accounts of the persecution of sects, which dared to differ from the Church (of whatever denomination) in power from the very beginning of the Christian States to almost modern times, and the attempt to suppress Christianity itself in Bolsevic Russia are too well-known features of the history of Europe to be mentioned in detail.

China and Japan have also similar stories to relate.

It is only when the State has put itself above all religious sects and declined to take any notice of the religious faith of its subjects in its public affairs and enjoined similar impartiality upon its servants, that people have enjoyed the liberty of believing as they pleased and learnt to live peacefully with the adherents of other faiths.

After long suffering and hard experience, Indian religious sects developed, as a general habit, the virtue of religious tolerance, and if the term Hinduism has at all to be applied to such widely different systems as Shaivism, Vaishnavism, Jainism, Buddhism, monotheism, polytheism, animism and even atheism etc., perhaps their only common point is toleration towards all faiths.

This truth was first realized by India even before the birth of Christ, though it took some centuries more before it was well imbibed. Probably, by the time Islam first entered the Indian soil, it had taken a firm root. The great Emperor Ashoka, had a full realization of this. Personally he was a devout Buddhist and full of zeal to spread its message throughout the world known to him. Says Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru in his The Discovery of India:

"His messengers and ambassadors went to Syria, Egypt, Macedonia, Cyrene, and Epirus, conveying his greeting and Buddha's message. They went to Central Asia also and to Burma and Siam, and he sent his own son and daughter, Mahendra and Sanghamitra, to Ceylon in the South. Everywhere an appeal was made to the mind and the heart; there was no force or compulsion. Ardent Buddhist as he was, he showed respect and consideration for all other faiths. He proclaimed in an edict:

"All sects deserve reverence for one reason or another. By thus acting a man exalts his own sect and at the same time does service to the sects of other people." (P. 145)

The early Muslim invaders of India, more zealous than experienced, still generally clung to the method of propagating Islam by the power of the State. As however they began to settle down, they were gradually getting sober. But before they fully assimilated the wisdom of keeping the State and its officers above all religious sects, they lost their political power. Consequently, the ambition to enlist the power of the State to serve the cause of a religion still persists, and the idea of creating an Indian Muslim State, populated and governed by Muslims, for furthering what are regarded the special culture and interests of Islam, has taken possession of the minds of the Muslim League leaders. So also some Hindu politicians have been possessed by a similar ambition. And thus power politics has re-entered the domain of religion. In Bengal, the Muslim League has already attained some political power, and even before it has been fully consolidated and secured, we have already had the taste of the havoc which a religion-based State can make in the life of the people.

The Hindus, too, cannot take shelter under the plea that theirs was just a reaction to the evil initiated by the other community in acting as they did in Bihar and other Provinces. They have had ample past experience to realize the evil of power politics in religion. That evil cannot be cured by seeking to create a counter-State to serve the cause of another religion. Hindustan, akhand or khandit, but meaning a State dedicated to the cause of the Hindu religion and culture is no answer to Pakistan, i. e. a State dedicated to the cause of the Muslim religion and culture. Both these, along with the Sikh, Christian, Zoroastrian and other systems, have got to find ways of coalescing mutually to raise a common national—or rather, human—culture, instead of trying to separate from or exterminate others.

Vapi, 26-11-'46

K. G. MASHRUWALA

TRIUMPH OF VALMIKI

About half a century ago Mahamahopadhyaya Harihar Shastri of Bengal published a beautiful novel named Valmiki's Jaya. It has been translated into Marathi, Gujarati and perhaps other Indian languages also, and can be read even now with delight. The story is based on the legend of Vasishtha and Vishvamisra, rival leaders respectively of the Brahman and the Kshatriya clans of India. It was a struggle for political and social supremacy over the part of India then inhabited by the Aryas. The land is represented in the form of kamadheni or the desire-fulfilling cow. A bloody feud raged between the two for, perhaps, several generations with varying success. At first Vasishtha was routed and his hundred sons killed, and his 'cow' taken forcible possession of by Vishvamisra. But it was a short-lived victory. Vasishtha again gathered forces and so completely defeated Vishvamisra, that he was forced to retire into the Himalayas for a long number of years, — perhaps generations. Other Kshatriyas did, of course, carry on some kind of guerilla warfare by invading isolated Brahman colonies, killing the inmates and destroying their ashrams. The family of the young and fiery Parashurama — literally the axe-wielding Rama was one of such sufferers. The murder of his father and brothers so enraged Parashurama that he vowed total extermination of the Kshatriyas, and made it good by inflicting, it is said, twenty-one severe defeats upon them, followed each time with indiscriminate and heartless massacre of the Kshatriyas. They were altogether humbled and it appeared as if the world would become completely emptied of them. It appears that even Vasishtha and his followers had not contemplated this result, but the situation had gone beyond their control and there appeared to be no way of checking Parashurama from his revengeful and blood-thirsty projects. It was a dark and hope-shattering situation.

But very unexpectedly, there appeared on the scene a gentle soul in the shape of Valmiki. He was, if at all, a Brahman of an humble clan, but gifted with great poetical and musical powers, and the still greater faith in his mission. He could not bear this internecine war and was determined not to rest until peace was restored between the Brahmans and the Kshatriyas. He had no weapon but his musical instrument and no carefully worded formula except the one represented by the refrain, 'We all are one, we all are one.' With his band of singers, he visited every Brahman colony and every Kshatriya kingdom, delivering his message of peace, love and unity. His music and songs touched the hearts of his listeners, resulting in a strong movement for unity and peace. Vasishtha and Vishvamisra were reconciled and, though for a long time Parashurama was intractable, he soon discovered that the cry of 'Down with the Kshatriyas' had lost its power of appeal and that he could not get any following. He was compelled to retire before the combination of Vasishtha and Vishvamisra, both of whom supported such friendly Kshatriya houses as those of Ayodhya and Mithila. Valmiki's mission having come to a successful termination, he was requested, as the story goes, to compose the story of Ramayana, for strengthening the Brahman-Kshatriya alliance and depicting the advance which the Aryas would make as a result of such alliance.

There can be no doubt that as between the Hindus and the Mussalmans also the formula discovered by Valmiki, namely, 'We are all one, we are all one,' and the sangathan (organization) arising out of that formula, are the only substantial things which will ultimately triumph.

Vapi, 7-12-'46

K. G. MASHRUWALA

STORY HOUR

(Continued from p. 411)

VI

[This one is from R. C. Trevelyan's Windfalls (Allen and Unwin).—V. G. D.]

Once the Bodhisattva was born as an elephant, who, when he had grown to his full size and beauty and had long been the lord of a great herd of elephants, left his companions and wandered away to a remote forest, surrounded on all sides by a waterless desert. Here he dwelt like a hermit, delighting in the leaves and fruits of the trees, the lotus stalks and the pools of water.

Now one day as he was wandering near the border of the forest, he heard a noise as of a multitude of people moaning and lamenting; so, running swiftly towards the sounds and issuing out of the jungle, he saw at a distance several hundred men, sitting and lying on the ground, overcome by hunger, thirst and fatigue. Though terrified at the sight of so huge an elephant, they were too exhausted for flight, as the Great Being moved slowly towards them, gently waving his trunk in sign of friendliness and saying in a human voice: "Be not afraid. Who are you, sirs? And how came you into this miserable plight?"

At this, recovering confidence, the whole assembly rose and bowed to him; and one of their elders said, "A cruel blast of the king's anger blew us away into banishment in this waste region, O lord of elephants. Yet now by the auspicious sight of thee, we know that we have crossed the desert of calamity."

Then said the elephant, "How many are you, sirs?"

"We were five hundred," said the elder, "when we were driven from our homes; but many of us have perished, overcome by hunger, thirst and despair."

Then moved to compassion, the Great Being said, "Alas, alas, how blind to their own good are those poor helpless rulers! They understand not that the conflagration arising from the oppression of subjects is bound to consume them with all their wickedness and cruelty. Fie upon such ignorance!" And while he stood silent, pondering how he might offer hospitality to his guests, the men with folded hands and tearful eyes implored him to show them how to escape from that dreadful desert, or at least where to find some stream or pool of life-giving water.

Then lifting up his trunk and waving it towards the north, he said to them: "Under yonder steep mountain there is a lake of pure water where you may quench your thirst and rest for a time. Then continuing your way, not far off you will come upon the body of an elephant, who this very day has fallen down a precipice, and lies at the foot of the mountain. Take his flesh to serve you for food, make water-bags of his bowels and fill them with water from the lake. Thus provided, you will soon find your way out of this wilderness without much more hardship."

With that he left them, and hastening out of their sight climbed up the farther side of the mountain to the brink of a great precipice, and there flung his body down to death on the rocks below.

Meanwhile those men, following his directions, soon reached the lake and after drinking and resting awhile, went forward until they found the body of an elephant. Then said some of them, "How like is this elephant to our friend, that lord of elephants!" Others reflected: "This must indeed be our friend who has thrown himself down the cliff, that he might save us from our distress."

Poona, 2-12-'46

URULI-KANCHAN REPORT

Dr. Bhagwat, who is in charge of the Nature Cure Centre started by Gandhiji towards the end of March last at Uruli-Kanchan, near Poona, has sent a six monthly report (April to September, '46) of the work done by him and his colleagues. The following abridgment will give the reader an idea of the activity going on there.

"The Centre was opened by Gandhiji on the 23rd March 1946. He himself could give his direct supervision for a week only. Later on this work was entrusted to me and other co-workers here. The number of patients which was daily increasing during Gandhiji's presence was much reduced after his departure. The real work of treating patients, started from the second week of April and was going on throughout May and June. The number of patients became smaller and smaller after the rainy season had started, as the villagers were busy in their fields and there was some difficulty of communication too.

"The total number of patients treated at the centre was 567. Of these 23 were treated as in-door patients, on account of their serious condition. One delivery case of a woman was also successfully treated. Ten minor operations were performed. Other patients were treated as out-door patients by giving them enema, bath, hip-bath etc., and were asked to observe certain dietetic restrictions at home. Out of the above total number of patients about 300 might have taken full treatment till they were completely cured; others left the treatment, when they found that we gave no medicines, or put restriction on their diet.

"The treatment includes plain water enema, hip bath, simple bath, cold or warm pack, mud pack along with regulation of diet. The latter includes lemon juice, honey, oranges and other acid fruits, soaked and germinated beans and nuts, salads, sweet fruits etc. Cooked food includes bhakari or chapati and vegetables without salt, chillies and spices. Poornanna roti and khichadi are also used at times. Curds and butter milk are freely used as one time meal when necessary.

"The daily expenditure per patient on an average ranges from 8 annas minimum to 2 rupees maximum according to the circumstances and the financial condition of the patient.

Classification of the diseases treated

Disease	Number	Disease	Number
Scabies	84	Head-ache	5
Malaria—enlarged spleen	58	Asthma	5
Constipation	56	Anaemia	5
Fever (ordinary)	39	Round worms	5
Otitis Media	34	T. B. Lungs	4
Wounds	30	Acid Dyspepsia	4
Stomach-ache	24	Piles	4
Conjunctivities	19	Hemiplegia	3
Inflammation	17	Obesity	3
Tooth extraction	17	Pleurisy	2
Diarrhoea	15	Sprain	2
Flatulence	13	Hemicranmia	2
Dyspepsia	13	Mumps	2
Tooth-ache	12	Callstone	1
Cough (Bronchitis)	11	Delivery	1
Uterine Discharge	10	Rheumatism	1
Ring-worm	8	Pneumonia	1
Abscess	8	Biliousness	1
Dysentery	8	Dog-bite not rabid	1
Eczema	7	Fistula in anus	1
		Miscellaneous	31

Total 567

"In our future plan of Hospital work we shall have to make some separate arrangements for a maternity home, and a small surgical theatre. Besides this, we shall also have to organize go-seva for supplying pure milk to the patients. For this we shall have to erect a cowshed in the near future for which we will have to undergo an expenditure of about Rs. 5,000. I hope we shall get cooperation from the right sources at the right time."

Vapi, 7-12-'46

K. G. M.

Errata

In the Harijan of the 24th November, 1946, on p. 411, Column 2, Line 2, for 'Concluded' read 'Continued'.

A NEGRO SAGE

[The growth of Science during the past hundred years has claimed phenomenal progress in the affairs of our world but as all acknowledge today, it has proved to be a doubtful blessing. In a way it stands condemned today in as much as it has lent itself more to devising means for aggression, exploitation and destruction than for the liquidation of human misery. It has brought in its wake various forms of horizontal as well as vertical violence resulting in terrible wars under which mankind lies exhausted and prostrate today.]

Among the long galaxy of eminent scientists of the Western world a few notable exceptions stand out as beacon lights who have loved mankind and laboured all their lives for its true happiness. One such sage rose to eminence from among the humble and despised Negroes of Southern America. He laboured all his long life for improving American agriculture so as to enrich the sources of meeting the basic needs of the humblest farm labourer, in the shape of more food and comfort. The following has been taken from The American Pictorial (1944, special Indian Edition of Victory Magazine) for the benefit of our constructive workers. —S. A.]

George Washington Carver was an American, who, in a long lifetime of unselfish achievement, demonstrated, besides the creative greatness of his own mind, the surpassing quality of a man's growth in a free country. He rose from destitute beginnings to be acclaimed as one of the greatest agricultural scientists of modern times. He transformed the farm economy of half a nation, and gave to a grateful world the benefits of his hundreds of practical discoveries and accomplishments in agricultural chemistry.

Carver was born in 1864, near Diamond Grove, Missouri, in the central part of the southern United States. His parents were Negro slaves; but Carver never knew them. When the child was scarcely six months old, he and his mother (his father was already dead) were carried off by bandits. The baby was ransomed for a broken-down race horse, but his mother was never heard of again. In 1865, slavery was abolished by constitutional amendment, and a White planter, Moses Carver, took the infant into his household, gave him his name, and raised him to do domestic chores.

Hungry for education, the boy soon struck out for himself. At first he slept in barns and haylofts, seeking work from farm to farm, but was soon taken in her home by the kindly Muriah Watkins, worked for his food at whatever job she set for him and attended a rural school. He went on to high school, supporting himself mainly by taking in washing. Carver, then in his twenties, journeyed to Iowa, where he opened a small laundry to earn enough money to enter college. Menial jobs supported him through three years at Simpson College. Then Carver went on to finish four years of agricultural studies at the Iowa State College at Ames. There his distinctive knowledge of soils and plants earned him a place on the faculty.

In 1896, George Washington Carver went to Tuskegee, Alabama, to open an agricultural laboratory at the newly-founded Tuskegee Institute. The construction of this laboratory and its 16-acre experimental farm is an everlasting tribute to Carver's resourcefulness and creative will. At Tuskegee, he was confronted with an empty building, with no funds for equipment; his experimental farm was a bare tract of sandy, impoverished soil. Carver sent his students into the swamps and woods armed with buckets and pails. Day after day they brought back muck and leaf mold to form a topsoil. Carver constructed a stove for heat, made laboratory equipment from materials on hand—kitchen cups, old bottles, inkstands, pieces of iron and wood salvaged from the rubbish heap.

Carver began his experiments with the clay-filled Alabama soil. He showed farmers how to build it up to produce more cotton per acre. On the school farm Carver harvested one of Alabama's first bale-to-the-acre cotton crops. He further contributed to the economic rehabilitation of the South by introducing new, favourable crops. He taught Southern farmers how two sweet potato crops could be harvested each year instead of one. "Everyone told me," he said in later years, "that the soil was unproductive. But it was the only soil I had. It was not unproductive. It was only unused." Today, in addition to cotton and tobacco, the sweet potato and peanut are major crops in the American South.

Carver then demonstrated that these plants had not exhausted their bounty. He took the sweet potato into his laboratory and proceeded to make from it a hundred useful products, such as starch, vinegar, glue, molasses, dyes, and fertilizers. Turning to the peanut, long called worthless, he transmuted it into more than 300 commodities, including coffee, milk, printer's ink, linoleum, flour, medicinal oil, paper and axle grease.

Working always with the natural resources around him, Carver began experimenting with slash pine—an abundant wood in the South—and turned it into paper. This achievement opened what is today a flourishing industry in a number of Southern States. To the shy, kindly, patient scientist, gifted with what his neighbors called "green fingers," there was no such thing as waste. He found a use for wood shavings—synthetic marble. Cornstalks, sawdust and cotton stalks were transformed into insulating boards and paving blocks. Turning to the flowers of the field, he made paper from the vines and stems of wistaria, sunflowers and wild hibiscus.

Carver believed that people could live all their lives on the things that grew within a hundred yards around them. To prove this thesis, he gathered local weeds, flowers, wild fruit and dooryard shrubs, and turned much of this unusual harvest into edible, nourishing dishes, including soups, cheeses, marmalades and roasts. Carver wrote his recipes into pamphlets, which were freely distributed throughout the country.

To convey his methods and accomplishments to the farmer, whom he wanted to be the free beneficiary of his labors, Carver converted a second-hand buggy into a mobile agricultural school. Loading the carriage with exhibits, he borrowed a horse and made regular tours of the Alabama countryside, lecturing Macon County farmers in fields and barn yards, giving away free his agrarian discoveries. Carver's was the first of the "movable schools", which today, housed in motor truck and trailer and sponsored by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, cover large areas of the South.

Carver had one hobby—if indeed it was. That was art. He won some distinction as a painter of landscapes and natural subjects, and one of his finest canvases—the Yucca Plant—hangs in the Tuskegee Institute gallery. Even this aesthetic interest could not be divorced from his scientific impulse and his philosophy of use. Carver made his paints from the clays of Macon County. He showed farmers they could get good, inexpensive paint for their houses and barns from their own soil. From this Alabama clay he also made face powder, pottery and dyes. Lint scraped up in the cotton gins was shown by Carver to be highly useful; he turned it into paving blocks, cordage and rugs.

Thomas A. Edison, American inventor of the electric light and early motion picture and sound recording instruments, once offered Carver a position in his laboratory. Carver declined, for he believed his life's work to be in Alabama. He cared nothing for money. He gave his professional advice and services without thought of remuneration. His salary cheques at Tuskegee piled up for years in the treasurer's office, and he did not use them until shortly before his death.

When Carver developed a peanut oil of therapeutic value in paralysis cases, he turned it over, without patent, to the medical profession. When a group of peanut growers rewarded him for helping them eradicate a disease which had preyed on their nut trees, Carver returned the money. Once he donated his formula for making synthetic marble out of peanut hulls to a factory in the neighboring state of Mississippi. The factory had difficulty with the process and tried to persuade Carver to join the firm. When he refused, the company moved to Tuskegee, where it could have the benefit of his guidance—which he gave gratis.

In 1939, Carver was awarded the Roosevelt Medal for distinguished work in the field of science. The following year, stooped and white-haired, the reticent, benevolent seventy-six-year old scientist established the George Washington Carver Foundation, built with his life's savings, for the purpose of furthering research in agricultural chemistry. Three years later he died.

The name of George Washington Carver is symbolic of more than scientific achievement and human genius; it has a great deal of significance for those who scrutinize the meaning of freedom, for all those who yearn, for all who aspire to walk in their own ways, independently, and with dignity and glad hope. The United States had been at war a little over a year when George Washington Carver died in January, 1943. Shortly afterward, a Liberty ship slid down the ways bearing Carver's name across its bows—a fitting salute to a man who gave much in return for freedom. It was not a deliberate, premeditated exchange, for that is not the essence of freedom. Carver lived in a society which let him govern his own growth and destiny. His benefactions were this society's incidental, unsolicited reward. In July, 1943, the Congress of the United States voted funds for a monument to Carver, to be erected near Diamond Grove, Missouri, where he greeted the world as a slave.

The Official Attitude

A correspondent sends the following:

"It would be worthwhile for the Director of the influential British daily paper who saw you last week at New Delhi to peruse the following, to understand the causes of the present unending trouble.

"His Excellency the Viceroy is closely and conscientiously following the footsteps of his guru Allenby. I quote below for ready reference:

"If our avowed policy of training the Egyptians to govern themselves was sincere and meant anything, it was useless to interfere and take the directions into one's own hands as soon as any difficulty arose. If the Ministers and the officials were to learn to govern, if the police were to be efficient in keeping order, if the Egyptian army was to be able to support their authority at need, then, they must face to learn their difficulties and dangers by themselves and must not rely on the British when anything disconcerting or alarming took place." (From Allenby—a study in Greatness by Wavell, pp. 49-50.)

"We have only to read "Indians" instead of "Egyptians" and then we ought to give credit for the above policy. Yet we have seen how pitiable were the appeals made to the authorities to intervene during the last two weeks. This proves your theory; but to complete the whole picture and silence the arguments once and for all the following could be read with profit:

"In a letter to his mother on May 20th 1921, (after some disturbances had taken place) Allenby wrote:

"I bide my time as I want the Egyptians to settle their politics for themselves and don't want to interfere with my troops unless the life, limb or interests of Europeans are in danger."

"This is plain, simple and convincing reading. I hope the journalist friend could be advised to guide his kith and kin and the powers that be to leave 'India to God or anarchy' as you had once declared. That is the only one solution but unfortunately its application will always be delayed. The British Forces have not yet left Egypt."

Wardha, 5-12-'46

K. K.

CONTENTS	PAGE
A SIGN OF PROGRESS ... M. K. GANDHI	445
QUESTION BOX ... K. G. MASHRUWALA	445
ACHARYA KRIPALANI'S
CONCLUDING ADDRESS ...	446
CONGRESS RESOLUTIONS	446
POWER POLITICS
IN RELIGION ... K. G. MASHRUWALA	448
TRIUMPH OF VALMIKI ... K. G. MASHRUWALA	449
STORY HOUR ... V. G. D.	449
URULI-KANCHAN REPORT... K. G. M.	450
A NEGRO SAGE	451
NOTES:
HINDUSTANI PRACHAR EXAMINATIONS	447
THE OFFICIAL ATTITUDE ... K. K.	452

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad
Subscription Rates—INLAND: One year, Rs. 6; Six months, Rs. 3; FOREIGN: One year Rs. 8 or 14. sh. or £ 3.

HARIJAN

12 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 46

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1946

TWO ANNAS

SCRIPTURE FOR DEVILRY !

When man seeks to invoke sanction of religious scriptures in order to support his own inner lust, ambition or other forms of self-indulgence, or for inciting others to such acts or conduct; or when he seeks to clothe such acts with religious or moral aims and ideals, it is such abuse of religion and ethics that one would fain desire that no religious or ethical codes had ever existed.

When man feels that a course of action or conduct cannot stand the test of the straight reasoning of a discriminating human being and is seized, nonetheless, with the desire to indulge in it, and to incite others to do so, he is tempted to invoke the authority of religion in its support, and thus, whether or not does he mislead and deceive himself, he certainly misleads hundreds of simple people.

These thoughts have been provoked by two questions asked by a correspondent of obviously thoughtful and studious habits. The questions are:

"(1) The war of the Mahabharata is represented as a dharma-yuddha, or right war. Yet, it was admittedly an internecine one. It was no better than what we call (in modern parlance) a civil or a fratricidal war. Can such fighting be called a right war? If so, why not call the present communal riots too a right war? Is it not being invoked for resisting unjust demands of one community against the other? How can we go on submitting to them ad infinitum? Is not a stubborn fight against such bullying a just and proper war?"

"(2) The great Krishna during the Mahabharata war had vowed not to use arms, but relented at a critical moment and took up the Sudarshana Chakra against Bhishma. Why should not Mahatma Gandhi similarly relent and allow as much violence for a while?"

The answer is, that until a man has tried to thresh out for himself the ethical aspect of a problem facing him by a process of independent and straight reasoning, there is no occasion to search for religious or historical sanctions; nay, it is improper to do so.

Let us leave alone the issues of Akhanda Hindustan or Pakistan for a moment and examine the riots in terms of humanity and its interests dispassionately. Let us ask ourselves whether the barbarous acts of massacre, arson and worse, that took place in Calcutta, East Bengal, Bihar and other places, and the stabbings etc., that continue in so many cities and towns are consistent with right human conduct. Do our higher and humane emotions justify the exhibition of this bestiality? What madness has possessed us, that if we are Hindus and see a crowd of helpless Muslims or if we are Muslims and see a crowd of helpless Hindus, we should thirst for their blood and visit them with fire and sword, ravish their women, indiscriminately kill old and infirm men and women and tender children and then try to justify these acts of devilry by quoting scriptures in their support? What do the poor starving peasants and the Namashudras of Noakhali, or Muslim village peasants of Bihar or the fishermen of Kolaba and their womenfolk understand about Akhanda Hindustan or Pakistan, and why either of the two should endanger their lives, property and honour? Why should these political ambitious demand a toll of their blood and bring ruin upon them? What has a Hindu or a Muslim pedestrian going about his business done to deserve a sudden stab in the back at the hand of the other, to make you feel sympathetic, not with the victim, but with the assailant?

The fact is that the lust of war with its associate vices has not yet been extinguished from the human breast. That is why it flares up time and again under one pretext or another. It is fanned by the ambitions of a few influential individuals and thereafter involves millions of innocent human beings, destroys property worth billions and trillions, and brings untold hardships, penury and ruin on whole populations. Various ingenious reasons are adduced to tempt simple people into the net. The slogan of 'Religion in danger' is one such device. Under its spell they turn erstwhile simple people into ferocious fanatics, worse than the beasts of prey and mad elephants.

If you were to tell the people, "You are beasts, so behave like beasts", it is obvious, few would follow you. But it serves your purpose excellently if you tell them, "This killing is ordained by God and by the Holy Scriptures. It is a sacrifice of the highest merit; it is an act of service to God and is good religious conduct; it is the royal road to attain Divine Grace; it blesses both the killers and the killed; for, if you are killed, you will enter the gates of Heaven; and if you kill or convert, you prevent your opponent from going further astray. If you do not participate in this holy war, your religion and culture would perish." Under the influence of such strong 'spirits' of religious fanaticism men become far more intoxicated and insane than under that of alcohol.

To revert to the correspondent's questions: there is little to compare in the present riots in the country with the war of the Mahabharata. That was a family feud over rights of kingship between two rival royal families and followed the then prevailing cannons of war. Both sides, after a formal declaration of war, mustered their warriors on an open battlefield and fought to a finish. The commonly accepted rules of war were generally observed by both the sides. None but the participating warriors was so much as touched. Even fighting warriors observed commonly accepted rules of attack as well as defence. And whenever any one deviated, he was reprimanded and repudiated even by his own side. Thus certain ethical cannons were accepted and duly observed by the belligerents even while at war. Hence it was customary in those days to call such a war a right war, i. e. in consonance with the law (dharma).

Nothing of this can be said of the present murders, loots, fires, rapes or conversions. A big mob belonging to one community makes a sudden attack upon a smaller group of the other community or even a solitary wayfarer, and massacres wholly innocent people. None among the attackers is a brave warrior, none among the victims is a guilty culprit. There is no general openly commanding the campaign. The wire-pullers behind these dastardly attacks and acts are men who elect to work in the dark, are anxious to save their own skin, and carry on their nefarious designs by inciting simple and credulous people, or by engaging hooligans with the help of money and other base temptations. They are heartless men of inhuman and anti-social propensities. May be, some of them are leading men in society. Nonetheless, they are not its well-wishers but ambitious monsters stalking the land in human form. They have little concern with any religion whatever.

If the present riots have to be compared with any ancient episode, they may be compared with the cold-blooded massacre of the sleeping sons of the Pandavas and other fighters in the Pandava camp, perpetrated in the dead of night by Ashvatthama and Kripacharya, the solitary survivors of the Kaurava camp. The mutual fratricidal fighting of the Yadavas of Dwaraka also may be cited in comparison.

The other instance cited by the correspondent is the wielding of the Sudarshana Chakra by Shri Krishna in violation of his self-imposed vow, in order to save a critical situation. The suggestion is, if Shri Krishna could do it, why not Gandhiji? Why should he not modify his non-violence a little to meet an exasperating situation? And if Gandhiji is not an adept at wielding violence, he should ask some one else to do so!

The question may be answered with a counter-question. Gandhiji in his boyhood, as narrated in his autobiography, resorted to stealing and smoking behind the back of his father. If the correspondent's son were to put him a poser by asking him, "What objection can you have, then, if I stole or smoked? And since I am not going to be a Mahatma, there can be nothing wrong about it!" How will the father appreciate this? If this story of breaking the vow is true, it only means that even Krishna, great as he was, was still human and liable to err. That is why the great epic proceeds also to record that he was put to shame by Bhisma for the attempted lapse and also promptly stopped by his disciple-friend Arjuna.

We may not forget the good injunction given to graduates in the old universities that even masters are to be followed by the disciples in their good acts only and not in their faults and frailties.

The sooner we get rid of this communal poison, the better for our country. Indeed, this evil is a worse epidemic than plague, typhoid, cholera or small-pox. If one of these latter is on, say, in Bengal, surely, we will not think of introducing the contagion in Bihar or other provinces as an effective preventive; rather, if we are wise and alert, we shall take prophylactic measures to prevent it from spreading elsewhere. For instance, we might devise serums and inoculations to protect healthy persons, drink boiled water, spray disinfectants, segregate the victims, erect quarantines, etc. Can it ever be that the measures to fight the communal virus in Bengal should be to introduce it in another place? Can such an act be ever conducive to the nation's health? It is only when a people bids good-bye to straight thinking that perverse ideas receive a hearing and pass for bold measures and right cures.

Vapi, 3-12-'46 K. G. MASHRUWALA
(From the original in Gujarati)

Commendable

Shri Vidyananda Jayaswal, a local magistrate of Sahibganj (S. P.), Bihar has sent the following report in Hindustani of how his own presence of mind and courage, prevented a deadly clash between the local Hindus and Mussalmans. He says:

"In the evening of 5-11-'46 i. e. Bakra Id day, in spite of the curfew order in Sahibganj, people were shouting cries of Allah ho Akbar etc. in the butchers' locality. On the other side in the Hindu street people were shouting Jai Kali Noakhali, Mahavir Swamiki Jai, etc. with blowing of conch shells. I ran to the butchers' locality where I saw hundreds of Mussalmans armed with naked swords, pick-axes, spears etc., intent upon invading the Hindu locality. The Hindus too had assembled, ready to advance with lathis, etc. Had I hesitated even for two minutes, the ground would have been strewn with a number of corpses. Seeing that there was no other remedy to bring the situation under control, I, accompanied by none and absolutely unarmed, rushed into the Mussalmans' crowd and snatched away swords and spears from a number of them; I told them how shameful and foolish their conduct was and exhorted them to retire quietly to their own homes. The non-violent remedy shown by Mahatmaji was successful by the grace of God and all the Mussalmans quietly returned to their houses. I then went to the Hindu locality and tried the same remedy. The effect was so salutary that nothing untoward has happened in our town since then."

Sabarmati, 17-12-'46

N. P.

MEDIUM OF INSTRUCTION

[The following passages on the subject of the Medium of Instruction and the place of English in the curricula of our schools and colleges are taken from the convocation address of the Nagpur University delivered by Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel at Nagpur on the 30th of November, 1946—Ed.]

MEDIUM OF INSTRUCTION

The University's decision to make the mother tongue the medium of instruction is of great significance. During the last quarter of a century we have realized that the use of a foreign language as the medium of instruction is an obstacle to the mental growth of students. They have to spend a lot of time in acquiring a vocabulary, and even then it cannot be said that they appreciate the correct meaning of the words they use. Words denote objects. A child first sees objects and then learns the words by which he can describe them to others. This process begins early in childhood and continues throughout life. After learning to use one word for a particular object, if a child has to learn another, it naturally feels the strain, specially when it has to memorize the second word with an effort as it does not hear it used by other children. The strain in fact is so great that the child remembers only the word without being familiar with the object which it describes. When a foreign language is the medium of instruction, children have not only to strain themselves to memorize words, but have to struggle to understand what is taught. Thus the habit of cramming is encouraged, while the capacity to comprehend is impaired.

All this is self-evident. But our educational system is such and we have been so enslaved by it that many of us do not fully understand even this simple problem. Thirty years ago the Sadler Commission recommended the use of the mother tongue as the medium of instruction. Later when Mahatma Gandhi appeared on the Indian scene and started his country-wide campaigns, he emphatically declared that instruction through the medium of English, instead of helping us to improve, was leading to our decay. During those days some Vidyapiths or national universities were started. As they were independent of Government control, they were free to follow their own system and use their own medium of instruction. They tried to impart education through the medium of the Indian languages and showed that even higher education could be given in the Indian languages. They demonstrated that it took much less time in teaching a person in an Indian language and the student learnt more about the subjects he studied. Despite this, not one University in British India has started imparting education through the medium of the Indian languages from the lowest to the highest class and done away with English. By deciding to teach in the Indian languages your university has set a very good example. By following in your footsteps other universities can render real help in imparting true education.

I know there are difficulties which have prevented other universities from taking a similar decision. Without effort, no difficulty can be overcome and it is cowardice not to try. True courage consists in overcoming difficulties. Most men are lazy by nature. Laziness is not merely physical, it is mental also. Most of us suffer from mental sloth. We do not try to get out of the rut. We seem to consider it a waste of energy to try to break old traditions. It is because of our inertia that our universities have followed their old traditional ways. Otherwise, there is no reason why we should not have got a sufficient number of text-books in the Indian languages on subjects which it has been difficult to teach in our own languages, particularly in higher classes. Your university has acted with courage and foresight in changing the medium of instruction despite the paucity of text-books. It would be wise to go ahead with the job and grapple with the difficulties as and when they arise. This was the only way of solving the difficulty and your university has shown that where there is a real desire to get things done, means can always be found to do it. I hope you will go ahead with determination. And when instruction is imparted from the highest class to the lowest in the Indian languages, you will see that there is a great saving of the students' time, their knowledge will be more comprehensive and they will enter life with their mental faculties fully developed.

THE PLACE OF ENGLISH

Introduction of the Indian languages in our schools and colleges does not mean that we do not want to learn or provide facilities for the teaching of foreign languages. No country in the world can live in isolation. Every country has to maintain contact with the outside world. For this, knowledge of foreign languages is necessary. But every national of a country does not come in contact with outsiders. Only a few come in touch with foreigners, and they should learn foreign languages. Knowledge of foreign languages is also necessary for those who want to keep themselves abreast of world thought. Those who want to travel abroad or carry on trade with other countries must have some knowledge of foreign languages. Such people are, however, a fraction of the population of a country and have to attain only that much proficiency which is absolutely necessary.

Every country, however, must have men who can translate in their own language the best of the books in foreign languages and make them available to their countrymen. For this it is necessary for people to learn foreign languages and visit foreign countries. The necessary facilities must be provided for them. We must not at the same time forget that 99 out of every 100 people have to stay in their own country and do not need the knowledge of foreign languages. Thus universities, while providing facilities for teaching foreign languages to one out of every 100 students, must not neglect the education of the remaining 99.

(From the original in Hindustani)

HARIJAN

December 22

1946

VILLAGE INDUSTRIES AND THE STATE

[Almost all the Congress Governments have been paying their attention to the subject of village industries, some of the provinces having a special minister for the purpose. The Bombay Government has appointed a committee under the chairmanship of Shri Manu Subedar "to consider and report on the measures necessary for the promotion of rural handicrafts and industries, including different forms of State aid, and also to consider what restrictions, if any, should be placed on the movement of raw materials for industries in rural areas from the point of view of utilizing local resources for local consumption, processing or manufacture." In the following article I have discussed a few aspects of the subject. It is not meant to be exhaustive, but just introduces a number of points which I feel have been rather overlooked.]

In the first place, I would wish to urge that it will not be sufficient, in view of the enormous changes that have taken place in our modern life and of the progress of applied science, to consider only the dead and dying industries of the village. It is necessary also to enquire into the modern life of our people, to take note of the new articles or of old articles in new forms, which they have begun to consume and to consider how many of these or suitable substitutes thereof are capable of being produced in village areas. Some of these would be for local consumption, but others might well be produced for towns also.

Self-sufficiency of the village in respect of essential requirements is a good goal so far as it goes. But it should not exhaust the scope of village industries. If villages are not to be allowed to be emptied of their talented and plucky men and if it is agreed that it is not very desirable to allow towns and cities to expand without limit regarding their population and area, the villages and kasbas near about villages should be encouraged to become centres of suitable small-scale industries for supplying some of the necessities of the cities. The guiding principle in this respect should be that wherever the basic material of a finished article is essentially a village produce, the villagers should be encouraged to turn it themselves into a finished product and send it to the town in a finished form.

Thus, for instance, biscuits of various kinds, bread-loaf, preserves, pickles, ready-made masalas, papads, sweets, tooth-powders, canned fruits, starch, leather articles, herbs, drugs and a host of other things made out of village materials or waste, have now become articles of daily use for both the towns-people and the villagers. Some of them are needed also for large scale industries. The raw material for these is produced in villages or gathered from adjoining forests, and yet they have to be imported from cities even by the villages producing them. If the State provided facilities for the starting of such industries in the villages and village-towns, they will become thriving places and young men will not be tempted to overcrowd the cities to find remunerative employment.

To achieve this the guidance and assistance by the State should in my opinion take the following forms:

(a) It should be clearly realized that a large-scale industry cannot but ultimately kill a small-scale industry of the same type. It is not merely a question of "Power" versus human or animal energy. Even if you provide "Power"—energy to every village, the village-industry will not thrive if there is no limit set upon the size to which a factory might be allowed to expand. Therefore, one of the essential things to be settled is to set down the limit to which a factory, which is capable of being started in village areas, should be allowed to expand in the province. If industrialization of the village is the aim, it goes without saying that you picture hundreds of work-shops scattered all over the province. Necessarily, therefore, its productive capacity must be limited to moderate quantities and, if necessary, the movement of the finished product must also be confined to limited areas in normal times. Of course, each industry would have to be considered by itself, and it may not be possible to lay down any general rule.

(b) Subject to correction, I feel that it is not merely the use of mechanical power, which comes in the way of village or manual industries. The village artisan has always been handicapped for want of capital on easy terms. Take, for instance, the tanning industry. The smallest village tanner, in order to have work throughout the year, must have a sufficient stock of hides, lime, harda, bark, colours, some chemicals and various other things purchased at the right season and preserved in well built godowns. If he has to tan leather which will fetch him the full price, he must have a full sized pucca soak-pit to spread his hides in, without folds, instead of an earthen tub, often smaller than a bath tub, which is all that he can at present afford to have. Even for these small requirements, the village tanner is dependent either upon a village money-lender charging a high rate of interest, or a middleman who advances him the necessary materials as and when required but purchases the finished product at his own price. Though nominally an independent artisan, in effect his earnings are less than that of a labourer doing similar work in a capitalist's factory. To call him an independent artisan is a misnomer. Actually he is a sweated labourer engaged on piece-work.

The large-scale industrialist, on the other hand, is not only able to produce goods more rapidly and in larger quantities, but by reason of advances made available to him on easy terms, has an advantage over the villager in every detail of the industry, including sales, though the amount of capital needed by him, hide for hide, may be greater than that by the villager, and a considerable part of it may have to be spent in purchasing foreign machinery and materials.

If the above description is correct then, if village industries are to be encouraged, the provision of capital on easy terms must be regarded a primary condition for the fulfilment of the aim. By easy terms, I mean, on rates of interest actually less than those on which large-scale industrialists are able to get it. Personally, I am opposed to the institution of interest altogether. But I shall not labour that point here. But I strongly feel that the present practice, which enables large industrialists to get cheaper money than the small one cannot but ultimately kill the small industry. Even co-operative societies, I believe, do not get capital on as easy terms as the capitalist companies. Morally, a man who labours with his own hands ought to be given more credit than one who only drives labourers to work under a shed.

Not being the master of his own industry, the village artisan does not feel much interested in improving the quality of his work, or in learning new and improved methods of work, inspite of the efforts of gram-sevaks.

(c) After making the artisan feel assured that, provided he is honest and diligent, he will not have to vegetate for want of funds to start and carry on his business, the next item of assistance needed is instruction in improved methods of manufacture. Village industry ought not to mean crudely manufactured articles. There is no reason why villagers or patrons of village industries should be asked to be satisfied with indifferently or badly made things. There was once a time when village-made things used to be actually superior in make to the same things turned out from factories. "Cheap and nasty" was the attribute of factory-made and not hand-made or village-made articles. It is no longer so. On the contrary, the village article has deteriorated into "costly and crude". Clean, sorted and properly classified raw materials, tools kept in order, scientific method of handling them, precision in size, quality and calculations, proper testing of the turned-out work at every important stage, and a degree of elegance and beauty are some of the essentials, which have been till now largely neglected in our industrial activities. Even the so-called experts often betray not only a lack of knowledge about these matters, but even the sense for them. This is a matter, which requires considerable amount of supervision by instructors and inspectors knowing their job and capable of giving demonstrations to the village artisans. The State should help the industries by organizing this kind of work. The duty of inspectors should not be merely to pass or reject articles submitted for inspection but to give all possible guidance to the under-instructed worker to manufacture better things.

I wonder if we have an adequate number of people fit for this kind of work; a large staff of this kind of officers will have to be created. No "planning" or "budgeting" may be expected to succeed without such knowing organizers.

(d) Then, village industries must be protected (i) against the inroads of synthetic substitutes (like artificial cloth) which are trying to displace manufactures made from original materials and (ii) against the tendency of capitalist concerns to deprive the villagers and actual workers of the use of their produce in order to obtain better prices abroad either of the natural produce itself or of artificial products made from it. Thus, often, not an ounce of milk finds its way into the stomach of the calf, or the children of the owner of the cow or the buffalo, or the servants of a dairy, but is either sent away to the town for being sold at a higher price, or turned into preserved milk, pedas, powder, and even manufactured into various luxury products meant for any use except food. This view of industrialization is harmful, but even industrial concerns organized for philanthropic and charitable objectes are not free from it. Private ownership is only a secondary attribute of capitalism. The eye to make a concern as profitable as possible is the chief aim, and it is this, which deprives the masses of even bare necessities.

How this can be done is a pertinent question:

(i) To a certain extent the question leads us into the sphere of the very structure of the Indian Swaraj Government. Decentralization of industry will have to go hand in hand with decentralization of the Government of the country. In a way there is decentralization of Government even today. But it is decentralization of administrative work i.e. carrying out orders and policies dictated from a powerful centre. There is no power of initiation in the village or other suitable but small units, and if villages are to thrive, this must be brought about.

(ii) The masses must feel as realistically as they feel the help of the rain and the sun, that they can themselves plan their life, and there is a Government to help them with capital and transport and other facilities and who are better equipped with instructors of technical knowledge than they themselves are, and that this assistance will be available to them almost as of right and assuredly without favouritism or demand for bakshis. Incorruptible, fully trained, courteous and confidence-inspiring public servants are the sine qua non of the economic regeneration of the people. Every effort should be made to raise the character of public servants and they should be transformed into real servants of the people out of their present mentality of having the amaldars over them. While on the one hand their services must not be at the mercy of local or provincial party-groups, on the other hand they must also be made responsible to the local administration instead of being its dictators.

(iii) This itself is impossible without simultaneous rise in the moral character of the people generally and of the politicians in particular. The evil of power-politics in the interest of groups and cliques is a great demoralizer of public life, and not much good will ensue as long as it continues.

(iv) Owing to the absence of the above conditions, the co-operative movement, which has done so much good in the Western countries has not been so successful in ours. Even village or decentralized Swaraj will not be a substitute for co-operative societies, which must become the principal pivot of industrial efforts in the village.

(v) Much has to be done in the direction of improvement of village machinery and tools. Two opposite movements have been going on simultaneously in this direction. One lays emphasis on making machines and tools as simple as possible, even in the direction of discarding the simple tools used from immemorial times. This is good in so far as it points to the fact that want of tools and implements need not make people feel helpless in producing their essential necessities and a start can be made in village industries without awaiting the arrival of readymade implements. The will is more needed than the tools.

The other movement lays emphasis upon increasing the productive capacity of the worker by placing at his disposal better implements and tools, even if they are to a certain extent more complicated and depend upon tool-manufacturing factories for their supply and repairs.

I think both the movements have a place, but in the long run the second is more important and permanent. Our wants have increased not only in the number of different articles consumed, but also in the quantity of each article consumed. And so quantitative increase in production cannot be ignored. Whether and how far this must necessarily lead to the use of power-driven machinery is a thing which cannot be foretold now. If our ambition is not to capture foreign markets — often done even by keeping one's own countrymen unprovided — but to make the country self-sufficient and to liquidate unemployment in the first instance, power-driven machinery may well have to be tabooed in the manufacture of a good many articles. The use of power-energy must come after human energy, if in spite of full employment, it is found insufficient to cope with the demand. And so, inventive ingenuity must, at any rate for the present, be largely concentrated on increasing the productive capacity of the machine driven by human or animal power only. But within this limit, there is no harm in perfecting it as fully as possible.

Particularly, improvements in machinery, which, even if they do not help a strong man, place a weak man on a par with the strong one, should be most welcome. For instance, it is possible that a strong man may be able to spin as much yarn as he needs on the takli, and almost in the same time, as a weak man would do on a dhanush takli or the charkha. If, therefore, self-sufficiency is the only aim, a strong man would not care to go in for the other implement. But it would make the weak man desiring to be self-sufficient quite helpless. While with the dhanush takli or the charkha, he would be able to meet his own demand. This is but a simple example. But if we consider production of wealth for the nation, and the employment of the weak and the old people, inventive genius would find a large field opened before it. Every encouragement should be given to persons making such improvements in tools as places the weak-bodied, the under-nourished or the cripple as much as possible by aid of mechanical means on a par with the able-bodied adult.

Important as it is, I refrain from referring to the Wardha Scheme of Education. It is sufficient to say that I regard its diligent and intelligent application to be important not only for the economic regeneration of the country, but also for the whole education of man.

I also omit to dwell at length on the necessity of unifying or, at least, coordinating the activities of the various departments of Government, and simplifying the administrative machinery.

Both the points, I take, have been adequately stressed already by others.

Vapi, 29-11-'46

K. G. MASHRUWALA

Notes

Personal

None of us four, who have been asked by Gandhiji to look to the editing of the Harijan weeklies while he and his companions are engaged in restoring friendship between the Hindus and Muslims of East Bengal, feels at ease in writing for the English edition. Though I happen to be a more frequent contributor to the English columns than either Shri Vinoba, Kaka Kalelkar or Narhari Parikh, my command over English is even poorer than theirs. My vocabulary is too small for a modern writer, and I am never sure about the correctness of my grammar and idioms. But for the helping-hand of Gandhiji himself or Shri Mahadev Desai, or Rajkumari Amrit Kaur or Pyarelalji, I could have rarely found place in the Harijan, which has always set a standard in good English. I have no such helpers here, and I am afraid that amongst us four, I may have to do a greater part of the job. There is, therefore, every likelihood of the standard of English deteriorating. I request the reader to overlook whatever linguistic defects he might notice in the English edition. He will remember that English is not our mother-tongue. I would also advise editors of provincial editions of the Harijan to prefer the Hindustani edition (Harijansevak) to the English to translate from for their weeklies.

Vapi, 9-12-'46

India Vindicated

India has reason to rejoice and feel justly proud over the signal successes scored by Shrimati Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit and her able colleagues at the Assembly of the United Nations Organization against South Africa. Her task was by no means easy. She had to win her case against the veteran Premier of South Africa Field-Marshal Smuts — one of the ablest and most reputed statesmen of the day, who put up tough fight at every stage. He had the backing of the British Government itself and of other major partners of the British Commonwealth. Shrimati Pandit's spirited but dignified advocacy of a just cause won universal applause and helped India to gain the sympathy of many member countries. It was significant that while China, Russia, France and most Asiatic countries supported India at various votings, U. S., Great Britain, Canada, Netherlands, Belgium etc., were found ranged against her.

The veteran General Smuts encountered an equally spirited opposition from the Indian Delegation on the South-west Africa annexation issue. And here too, the South African Premier was deservedly defeated.

It is remarkable that almost from early commencement of India's struggle in South Africa, a major part of our success has been due to the part played by Indian women. The names of the late Kasturba Gandhi and Shrimati Sarojini Devi will always be cherished with reverence and pride. And now again it was a daughter of India—perhaps the only lady delegate in the UNO—who dominated the scene. She has indeed raised India's prestige in the eyes of the world.

The 31 Nations who supported India also deserve our warmest thanks. By championing the cause of fundamental human rights and relationship they have enhanced the prestige of the UNO and inspired hope among the oppressed nations.

Vapi, 12-12-'46

Destruction of Monkeys

A correspondent has sent a newspaper cutting which runs as follows:

"There was some prejudice in the beginning against the killing of monkeys, but now the Government of Orissa find that the scheme for the removal of the monkey pest has achieved a very great success," says a Press Note.

"Monkeys have probably been the greatest menace to agriculture in Orissa," the Note continues. "The Government offered under the scheme a reward of Rs. 3 per monkey killed.

"The Government now consider that the time has come to take steps and concentrate on the killing of male monkeys with a view to reducing the monkey population of the province. The Government, therefore, have decided to award in future Rs. 4 per male monkey killed, including very young ones, and Rs. 2 per female monkey."

The correspondent feels shocked and requests Gandhiji that he should, as a humanitarian, take up this question in the Harijan and use his influence with the Congress Governments to immediately put an end to this campaign against the "poor voiceless life in the form of the monkeys in Orissa."

With all my love and compassion for the dumb creation and my personal inability to take even insect life, I hold that it is not possible to ask the Orissa Government to refrain from their project. There appears no practical way of effectively protecting agriculture without killing the animals that are a menace to it. Monkeys are not the only offenders. Rats, rabbits, deer, and wild boar belong to the same class, and man is obliged to take organized measures to destroy each one of them. Man has to choose between living the same kind of natural life as other animals and destroying rival animals so that he may live according to his ideas of "civilized life".

Vapi, 9-12-'46

Labels of Caste and Religion

A correspondent writes to the following effect:

"People insist upon regarding me a Saraswat Brahman and a Shaivite Hindu. Whenever I have an occasion to appear before an officer or be described in public documents, I am asked to state my caste and religion. Now, I have not the least desire to be regarded a Brahman, far less a Saraswat Brahman, and though I am a believer in God and from my childhood used to call upon Him by such names as Shiva, Shankara, Mahadeva etc., I do not regard myself a Shaivite or even a Hindu, but consider myself to be just a believer unattached to any religious sect. What shall I do to remove and disown the labels put upon me by the society?"

So far as public officers and documents are concerned, it is open to the correspondent to describe his caste as nil, and his religion as, say, a theist. Perhaps it is possible for government to dispense with the rules requiring persons to state their caste and religion in public documents and before officers.

But this will not be the end of the matter. The mere declaration by a person that he has renounced his caste or creed or both, unaccompanied with any practical act, will not make the society in which he moves to disregard them. Has he formed any family and social relations with a considerable number of people outside his caste and religion? If all his relations are practically confined to his reputed caste and sect, let alone the general public, the members of his own family will not be able to forget that he still belongs to a particular caste and sect—though in an unorthodox manner—and notwithstanding his protests to the contrary. But his good intention will bear fruit in time, if it develops into appropriate conduct.

It should also be remembered that the recording of a person's caste, creed etc., need not have become an important item in public offices and documents but for the fact that the various communities are governed by their own laws of inheritance, succession, marriage, divorce etc., and persons can plead even special customs, which courts are bound to recognize. Consequently, even if a person is himself unwilling to be labelled with any particular caste or creed, his relatives and the society round about him are interested in having these details on record. Reformer legislators should consider whether a law could be enacted, which would enable a person to renounce his privilege to be governed by a personal law in these matters and place himself and his relatives under the operation of non-communal laws like the Indian Succession Act etc.

Vapi, 5-12-'46

K. G. M

HINDUSTANI AND THE GOVERNMENT

The Hindustani-policy of the government needs re-orientation; what is going on today is half-hearted and marked by lack of vigour. This is perhaps the legacy of disturbed years that have completely disorganized the work. Now that the popular government is once more in the saddle, there is an opportunity of re-shaping the entire policy. The cause of Hindustani being just, our own government need only imagination and vision without adopting the British methods of forcing a foreign tongue on an unwilling people. With this in view, the Gujarat Hindustani Prachar Samiti recently made certain recommendations to the government in the form of a resolution. The following is a summary of them :

Happily, the Government of Bombay had made at least this much abundantly clear in 1939 that, Hindustani, as a language, is distinct both from Hindi and Urdu and that, it being written in the Devanagari or the Urdu script, arrangements should be made to teach both the scripts in schools. Considering this principle to be a correct one the Samiti makes the following recommendation to the Government :

1. The teaching of Hindustani should now be extended

- (a) up to the Matriculation standard at the secondary stage,
- (b) at all the years of the lokashala, and
- (c) in training colleges meant for primary and secondary teachers.

2. The present policy of giving the student option of learning either of the two scripts, and exempting Hindi and Urdu schools from the obligation of teaching Hindustani, takes the very bottom out of the original idea and runs counter to the spirit in which the basic principle was accepted in 1939.

That there is in this policy a veiled recognition of the existing hair-splitting and disrupting controversies in this field is quite obvious. The view that a government cannot run in advance of public opinion is also understandable. The Samiti cannot therefore recommend compulsory learning of Hindustani (with both the scripts) in schools. Still, the moral obligation underlying the 1939 pronouncements cannot be evaded lightly, and the government policy must needs undergo a radical transformation.

3. Learning the Hindi or the Urdu style must not be permitted to become an excuse for seeking exemption from learning Hindustani. The option may not be in choosing the script as at present, but between learning Hindustani, the national language of the people, with both the scripts and not learning it at all. This rule must equally embrace the Hindi and the Urdu schools.

4. Adoption of this policy necessarily means that the Hindustani teacher must be capable of giving lessons in both scripts. The Samiti is happy that this is what the government desires.

5. It is, however, not enough that a teacher knowing Hindi or Urdu up to a certain standard may learn the other script and impart a requisite number of lessons in it. Exclusive recognition should be given to teachers trained on lines devised by the Hindustani Prachar Sabha, the interim arrangement of recognizing examinations only in Hindi or Urdu not being necessary with the implementing by the Government of a principle already accepted by them.

6. Such arrangements for the teaching of the national language (with the option regarding the script) as exist today in our schools, are on a compulsory basis; a change over to the optional system may therefore appear to be threatening what little that is being done today. But a firm and unequivocal declaration of policy by the popular government accompanied by its adoption in practice would be a powerful factor in creating public opinion in this regard.

The Samiti recommends the following measures :

(a) Government servants should be encouraged to learn both the scripts and those passing Hindustani examinations given credit. Departmental regulations may require them to acquire certain minimum qualification in Hindustani.

(b) 'Optional Hindustani' (with both scripts) may be introduced at the Matriculation, the Vernacular Final etc., and those offering this subject given preference in service.

(c) Institutions creating public opinion for the spread of Hindustani should be encouraged and assisted, and given exclusive recognition.

(7) The teaching of English which, it is now recognized by the progressive opinion in the country, starts too early at present, may be a great hindrance to the adoption of this policy. But since the national language must have a place next only to the mother tongue, in a programme of educational reconstruction, English must be unseated from the position it has usurped and assigned its proper place.

The Samiti realizes that this is a revolutionary step; hence the urgency.

(Abridged from the original in Gujarati)

CONTENTS		PAGE
SCRIPTURE FOR DEVILRY!	... K. G. MASHRUWALA	453
MEDIUM OF INSTRUCTION	...	455
VILLAGE INDUSTRIES AND THE STATE	... K. G. MASHRUWALA	456
HINDUSTANI AND THE GOVERNMENT	...	460
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI—	...	461
INSTALMENT—IX	...	461
NOTES:
COMMENDABLE	... N. P.	454
PERSONAL	... K. G. M.	458
INDIA VINDICATED	... K. G. M.	458
DESTRUCTION OF MONKEYS	... K. G. M.	459
LABELS OF CASTE AND RELIGION	... K. G. M.	459

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 47

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1946

TWO ANNAS

WORKING COMMITTEE'S STATEMENT

The Working Committee have given careful consideration to the statement issued by the British Government on December 6, 1946, as well as other statements made recently on their behalf in Parliament. These statements, though made by way of interpretation and elucidation, are clearly additions to and variations of the British Cabinet Mission's statement of May 16, 1946, on which the whole scheme of the Constituent Assembly was based.

The statement of May 16, 1946, laid down in paragraph 15 as basic principles of the Constitution that "there should be a Union of India embracing both British India and the States," that "all subjects other than Union subjects and all residuary powers should vest in the Provinces" and that "Provinces should be free to form Groups." The Provinces were thus intended to be autonomous, subject to the Union controlling certain specified subjects. Paragraph 19 laid down, inter alia, the procedure for Sections to meet, for decisions to be taken as to whether groups should be formed or not, and for any Province to elect to come out of the Group in which it might have been placed.

In their resolution of May 24, 1946, the Working Committee pointed out what appeared to be a divergence between the basic principles and the procedure suggested, in that a measure of compulsion was introduced which infringed the basic principles of Provincial Autonomy. The Cabinet Mission, thereupon, issued a statement on May 25, 1946, in which it was stated that "the interpretation put by the Congress Resolution on Paragraph 15 of the statement, to the effect that the Provinces can in the first instance make the choice whether or not to belong to the Section in which they are placed does not accord with the Delegation's intentions. The reasons for Grouping of the Provinces are well-known and this is an essential feature of the scheme and can only be modified by agreement between the two parties."

The point at issue was not merely one of procedure, but the fundamental principle of Provincial Autonomy and whether or not a Province or part should be coerced against its will.

The Congress made it clear later that their objection was not to Provinces entering sections but to compulsory Grouping and the possibility of a dominating Province framing a constitution for another Province entirely against the wishes of the latter. This might result in the framing of Rules, and the regulation of Franchise, Electorates, Constituencies for elections and the Composition of the Legislature which might seriously prejudice or even nullify the provision for a Province subsequently to opt out of a Group. It was pointed out that this could never be the intention of the Cabinet Mission as it would be repugnant to the basic principles and policy of the scheme they had propounded. The Congress approach to the problem of Constitution making has all along been that coercion should not be exercised against any Province or part of the country and that the Constitution of Free India should be drawn up by the cooperation and goodwill of all Parties and Provinces concerned.

In a letter dated 15 June, 1946 from Lord Wavell to Maulana Azad, the President of the Congress, it was stated that "the Delegation and I are aware of your objections to the principle of Grouping. I would, however, point out that the statement of May 16 does not make Grouping compulsory. It leaves the decision to the elected representatives of the Provinces concerned, sitting together in Sections. The only provision which is made is that the representatives of certain Provinces should meet in Sections so that they can decide whether or not they wish to form Groups."

Thus the principle which was emphasized again was that Grouping was not compulsory and in regard to Sections a certain procedure was indicated. This procedure was not clear and could be interpreted in more than one way and in any event a point of procedure could not over-ride a basic principle. We pointed out that the right interpretation should be one which did no violence to that principle. Further, in order to smooth the way to the co-operation of all concerned in the working of the proposed scheme, we not only made it clear that we were prepared to go into the Sections, but we also suggested that if our interpretation was not accepted, we would be agreeable to a reference on this point to the Federal Court.

It is well-known that the proposal in regard to grouping affected injuriously two provinces especially, namely, Assam and the North-West Frontier Province, as well as the Sikhs in the Punjab. Their representatives expressed their strong disapproval of this proposal. In a letter to the Secretary of State dated 25th May, 1946, Master Tara Singh gave expression to the anxiety and apprehensions of the Sikhs and asked for clarification in regard to certain matters. The Secretary of State sent an answer to this letter on June 1, 1946, in the course of which he said: "I have considered carefully the detailed points you raise at the end of your letter. I fear the Mission cannot issue any additions to, or interpretation of, the statement."

In spite of this explicit statement, the British Government have on December 6, issued a statement which is both an addition to, and an interpretation of, the statement of May 16, 1946. They have done so after more than six and a half months, during which period many developments have taken place as a consequence of the original statement. Throughout this period the position of the Congress was made repeatedly clear to the British Government or their representatives, and it was with full knowledge of this position that the British Government took subsequent steps in furtherance of the Cabinet Mission's proposals. That position was in conformity with the basic principles laid down in the statement of May 16, 1946, which statement the Congress had accepted in its entirety. Further the Congress had expressed its willingness to refer, if necessity arose, the point of interpretation to the Federal Court, whose decision should be accepted by the parties concerned.

In the course of his letter dated June 28, 1946, addressed to Mr. Jinnah, the Viceroy stated that the "Congress had accepted the statement of 16th May." In the course of a broadcast on August 24, 1946, the Viceroy, in appealing to the Muslim League to co-operate, pointed out that the Congress are ready to agree that any dispute of interpretation may be referred to the Federal Court.

The Muslim League reversed its former decision and rejected the British Cabinet Mission's scheme by formal resolution and even decided to resort to direct action. Their spokesmen have since repeatedly challenged the very basis of that scheme, that is, the Constitution of a Union of India and have reverted to their demand for a partition of India. Even after the British Government's statement of December 6, 1946, the leaders of the Muslim League have reiterated this demand for partition and the establishment of two separate Independent Governments in India.

When the invitation of the British Government was received by the Congress at the end of November last to send its representatives to London, the Congress position was clearly indicated again. It was on an assurance of the Prime Minister of Great Britain that a representative of the Congress proceeded to London.

In spite of this assurance and of previous assurances to the effect that no additions to, or interpretations of, the statement of May 16, 1946, were going to be made, the British Government have now issued a statement which clearly, in several respects, goes beyond the original statement, on the basis of which progress has been made till now.

The Working Committee deeply regret that the British Government should have acted in a manner which has not been in keeping with their own assurances, and which has created suspicion in the minds of large numbers of the people in India. For some time past the attitude of the British Government and their representatives in India has been such as to add to the difficulties and complexities of the situation in the country. Their present intervention long after the members of the Constituent Assembly had been elected has created a new situation which is full of peril for the future. Because of this, the Working Committee have given anxious and prolonged thought to it.

The Congress seeks to frame, through the Constituent Assembly, a Constitution of a Free and Independent India with the willing co-operation of all elements of the Indian people. The Working Committee regret that the Muslim League members of the Constituent Assembly have refrained from attending its opening session. The Committee, however, appreciate and express their gratification at the presence in the Constituent Assembly of representatives of all other interests and sections of the people of India and note with pleasure the spirit of co-operation in a common task and a high endeavour which has been in evidence during the sessions of the Assembly. The Committee will continue their efforts to make the Constituent Assembly fully representative of all the people of India and trust that members of the Muslim League will give their co-operation in this great task. In order to achieve this, the Committee have advised Congress representatives in the Assembly to postpone consideration of important issues to a subsequent meeting.

In their statement of December 6, 1946, the British Government in giving their interpretation of a doubtful point of procedure have referred to it as a "fundamental point" and suggested that the Constituent Assembly may refer it to the Federal Court at a very early date. Subsequent statements made on behalf of the British Government have made it clear that they are not prepared to accept the decision of this Court should it go against their own interpretation. On behalf of the Muslim League also it has been stated that they will not be bound by the decision of the Federal Court, and a demand for partition of India, which is a negation of the Cabinet Mission's scheme, continues to be put forward. While the Congress has always been willing to agree to a reference to the Federal Court, any reference now, when none of the other parties are prepared to join in it or to accept it, and one of them does not even accept the basis of the scheme, becomes totally uncalled for and unbecoming, and unsuited to the dignity of either the Congress or the Federal Court. By their repeated statements, British statesmen have ruled this out.

The Working Committee are still of opinion that the interpretation put by the British Government in regard to the method of voting in the Sections is not in conformity with Provincial Autonomy, which is one of the fundamental basis of the scheme proposed in the Statement of May 16. The Committee are anxious to avoid anything that may come in the way of the successful working of the Constituent Assembly and are prepared to do everything in their power to seek and obtain the largest measure of co-operation, provided that no fundamental principle is violated. In view of the importance and urgency of the issues facing the country and the far-reaching consequences which must follow any decisions, the Working Committee are convening an emergency meeting of the A.I.C.C. in Delhi early in January to consider the latest developments and to give such directions as it may deem fit.

ON TRACTORS AND CHEMICAL FERTILIZERS

[The following taken from Janab Jabir A. Ali's article in the Rural India of November, 1946 will be read with interest. V. G. D.]

Past practice of agriculture in India has given us the use of the wooden plough and cattle manure. . . Centuries have proved the effectiveness and soundness of these. Now comes the scientist and manufacturer and these dazzle us with the prospects opened to us by the iron mouldboard plough and chemical fertilizers, and later comes the omnipotent tractor. . .

The iron mouldboard plough turns over the soil, and the soil from a depth of 7 or 8 inches is brought to the surface. The humus-filled top-soil is diluted with soil more or less devoid of humus, and thus rendered less fertile. This loss is attempted to be made good by addition of artificial fertilizers, but the humus lost can be put back into the soil only by the application of organic matter like composts. As cattle manure is now scarcer than before, the soil deteriorates and eventually becomes useless for profitable cultivation. This is what has happened in America on a large scale. The tractor which ploughs to a depth of 12 and 14 inches intensifies and expedites agriculture. Cattle having disappeared from farms, the supply of farmyard manure is falling short, and cannot be replaced by any substitute at all.

. . . In India the tractor and the chemical fertilizer are fast coming into fashion and are looked upon as signs of enlightenment and of up-to-date agriculture. This is dangerous. The quick work of the tractor and the immediate results of the use of fertilizers are so alluring that one is not inclined to probe deeper and to make sure that this is not just an illusion.

Whether we use a tractor or not, one thing is certain: to keep up the fertility of the soil, the use on a general and large scale of organic manures is the sine qua non of agriculture. . . . Composting has come to stay, but it is neither sufficiently understood, nor has it been adopted on a sufficiently large scale. The best help the National Government can give to our farmers is through propaganda and supply of compost. We have immense quantities of vegetation, animal waste, oil cakes, woods of all kinds at present going to waste and sometimes becoming a nuisance. All this valuable material must be composted and well distributed. We have the sewage and nightsoil of towns, which municipalities must utilize. Then again in and around large towns we have milch cattle in large numbers whose dung and litter should be turned into compost. We shall thus not only grow more food but also grow more nutritious food.

What then of our huge Nitrogen fertilizer plants? Chemicals will always be used on a small scale and have their use, but I for one have no doubt that in the long run, if used continuously and in large measure, they are bound to have a deleterious effect on the soil and will do a lot of harm. They adversely affect the growth of useful bacteria and fungi in the soil. Shall we say they are good in emergencies but not as daily food for plants? Let me quote from Sir Albert Howard:

"The toll of disease is extraordinary and a matter of the utmost anxiety to the farmer. The public is not sufficiently aware of this unsatisfactory state of affairs. If these are the results of agricultural science, they are not encouraging and they are certainly not impressive. They are undoubtedly a phenomenon of the last forty or fifty years and appear alongside of the modern use of artificial manures.

"Artificial manures were born out of the abuse of Liebig's discoveries of the chemical properties of the soil and out of the imperative demands made on the farmer by the invention of machinery."

Experience all over the world and especially in America has shown clearly that the free use of artificial manures combined with deep ploughing has completely destroyed the fertility of millions of acres of good soil. In every case the basic cause has been the absence of humus. In our country we are on the threshold of advance along western lines. Let us hope we shall not fall into the same pits as modern farmers in the West have done. We have not even the excuse of certain countries that we have not sufficient organic matter available. All the organic matter we need is there, but it awaits proper handling and distribution. We must look to Government to create an efficient organization and composting arrangement, as well as retain for us in India all the oil-cake, bone, blood etc., which are now being exported.

PLEASE NOTE

Though we have repeatedly drawn the attention of the subscribers to not sending their subscriptions by cheques, it seems it suits some of them better. We, therefore, have to draw their attention to two things: one, to avoid sending cheques as far as possible and two, if they prefer sending cheques to remit an additional amount of annas eight to cover the discount charged by banks which varies with different banks. When this additional expense is not remitted the subscription amount becomes a fraction which is not amenable to adjustments in calculations of the subscription amount.

MANAGER

HARIJAN

December 29

1946

WHAT WILL SOUTH AFRICA DO?

(By M. K. Gandhi)

The deputation headed by Shrimati Vijayalakshmi Pandit and sent to the U. N. O. Conference by the Interim Government has undoubtedly done very effective work with marked ability and success. That is clear from the following cablegram sent by Shrimati Vijayalakshmi Pandit from New York :

"Today with your blessings justice of South African Indian cause was vindicated. Committee voting twentyfour to nineteen in our favour. Went to General Smuts after meeting and shook hands. He expressed appreciation at manner in which I had conducted case."

It remains now to be seen how the Parliament of the Union of South Africa and its European public respond. Field Marshal Smuts was able to hurl at the Indian deputation the taunt that India treated her so-called "Untouchables", legally described as the "Scheduled Classes", much worse than the Union treated her Asiatics or for that matter the Africans. There would be much to be said for the Field Marshal's taunt if it was true. It is true of South Africa that her treatment of Asiatics has legally deteriorated from time to time, so much so that it has now become well-nigh unbearable. Almost every promise made by the Union Government to the Government of India has now been broken. In India, on the other hand, there never has been any law carrying the bar sinister against the Scheduled Classes. It can be proved up to the hilt that the law has always sought to protect the Scheduled Classes. There is no legal bar, so far as I am aware, against any of the Scheduled Classes being regarded as equal in status to the tallest Indian. What is however true to the shame of orthodox Hinduism and the Sanatani Hindus is that religious custom has denied to these Untouchables the rights which the law has allowed, and it is unfortunately also true that sometimes custom overrides the law. But public opinion is progressively rising against this barbarous custom and it is merely a question of time when the custom will be swept out of existence. Let us, therefore, hope that instead of taking doubtful advantage of the things in India which no one defends and against which public opinion is progressively rising, the Europeans of the Union of South Africa will recognize that if the U. N. O. Conference is any index of world opinion, it is decidedly against the European prejudice which has hardened into law.

Shrirampur, 12-12-'46

REDISCOVERING FAITH

I take it that the readers of the Harijan follow through the daily press the movements and activities of Gandhiji in East Bengal. I consider his mission as one for rediscovering for the nation their lost faith.

Clinging fast to observances — good, bad or indifferent, but all termed religious — there is plenty of in all societies. The loss of bangles, vermilion mark, tuft of hair or beard causes, indeed, inconsolable dejection. And yet live faith has disappeared from the people. For, what is the worth of a faith, if it does not generate strength in the person affirming it, to stand for it alone; to live for it and, if need be, to lay down his life for it? Faith inherently implies the birth of a new sense of self-esteem and an unconquerable will to resist with one's very life any force which haughtily and unjustly seeks to crush it. There is no faith, worth the name, which does not create such strength in its followers, and when it loses that capacity, it degenerates into a mere bundle of beliefs, observances and customs to be adhered to while life is easy and there are no adverse conditions to face. Those customs and observances by themselves might not be worth anything, and, but for mental inertia, some of them might have been even voluntarily discarded long ago, as indeed, several modern men and women have discarded the bangles, the vermilion mark, the sectarian marks on the forehead, the tuft of hair or the beard. It was some strong faith, which created some of these customs and observances and made them the external badges of a purposeful life. But, if a people have lost that fundamental substance within, the mere retention or restoration of external symbols will not rekindle the spiritual fire, which ultimately every faith is.

It is the rediscovery of this lost faith, which is the main problem of all down-trodden peoples in general, and of our women in particular. Arson, loot, abduction, rape, forcible conversions etc. are not altogether new events in the history of the world. Time and again these things have happened in India also. The atrocities committed by the military and the police in the Punjab during the week of the Jallianwala Massacre were except for abductions and conversions, similar to, if not worse than, those in East Bengal. The victims there were not the mild Bengali Hindus, but martial Punjabis — Hindus, Muslims and Sikhs. During the repressions of 1942-44 women suffered similar indignities not at [Chimur alone—which on account of Shri Bhansali's memorable fast got publicity—but in many more places. On every occasion we find that, speaking broadly, men lacked not so much the physical as the moral courage to protect their women, and the women too lacked that strength of faith—that self-respect born of a purpose in life—which generates a will to resist even in the physically weak. If adequate physical strength and means were not available to their men, it cannot be expected that women could have protected themselves by a show of physical strength. And if men too lacked the moral courage to stand by their women and the weak and protect them as best as possible until every one of the guardians died, but instead, ran away for the sake of their own lives, it is clear that God alone could help such women. I do not use the words "God alone" euphemistically for "none"; I use it to indicate that inner spirit which produces martyrs and to crush which all tyrants aspire.

Gandhiji's whole life has been devoted to enable India to rediscover this faith. He himself realized, first, the loss of this faith, when at the age of less than 25, he had to endure his first insult by the Political Agent of Rajkot. The insult by itself was relatively a trivial affair and might be explained away as the rudeness of a not well-bred individual officer. Indeed, even the Lion of Bombay, Sir Pherozeshah Mehta, could give him no better counsel than to pocket it and forget it. Gandhiji pocketed it no doubt. He could not have done anything else at the time, and later on learnt to pocket even greater insults than this one. But he could not forget it, and sought for a sure specific against it ever since. This he discovered on a public coach in South Africa under the hard blows of its White conductor. Even as the hammering of a cocoanut with a stone brings out the sweet kernel within, so every blow that fell upon him, as it were, broke the outer shell and revealed to him the fire that lay hidden beneath. He discovered that a man might be beaten to death by another and tortured in a hundred ways, but he could not be made to yield to the latter against his own will. It was the fear of death, torture, loss of property, of social relations and comforts of life etc. which made man give up his independence, principles and sense of self-respect, and if that fear was once cast off, a single individual became as strong as an army. Conversely, without it, even trained soldiers would put up with all sorts of indignities and flee with as much panic as that of the terror-stricken and suspicious people of Bengal and Bihar.

And, when Gandhiji rediscovered this faith, he transmitted it to the men and women of South Africa. With what results, let his opponent, Field-Marshal Smuts, himself say:

"Gandhi . . . showed a new technique—one which he afterwards made world famous in his political campaigns in India . . . For him everything went according to plan. For me—the defender of law and order—there was the usual trying situation, the odium of carrying out a law which had not strong public support, and finally the discomfiture when the law had to be repealed. For him it was a successful coup. Nor was the personal touch wanting, for nothing in Gandhi's procedure is without a peculiar personal touch. In gaol, he had prepared for me a very useful pair of sandals which he presented to me when he was set free! I have worn these sandals for many a summer since then, . . ." (Quoted from Shridharani's The Mahatma and the World).

If by 'technique' we simply understand such items as civil disobedience, non-cooperation, non-payment of taxes and the like, we shall commit the mistake of appreciating a book for its jacket, binding and the quality of the paper instead of its matter. These items are only outward symbols, even as the vermilion mark and the bangles are but outward symbols of a woman's saubhagya (wifehood). The technique of civil disobedience by itself could not have given to the women of Bombay the strength to hold to the flag against the horse-hoofs of the mounted police, or those of Borsad to endure ruthless lathi charges and dragging by the hair by policemen. Various similar instances might be cited. It was the rediscovery—may be, only faint and temporary, nevertheless real—by a section of the Indian public of their faith, which gave them the strength to suffer hardships, and to challenge a mighty empire, as it was the lack of it which was responsible for the almost dumb and abject submission to wickedness and indignities on other occasions.

One will hardly find a place in India, in which a handful of Hindus, or a handful of Mussalmans or Christians will not be found living in the midst of a considerable number of men of another community. Must those who are few in numbers in a village or street abandon those places, if they do not wish to abjure their own faith and accept that of the local majority? Also, must one who wants to change his religion should also change his place of abode? And, if this is considered to be the only course, does it also not mean that any one who wants to visit a place inhabited by the people of another community would have to do so only under police or military escort? If the answer is, 'yes, such a position has got to be accepted,' then, a person with a living sense of human dignity and of the importance of mutual trust and amity in life, will simply refuse to accept that position lying down. Even cows and buffaloes, goats and sheep herd together, graze together and live peacefully in a common yard. Pigeons, sparrows and various birds of heterogeneous species fearlessly mix together in the field. Can a man be reconciled to a situation which reduces him to a level lower than that of birds and cattle? There is something fundamentally wrong with that situation, and it has got to be remedied. It must be possible for a single individual to live peacefully, unmolested and without fear or without artificial protection amidst people of different religious persuasions. If he cannot do so, there is something wrong about his faith, and if the other community does not allow him to do so, then too there must be something wrong about his own faith as well as the faith of that other community. In either case, he must rediscover his faith for the sake of both.

This, to my mind, is the nature of Gandhiji's present quest. The down-trodden humanity—and woman is a large part of it—must be redeemed from the feeling that they lived and propagated the race, simply because they were not dead or that they could live only under the protection of an external strength, which might fail. But they must be made to realize that unfailing strength lies within themselves. That realization will generate in their breast the determination to risk their lives at any moment in vindication of it and of everything which they hold, for the time being, sacred, and which they identify with God, their entire being, their self-respect and honour. "A determined man," says Romain Rolland, "who is prepared to risk his life at any moment can lift the world off its hinges."

The chorus of a psalm which I often used to hear during my college days is indelibly impressed upon my memory:

Dare to be a Daniel,
Dare to stand alone;
Dare to have a purpose firm,
Dare to make it known.

Vapi, 16-12-'46

K. G. MASHRUWALA

FOR PEACE AND HARMONY

Mr. O. W. Francis of Hazaribagh, Bihar, in a letter to Gandhiji appreciating his exhortations to the people to pray and to do so from the heart, as also his efforts in the district of Noakhali "to help bring peace to the hundreds of the down-stricken families whose homes were devastated," and engender by his soothing influence, "a brotherly feeling between the Hindus and the Muslims of Shrirampur, encloses the following lines" written by a man of the Religious Order, just after the great Calcutta Killing":

O God, grant peace and harmony

To our unhappy land, its distraught, sorrow-laden lives.

Pour Thou Thy sovereign balm of healing.

Into the gaping, festering wounds of discord and strife.

How sorely we need the strength that comes of Unity;

Yet how deep-rooted are the hatred and jealousy,

Suspicion and the pride of power,

The bitter feuds that reach hands to each other's throats.

The fury of fanatic, blood-thirsty creeds!

Are we not all Thy children, members of one household?

And art not Thou our goal of this earth's pilgrimage,

Where brother linked to brother, we should bend to common tasks,

And struggle against disease and squalor,

Dire misery and abject ignorance?

To Thee the famished raise their pitiful cries;

Thou hearest the groans of millions tortured with disease;

The wails of victims marked for the early grave escape Thee not.

Alas! our hapless land has become a vast hecatomb;

Its sons and daughters a sacrificial holocaust.

What would change it into a smiling land of joy,

But the earnest striving of all hands,

With all hearts bound in the unity of love?

Why should religion separate us man from man?

It should draw us to Thee, draw us together,

It should teach us to love,

For Thou, O God, art Love.

Vapi, 17-12-'46

K. G. MASHRUWALA

ALL IS NOT GOLD THAT GLITTERS

At night, from Kisan Ashram we can see the lights of Mussoorie, a long sparkling line of electricity away up in the mountains. Fine houses are there, all lighted up, motor and rickshaw roads with electric standards every few yards, lines of glittering shops filled with all the fashions of East and West, cinemas, dance halls, all brightly lighted and cleanly swept. But those who keep this gay world clean are huddled up in dark, damp rooms, cheek by jowl with public urinals and latrines. No electric light is there, no bathrooms; nothing but squalor and misery.

The rich folks who do no physical or dirty work have baths and basins, taps, towels and soap. But the bhangis who clean their commodes and chamber-pots, sweep their drains and carry away their dirt and rubbish, have nothing but the "pail-depot" for bathing, washing and drinking. And the "pail-depot", gentle reader, is the tap and drain where all the foul pots and pails of their scavenging work have to be washed!!

Oh moneyed folks of rich Mussoorie! whose easy lives have produced this need for "sweepers", come with me and visit the quarters allotted to the human beings who keep your beautiful houses sweet and clean.

Come out of the smart bazaar down this steep narrow path—they say it is dangerous at night, there being no light on it. Here is the line of living quarters, (there are some twenty such in Mussoorie). You hold your noses—yes, there are public latrines just along here. But first look into one of these rooms. You can't see properly—of course not, there are no windows. And you hesitate to step inside. But you must come in. Mind! don't tread on the roti a wretched woman is trying to cook on a chulha just behind the door, and don't fall over the bed which is almost on top of the chulha! The wonder is it does not get burnt! Now your eyes are getting more accustomed to the light, look further into the room. More beds—old boxes, baskets, ragged clothes, all crammed up together, and human beings perching and squatting here and there. Let us calculate the size of the room—not more than 10 ft. by 15 ft. And how many people live in it? Fifteen men, women and children. The smoke from the chulha is suffocating you—you'd better get out into the fresh air. But where is the fresh air even outside? What is this on the outer side of the wall of the room? A row of public urinals, and next to them the public latrines. Don't be faint-hearted, having got so far you must face it out to the end. Here is the "pail-depot" beyond the latrines, where the muck pails are cleaned. "Would you like to have a drink of water? This is the best they can offer you: Here men, women and children have to drink, wash and bathe. You are beginning to feel a bit queer? I think you would like to get away. Alright, but just peep into one more room beyond the "pail-depot". Step down carefully, the floor is rather low and the foul water from the "pail-depot" drain makes it very damp. This time there is a window, but don't go too near it, the wall is dangerously cracked and will tumble down the mountain side one of these days.

That is enough — come away to your well swept bungalows in your pretty gardens. But may the recollection of what you have experienced today give you no peace until these pitch-black stains have been wiped away from rich Mussoorie's glittering heights!

Kisan Ashram, 28-10-'46

MIRABEHN

GANDHIJI'S ADVICE TO ASSAM

Gandhiji's views on the Constituent Assembly and the situation created by H.M.G.'s statement of December 6, are contained in an account of an interview given by him to two Assam Congressmen, Messrs. Bijayachandra Bhagwat and Mohendra Mohan Chowdhury, who saw Gandhiji on behalf of Mr. G. D. Bardoloi, the Premier of Assam on December 15.

Asked for guidance in regard to the question of Grouping, Gandhiji replied:

"I do not need a single minute to come to a decision, for, on this I have a mind. I am a Congressman to the very marrow, as I am mainly the framer of the constitution of the Congress as it stands today. I told Bardoloi that if there is no clear guidance from the Congress Committee, Assam should not go into the sections. It should lodge its protest and retire from the Constituent Assembly. It will be a kind of Satyagraha against the Congress for the good of the Congress.

"Rightly or wrongly, the Congress has come to the decision that it will stand by the judgment of the Federal Court. The dice are heavily loaded. The decision of the Federal Court will go against the Congress interpretation of Grouping as far as I can make out, for the simple reason that the Cabinet has got legal advice which upholds their decision.

"The Federal Court is the creation of the British. It is a packed court. To be consistent, the Congress must abide by its decision whatever it may be. If Assam keeps quiet, it is finished. No one can force Assam to do what it does not want to do. It is autonomous to a large extent today.

"It must become fully independent and autonomous. Whether you have that courage, grit and the gumption, I do not know. You alone can say that. But if you can make that declaration, it will be a fine thing. As soon as the time comes for the Constituent Assembly to go into sections you will say, "Gentlemen, Assam retires." For the independence of India it is the only condition. Each unit must be able to decide and act for itself. I am hoping that in this, Assam will lead the way.

SAME FOR THE SIKHS

"I have the same advice for the Sikhs. But your position is much happier than that of the Sikhs. You are a whole province. They are a community inside a province. But I feel every individual has the right to act for himself, just as I have."

Q. "But we are told that the framing of the constitution for the whole of India cannot be held up for the sake of Assam. Assam cannot be allowed to block the way."

A. "There is no need to do that. That is why I say I am in utter darkness. Why are not these simple truths evident to all after so many years? If Assam retires, it does not block, but leads the way to India's independence."

Q. "The British Government has said that the constitution framed by the Constituent Assembly cannot be imposed on unwilling units. So, if some parts do not accept it, the British Parliament won't accept it."

A. "Who is the British Government? If we think independence is going to descend on our heads from England or somewhere, we are greatly mistaken. It won't be independence. We will be crushed to atoms. We are fluctuating between independence and helpless dependence. The Cabinet Mission's plan lies in between.

"If we act rightly there will be the full blown flower of independence. If we react wrongly, the blossom will wither away. Mind you, the League standpoint is quite correct. If they stand out, the Constituent Assembly cannot impose its constitution on an unwilling party. The British Government has no say in the matter, one way or the other.

"The British cannot interfere with the working of the Constituent Assembly. Supposing the vast majority, including the Muslims and others form a constitution, you can defy the British Parliament if it seeks to interfere. Power is in your hands. Some such thing happened in Ireland only recently. And De Valera is no non-violent fighter. The position of India is far better than that of Ireland. If we have not the penetration, we will lose the advantage we have, as it is apparently being lost today.

"If Assam takes care of itself, the rest of India will be able to look after itself. What have you got to do with the constitution of the Union Government? You should form your own constitution. That is enough. You have the basis of a constitution all right even now.

"I have never despised the 1935 constitution. It is based on provincial autonomy. It has the capacity for fullest growth, provided the people are worth it. The hill people are with you. Many Muslims are also with you. The remainder can be too, if you act on the square.

"You will have to forget petty jealousies and rivalries and overcome your weaknesses. Assam has many weaknesses as it has much strength, for I know my Assam."

"With your blessings we can even go outside the Congress and fight," the Assam Congressmen interposed.

Gandhiji replied that in 1939 when there was the question of giving up the Ministry, Subhas

Babu opposed it as he thought Assam's was a special case. I told Bardoloi that there was much in what Subhas Babu had said and although, I was the author of that scheme of boycott, I said: Assam should not come out if it did not feel like it. But Assam did come out. It was wrong.

The Assam Congressmen said that the Maulana Saheb had then said that exception could not be made in the case of Assam.

Gandhiji replied: "Here there is no question of exception. Assam rebelled and that civilly. But we have that slavish mentality. We look to the Congress and then feel that if we do not follow it slavishly, something will go wrong with it. I have said that not only a province but even an individual can rebel against the Congress and by doing so save it, assuming that he is in the right. I have done so myself. Congress has not attained the present stature without much travail.

"I remember in 1918, I think, there was the Provincial Conference of the Congress workers of Gujarat at Ahmedabad. The late Abbas Tyabjee Saheb was in the chair. All the old guards were there. The Ali Brothers had not yet joined hands with me fully then, as they did later on. The late Shri Vitthalbhai Patel was there, and I moved the non-co-operation resolution. I was a nonentity then. A constitutional question arose. Could a provincial conference anticipate the decision of the Congress? I said "yes". A provincial conference and even a single individual could anticipate the Congress for its own benefit. In spite of opposition of the old hands, the resolution was carried. That paved the way for the Congress to pass a similar resolution at Calcutta. India was dumbfounded at the audacity of a provincial conference passing the revolutionary resolution.

"We had formed a Satyagraha Sabha outside the Congress. It was joined by Horniman, Sarojini Devi, Shankarlal, Umar Sobhani and Vallabhbhai. I was ill. The Rowlatt Act was passed. I shook with rage. I said to the Sardar I could do nothing unless he helped me. Sardar was willing. And the rest you know. It was rebellion, but a healthy one. We celebrate the 6th of April to the 13th. You have all these historical instances before you.

"I have given you all this time to steel your hearts, to give you courage. If you do not act correctly and now, Assam will be finished. Tell Bardoloi, I do not feel the least uneasiness. My mind is made up. Assam must not lose its soul. It must uphold it against the whole world. Else I will say that Assam had only manikins and no men. It is an impertinent suggestion that Bengal should dominate Assam in any way."

Asked if they could tell the people that they have rebelled against the Congress with Gandhiji's blessings Gandhiji said, "Talk of God's blessings. They are much richer. Tell the people even if Gandhi tries to dissuade us, we won't listen."

PEACE PLAN IN NOAKHALI

Gandhiji's peace plan in Noakhali was interpreted by Satish Chandra Das Gupta, chief of the Sodepur Ashram, to an Associated Press of America correspondent visiting Gandhiji's Shrirampur headquarters this week.

With Shrirampur at one end, the plan is being executed around an area of 20 square miles. Fifteen peace workers, divided into ten stationary peace units, have been working on the plan since November 24 in several rural areas of the Ramganj police station.

Shri Das Gupta said that Gandhiji's peace plan is centred around four corner-stones: (a) Spiritual effort. (b) Man is essentially good. (c) Love. (d) Non-violence of the brave.

He said, "The peace mission is intended to establish that there is really no bar for unity between the Hindus and the Muslims. It aims at instilling bravery in the hearts of the Hindu minority and repentance in the hearts of the miscreants. Unity can never come about so long as fear, on the one hand and hatred, on the other, are the guiding passions.

"The peace-worker's task is to produce such a revolutionary change in the disturbed atmosphere that there should be no more possibility for any mischief in future."

Discussing the modus operandi Shri Das Gupta said: "Peace workers must be pledged to truth, love and non-violence. They must reside in the disturbed village and move with everyone, including the miscreants, as blood brothers.

"The peace-worker should entertain no idea of defence, even if he is attacked. His only defence would be to die at the hands of his opponent.

"This sense of bravery revolutionizes the entire atmosphere. Cowards shed their cowardice and enemies shed their hatred. Peace prevails again, not the transient peace imposed at the point of the soldier's gun or the policeman's baton, but a real, lasting and sustaining peace."

Dealing with the extent of success achieved so far, Shri Das Gupta said: "The Hindus now have begun to move about fearlessly and the Muslims are shedding their hatred and anger."

Asked if more Congressmen in India should follow this plan, Shri Das Gupta replied: "If they do and if they put into test the weapon of the non-violence of the brave, the face of the world would be changing fast."

Calcutta, 21-12-'46

CONTENTS	PAGE
WORKING COMMITTEE'S STATEMENT ON TRACTORS AND CHEMICAL FERTILIZERS ... V. G. D.	465
WHAT WILL SOUTH AFRICA DO? ... M. K. GANDHI	467
REDISCOVERING FAITH ... K. G. MASHRUWALA	468
FOR PEACE AND HARMONY ... K. G. MASHRUWALA	470
ALL IS NOT GOLD THAT GLITTERS ... MIRABEHN	470
GANDHIJI'S ADVICE TO ASSAM ...	471
PEACE PLAN IN NOAKHALI ...	472

HARIJAN

12 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 48

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, JANUARY 5, 1947

TWO ANNAS

WHO SHOULD DO IT ?

A medical man deplores the rapidity with which smoking is spreading among modern youth of both the sexes. Newspapers carry more cigarette advertisements now than they did a decade back, displaying pictures of girl-smokers, thus indicating the clientele sought to be particularly appealed to. The habit has grown to the extent of chain-smoking in some people. Medical opinion is unanimous, the correspondent says, in declaring tobacco as greatly responsible for diseases like the cancer of the tongue, some lung and heart troubles, neurosis etc., and regrets that Gandhiji has not done anything to check this evil.

The same post has brought a letter from a young lady who complains that Gandhiji and the present Congress Government do not pay sufficient attention to the cinema evil. How she wishes both Gandhiji and Jawaharlalji had frequented modern talkies and seen for themselves the moral ruin wrought in the lives of our young and adolescent boys and girls by these picture shows ! They, she says, make appeal to the sex, as if it were, in a practical manner and instil into young impressionable minds lascivious thoughts, low ideals of sexual morality, and of decent behaviour. "The evil effects of cinemas", she says, "are no less harmful than those of drink and if it is right to prohibit the latter, it is equally necessary to restrain the former. Our popular Governments should lose no time in putting their foot on this evil."

The two correspondents represent a section of public opinion and there is much truth in what they say. Let popular Governments take note of them. But it is necessary for moral reformers also to understand the limitations of Mahatmas and popular Governments. In the ultimate analysis, no evil is eradicated from a nation unless the nation itself wills to do it resolutely.

A Mahatma does not seek coercive power. He can only teach the nation what is good and wholesome for it, and what is bad, and set an example through his own conduct. On the other hand, the only method known to modern Governments is punitive legislation. Neither of these, nor both combined can succeed unless and until they are effectively reinforced by strong popular will. Even if a practice or act is acknowledged on all hands as a manifest evil, both will fail to remove it, if people do not co-operate with the reformer or the law against an influential section resisting its removal. Governments can partially check an evil if it is confined to, at the most, say, 5 or 7 per cent who are selfish, anti-social or ignorant. Reform-legislation succeeds only when a great majority of the people have already adopted the reform, but a small intransigent section tries to obstruct it.

If we look into the facts of the two specific evils complained of, it will be observed that the public in general is not quite averse to any of them, though several of them after they have taken a full measure of it may agree with a physician or a moralist that these are really bad and degenerating entertainments. And after having agreed with him they will again indulge in them. Professors and students, a father and his grown up children, and even religious mahants and their disciples smoke together, or visit together films of a lascivious type. Even a person who does not smoke has often to provide cigarettes for his friends, or at least to tolerate smoking in his presence, and the head of a family, who himself does not like cinemas, allows money to younger members of the family to indulge in them. It is not so with drink. In a matter in which public opinion is at this stage, one should not expect restraining laws to be very successful even if passed.

A popular democratic Government or legislature should be distinguished from an association of reformers or pure-life-preachers. The former represents not the ideal but the average man, and the passions and prejudices, outlooks and tastes of average people, who return their representatives not necessarily for their high moral ardour or character, but for their capacity to understand and give sympathetic and forcible expression to the thoughts, passions, (even prejudices and vices) and worldly aspirations and happiness of the average man. The pioneer work of bringing about a reform in the life and habits of the people has to be done by preachers, publicists, good journals and enlightened writers.

Even if a popular Government represented all parties in a nation, people will enjoy freedom and happiness only to the extent they give up the habit of looking to the government to do everything for them. An elephant may be employed to remove boulders blocking a way, not to clear pebbles or cleanse dust-bins at street corners. This must be done by the men themselves.

Sabarmati, 27-12-46

K. G. MASHRUWALA

"UNEQUAL MARRIAGES"

Shrimati Lilavati Munshi has already succeeded in getting non-muslim bigamous marriages declared void in the province of Bombay. Now she has brought a Bill for the prevention of "Unequal marriages", i. e. marriage of a woman of less than 18 years with a man of more than 45. The Bill seeks to punish principal participants of such a marriage. It does not declare the marriage void or voidable as in the case of the Anti-Bigamy Act.

There is a good deal of complication in regard to the law of minority in our country. Normally a person attains majority on the completion of 18 years. But if he happens to lose the protection of his natural guardian before that time and it becomes necessary for a court to appoint a guardian over him, his capacity to manage his own affairs is not recognized until he completes twentyone years. But for the purpose of marriage a girl is deemed to have come to age at 14, while guardians might bind a person in marital ties even if he or she is a mere infant. Even the Sarda Act, which seeks to prevent child-marriages, does not make the marriage itself illegal. It simply imposes a penalty upon some people in the form of a fine or imprisonment. But whether the penalty is exacted or not, the marriage itself is binding upon the bride and the bridegroom. It is not void.

Shrimati Munshi's "Unequal Marriages Bill" is of the same types. If the marital rites are performed before the law is able to intervene, the only consolation the minor girl or her friends can have is to get some people punished.

It seems to me that this is not sufficient. A conviction under such an Act must be accompanied with some such remedy as the following: The order of conviction should operate as a preliminary decree of dissolution of marriage. The girl should be entrusted to the care of a proper guardian or institution until she attains majority. A date, not later than three months after she attains majority, should be fixed for appearance for final orders. On that date, the girl's wishes should be ascertained. If she wants the marriage to be dissolved, the final decree should declare it so; if on the other hand, she wants to abide by the marriage, the preliminary decree should be cancelled. It goes without saying that during the interval neither of the parties can contract another marriage.

If legislation seeks to protect the woman, it should give effective protection. It can bring no happiness to a wife who has to live with a husband, who is punished on her account. Indeed, it does not matter if the affair is treated as falling within the civil jurisdiction of courts rather than the criminal one, provided the protection given to the woman is complete.

Then, as the Bill stands, a girl of say 14 could be successfully married to a man of 44, while one of 17 could not be married to a man aged 45. I think it would be simpler to apply the legislation to all cases in which a minor girl is sought to be married to a man more than, say, two times and a half years senior to her in age on the date of marriage. Sabarmati, 27-12-'46 K. G. MASHRUWALA

GANDHIJI'S PRESENT ROUTINE

Following has been taken from the Associated Press:

Seventy seven-year-old Gandhiji experimenting with his ahimsa in the far off East Bengal village of Shrirampur, is working at the rate of 18 to 20 hours every day.

Gandhiji rises with the lark at 4 o'clock in the morning and conducts a small prayer. Drinking eight ounces of warm water mixed in one ounce of honey, Gandhiji starts work which is reading, writing or interviewing.

Two hours later, he takes eight ounces of fruit juice, either of orange or mosambi, whichever is available.

At 7-30. a. m., accompanied by some of his close associates, he strolls on for about 90 minutes along the narrow, dew-soaked village footpaths. This is the time when invariably news hawks hover around him. He is now increasing his walking hours and the speed of walk, obviously preparing himself for his contemplated walking tour.

He returns back at about 9 o'clock and has massage for about two hours, followed by a hot water bath.

His first full meal at 11 a. m. consists of eight ounces of goat's milk, boiled vegetables, about three tolas of paper-thin chapatis and some fruits. Sometimes he takes vegetables boiled with rice as an alternative to chapatis.

His Visitors

While at meals, he conducts interviews. His visitors vary from learned scholars of both the communities to widows and orphans soliciting his advice and help.

Often he sleeps for about half an hour in the afternoon and wakes up with clocklike precision. He takes about 12 ounces of tender cocoanut water along with the kernel if it is tender too.

He puts a mud pack on his stomach for about half an hour, part of his nature cure. He spins after a while, talking to his visitors and cracking jokes with children that throng around him.

After his evening prayer at 5 p. m., Gandhiji goes out for his second walk in the course of the day.

Immediately on return he plunges into work again and his second heavy meal does not vary from the first taken in the forenoon.

It is a wild conjecture as to when he would retire. It may be anytime between 10 p. m. to 1 or 2 a. m.

One day in the lean hours of the morning at 2-30 a. m. the A. P. A. correspondent saw light burning in Gandhiji's cottage and there was sign of life too. Peeping in, he found Gandhiji at work. His day had begun.

RETURN TO PRIMITIVE CIVILIZATION !

When during the last world war cities were being devastated by bombs dropped from the air, men had to take shelter for safety in chambers dug underground. A writer had remarked at the time that man was returning to the cave-age civilization !

The following description of life in an Indian city sent by a correspondent shows that we in India, at any rate, have made considerable advance over that stage and are now somewhere near the civilization which prevailed a few centuries before Christ amongst the primitive tribes of Africa and Western Asia

"There is no mutual trust. But if something new does not happen to start trouble afresh, we might get accustomed to our present mode of life.

"In business quarters police is stationed at fixed places. Hindus gather on one side and Muslims on the other to transact business. For hours they do business, standing all the time. They buy and sell goods worth lacs of rupees. Coolies of one community deliver the goods to those of the other near a fixed boundary. In the evening after completing the day's work, the Hindus retire to their Hindustan and the Muslims to their Pakistan ! Thus business is transacted without people of one community entering the region of the other.

"Of course, business suffers. Free movement in the bazaar and amongst customers is not possible, and it is also difficult to get sufficient working hands...."

So civilization has now to proceed further from this stage of neutral zones to a higher one, when men of one community might move freely into the region of another on bazaar days at least; or, as it used to be in the pre-Islamic Arabia, reserve some periods in the year when by common consent all hostilities should cease ! It would be a great progress, indeed, over the present situation if this could be done. The next step thereafter would be the organization of some such guard as the one known as Hil Ful Fuzul which the Prophet Mahammad is said to have organized in Mecca, for the protection of the life and property of foreigners (in our case, people of another community) happening to enter their zones on non-reserved days !

What a tragic pass we have come to ! If this disgraceful condition is to be ended, it is clear that some people on both sides have to take the risk of trusting one another. Businessmen know that all business ultimately rests on trust, and they know the risk involved in so trusting. Yet they transact business worth thousands of rupees and part with valuable property on mere verbal contracts. There the risk consists in possible loss of money and some times of credit also. They must go a stage further and also begin to take the risk of a possible harm to life.

Vapi, 17-12-'46

K. G. MASHRUWALA

(Abridged from the original in Gujarati)

NATIONALIZATION

Since some little power has passed into the hands of popular ministries there has been a great deal of talk of "nationalizing" various industries and services. The discussions that have taken place reveal the fact that many are not clear in their minds as to the true objective of nationalization. Here it is proposed to set out a few principles that should govern "nationalization".

"Nationalization" presupposes that real power rests with the people, i. e., with the masses. There should be in the first place, a wide foundation of experience in the management of our affairs. This has to be obtained by the villagers looking after their common needs through well organized panchayats. From such experienced men the districts will draw their administrators and these will also supply the requirements of the province in regard to public men and legislation. Such well-based and properly conducted provincial administration will be able to keep under control the Central Government and make it function in the interests of the villagers.

When the Government of the land is in the hands of such tried patriots who will be trusted to hold the interests of the millions as their first care, then alone can we claim to have a National Government and "Nationalization" will then ensure that the interests of the masses will be taken care of.

In the absence of such a village-based and -controlled Central Government "Nationalization" may lead to the greater exploitation of the "have-nots" by the "haves".

For instance, there has been a lot of talk recently about "Nationalizing" the airways. These airways at present, are not within the reach of the villagers. They do not need them, nor are they likely to use them. As it is, at the present time, the "haves" own them and use them. So Government control now will mean that the Government will spend its money and thought in making "the airways" easily available to the "haves" while other "haves" will provide the service. Aerodromes may have to be constructed and various roads, etc. provided. For this, these private bodies would like to exploit the Government resources and obtain their assistance under the plea of Government control or "Nationalization". The funds available to the Government should be earmarked for the provision of facilities for the masses and hence we can not divert them for the betterment of airways. Let private enterprise go on as they have done. Some "haves" will exploit other "haves", and later on when village-based National Government comes into existence, we shall have time enough to consider "Nationalization" of such services.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

THE GOSPEL OF SELFLESS ACTION
OR

THE GITA ACCORDING TO GANDHI

By Mahadev Desai

With Gandhiji's Foreword

Price Rs. Four, Postage Nine Annas

HARIJAN

January 5

1947

A LETTER FROM GANDHIJI

In the course of a letter to Shri Narandas Gandhi of Rajkot, Gandhiji writes:

"I have reverted to my usual diet and so there is no cause for worry. As a matter of fact, when a man leads a thoughtful life, there is no room for worry. My present mission is the most complicated and difficult one of my life. I can sing with cent per cent truth:

'The night is dark and I am far from home,
Lead Thou me on.'

"I never experienced such darkness in my life before. The night seems to be pretty long. The only consolation is that I feel neither baffled, nor disappointed. I am prepared for any eventuality. 'Do or Die' has to be put to test here. 'Do' here means Hindus and Mussalmans should learn to live together in peace and amity. Otherwise, I should die in the attempt. It is really a difficult task. God's will be done.

"All the companions have merged themselves into this sacred work quite willingly. If any one of them feels defeated, he or she is free to leave. Each one has chosen his or her own village. Each has with him a Bengali interpreter. Kanu (son of Narandas) also is posted in a village, different from that of Abha, (Kanu's wife). I am here in a remote and unhappy village. Parasuram could not be left alone on account of the difficulty of language. So he accompanies me. He is a silent worker and a very clever stenographer. My other companion is a Bengali professor. Both attend to my personal needs also. Most of the other companions are at a distance of ten miles from me. They can see me, when necessary. Pyarelal, Sushila Nayyar and Sushila Pai are in different villages. Kanu is quite happy and is carrying on Ramadhun. He has very regular habits, and is endowed by God with a good physique. Abha is with Thakkar Bapa. She is sixteen miles away. Bapa is taking keen interest in her. He is pleased with her spirit of service. She is preparing Gujarati chapatis for him. Being a Bengali, she is able to do good work amongst Bengali women. She was extremely sorry to leave me. But duty lay that way. So I have kept her away from me. I must own that I was getting accustomed to her service almost as a matter of habit. But a habit of taking service from a particular individual is inconsistent with hard austerity. You will see thus, that whatever I do, I do from a sense of pure duty. You all should rejoice at this. Now, I have written long enough. You must all engross yourselves in your respective tasks.

With blessings,

5-12-'46

BAPU".

(Translated from the original in Gujarati)

ASSAM

Assam, the Cinderella province of India, has got a bright future before it, unless misfortune makes it succumb to cruel experiments which British diplomacy often makes on human beings. In spite of the greatest variety of races and languages, Assam is a homogeneous province. In the words of Sir Andrew Clow, the Governor of Assam, "nowhere else in India has there been such a mixture of races as in the Assam valley; and nowhere have the peoples lived in more harmony."

This harmony, does not seem to suit imperialist politics. The two Surma Valley districts of Sylhet and Cachar have been tacked on to Assam. The population in these two districts speaks Bengali. These districts therefore properly belong to Bengal. Owing to the Khasi and Jaintia Hills there is not much communication between the Surma valley and the Assam Valley. One could understand a suggestion to restore the Surma Valley districts to Bengal. But that of presenting the whole of Assam to Bengal is without the least shadow of justice. The inference is irresistible that it is a part of the game for keeping the British hold firmly on India. With the fullest knowledge that the people of Assam are opposed to it, their province is grouped with Bengal. After compelling Assam to sit in a section, which it does not wish to sit in, it is being told that later on, it will have the freedom to opt out. Who can say how many complications will arise, making it extremely difficult for it to opt out? The Muslim League, with a definite policy of division of India, and a solid majority in Bengal, might be able to manipulate a tight constitutional stranglehold on Assam. What a cruel experiment on human beings it is!

Similarly, in the Western zone, the Sikhs in the Punjab and the Pathans of the Frontier are forced into a group with the Punjab and Sind! And, in the face of all this, the British Prime Minister has the temerity to declare that the British do not wish to force any constitution on a large body of people against its will!

There is yet another sinister movement afoot. Some British officers are working in the direction of making a separate province of the Naga people and other hill tribes. The British officers know only too well the result of such a policy. Some Naga leaders may feel elated at the prospect but the soberer among them, having a better understanding of the situation, have met and passed a resolution known as the Vokha resolution in which they say:

"1. This Naga National Council stands for the solidarity of all the Naga tribes including those of the unadministered areas;

"2. This Council strongly protests against the grouping of Assam with Bengal;

"3. The Naga Hills should be constitutionally included in an autonomous Assam in a free India, with local autonomy and due safeguards for the interests of the Nagas.

"4. The Naga Tribes should have a separate electorate."

Let it not be supposed that these hill people are novices in the art of self-government.

Even under the British rule, they govern themselves in the villages. It is only on the rarest occasions that cases other than those of murder or such heinous crimes go to the British courts. The method they follow is this :

In respect of disputes within a particular Khel, the Gaonbura of the Khel settles the disputes. If the dispute involves people of more than one Khel, the Gaonburas representing those Khels come together and settle the dispute. If the disputes are of considerable importance, all the headmen come to the Panchayat hall and settle them together. Normally all disputes are settled in this manner, and it is only in an extremely small number of cases that reference is made to the British courts.

Most of these Gaonburas are elected and even where they are hereditary (as they are in certain cases) they are subjected to a kind of referendum.

The Ao Nagas have a kind of Government by the people. The people are divided into three groups according to their age limit. The elders act as counsellors, the middle-aged group do sturdier social service and the younger ones perform minor and less important social duties — one set of persons in age limit superseding the other with the afflux age.

Each of the hill tribes has a language of its own. They have been taught to use English as a language of common intercourse, which very few of them understand. They are prepared to replace English by Assamese which is, naturally, much better understood in those parts.

If it be true that the British have decided to quit India, one fails to understand why they should still create situations which would foster disunity in this country. They know that the destiny of the hill people is indissolubly linked up with that of India as a whole. They know that if the Tribes people are left to themselves they will lack a foreign policy and also sufficient internal cohesion. What they need is an assurance of complete autonomy. The hill Tribes, with the help of sympathetic officers, can easily forge their own unity and solidarity.

Every effort must be made by the more advanced sections of Assam to give the tribes a life-building education. They must be taught improved methods of agriculture. Their communications must be improved. The mischievous distinction of excluded and included areas must be abandoned. Protection against outside exploitation should be secured through appropriate legislation, if necessary. Cottage industries should be developed and marketing facilities afforded through co-operative societies. Non-political and non-proselytizing social service agencies may be encouraged to function in these areas to help these people towards a planned development.

Assam must assert itself and refuse to be yoked to Bengal. Assam can voluntarily and freely co-operate with both Bengal and Bihar as it has been doing all these years. Assam must remain an autonomous unit within an undivided and free India.

Wardha, 12-12-'46

KAKA KALELKAR

SHRIRAMPUR DIARY

Shrirampur, 20-11-'46

Speaking after the prayer at Shrirampur to an audience of about a thousand persons, Gandhiji said that he had never imagined he would be able to come and settle down in a devastated village in Noakhali so soon. This had become possible through Satish Babu's efforts. He had come here alone, with two companions only. One was to act as his interpreter and teach him Bengali, while the other Shri Parasuram, who was from Malabar, had been brought along because the latter knew no Bengali and also Hindustani roughly and so could not be set up in a village alone. For all practical purposes he had thus come here alone. His companions had been left behind at Kazirkhil, and each of them was likewise to choose one village for himself. His idea was that every Hindu worker thus sent should be accompanied by a single Mussalman worker, and both of them together would mix with the local people and gradually create the atmosphere when the refugees from here shed their fear and would be able to come back and live in peace and friendship once more. For a Mussalman worker he depended on Saheed Saheb and Shamsuddin Saheb. But he could not afford to wait until such a worker was available. He had therefore come here as soon as he found the opportunity. It was good that some Mussalmans were present in the meeting and two local Mussalman friends had already invited him to visit their homes. They had assured him that they also wanted the Hindus back in the village; but the Hindus were not yet in the proper frame of mind to do so.

Fear is a thing which he disliked; why should one man be afraid of another man? Men should stand in fear of God alone, and then he can shed all other fears. Pyarelal had come to the meeting a short while ago. On his way, he met about 150 refugees who were going away from the village with their belongings. On enquiry the refugees had told him that they were afraid, when the military and police would leave, there would be fresh trouble. Whilst, therefore, the roads were safe, they took the opportunity of moving away to some place of safety. But the man who is possessed by fear will not find safety anywhere. What help can the military or the police give to such a man? To depend on military and police aid is to add to one's helplessness. He would therefore like these refugees to develop personal courage so that they would consider it beneath their dignity to fly from fancied danger merely for fear of losing one's life. Therefore, the better course for intending refugees would be to derive personal courage from men like him who went to the affected villages, assuming of course that these had the requisite courage.

But whether such courage he could personally infuse in another man or not, he did not know. So long he had lived amidst a number of companions. But now he had begun to say to himself, "Now is the time. If you want to know yourself, go forth alone." It was therefore that he had come practically alone like this to the present village. With unquenchable faith in God he proposed to persevere so as to succeed in disarming all opposition and inspiring confidence.

He would live here amidst the Muslim villagers, form intimate acquaintance with each family, know their mind, and help them also to know his mind. When they thus knew one another intimately, then would perhaps come the time when the atmosphere would change and sweetness prevail in the relation between Hindus and Mussalmans, where sourness was prevailing today.

Shrirampur, 24-11-'46

Gandhiji in the course of his prayer discourse said, "I am sorry I had to start the weekly silence earlier than usual. Such was Shamsuddin Saheb's order. But wherever I may happen to be, my heart is here. I can have no peace until the Muslim brothers and sisters of this village do not call back the Hindus who used to live here, and they return to their homes. They should treat this as a duty and try to fulfil it."

Shrirampur, 27-11-'46

Yesterday's (26th) prayer meeting took place in the small village of Shrirampur where Gandhiji has taken up his abode. He said that even if a solitary refugee had to return to his village populated by Muslims, he would unhesitatingly advise his return. Whether it was men or women, if they were to become brave people, this courage was indispensable. Numerous letters had been coming to him in which people had questioned the wisdom of thus tempting faith, but he held that this was necessary if they were to become a self-respecting nation. He made no distinction between men and women. The latter should feel just as independent as men. Bravery was not man's monopoly. The art of self-defence excluded all outside help. What he saw and heard showed him that people were apt to forget self-respect in order to save themselves. There was no Swadesh and Swaraj for persons who would not sacrifice themselves or their belongings for their honour. As his hearers knew, the Ministers and the Parliamentary Secretaries, who had come to Noakhali, had been proclaiming that for the sake of their honour and the influence of Islam they were anxious that the refugees should return to their villages and feel perfectly safe and serene in the midst of the majority of Muslims living there. The speaker had no hesitation in trusting their pledged word and asking the people to do likewise. Those who trusted were never the losers, deceivers ever were. There was no room for goondalism in any religion worth the name, be it Islam, Hinduism or any other. He was trying to become a Bengali in order that if God gave him strength, he might try to live the life in the midst of the people of East Bengal and induce them to do likewise.

Shrirampur, 28-11-'46

At today's prayer meeting, Gandhiji related the story of how the Ashram prayer had taken its present shape. When he came to India in 1915 Gurudev invited him through the late Deena-bandhu Andrews to stay at Santiniketan along with the inmates of the Phoenix Settlement. Kaka-saheb and Harihar Sharma were there and so were the late Deenabandhu Andrews and Pearson. These friends had created a sort of South African group at the place. The prayer which was observed at that early time by the small group practically continues to this day so far as the Sanskrit part is concerned.

While on his Harijan tour in Travancore, the speaker added the first verse of the Ishopanishad to it, as, in his opinion, it contained the cream of Hindu spiritual thought. Later on, Raihana Tyabjee, daughter of the late Abbas Tyabjee, who is noted for her musical talents, proposed the incorporation of a passage from the Quran Shareef, and this was done. Lastly, on Kasturba's death at the Aga Khan Palace, Dr. Gilder had recited a passage from the Zoroastrian scripture. Since then that prayer has been a part of the Ashram prayer. In addition there was a bhajan in an Indian language or an English hymn and Ramadhun.

The prayer which has thus taken shape can, on no account, be considered as belonging to any single community or religion. It is of universal appeal; and no one, whatever his denomination may be, should have hesitation in sharing it.

Shrirampur, 30-11-'46

At the prayer meeting this evening Gandhiji explained the meaning of the first mantra recited in the Ashram prayer: Namyo Horenge Kyo. Its purport is, "Salutation to the Enlightened Ones".

A Japanese Buddhist monk who had happened to stay in Sevagram for two or three years was responsible for its introduction. He had come to India with the object of mastering the secrets of the religion which had its origin in India. The monk had a sweet nature and had endeared himself to every member of the Sevagram Ashram by unostentatiousness, affableness and silence. Every morning he used to walk round the Ashram grounds for full one hour, while beating upon a drum and reciting the above mantra in a deep musical voice which sent a thrill into all those who heard him. He used to recite it at the prayer meeting. The recitation continued even after he was removed by the Government after hostilities with Japan began.

Shrirampur, 2-12-'46

Speaking after prayer, Gandhiji chose as his theme the story referred to in the bhajan which had just been sung. The chief of the elephants had gone for a drink to the river when he was caught hold of by an alligator. A furious struggle ensued, but in spite of his strength, the elephant was dragged into deeper waters. When he was on the point of being drowned, the elephant realized that his huge strength was of no avail, and he prayed to God for succour. God, the help of the helpless, came to his rescue and saved him from the jaws of death.

The moral was obvious, continued Gandhiji. The strength of the strong without God's help had been often found to be useless. Therefore, he advised dependence not on outside sources but upon the inner strength which came to all who sincerely sought it from God. This was the lesson which the people in Noakhali sorely needed to learn.

Shrirampur, 3-12-'46

Two American friends who had come for relief work in Noakhali on behalf of the Friend's Service Unit met Gandhiji just before prayer; and they remained over to pray with us. One of them, Prof. Stuart Nelson shared in it by reading out some verses from Isaac Watts's famous hymn "Our God, our help in ages past". Gandhiji had originally intended to proceed further with explanation of the verses used in the Ashram prayer; but after Prof. Nelson's recitation he preferred to explain the English hymn in Hindustani.

By way of introduction Gandhiji said that he felt very happy that Prof. Nelson had thus shared in the prayer. While in detention at the Aga Khan Palace, Mirabehn used to sing this hymn to him in her rich sonorous voice. He then paraphrased the meaning of the first three verses and said that the sentiment expressed in it was the same as found in the Gajendra moksha bhajan sung last evening. There was the same reliance upon God, who was the source of all strength when every other earthly aid failed us. All human power is transient, and real safety can lie only when we place our reliance wholly on God.

Beneath the shadow of Thy throne

Thy saints have dwelt serene;

Sufficient is Thine arm alone

And our defence is sure.

This is a lesson which all of us in Noakhali sorely needed to learn.

Shrirampur, 4-12-'46

Shortly before prayer, a group of people from the neighbouring villages arrived, singing the namasankirtan to the accompaniment of the khol (drum) and the karatala (cymbals). When the Ramadhun was being sung, they kept time by means of the khol. It was a delightful experience and, as Gandhiji began his daily discourse, he paid unstinted praise to the musicians. Indeed, he said that he had never heard the Bengal mridanga (drum) played so well as was done at the meeting. When played well it had a sweetness all its own.

He had also appreciated the namasankirtan; but he hoped it did not come merely from the throat but from their heart. For a parrot also can repeat what it learns from its master. There is hardly any virtue when we take the name of God when we live in safety. It becomes real only when in danger.

Continuing he said that he would never mind if a Hindu recited the kalma willingly and with a full heart. But if he did so out of fear of losing his life or possessions, then he took the name of God in vain, for it was the voice of Satan which then spoke through him. As he understood Islam, it had never prospered nor could prosper by means of force. Any man who pretended to serve Islam in that manner only did a disservice to the noble religion.

Every religion today had become tainted by unwanted accretions. In Hinduism we treated a large part of our brethren as untouchables, and Gandhiji said he had no doubt that we were paying sorrowfully for that sin.

The first verse of the Ishopanishad, in the opinion of the speaker, contained the essence of Hindu spiritual experience. The purport of the verse was that all that existed in the universe was pervaded by and had its being in God. Therefore, no man could claim anything as his own. He should dedicate his body, mind and all that he possessed to that Universal Being and use only what he received through his grace. The moral of it was that we should deprive no man of his wealth, whether it be in the shape of life, honour or religion. Gandhiji continued that a believer in this truth, living up to it, shed all fear and lived in perfect peace.

The verses of the Shrimad Bhagawad Gita (II 54-72) were then referred to, as they form the next item in the Ashram's evening prayer. They described the characteristics of one who had attained knowledge and brought his senses under full control. The lesson of the Bhagawad Gita, said Gandhiji, was meant not for those who had forsaken the world, but for every householder, irrespective of his birth and state. Everybody's duty should be to attain the state described therein, and this could only be done if life was built on the rock of fearlessness.

Shrirampur, 6-12-'46

Gandhiji began his after-prayer speech by saying that true prayer never went unanswered. It did not mean that every little thing we asked for from God was readily given to us. It was only when we shed our selfishness with a conscious effort and approached God in true humility that our prayers found a response.

In the Ashram prayer nothing is asked. The prayer was for God to make them better men and women. If the prayer came truly from the heart, God's grace would surely descend upon them. There was not a blade of grass which moved without his will, not one single true thought which did not leave a mark on character. It was good, therefore, to develop the daily habit of prayer.

Shrirampur, 7-12-'46

Gandhiji referred in his few words after yesterday's prayer to a writing by a Mussalman. In it the writer had rightly contended that a man of God was never afraid to die or to lose his possessions for the sake of his self-respect or religion. God had given us life and could take it away. That teaching was universal and applied to all, Hindu as well as Mussalman. Those who had in God their sole refuge cast out all fear. Then there could be lasting friendship between the two. He had been trying all these days to din this lesson into the ears of his listeners. There was a time when Mussalmans also listened to him; but now things seemed to have changed and even among Hindus there were not many who would follow his advice. But he felt sure, lasting peace could come only when men of whatever community refused to surrender to any fear save the holy fear of God.

A NOTE ON HINDUSTANI

The Status of Hindustani

It is self-evident that English will cease to be the State language as soon as India becomes independent. We shall then carry on our administration in the provinces in their respective provincial languages and that at the centre in Hindustani. All Inter-provincial work, as also the work of institutions of an all India character will be carried on in the national language. When India becomes independent, Hindustani will have an official status at the U. N. O. just as the Chinese language has. No doubt Indian representatives at the U. N. O. will have, for some years at least, to speak in English for the convenience of the other members.

The Nature of Hindustani

Hindustani is the language of Northern India, out of which arose the present day Urdu and Hindi literatures. With the ever increasing urge for national unity, Hindi and Urdu will have to come together and again melt into a common language — Hindustani — written in both the Nagari and the Persian scripts. Like all other languages Hindustani, too, will tend to become more and more simple as the spirit of democracy permeates the people of India.

The Policy regarding Hindustani

For the Unity of India it is necessary that all Government officials, public workers and the majority of the people should not only know the national language, but also be able to use it with ease.

Both scripts should be equally acceptable all over India.

The working out of the Policy

Except for the first four years, when only the mother tongue or the language of the province will be taught, arrangements will be made for the teaching of Hindustani in both the scripts throughout the period of schooling. (For the four years no second language either classical or modern will form a part of the curriculum.)

Hindustani and its literature will form a distinct subject in the compulsory course of the middle schools and colleges. The administration will see to it that no grown up person will go without a fair knowledge both of his mother tongue and of Hindustani.

Hindustani, in both the scripts, will be taught as a compulsory subject in all Teachers' Training Institutes.

Not only in the Department, of Education but in all Government services the employee's knowledge of Hindustani — in both scripts — will be noted and will be duly taken into account at the time of confirmation or promotion.

Every encouragement will be given to those who wish to learn Hindustani in both the scripts.

Special arrangements should be made for the publication of new standard literature in Hindustani.

Wherever possible, easy Hindustani paraphrases of good Hindi and Urdu books should be made and published in both the scripts.

The Immediate Step

The present policy is to make Hindustani compulsory in schools and leave the choice of the script to the students or their parents.

Nowhere is the knowledge of both the scripts made compulsory, nor is it even encouraged anywhere.

The better policy would be to recognize that the knowledge of both the scripts is essential to Hindustani, and make the study of Hindustani optional until public opinion is ripe enough to welcome its compulsion.

Whether the two scripts should be taught simultaneously or consecutively, should be left to the discretion of the school.

Hindustani may be taught through the provincial script, in the elementary stages, provided that the pronunciation does not suffer in any manner thereby.

KAKA KALELKAR

[The above note was submitted to Mahatmaji for his consideration. He approved of it in a general way and added that popular Governments should content themselves for the present with making the following rule :

'It will be open to institutions to teach and for student to learn only Hindi and Urdu if they so choose. But certificates for Hindustani will only be issued to students knowing both the scripts. Prizes, promotions and appointments will naturally go to those holding certificates in Hindustani. K. K.]

PLEASE NOTE

Though we have repeatedly drawn the attention of the subscribers to not sending their subscriptions by cheques, it seems it suits some of them better. We, therefore, have to draw their attention to two things: one, to avoid sending cheques as far as possible and two, if they prefer sending cheques to remit an additional amount of annas eight to cover the discount charged by banks which varies with different banks. When this additional expense is not remitted the subscription amount becomes a fraction which is not amenable to adjustments in calculations of the subscription amount.

MANAGER

CONTENTS	PAGE
WHO SHOULD DO IT? ... K. G. MASHRUWALA	473
"UNEQUAL MARRIAGES" ... K. G. MASHRUWALA	474
GANDHIJ'S PRESENT ROUTINE ...	474
RETURN TO PRIMITIVE CIVILIZATION! ... K. G. MASHRUWALA	475
NATIONALIZATION ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	475
A LETTER FROM GANDHIJI ...	476
ASSAM ... KAKA KALELKAR	476
SHRIRAMPUR DIARY ...	477
A NOTE ON HINDUSTANI ... KAKA KALELKAR	480
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI — INSTALMENT X	481

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 50

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, JANUARY 19, 1947

TWO ANNAS

SHRIRAMPUR DIARY

[This is prepared from press messages appearing in various newspapers. The idea is to make handy for the reader Gandhiji's utterances during this most important mission in his life. — Ed.]

EXCHANGE OF POPULATION

"The question of the exchange of population is unthinkable and impracticable," said Gandhiji replying to questions put to him by Press correspondents staying with him at Shrirampur.

"This question never crossed my mind," Gandhiji said, and added: "In every Province, everyone is an Indian, be he a Hindu, a Muslim or of any other faith. It would not be otherwise even if Pakistan came in full."

Gandhiji continued: "For me any such thing will spell bankruptcy of Indian wisdom or statesmanship or both. The logical consequence of any such step is too dreadful to contemplate. Is it not that India should be artificially divided into so many religious zones?" he asked.

When asked if, in view of the unsettled situation, it was not better to adopt a migration policy, Gandhiji said, "I see nothing to warrant such a policy. It is one of despair and, therefore, to be adopted in rare cases as a last resort."

MESSAGE OF NOAKHALI

The next question was: "You said the other day that there is no limit to your stay in East Bengal. Do you think that by confining yourself at Shrirampur you will be able to send your message of peace to other villages of Noakhali?"

Gandhiji replied: "Of course, I am not burying myself long in Shrirampur. I am not idle here. I am seeing people of the surrounding villages and others. I am studying things and regaining lost physical strength meanwhile. The idea ultimately is to go on foot, when possible and necessary, from village to village and induce the evacuees to return. This I can only do with effect when I have seen things myself. It is quite clear to me that my mere word carries very little weight. Distrust has gone too deep for exhortation."

"DARKNESS LIES WITHIN ME"

Gandhiji was next asked regarding the report that he finds himself in darkness, and why and when the darkness came over him and whether he saw any release from it.

Gandhiji said: "I am afraid the report is substantial. Outside circumstances have never overwhelmed me. The reason for the present darkness lies within me. I find that my ahimsa does not seem to answer in the matter of Hindu-Muslim relations. This struck me forcibly when I came to learn of the events in Noakhali.

"The reported forcible conversions and the distress of the Bengali sisters touched me deeply. I could do nothing through pen or speech. I argued to myself that I must be on the scene of action and test the soundness of the doctrine which has sustained me and made life worth living.

"Was it the weapon of the weak as it was often held by my critics or was it truly the weapon of the strong? The question arose in me when I had no ready-made solution for the distemper of which Noakhali was such a glaring symptom.

"And so setting aside all my activities, I hastened to Noakhali to find out where I stood. I know positively that ahimsa is a perfect instrument. If it did not answer in my hands, the imperfection was in me. My technique was at fault. I could not discover the error from a distance. Hence I came here trying to make the discovery. I must, therefore, own myself in darkness till I see light. God only knows when it will come. More I cannot say."

MY AHIMSA PUT TO ACID TEST

"I have come here to put my ahimsa to the acid test in this atmosphere of rank distrust and suspicion," said Gandhiji replying to a question put by the correspondent of a Madras paper.

The question was: "Don't you think that Bengal Ministers may regard your very presence here as an oppression and that whatever they do out of their own sense of justice towards the rehabilitation of the refugees may be regarded by the outside world as being done under the pressure of your presence?"

Gandhiji replied: "In the first place your assumption is gratuitous. But if it is not, and the assumption were to accord with facts, your deduction would be correct and my stay here would not be consistent with ahimsa.

"I claim that I have come as much as a friend of the Muslims as of the Hindus in this part of the world. You may recall my visit to Champaran in the very early period of my return to the motherland. I was even served with a notice to quit. The conviction against me was cancelled on the orders of the then Viceroy and the Magistrate was instructed to permit and even help in my unofficial enquiry with the result that I was invited to become a member of the official Sly Commission and a century old wrong was removed."

ADVICE TO WOMEN

Tears trickled down their faces when a number of women met Gandhiji last evening in a corner of the paddy field where he was taking his evening walk to tell Gandhiji their sad tales and the present condition in which they were living.

One old lady while wiping her tears from the eyes said: "Mahatmaji, please tell us what we are to do. How can we live in our villages when we think our life and property are unsafe and insecure?"

Gandhiji told them that since his arrival in Noakhali he had been telling them all to be fearless. If they acted accordingly and were fearless in all their work, they could live in peace. Pointing his hand towards the sky, Gandhiji said to those women, "Believe in Him. Pray and fear Him alone, and none in this world."

ADVICE TO EUROPE

"The people of Europe are sure to perish if they continue to be violent," said Gandhiji in reply to questions put to him by Monsieur Raymond Cartier, a French journalist who paid a visit to the Shrirampur cottage this afternoon.

Raymond asked, "We who are children of violence in Europe, how do you expect us to become non-violent?"

In reply, Gandhiji said, if they continued like this they were sure to perish. What had happened in Europe was that Hitlerism had only been destroyed by super-Hitlerism and this chain was endless. It would go on like that.

M. Raymond asked if the remedy lay in a new form of education. Gandhiji said education must be of a new type for the sake of the creation of a new world. He referred to Aldous Huxley, who, he observed, represented a new type of thought which was working in the mind of Europe today. It might be in a minority today but if Europe was to save itself from suicide something along the lines of non-violence had to be adopted.

SURVIVAL OF SMALL NATIONS

Asked as to how it would be possible to destroy Hitlerism by non-violence, Gandhiji said that was what we had to find out. Otherwise, if one depended upon superior violence in order to destroy violence of the Hitlerian type, then small nations would have hardly any chance of survival. It was only when a nation individually refused to be beaten by Hitlerism or any combination of forces of violence, and stuck to its post at the cost of its life, but not at the cost of its honour, that it had a chance of survival. So that non-violence alone was the only guarantee of protection against the heaviest odds. Unless we could develop this courage and this type of resistance, democracy could never survive.

ADVICE TO REFUGEES

The following is the authorized version according to the A. P. I. of Gandhiji's prayer speech on December 21.

He began by saying that he held very strong views on the question of charity. It was wrong both to accept as well as to offer anyone a free gift. In our land irreligion often masqueraded in the name of religion. India was said to have a contingent of 56 lakhs of religious mendicants, not many of whom could be considered worthy in any sense. Even the hateful custom of untouchability had been given the sanction of religion in this land of sorrow.

The problem of relief and rehabilitation, Gandhiji went on to say, had become a serious one. People from all over India were eager to help the afflicted inhabitants of Noakhali with money or free gifts of all kinds, and there was a chance that the latter might slip into a mentality of willing dependence on public charity. This had to be combated as much as the self-complacency of those who might feel they were acquiring religious merit through charitable gifts.

Referring to the attitude which the Government should exercise with regard to the refugees in comparison with that held by public charitable bodies, Gandhiji proceeded to explain that it was true that people had gathered in the refugees' camps for no fault of theirs. Their homes had been burnt and they were without shelter; others had been robbed of all their belongings although their cottages might still be standing, while a third group had deserted their homes mainly from a feeling of insecurity. It should be the object of the Government to deal with each case on its merits and help the people to return home with a feeling of security.

Before necessary conditions were created, it would not be right for the authorities to stop rations unless the evacuees went back home with their whole families. If the evacuees were expected to brave hardships and perhaps even death in order to reinstate themselves in their homes, then there would be no need of a State; it would be a condition of enlightened anarchy where every man would be able to protect himself by his own strength in the face of the greatest danger. But as things stood today, much of the necessary work of social services had to be conducted by Governmental organizations.

ADEQUATE PROTECTION MUST BE GIVEN

Adequate protection had to be given and an atmosphere created where the people might once more pursue their life's work in peace. So long as the conditions were not forthcoming arrangements for relief had to continue.

But the case of public charitable societies stood on an entirely different footing. Gandhiji held it was wrong for any man to live on public doles. While the South African Satyagraha was going on, large sums of money were donated to cover the expenses of the Satyagrahis. The Tolstoy Farm near Lawley in the Transvaal was established to accommodate the families and dependents of Satyagrahis who worked to the best of their ability against their upkeep. Consequently, the Satyagraha organization was able to refund large sums of money at the end of the campaign.

In accordance with the same principles the charitable institutions now working here should plainly tell the people that everyone should deem it a dishonour to eat a single meal without honest labour. If we could shed the aversion to labour and adapt ourselves to unexpected changes of fortune, we would go a long way towards the acquisition of fearlessness and thus towards an upliftment of our national character.

He would venture to tell the refugees that whether they were poor or rich, they should say to the authorities that they would consider it below human dignity to accept doles from the Government. Poor or rich had nothing left to them. Therefore, they were in need of food, clothing, shelter and medical assistance. Therefore, they had a claim upon the State for providing these vital necessities of life. But they would be robbing society if they accepted this aid without each healthy man, woman, boy or girl, labouring to the extent of his or her ability and therefore he would like the Government to provide such useful work for society which they were capable of doing.

FROM GANDHIJI'S PRAYER SPEECH ON 24TH DEC.

Gandhiji began his speech by saying that complaints had been pouring in that people were unable to shed their fear because persons known to be guilty were freely moving about. He said that although this might be true, his advice to them would still be to take courage in their hands and return to their homes. When several persons had complained that the amounts offered by the Government for rebuilding was inadequate for the erection of any kind of shelter, he felt sure that the Government, which was determined on repatriation would extend their aid to the necessary extent.

What Gandhiji would personally prefer was that the refugees should be resourceful enough to tide over the present difficulty. He would honour a man who begged nothing for himself nor depended on outsider's aid for protection. If any one depended on him for that purpose, he was depending on a broken reed.

The only effective protection came from reliance upon internal strength, i. e. on God. Everyone should realize the secret that oppression thrived only when the oppressed submitted to it. If they shed fear from their hearts, nobody would or could oppress them.

AIM OF STAY IN NOAKHALI

The following is the authorized version according to the A. P. I. of Gandhiji's speech after prayer, on Monday, the 23rd December.

Gandhiji first referred to certain personal letters addressed to him as well as a number of articles or comments published in newspapers in which the opinion had been expressed that his continued presence in Noakhali was acting as a deterrent to the restoration of cordial relations between the Hindus and Muslims, for his intention was to bring discredit upon the League Ministry in Bengal.

Two days ago, Gandhiji said, he had tried to refute a rumour that a Satyagraha movement of an extensive character was secretly planned by him in Noakhali. He had already said that nothing could be done by him in secret. If recourse were taken to secrecy and falsehood, Satyagraha would degenerate into Duragraha.

Today, he found it necessary to answer the second charge levelled against him to which reference had already been made. He would like to proclaim that he had come to Bengal solely with the object of establishing heart unity between the two communities, who had become estranged from one another. When that object was satisfactorily achieved, there would no longer be any necessity for him to prolong his stay.

His intention could never be to embarrass the League Government in Bengal, Gandhiji added. On the other hand, his relations with the Ministry, as well as with the officials, had been very cordial and he had been able to gather the impression that all of them looked with favour upon his peace mission. He had discovered no indication yet of his presence causing embarrassment to anyone. It was open to the Government to ask the Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police to convince him of his error if they were themselves convinced. As yet they had said not a word to such effect. If he felt convinced of any error on his part, he would leave.

Gandhiji said that he had enough work to do elsewhere which demanded his attention. There was Uruli-Kanchan, the seat of his nature cure experiments, and Sevagram, and there was Delhi again, where he might be of some service. He would love to spare troubles to the leaders who had to come to this out-of-the-way place in order to consult him. But personally he felt convinced that the work undertaken by him here was of the greatest importance for all India. If he succeeded in his present mission, it was bound to have a profound influence on the future of India, and, if he might be permitted to say so, even on the future peace of the world, for it was to be a test of faith in non-violence.

A copy of the Bihar Provincial Muslim League report on the Bihar atrocities had been sent to him. He had gone through it with care and had felt that it bristled with over-statements. Nevertheless, he was making inquiries on the basis of the report. It was certainly true that much that had happened in Bihar was brutal enough and deserved the severest condemnation. The over-statement blurred the gruesomeness of the reality. He was assured that calm had been restored. It was on that assurance that normal diet was resumed by him.

The reason why he had not proceeded to Bihar, Gandhiji explained, was that he could exercise his personal influence effectively even from a distance. But if there were any reason to suspect that things still continued in Bihar in the manner described in the League report and that he had been misled by false assurance of his friends, then his place would surely be in that province and he might even confess that this might imply that the life in the present body was now over and that there was no longer any room for him in the land of the living.

But he could not help uttering a word of warning that leaders of public opinion had a serious responsibility. Their word would be believed by the credulous public, and they all knew the tragic consequences. This he said irrespective of whether the leaders belonged to the Congress or the Muslim League.

HARIJAN

January 19

1947

INDIAN MILLS

The reader will find elsewhere in these columns a statement (slightly condensed) of Shri Khandubhai Desai, Secretary of the Textile Labour Association, Ahmedabad, upon the working of the Indian Textile Industry during the war period 1940 to 1946. If his figures are unchallengeable, as he avers they are, they lead to the following conclusions:

(i) that the whole Indian Textile Industry is for all practical purposes a concern of only about 150 firms;

(ii) that the industry has not been worked in the interest of the nation;

(iii) that in collusion with the Government of the period, the mill agents worked in a way which has created cloth-famine, black-marketing, high prices out of all proportion with the cost of manufacture, paid inadequately to the producer of raw cotton as well as their own employees, and have exploited the people to the extent of some hundred crores of rupees;

(iv) that they have been also inefficient;

(v) that they have thus rendered themselves unfit to continue to manage the industry as trustees of the nation;

(vi) that apart from their moral lapse as trustees, the industry has returned to the investors by way of profits several times again the value of the total capital sunk in it, so that the nation, if it so decides, has the right to acquire the industry without any obligation to compensate either for the capital sunk or for services rendered.

Though Shri Desai has come to the last conclusion in so many words, his purpose in preparing this statement is not to press for that remedy. Possibly he does not consider that the nation is ready enough for that step. I quite understand that Nationalization'—i.e. management of big industries and transport services directly by the State—is simple enough for being put forth as an abstract ideal, but when a case comes before the government, in a concrete form, it may not find itself sufficiently prepared to shoulder the responsibility. It must be realized that this unpreparedness is not unknown to the various vested interests; and this is a factor which promotes their greed, selfishness and unscrupulousness.

Shri Khandubhai Desai is a legislator and therefore, naturally suggests only legislative remedies. Thus, he suggests a statutory "Textile Control and Supply Commission, to control the production and distribution of cloth, keeping in view only the interests of the consumers", and "very heavy penalties including imprisonment for breach" of the law.

There need be no objection to legislators and administrators doing what they can. But it would be wrong for the people to rely too much on the operation of laws and rules, and to think that all they need to get sufficient cloth from the open market is to have a neatly worded strong law. As I perceive our present condition, even complete State management of mills through a new department of civil service will not give much relief to that section of the people, which really needs it. The one proper remedy is self-reliance. If people are really keen to get more cloth or to nationalize its manufacture they can do it only by themselves giving up mill-cloth and introducing the single-spindle-mill into their own homes, and organizing local weaving. The handloom weaver will also do well to do a little hard thinking. If he wants his occupation to continue from day to day, and carry on his trade without resorting to bribery or flattery, let him not rely on mill-yarn; rather, let him forsake it. For, the same arguments which are advanced in favour of mill-spinning apply to mill-weaving also. If home spinning is to be abandoned as a relic of the old age, he may take it that very soon home-weaving will also meet the same fate. Whether it is private-ownership or state-ownership, if cloth is to be manufactured as a large-scale centralized industry, both the spinners and the weavers will be reduced to the state of factory labourers. They cannot remain independent artisans. The wise weaver, who foregoes the black-market profits which he is able to obtain today by weaving mill yarn and takes to weaving home-spun yarn, may be ridiculed in the present by his companions as an unpractical man. But in the not very distant future, they will find that it was he who had calculated better.

Sabarmati, 5-1-'47

K. G. MASHRUWALA

Regret

I very much regret that owing to inadvertence the name of Shri Jagajivan Ram has appeared in the note on Tiruvarur in the Harijan of 12-1-'47 without any honorific title. I hope none will misunderstand.

Sabarmati, 12-1-'47

K. G. M.

- Cap, black n. काली टोपी (जो अज मोतकी सजा देनेके समय पहनता है) । काली टोपी (जो जज मोत की सजा देने के समय पहनता है) ।
- Cap, knee n. घुटनेकी हड्डी ।
 कपड़े की मली ।
- Cap, a feather in one's n. नाम या अभिमानकी कोठी बात ।
 नाम या अभिमान की कोठी बात ।
- Cap at, to set one's v. डोरे डालना ।
 डोरे डालना ।
- Capable adj. लायक, योग्य, क्वाविल ।
 लायक, योग्य, क्वाविल ।
- Capacious adj. बड़ा, लम्बा-चोड़ा, खुला-खुला ।
 बड़ा, लम्बा-चोड़ा, खुला-खुला ।
- Capacity n. शक्ति, योग्यता, लियानकत, ताकत; जगह, गुंजायिश, समाधी; हैसियत; समझ; पहुँच । शक्ति, योग्यता, लियानकत, ताकत; जगह, गुंजायिश, समाधी; हैसियत; समझ; पहुँच ।
- Cap-a-pie adv. सिरसे पाँव तक (कबच पहने हुअे, तैयार) ।
 सिरसे पाँव तक (कबच पहने हुअे, तैयार) ।
- Caparision v. झूल डालना, साज पहनाना; सजाना ।
 झूल डालना, साज पहनाना; सजाना ।
- Cape n. अन्तरीप, रास; गरदनी ।
 अन्तरीप, रास; गरदनी ।
- Caper v. झुललना, कूदना, नाचना-कूदना, कुदकड़े मारना ।
 झुललना, कूदना, नाचना-कूदना, कुदकड़े मारना ।
- Capillary adj. बाल-सा बारीक या महीन ।
 बाल-सा बारीक या महीन ।
- Capillary n. (शरीरमें) खूनकी बारीक नली ।
 (शरीरमें) खूनकी बारीक नली ।
- Capital n. राजधानी, सदरमुकाम; पूँजी, सरमाया; शीर्ष, सिर (स्तम्भ या सतूनका); झुलका अक्षर या हरफ ।
 राजधानी, सदरमुकाम; पूँजी, सरमाया; शीर्ष, सिर (स्तम्भ या सतूनका); झुलका अक्षर या हरफ ।
- Capital adj. बड़ा, खास, मुख्य, सुतम, चोटीका; सख्त, संगीन ।
 बड़ा, खास, मुख्य, सुतम, चोटीका; सख्त, संगीन ।
- Capital, circulating n. फिरती पूँजी ।
 फिरती पूँजी ।
- Capital, error n. सख्त गलती, भारी भूल ।
 सख्त गलती, भारी भूल ।
- Capital, fixed n. अचल, कायम पूँजी ।
 अचल, कायम पूँजी ।
- Capital fund n. पूँजी, मूल धन, सरमाया ।
 पूँजी, मूल धन, सरमाया ।
- Capital-letter n. बड़ा अक्षर या हरफ ।
 बड़ा अक्षर या हरफ ।
- Capital offence n. महापाप, संगीन जुर्म ।
 महापाप, संगीन जुर्म ।
- Capital punishment or sentence n. फाँसी या मौत-की सजा ।
 फाँसी या मौत-की सजा ।
- Capital out of, make v. कायदा सुठाना, काम निकालना ।
 कायदा सुठाना, काम निकालना ।
- Capitalism n. पूँजीवाद, सरमायादारी ।
 पूँजीवाद, सरमायादारी ।
- Capitalist n. पूँजीवादी, पूँजीपति, सरमायादार ।
 पूँजीवादी, पूँजीपति, सरमायादार ।
- Capitation n. सिरगिनसी, सिरइण्ड ।
 सिरगिनसी, सिरइण्ड ।
- Capitulate v. हथियार डालना, शर्तों पर हथियार डालना या हथियार डालना । हथियार डालना, शर्तों पर हथियार डालना या हथियार डालना ।
- Caprice n. सनक, झक, मनकी मौज; खेल ।
 सनक, झक, मन की मौज; खेल ।
- Capricorn n. मकर, मकर राशि ।
 मकर, मकर राशि ।
- Capsicum n. मिर्चका पौदा ।
 मिर्चका पौदा ।
- Capsize n. झुलटना, झुलट जाना (जहाज या किरती व नावका) ।
 झुलटना, झुलट जाना (जहाज या किरती व नावका) ।
- Capsule n. बीजकोष, डोडा; शिलीदार लिकाफा (जिसमें दवाकी गोली रक्खी जाती है); मोतल या शीशीकी टोपी ।
 बीजकोष, डोडा; शिलीदार लिकाफा (जिसमें दवाकी गोली रक्खी जाती है); मोतल या शीशीकी टोपी ।
- Captain n. सरदार, सेनापति, कप्तान, नेता ।
 सरदार, सेनापति, कप्तान, नेता ।
- Captain v. रहनुमाजी करना, नेतृत्व करना ।
 रहनुमाजी करना, नेतृत्व करना ।
- Caption n. सरनामा, सुर्खी ।
 सरनामा, सुर्खी ।
- Captious adj. हुज्जती, तकरारी; चुक्ताचीन ।
 हुज्जती, तकरारी; चुक्ताचीन ।
- Captivate v. मोह लेना, दिल के लेना, डुमाना ।
 मोह लेना, दिल के लेना, डुमाना ।
- Captive n. कैदी, बन्दी ।
 कैदी, बन्दी ।
- Captor n. कैद करनेवाला, पकड़नेवाला ।
 कैद करनेवाला, पकड़नेवाला ।
- Capture v. पकड़ना, गिरफ्तार करना; ले लेना, छूटना ।
 पकड़ना, गिरफ्तार करना; ले लेना, छूटना ।
- Car n. गाड़ी, रथ ।
 गाड़ी, रथ ।
- Carafe n. पानीकी बोतल या शीशी ।
 पानीकी बोतल या शीशी ।
- Carat n. रत्ती ।
 रत्ती ।
- Caravan n. कारवाँ, काफिल ।
 कारवाँ, काफिल ।
- Caravanserai n. कारवाँसराय ।
 कारवाँसराय ।
- Caraway n. अजवायन ।
 अजवायन ।
- Carbon n. अ-धाती पदार्थ या मादा जो कोयले, हीरे आदिमें अद्वैत पदार्थ या मादा जो कोयले, हीरे आदिमें पाया जाता है, कार्बन ।
 अ-धाती पदार्थ या मादा जो कोयले, हीरे आदिमें पाया जाता है, कार्बन ।
- Carbon paper n. लेख बौराकी नकल करनेका खास-कागज ।
 लेख बौराकी नकल करनेका खास-कागज ।
- Carbuncle n. जेक लाल जवाहर; कोड़ा ।
 जेक लाल जवाहर; कोड़ा ।
- Carcass or Carcase n. लाश, जोश (जानवरकी) ।
 लाश, जोश (जानवरकी) ।
- Card v. धुनना, धुनकना, पीजना ।
 धुनना, धुनकना, पीजना ।
- Carding bow n. धुनकी ।
 धुनकी ।
- Carding comb n. धून या सूत साफ करनेका कंघा ।
 धून या सूत साफ करनेका कंघा ।
- Card n. ताश, पत्ता; डाक; निमंत्रण या दावत, मुलाकात आदिका पत्र; कार्ड; टिकट ।
 ताश, पत्ता; डाक; निमंत्रण या दावत, मुलाकात आदिका पत्र; कार्ड; टिकट ।
- Card; up one's sleeve, a n. आखिरी दाव ।
 आखिरी दाव ।
- Cards on the table, lay one's v. दिलकी बातें कह देना, दिल की बातें कह देना, दमोके में न रहना ।
 दिलकी बातें कह देना, दिल की बातें कह देना, दमोके में न रहना ।
- Cards, house of n. कागजकी नाव ।
 कागजकी नाव ।
- Cards, on the n. मुमकिन, सम्भव ।
 मुमकिन, सम्भव ।
- Card, queer n. अजीब आदमी ।
 अजीब आदमी ।
- Cards well, play one's v. मौकेसे पूरा कायदा सुठाना ।
 मौकेसे पूरा कायदा सुठाना ।
- Cards, throw up one's v. हार मान लेना ।
 हार मान लेना ।
- Card, trump n. तुरपका पत्ता, जीतनेवाला पत्ता; अच्छा दाव ।
 तुरपका पत्ता, जीतनेवाला पत्ता; अच्छा दाव ।
- Card board n. गत्ता, दफ्ती ।
 गत्ता, दफ्ती ।
- Cardamom n. मिर्चायची ।
 मिर्चायची ।
- Cardiac adj. दिलका ।
 दिलका ।
- Cardigan n. धूनकी बुनी हुअी वास्कर ।
 धूनकी बुनी हुअी वास्कर ।

Cart n. उकडा, गाडी, ठेला । ۱۹۴۵. ۵۳۱. ۱۹۴۵

ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI

INSTALMENT — XI

ENGLISH

HINDUSTANI

- Cackle n. कुक्कुड़, कुटकुट (मुर्गी या बतखकी बोली); बकबक, कूकू, कूकू, कूकू (सर्ग या पक्ष की बोली) कब-कब, गपगप।
- Cactus n. नागफनी, यूहर।
- Cad n. कमीना, नीच, पाजी।
- Cadaverous adj. मुर्दा-सा, मरा हुआ-सा।
- Cadence n. लय, आवाजका सुतार-चढ़ाव; ताल।
- Caddie n. गोलफ खेलनेवालोंके गोले सुठानेवाला।
- Caddy, tea n. चाय रखनेका डिब्बा।
- Cadet n. छोटा बेटा; सैनिक या फौजी विद्यार्थी, कडेट।
- Cadge v. मीछ माँगना, माँगते फिरना; फेरी लगाना, बेचते फिरना।
- Cadre n. बॉन्चा, नक़्शा (खासकर पलटनका)।
- Cafe n. कहवाखाना, चायघर।
- Cage n. पिंजरा, कदहारा; जेल, कैदखाना।
- Caique n. कासीक, डोंगी।
- Cairn n. पत्थरोंका ढेर (यादगार या क़ब्र पर)।
- Cajole v. फुसलाना, मीठी-मीठी बातें करना, चापलूसी करना।
- Cake n. मीठी रोटी, नानखताभी; टिकिया।
- Cake and have it, cannot eat your असम्भव या नामुमकिनको सम्भव या मुमकिन नहीं बना सकते।
- Cake of soap n. साबुनकी टिकिया।
- Calamity n. विपदा, दुःख, मुसीबत, आफ़त, बला।
- Calcify v. चूना बन जाना, चूना बनाना, चूनेसे बदलना; पत्थर बन जाना।
- Calculate v. गिनना, आँकना, गिनती करना, जोड़ना, हिसाब लगाना, अनुमान करना, अन्दाज़ा करना।
- Calculus n. पथरी (मसाने या मूतकी बैलीमें)।
- Calendar n. जंजीरी, पत्रा; सूची, फ़ेहरिस्त।
- Calender v. चोटना, चिकनाना, खिंची करना, दबाना।
- Calf n. बछड़ा, बच्छा, कटरा, पड़वा; पिंडली।
- Calf, worship of the धन-पूजा, दौलत-परस्ती।
- Calibre n. बन्दूक या तोपकी मोहरी; बुद्धि, लियाक़त, क़ाबलीयत, दख़ल।
- Calico n. लड्डा, छोट, सूती कपड़ा।

- Call n. बुलावा, पुकार, आवाज; माँग, हुक्म, आदेश; निमंत्रण, दावत; मुलाकात, भेंट; आवश्यकता, जरूरत; चीख, सीटी।
- Call v. बुलाना, पुकारना, आवाज देना; अगाना; नाम रखना।
- Call a halt v. रोकना, रुक जाना, बन्द करना, ठहरना, ठहराना।
- Call a spade a spade v. कालेको काला कहना, खरी बात कहेना।
- Call at v. किसीसे मिलने जाना।
- Call attention to v. ध्यान दिलाना, ध्यान खींचना।
- Call away v. बुला लेना।
- Call back v. वापस बुलाना।
- Call for v. माँगना, तलब करना, पूछना।
- Call forth v. सामने लाना, निकलवाना।
- Call in v. माँगना, माँगवाना; बुलाना।
- Call in question v. शक या शंका करना, अंतराज या शक या शंका करना, अंतराज या शक या शंका करना।
- Call into being v. पैदा करना, बनाना, जनना।
- Call into play v. काममें लाना, बरतना।
- Call off v. हटा लेना, बन्द कर देना, सुटा लेना।
- Call names v. गाली देना, बुरा-मला कहना, नाम धरना।
- Call on v. मिलने जाना; पुकारना, बुलायी देना।
- Call out v. बुलाना, पुकारना, ललकारना।
- Call to account v. हिसाब माँगना।
- Call to arms v. हथियारबन्दी कराना, जंगी सेवा या खिदमतके लिये बुलाना।
- Call to mind v. याद करना, चेतना।
- Call to the bar v. बैरिस्टर या वकील बनाना।
- Call to witness v. गवाह करना, साक्षी करना।
- Call of nature n. पाखाना-पेशाबकी हाजत।
- Call, within adv. नजदीक।
- Calligraphy n. सुशाली, सुन्दर लिखायी, सुन्दर अक्षर लिखना।
- Calling n. धन्धा, पेशा।
- Callisthenics n. व्यायाम, वरजिष, कसरत।
- Callosity n. सख्त गिलटी।
- Callous adj. कठोर-दिल, सख्त-दिल, रुखा।
- Callow adj. बेपर, कषा; विनयानुमयी, बेतजरबेकार।

Calm n. شانتی، امن، چین، سہرتا۔
Calm adj. شانت، स्थिर، चुपचाप۔
Calm v. शान्त करना, दिलासा देना, चुप करना, ठण्डा करना।
 شانت کرنا، دلاسا دینا، چپ کرنا، ٹھنڈا کرنا
Caloric n. गरमी, हरातर।
Calorie n. गरमी या हरातरका नाप या मिकासी।
 گرمی یا حرارت کا नाप یا اکائی
Calorific adj. गरमी पैदा करनेवाला।
Calumny n. झूठा कलंक, झूठी बदनामी, निन्दा।
 جھوٹا कलंक, जھوٹی بدनामी, निन्दा
Calvary n. सलीबगाह, जहाँ जीसा मसीहको सली पर चढ़ाया गया।
 सलीब का, जहाँ عیسیٰ مسیح کو سولی پر چڑھایا گیا
Calve v. बियाना, बच्चा देना।
Calyx n. फूलकी कटोरी।
Camaraderie n. भाईचारा, मेल-मिलाप, मित्रता, दोस्ती।
 بھائی چارہ, میل ملاپ, مروتا, دوستی
Cambric n. किमرا, (सूती कपड़ा)।
Camel n. बैट।
Camera n. चित्र या तस्वीर लेनेका यंत्र या आला।
 چتر یا تصویر لینے کا یंत्र یا آلہ
Camera, in adv. बन्द कमरेमें।
Camouflage n. जहाज, तोप आदिको छिपाना; छिपाना, घोखा देना।
 جہاز، توپ آदी کو چھپانا؛ چھپانا، دھوکہ دینا
Camp n. डेरा, पड़ाव, छावनी; शिविर; तम्बू।
 ڈیرا، پڑاؤ، چھاؤنی، شور؛ تمبر
Camp v. डेरा डालना या खड़ा करना, पड़ाव डालना, शिविर डालना, तम्बूमें रहना।
 ڈیرہ ڈالنا یا کھڑا کرنا، پڑاؤ ڈالنا، شور ڈالنا، تمبر میں رہنا
Camp bed n. सफरका पलंग।
Camp chair n. सफरकी कुर्सी।
Camp follower n. पिछलग्वा।
Campaign n. लड़ाई, युद्ध।
Camp stool n. सफरकी तिपासी।
Campaign, political n. लोगोंको खुश करनेकी कोशिश, आन्दोलन।
Camphor n. काफूर, कपूर।
Can n. बालटी, डोल, कनस्तर, कुप्पा, कुप्पी, टीन।
 بالٹی، ڈول، کنستری، کپا، کپی، ٹین
Can v. सकना; डिल्लेमें बन्द करना (खानेकी चीजें)।
 سکنا؛ ڈیلے میں بند کرنا (کھانے کی چیزیں)
Canal n. नहर, नाला, नाली।
Canalize v. नहर निकालना, रास्ते पर डालना।
 نہر نکالنا، راستے پر ڈالنا
Canard n. गप, झूठी खबर।
Cancel v. काटना, कलम फेंकना, मिटाना, झुठा देना।
 کاٹنا، قلم پھینکا، مٹانا، اٹھا دینا
Cancer n. कैंकर, नासूर, सरतान, राजकोड़ा; कर्क राशि।
 کینکڑا، ناسور، سرطان، راج پھوڑا؛ کَرک راشی
Candid adj. खरा, साफ, सच्चा, खुला, बे-लाग-लपेट।
 کھرا، صاف، سچا، کھلا، بے لاگ لیٹ
Candidate n. मुम्मेदवार।
Candle n. मोमबत्ती; दीया, दीपक, चिराग।
 موم بتی؛ دیا، دیک، چراغ
Candle stick n. बत्तीदान, चिरागदान।
 بتی دان، چراغ دان

Candle to, cannot hold a किसीके आगे पानी भरना।
 کسی کے آگے پانی بھرنا
Candle, the game is not worth the बैकामदा मेहनत,
 तकलीफ या कोशिश।
Candle under a bushel, hide v. गुण छिपाना।
Candour n. सच्चाई, खरापन, साफदिली।
 سچائی، کھراپن، صاف دل
Candy v. पागना, मिसरी या खोंडमें पकाकर रखना।
 پاگنا، مصری یا کھانڈ میں پکا کر رکھنا
Cane n. बेंत, छड़ी; गन्ना।
Cane v. बेंत लगाना, बेंत मारना।
Canine adj. कुत्तेका, कुत्ते-सा।
Canister n. छोटा टीनका बक्सा, टीन, कनस्तर।
 جھوٹا ٹین کا بکس، ٹین، کنستری
Canker n. नासूर, घुन; खानेवाला फोड़ा या रोग।
 ناسور، گھن؛ کھانے والا پھوڑا یا روگ
Cannibal n. राक्षस, मनुष्यका मांस खानेवाला, आदमखोर।
 راکشس، منش کا مانس کھانے والا، آدم خور
Cannon n. तोप।
Cannonade n. लगातार बमबारी या गोलाबारी।
 لگاتار بمباری یا گولا باری
Canny adj. होशियार, सयाना, चतुर, चालाक, सावधान।
 ہوشیار، سیانا، چتر، چالاک، ساودمان
Canoe n. डोंगी, छोटी किस्ती या नाव।
Canon n. धार्मिक नियम या मसहबी कानून; कानून; शास्त्र, शरह;
 खुसूल; पादरीका जेक खुसा पद या दरजा।
 دھارمک نیم یا مذہبی قانون؛ قانون؛ شاستر، شرح، اصول؛ پادری کا ایک اونچا پد یا درجہ
Canonize v. बलियों या सन्तोंमें नाम चढ़ाना।
 بلیوں یا سنتوں میں نام چڑھانا
Canopy n. छत्र, चँदोवा, शामियाना, मण्डप।
 چتر، چندوا، شامیانہ، منڈپ
Cant n. ऊपरी बातें, दिखावा, बनावट; झुकाव।
 اوپری باتیں، دکھاوا، بناوٹ؛ جھکاو
Canteen n. पलटनका शराबघर।
Cantankerous adj. झगड़ालू, लड़ाका।
Canter n. मीठा पोखिया (बोबेका)।
Canticle n. मजन, गीत।
Canto n. काण्ड, बाब।
Canton n. परगना।
Cantonment n. छावनी, लश्कर।
Canvas n. किरमिच, प्राल, तिरपाल, टाट।
Canvass v. जाँचना; बहस करना; चुनावमें राय या वोट माँगना।
 جانچنا؛ بحث کرنا؛ چناؤ میں رائے یا ووٹ مانگنا
Canyon n. घाटी, खड।
Canzonet n. तुमरी, छोटा गीत।
Cap n. टोपी, ढक्कन, ढकन; चोटी।
Cap v. टोपी पहनना, टोपी पहनाना; ढक्कन लगाना; टोपी चढ़ाना; सनद देना; बंद जाना; प्रणाम या सलाम करना (टोपी खुतारकर या झुकर)।
 ٹوپی پہنا، ٹوپی پہنانا؛ ڈمکن لگانا؛ ٹوپی چڑھانا؛ سند دینا؛ بڑھ جانا؛ پرتام یا سلام کرنا (ٹوپی اتار کر یا جھوکر)
Cap fits, the v. फब जाना।
Cap in hand adv. नम्रतासे, आज्ञासे।

INDIAN TEXTILE INDUSTRY

(1940 to 1946)

The facts and figures which I propose to discuss here will be considered by future generations as a black chapter in the history of the relations between the vested interests on one side and the people on the other.

FINANCIAL STRUCTURE OF THE INDUSTRY

The entire Textile Industry of the country has today an investment of about 50 crores of rupees in the form of Paid-up Capital, and this is the only risk, the share-holders have taken. It is to be noted that the bulk of this Paid-up Capital belongs to about 150 Managing Agents' Firms in the country, and thus, it is only these 150 Textile magnates who control, possess and exploit this vast industry in the country in their own personal interests without any regard for the well-being of the millions of this country who are the consumers of the products of the industry.

The industry has approximately the Block or Fixed Capital of about 100 crores of rupees in the form of buildings, lands, and machinery. It should be noted here that some portion of this value, particularly in Bombay, is an artificially inflated amount revalued as such in the first world war. It has got about 2,00,000 looms and 1,00,00,000 (one crore) spindles. It used to produce about 420 crores yards of cloth before the war, and was employing roughly about 5,00,000 employees. Since the war started, the number of employees has risen owing to the starting of the night shifts, and though at present, the number employed is nearly 7,00,000 the production has not proportionately expanded. This phenomenon appears strange in view of the expansion of the night shift work. However, those in close touch with the industry are able to see that as a result of very wide margin of profits which the manufacturers have, in collusion with Government, decided for themselves, has made them negligent, inefficient and indolent.

WAR GAINS

I had an occasion to study the published balance-sheets results of about 75% of the textile industry for the war period in the course of my labour work.

The gross profits of the whole industry in the country in the pre-war year was about 5 to 6 crores of rupees. The value of products—cloth and yarn sold—was about 60 crores of rupees, and adding 20% on this value, as the margin of intermediary distributors, the consumers in the country got their supply of cloth and yarn at a value of about 72 crores. There was some export of cloth but it was very insignificant and therefore it can be neglected for the purpose of our general conclusions.

The prices of cloth began to rise after 1941 January. It took a precipitous height suddenly in October, November and December 1942 and reached its zenith somewhere in May 1943, when the prices were 5½ times the pre-war prices, as far as the ex-mill prices were concerned. It is to be noted that the consumer did not even then get his supply of cloth at these prices, as the black market had already become by then a recognized institution, and the consumer had to pay anything between 50% to 100% higher value over the price quoted above. The Government then tried to step in sometime in the middle of the year 1943, apparently in the interests of the consumers, but the action taken was so inefficient that the people did not get any relief; on the contrary, the black market flourished and the exploitation of masses by industrial magnates was not only legalized and authorized officially, but was encouraged and given the stamp of honest trade. Nobody can expect anything better from a so-called Cloth Control Board which was dominated by the very manufacturers against whom the people wanted protection. The result of this mass hypnotism is seen in the following figures:

INDIAN TEXTILE INDUSTRY (War period profits and gains)

Years	Gross Profits	Agents' Commission	Value of Products (Ex-Mill)	Value Paid by the Consumers
(Rupees in Crores)
Pre-war Period
1938	5	1	60	72
1939	5	1	60	72
War Period
1940	7	1	70	84
1941	23	3	100	120
1942	46	5	150	250
1943	109	10	270	480
1944	85	9	210	370
1945	61	7	180	324
1946 (estimated)	41	5	170	306
	372	40	1150	1934

It is well-known that the Government has taken away through taxation several crores of rupees, and the manufacturers have acted as the agents of the Government for the purpose of this tax collection. This tax worked out in the course of the war period as a sort of poll tax on every man, woman and child who used the cloth. It is seen from the figures that the consumer had paid for his cloth supply per capita Rs. 6-12-0 on an average annually in place of Rs. 1-12-0 for the pre-war year. It is significant here to observe that whereas the cloth prices have been deliberately permitted to soar so high in this country only in the interest of the vested interests and the Government Exchequer, it has not gone above 30% in Britain, America, Canada or Australia which were also directly affected by the war. The normal ex-mill value of product in the pre-war year was only 60 crores, whereas the same for the seven years' period worked out at Rs. 164 crores on the average. It is to be noted here that the consumer did not get his cloth at this price as he used to do before the war, but he had to pay at least 50% more for his supply owing to the institution of the black market in the country. It was impossible for an average consumer either in the town or in the village to get his cloth requirements at controlled rate. Therefore, I have increased the value which the consumers had to pay since 1942, the year when black-marketing had started on a large scale. The figures of profits shown above are really staggering, seen in their entirety on a comprehensive scale. An industry in which only 50 crores of capital has been primarily invested and whose fixed capital does not exceed 100 crore of rupees and whose pre-war yearly value of product was only 60 crores, has been permitted to make even in one single year, a profit of 109 crores and the average for the entire period of seven years works out at 53 crores a year. Thus the average profits for one year alone were more than three-fourths of the total value of the products in the pre-war period. From 1943 to 1945 the industry has made annually, on an average, profits which are nearly equal to their total fixed investments i. e., in these three years they have taken out from the consumers two and a half times the value of their plant in profits alone. Therefore the nation has really paid back through the 40 crores consumers several times the value of the plant that has been set up for its cloth supply in the form of profits alone, during these war years. The industry now, in equity, morality and even on economic grounds belongs to the nation which was made compulsorily to pay much more than the total value of these 420 mills which, in fairness, should now be transferred to the State without any compensation. A cursory glance at the commission drawn by the managing agents would show that they have taken from the industry for themselves amounts which are even more than the normal profits of the industry. The amount thus drawn as commission is ten times the amount that was being paid to the Managing Agents in normal period for the services they are supposed to render to the industry. Looked at from any point of view, those 150 firms, which have formed themselves into a sort of syndicalist clique, got themselves benefitted at the cost of the consumers who is the country. No civilized State would permit such open exploitation of the masses, and when applied to a poor country like India it is nothing less than sin and cruelty.

SECRET GAINS

The profits discussed and analysed in the course of the statement are the balance-sheet profits. It should not be forgotten that nearly all the mills during the last seven years, have built up crores of secret reserves in stocks of cloth, cotton and stores which are kept out of the public eye. The illegitimate and secret gains made by the Managing Agents, their friends and associates, in the purchase of materials, stores etc., and on the sale of products are in addition to what has been mentioned above and these ill-gotten gains, if calculated, would easily run into several crores, which remain unaccounted, and will ever remain so.

CONSUMERS & COTTON GROWERS' INTERESTS SACRIFICED

This clique of industrial magnates in the country has also not hesitated to sacrifice the interests of cotton growers at the altar of their private profits. Their influence and close contact with those in authority was so great that they managed to keep down the prices of cotton, the main raw material, as low as possible, with a view to widen their margin. This factor naturally widened the margin of already high profits at the cost of cotton growers. The poor cultivator, who also forms the bulk of the consumers, was thus hit both ways. He had to pay fabulous prices for his cloth requirements while he was given comparatively low prices for his main product, cotton. The cotton price index for the war period is 217 as compared to 100 in the pre-war year, while the cloth price index for the same period is 273, as compared to 100 in pre-war year. I would observe here that owing to the persistent agitation by the cotton growers, cotton prices show an upward trend since only last year. Had this not happened, the contrast would have been still more striking. The wide disparity in the prices of cloth compared to other commodities is also borne out vividly by the Bombay cost of living index which includes all commodities of consumption. This index taken as 100 for the pre-war year, is on the average 181 for the war period. This figure would have been lower, had cloth not been included in it.

MERCHANTS SHARING WAR GAINS

A side-light on profits made by the wholesale cloth dealers in the country is also interesting. This class of persons in the country does not exceed about 400 and they were taken into confidence by the manufacturers and the Government, and were given their due share in this wholesale loot. The present Cloth Control Board is composed of mill-owners, wholesale cloth merchants, with only a sprinkling of other so-called uninterested persons who are insignificant and even if these insignificant numbers make some noise, these plutocrats have their own peculiar ways of silencing them. The wholesale dealer for the services he used to render to the society in the matter of cloth distribution was getting about 1% commission on an average on the sale value of cloth and yarn. This commission or brokerage was  $\frac{1}{2}\%$  in Ahmedabad,  $1\frac{1}{2}\%$  in Bombay, and  $\frac{1}{2}\%$  to  $1\frac{1}{2}\%$  in other centres. I have therefore taken 1% as a fair average for our purpose. The wholesale cloth dealers' services were thus compensated by paying to this class about 60 lakhs of rupees per year, on a total sale of about Rs. 60 crores. The Cloth Control Board, in their wisdom raised this basis to 3% for all on the sale value. This commission was raised three times, but if the rise in the prices of cloth were considered, it will be seen that the wholesale dealer has been paid in the year 1944, 6 crores instead of 60 lakhs.

This works out at 10 times the normal payment. It must also be noted that the wholesale dealer has now no risk to take, no money to invest and no service to render to anybody. This huge amount of 6 crores almost equal to the profits of the whole industry in the pre-war year, is simply given to him as a sort of royalty to shut his mouth, as he is expected to know much more than anybody in the country about the misdeeds of the mill-owners and the agents of the Government who are practically managing among themselves the whole question of production and distribution of cloth. The Cloth Control Organization consists of thousands of employees—all Government servants on fabulous salaries—in addition to what they might be getting as illegal gratification which is today an open secret. If one were to look very closely into this cloth control business, one will be convinced that it is a very well-planned and well-thought out racket to defraud the consumers under the camouflage of Government authority and dignity. This racket, in my opinion, should not now be allowed to exist even for a day longer, and the whole organization should be immediately disbanded.

PRESENT PRIVATIONS OWE THEIR EXISTENCE

TO TEXTILE INTERESTS

As I have stated in my statement issued in January 1944, the cloth trade is mainly responsible for the present economic hardships that the people are experiencing today. This trade set the ball of high prices rolling and other commodities naturally followed suit. If the trend of prices since 1942 August, are studied, it will be seen that the cloth prices began to rise first and after a time lag of few months, the prices of other commodities rose. Thus the vicious circle set in the cloth trade being obviously the chief factor which has upset the economic equilibrium in the country. If the figures of currency inflation are also studied, it will be found that the inflation also was in close parity and rose with the trend in cloth prices since 1941 March, and with steep rise of cloth prices in the second half of the year 1942, and first half of 1943, the expansion of paper currency went on unabated. The prices of other commodities particularly cotton and foodgrains did not register such a rise in spite of inflation. Therefore, one is permitted to conclude that there was some deliberateness on the part of those interested in the cloth trade in their selfish interests to manage the whole economic structure in such a way that the gains will only go to the textile industry at the cost of other sections of the country.

I feel that the black-marketing, general corruption in the country and the existing economic hardships we are witnessing can reasonably be ascribed to a larger extent to the extraordinary amount of money that has come into the hands of those who are connected with the textile industry, either as manufacturers, traders or suppliers of raw materials and stores needed in the cloth manufacture. The next primary need of the consumers after food was exploited by the Government of the day assisted by the selfish textile interests without regard to the well-being of the people as a whole. It is therefore obvious that unless this industry is adequately and effectively controlled entirely in the interests of the people, any other attempt in other directions to bring about normal conditions would not achieve the results we all desire.

WORKERS' INTERESTS ALSO SACRIFICED

It has been shown above that the textile manufacturing interests have deliberately and selfishly betrayed the interests of the consumers. Let us see whether they dealt with their employees either fairly or justly. The employees working in this industry have not been given a fair deal, and their interests have also been sacrificed at the altar of private profits. They have not been generally compensated fully to enable them to offset the rise in the cost of living. The dearness allowance paid to them ranges from 50% to 75% only as compensation for rise, except perhaps in Ahmedabad where, through organized struggle, the employees have been able to get nearly 100% compensation for the rise in the cost of living. But even this solitary case of justice has been upset by the Millowners last year through an Award of the Industrial Court which reduced it to 76% on the plea that other centres are not getting full compensation. Thus it is seen that the bulk of the textile workers had to work in the industry at a reduced standard of living. They have not been able to maintain their pre-war standard of living. In terms of commodities and services, their wages have gone down i.e. their real wages have been reduced to the extent of about 15% to 25%.

FIXING OF PRICES

In the course of my study with regard to labour questions which have cropped up, I had numerous occasions to look into the schedule of ceiling prices prepared technically by the Cloth Control Board but really by the millowners. If this schedule of prices is thoroughly scrutinized, it will show that the allowances permitted to be added to the basic prices for fancy and coloured sorts of cloth are nothing short of open loot. The allowances granted are out of all proportion to the additional cost involved in this manufacture due to increased wages, increased cost of materials or loss in production. In short, the millowners took every step in the Control Board to increase their private profits, even though an appearance was put up as if the consumers' interests were being safeguarded by them.

REMEDIAL MEASURES SUGGESTED

The popular Governments at the centre and the Provinces should not now tolerate this state of affairs any longer. They must immediately take up this question without any delay and without heeding the fictitious groans of these textile interests who are quite capable of even side-tracking the authorities. The Central Government should immediately dissolve the Control Board as it is at present constituted, and thus do away with this organizational racket. This Board has created an exclusive interest for the millowners. The existing personnel of this organization when dissolved, should not be eligible for appointment in any capacity in the new arrangement I am suggesting. The following are a few of the remedial and permanent suggestions in the matter of cloth production and distribution :

1. The Government of India should enact a Law creating a statutory 'Textile Control and Supply Commission,' the duty of which is to control the production and distribution of cloth, keeping in view only the interests of the consumers.
2. The present cloth and yarn distribution agency of private dealers should be abolished.
3. New licensed dealers should be created by provincial Governments which should take appropriate financial securities from these dealers.
4. Very heavy penalties including imprisonment should be provided for breach of any regulation or order passed by the commission and the offence should be made cognizable.

Ahmedabad, 4-11-'46 KHANDUBHAI K. DESAI

ADIVASI PROBLEM IN BOMBAY

The riots of the Adivasis in the Dahanu Taluka should be an eye-opener for us. No doubt, the police and the military will suppress the riots and peace will be restored. But that does not mean that the problem is solved. Such riots are outward symptoms of a serious disease in the body politic. So long as the root causes of this disease are not removed, a superficial treatment of outward symptoms would not be of any avail. These rioters are known to be an extremely timid people. Their poverty and ignorance baffles description. For ages they have been exploited by the rulers of the day, by the landlords, the money-lenders and a host of other parasites. They were the original owners of the land, but today they are forced to labour on that same land as serfs. The new landlords and money-lenders profit to an unconscionable extent by their labour. At the back of this exploitation, there lurk frightful injustice and suppression. So long as this exploitation, injustice and suppression are not removed, it is futile to hope for a lasting peace.

Similar condition prevails in other districts also. In the neighbouring Surat District and Indian States, people known as Raniparaj groan under the same piteous condition. In Surat Dublas, now called Halapatis, are reduced to the condition of serfdom under the system known as the Hali System. In the Kaira District, the Baraiya and Patanwadia communities have similar grievances. If these people have not rebelled, it is simply because they are ignorant and unorganized.

While it is true that rioting and violence are not going to help these people or the society, at the same time, it should be remembered that it is no use merely making that statement. We must show this people a better remedy by working amongst them and by organizing them through constructive activities. Is it any wonder if they are exasperated and resort to violence out of a feeling of frustration and despair? The spirit of the exploited and the suppressed people has awakened. The point both in time and circumstances has arrived which demands their full deliverance. None will be able to stop that process.

Congress Governments are trying to help these people by legislation. But it will not be impertinent to remark that local Congress workers and landlords and big agriculturists who call themselves Congressmen, do not yet fully realize the inherent injustice in the existing order. They do not work whole-heartedly for the implementation of even such mild legislation as the Tenancy Act and the Debt Redemption Act. They are not prepared to do justice where their own interests are affected. They are indignant when they have to forgo heavy rents or large crop-shares hitherto enjoyed by them. But they must realize that the days of extorting a lion's share from the social income without fulfilling any social liability or function are now gone. They must now give up their greed, understand their responsibility and raise the condition of the people on whose exploitation they have upto now fattened. Vast areas of land in their possession are not properly cultivated and manured. There are no irrigation facilities and no good seeds are used. They must attend to all these things and must be prepared to work shoulder to shoulder with their erstwhile serfs. They should use their intellect, experience and capital for improving agriculture and also for ameliorating the social and economic condition of their collaborators in it. Only on this condition can they have any title to a share in the income.

Congress workers should give up their complacency and should bring home to the vested interests, the injustice, suppression and exploitation committed by them consciously or unconsciously. They should also organize the labouring class—the landless peasants by doing constructive work amongst them, so that their capacity to offer resistance, if need be, through peaceful means is developed.

Sabarmati, 12-1-'47

NARHARI PARIKH

(Translated from the original in Gujarati)

Correction—"Unequal Marriages"

In the above article, published on 5-1-'47, p. 474 in col. 2, lines 1 and 2, for "more than, say, two times and a half years senior to her in age," please read, "older than, say, two times and a half her age."

10-1-'47

K. G. M.

CONTENTS		PAGE
SHRIRAMPUR DIARY		493
INDIAN MILLS	... K. G. MASHRUWALA	496
INDIAN TEXTILE INDUSTRY	... KHANDUBHAI K. DESAI	497
ADIVASI PROBLEM IN BOMBAY	... NARHARI PARIKH	500
ENGLISH INTO HINDU-STANI—INSTALMENT—XI		501
NOTES:
REGRET	... K. G. M.	496
CORRECTION	... K. G. M.	500

HARIJAN

16 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. X, No. 51-52

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, JANUARY 26, 1947

TWO ANNAS

FOR SALE—A PACIFIER I

To satisfy a baby's greed an easy going mother gives it a pacifier to suck. This pacifier gives the child no nutrition but just the satisfaction of appearing to feed. In the same way, our vanaspati ghee users have got their desire to use something which appears like ghee and the vanaspati "ghee" makers satisfy such consumers' vanity by giving them something which does not provide the nutriment of ghee and at the same time satisfies their vanity. But while the mother does not charge the child anything for putting the pacifier in its mouth, the vanaspati ghee makers grow fat on the profits they earn out of their consumers. Vanaspati ghee is not ghee at all, unless it has some equivalent of the vitamin A as is contained in the dairy product. At best vanaspati can be termed an equivalent of indigestible vegetable oil, if it is hydrogenated to the extent sufficient to make it appear solid like ghee. Hydrogenation confers no special quality on pure vegetable oil other than the fact that such hydrogenated oil forms a convenient adulterant for ghee. What distinguishes vegetable oil from ghee is its animal origin and the vitamin A is more or less exclusively of animal origin. Vanaspati which claims to be "vitaminous", therefore, can only be vitaminized from animal sources of oil rich in vitamin A—Shark Liver oil and Cod Liver oil. In a vegetarian country like ours, where many of the consumers have an aversion to animal food other than dairy products, to sell freely vanaspati without disclosing the animal source of its vitamin is a fraud on the public.

Besides, at the Nutrition Conference held at Hotsprings, it was pointed out that the free use of vitamin concentrates is injurious. If, therefore, vanaspati is vitaminized by concentrates taken from Cod Liver oil or Shark Liver oil, such concentrates will also be injurious. Then, again, for hydrogenation a catalytic agent is necessary. The usual catalytic agent that is used is nickel, and traces of nickel have been found in hydrogenated oils and nickel not being a mineral which the human body needs may, though taken in minute quantities, prove to be poisonous in the long run. Dr. V. N. Patwardhan, Director of the Nutrition Research Institute, Coonoor, stated at the Indian Science Congress last month that his researches revealed that vanaspati adversely affected the growth and reproductive functions of animals.

People in different parts of the country have been used to different kinds of vegetable oils—mustard, til, cocoanut, etc., and according to ayurvedic tradition, all oils are not of equal benefit to the human body. The value differs from oil to oil. For instance, the almond oil is declared to be a brain tonic and nourishing for the body while the groundnut oil, though it may have fat content, is said to be injurious for the brain. Sarsav, til and cocoanut oil are infinitely better from this point of view than groundnut oil. Most of the vanaspati factories use mainly groundnut oil or cotton-seed oil. These are inferior oils and therefore, even as a substitute fat from ordinary oil, the users of vanaspati do not get the best of vegetable oils. By legislation, which seeks to guarantee to consumers pure food products, it should be made compulsory on the part of vanaspati "ghee" makers to declare on their labels clearly and unmistakably, the sources from which the product is made including of course that of the vitamin.

These facts being as they are, it passes our understanding as to why vanaspati should be prepared unless it be to provide oils in a suitable condition for soap-making and other industrial purposes. As things are, vegetable oils pressed by ghanies are superior to vanaspati in their digestibility and purity while there is no comparison with the natural dairy ghee and yet capitalists are investing Rs 4 to 5 lakhs on machinery imported from abroad for exploiting the susceptibility to vanity of a small section of our population, mainly urban.

We understand about 27 new factories have been allowed by the Central Government to be started, most of them in Madras and Bombay. Is this the understanding and solicitude the Central Government has for the exploiters irrespective of the welfare of the population or is it their enthusiasm for rapid industrialization that is carrying them beyond their depth or is it a carry over of the British "Fleece India" policy, as establishing these 27 factories will mean to Great Britain a business of over a crore?

We would suggest that a government that seeks the welfare of the people would not stop short of banning this type of exploitation at the cost of the health and the sentiments of the people. In the name of industrialization the country should not be ruined, especially the constitution of a people who are already victims of malnutrition. Public opinion should be educated to deal with vanaspati "ghee" producers as traitors to the land and if the government reflects the popular mind, we should soon have no such fraud practised on the people.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

AN AMERICAN FRIEND'S WARNING

Senseless imitation is the bane of our people. And there is always a time-lag in the imitation. We imitate a thing after it has gone out of fashion in the West. Such is the case for instance as regards tractors and chemical manures. Advocates of mechanization and artificials would do well to take note of the danger signal hoisted by Mr. Ralph Richard Keithahn in an article contributed by him to Rural India of April 1943:

"Families of country-dwellers packed all their scanty belongings into some cheap lorry or large car, which threatened to fall apart at any moment, and feverishly cluttered the roads to find a chance to live. This has been a common sight in America during the last ten years. In South Dakota we saw how the great forests had been uprooted; the nutritious and drought-resisting buffalo-grass, the blessing for great droves of cattle and sheep, ploughed under that wheat might be grown on a large scale, that the farmers might make more money. More money, then a car; more money, then a radio; more money, then a tractor and more land! And the land speculators raced about wildly to entice investors to make their 'fortune' in the gold-lands of a semi-desert! There was a boom! The President cried, 'Back to Normalcy! A later President consoled the people that there would always be prosperity even though a depression already was upon the people!

"The old Jewish prophets would have called it 'God's wrath'! It was the normal processes of Nature working themselves out. With the trees gone, there was less rain. With the good grass gone, there was less fertilizer for the land, less cattle to befriend man. The dry years began to come. And the grasshoppers who also were hungry! And the winds became our enemy, not our friend! The field of corn would be in its glory. Dry weather would come. The green crops started to wither. Then the wind, blowing across the treeless land, and with the heat, cutting the very life out of crops. Soon the landscape was a desert! Then as the wind whipped across these miles of desert, the dust began to rise and rise until even the sun was darkened. Day became as night, and the dust drifted through the cracks of closed doors and windows. And when the dust did not come and pile up in banks three, four and six feet high, the grasshoppers came and devoured, as though famished, the little green they could find. The good and unknowing people stood helpless in the face of the working of God's laws. First helplessness, then hunger and then movement, back and forth through the country in these battered 'ships of the road' trying to find work and food! The days of cars and tractors and radios and money were gone. They had become slaves to a terrible exploiting system that brought destruction in its wake!!

"India has learned many solid truths in its centuries of existence. Gandhiji and others have been helping us to recapture those truths in the light of the needs of today. Rural workers may do much to guide our people in these days into a life of creative joy. But it is not the way of the exploiting West. True, we have much to learn from the West, to learn of her helpful discoveries, to learn of her mistakes. But let us not blindly follow her and bring our people and nation to temporary ruin."

V. G. D.

PLANNING WITH VILLAGE BIAS

I

INTRODUCTORY

Since the dawn of history agriculture has been the prime occupation of India and her people. Her whole life grew on agriculture. The evolution of her races, history, culture and languages can be traced to it and in terms of it. Her greatest sages and kings tilled the soil, cleared forests for agriculture and tended agricultural stocks as of routine. Agriculture was looked upon as the most honourable and respected calling and as the source of all prosperity. The tiller of the soil had a status higher than that of kings, for he was looked upon as the feeder and sustainer of millions, including kings and emperors.

Even in middle ages after the impact of Islam and during the times of the Great Moghals, the position and status of agriculture remained unaffected in the nation's economy. Hindus and Muslims lived together in villages and conducted seasonal operations on their fields by mutual exchange of aid and rotation labour. They vied with one another in their pursuit of agriculture as good neighbours and treated their village as a family unit. Agriculture was the pivot round which the entire social and economic life of the community revolved.

But the foreigner, who came to possess and rule India during the last two centuries, functioned with a vastly different motive. He had no plans to settle down and merge with the millions of this country as his numerous predecessors had done. He came, he saw and he conquered, not for glory as did the ancient conquerors, but purely for exploiting the fabulous wealth and resources of this country for the benefit of his cousins at home in cold England. The motive was grab pure and simple. He was not much interested in India's agriculture save for the raw materials she produced. His cousins at home were an industrial folk interested only in capturing foreign markets and dumping their manufactured goods on them. So his eyes were rivetted on our handicrafts and home industries which he systematically killed to further and safeguard British trade. By what cruel and unscrupulous processes he did this is now common knowledge.

Both agriculture and village industries had thus their first set-back under the British rulers. Under their blighting influence agriculture languished and our home industries withered away and disappeared. Some of the dislodged artisans sought employment in city factories to their physical and moral ruin, while the bulk of them with their families and dependents fell back on land as unskilled labour. The population, too, more than doubled during the period.

In consequence, pressure on land increased and rendered agriculture progressively uneconomic till at last it came to be regarded as on the lowest rung of the economic ladder. The impoverished cultivator sank hopelessly in debt. Chronic idleness born of stark despair seized him. Yet he had to till the soil and live on agriculture, for there was no other alternative for him in this country.

To speak of recent conditions, even during war years, the scandalous disparity between the agricultural producer's return and that of the industrial manufacturer has been manifestly patent. Under the exigencies of war the Indian cultivator was compelled to grow and sell his entire produce at prices which were in no way commensurate with his frightfully increased cost of production. He was denied a fair opportunity to sell at an equitable margin and lighten his debt, while the city manufacturer of machine-made goods profiteered with impunity under direct State patronage and accommodation in all directions, as well as through black-marketing. The poor agriculturist thus remained where he was — a hopeless pauper, eking out a miserable existence along with his emaciated family and starving live stock.

The remedy lies not in searching or devising substitute occupation for the Indian cultivator in cities and towns. For no other industry or industries can accommodate over 300 millions of our agricultural population. The only remedy is to overhaul agriculture in terms of the 'nation's prime industry and reinstate it on its old status and position. The speedy removal of century-old injustice as well as present maladjustments has to be the first concern of those who are charged today with the responsibility of planning the nation's economy afresh, keeping constantly in view the betterment of the millions.

In planning or devising a nation's economy, the main source of occupation for the bulk of its population must form the inevitable basis. Thus, for instance, it would be idle to conceive of a 'national' planning of Denmark's economy save in terms and on the basis of her dairying. Similarly no planning worthy to be called 'national' could be thought of in India without placing the country's agriculture in the forefront. Thus, the improvement of agriculture and of live stock, so long as it is indispensable to it in this country, must find priority over everything else in any scheme of "national planning" to be undertaken to ameliorate the condition of the 7,00,000 villages of India. The present note is an attempt to indicate some aspects of such planning with a village bias, with special reference to the province of Bombay.

Vapi

SWAMI ANAND

(To be continued)

THE GOSPEL OF SELFLESS ACTION
OR

THE GITA ACCORDING TO GANDHI

By Mahadev Desai

With Gandhiji's Foreword

Price Rs. Four, Postage Nine Annas

STORY HOUR

(Continued from p. 487)

[IX is from Shaikh Sadi and X from W. H. Davenport Adams' The Secret of Success (John Hogg) —V. G. D.]

IX

A clod of clay was asked how it had come to smell so fragrantly and replied, 'The sweetness is not in myself but I have been keeping company with the rose.'

X

After the death of a merchant in Boston the following document was found in his handwriting:

'By the grace of God, I will never be worth more than 50,000 dollars. By the grace of God, I will give one-fourth of the net profits of my business to charitable uses. If I am ever worth 20,000 dollars, I will give one-half of my net profits and if I am ever worth 30,000, I will give three-fourths; and the whole after 50,000. So help me God, or give to a more faithful steward, and set me aside.'

To this covenant he adhered with the most scrupulous fidelity. He recognized that he was intended by Providence to act as its almoner and his wealth was known by the splendour of his munificence. He kept the Jain layman's vrata (observance) of parigraha-parimana (limitation of possessions) like the ten upasakas (disciples) of Mahavir Swami. Are there any such shravaks now?

ANOTHER RISING MENACE

In the rural areas milk is already in short supply. If we sincerely desire the welfare of the people, our attempt should be to find out ways and means of increasing the supply. No doubt the cities are dependent on the villages for the milk. If an organization can be brought into being whereby the cities can run their own dairies in selected rural areas and be independent of the existing supply from the villages, that in itself will alleviate the distress in the rural areas. Of course, alongside of this programme we must have the long range programme of increasing the milk productivity of the cow by selective cattle breeding.

Wherever people are in distress we always find somebody willing to take advantage of this distress. There are people willing to rifle the pockets of dead soldiers: Thus the distress of somebody presents an opportunity to some one else to take advantage of. At the present time the short supply of milk has provided a golden opportunity for the Indian Tea Market Expansion Board to carry on its destructive work. Mr. M. H. Miles, its Commissioner for India, is anxious to push forward to the villages and create the tea habit in the villages. This would imply, that by tanning the insides of the villagers and satisfying their hunger by decreasing the digestibility, we can automatically lessen their demand for milk! This is a real menace to the health of rural India. In a vegetarian country the animal protein from milk is an essential constituent of the diet. Any habit which is calculated to decrease this is harmful to the villages and is anti-social.

Papers carry advertisement "drink tea for stamina", which being lying propaganda must be stopped by the Government taking necessary steps to control the advertisements. Indian consumption of tea in 1928-9 was 48.8 million pounds and it has risen in 1945-6 to 130 million pounds. This is an increase of about 266 p. c. and yet they are carrying on a campaign of increasing tea consumption still further. Whatever may be said for tea for the well-to-do who are overfed, it is difficult to support the cause for tea in villages. The work of the Indian Tea Market Expansion Board, therefore, is a menace to the rural areas which are already starving and suffering from mal-nutrition. We trust the popular governments will do what lies in their power to prevent any irreparable damage being done by the formation of habits which will be injurious to the growth and strength of the village people.

J. C. Kumarappa

HARIJAN

January 26

1947

THE PURPOSE OF THE TOUR

(By M. K. Gandhi)

[The following address which was written out by Gandhiji in Hindustani for being read to the audience at prayer time on 6th January—it being his day of silence—has been rendered in English from its Bengali version by Shri Nirmal Kumar Bose, and published in the Bengali edition of the Harijan of the 12th instant. —Mg. Ed.]

As my weekly silence will not break before 7 p. m., I have written out my address. I pray to God, and request you all to join with me in praying that the tour which I commenced yesterday should go on uninterrupted till the end and be successful in achieving its purpose. But before praying, you should know that purpose. I have only one object in view and it is a clear one; namely, that God should purify the hearts of Hindus and Muslims, and the two communities should be free from suspicion and fear towards each other. Please join with me in this prayer and say that God is the Lord of us both and that He may give us success.

You might well ask me why it is necessary to undertake a tour for this purpose; or how can one, who is not pure in heart himself, ask others to become pure; or how can one, who himself is subject to fear, give courage to others; one, who himself moves under armed escort, call upon others to cast away their arms. All these questions are relevant and have been put to me.

My answer is that during my tour I wish to assure the villagers to the best of my capacity that I bear not the least ill-will towards any. I can prove this only by living and moving among those, who distrust me. I admit that the third question is a little difficult for me to answer; for, I do happen to be moving under armed protection, I am surrounded by armed police and military, keenly alert to guard me from all danger. I am helpless in the matter as it is arranged by the Government which being responsible to the people feels that it is their duty to keep me guarded by the police and the military. How can I prevent them from doing so? Under the circumstances, I can declare only in words that I own no protector but God. I do not know whether you will believe my statement. God alone knows the mind of a person; and the duty of a man of God is to act as he is directed by his inner voice. I claim that I act accordingly.

You might here ask that there was at least no reason for the Sikhs to go with me. They have not been posted by the Government. Let me inform you, first, that they have obtained the permission of the Government for going with me. They have not come here to create quarrels. In testimony, they have come without their usual kirpans. They have come to render service to both the communities impartially. The first lesson which the Netaji taught to the soldiers of his Indian National Army was that Hindus, Muslims, Christians, Parsis etc., should all regard India as their common motherland, and they should all substantiate their unity by working for her jointly. The Sikhs here wish to serve both the communities under my guidance. How—on what ground—can I send away such friends? They have been giving me valuable assistance and that not for making a public show thereof, but in a spirit of genuine service. If I refused that service, I should fall in my own estimate and prove myself a coward. I request you, too, to trust these people, regard them as your brethren and accept their services. They are capable of rendering much help and have plenty of experience of this kind of work. God has blessed them with physical strength and also faith.

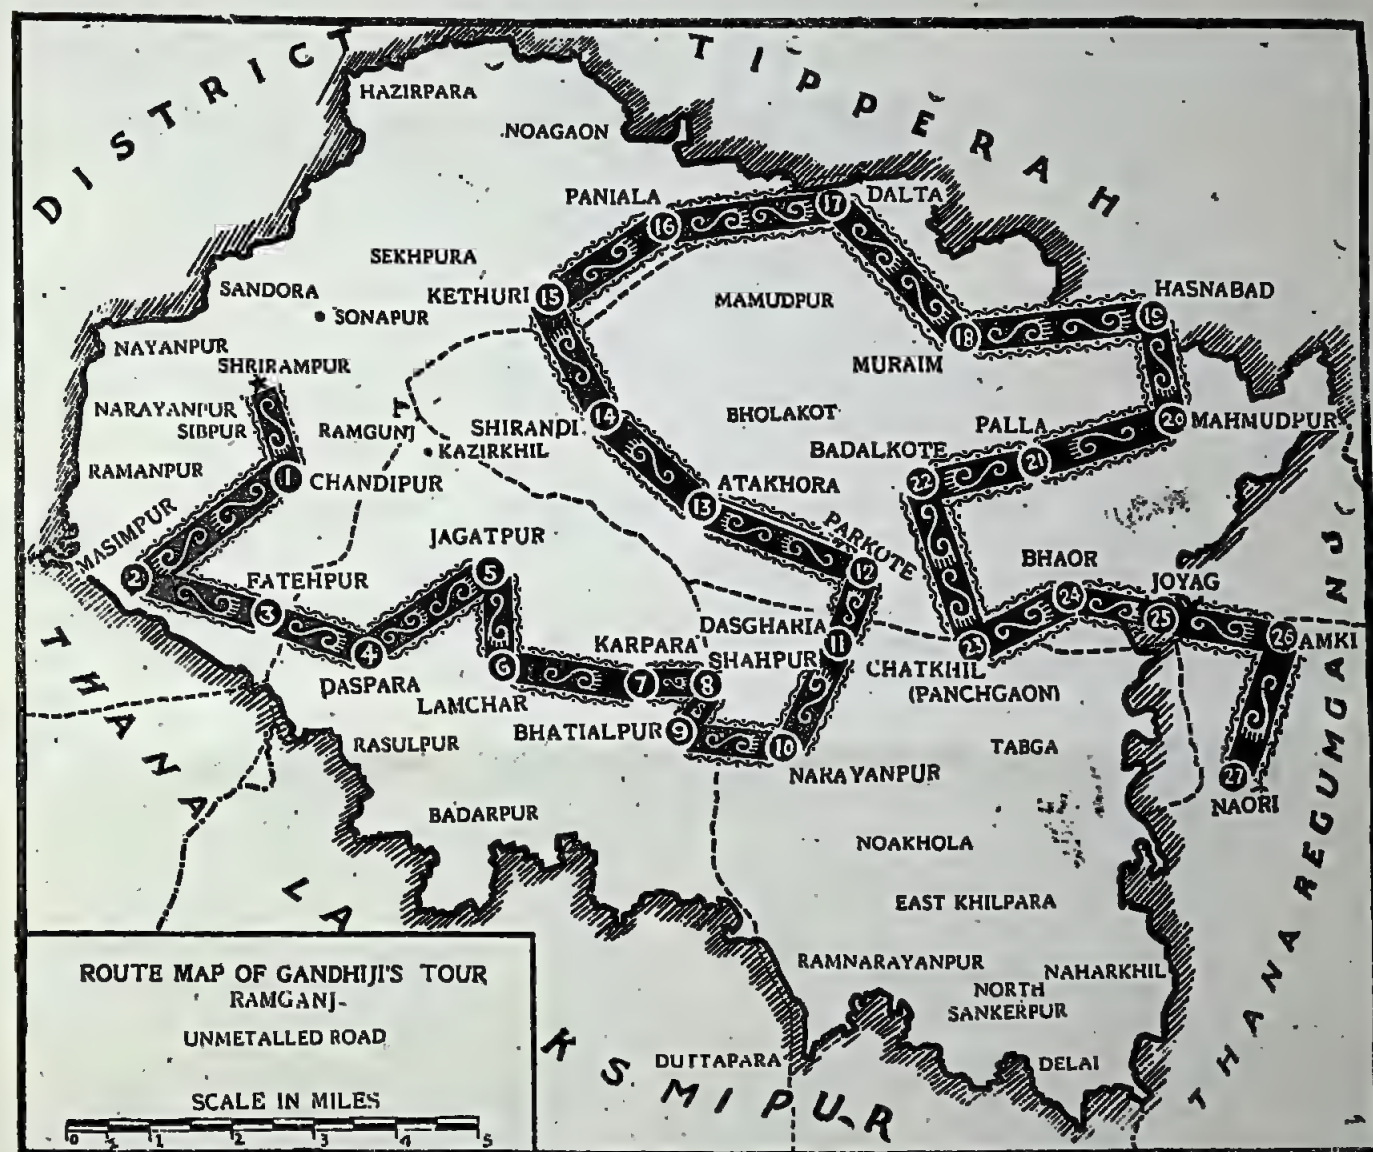

If I find that what I have said about them was incorrect, they would go back. If, on the other hand, I am keeping them with an ulterior motive, it will prove to be my own ruin, besides making my experiment a failure.

The particular object lessons, which I propose to give you during my tour, are how you can keep the village water and yourself clean; what use you can properly make of the earth, which our bodies are made of; how you can obtain the life-force from the infinite sky spreading over your heads; how you can reinforce your vital-energy from the air, which surrounds you; and how you can make proper use of the sun-light. This is to say that I shall try to teach you how we can convert our impoverished country into a land of gold by making the right use of the various elements around us. I pray to God that I may succeed in serving you in the manner set forth above.

MAP

[Part of Noakhali and Tipperah Districts of East Bengal, showing the route of Gandhiji's village-to-village peace mission tour. We are indebted to the Hindustan Standard of Calcutta for this excellent map.]

Gandhiji is visiting the villages named serially with the date of his stay in a particular village stated against it.

1. Chandipur — 2nd to 6th January; 2. Masimpur — 7th; 3. Fatehpur — 8th; 4. Daspara — 9th; 5. Jagatpur — 10th; 6. Lamchar — 11th; 7. Karpara — 12th; 8. Shahpur — 13th; 9. Bhatialpur — 14th; 10. Narayanpur — 15th; 11. Dasgharia — 16th; 12. Par-

Kote — 17th; 13. Atakhora — 18th; 14. Shirandi — 19th; 15. Kethuri — 20th; 16. Paniala — 21st; 17. Dalta — 22nd; 18. Muraim — 23rd; 19. Hasnabad (Tipperah) — 24th; 20. Mahmudpur — 25th; 21. Palla — 26th; 22. Badalkote — 27th; 23. Chatkhil (Panchgaon) — 28th; 24. Bhaor — 29th; 25. Joyag — 30th; 26. Amki — 31st and 27. Naori — 1st. February.

OUR ECONOMIC POLICY

With the advent of the so-called popular ministries people's minds are agitated over the policies that these ministries should follow. At the moment there is a considerable amount of loose thinking in regard to the expansion of the textile mills in Madras, which brings to the fore the question of centralization in industries.

It is not generally understood that imperialism is a child of centralized industries and now in its dotage centralized industries cannot exist without the support of imperialism.

When England took to centralized methods of production, Great Britain was not an Empire. Its economic life was based on decentralized methods of production. She was a highly cultured country with a strong moral background. Even now when we think of her great contribution to the progress of man, we have to look back to the period before the Industrial Revolution. The best of her literature—Shakespeare, Milton and such like were Elizabethan; in art, men of the type of Sir Joshua Reynolds flourished prior to the nineteenth century. Sir Christopher Wren and his peers in architecture never saw a textile mill to afford them inspiration. Moral giants like Latimer who were British satyagrahis, who were prepared to lay down their lives for their convictions, never saw the power of the steam engine. We may say the Victorian Era was the darkest age in British History culturally, whatever its glamour may have been financially and materially. After the Industrial Revolution Great Britain gained the whole world but lost its soul. Why was this?

When Great Britain took to centralized methods of production in the textile industry and was relying for her raw materials on commercial contracts with the southern States of America, she found her position was unstable, as during the American Civil War her industries were hard hit when the American cotton could not reach Manchester. She realized that if her industries were to survive, she ought to have the production of raw materials under her direct control. So she turned to India to ensure her cotton supply and keep her markets for finished goods also under her political control. This was the birth of British Imperialism.

This arrangement was found very satisfactory for the mill-owners as they were able also to saddle several items of their cost on Indian Revenues. The cost of research incidental to the production of long staple cotton, the discriminating freight rates, the shipping policy etc., were controlled in favour of the British manufacturer. Thus their cost of production was kept low.

VIOLENCE AND ITS COST

Apart from these, in centralized industries we have shown that the control of raw materials and markets becomes a condition precedent to the efficiency of the working of the centralized means of production. If this is granted, it means that to be able to control raw materials and markets we must obtain political power over the producers of raw materials and consumers. Today such political power can only be obtained by violent means. To enforce this power, it requires the maintenance of the army, navy and air force. Hence a strict method of accounting would demand that the costs of the maintenance of the army, navy and air force should also be charged to the centralized methods of production. Periodically wars have to be fought—the cost of wars have to form also a part of the cost of the centralized methods of production. Hence these should be charged to the cost of production. If these logical expenses were all properly charged to the beneficiaries, we can easily see that the production by mills will become prohibitive and cannot hope to compete with decentralized production in cheapness.

In our own life time, such has been the experience of industrialization in Japan also. She finds the need to control politically Manchuria and China. These are the irritant causes of global wars today. Do we want our country also to have a share in these nefarious activities? If not, we must steer clear of centralization in the production of consumption goods for private profit.

DISHONESTY

Having decided to get the raw cotton from India and having made the Indian tax-payer pay for the researches for the Manchester mills, it became necessary to arrange for the transport of the cotton grown in India to Manchester. For this purpose, they pushed through the programme of laying out rail roads under the plea of developing the country and spent crores of rupees for this. Strictly speaking, the great need of India then was waterways for transport of goods to our own internal markets. Instead of this, the foreign interests prevailed and we have had to spend crores of rupees for their benefit.

All these expenses—the amounts spent on cotton research and the amounts spent on developing the railways—should have been legitimately borne by the Manchester mill-owner. If this had been done, it would not have been possible for the Manchester cloth to undersell hand-spun and hand-woven cloth in India. This method of paying one's cost of production through governmental aid is a means of reducing costs of production which cannot be called "efficiency" but loot. We saw that the need to keep raw materials under the control of the mill-owner leads to imperialism and the need to keep down costs and paying part of the expenses through tax money leads to dishonesty. Thus centralized methods of production lead to imperialism and exploitation.

To illustrate this: when I was visiting Palladam firka, I found there an enterprising individual who had set up six looms run by a crude oil engine. He had spent about Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 25,000 on his equipment. He was able to run it for barely 18 days in the month on the yarn quota supplied from Coimbatore. He was representing his needs to me and said that if he could be supplied with half as much yarn again, he can run his unit the whole month round and reduce his expenses to such an extent as to cut down even on the mill costs of production. His raw material, viz., warps came from Coimbatore and his finished goods were sold somewhere in the neighbourhood of Nellore. The logical course in time will be for this man to get control over his raw material producer viz., the Coimbatore mill-owners. If he can get hold of an army of goondas who will, at the point of the bayonet, obtain yarn that he needs, he would be able to make his mill work more "efficiently" than the large textile mills. Similarly, if he can get special low rates of transport for his goods to Nellore, he can again undersell the textile mills. This in miniature represents the position of all centralized industries. They have got to resort to imperialism and exploitation as a condition precedent to their existence.

FOOD vs. RAW MATERIAL

Again to grow raw material for mills, they have had, time and again, not only to get the agricultural colleges to do their research at public cost but also they had encroached on food lands. The present day famines are in no small measure due to such encroachments. In Malabar, while I was visiting Payanoor firka, people informed me that in several villages the land under paddy had been reduced by about 20% and in their place cocoanut groves have sprung up. The cocoanut groves were intended not for purposes of food but for supplying copra for the oil mills which, in their turn, were producing soap. Thus in effect it meant that rice lands were converted into producers of soap. Is it any wonder when such shifting of crops can take place that we should be subject to periodical famines?

In Malabar, I had also noticed children running about with brownish hair. When I inquired into the cause of this state of affairs, I was informed that formerly these children were bathed in cocoanut oil and had plenty of oil to rub on their scalps. But now the cocoanuts were selling practically at the same high prices as prevail in Madras, and, therefore, these children do not get the oil for their massage. In these ways centralized industries encroach on the primary requirements of our people, starve them and bring about ill health.

MONEY ECONOMY

With the help of the money economy, these things are done without the victims being aware of it. Money is not a safe method of valuing articles, especially of primary necessities. For instance, at Avanashi firka a good deal of the milk produced was being sent to Coimbatore. The value of a pound of milk is in the nutrition it affords. The milk producer, if he gives it to his child, ensures sufficient calcium to build up the child's bones, fat and other nutritious materials to build up the body. The value of the milk from the natural point of view is the same whether it is consumed by the mill-owner or the producer's child. We may even say the value of milk is greater when given to a growing child than when given to an adult. Just because the rich mill-owner of Coimbatore is able to offer As. 8 for a pound of milk, the Avanashi producer deprives his child of this nutritious food and sends it away to Coimbatore. In so doing, he does not realize that he is in effect selling the future health of the child. Therefore, in all our considerations in regard to our rural development we have to bear in mind that neither centralized industries nor their efficiency, nor even their money values can be the sole arbiter to guide our decisions. We have to think in terms of the well-being of the people irrespective of the commercial value of the product. In some cases it may even mean that we may have to get people to do things which, at the moment, may appear against their own interests.

ACCUMULATION OF WEALTH

Centralized methods of production also tend to concentrate wealth. In a poverty-stricken country like India we do not want concentration of wealth but better distribution of wealth. Distribution of wealth is the special feature of the decentralized industries. India has tremendous amount of labour wealth. This is to be converted into actual wealth in material goods. A potter takes the clay that is available freely and converts it into consumption goods. The valueless clay should have to be converted into wealth by application of his skill and labour. This is the method that would be best suited to India.

PLACE OF CENTRALIZED INDUSTRIES

This does not mean that we should be against all centralized methods of production. Centralized methods of production under private enterprise will lead to consequences we have adumbrated above. But there are certain industries which by their nature are monopolies, such as railway transport and provision of power. These have to be done by the state on a service basis and not with a profit motive. Similarly water supply, exploitation of natural resources and other heavy industries may be undertaken by the State or under State control with centralized methods of production. But what we contend is that in consumption goods and under private ownership there should be no centralized methods of production.

The Madras Textile policy, therefore, is aimed at keeping India out of the whirlpool of imperialism. We found that within our life time even Japan was drawn into imperialism just because she took to the methods of centralized production.

THE LEAD

The contention that the other provinces are pursuing a different policy need not deter us from doing that which appears to us to be the proper one. If centralized methods of production are calculated to harm the individual development of the citizen by creating in him a blood-lust and greed, no steps taken to prevent this could be objected to. If Madras is called upon to give the lead in this regard, it would seem a great privilege which Madras should be proud of.

In following the policy that has been laid before the people they will be setting an example of self-sufficiency based on self-respect, non-violence and honesty. This will be not only for India, but also for the whole world which is today lying devastated by the unrestricted use of centralized methods of production.

DEMOCRACY

Acharya Kripalani has pointed out in his presidential address at the Meerut Congress that pursuing centralized methods of production in the economic field ultimately leads to dictatorships and not to democracy. Training for democracy needs decentralization of production. All centralization leads to concentration of power which is inimical to democracy.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

Notes

Good and Bad News

It often falls to the lot of the Harijan to report simultaneously good and bad news regarding the treatment of the Harijans by non-Harijan Hindus. Today's post has brought two such letters of opposite types. The first is from the Chief Surgeon, Jodhpur. It is particularly important because it is from an Indian State in Rajputana. It says:

"On the 14th of December a dinner was arranged by the bhangis of the State Medical Department, Jodhpur, who invited the medical staff and some outsiders to it. About fifty men and women from the medical department, and some outsiders attended. The bhangis who were to cook and serve took a bath with soap and water and put on fresh clean clothes before undertaking cooking. It was made clear to the bhangis that there was no difference between them and other human beings as God made them, that their profession was just as clean or dirty as many others including that of the surgeon and that if they made themselves clean as on this occasion after their work was over, they were as good as any other."

The second is as disgracing as the above one is good. It is from a professor of the Bengal Veterinary College, Calcutta, a B. Sc., M. R. C. V. S. (London). He needed a flat and found one "to let" at Harish Mukherji Road. After the terms were duly settled, the owner, a caste Hindu, "an ex-lawyer and educationist" suddenly asked of the Professor his caste. On knowing that the Professor belonged to a Scheduled Caste, the owner expressed his inability to rent the flat, even though "it was a separate self-contained one."

Very naturally and justifiably the Professor has written a letter to Gandhiji in bitter terms. He says:

"... For me, this means a lot. In fact, this may be the turning point of my life. I am really upset about it. After living in England for six years, this sort of thing is just a bit too hard to digest. ... Please try to understand my feelings."

The owner has unquestionably committed a grave wrong. It is acts like these that are ultimately responsible for the communal disturbances and the disruptive political demands by all communities proudly kept out of their circle by the caste Hindus. If the owner gives himself good advice, he should invite the professor back to his flat and apologize to him for his grave error and repent for it in some practical form.

Sabarmati, 15-1-'47

A Commendable Leaflet

Maulvi Ahsanullah of Dacca has sent to Gandhiji a Bengali and an Urdu leaflet of a discourse entitled the Gift of Holy Islam. It is being distributed freely by the Maulvi Saheb to the public of both the communities. It is a commendable leaflet. I give below some of the points urged by him:

It exhorts Muslims of both the sexes to learn to read and write, so that they might know for themselves the teachings of Islam. The Prophet has explicitly enjoined, "It is the duty of every Musalman man and every Musalman woman to acquire learning. Take to learning, even if you are comfortably placed in life."

Islam is a religion of peace and dedication. Its five pillars are: Kalma, the word; Namaz, prayer; Rosa, fasting; Zakat, alms; and Haj, pilgrimage. The first three are for all, the last two for those who can afford.

According to the Quran, the observance of the following ten rules will ensure to every observer happiness in this world and the next:

1. Morning prayer for confession of lapses;
2. Fore-noon prayer for being saved from the fire of hell.
3. After-noon prayer for freedom from debt.
4. Evening prayer for protection from enemies.
5. Night prayer for priority of hearing on the day of judgment.
6. Pursuit of commerce and vocations for earning;
7. Charity for spreading peace and harmony.
8. Ablutions and clean living for freedom from disease.
9. Pursuit of learning and culture for reputation; and
10. Prayer, service, humility and courtesy, for leadership.

The great Pir Dastagir Rehmatullah has said, "Those who wish to tread on the path of the Lord must cultivate the following ten virtues:

1. Not to swear;
2. Not to lie even in jest;
3. Not to break a promise;
4. Not to despise even the lowliest of Allah's creation; and not to harm it physically or mentally;
5. Not to curse;
6. Not to accuse a believer of hypocrisy or unbelief;
7. To keep free from all sinful acts;
8. To place no burden upon a human being;
9. To covet not another's possession;
10. To be humble.

Vapi, 11-12-'46

K. G. M.

A NEGLECTED SERVICE

The Maharogi Seva Mandal (Leper Service Association) has been carrying on leper service round about Wardha for the last ten years. Shri Manohar Divan has founded this service almost single-handed. He has been able to do so, because he has dedicated his life to it. He has acquired the necessary knowledge for it from a Christian Missionary Leprosy Institution.

Shri Manohar has lived with me for twenty years. He has passed through the entire Ashram discipline including cooking, scavenging, spinning, carding, weaving etc. He did all this work for years continuously, and after thus preparing himself moved from village to village in the Wardha Taluq, serving the villagers in various ways. During this period he came into contact with leprosy patients and was deeply moved by their miserable and neglected plight. He made up his mind to dedicate the rest of his life to their service and communicated his determination to me. I agreed that it was a much wanted service, but warned him that he might have to walk alone in his field of service. The few colleagues who worked with us were already usefully engaged in other fields, and in the present condition of our society, he could not expect to get from outside, workers prepared to do this kind of work in a spirit of service. There was also the possibility of his getting the infection himself. I also advised him to get the necessary medical knowledge for rendering the service usefully. I told him that if he resolved to dedicate his life to this cause, he must not allow himself to be drawn into other movements. But all this advice was superfluous. He had broached the subject to me after carefully searching his heart, and his mind had been already made up.

His mother was, not unnaturally, disturbed over her son's ideas. She asked me to dissuade him from this work. Were there not other good and necessary fields of service? Why should he obstinately want this one only? I said, "Suppose, Mother, you or I happen to get this infection? Should Manohar serve us or abandon us?" "Of course, in that case," she said, "he would have to serve us." "Then is not this similar to that?", I asked. "Well, that too is correct," she said, and was reconciled ever afterwards.

No doubt, he has obtained much cooperation from several people all these years. Without such cooperation, the work could not have been started at all. But (among non-Christians) he still remains a solitary life-worker in the cause.

The country has considerably changed during these ten years. The dawn of independence is already visible, and we expect the sun to rise shortly. It means that more responsibility will fall upon the servants of the people. It is estimated that the number of leprosy patients in India is about 40 lakhs, i.e. one per cent of the total population. Workers with medical knowledge must therefore think earnestly over this matter.

Till now, leprosy patients have been mostly served by Christian Missionaries only. It is true that their service loses part of its value by reason of their proselytizing activities associated with it. Nevertheless, it is an extremely valuable service, and our people have taken full advantage of it. If the zeal for conversion had not been there, they would have, perhaps, spread among the people the Christian spirit much better.

Hinduism has given us the term bhuta-daya (compassion for life). It has developed to the extent of vegetarianism. Compassion for life must necessarily include compassion for man. But owing to the use of a very wide term, we missed the nearer object. Christianity expressed the same sentiment by the term humanity. Hence, the urge to serve man is more predominant among Christians. This is how terms influence our thoughts and actions. It is not necessary to give up the wider term. But it is necessary to include in it the neglected field of the service of man. I wish to draw the attention of the workers to this field.

Pavnar, 30-12-'46

VINOBA

(Translated from the original in Marathi)

BROTHERHOOD DAY PROGRAMME IN AMERICAN SCHOOLS

The United States of America, being the meeting ground of numerous races and religions differing from one another, have a "communal unity" problem to solve which is similar to our own. Dr. Rachel DuBois an American educationist has devoted herself to the task of finding this solution for more than 20 years. In 1943 she published a book called Get Together Americans, Friendly Approaches to Racial and Cultural Conflicts Through the Neighbourhood-Home Festival. This is a practical guide for those working with adult groups who wish to do something about racial and religious tensions in America. Last year she published a second book entitled Build Together Americans, Adventures in Intercultural Education for the Secondary School (Hinds, Hayden and Eldredge).

Under the guidance of Dr. DuBois as the Director of the Service Bureau for Intercultural Education, the students of Englewood Junior High School celebrated the close of the school term with what we in India would call a communal unity programme.

As a part of the programme the students offered the following common prayer composed by two Christian pastors and a Jewish Rabbi:

"Almighty God, we who are members of different races and faiths desire together Thy Fatherhood and our kinship with one another. In our difference we find that many of our hopes, our fears, our aspirations are one. Thou art our Father and we are Thy children.

"We are heartily sorry for the mists of fear, envy, hatred, suspicion and greed which have blinded our eyes and thrust us asunder. May the light that comes from Thee scatter these mists, cleanse our hearts and give health to our spirits. Teach us to put away all bitterness and walk together in the ways of human friendship.

"Open our eyes to see that as nature abounds in variation, so differences in human beings make for richness in the common life. May we give honour where honour is due, regardless of race, colour or circumstance. Deepen our respect for unlikeness and our eagerness to understand one another. Through the deeper unities of the spirit in sympathy, insight and co-operation, may we transcend our differences. May we gladly share with one another our best gifts and together seek for a human world fashioned in good under Thy guidance. Amen."

After prayer the students sang a song ("America the Beautiful"), saluted the flag and recited the following "Civic Creed":

"God hath made of one blood all nations of men, and we are His children, brothers and sisters all.

"We are citizens of these United States, and we believe our flag stands for self-sacrifice and for the good of all the people.

"We want, therefore, to be true citizens of our great country, and to show our love for her by our work.

"Our country does not ask us to die for her welfare; she asks us to live for her, and so to live, and so to act, that her government may be pure, her officers honest, and every corner of her territory shall be a fit place to grow the best men and women who shall rule over her."

After this there was a dialogue on "What Makes an American?" and a talk on "Religious freedom and equal opportunities are American ideals".

The programme closed with a responsive reading of The Land where Hate should Die by Denis A. McCarthy:

Leader: "This is the land where hate should die"—

Response: No feuds of faith, no spleen of race,

No darkly brooding fear should try

Beneath our flag to find a place.

Lo! every people here has sent

Its sons to answer freedom's call;

Their life-blood is the strong cement

That builds and binds the Nation's wall.

Leader: "This is the land where hate should die"—

Response: Though dear to me my faith and shrine,

I serve my country best when I

Respect the creeds that are not mine.

He little loves his land who'd cast

Upon his neighbour's word a doubt

Or cite the wrongs of ages past

From present rights to bar him out.

Leader: "This is the land where hate should die"—

Response: This is the land where strife should cease,

Where foul, suspicious fear should fly

Before the light of love and peace.

Then let us purge from poisoned thought

That service to the State we give

And so be worthy as we ought

Of this great land in which we live.

V. G. D.

TEXTILE MILLS AND MADRAS GOVERNMENT POLICY

As the controversy over the subject has now developed into an organized agitation against the present Ministry, in which not only all the mill magnates and the wholesalers of their products but also some of our politicians are taking active part, I venture to place the following facts and figures before the public so that they may see for themselves how far the agitation is justified. My claim to write on the subject is that I am a spinner of 20 years standing, spinning during my off hours when I cannot do any other work and as a pastime, enough yarn to meet my annual clothing requirements of about 30 sq. yards and that I have further made a special study of the problem "Khaddar versus mill cloth" in all its aspects, both as an official Assistant Registrar of Co-operative Societies and as a non-official co-operator till today.

In announcing their policy, the intention of Government seems to be to make villages self-sufficient in the matter of clothing as with other primary necessities of life; and this should be quite possible. The population of our Presidency is about 50 millions. Taking the annual cloth requirements per head at 30 square yards, the yarn required—say of 20 counts which may quite do—to clothe the entire population will come to  $50 \times 30 \times 4$  or 6000 million hanks or 300 million lbs, which could be spun during the course of a year by two out of five members of a family devoting daily about an hour and a half, in the aggregate, of their numerous idle moments. And all that is necessary for this is a will and determination on the part of the people. Readers might remember that these were forthcoming in abundance during the days of civil disobedience movement and boycott of foreign cloth, though they received a set-back when Congressmen who were doing propaganda work went to jail and the Government in power were believed to associate hand-spinning and Khaddar with the civil disobedience movement. It may be noted that even quite recently during the war period when all our cotton mills were engaged in production of cloths for military requirements, The All India Spinners' Association working in some centres, though under great difficulties, were able to supply to people enough cloth at prices equal to and sometimes less than mill prices. The only difficulty that has always stood in the way of the progress of Khadi is want of a suitable agency to carry on the necessary propaganda in villages, to supply to villagers at their doors the needed charkhas and other spinning requisites, also cotton, and to receive the yarn spun and convert it into cloth. As the present Ministry is arranging to supply this want, the Khaddar movement is bound to succeed. At any rate there is no reason for pessimism. The scheme is well worthy of being given a fair trial. It is no doubt true that the movement cannot succeed as well as it could, with power mills working by its side, as prohibition cannot succeed with toddy shops in the vicinity or hand-pounding with rice mills working close by. The only effective way of advancing the Khaddar movement is to close the mills altogether or bring them under direct management or effective control of Government, so that they may be worked without prejudice to the Khaddar movement and to the extent absolutely necessary. Pending steps to be taken in any of these directions the Government have proposed to adopt the less drastic course limiting the further increase of existing mills and spindles therein, for which our mill magnates must thank them.

The mills naturally feel that, to the extent to which Khadi is advanced, their production and profit will be curtailed and they therefore started this agitation. The point now is how far these mills have justified their existence by way of solving either the yarn or the cloth problem of our province. Beyond filling their own coffers—a fact which will be evident from the huge sums paid to their Managing Directors by way of salary and commission, the high dividends ranging from 15 to 60 per cent uniformly paid to their share-holders and several months' bonus granted to workers—they have done precious little in the way of either supplying yarns to our hand-loom weavers or cloth to the people of the Province. There are 65 cotton mills in our Province with 15 lakhs of spindles and 6500 power looms. Taking the production of yarn per spindle per day of 2 shifts at an average of one lb., these 15 lakhs of spindles must be producing per year of about 300 working days  $15 \times 300$  or 4500 lakhs or 450 millions lbs. of yarn against 300 millions required for the clothing requirements of the province. The number of handlooms in the Province is about 5 lakhs and the yarn required to keep them fully engaged for 300 days taking a daily average production of cloth per loom at 8 sq. yards, for which 32 hanks or 64/40 lb. of yarn of 20 counts are required, will come to  $5 \times 300 \times 8/5$  or 2400 lakhs or 240 million lbs. It is a notorious fact that our handlooms are not able to get, even through black markets, yarns to engage them for more than a week or ten days a month, which means they get only a third of their requirements or 80 million lbs. What becomes of the 450 minus 80 or 370 millions lbs. is a mystery to be cleared. We have often heard it said that they go underground. But they cannot remain buried for long. They must have, as Dame Rumour has it, been clandestinely exported to places outside the province or elsewhere in the shape of yarn or cloth or both. The matter requires to be carefully probed into, which the Premier should immediately arrange for to justify the Government policy. If the facts and the figures and the rumour are true, there is absolutely no justification for the howl raised by the mill-owners and persons playing second fiddle to them. It is not known how these irregularities escaped the notice of the Textile Commissioner and the army of officers under him. They only go to establish beyond all doubt the shrewd observation of Mahatmaji viz.,

"Cloth famine, I know, is a mockery, for, if only the Government and the mill-owners will act honestly and intelligently, no one need go naked for want of cloth. We have cotton enough, idle hands enough and skill enough to make cloth in our villages."

In addition to not serving the province in the direction of supplying either the required yarn or cloth, these mills are doing incalculable harm to the country by attracting from the villages, by thousands, the flower of the peasantry of able-bodied men and women to the great detriment of their health and morals and also of agriculture and congesting our towns and cities so as to affect the health of the inhabitants, by stimulating the undue increase of cotton cultivation to the prejudice of much-needed food-crops and by depriving thousands of expert fine weavers of their hereditary profession. By undue profiteering and exploitation, these mills have, in spite of their extravagant expenditure, built up during the last 5 years very large reserves; and if they want to find an out-let for them, it cannot be by way of attempting to smother a useful and beneficial cottage industry; but by starting other remunerative enterprises for the manufacture of such foreign articles as are badly needed by our country.

Madura, 4-11-'46

G. SRINIVASA RAGHAVACHARI

THE PATH OF REDEMPTIVE SUFFERING

It is recorded in the earliest of the Christian Gospels that when Jesus finally decided to go up to Jerusalem to face his destiny there, he walked ahead of his disciples and that "they were amazed and they that followed were afraid" (St. Mark 10: 32). Another Gospel recording the same incident describes him as "steadfastly setting his face to go to Jerusalem" (St. Luke 9: 51). That is a picture of Jesus not commonly recalled by Christians. The favourite portraits of Jesus depict him as meek and mild, gathering little children in his arms or carrying a lamb on his shoulders. There is only one picture that I know of that does justice to this aspect of stern determination, of heroic decision, that was also characteristic of the great Saviour of Men. It is Harold Copping's famous picture of the head of Jesus in profile, strikingly similar to the face of Gurudev Tagore, but with a look of firm resolve in his eyes that reminds one of another personality in India today, treading the lonely path of redemptive suffering.

Gandhiji today, walking alone along the lanes and fields of Noakhali, is a challenge to all those who claim to live by the law of love. He is putting not only his leadership and his principles but his followers also to the supreme test. As in the case of Jesus of old, his faith will stand that test, even if it means drinking the cup of suffering to its last dregs, even if it means being lifted on a cross of shame. God respects the fixed resolve of His chosen servants to "Do or Die". The darkness that overshadows for a time even the most stout-hearted of believers shall pass, as the gloom that descended on Jesus on the cross did pass, and they shall see the end of the travail of their souls and shall be satisfied.

For

"Behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow,
Keeping watch over His own."

But the challenge is to us who have professed and called ourselves followers of this Man of God. Well might we be amazed and be afraid as we follow in the footsteps of this leader as he marches ahead. It is recorded of Jesus that when he finally embraced the cross his disciples forsook him and fled, fugitives every one of them from the way of suffering. May that not be true of us. It is now that our professions are being tested. It may have flattered our vanity to have ranged ourselves behind this great leader when he seemed to lead us to the promised land of independence. Our eyes were often too eagerly set on the prizes that were to be won when this jail-bird would have become the president or dictator of a free India, to sit then on his right hand or his left. But the question he asks, as Jesus asked of his disciples who wanted to share his glory, is "Are ye able to drink the cup that I drink of", the cup of humiliation and of apparent defeat? It is undoubtedly a bitter cup now to eschew the easy path of violence, to give up positions of prestige and power, and stand with this lonely man, making the appeal of love, in all its apparent weakness to those estranged from us. And to stand with him today does not mean rushing to Noakhali to be by his side, but to take our lives in our hands wherever we are in this land of innumerable barriers between man and man, and crossing the narrow bamboo bridges across those barriers in our own little corners. It means bridging the gulf between Hindu and Muslim, Touchable and Untouchable, Christian and non-Christian. It means for each one of us meeting our God in "the toil and sweat of our brows, where He keeps company with the poorest, the lowliest and the lost." It means sharing in the divine work of redemption of which Jesus in Palestine and Gandhiji in India today are compelling manifestations. May the following prayer be ours as we search ourselves and rededicate ourselves to his leadership:

Saviour divine,
Who perpetually for suffering humanity,
Dost bear the burden,
The dread, relentless burden of redemption,
We pray thee that we thy servants today,
May with these weak hands
Uplift a little corner of the weight which crushes thee.
Grant unto us that we may 'share in thy holy mystery of pain,
Thy sacrament of agony,
Which redeemeth the world.
Give us courage of heart,
That we may drink with thee a little of thy cup,
Thy bitter cup of humiliation, of loneliness, of suffering.
Help us to see thee as thou art,

Incarnate in the starving, the disease-stricken, the hopeless :

Give us grace in serving them to serve thee.

In our own loneliness and pain,—

If thou bestowest on us these the tokens of thy fellowship,—

Help us to pay honestly, unstintingly and bravely
Our part of the great price,

Which of old and for ever thou, O our God,

Payest in man for man.

Shantiniketan, 8-1-'47

S. K. GEORGE

DOUBLE NEGATIVES

We were taught in our youth that under certain conditions double negatives may be used to create a positive effect. One wonders if this can be carried into finance to such an extent as to make a double loot a gift. This appears to be, however, the method of procedure suggested by His Majesty's Government for compensations being paid to the I. C. S. and I. P. S. men on the formation of an Indian National Government. The very fact that these men do not wish to serve a National Government confirms our fears that these services were not national services but British services to hold the Indian nation in subjection. Therefore, even in the first place they should have been paid out of the British Treasury and now when they are not willing to serve a popular government we are asked to pay them compensation which would amount to somewhere in the neighbourhood of 20 crores of rupees and the irony of the thing would appear to be in that even the Indian members of these services are to be compensated! Should we take it that such Indian members who leave the services and wish to be compensated will also be expected to leave our country and go and settle down in their adopted mother country — Great Britain — to which presumably they prefer to owe their allegiance?

However it may be, the financial policy is in complete alignment and keeping with the idea of rewarding Indian soldiers out of Indian assets for fighting for Great Britain and keeping India under subjection as an army of occupation.

We would suggest that if logic is to prevail, such service men who would choose not to serve a National Government should be paid what compensations that may be due to them not out of the Indian funds, but out of the British Treasury. In the same way the rewards that are given to the Indian soldiers should also be borne, if England were to be honest, out of British Treasury. It is a recognized principle that all agents should be paid for by their principals. If these service men and the Indian soldiers were agents of the British imperialism, is it too much to expect that the imperialists should bear the cost of their agents?

J. C. KUMARAPPA

SHRIRAMPUR DIARY

25-12-'46

Readings from the Bible formed a special feature of Gandhiji's prayer meeting today, the birthday of Jesus Christ. Addressing the gathering, Gandhiji said that he had begun to believe in a toleration which he would call the equality of all religions. He added that Jesus Christ might be looked upon as belonging to Christians only, but he really did not belong to any community, inasmuch as the lessons that Jesus Christ gave belonged to the whole world.

26-12-'46

In the course of his post-prayer speech Gandhiji said that he had no doubt in his mind that the British would have to quit India. But if Indians were foolish enough to quarrel among themselves, he could very well visualize the destiny of the whole country. India would probably be placed under the United Nations, which would mean not one but many masters, and, hence, goodbye to independence.

Continuing Gandhiji said that the task he had undertaken in Bengal was most serious. Here a community which was friendly to him previously had now looked upon him as its enemy. He was out to prove that he was "a real friend of the Muslims." So he had chosen for his greatest experiment a place where the Muslims were in majority.

For the fulfilment of his mission it would suffice if he toured the countryside alone and the presence of the workers from outside soliciting his advice and directions raised fresh problems for him instead of assisting him to solve the already complicated task he had undertaken. Much of the misunderstanding could be removed if those really keen on serving the people of Noakhali would directly approach the Bengal Ministers with their plan of work and obtain not only their written permission to carry on their work but also their approval of the plan.

Gandhiji gave this advice to some doctors who came from Bombay yesterday for rendering medical aid to the refugees in the affected areas. To some people who sent him letters and telegrams offering to come to Noakhali for service, Gandhiji had replied that they could serve the cause by carrying on constructive work around their own places. To those who sought directions as to how best to serve in Noakhali, Gandhiji said that he himself was groping in darkness, and therefore, a blind man could not be the best guide.

The speech was provoked by the fact that when he asked some people offering to serve in Noakhali whether they would continue to serve if necessary for a life-time even after he had left, they were reluctant to commit themselves. This reluctance led him to believe that people were anxious to come and serve in a manner which would attract his attention and that such people were not keen on service for the sake of service.

27-12-'46

Gandhiji in his address said that a friend had been telling him that his reference to "darkness" surrounding him was very confusing to many. The friend thought that people at distance saw light shimmering through his plan, and there was enough proof that the confidence was slowly returning in that affected area.

Gandhiji said he would tell this friend and others who thought like him that they had misunderstood him to some extent. The darkness in which he was surrounded was of such a character that the like of which had never faced him before. It was indeed now a vital test that his ahimsa was passing through. He would not be able to say that he had come out successful until the object was reached.

It was true that the night was darkest before the dawn. He himself felt that and although friends at distance could see glimpses of the breaking dawn he himself felt that he was surrounded in complete darkness.

Gandhiji said that many years ago a friend of his used to carry Patanjali's Yogasutra constantly in his pocket. Although Gandhiji did not know Sanskrit yet the friend would often come to him to consult about the meaning of some of the sutras. In one of the sutras it was stated that when ahimsa had been fully established it would completely liquidate the forces of enmity and evil in the neighbourhood. Gandhiji felt that the stage had not been reached in the neighbourhood about him and this led him to infer that his ahimsa had not yet succeeded in the present test.

That was the reason why he was saying that there was still darkness all round him.

Gandhiji said that his plan was to proceed with the least number of companions on his march, and that he would prefer to stay in the houses of Muslim friends. He had reduced his needs and these could be met even by the poorest villagers. He would like to go absolutely unprotected if it was to prove that in his heart he had nothing but love and friendship for the Muslims.

28-12-'46

THE PRAYER MEETING

Addressing the prayer gathering Gandhiji said that the Congress was not a Hindu organization. It did not serve Hindu interests to the exclusion of the interests of the other communities.

Introducing the leaders to the congregation, Gandhiji said that they had come to him to discuss questions, not from the point of view of one particular community, but purely from a non-communal angle.

Addressing his prayer gathering in Chandipur Gandhiji said that his mission was for the establishment of friendship between the sister communities living here and not to organize any one community against the rest. So long the non-violence which had been practised was the non-violence of the weak but the new experiment in which he had been engaged here was the non-violence of the strong. If it were to be successful it should succeed in creating a moral atmosphere helpful to both the communities round him. Only when the Hindus and Muslims shed their fear and mutual suspicion could real unity of heart come. There should not be any cause for hostility because their hearts were one.

Referring to the task of village reorganization Gandhiji said that East Bengal was a land of gold but unfortunately the life of the people was not as it should be. The water in the tanks was so dirty that he could not dare even wash his hands in them. The villages were also unclean! The rich were growing richer and the poor were getting poorer. That was not forced upon them by nature. That was a satanic state of affairs. But although the social arrangements were satanic, individuals were not so. Individuals should raise their organization and shape it according to new ideas of equality and comradeship.

Gandhiji continuing said that he would personally like to live for 125 years, not by the help of medicines but by natural ways, in which he would be able to serve the nation and humanity.

Concluding, Gandhiji asked all Hindus and Muslims to devote themselves to the noble task of reorganizing the village life and in improving their economic condition. Through cottage industries they would find themselves working together in the common task and unity would thereby grow among them. He exhorted the audience to carry on his eighteen-point constructive work which would spread like a life-giving influence over the entire country-side.

ADVICE TO WOMEN

Addressing a gathering of women who had assembled at the courtyard of the house where he is residing at Chandipur, Gandhiji said that women should depend on God and on their own strength and not on others. They should be more courageous and should have more confidence in their own strength. If they were afraid, they would fall easy victims to the onslaughts of the miscreants.

"Indian women are not abalas. They are famous for their heroic deeds of the past, which they did not achieve with the help of the sword, but of character. Even today they can help the nation in many ways. They can do some useful work by which they can not only help themselves, but also the nation as a whole, thereby taking the country nearer her goal."

Gandhiji told them that not the men of Noakhali only were responsible for all that had happened, but women too were equally responsible. He asked them all to be fearless and have faith in God like Draupadi and Sita of the past.

Gandhiji also asked them to eschew untouchability. He said that if they still went on disowning the untouchables, more sorrow was in store for them. He asked the audience to invite a Harijan every day to dine with them. If they could not do so, they could call a Harijan before taking a meal and ask him to touch the drinking water or the food. This, Gandhiji said, would go a long way to cement the gulf created between different classes of people by artificial caste barriers. Unless they did penance for their sins in that way, more calamities and more severe ones would overtake them all.

4-1-'47

Gandhiji opened on Saturday morning a school at Chandirgaon, a village about one mile from Chandipur. At the school he inquired as to what subjects were taught and especially whether any craft was taught.

Gandhiji pointed out that he would not like schools to be run on the same old lines and he advised the introduction of crafts. If the school wanted his advice, he would advise Nayi Talim (new education) which gives training in crafts. The aim of education should be to make the students self-supporting. Addressing the prayer meeting, Gandhiji said: "I have not come here to talk politics." His purpose, was not to reduce the influence of the Muslim League or to increase that of the Congress, but to speak to the people of the little things about their daily life, things which, if properly attended to would change the face of the land and create a heaven out of the pitiable conditions in which they were all living today. Bengal, said Gandhiji, was a land full of verdure, with plenty of water and fertile soil. Nature had showered her abundance on Bengal, but through ignorance, the people were suffering from poverty and disease. They appeared to be content with what little could be earned from betel-nut and cocoanut gardens and a little of agriculture. But with more knowledge, they could increase the productivity of the land many times and convert their villages into cleaner abodes of peace and prosperity. If all the villagers joined together, the face of the land would be changed in no time.

Referring to the evacuees, Gandhiji said that they must come back home and face all dangers and difficulties. Any one who had committed a sin should likewise make a clean confession to God, and then depend upon God for whatever he might choose to do. Truly religious men who made a confession to God did not repeat their errors.

5-1-'47

Gandhiji said that it was continually being impressed upon him that his place was no longer in this province but in Bihar where infinitely worse things were alleged to have taken place. The audience should be aware, Gandhiji said, that he had all along been in correspondence with the popular Government in Bihar and all influence possible was being exercised by him over that Government from here; but he did not want to leave Noakhali because his task here was of an entirely different order. He had to prove by living among the Musalmans that he was as much their friend as of the Hindu or any other community. This could evidently not be done from a distance or by mere word of mouth.

A Bihar Minister and several responsible officials who had come to him yesterday had placed before him all the facts within their knowledge without any reservation. They had admitted that brutal things had taken place in the course of one fateful week and that they were prepared to bear all justifiable censure passed on them on that account.

They knew their duty as a responsible Government. The charge of complicity or failure in doing all that was humanly possible was denied by them and they said they were prepared to undergo any ordeal in order to prove their innocence. They had been trying to answer the charges made by the Muslim League against them. Gandhiji said, he would like to assure the audience that he would not rest until he was satisfied personally about the Bihar case and had done all that was humanly possible.

Gandhiji thought that the attendance of both Hindus and Muslims in prayer meetings was dwindling and one day he would be left without anybody to listen to him at all. But he said that even then there would be no reason for him to give up his mission in despair. He would then roam from village to village taking his spinning wheel. With him it was an act of service to God. Such labour undertaken with an unselfish mind would speak for itself among those who were round him. A worker, he said, who travelled from village to village teaching the people how to clean their ponds effectively and teaching them other arts and crafts so as to enrich the life of the villagers, should be able to make the villagers long for his company rather than shun him.

Continuing Gandhiji said that news had just reached him that the evacuees were now returning in fair numbers and the question of rehabilitation was becoming more and more acute. His advice to the evacuees would be that they should brave all hardships and return home quickly. By means of their own labour they must determine to rebuild their ruined homes as well as their own lives. Government should extend all necessary help and they should be approached by the evacuees. He was aware of the fact that various relief organizations were prepared to help the evacuees with finance and other material assistance. But why should they undertake a task which rightly belonged to the Government set up by the people themselves? If the Government failed to extend it either quickly enough or to a satisfactory extent, then it was for them to say so and seek supplementary aid of public charities in order to rehabilitate the people.

But whatever shape these arrangements might take, the evacuees must be prepared to return home in the face of all possible dangers and difficulties.

6-1-47

"Appeasement has become a word of bad odour. In no case can there be any appeasement at the cost of honour. Real appeasement is to shed all fear and to do what is right at any cost," said Gandhiji in reply to a question when he met members of the Chandipur-Chandirgaon Gram Seva Sangh. The question put to Gandhiji was: What should the Sangh do to appease the aggressive mentality of the majority community?

In answer to a question whether the refugees should accept monetary assistance from the Government even if it was quite insufficient for the erection of temporary shelter. Gandhiji said, "Refugees must honestly find out what they need for the least kind of temporary shelter. If their basic requirements are not covered by the proposed Government grants, they should refuse to accept them but should still return to their homes even if it meant no cover over their heads. This has to be done in a spirit of sportsmanship."

Question: In the course of rehabilitation, should the members of the minority community be lodged together in sufficient numbers for the purpose of safety?

Answer: "Such concentration of population is an unthinkable proposition. It would imply that the whole country would be divided into hostile sections, perhaps enjoying a sort of armed peace. The manly thing to do is for every individual, of whatever sect, whether young or old, to derive protection from one's inner strength which comes from God."

Asked what arrangements for the safety of the refugees could be made in view of the fact that miscreants were moving freely in the affected areas, Gandhiji said: "No place in the world today is free from miscreants. So villagers should fall back on their own strength for protection. The strength which will give them lasting protection is the strength of the heart." For those who accepted God as their protector, what did it matter if miscreants roamed about? People should do what was right for them and leave the rest to God.

HOW TO EARN A LIVING

Question: If Government and private relief is stopped, what work can we give to the refugees so that they can earn their daily bread?

Answer: "Although personally I should be tempted to suggest handspinning as a universal occupation, I would not necessarily do so in the present case. Instead, I would suggest that the workers should find out on the basis of detailed local enquiries what occupation could be undertaken in each village. And when such information is available, I would love to give advice in greater detail. It is certain that the work must be done in cooperation."

7-1-47

Gandhiji's 'one night one village tour' commenced on Tuesday morning (7th January), when he left Chandipur for village Masimpur about two miles from there.

"During my journey I will eat whatever I get, and am even prepared to go without milk", said Gandhiji to one interviewer.

Gandhiji is prepared to live any kind of rough life during his "pilgrimage". He will dispense with all kinds of secretarial work during his "one village one day" journey. He would not have any interviewers during his journey. He will spend most of his time in meeting Hindus and Muslims, visiting houses destroyed and gathering social and economic facts about the villagers. Wherever he goes he would ask all to live in peace and fear none in this world except God. He would ask them to reorganize and spend their time in village reconstruction and constructive work. During his journey he will meet deputations of Muslims, Hindus and women separately.

During his journey Gandhiji will have very few bags with him. His narrow blanket bed and a few of his other necessities of daily life, his box charkha will be with him and also a few of his favourite books including the Gita, the Koran and the Bible. His only walk-hour companion is his walking stick.

In this way Gandhiji will walk down from village to village every day without spending more than one night in one village.

Addressing a meeting of the Masimpur—Keroa Gram Seva Sangh soon after his arrival at Masimpur, Gandhiji said that people should try to purify themselves and not indulge in outward show.

Replying to a question regarding the wearing of the sacred thread—which the questioner said the Arya Samaj wanted every Hindu to wear—Gandhiji said that anyone who liked might wear the sacred thread, but there should not be any movement or propaganda in this behalf. No good would be done by wearing the sacred thread alone as it could not remove the defects of the Hindu religion.

Gandhiji referred to the protection given to him by the Government, and said: "The police and military are going about for my protection, but I do not like such protection." The Government, however, thought that it was their duty to afford him such protection. To that he had nothing to say. The Government were doing what they thought was their duty.

Gandhiji said that some Sikhs were also going about with him. People may ask why so? But these Sikhs had come not at his call. They came with the Government's permission. They had come for work towards unity between the Hindus and the Muslims. These Sikhs had disarmed themselves. They had given up their kirpans and were working on principles of ahimsa to serve the Hindus and the Muslims. They were friends, said Gandhiji, and he would not like to deprive himself of such friends.

8-1-'47

When he reached Fatehpur in the morning, Gandhiji said, he had been surrounded by affection all round, and among the messages received were also some from sisters. They wanted to present him with sweets specially prepared by them, but Gandhiji had replied that he was hungering not for sweets for the tongue but for sweets for the heart. He was grateful for the accommodation offered by the village, that was all that he needed. Gandhiji did not want to be a burden on any village through which he was passing. His own food was carried along with him while the expenses of the whole party had already been defrayed by loving friends.

Gandhiji continued, some Muslim friends had asked him why a feeling of estrangement was growing between the two communities in spite of the able leadership around, more specially in the Congress and the League. Gandhiji had confessed that it was indeed true that the people in general always followed the lead which came from above.

Therefore, it was not enough that leadership was able but it was necessary that there was accurate knowledge of the wants of the people. For himself he was only trying to depend wholly upon God and work at the task which came naturally before him. He commended the same course to everyone.

TO GANDHIJ'S CORRESPONDENTS

Prof. Nirmal Bose, Gandhiji's Bengali interpreter in a statement to the Press says, "Although of late Gandhiji has been commencing his work at 2 a. m., he is unable to cope with the work before him.

"He has, from today, (12th January) reverted to three o'clock standard time. Gandhiji feels he must resolutely refuse to tackle all-India correspondence and refrain from sending messages to men and institutions. Gandhiji proposes to confine his activities solely to Noakhali and kindred disturbed areas. He says that if he emerges safely from the ordeal, he will gladly resume his other activities. I would appeal to everyone to cooperate with Gandhiji in his present endeavour."

Again on the 17th January, the A. P. I. correspondent reports:

During the first seven days of his pilgrimage Gandhiji had to work for about 20 hours daily in order to dispose of his heavy correspondence and other writing work which had accumulated. Every day he used to go to bed just at 10 and wake up very early at 2 in the morning and work until 5 a. m. under the dim light of his lantern.

Working in this way for about 20 hours a day Gandhiji has disposed of his pending work and he wants now to have a little rest.

Prof. Nirmal Kumar Bose repeats his appeal that people would do a great service if they practically stopped writing to Gandhiji during his pilgrimage. He has now no time to look into each and every correspondence, unless it is of a very important nature.

This is not the first time that such appeal has been issued. Yet, we regret that we receive every day correspondence re-directed from his camp to Sevagram, and from there to us. We must respectfully inform the correspondents that we do not forward any correspondence whatsoever to him, but dispose it off ourselves according to our own discretion. The public is requested scrupulously to refrain from sending letters to him, and allow him to concentrate all his energy on the great peace mission which he has undertaken.

Sabarmati, 21-1-'47

K. G. M.
N. P.

CONTENTS	PAGE
FOR SALE — A PACIFIER I ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	505
AN AMERICAN FRIEND'S WARNING ... V. G. D.	506
PLANNING WITH VILLAGE BIAS SWAMI ANAND	506
STORY HOUR ... V. G. D.	507
ANOTHER RISING MENACE ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	507
THE PURPOSE OF THE TOUR ... M. K. GANDHI	508
MAP	509
OUR ECONOMIC POLICY ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	510
A NEGLECTED SERVICE ... VINOBA	513
BROTHERHOOD DAY PROGRAMME IN AMERICAN SCHOOLS V. G. D.	513
TEXTILE MILLS AND MADRAS GOVERNMENT POLICY G. S. RAGHAVACHARI	514
THE PATH OF REDEPTIVE SUFFERING ... S. K. GEORGE	515
DOUBLE NEGATIVES ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	516
SHRIRAMPUR DIARY	517
TO GANDHIJ'S CORRESPONDENTS ... K. G. M., N. P.	520
NOTES:
GOOD AND BAD NEWS ... K. G. M.	512
A COMMENDABLE LEAFLET ... K. G. M.	512

HARIJAN

12 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. XI, No. 1

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1947

TWO ANNAS

SHRIRAMPUR DIARY

9-1-'47

Gandhiji addressing the prayer meeting at Daspara, said that the Muslims of the Noakhali District should tell the Bengal Government, which was their Government, that no police or military protection was required for Gandhiji and that they themselves would protect him in his tour.

10-1-'47

Gandhiji spoke about conversions during his prayer speech at Jagatpur. He said he had been hearing for some time—and more insistently since Friday—that if the Muslims asked the Hindus to accept Islam, if they wanted to save themselves or their property and if the latter responded, there was no compulsion. Gandhiji said he was not concerned for a moment with the truth or otherwise of that statement. What he wanted to say was that this was acceptance of Islam under the threat of force.

Gandhiji said that he had carefully studied, as much as he could in his busy life, Islam's history written by Muslim divines and he had not found a single passage in condonation of forcible conversion. Real conversion proceeded from the heart and a heart conversion was impossible without an intelligent grasp of one's own faith and that recommended for adoption.

Concluding Gandhiji said that he was not going to be satisfied without a heart understanding between the two communities and this was not possible unless the Hindus and the Muslims were prepared to respect each other's religions, leaving the process of conversion absolutely free and voluntary.

12-1-'47

The All-India Congress Committee by its Delhi resolution had accepted the December 6 statement of the British Government and had gone to its "farthest limit consistent with its principles" to declare its friendly attitude to the Muslim League. Gandhiji told an interviewer, a former army officer, according to the Hindusthan Standard special correspondent.

Gandhiji is reported to have added that he could not say what would be the League's attitude to this friendly gesture, but he could only hope that they would reciprocate.

A visitor asked which of the two alternatives for a solution of the present situation in India would be preferable—Pakistan or civil war? Gandhiji is reported to have said that he would approach the problem differently. Neither of the two suggested solutions would be good. It was wrong to think that Pakistan could be achieved through civil war.

The interviewer asked what kind of Government would be good for a free India. Gandhiji's reply to this was that it was not a question for him to answer. The question would be ripe for answer after freedom had been achieved.

14-1-'47

Some Muslim young men who met him at Bhatialpur this evening asked him what his objection was to the setting up of a separate Muslim State after the events in Bihar.

Gandhiji replied he had no objection to the setting up of a separate Muslim State. In fact, Bengal was so. But the question was: what was going to be the character of such a separate Muslim State. That had not been made clear so far and if a Muslim State implied freedom to make hostile treaties with foreign powers to the detriment of the country as a whole, then that could not be a matter for agreement.

Gandhiji thought that no one could be asked to sign an agreement granting liberty to others to launch hostilities against him.

On the young men asking whether Gandhiji did not think it advisable to concede Pakistan since it was holding back the issue of Indian independence, Gandhiji said: Only after independence has been won can there be a question of granting Pakistan. To reverse the process was to invite foreign help.

"Azadi" Gandhiji said, "and Pakistan require the exclusion of all foreign powers. Until and unless India is free, there cannot be any other question."

FREEDOM FROM ALL FOREIGN RULE

Freedom as envisaged by him, said Gandhiji, was freedom not merely from British rule but from every foreign rule.

The last question put by the Muslim young men was: Now that there was neither Pakistan nor peace, what would be Gandhiji's solution?

Gandhiji's reply was: "That is exactly what I am here for and what I am trying to find out in Noakhali." He assured the youths that the moment he found it, he would announce it to the world.

15-1-47

Gandhiji told a meeting of Narayanpur Gram Seva Sangha that it was their primary duty to remove untouchability. Unless this virus was removed from their society, there could not be any real progress in this country. Secondly, Hindu-Muslim unity should be effected. Both the Hindus and the Muslims should be eager to achieve this end. They took water from the same tank and rice from the same paddy fields. For the time being, they should forget politics and devote their sole attention to improve villages, spread education, develop industries and other constructive works. For this purpose, workers must be prepared to die.

RETURN HOME EARLIER

Replying to a question whether the refugees should now return home, Gandhiji said that they must return home earliest. They must, however, shed fear. Spinning also should form a main part of the duty of the workers. If they span at least one hour a day, they may supply yarn to weavers who were now looking up to the Government for such supply for their handlooms. The cloth problem would consequently be easier in this way.

HAPPY ABOUT HIS HOST

At the beginning of his prayer speech at Narayanpur Gandhiji expressed his happiness at having been able to spend another night under the roof of a Muslim friend in the course of his walking tour. In spite of the fact that he had been trying to reduce the size of his entourage, his efforts in that direction had so far not been very successful. And he was glad that his host had proved equal to the occasion and had not been baffled by the number of his party.

Then Gandhiji referred to an incident that had occurred a short while ago. The elders of the house wanted him to meet the zanana ladies. He had made an attempt, but without success. It was true, he continued, that Hindu women attended the prayer in a large number. In this respect they were more advanced. But as such it became their duty to fraternize with their Muslim sisters and rescue them from the thralldom of the purdah. If they neglected this neighbourly duty, there was obviously some defect on their part.

India, Gandhiji said, was aspiring to be free. But if half the population was to remain in a paralysed condition, the type of freedom the people would attain could never be perfect. Therefore, with utmost humility, he once more appealed to the elders among the audience to examine the effect of the purdah system and do away with it in the shortest possible time. For, in his opinion the system, as he saw in his peregrination, was quite contrary to what the Prophet had preached.

16-1-47

Addressing the prayer gathering this evening, Gandhiji said that he had received certain questions from some Muslims while he was in Narayanpur yesterday.

How could he advise Assam and the Sikhs in the Punjab to stay out of groups if his aim was Hindu-Muslim unity and how, after this, was it possible for the Muslim League to join the Constituent Assembly? Gandhiji said there was no "if" about his aim. Hindu-Muslim unity had been his aim from his youth upward, that is for an unbroken period of 60 years. He saw no contradiction between his aim and his advice to the people of Assam, the Sikhs and, for that matter, the Frontier and those who felt like it, to stay out of groups or from the Constituent Assembly. The Cabinet Mission's Paper was of a voluntary nature and no party could be compelled to join the Constituent Assembly. They had no force to back their resolution or wishes except the force of public opinion.

CONGRESS STAND

He had, therefore, given no advice which should make it impossible for the Muslim League to join the Constituent Assembly. So far as he had read the resolution passed at the recent A. I. C. C. meeting, the Congress had completely identified itself with the Cabinet Mission's Paper.

Gandhiji hoped that the Muslim League would join the Constituent Assembly in which it was open to it to make good its position by an appeal to reason. Otherwise the Constituent Assembly, because it was a voluntary organization brought into being by the only party that had force behind it, was like a house of cards. It could only become a solid structure if it was backed by the opinion of the Indian masses. Staying out by certain provinces or groups could not and should not be a hindrance to the proceedings of the Constituent Assembly, if it was otherwise good.

Gandhiji would ask, "Why should Assam be absorbed in Bengal against its will or the Frontier Province or the Sikhs into the Punjab and Sind?" The Congress or League, as the case may be, should make their programme and policy intrinsically attractive so as to appeal to the reason of the recalcitrant province or groups.

FRIEND OF BOTH COMMUNITIES

The second question put to him was: Gandhiji claimed to be a friend of both the communities, but he had been nursing back his own community for the last two months in Noakhali. What about the Muslims of Bihar, who have lost their all? Gandhiji said he would say the question ignored facts. He was not "nursing back" his own community. He had no community of his own except in the sense that he belonged to all communities. His record, Gandhiji said, spoke for itself. He freely admitted that he was trying to bring comfort to the Hindus of Noakhali, but not at the expense of the Muslims. If there was a sick member in his family and he seemed to attend to the sick member, it surely did not mean that he neglected the others.

He had had repeated and insistent advice from Muslim friends that his place was more in Bihar, where the Muslims were in point of numbers much greater sufferers than the Hindus in Noakhali. He was sorry that he had hitherto failed to make his Muslim critics see that he had sufficiently affected the Hindus of Bihar in favour of the Muslim sufferers. If he listened to his critics against his own better reason and went to Bihar, it was just likely that he might injure the Muslim cause rather than serve it.

Thus, for instance, he might not find corroboration for the many charges brought against the Bihar Hindus and the Bihar Government and, in order to be able to make such a declaration, he had accepted the better course, namely, to advise the Bihar Ministry, which had accepted his advice that they should jointly with the Bengal Government or by themselves, appoint an impartial Commission of Inquiry.

17 and 18-1-'47

A short while before prayer on the 18th instant, the Muslim friend at whose house Gandhiji had halted on his way to Badalkot approached him and said that if there was a settlement between Mr Jinnah and him, peace would be established in the country. Gandhiji's answer was that he did not maintain illusions and never ascribed to himself any superior powers. He had met Mr. Jinnah many times, as they knew, and their meetings had been marked by nothing but friendliness, yet the results were negative as they all knew.

The fact was, continued Gandhiji, that a leader was made by his followers. He reflected in a clearer manner the aspirations lying dormant among the masses. This was true not only of India but of all the world. What he would, therefore, suggest to both Hindus and Musalmans was that they should not look to the Muslim League or the Congress or the Hindu Mahasabha for the solution of their daily problems of life. For that they should look towards themselves; and if they did that, then their desire for neighbourly peace would be reflected by the leaders. The political institutions might be left to deal with specifically political questions but how much did they know about the daily needs of individuals? If a neighbour was ailing, would they run to the Congress or the League to ask them what should be done? That was an unthinkable proposition.

On the previous evening Gandhiji had quoted Mr. Jinnah's advice that women should rapidly be rescued from illiteracy. But Gandhiji said that that was not enough. Was the condition of the literate men any better for their literacy? Were they not, he asked, subject to the passing fashions of the political world? Germany, which had lain so long under Hitler, proved what he meant; as all knew it was in a sorry plight today. It was not literacy or learning which made a man, but education for real life. What did it matter, questioned Gandhiji, if they knew everything but did not know how to live in brotherliness with their neighbours?

Gandhiji continued that if some people had committed grievous mistakes in their dealings with their neighbours, they should repent and ask the pardon of God. If He granted it but the world did not, even then it did not matter to a man who had learnt to depend on God; such punishment nobly borne serves to elevate a man. Gandhiji then said that in a book of sayings of the Prophet he had found that a man should never leave an error uncorrected. If they did, they would be hauled up on the Day of Judgement and find no favour in the eyes of God.

It was not enough that they acquired the art of reading, writing etc., but it was necessary that they should learn the art of living on friendly terms with neighbours. They should rescue the womenfolk, who formed half their numbers, from the thralldom of ignorance and superstition. Men should live in cooperation and work for the common good. For this, they should not look up to political parties for direction, but to their own souls or God.

Personally, Gandhiji said, he had addressed himself wholly to that task. He would not leave this part of the country alive if the work remained unaccomplished. If he succeeded in overcoming the distrust of his Muslim brethren, and in establishing the fact that, after all, it was the daily things of life such as he had mentioned which mattered most, then its effect would be felt not merely in this part of the country but over the whole of India; and as such might even deeply affect the future peace of the world.

GANDHIJI'S PRESS STATEMENT

A correspondent writes to me to say that the strained relations between the Hindus and the Muslims bid fair, if timely warning is not taken, to replace Nagari and Urdu scripts with Roman. There are undoubtedly protagonists of the Roman as the universal script. It seems to me that it would be a great human tragedy if such a result comes about. Time saving devices are good upto a certain point. But they take the form of a mania when they destroy human relations and desirable restraints. I must not tarry to examine what they are. Suffice it to say that lovers of the Nagari script which is scientifically almost perfect, and the Urdu script, which is so graceful, will not be carried away by the lazy craze for the Roman script. Would that both the communities will be sane enough to realize that the mutual dislike is not allowed to replace the two Indian scripts. But if that happy consummation does not take place, let those few or many who have regard for sacred human understanding assiduously learn both the scripts and thus enrich the Indian national language Hindustani as the easy fusion of Hindi and Urdu. Let the Provincial Governments beware of the lure of the Roman script. Let it not be said of India that it is so degraded as to become the plotting sheet of civilization.

Kheturi (Noakhali), 24-1-'47

HARIJAN

February 2

1947

COMMUNAL MURDERS

1

The situation in Bombay regarding communal murders does not appear to be much improving. Occasionally there are also mob fights and Government is often obliged to resort to firing. This is extremely disturbing. In the light of these incidents grand and expensive schemes for further development and enlargement of the city do not enthuse one. If the social life of the people is getting more and more disintegrated and the relations between the various communities are getting more and more strained, of what worth are outwardly more beautiful and up-to-date cities and all the creature comforts and conveniences, which modern science might make available?

The Peace Committees, and the joint appeals of the Congress, the League and the Scheduled Class leaders do not seem to exert much (if at all, any) influence upon the perpetrators of the murders and their patrons. The police does not seem to lay its finger on real abettors, even if it does arrest actual assailants.

Certain inferences seem irresistible:

(i) The Peace Committees, and those who sign the appeals, consist of men who either do not work earnestly or have not much influence over the people who create disturbances or include men who are themselves either abettors or at least look upon the murders and disturbances with a sense of communalist satisfaction and stand upon the Committees or sign the appeals insincerely.

(ii) The Police is either corrupt, or communally split, or for some strong reasons does not dare to touch the real principals working behind the crimes.

(iii) Economic rivalry, unemployment, want of residential accommodation, difficulties in getting adequate food and clothing, high prices, black-marketing, the extremely big hiatus between the very rich and the very poor, the loss of moral sense which generally follows great wars, and communal propaganda combine together to drive the half-awakened working classes on communal lines, so that the workers of one community look upon those of another as the cause of their economic difficulties and having become desperate readily resort to violence. Political leaders, for their own ends, exploit their ignorance and fan mob fury.

The Government is making frantic efforts to meet the situation by tightening up punitive legislations, arming itself and the Police Commissioner with wide powers for removing "bad characters" (i. e. de facto perpetrators of crimes) and by promptly bringing out the armed police or the military.

I have no faith in punitive legislations. Not the severest punishment has ever put an end to crimes. An extremely small fraction of crimes, actually committed, is detected and a still smaller fraction is punished. Hardened criminals can, therefore, always take the risk incidental to their habitual vocation. Externment of "bad characters" does not remove the evil any more than throwing the sweepings of my house before the door-step of my neighbour's does. Putting them into jails for a period is like throwing the sweepings into the dust-bin, and, when it is full, emptying it again on the streets, to get once again into the houses with the wind in a more contaminated form.

But governments, — capitalist or socialist, responsible or irresponsible — with their unshakable faith in force as the ultimate preserver of law and order, are not expected to devise anything better than punitive laws and militarism for combating evils. And in this respect governments simply reflect the faith of the majority of the people whom they govern. I do not, therefore, blame governments for their punitive measures. But while I may not blame them, I need not hesitate to say that these measures are not going to stop the evil from which society is suffering.

2

What shall we do, then, is a pertinent question. I shall attempt to answer it.

To my mind it is essential in the first place to realize that establishing peace is a constructive activity and not merely a preventive, resistive or retaliatory one. Peace is not ending hostilities by forcing the opponent to surrender and accept whatever terms might be imposed upon him. It is the creation of friendly feelings where bitterness and enmity reigned before. A lesser goal than this will not bring success where communities residing in one country have become mutually estranged.

Being a constructive activity, political party organizations and their prominent leaders are not well fitted for building peace. By their very nature these organizations and their leaders — whether in the official group or in opposition within their own parties — have their eye firmly set on the capture of the administrative machinery. In none of their activities can they forget their god, the voter. A constructive activity or a grand public scheme is more important to them for the reward it will bring to them in the shape of success at the next election than for the benefit it might confer upon the people. Their rivalries in the political field being very much responsible for arousing communal feelings, they will not allow them to work whole-heartedly in building peace. Even when they meet in common committees for a common purpose, they cannot resist the temptation of having a fling now and then against an opposite party, with the result that when they part, they often find themselves more hostile towards one another than before.

The work of creating peace must, therefore, be undertaken by an independent non-political organization. Individual leaders, temperamentally suited for it, in spite of their particular political associations, might stand on its committees, but the organization itself should be conducted by persons who remain scrupulously aloof from politics and consider the building of peace amongst various communities their principal life-work. Its organizer must be a person, who even though he had the capacity of entering politics or taking interest in several activities simultaneously, would single-mindedly and selflessly make the building up of friendly feelings and peaceful relations amongst the various communities the sole task of his life. Of course, in executing this mission, he would have to attend to and organize a good many activities. For instance, he would have to find ways and means for the creation of social virtues and civic sense amongst the ordinary hard-working folk; he would have to study the domestic and economic problems of people classed "bad characters" and of orphans and neglected children likely to join that camp, to find those maladjustments in their life, which engender anti-social tendencies; he must be an extremely social person—a man of the people; he would not talk politics to the people among whom he works; he would keep aloof from election campaigns, from debating the pros and cons of joint and separate electorates, of Pakistan and Akhand Hindustan etc; nor would he discuss the merits and demerits of the various religions and political 'isms' and one who, like, say, Shri Ravishanker Vyas of Gujarat or Appa Saheb Patwardhan of Ratnagiri (the present President of the Gandhi Seva Sangh), did not know fear in moving among all types of people; he would only stress the necessity of cultivating good morals, social virtues, duties of citizenship and a spirit of friendliness and cooperation among all the communities, and devise social and economic activities which would bring out and foster these qualities in the people.

Of course, he would need the active sympathy and cooperation of the common citizens. But a large part of the citizens, who work with him, would be persons who, though they might at the time of elections vote for a party standing high in their esteem for the time being, are otherwise not too strongly party-mad in their every day life. They are people who either do not presume to understand very clearly, or even though they do, do not feel over-interested in the issues which divide the various parties. What they understand and value above everything else is the supreme importance of peace and security in the city and friendly relations among all, irrespective of their caste, creed or political associations. It is a mistake to consider such people as unintelligent or uninformed. Rather, they are often very wise and shrewd and do not fall too readily into the traps of dogmas. They understand very well what they themselves want,—namely, freedom to move about in the city and to pursue their daily vocations without fear or hindrance,—and are willing to contribute actively for that objective.

I believe that it would be possible to find a good number of people of this type. An attempt should be made to secure their help and cooperation. The volunteers for organizing the work of the Peace Committees should come from this class rather than from various Volunteer organizations affiliated to particular political parties. Students would do well to spend a good part of their youthful vigour in such work, instead of becoming at too early an age fanatic adherents of particular religious or political 'isms' or parties, and taking practical lessons, in all the evil practices of the elderly political leaders, for strengthening their respective party machines.

3

So much about unofficial endeavour. I shall now discuss how Government may help communal peace in a constructive manner.

Much though I may wish, I do not expect it to discard its powers of punishment and resorting to 'stern measures'. But since they feel that this has to be done, it should be done at least efficiently. The real financiers, brains and suppliers of weapons working behind the murderous activities must be caught hold of, however great their position and influence may be; trials must be speedily ended; and in making arrests, scores of men must not be driven to the police station and detained there for hours to find out if there was a culprit or two among them.

But more important than punitive measures is the removal of the grievances and hardships of the class of people from which criminals grow. In my opinion, their grievances arise from two distinct causes: one, economic and the other, psychological. The economic grievances are, as mentioned earlier, the unsatisfactory position regarding food, clothing, fuel, residential requirements etc. and employments not paying enough to meet their essential wants. That there is a general scarcity of these things is not a cogent argument with them. For, they see with their own eyes that those who have the means and are unscrupulous enough to adopt any efficacious method are able to procure more than their reasonable needs,—even to live lavishly. They cannot but carry the feeling that all the hue and cry raised about scarcity is a trick to starve the poor. If the poor man can see that it is not only he, but the rich man also, in spite of having a thousand rupees cash always on hand, who suffers want of enough food, clothes, fuel, oil, match-boxes, quarters etc., he would not carry a feeling of anger. Being unable to show his anger against the rich, he lets it out against his nearest rival, much as a daughter-in-law who is unable to punish her mother-in-law thrashes her child or smashes her pots to give vent to her resentment. Heroic efforts must, therefore, be made to ensure that, in respect of the essential needs, the rich and the poor feel the pinch of scarcity equally.

The second cause is psychological. The persons available for murderous projects belong to a class which generally does not hunger so much for money as for adventure and for sensuous pleasures when available. They are not thrifty and do not want money to lay by. Ordinary vocations are not attractive enough for them. But they will readily take to jobs which have an element of risk and adventure. If these people are to be reclaimed from their anti-social pursuits, useful but risky employments must be found for them. Of course, the employment must be accompanied with adequate rewards, which need not necessarily be pecuniary. This is a work, which Government alone can devise and execute.

Another important thing, which Government and the Municipal Corporation must realize, is that the aspiration to make Bombay a second London or a second New York is a false idea. What is needed is not a carefully prepared plan for Greater Bombay, but a carefully prepared scheme for breaking up Bombay into 15 or 20 towns, situated at a distance of 50 to 100 miles from one another,—a scheme for small towns, scattered all over the province, instead of a few highly congested cities. Cities attract not only millionaires, speculators and seekers of well-paid employments but also a majority of habitual offenders that are discharged periodically from the Central Prisons of Nasik Road, Yeravda, Sabarmati etc. Perhaps because all of them have one thing in common, namely, that they want more than they deserve, and that, too, very quickly. Goondas and absconders are safer in cities than in villages or small towns. I doubt whether the attempt to banish them from the cities succeeds much. I believe that most of them return to the city, or go to another city, within a few days, perhaps under a different name and religion. I would not be surprised if it were discovered some day that the Muslim assassin of a Hindu and the Hindu assassin of a Muslim were identical persons. Indeed it might even turn out that some of the Hindu, Muslim and Scheduled Caste criminals belonged to a common gang working under, and paid by a common captain.

If communal politics are amicably settled, perhaps communal murders might cease; but that will not be the end of murders and incendiarism. They existed and tended to increase before communal troubles started and will do so again. New York and London do not appear to be free from them. Communal differences are only a convenient lever for the time being, the real causes being economic, psychological and the congestion of the city.

May I hope that the public as well as those who govern will seriously consider the constructive part of this problem?

Sabarmati, 16-1-'47

K. G. MASHRUWALA

Out of Stock

Dr. A. K. Bhagwat of Uruli-Kanchan reports that his publications have already gone out of stock and no more orders can be executed.

Sabarmati, 22-1-'47

K. G. M.

PLANNING WITH VILLAGE BIAS

II

FOOD, FODDER AND AGRICULTURE

1. AGRICULTURAL IMPROVEMENT

The ways and means to improve India's agriculture are mainly: (1) To prevent fragmentation and to fix economic holdings; (2) Country-wide tapping and harnessing of our water resources; (3) Improvement of soil and its productivity through natural as well as scientific treatment of manures, seeds, crop-diseases, prevention of soil erosion etc.; (4) Co-operative effort; (5) State aid and protection; (6) Reclamation of waste-lands inland and along the sea-coasts and the creeks.

Each one of these subjects has been discussed threadbare time and again by experienced men who have devoted their lifetime to their study, without having an opportunity uptill now to put their suggestions and solutions to practical working. Though, therefore, they are vital and important, I may not discuss them here beyond mere enumeration.

2. CATTLE, FODDER, MILK

The breeding of draught animals, which are the mainstay of Indian agriculture, must be encouraged on large-scale scientific lines. Laboratory experiments on Government farms or military establishments would not meet the urgent need. The present draught cattle with the Indian farmer are utterly uneconomic and a veritable burden. All promiscuous breeding must be prohibited and castration of all male calves, save those certified by the Veterinary Department as fit for breeding purposes, must be made compulsory by law, even like vaccination of children.

It will be news to many that unbelievably vast areas of private-owned lands, even in an agriculturally advanced province like Bombay, are lying waste. In only two out of the ten talukas (Pardi and Bulsar) of the Surat district which is noted for its fruit orchards and gardening, 80,000 and 64,000 acres of private-owned lands grow nothing but grass, babul or brambles. It may be noted here that in these talukas annual rainfall is about 75 inches. Besides, excellent rivers flow at distances of every 5 or 7 miles and empty out fresh water by millions of gallons in the Arabian Sea throughout the year.

In a neighbouring village the other day a visiting government officer found that of the entire holdings covering some 1200 acres, no more than 350 acres were under cultivation as against 851 acres consisted of grass lands only! These grass lands are not what is called the "village common", i. e., pastures for village cattle to graze. Far from it, they are owned mostly by absentee landlords—the sowcars who cut, cart and carry away every blade of grass duly bundled and baled for the Bombay stables! In spite of all the "Grow More Food" Campaign by Government and other public agencies, these landlords successfully contrive to make hay literally while the countryside starves and lives on depleting rations of foodgrains imported from America and elsewhere. They will not allow their tenants to grow on these lands foodgrains—which none-the-less yield equal quantities if not more of fodder—lest they may have to share the produce with them and keep vigil during harvest to prevent pilfering! Millions of acres of such lands are lying waste in our country in the hands of such owners who pursue the proverbial 'dog in the manger' policy. These owners should be made to lease out their lands to landless peasantry on easy terms for growing foodgrains, vegetables, etc., and irrigation facilities should be provided by Government. High prices of grass and tobacco have induced many landlords in the districts of Gujarat to by-pass the Government and convert considerable food-growing acreage into grass or tobacco growing areas in the teeth of Government propaganda for food growing. This must be stopped effectively without delay.

While such vast grass areas abound in our province, milk is produced in the heart of cities like Bombay and sold at a rupee a seer and above. All stables in cities and suburban areas round Bombay, Ahmedabad, Poona, Sholapur, Hubli etc., should be abolished and prohibited by law and cattle-keeping and rearing should be allowed only in rural areas in natural surroundings where grazing, stabling, credit and transport facilities should be provided by Government by pooling together, on popular lines, the resources of charitable trusts and institutions, intended for these purposes; such as panjrapoles, goshalas etc.

3. RECLAMATION OF COASTAL LANDS

Thousands of acres of salty lands are lying along creeks in the coastal districts of Surat, Thana and Konkan. These have been washed off and gone waste but could be reclaimed under Government encouragement and help through a system of bunding and would yield thousands of tons of coarse "salt-paddy" as it is called. I think some years ago a survey was made to such an end in the Thana district by a special officer appointed by Government.

I also remember an instance in which years ago a whole adult population of a salt-making village in the Thana district, who were engaged in a labour dispute with the employers, embarked upon a joint venture of rebuilding an old bund as a constructive substitute for their enforced unemployment, and succeeded in reclaiming vast lands which were washed off by the creek and totally lost to the village for more than a generation. This first-rate constructive effort proved a guarantee against possible acts of violence, which the organizers feared, on the part of some of the idle strikers and a veritable boon to the whole village in as much as it brought an additional annual yield of several hundred khandis of 'salt-paddy' for the village to the permanent benefit of every family.

The problem, however, of reclaiming such areas may be said to be beyond the capacity of any private agency, but under State initiative, much could be achieved in the direction.

4. VEGETABLE GROWING

Our people's diet is hopelessly low and ill-balanced being highly deficient in fats, proteins and other nutritives. The grass lands above-mentioned can grow excellent fresh vegetables, in abundance, on which poorer people can greatly rely during certain seasons, as they do, for instance, on mowra flowers in the Panch Mahals or on jackfruit in parts of the Konkan. Today fresh vegetable is an item of luxury to be found in the menu of the well-to-do classes only. The growers market every ounce of their produce to the cities and towns where it is sold at 4 to 12 annas a lb. And yet the grower hardly gets 1 or 2 annas out of it, the lions's share going to the railways and the city broker or the middlemen. Years ago this writer had reproduced in these columns figures of sale proceeds against expenditure from the account books of a renowned garden owner of the province who faced virtual ruin having had to distribute as much as 87½% of his income between the railway and the middlemen. Only a couple of years ago certain military camps near Wardha compelled village farmers to grow huge quantities of fresh vegetables for them but decamped suddenly to a distant front plunging that whole countryside in total economic ruin. I saw with my own eyes cart-loads of bewitching cauli-flowers selling at one pice a lb. for a whole season and bullocks being fed with maunds upon maunds of beautiful tomatoes which could easily compare with those seen in the coloured advertisements in the American journals. Only the other day I met a big grower of excellent vegetables in my own neighbourhood who supplied some few thousand lbs. of fresh vegetables daily to the military establishments and then to Government ration-shops in Bombay, but who now finds himself—and along with him 11 small villagers whom he encouraged to grow—utterly stranded as a result of a sudden stoppage of Government purchase owing to a change of policy.

All this maladjustment must stop and wise planning follow which would protect the growers against such calamities. Village growers should be discouraged to grow for big and distant cities, but helped to cater local needs within the district and a fair return ensured to them by fixing minimum prices, as in the case of milk, for their undertaking to grow for well-defined restricted areas.

5. SEWAGE WATERS

In vegetable growing for big cities like Bombay, Ahmedabad etc., and for raising green fodder for city stables utilization of night soil and sewage water could be thought of with advantage. If drinking water could be brought to cities from distant catchment areas, the city sewers may be as well diverted for manuring and irrigating vast areas in distant suburbs. It may be relevant to say here that the Ahmedabad Municipality has been utilizing part of its sewage system in this manner for years and has been making a decent income. In Delhi, Allahabad, Karachi and elsewhere too, I think, this is done more or less.

Vapi

SWAMI ANAND

(To be continued)

RESOLUTION

[The following resolution, defining the objectives of the future constitution of India, was moved by Pandit Nehru in the Constituent Assembly of India on Friday, the 13th of December, 1946, and was unanimously passed by the Assembly on the 22nd of January 1947 after a full discussion.]

1. This Constituent Assembly declares its firm and solemn resolve to proclaim India as an Independent Sovereign Republic and to draw up for her future governance a Constitution;

2. wherein the territories that now comprise British India, the territories that now form the Indian States, and such other parts of India as are outside British India and the States as well as such other territories as are willing to be constituted into the Independent Sovereign India shall be a Union of them all; and

3. wherein the said territories, whether with their present boundaries or with such others as may be determined by the Constituent Assembly and thereafter according to the law of the Constitution, shall possess and retain the status of autonomous units, together with residuary powers, and exercise all powers and functions of government and administration, save and except such powers and functions as are vested in or assigned to the Union, or as are inherent or implied in the Union or resulting therefrom; and

4. wherein all power and authority of the Sovereign Independent India, its constituent parts and organs of government, are derived from the people; and

5. wherein shall be guaranteed and secured to all the people of India justice, social, economic and political; equality of status, of opportunity, and before the law; freedom of thought, expression, belief, faith, worship, vocation, association and action subject to law and public morality; and

6. wherein adequate safeguards shall be provided for minorities, backward and tribal areas, and depressed and other backward classes; and

7. whereby shall be maintained the integrity of the territory of the Republic and its sovereign rights on land, sea and air according to justice and the law of civilized nations; and

8. this ancient land attain its rightful and honoured place in the world and make its full and willing contribution to the promotion of world peace and the welfare of mankind.

GANDHIJI'S APPROACH

Speaking at a students' meeting at the Ashutosh Hall on the 13th January, Dr. Amiya Chakraverty expressed his belief that there was in Gandhiji's historic march an impelling drive of spiritual faith in the neighbourly goodness of a common people which communal passion could obscure but never destroy. Gandhiji had gone to the interior of Bengal to restore this intrinsic trust without which no society could function. He sought to prove to the victims and the so-called victors of Noakhali that the recent man-made calamity did not even help the majority community. On the contrary, the latter stood to lose materially just as much as they had lost in honour and reputation. Rural life depended on cooperative welfare and any rude shock to mutual trust and any dislocation of the economic and political life was bound to shatter, as it had already shattered, the total agrarian security. The majority population misled by communal leaders had forgotten this fact but they were now realizing it mainly under the truthful light torches by Gandhiji's words and unsparing analysis.

Another factor that Gandhiji's programme included was rehabilitation with or without Government help. That the stricken and outraged conscience of the nation must take up the challenge of Noakhali was what Gandhiji wanted.

(From the A. B. Patrika, 15-1-'47)

ECONOMICS OF KHADDAR

(Second Revised Edition)

By

Richard B. Gregg

Price Rs. 2, Postage As. 6

Available at:

Navajivan Karyalaya, — P. B. 105, Kalupur, Ahmedabad; — 130, Princess Street, Bombay 2; — 299 Sadashiv Peth, Poona 2; — Kanpith Bazar, Surat; — Lakhajiraj Road, Rajkot; — 641/11 Kucha Mahajani, Chandni Chowk, Delhi; — Bright View Building, Royal Park, McLeod Road, Lahore.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
SHRIRAMPUR DIARY	1
GANDHIJI'S PRESS STATEMENT	3
COMMUNAL MURDERS ... K. G. MASHRUWALA	4
PLANNING WITH VILLAGE
BIAS—II ... SWAMI ANAND	6
RESOLUTION	8
GANDHIJI'S APPROACH	8
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI—
INSTALMENT—XII	9

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad
Subscription Rates — INLAND: One year, Rs. 6; Six months, Rs. 3; FOREIGN: One year, Rs. 8 or 14. sh. or $ 3.

HARIJAN

16 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. XI, No. 3

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1947

TWO ANNAS

WHERE IS THE OBSTRUCTION?

The papers say that the Government was considering a cut in the ration for cloth by one-sixth. The reason assigned was that owing to communal disturbances in Bombay and Ahmedabad, the mills could not get enough hands to work fully, resulting in the diminution of cloth-production.

Just imagine! Seven lakhs of villages scattered all over India must suffer cloth-famine, because two of her cities were involved in riots!

The cotton from which cloth is manufactured grows in those very villages; and yet they cannot turn it into cloth in their own homes! Why? The answer is—on account of the dullness of the masses, the muddled heads of the learned and the inertia common to both. Owing to dullness, the masses are unable to move unless stimulated from outside. Owing to want of clear thinking, the learned are filled with doubts. "Can it be seriously urged" they ask, "that we should in this age of scientific progress personally spin and ask people to spin on the charkha of the middle ages? Is it conceivable that we could ever clothe ourselves sufficiently without the mills? We concede that the charkha can produce some yarn. But what is it good for?" Learned as they are, they are unable to see that it is good enough for covering their bodies! To add to both these causes, there is the inertia common to all, born of age-long slavery.

But then should people go naked? The Government seem to say that for the time being there was no alternative. They had made a scheme for starting new mills in the province. It would take some years to implement it. Till then, people would have to feel the pinch of scarcity. The provincial quotas were fixed by the Central Government and all that the Provincial Government could do was to distribute its share equally among the people.

But I don't see even equal distribution. All around me, I find that it is only the poor who go in rags; the others are more than fully clothed.

However, let me assume that the Government will bring about equal distribution. Still I do not see why the people should feel the pinch of scarcity until new mills are built and they begin to work. Is there any want of time to spin? Is it difficult to manufacture spinning implements? Or is it want of sufficient cotton?

The ancient logicians said that three factors were essential in order to produce a thing, say cloth: the basic material i. e. cotton; the instrument of production, i. e. spinning implements; and the efficient cause, i. e. a capable man. But here we are faced with the situation that cloth cannot be produced, though all the three factors are present. Were the logicians wrong? If not, where is the obstruction?

The obstruction is with the efficient cause—the capable man. The agriculturist has enough time and capability to spin, because he does not possess more land than three-quarters of an acre. But the capable men who rule over him, are unable to see this. Most of them do have khadi on their heads, but it has not yet entered into those heads.

Perhaps they might deny this. They might say, that I was unjust to them. True, they were not convinced about the potentiality of khadi that I ascribe to it. But they were not unwilling to encourage it while the mills were insufficient. Indeed, they invited the Charkha Sangh to give them a scheme. But Gandhiji advised the Sangh not to submit any scheme to the provinces, which wanted to establish mills also. The obstruction, therefore, lay in Gandhiji's advice.

Let us examine this piece of logic. It might take about two or three years to start new mills. Even assuming that khadi is needed only during the time the mill production is insufficient, is it seriously intended to encourage hand-spinning during the interval? If it is, has it been considered whether it is physically possible to introduce the wheel in every village in a period of two or three years? Has it been realized that before the spinning wheel can be usefully plied, it will be necessary to give the people training in spinning and the ancillary processes? This means that an intensive and country-wide scheme for giving this training will have to be planned out and executed. If the Government is serious it might say, of course, they would be prepared to do all that. Well, if measures are taken to introduce the charkha in so thorough a manner, then by the time the plan is executed, the mills will have begun to work and the mill-cloth will begin to be dumped upon the villages. Are the two positions consistent? If the scheme to set up the charkha in every home is to be seriously implemented, why should the mills be brought in to dislodge it again? If, on the other hand, the setting up of the mill-industry is a settled programme, why should there be all this waste of energy to introduce the charkha? Encouraging the khadi during the interval does not surely mean putting in a few lakhs of rupees into hand-spun and hand-woven cloth for the satisfaction of the khadi complex, which Congressmen have developed to a certain extent by long association!

And after all this expenditure of energy and public funds, what will be the net result? The present ration of cloth in this province (C. P.) is 12 yds. per head. Of these six yards are meant to be mill cloth wholly and six yards of hand-loom cloth. This is practically unavailable. Taking the minimum need to be as low as 16 yds. per head, it is no joke to supply the deficit on the charkha. It cannot be done by doling out a few lakhs of rupees into the khadi-made charity-bag.

Therefore, let there not be any loose thinking about khadi. The ministers must think it out in a serious manner. Gandhiji cannot be so irresponsible as to allow tax-payers' money to be spent on a programme in which the ministers have no clear faith. You cannot encourage both khadi and the mills. The mills that be, must disappear with the wearing out of their machinery and no new mills must come in to displace hand-spun cloth.

The Madras Cabinet alone has ventured to chalk out a Khadi scheme. It has been made the target of severe attacks by the vested interests. Some have prophesied the failure of the scheme; a few are hopeful. And the irony of it is that several of those who attack the plan clad themselves in khadi top to toe!

I may be again told that this was an unjust criticism. It was not that those whom I had criticized did not want khadi. But they were realists. In a case depending upon hard facts mere will to believe cannot generate faith and in the case of khadi facts did not show that it could be universalized. The A. I. S. A. had been after it for these twenty years. The Congress had encouraged it. But they had not succeeded in installing it in the place which khadi-lovers wanted for it. That was the reason for their want of full faith in khadi.

The answer is that uptill now the khadi movement had to be carried on under a Government hostile towards it. So many times, it actually burnt the wheels, confiscated khadi Bhandars, and imprisoned people simply because they put on khadi. It even had the tyrant's heartlessness to burn stocks of khadi in the face of actual cloth-famine in the country. If, under such adverse circumstances, khadi succeeded in becoming the symbol and the uniform of Swaraj, and has actually brought the country to the threshold of Swaraj, and placed people, who could, if they wished, make it universal, in possession of the power to carry out that wish. It cannot, therefore, be said that it has not fully rewarded the efforts made for it during all these years. Khadi can now justifiably say to the Congress Governments that it was now for them to decide whether it should hereafter stay or quit along with the Government, which by its assistance, had been brought to the stage of quitting. The Congress was in power now and it was for them to retain or discard the weapon which gave them that power.

Pavnar, 24-12-'46

VINOBA

(Adapted from the original in Marathi)

ONE MORE FEATHER IN THE CAP

In most economic activities both the long range programme and short time measures must go hand in hand and must be well co-ordinated if they are to function satisfactorily. If the carpenter wants seasoned wood for his cabinets, the long range counterpart of this is the forest policy of the Government. When the farmer needs to water his fields the Government has to lay out long term irrigation schemes to answer the purpose. These items are complementary but the long term policies are based on the demand of the short range policies. It is the function of the Government to provide the long term measures to supply the needs of the short range economic activities. A maladjustment between these two aspects causes waste. For instance, the Government will be foolish to go on building irrigation works where there are no fields to irrigate!

During the feudal days England was an economy based on horse power. The horse was the beast of burden. It provided the motive force for the farmer on the fields, the mount for the wayfarer, the charger for the warrior, the draught power for the post chaise, etc. At that time the feudal lord functioned partially in the place of the State in a modern democracy. So it fell to his lot to take care of horse-breeding which was a long range programme. Because of this the institution of horse racing came into being to set the required standards of quality and to reward the successful breeder. Since the advent of power machinery, coal and oil have ousted the horse, leaving us only its long range counterpart, horse breeding and racing as an anachronism for the indulgence of the gambler and wastrel. This phenomenon of an economic long range item outliving its partner has developed into a monstrosity destroying the lives of hundreds of simple city clerks and petty traders who are enticed away by betting booths and has become a carbuncle on the body politic. This disease has invaded our country too. Many of our Princes and wealthy men are wasting crores on this pastime. The ever wasteful spendthrift governments, instead of ending this meaningless rudiment of an ancient economy, have made capital of it by making it a source of income. The magnitude of its operations can be gauged from the fact that the Bombay Government pools nearly a crore from its betting taxes, while Calcutta makes about three fourths of it. It is high time for any rational Government not driven by its greed to put an end to this nefarious occupation.

The Madras Ministry has again given the lead by legislating against wagering or betting at horse races. While some types of horses for the tonga, etc. have yet to be bred, the kinds that are found in the races are of no use for the ordinary man. Under the circumstances all racing of such animals should be completely banned. We trust the other Provincial Governments will follow this example.

Besides, our country being in a cow-centered economy, which badly needs long schemes in cattle-breeding, poultry rearing, sheep-breeding etc., we would commend that the energies now running waste in horse-breeding may well be profitably channelized into these activities which will fit into the economic life of the country.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

Notes

Orissa's Suicide

One of our poorest provinces is Orissa. As a consequence of the last war it has been impoverished further. When we talk of the economic condition we have in mind the common farmer and the villager. It does not at this stage require any exposition of the fact that centralized production accumulates profits to the "haves" and creates unemployment and distress for the "have nots". To relieve poverty and unemployment, therefore, we need to spread industries which distribute wealth and bring employment to the largest number. Such is khadi production to relieve shortage of cloth as quickly as possible.

The ill-advised Orissa Government is the first to take the bait of the provincial spindle quota scheme and has obtained an over-riding priority for the import of plant and machinery for the new company, "Orissa Textile Mills Ltd." for its 25,000 coarse and 19,000 fine spindles. They are awaiting permits for steel, cement and coal to start construction work at Cuttack.

For this company, under the most favoured terms, to start production it will take about three years. In the meanwhile the cloth shortage will grow from bad to worse; and by the time the mill begins functioning, the U. S. A., Great Britain and other countries which are pushing forward their export trade with all their might and main will be comfortably settled in the market. Will the Orissa Textile Mills be powerful enough to oust them?

We are sorry that the Orissa Government has taken this short-sighted view and has introduced a scheme which will bring greater distress for the masses than the one they are suffering from now.

A Share in the Booty

Nadir Shah invaded India for booty. This booty was in the form of hoards of precious metal, jewellery and gems. Such is not the booty our moderns look for. They want instruments of production, raw materials and markets. It was the search for such booty that brought in the global wars.

After the first world war the "conquerors" unburdened Germany of her colonies and claimed reparations to compensate for the loss caused by the wars.

Now again Germany has been "vanquished". The international vultures have foregathered where the carcass is. An assembly of delegates from the Principal Allied Countries have drafted a "Final Act and an Accord" to pool all German Patents in Allied countries. India has also been dragged into this arrangement, by whom we do not know.

When we buy a stolen article knowing it to be such we become morally responsible for the stealing that had preceded the transaction. India refrained from entering this war. To that extent she is free from the blood guilt of this war. Can we now ask for a share in the booty consequent on this war without assuming moral responsibility for the carnage?

Can we buy and bring into our country German plants taken over by the allies as "reparation"? There is a list of 51 German war plants, which are for sale, circulated among the Indian Chambers of Commerce. These are stained with injustice, cruelty, avarice and human blood. Are we prepared to take these on our hands? If we do, we become imperialists no less than the British or the Americans. If India stands for the freedom of all suppressed nations, Germany being one such today, our National Government should protest against such loot and ban such tainted property.

J. C. K.

THE PROPHET'S CONVENTION FOR ALL TIME

A Muslim friend sends the following quotation from the Bengali book Mustafa-Charit by Maulana Akram Khan. He has been circulating it in the form of a handbill.

"After arrival in Medina Hazrat Muhammed turned his attention towards the peace and welfare of the country. Medina with its neighbourhood was the seat of three independent tribes. The thoughts, tastes and religion of the Jews, the Idolaters and of the Musalmans were incompatible with one another. The Prophet realized the need of bringing them together under one common plan of action—they were to be fused politically into one 'nation'. They had to learn that different religious communities who inhabited the same country could preserve their religious independence fully intact and yet could work together in the service of their common motherland. Such a State was possible and also desirable.

"For the first time in the history of the world this ideal was preached by an inhabitant of the desert of Hejaz, viz., the unlettered Muhammed Mustafa. The latter gathered together the Jews, the Idolaters and the Muslims of Medina and made them sign the first international agreement and created a republic out of the various religious communities and mutually hostile factions. We give below a few items from that convention.

1. Jews and Idolaters belong to the same Ummat (Nation) as the Muslims.

2. They will fight unitedly for preserving the country's freedom.

3. Jews, Muslims and other communities are free to follow their own religious practices; none shall interfere with the religious freedom of another.

4. Muslims should generally behave with affection towards other communities and work for the latter's welfare. They should never harbour thoughts of injuring them in any way.

5. This promise taken in the name of Allah is for all time. He or they who break it will suffer from the wrath of Allah."

HARIJAN

February 16

1947

WANTED CORN, NOT CURRENCY

It is usual to say that India is an agricultural country. If one understood thereby that India had plenty of agricultural land, it would not be correct. For, it has only  $\frac{1}{4}$ th of an acre of land per head. The proposition, therefore, must be taken to mean that the Indian village and the life, habits and thought of the Indian people are more suited to agricultural pursuits than to non-agricultural ones. It can also be understood to mean that at present India has not much left of avocations other than the agricultural one. There is a third sense also for treating India as an agricultural country, namely, that the country having far less agricultural land than necessary, it must concentrate its main attention and energy on the improvement of agriculture. No prosperity could be expected otherwise.

Indeed, this was realized as early as the time of the Upanishads. One of them says, "Grow more corn. Regard this as your pledge." During the war period the Government also began to repeat this phrase, but it failed to create more corn. Instead, it created more currency. As a result, thirty lakhs of people died of want of corn.

Ultimately, the British Government handed over its failing concern to the leaders of the people. With the full knowledge of the risk involved in taking over a failing concern, the leaders have accepted the responsibility. Hence, keeping people alive is the most important problem that faces the country at present.

Businessmen say that agriculture is not a profitable avocation in India. But, since life depends upon agriculture, where agriculture is not profitable, life itself cannot be profitable. This result is not, cannot be, natural; it is the result of an artificial civilization. Currency is the symbol of this artificiality. The false prestige given to the possession of currency has become the cause of the destruction of so much life.

The people of India live in khedas—fields (remember that one of the synonyms for 'village' in several Indian languages is kheda, which also means a field). If we can undo in the khedas the false importance given to currency, agriculture cannot but improve. The importance given to the possession of currency is the cause of the frenzy for raising 'money-crops'. Why are so much tobacco, a considerable part of cotton and similar other crops raised? Why should there be so much need for currency? Because, the villager has to obtain all his wants by purchase. He must bring his cloth and the oil-cake and several other necessities from the market; hence his need for money. Hence he raises crops not needed by him or his comrades in the village, but those wanted by a far away exporter or industrialist. And so, food is scarce. The village itself has no industries of its own. The villager cannot supply himself with his essential needs from things manufactured locally. The deduction is clear. Sufficient food is not grown in the fields because sufficient industry is not carried on in the villages.

Of course, our agriculture needs considerable improvement; and there is no gainsaying the fact that improved agriculture will be more profitable. It will need all our talents, energy and years of patient endeavour to do this. While all this must be done, it must also be realized that the population will also increase along with the years of effort and the results of improved agriculture alone may not be proportionate to the needs of an enlarged population. Therefore an agriculturist should not be defined merely as one who lives by tilling land, but one who both tills the land and produces from the raw produce of his land articles needed for his own use. This idea is at the root of the Khadi and Village Industries movement. In the immediate future, the miseries of the poor will not end without a simultaneous impetus to Khadi and Village Industries.

Government is busily engaged in making calculations of the deficiency in the quantity of food needed for the country and devising ways and means of meeting it. But, if you think hard, you would realize that the 'Grow More Food' movement must not be limited by calculations of deficiency. Indeed, there should be no limit to the amount of food to be grown. It must not simply meet the annual needs of the country, but there must be plenty of surplus left for the next year. Like air and water, there must be plenty of food too. And food should not mean merely various corns, but also vegetables, fruits, roots and tubers. Nor should they be raised with an eye on their price in money; they must be consumed by the producer himself. He himself must become the principal buyer of his produce; the unneeded surplus alone should be for sale. This is Swaraj. "I salute the eater of his own produce," said Tukaram. No one would desire to put up his own son for sale in the market! He can never feel that he got full value for him. Hence, he cannot afford it. But he produces milk and butter, fruits and vegetables, and puts them up for sale! He says that he cannot afford to consume them himself! Why should it be so? My answer is—for want of village industries. Possibly some people might feel I am obsessed by this idea. But as long as I have not been given any other explanation for it, I must adhere to this view.

Pavnar, 13-1-'47

VINOBA

(Translated from the original in Marathi)

GANDHIJI ON TRUSTEESHIP

Gandhiji deliberately referred to his private life because he had never thought the private life of individuals did not affect the course of the public activities of those individuals. Thus he did not believe that he could be immoral in private life and yet be an efficient public servant. His public conduct was bound to be affected by his private. He held that much mischief was made throughout the world by divorce between public and private conduct. And when he was engaged in the supreme test of non-violence in his life, he wished to be judged before God and man by the sum total of his activities, both private and public. As he had said years ago, non-violent life was an act of self-examination and self-purification whether by the individual, group or a nation.

This led him to the answers of some questions addressed to him and arising out of his remarks on trusteeship.

Q. Is it possible to defend by means of non-violence anything which can only be gained through violence?

A. It followed from what he had said above that what was gained by violence could not only not be defended by non-violence but the latter required the abandonment of the ill-gotten gains.

Q. Is the accumulation of capital possible except through violence whether open or tacit?

A. Such accumulation by private persons was impossible except through violent means but accumulation by the State in a non-violent society was not only possible, it was desirable and inevitable.

Q. Whether a man accumulates material or moral wealth he does so only through the help or co-operation of other members of society. Has he then the moral right to use any of it mainly for personal advantage?

A. No, he has no moral right.

Q. How would the successor of a trustee be determined? Will he only have the right of proposing a name, the right of finalization being vested in the State?

A. As he had said yesterday, choice should be given to the original owner who became the first trustee, but the choice must be finalized by the State. Such arrangement puts a check on the State as well as the individual.

Q. When the replacement of private by public property thus takes place through the operation of the theory of trusteeship, will the ownership vest in the State, which is an instrument of violence or in associations of a voluntary character like village communes and municipalities, which may of course derive their final authority from State-made laws?

A. That question involved some confusion of thought. Legal ownership in the transformed condition vested in the trustee, not in the State. It was to avoid confiscation that the doctrine of trusteeship came into play retaining for the society the ability of the original owner in his own right. Nor did he, the speaker, hold that the State must always be based on violence. It might be so in theory but the practice of the theory demanded a State which would for the most part be based on non-violence.

Satgharia (Noakhali), 2-2-'47

SUPPRESSED CLASSES AND CONGRESS WORKERS

Until recently disturbances like strikes etc., were confined mostly to labourers of large-scale industries and city areas only. But now we see even workers like bhangis in small towns going on strike for an increase in their salaries. So also halis in the Surat district and the adivasis and the raniparaj (aborigines and forest-tribes people) have become restive and are offering resistance to land-owners and money-lenders. When this happens, instead of examining the merits of the case we are disposed to ascribe them to the instigation of the Kisan Sabha or Red-flag people or communists. Our stock argument against them is that they are totally unscrupulous and take resort to any means regardless of truth or justice and take advantage of the illiteracy and ignorance of the people, mislead them into violence and thus do harm to the poor masses. We also argue that it is not the whole or even a majority of these communities that takes part in such disturbances, but that these are stage-managed with the help of the fifty or hundred hooligans, who terrorize and coerce the rest to join the strike and take part in the disturbances. We feel that under the circumstances, nothing could be done except suppressing the agitators and their hired hooligans. I accept that there is some truth in these allegations. But that fact does not satisfy me much. For the question is: how is it that these people instead of going to the Congress for advice and for removal of their grievances, run to those mischievous agitators? We have been working amongst them for more than two decades now. We claim to serve them and give them the correct lead. Our institutions are older and ably organized and the government machinery has also come into our hands. How is it that even then we have not been able to generate such strength and understanding amongst the masses that they would not fall a prey to the lures of unscrupulous agitators and to the intimidation of the hooligans? Let us, therefore, probe deeper into the matter and do a bit of hard heart-searching. If the result of such heart-searching proves our attitude to be erroneous, I am prepared to take my own share in the blame as a worker. Thus what I write here is not to accuse my co-workers in the Congress, but to make an attempt to find out the truth. I request my readers in the Congress to take this article in that light.

To resume the thread, let us enquire how many of us have gone to these extremely suppressed and down-trodden people and to what extent have we been helpful to them in removing their miseries and sorrows? It cannot be gainsaid that the upper class people actually live on the toil of these people. They derive undue benefit from every variety of economic relationship with them. They consider themselves as a socially superior people and do not let go a single opportunity of insulting them and keeping them in their present suppressed condition. We workers do not have the courage to tell this fact plainly to the upper class people. We are afraid that we shall incur their displeasure, they might discontinue monetary and other help for our public activities or withdraw their cooperation. So we are inclined to maintain silence over these things and thus compromise our fundamental principles. We take shelter under the hackneyed maxim, 'hasten slowly', it being a safer course than antagonizing such people. If the elections of Local Boards or Municipalities or legislative assemblies are imminent, we think it advisable to postpone all such programmes, as are from the point of view of justice and urgency very important, but are likely to be unpopular with our constituencies and affect the vote. In selecting candidates for such bodies we attach more importance to their social influence amongst the voters and their possibility of success at the polls than to their capacity, their devotion to principles or loyalty to our programmes. Consequently, in practice we attach greater weight to castes and communities, which in principle we are out to abolish. Such candidates when elected are naturally found to be wanting in their zeal or devotion in discharging their duty towards these suppressed sections of our countrymen. For example, though the government resolution is clear regarding admission of Harijan students in Local Board Schools, the Harijan Sevak Sangh has to face a number of difficulties in getting students admitted to them. Hardly any School Board takes an active interest in this work. Similarly, we find some legislative assembly members elected on Congress tickets criticizing adversely even such a mild measure as the Bombay Tenancy Act. The tenants are accused of dishonestly defrauding the landowner of his legitimate half share of the crops by clandestinely removing the crops, so that the land-owner or the money-lender is hardly able to recover more than one third. The following extracts from a letter written by an old and experienced worker in the Surat District will show how flimsy the accusation is:

"A majority of villages on our side are so firmly in the clutches of the sowcar that 95 per cent of the tenants have to give away the whole produce of rice, jowari, pulses and cotton to him. Tenants are required to thrash their rice, jowari and pulses in the sowcar's farm. From the produce the sowcar first deducts the value of his advances and usurious interest thereon, leaving hardly one fourth of the produce for the tenant. The tenant should consider himself fortunate if he gets 1/8th share in the produce of the pulses. As regards cotton the whole produce is taken away by the sowcar in lieu of his old claims. If the tenant has grown wheat, he is not allowed to keep even a grain of it. 'Surely the beggar of a tenant does not need wheat' is an expression which you may often hear from the creditor's mouth.

"And as if this was not enough the tenant is called a thief if he eats some green jowari or some green beans while he is watching the fields. The sowcar on the contrary might legitimately take a cart-load of friends and relatives on a picnic in the fields and use any amount of green jowari or take away any amount of green beans! But then he is rich and the tenant is poor and that makes all the difference!

"As a matter of fact this tenancy legislation is likely to benefit more the sowcar than the tenant. The protection given to him will create for him permanent interest in the land and will induce him to make improvements therein as also to work with greater zeal. As a consequence the produce will be doubled or at least increased by more than one half. Thus even with the one third share, the sowcar will be getting more than what he used to get as his half share. Increase in national wealth will be a further advantage. Yet the sowcars have been agitating against this legislation!"

Let us also consider the hali system prevailing in the Surat District. The halis (agricultural labourers) have been reduced to the condition of serfs and are so much degenerated under this unjust and crushing system that they have reached the stage of an almost sub-human species. Their labour output has gone so low that it is no longer economically advantageous to the employers. Yet the latter are so much accustomed to this system that when attempts are made to improve the lot of these halis, local Congressmen who happen to be owners are enraged and make bitter complaints against our own workers. When such is the mentality of persons calling themselves Congressmen both 'active' and general, if a very large part of Congress workers remain complacent and discourage or run down those few from amongst us who take up this work, is it surprising that these suppressed people should eagerly listen to the counsel of the Kisan Sabha and other workers who believe disturbances and violence to be the sine qua non of any revolution?

The Congress has always claimed to stand for the poor, the down-trodden and the exploited. The Constituent Assembly has also put its seal on this objective. But we the Congress workers have not the courage to displease the exploiters, black marketeers or such other traitors to society, whose sordid interests are surely to be affected if we carry on our just and necessary activities of helping the poor on right Congress lines. If the poor and toiling people who have been either fully or partly awakened to their grievances fall a prey into the hands of mischievous agitators, it would be due to our default and we shall have no cause to complain. Even Churchill who led his country so ably during the war was almost unceremoniously thrown out when he began to resist the new spirit and used his advocacy to promote or maintain the interests of the exploiting classes. Even so, we calling ourselves Congressmen, if we begin to play the role of the Conservatives, we shall lose our prestige and our hold on the people.

NARHARI PARIKH

(Translated from the original in Gujarati)

SUGGESTIONS FOR A COMPREHENSIVE SCHEME OF COW-BREEDING

Eleventh February is the death anniversary of Sheth Shri Jamnalalji. It reminds us of his single-minded devotion to the service of the cow. The memory of that devotion awakens us to our sense of duty towards the cow. Five years have already passed in mere wishing. Others have had their five years' plans and have executed them, thereby changing the face of their countries. We are not in a position to show to our credit any substantial work during these five years. But during these years we have fought a great battle for Swaraj and that has won for us some political power which we can utilize for preparing and executing a country-wide programme of cow-service. Ours is not a small achievement and it compensates for the want of progress in cow-service. But what about the coming five years? We must prepare a plan and gird up our loins to put it into execution.

Even during the period of turmoil the Go-Seva Sangh has put in some substantial work though in a very limited sphere. The quantity of achievement is small, but it is very valuable. It can give some guidance to the country in preparing a plan for the future. The small experiments in Sevagram and the Gopuri goshala have demonstrated that we can improve both the milk strain and the draught strain of our local cows. From the point of view of cow-service it is essential that we should make improvements in the local breeds. This has been done by these institutions without any fuss and without spending large sums of money. Of course there is much yet to be done and we are far from reaching our goal. But what has been achieved is doubtless noteworthy.

With Congress Ministries in the Provinces our responsibility for improving the condition of our cows and bullocks increases immensely. It is necessary that we should definitely chalk out the lines on which the work should now proceed. The necessity of supplying good and sufficient milk to the cities at once comes to our notice. I offer some suggestions in this respect as well as in respect of cow-breeding in general.

1. As soon as the question of milk-supply is considered, we start with the idea of importing cows giving plenty of milk. In my opinion this is not necessary. We should select for our work local breeds as far as possible. A little reflection will help to make my point clear. Our purpose cannot be served by ignoring local breeds. We cannot betray the agriculturists. It is essential that we should show them a way to improve the condition of the cows that they have. It will be harmful to neglect these animals in our enthusiasm to supply milk to the cities.

2. It will be wrong to concentrate on the milk yielding quality of the cow and neglect its draught-strain. To have good bullocks for agriculture is one of the chief aims of breeding. To get good milk is another. Both these aims should well be kept in mind. We will not be able to save the cow if we concentrate only on the milk strain. And the cow will not be economic if we totally neglect the milk giving quality and concentrate only on getting good sturdy bullocks. We have to make the cow serve the dual purpose. The cow should give us good bullocks useful for agriculture and also a good supply of milk. Only those countries, where agriculture does not depend upon bullocks and where calves form an item of food, can afford to say that we care only for more milk, we do not mind if we do not get sturdy bullocks. In India only that cow has a future which is able to give us a fairly good supply of milk as well as fairly sturdy male animals.

3. It is certainly no duty of the villages to supply milk to the cities. The village people should themselves drink plenty of milk and may sell only the surplus. This aim can be achieved only if milk in villages is so abundant that the villages find it within their means to drink plenty of it.

4. Agriculture, cow-breeding, oil-pressing by the bullock-ghani, tanning hides, and preparing good manures; all these make one single unit and must go together. Agriculturists and their children will get sufficient milk only if all these industries are carried on together. In any scheme of cow-protection all these should be carried on simultaneously.

5. Cow-breeding cannot be separated from other village industries. If arrangement cannot be made to engage the agriculturist in essential industries in his own home, he will have to depend upon outside markets for his essential requirements and would be in need of cash to buy them. So long as this state of things continues, he will always have to sell his milk and milk products for cash.

6. The villagers need not purchase bullocks from outside. It should be possible to breed fine bullocks in every village. For this Government will have to provide proper facilities such as stud bulls. This should be considered as of primary importance.

These are the minimum conditions that I suggest for cow-breeding. I have not gone into details. In preparing any plan for cow-breeding, if these suggestions are kept in mind it will do good to the country. But if we begin our work on wrong lines no good will come out and our labour and money will be wasted.

In preparing a comprehensive scheme these points have therefore to be borne in mind.

Pavnar 3-2-'47

VINOBA

(Translated from the original in Hindustani)

ECONOMICS OF KHADDAR

(Second Revised Edition)

By

Richard B. Gregg

Price Rs. 2, Postage As. 6

Available at:

Navajivan Karyalaya, — P. B. 105, Kalupur, Ahmedabad; — 130 Princess Street, Bombay 2; — 299 Sadashiv Peth, Poona 2; — Kanpith Bazar, Surat; — Lakhajiraj Road, Rajkot; — 641/11 Kucha Mahajani, Chandni Chowk, Delhi; — Bright View Building, Royal Park, McLeod Road, Lahore.

CINEMAS

Thus writes Shrimati Rameshwari Nehru :

I beg to add a word in support of the appeal, made by a correspondent for the restraint over the modern talkies by our National Governments, published in the Harijan of 5th January.

I am not a frequent visitor of cinema pictures but the little I have seen of them has convinced me that whatever she has said, about the evil effects of these pictures on the morals of young men and women, is perfectly true.

The cinema habit is fast growing and the real danger lies in the fact that it is penetrating the villages. These pictures are taking the place of the healthy entertainments of former days. Recital of kathas and playing of rashilas and other semi-religious salutary entertainments, which built up the moral calibre of the people, are getting out of vogue. Instead, cinemas are becoming more and more popular every day. The country, therefore, stands in great moral danger which we should make all possible efforts to combat. Using Shri Mashruwala's simile I would say that these pictures are big boulders on the path of the Nation's moral progress and the strength of the mighty elephants is certainly needed for their removal. It is by no means a trifling matter which can be left to the people to deal with as they choose. The danger springs from the fact that the production of cinema pictures lies in the hands of money-making men who, with a few exceptions, run the industry with the profit motive. Thus an innocent instrument, which science has placed in our hands, is vitiated. With a little control by the Government it can become the best means for the educational and cultural advancement of the people.

The cinema industry is one of the most prosperous industries in India today and as is the case with all industrial mass production, cheapest articles, which bring highest return are produced. It happens that in this case the largest audiences are drawn to sensational pictures which have a sex appeal. Thus it is that private individuals, for personal profit, spoil the taste of the public. The demand does not precede the supply; it is the supply which creates the demand.

There is a great deal of talk about Nationalization these days. In my opinion nationalization of the cinema industry is needed more than anything else. In any case, strict control by the Government is essential. Control is already exercised and all provinces have Cinema Censor Boards.

I myself was a member of the Punjab Provincial Censor Board some time ago. It was a foreign Government then. Censor was exercised from the point of view of that Government. All reference to the movement for the liberation of the country or to its national leaders was sedition and had to be expunged. The moral and cultural level of the pictures was of no concern to the Board. No standards were observed for the maintenance of these. I had to resign from the Board because I could not reconcile myself to this method of censoring. But now things are different. We have our own Governments. There is no reason why they should be apathetic about it. I strongly feel that all Provincial Governments should take up the matter and exercise a very strict control on pictures released for public view. Particularly, the education departments should take a lead in the matter.

I have also received other similar communications rebuking me, gently or severely, for not fully stressing the duty of the National Governments to take action in the matter complained of. As the majority of the new correspondents refer only to the cinemas, I have omitted in this article the other evil, though the same could be said with regard to it also. The original correspondent was from Central India. Those who have supported her represent the Punjab, Gujarat, C. P. and Madras. It shows that the dissatisfaction regarding the movies is shared, by a thoughtful section of the people, all over India.

In my article I had by no means absolved governments from their duty in the matter. Acting on the maxim, "a word to the wise is enough", I contented myself by saying that there was much truth in what the correspondents said and that the popular governments should take note of it. As I write this I read in a local newspaper a report that the Bombay Government has already taken some action in the matter and contemplates some further legislation for making the cinema shows more educative in the right direction and improving their moral quality. I hope other governments will also take, if they have not already done so, steps in the same direction.

But having said this, I wish to re-emphasize the duty of the public in the matter. More can and should be done by the moulders of public opinion than they do, or expect governments to do, in respect of entertainments and habit-forming indulgences and if they do not discharge their part of the duty, even at the risk of becoming unpopular with the entertainers and entertainment-seekers, they must not expect the government ploughs to furrow sufficiently deep.

I may further develop this subject at some other time if I have to continue this office long.

Sabarmati, 22-1-'47

K. G. MASHRUWALA

CONTENTS	PAGE
WHERE IS THE OBSTRUCTION?... VINOBA	21
ONE MORE FEATHER IN THE CAP	...
THE PROPHET'S CONVENTION FOR ALL TIME	23
WANTED CORN, NOT CURRENCY	VINOBA 24
GANDHIJI ON TRUSTEESHIP	25
SUPPRESSED CLASSES AND CONGRESS WORKERS	... NARHARI PARIKH 25
SUGGESTIONS FOR A COMPREHENSIVE SCHEME OF COW-BREEDING	... VINOBA 27
CINEMAS	... K. G. MASHRUWALA 28
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI	29
INSTALMENT-XIII	32A
INDEX - VOL. IX (1942)
NOTES :
ORISSA'S SUICIDE	... J. C. K. 23
A SHARE IN THE BOOTY	... J. C. K. 23

HARIJAN

Pages 16

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. XI, No. 4

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1947

TWO ANNAS

BASIC EDUCATION

[We have received a copy of the report of seven years of the work of the Hindustani Talimi Sangh in Basic Education as an account of an experiment in a scheme aiming at revolutionizing our whole educational system. The report is very important and needs perusal by all interested in Education. Due to want of space we are not able to reproduce the whole of the report in these columns, but two important and instructive extracts are given below.]

English and Hindi copies of the report can be had from the Hindustani Talimi Sangh, Sevagram (Wardha C.P.) for a price of annas eight each. ED.]

1

STANDARD OF ATTAINMENT

The most important point for assessment will be the development of children—physical, intellectual and spiritual—as a result of the seven years of basic education. The pupils in the basic school at Sevagram and Champaran will complete seven years in December, 1946 and their development has been assessed.

The standard of attainment at the end of the seven years of basic education was laid down as that of Matriculation minus English. The question is, therefore, often asked whether the pupils who have completed the seven years of basic education have attained the Matriculation standard.

Now, it is necessary to define the "Matriculation standard". According to current terminology the pupil has to obtain a certain percentage of marks in five academic subjects in order to pass the Matriculation Examination. Some subjects are compulsory and some are optional. The subjects and standards prescribed slightly vary from university to university. The objective of the High School Course which goes up to the Matriculation Examination is to make the pupil obtain a certain percentage of marks in the prescribed subjects and gaining entrance to University Education. The success or failure of a pupil is determined by the percentage of marks obtained in one written examination which is held annually.

In the basic education course the craft forms the medium of education. Pupils gain knowledge of various subjects taught in correlation to the basic craft as occasion arises. The syllabus is there for guidance but not to be strictly adhered to. The pupil learns through observation and experience and not merely through oral instruction. There are no formal examinations for promotions from grade to grade. It is the quality of the work done, the record kept by the pupils and teachers, of the daily work, regular attendance and the opinion of the teacher that decide the promotions.

The objective of the basic education course of eight years including the pre-basic class is the training of a citizen of a new social order with the following qualifications:

1. A harmoniously developed body—healthy and agile—capable of doing hard physical work.
2. Clear understanding of the ideology of the new co-operative social order and the place of cottage industries in rural economy.
3. Ability to earn if necessary from the basic craft, sufficient for his own balanced diet and clothing.
4. Ability to produce cloth from raw cotton.
5. Ability to grow vegetables sufficient for his own consumption.
6. Ability to cook a meal and skill and knowledge in all allied processes in connection with the storing, cooking and serving of food for a family or community, including budgeting and maintaining of kitchen accounts.
7. Knowledge of the elements of dietetics and fundamental rules of health.
8. Knowledge of the fundamental rules of village sanitation and personal hygiene.
9. Knowledge of first aid, treatment and nursing of common ailments.
10. Knowledge of the principles of co-operation in running co-operative stores and keeping of accounts.
11. Ability to speak clearly and fluently at public meetings.
12. Ability to express ideas clearly in writing and prepare reports.
13. Appreciation of literature in the mother-tongue and a working knowledge of Hindustani.
14. Ability to read and write simple Hindustani in both the scripts.
15. Ability to sing in chorus, devotional and national songs.
16. Appreciation of paintings and pictures and ability to draw and paint.
17. Ability to ride a bicycle, and a horse and drive a cart.
18. Ability to help in organizing festivals in school and village.
19. Elementary knowledge of the world economic, social and political problems as gained through the study of current events reported in newspapers.
20. Elementary knowledge of the mechanical principles in the different equipment and processes of craft work.
21. Acquaintance with the fundamental scientific principles in growing food and cotton, in cooking and allied processes, in the processes of the basic craft and in the maintenance of personal health and the health of the community and village sanitation.
22. Knowledge of the geography of India and the world through food and clothing.
23. Ability to use newspapers and journals intelligently.

24. Knowledge of the history and development of the fight for freedom in India.

25. Respect for the different religions in India and desire for communal unity.

26. Freedom from caste restrictions and prejudices.

27. Love for one's own village and rural area. Readiness to stay and work in villages. Village-mindedness.

PLANNING WITH VILLAGE BIAS

III

6. TRAINING IN AGRICULTURE

The training of students in our agricultural schools and colleges may be largely supplemented by a system of posting stipendary apprentices on well-known farms or gardens owned by experienced and enterprising agriculturists. A good number of first rank farmers, fruit-growers and garden-owners from all over the province may be invited by Government to take in and train a fixed number of apprentices every year. These apprentices should have certain educational qualifications and also have already a year's previous grounding at a Government agricultural school or farm. They should then be selected to complete their training on these private farms as post-school study apprentices, with one or two years' course of practical working: a year for practical study of local conditions, soil, monsoon, cropping and manuring schemes, labour, etc., another for cost-accounting, farm management, marketing, co-operative working and for a special training in any particular branch of horticulture etc.

Such training farms should have Government recognition and hold Government credentials (which may be renewed every year or so) to grant a diploma to those trained on the farms at the end of their training period, stating the general qualifications and proficiency of the holder and also the particular branch of agriculture he may have specialized in. And these diplomas should be on a par with those of Government institutes or training establishments. Even post-graduate training in agricultural chemistry and other branches of research or highly specialized and intensive branches of agriculture or horticulture may be thought of on this basis.

Such a course of planning may train a thousand or more students annually with first rate practical training which would in no way be inferior to that imparted by Government, directly and yet would be much cheaper inasmuch as it would save the Government considerable expenditure over lands, buildings, teaching staff and establishments. The farm-owners too would gain inasmuch as they would get a number of intelligent and willing farm hands as overseers, assistants etc., to help them at negligible cost besides gaining in status and position in their own districts and the province.

7. POULTRY FARMING

This is an excellent village and farm-house industry. One great handicap in its pursuit for the villager is the havoc played by seasonal epidemics and poultry diseases. The villager is at his wit's end against it and often feels utterly ruined under the losses entailed. His own insanitary living and habits contribute not a little to his misfortune. He should therefore be supplied with detailed instructions in taking proper care of his stocks and in combating disease. Social workers can help a good deal the Government propaganda in this direction.

8. FISHING

This industry is very important in view of India's 3000 miles of coast line and of the low and ill-balanced diet of our countrymen and in the midst of the terrible food deficiency of the present times. But as this industry is already receiving due attention by competent official and non-official persons, I do not dilate upon it here.

9. PALM JUICE

In the Bombay Province millions of date, cocoanut and palm trees abound, food contents of whose juice are beyond dispute. Other uses (mainly local) of their by-products are innumerable and well-known. Toddy-juice should not be allowed to be confused with liquor in the popular imagination. While liquor is mainly an intoxicant, toddy-juice is rich, valuable and yet the cheapest food for millions of humble village folk if only its fermenting process could be successfully prevented and if it is not carried away to the towns and cities like milk produced in the Kaira district. Effective protection and encouragement should be given by the State towards local consumption to the elimination of the trading interests and middlemen.

As against its use as an alcoholic drink it should not be difficult for Government institutes like Half-keine at Bombay, or the one at Coonoor to find out a drug (as harmless to human health as the colours proposed for use in order to distinguish vegetable ghee) which would prevent all process of fermentation in toddy-juice for 24 or 36 hours. The use of the drug should then be made compulsory by law for all toddy-tappers.

10. BEE-KEEPING

This is one of the finest food-yielding and remunerative industries for gardeners and for farmers who live in the neighbourhood of forests. The forest-dwellers gather wild honey in many parts of our country mainly for selling it in towns, but there is considerable adulteration and deceit. Besides, their method of gathering honey are primitive and revolting. It involves wholesale killing of the bees. The modern method of bee-rearing and apiaries alone is worthy of encouragement and vastly more profitable to the villager. Excellent cooperative societies of bee-keepers on such lines have been formed during recent years in the North Kanara district and are flourishing. Every effort should be made to protect and encourage this industry and spread it in other parts of the province such as the garden areas of Khandesh, Nasik, Poona and Gujarat.

11. SALT, GRASS AND FIRE-WOOD

These should be made free as gifts of nature to the humblest villager even as air and water. All monopolies and all private mass production on trade-basis in these should be abolished. The villager should be allowed to help himself and supplement his income by selling these headloads in his own neighbourhood as far as he can go on foot and return home by the evening.

Vapi

SWAMI ANAND

(To be continued)

MAP

[Map showing part of the Noakhali District of East Bengal where Gandhiji is walking on foot from village to village carrying his message of love and peace. This map shows the villages of the first part of the tour which was completed on the 4th February at Sadhurkhil as also the villages of the second part which ends on the 25th of February.

We are indebted to the Hindusthan Standard of Calcutta for this excellent map.]

Gandhiji is visiting the villages named serially and the date of his stay in the village stated against it.
Srinagar	5th February;	Char Dukhia 19th;
Dharampur	6th;	Char Larua 20th;
Prasadpur	7th;	Kamalapur 21st;
Nandigram	8th;	Char Krishnapur 22nd;
Vijonagar	9th and 10th;	Char Soladi 23rd;
Hamchadi	11th;	Haim Char 24th and 25th.

HARIJAN

February 23

1947

PREPOSTEROUS CLAIMS

We had suggested the appointment of an impartial tribunal to go into the question of settling the so-called 'Public Debts' and Sterling Credits. The need for such a tribunal is emphasized by very many irresponsible claims that are put forward by acknowledged leaders in Great Britain. The war time Premier, Mr. Churchill, himself in the House of Commons stated "that the Governor-General of India in the time of the late Government was notified that Britain reserved her full right to present a counter claim on account of effective defence of India by all means — land, sea, air and diplomacy — by which the freedom of India from foreign invasion was secured." This claim itself raises many questions which may have to be decided judicially. How did Japan come to invade India? The Japanese or the Germans had no enemies in India other than the British. Hence it is that all direct and indirect results of the war must be borne by Great Britain. If this is so, India would be entitled to damages for the British occupation of the country, for the reckless use of the forests during the time of the war and the consequent famines that have been visiting our land annually. Because of the war, even the reserves for seeds had been drained out of the country and we are now drifting on with occasional catch crops. Then again the unprecedented inflation in the country has upset the economic order beyond the country's capacity to recover with the result that the people are suffering from great distress in necessities. This too is a matter on which India can rightly base a claim for damages. Apart from all these material losses India has sustained, without provocation, an irreparable loss of three million lives during the Bengal Famine of 1943. How shall we compute the equivalent of this in terms of money?

As though this were not enough the Times of London has come out with still further fantastic suggestions and threats. It suggests that if the sterling balances were to be demanded, England may resort to an unilateral blocking of such balances with the approval of the United States. May we ask who made the United States judge over us? It pleads inability to pay the capital sum out of the revenue as an adequate reason for adopting such an attitude. Will any court of bankruptcy accept such a plea in the case of an individual without taking into account his assets and liabilities before insolvency is granted? If England wishes to repudiate the credits in a straight forward manner we can understand it; but these preposterous claims and suggestions are unbecoming of a great financial race as the Britishers are.

If such irresponsible claims are to be laid to rest, it can only be done by a judicial, impartial enquiry into the whole question and Mr. Churchill and the Times would then have an opportunity to state their case. We trust no time will be lost in setting up such a judicial enquiry.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

QUESTION BOX

(By M. K. Gandhi)

INTELLECTUAL AND MANUAL WORK

Q. Why should we insist on a Rabindranath or Raman earning his bread by manual labour? Is it not sheer wastage? Why should not brain workers be considered on a par with manual workers, for both of them perform useful social work?

A. Intellectual work is important and has an undoubted place in the scheme of life. But what I insist on is the necessity of physical labour. No man, I claim, ought to be free from that obligation. It will serve to improve even the quality of his intellectual output. I venture to say that in ancient times Brahmins worked with their body as with their mind. But even if they did not, body labour was a proved necessity at the present time. In this connection I would refer to the life of Tolstoy and how he made famous the theory of Bread Labour first propounded in his country by the Russian peasant Bondaref. Dharmapur (Noakhali), 6-2-'47

KEEP A REGULAR DIARY

I would like to draw the attention of village-workers to a defect which has come to my notice. Very few of them keep a regular diary. This is not good. It must become a part of their daily routine.

It must briefly record the work done during the day and the worker's experience, retrospection and introspection, — daily or periodical, — material as well as spiritual. It is not expected to take the shape of an article or literary writing.

Writing is one of the exterior means which promotes thinking. I have seen several workers who do a good deal of hard work and yet make no improvement or progress in it. The reason is that they never do any thinking. Some of them feel that thinking is a pastime for the idle and the unenergetic. Those who work do not need to waste their time on chewing thought. This attitude itself indicates the under-development of the intellect which cannot even understand the necessity of thinking.

It was the result of thinking that first prompted the worker to take to village service. But after having taken to it and started it according to his then light, he gave up thinking further for himself. The result was that he ceased to make progress. One cannot expand or improve one's business on old capital alone. So also in other spheres of work. As Buddha has said, "The house must be cleaned and arranged every day; so also the mind." You must think anew and study new things everyday.

Gandhiji is seen initiating new schemes and methods everyday. He has always something fresh to say on the various problems. It is so, because he thinks, takes a retrospect and makes introspection everyday. But some of the workers do not read even Gandhiji's writings. This is very regrettable.

Every worker who wants to serve intelligently and progressively must regularly set apart some time both for study and thinking for himself. For the latter, keeping a regular diary is a helpful means. It will quickly show excellent results.

Pavnar

VINOBA

(Adapted from the original in Marathi)

GANDHIJI'S WALKING TOUR DIARY

27-1-'47

In a written speech at Palla, on Monday the 27th January which was his day of silence, Gandhiji first expressed his satisfaction at having been accommodated in the house of a weaver friend. He then said that the cottages of Bengal had become dearer to him than the prison-like solid walls of palaces. A house full of love such as this one was superior to a palace where love did not reign.

The hut in which he had been accommodated for the day was full of light and air and nature's abundance was showered on the country all around. What however made him sad in such a fair and potentially rich country was that the Hindus and the Musalmans should have brought themselves into hostile relation with one another. Should differences in religion, he asked, be sufficient to overshadow our common humanity? He prayed that these fundamental commonsenses reassert themselves so that all contrary forces might be overpowered in the end.

In his pilgrimage, continued Gandhiji, he had come across homes which lay ruined and desolate, bazaars and schools which lay empty; and he had also found members of the two communities in a stage of non-co-operation with one another. Whom did all this profit, the Hindu or the Muslim? Agriculture had not been properly attended to and the spectre of famine lay waiting in the offing; the villages were dirty, the water unclean; and only a new and extensive scheme of education could raise the people from their slumber of ages. He prayed that God might give both the Hindus and the Musalmans intelligence and strength enough to grapple with these problems. He thought that if they succeeded in their attempt to solve these common problems without troubling the government, it would go a long way to overpower the forces of disruption evident today.

28-1-'47

Gandhiji referred in his prayer speech to the pleasurable fact, as he called it, that he was taken this morning during his walk to a Hindu badi and two Muslim badis. Of these he had no previous knowledge but he was solicitous for friendship of the heart and when he saw friendly eyes he readily went to the badis. They were anxious for him to take something. He said that was not his time; but they could send the fruit with him and he would take it with pleasure. His grand-daughter, who was with him, went to the zanana. The womenfolk met her with affection and an old lady embraced her when she came to know who she was. Then in one badi, they asked her to take the roti and fish they were cooking. The poor girl said she could not take fish but she could certainly take the chapati, but wanted to be excused as it was too early for her. But the womenfolk suspected pollution. When she realized the suspicion, she readily took a morsel much to the relief of the ladies. For him or his there was no caste and no restriction as to interdining. But he would ask his Muslim friends to be tolerant of Hindus who believed in pollution. He admitted that it was wrong. But after all real affection was not to be tested through interdining etc. The error was bound to go in time. Much headway had already been made. Meanwhile wherever they saw real friendship, there should be appreciation. Thus and thus only would they come together and live as perfect friends. In this connection he instanced an event he had noticed on the 26th January. The pressmen with him had arranged a simple meal between the Hindus, the Muslims and others. The Muslims did not come but the poor man whose hut they were occupying said that they should not press him to join the inter-dinner. For he argued that the event might land him into trouble. When they were gone, he might be invited to embrace Islam. The speaker saw the force of the fear and advised the pressmen not to have this dinner on his precincts.

Gandhiji then continued that he would strive for the day when the Hindus and the Musalmans would be able to shed their respective weaknesses and come closer to one another in heart. He did not know when the consummation would take place but he was prepared to lay down his life for the purpose, if need be. He finally asked the audience to join him in his prayer to God that the day might come soon.

29-1-'47

Addressing the prayer meeting Gandhiji at the outset dealt with a question that was raised by some Muslim friends. Did he want Muslims to attend his prayer meetings? The reply was that he wanted neither the Muslims nor the Hindus to attend the prayer meetings. If the questioner meant to ask whether he would like the Muslims to attend such meetings he had no hesitation in saying that he would certainly like them to attend. What was more, numerous Muslims had attended his prayer meetings which had gone on for years. The next question was whether he, the speaker, did not consider wrong for him, a non-Muslim, to recite anything from the Quran or to couple Rama and Krishna with Rahim and Karim. They said it offended Muslim ears. The speaker replied that the objection gave him a painful surprise. He thought that the objection betrayed narrowness of mind. They should know that he had introduced the recital from the Quran through Bibi Raihana Tyebjee, a devoted Muslim with a religious mind. She had no political motive behind the proposal. He was no avātar-man as was suggested. He claimed to be a man of God humbler than the humblest man or woman. His object ever was to make Muslims better Muslims, Hindus better Hindus, Christians better Christians, Parsis better Parsis. He never invited anybody to change his or her religion. He had thought, therefore, that the questioners would be glad to find that his religion was so expansive as to include readings from the religious scriptures of the world.

The next thing was that some friends had said that all prosecutions, initiated by the Hindus against the Muslim offenders, interfered with the progress of the peace mission between the two. It surprised him. What had peace between gentlemen to do with the prosecution of criminals

He could understand the objection if it meant that false prosecutions should be withdrawn. He would be whole-heartedly with the objectors. He went further and said that all such persons should be brought to book as perjurers. He said also that the proper course to avoid court procedure was for the guilty persons in all humility to make an open confession of their guilt and stand the judgement of the public. He would gladly help any such movement.

The third thing was that young men who had gone to Calcutta and other places in search of a career were bound to give a portion of their time to the villages. The easiest thing for them to do would be to meet among themselves and make an arrangement by which say half of them would take leave from office and serve for a stipulated number of months, at the end of which their place would be taken by the next batch. If they had a will there would surely be some way also for serving the cause of the villagers. Those who did not find it possible to offer personal service might help by cash.

Gandhiji ended by citing the example of England, Russia and other countries where every family had sent as many able-bodied men and women as possible for the defence of their country. This was how unity of heart was actually achieved in the world and he hoped that we in our country would be able to rise above small selfish considerations and create that unity without which life itself would not be worth living.

30-1-'47

Gandhiji began by apologizing for the fifteen minutes' delay. It was due to his being occupied with Zaman Saheb and Yusuf Saheb. These officers took him to a model cottage they had had erected. It was a good house but in his opinion unfit for human habitation in the Indian climate. Such a house could well be described as a box. The inmates would be baked as in an oven and they would be suffocated when they closed their doors and windows as had become their habit. He, therefore, suggested comfortable cottages of bamboo, straw and thatch. Such cottages will be airy, cool and artistic in the Indian setting, specially in the midst of stately palms of cocoanut and supari.

He was also pleased when these officers informed him that the refugees had commenced to return from the places where they had taken refuge. He hoped that this return would continue with unabated zeal. He was of opinion that the people should dismiss all fear from their minds and feel safe in the midst of their own countrymen, whether Hindu or Muslim. When they learnt to fear their Maker alone they would cease to fear their fellows. They would find that there were no people to frighten them if they were not afraid themselves. This had been his uniform experience in the course of the last sixty years of his life.

The third question taken up by him was in connection with some fishermen who had met him on the previous evening. They had complained that in this country where fishing was confined to privately owned ponds for the major part of the year, it was impossible for them to live if they were boycotted by the majority community. Gandhiji expressed his surprise at this state of affairs and suggested that unless the Hindus and Muslims could rise above their present political differences and reasserted their common humanity and common brotherhood, life would become an impossibility where nature had designed otherwise. He hoped, therefore, that the alleged conditions would be corrected by the joint efforts of the people concerned and real peace restored in the countryside.

31-1-'47

In the course of his prayer meeting speech at the outset Gandhiji congratulated the audience, which was exceptionally large, on the perfect quiet they observed throughout the prayer. He then referred to two communications he had received from Muslim writers who consoled him against his critics who questioned his right to speak about the purdah or other things pertaining to Islam. The writers held by quoting from the Quran that it was broad-based and was exceptionally tolerant. It welcomed criticism and invited the world to study the Quran. One of them also held that no group or nation had remained without a prophet or teacher. He mentioned these communications to show that all Muslims did not hold what he considered to be intolerant views. He hoped too that the audience which contained a large number of Muslims would appreciate the testimony of the two writers who did not appear to be biased writers.

The speaker then dealt with the following question addressed to him by some of the workers.

The Muslims were boycotting Hindu artisans and craftsmen and were taking to occupations like fishing, fir trade, pan-cultivation etc. Workers who desired to bring about peace between the two communities did not know what to do under the circumstances.

Gandhiji said he hoped that the news was exaggerated and that the boycott was confined to the fewest Muslims possible. He thought that it could not be sustained. The logical result was that any such move would be a compulsory exodus of the Hindus from the Muslim majority provinces, a result he had not heard a single leader encourage or contemplate. He invited his informants to bring the news to the notice of the authorities, not with a view to having the movers punished but with a view to having an authoritative pronouncement from them. He further advised the audience to pray for wisdom to both the communities.

The second question was: There is a movement for reducing the share of the owner from half to one-third of the agricultural produce. What is your opinion about this?

The speaker welcomed the move for the reduction of the landlord's share from half to one-third. He thought the move was substantial. The land belonged to the Lord of us all and therefore to the worker on it. But till that ideal state of things came about, the movement towards the reduction of the landlord's portion was in the right direction.

But he warned the movers against the use of compulsion or violence. He could have no part or share in violence. It was a reform to be brought about only by the cultivation of healthy public opinion. The reformers must have patience. He believed implicitly in the aphorism: 'As the end so the means.' In his opinion it was pernicious to hold that so long as the end was good any means, however violent or unjust, were justified. Many movements had come to grief by reliance on doubtful means.

1-2-'47

This meeting eclipsed all the previous ones in point of numbers of both the Muslims and the Hindus. Consequently there was much noise when Gandhiji came to the meeting. He drew the attention of the audience to the fact that the universal law applicable to all meetings was that the visitors should be perfectly still and observe silence no matter how vast the audience was.

Yesterday evening a Maulvi wanted to speak for a short time. The speaker had sensed what he wanted to speak. He therefore contrary to wont allowed him to speak for the five minutes which he wanted by the watch. The Maulvi Saheb took no more than three minutes but said what he wanted to say. He resented Gandhiji's remark on the purdah system in vogue in Bengal. He had no right to speak on the Islamic Law. Gandhiji thought this was a narrow view of religion. He claimed the right to study and interpret the message of Islam. The Maulvi Saheb further resented coupling of the name of Rama, a mere young King with Rahim, name of God, similarly of Krishna with Karim. Gandhiji said this was a narrow view of Islam. Islam was not a creed to be preserved in a box. It was open to mankind to examine it and accept or reject its tenets. He hoped that this narrow view was not shared by the Muslims of Bengal or rather India.

In this connection Gandhiji wanted to draw the attention of the audience to the work Dr. Sushila Nayyar was doing in Changirgaon. She wanted to go to Sevagram to attend to the hospital for whose management she was responsible, but her Muslim patients would not let her go till they were restored to health. She had also mentioned that in the village, partakers of the loot of October last were of their own accord bringing back some of the looted property. He was of opinion that this was a happy omen. If the infection spread, the courts would have no work to do so far as public loot was concerned. He for one would ask Government to waive the right of prosecution if the looted property was returned. But he said the return must be sincere and full, whether by the guilty one or the public, and not a mere token to avoid prosecution. What he aimed at was a change of heart and not a truce superimposed by the military or the police. A popular ministry could not impose its will on the people.

Gandhiji then answered the following question:

You have asked rich men to be trustees. Is it implied that they should give up private ownership in their property and create out of it a trust valid in the eyes of the law and managed democratically? How will the successor of the present incumbent be determined on his demise?

In answer Gandhiji said that he adhered to the position taken by him years ago that everything belonged to God and was from God. Therefore it was for His people as a whole, not for a particular individual. When an individual had more than his proportionate portion he became a trustee of that portion for God's people.

God who was all-powerful, had no need to store. He created from day to day; hence men also should in theory live from day to day and not stock things. If this truth was imbibed by the people generally, it would become legalized and trusteeship would become a legalized institution. He wished it became a gift from India to the world. Then there would be no exploitation and no reserves as in Australia and other countries for White men and their posterity. In these distinctions lay the seed of a war more virulent than the last two. As to the successor, the trustee in office would have the right to nominate his successor subject to legal sanction.

3-2-'47

Gandhiji referred with hesitation to the resolution passed by the Muslim League on the Constituent Assembly. It considered the Congress resolution to be dishonest and did not mean what it said. It was also said that the elections and other dealings of the Assembly were illegal. The speaker pleaded that there should be no imputation of dishonesty by one party to the other. It was not good for the great organizations which they both were. There was no reason why they should regard them as enemies, one of the other. That practice would not lead them to independence. If the elections and proceedings were illegal their legality should be challenged in a court of law. Otherwise, the charge had no meaning. If they did not wish to recognize the courts as he did in 1920 and later, then the talk of illegality should cease. He would plead with the League that they should go into the Assembly and state their case and influence the proceedings. But if they did not, he would advise them to test the sincerity of the Assembly and see how it dealt with the Muslim problem. It was due to themselves and the rest of the country unless they wanted to rely upon the law of the sword which he was sure they did not wish to do. Then the League had said that the Assembly represented only the Casta Hindus. Surely there were in the Assembly the Scheduled Classes, the Christians, the Parsis, the Anglo-Indians and all those who considered themselves sons of India. Then Doctor Ambedkar was good enough to attend the Assembly, not to mention the other large number of the Scheduled Classes. The Sikhs too were still there. It was open to the League to put up their fight within the Assembly.

As to the British Government who, as the League contended, should dismiss the Assembly, he entertained the hope, though he admitted it was somewhat shaken, that they would honestly carry to the end the voluntary Document. He submitted that the British Government was bound to act according to the State Paper even if a few Provinces chose to establish their independence in accordance with the Paper. He hoped that the British would not forfeit all credit for honest dealing with India.

Gandhiji concluded by saying that whilst he felt obliged to refer to League politics, he warned the audience against inferring that the Hindus and the Muslims were to regard one another as enemies. The League has made no such announcement. Let the political quarrel be confined to the politicians at the top. It would be a disaster if the quarrel permeated in the villages. The way to Indian independence lay not through the sword but through mutual friendship and adjustment. He was in Noakhali to show what real Pakistan could mean. Bengal was the one province in India where it could be demonstrated. Bengal had produced talented Hindus and talented Muslims. Bengal had contributed largely to the national struggle. It was in the fitness of things that Bengal should now show how the Muslims and the Hindus could live together as friends and brothers. Then there would be no reason for Bengal to remain a deficit province. It ought to be a province of plenty.

4-2-'47

The prayer meeting was held by special invitation in the badi of Salimulla Saheb who is reported to be the chief Muslim in Sadhurkhal. He had given his assurance that there would be no objection to the Ramadhun being recited with the clapping of hands.

At the time of Gandhiji's speech some Muslim friends wished to read an address in Bengali which Gandhiji said might be read if it pleased the friends. It referred to the music before mosques, cow-slaughter etc. Gandhiji said he was not concerned with these questions. They were questions of law. He wanted to capture their hearts and see them welded into one. If that was attained, everything else would right itself. If their hearts were not united, nothing could be right. Their unfortunate lot would then be slavery. He asked them to accept the slavery of the one Omnipotent God no matter by what name they addressed Him. Then they would bend the knee to no man or men. It was ignorance to say that he coupled Rama, a mere man, with God. He had repeatedly made it clear that his Rama was the same as God. His Rama was before, is present now and would be for all time. He was Unborn and Uncreated. Therefore, let them tolerate and respect the different faiths. He was himself an iconoclast but he had equal regard for the so-called idolaters. Those who worshipped idols also worshipped the same God who was everywhere, even in a clod of earth, even in a nail that was pared off. He had Muslim friends whose names were Rahim, Rahman, Karim. Would he therefore join on to the name of God when he addressed them as Rahim, Karim, or Rahman?

Let them beware of the thought that all was well in Noakhali or the neighbouring parts. If the reports he received were at all true, things had not quite settled down. He did not refer to these things or the destruction that had been wrought because he did not wish to excite passion. He did not believe in retaliation. He had lived with Pathans, Badshah Khan, being tired of retaliation which had descended from generation to generation, had learnt the virtue of non-violence. He did not claim perfection for him. He could be angered. But he did claim for his friend the wisdom that dictated to him restraint on one's love of vengeance. He wanted the same thing in Noakhali. Unless they sincerely believed that without real peace between the communities there was neither Pakistan nor Hindustan, slavery was their lot.

He had a visit from four young Muslim friends who deplored the fact that he had not corrected the exaggeration about the number of murders in Noakhali and the adjacent parts. He had not done so because he did not wish to bring out all he had seen. But if it at all mended matters he was free to declare that he had found no evidence to support the figure of a thousand. The figure was certainly much smaller. He was also free to admit that the murders in number and brutalities in Bihar eclipsed those in Noakhali. But that admission must not mean a call for him to go to Bihar. He did not know that he could render any greater service by going to Bihar than from here. He would not be worth anything if without conviction he went there at the bidding of anybody. He would need no prompting, immediately he felt that his place was more in Bihar than in Noakhali. He was where he thought he could render the greatest service to both the communities.

The Most Effective Remedy

Gandhiji holds that our Constructive Programme is the most effective remedy for communal unity and other problems of our country. In a letter written from Kazirkhal (Noakhali District) to Prof. J. C. Kumarappa, Gandhiji says:

"The work I am doing here is the most difficult of all I have hitherto undertaken and I know that those who are working for the country take an effective part in the work here if they do their best in their respective spheres. The village work that has been your lot can contribute probably the most to the fruition of what is being done here. At the same time I know that it is the most uphill work as I find walking from village to village and putting before them sanitation, the spinning wheel, weaving and the craft peculiar to the particular village."

CONTENTS	PAGE
BASIC EDUCATION (I)	33
PLANNING WITH VILLAGE
BIAS — III	34
MAP	35
PREPOSTEROUS CLAIMS	36
QUESTION BOX	36
KEEP A REGULAR DIARY	36
GANDHIJI'S WALKING TOUR DIARY	37
INDEX VOLUME X (1946-7)	40(A)
NOTE:
THE MOST EFFECTIVE REMEDY	40

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. XI, No. 6

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, MARCH 9, 1947

TWO ANNAS

CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAMME

[The following resolutions were passed by the Conference of the Presidents and Secretaries of the Provincial Congress Committees held at Allahabad on 22-24th February last.

These resolutions regarding the Constructive Programme are to be submitted to the Working Committee, and it is expected that the programme, with such modifications as the Working Committee may make, will be placed before the country by the Working Committee for being worked out. —J. C. K.]

1. This Conference draws the attention of the Working Committee to the fact that the A. I. S. A., the A. I. V. I. A. and the Hindustani Talimi Sangh are bodies created by the Congress and have been working along lines laid down by the Congress in their respective fields, and is of opinion that since economic, social and educational programmes on a big scale are being put into effect by the Central and the Provincial Governments, the Working Committee should call upon such members of the Central and the Provincial Governments as owe allegiance to the Congress, to implement the programme laid down by the Congress in this behalf from time to time and while so doing fully utilize the experience of those bodies.

The main object of the Constructive Programme is to stimulate the initiative of the people themselves to organize their political, social, and economic life on co-operative lines and through Panchayats with a view to make them self-reliant and self-sufficient.

Therefore, the primary function of the proposed Constructive Programme Committees should be to develop this initiative. While the Committees may welcome the co-operation of the Governments, they should try to carry out the programme as much as possible through the peoples' own efforts.

2. This Conference requests the Working Committee to appoint a small committee called the Central Constructive Programme Committee and charge it with guiding and advising the Congress organization and the public to carry out the following items, viz. Khadi, Village Industries, Basic Education, Harijan work and Literacy. Each of the members of such committee shall attend to particular items of the programme.

In order to facilitate the work of the Committee this Conference makes the following recommendations:

(a) There should be a permanent secretary in charge of the Constructive Programme Department in the A. I. C. C. office.

(b) There should be a small committee in each province appointed by the Executive of the P. C. C.

to carry on the Constructive Programme in the province with representatives of the Provincial Branches of the A. I. S. A., A. I. V. I. A., and of the Hindustani Talimi Sangh on it. The Committee should be free to co-opt members who would be helpful to the Committee in working out other items.

Each of the general members of such a Provincial Constructive Programme Committee other than the representatives of the Constructive organizations should be in charge of particular items of the programme.

(c) Each P. C. C. should have a Constructive Programme Department in charge of a whole-time secretary who should be appointed by the A. I. C. C. in consultation with the Executive of the P. C. C. His salary, if any, should be paid by the A. I. C. C., all other expenses of such a department and of carrying out the programme being borne by the P. C. C.

(d) The Provincial Constructive Programme Committee should create such agencies as are necessary in the province for implementing the programme.

(e) As regards training of workers in the various fields of the Constructive Programme, it should be done through the A. I. S. A., A. I. V. I. A. and the Talimi Sangh, the cost being borne by the Provincial Committees.

3. The programme and items of work to be taken up should be as follows:

(a) KHADI: The Congress Sub-Committee should restrict itself to the self-sufficiency aspect of Khadi.

The target to be reached by 13-4-'48, that is the last day of the National Week next year, should be enrolment of one lac new self-sufficient spinners as defined by the A. I. S. A., the beginning of the programme being made on 6-4-'47.

*(b) VILLAGE INDUSTRIES: The Congress Sub-Committee should restrict itself to the programme of the production and consumption of food, clothing, and other essentials of life. With that end in view, each P. C. C. should mark out certain small areas (consisting of not more than a lac of population) in its jurisdiction, as an experimental measure for producing sufficient food on the principle of supplying balanced diet to that area. Cattle breeding and Dairying should be given equal prominence in the area.

As regards other village industries, priority should be given to food-processing by hand, especially to gur-making, oil-pressing, paddy-husking, grinding flour, food preservation etc.

* Note: Please refer to Shri J. C. Kumarappa's A Plan for Rural Development for a detailed plan regarding item (b).

All Congress Committees and members of committees are expected to use hand-made things unless they are not available.

(c) Provincial Congress Committees should be advised to organize in each province at least one small compact area with a minimum of 5 Basic Schools and if possible with a teachers' training centre in the area, the work being carried out under the guidance of the Hindustani Talimi Sangh.

(d) Each P. C. C. should take up the spread of literacy and work it out on as wide a scale as possible and keep records of the work done. It should be noted that along with literacy, attempts ought to be made to spread national consciousness among the masses by means of programmes of mass education.

(e) Each P. C. C. should concentrate on securing civic rights and removal of social disabilities in any form in respect of Harijans, Adivasis and other neglected communities, and should carry on an effective campaign for the cultivation of public opinion in support of social equality among other methods by the public declaration in the form of a pledge that they shall treat the members of the above communities on a basis of equality.

(f) KISANS: This would be an important department which would among other things study the numerous problems affecting the peasantry and send necessary directions to the district and lower committees for dealing with the varied problems of the peasantry and organizing Kisans for their political, social and economic well-being.

INFORMATION: The work of the department would grow in importance and volume with time. It will compile reports for the A. I. C. C. with regard to numerous matters, bring out a monthly bulletin which would be more than a bare record of resolutions and official decisions and produce other literature for the use of Congress Committees and field workers. Also each province has its own problems with which our workers should be closely familiar. Brochures should be brought out dealing with these problems. This department would have its counterparts in the lower committees.

CONGRESS SEVA-DAL: The necessity for a widespread volunteer organization is obvious. The volunteers should be part time constructive workers and should be trained for citizenship. There would be need for close thought being given to the various aspects of the work.

MINORITIES: Problems with regard to minorities and backward areas and classes of people are continually facing us. These problems have to be carefully studied and necessary facts collected. The department would consider what practical measures should be taken for meeting concrete complaints and what literature should be brought out in this connection.

LABOUR: The need for handling this grave problem with speed, efficiency and necessary knowledge is imperative. The Congress has laid down its labour policy. The P. C. C.s have now to take effective practical steps.

PARLIAMENTARY CONTACT: Numerous problems that arise in connection with our parliamentary work and its relations to Congress work should be dealt with by a separate department.

In order that the programme of work sketched here is carried out efficiently and in the shortest time possible, it is necessary that our provincial and district committees should set up effective village committees in all the villages of India. It is hoped that in the first year of our reorganization there will be strong and efficient primary Committees in at least 25 per cent of the villages in each province.

This Conference is convinced that if the comprehensive constructive programme is carried out by our Congress Committees with efficient and well-organized offices to serve them, the Congress would grow in strength and power and greatly gain in its capacity to fulfil its great task for the political, social and economic freedom of the people of India and for enabling them to shoulder the difficult responsibilities of self-rule.

Sauce for the Gander

It is easy to see the mote in another's eye and not be bothered with the beam in our own eyes. The Americans are reported to have suggested to Britain that Imperial Preference should be abandoned. Amery, speaking at a Trade Association of which he is president, protests against such a thing happening and shamelessly adds that it would be impossible for British producers to compete in the open market. Is this not a confession of inefficiency? If this is carried to its logical conclusion, seeing that Britain has the controlling voice in Imperial Preference, does it not follow that Britain is trying to weight all the trade of the "Empire Countries" in its favour? Is this fair to India?

The Committee of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment constituted by the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations at its first session in London referring to "restrictive business practices" agreed that such practices "were capable of having harmful effects on production and trade and maintenance in all countries of high levels of income." This being so, India being a country of "low levels of income", it will be beneficial to us and we should go ahead with giving protection to our infant industries, although the international organization referred to above recommended that all possible steps should be taken to prevent restrictive practices, of course, in their own selfish interests.

This is the partisan spirit that pervades the United Nations Councils. How can the suppressed nations expect justice?

J. C. K.

PLANNING WITH VILLAGE BIAS

IV

VILLAGE CRAFTS AND INDUSTRIES

In India's village economy a number of village artisans had an indispensable place. They consisted mainly of the black-smith, the carpenter, the carder, the weaver, the potter, the barber, the oilman, the cowherd, the skin-scanner, the tanner, the shoe-maker, besides those who pursued local industries such as mat and basket making, rope-making, toddy-tapping, etc. The capitalist organizer of industries or his concomitant agent or middleman who dumps a standardized consumer goods, foreign or Indian made, and brings unemployment, idleness and penury on vast populations was unknown.

12. AGRICULTURAL TOOLS AND IMPLEMENTS

The foremost item in the list of village industries to be protected and aided, besides the improvement of live-stock — which is the main source of power and energy in India today — is naturally that of the village blacksmith. Agricultural tools and implements are the sole means of livelihood for the bulk of India's population which is landless agricultural labourers. If the manufacture of these migrates from the village smith's workshop to the factory of an Indian town or to foreign countries like England or America, it will constitute an economic drain far in excess of what used to be drained by way of textiles some time back. It is, therefore, imperative that the manufacture of crow-bars, spades, showels, ploughs, pickaxes, sickles and iron-tyres of bullock cart-wheels etc. in the villages should be immediately protected against their manufacture by the factory, and its standardized output by the village smith encouraged. Factory production of these is fast making inroads on the village. Hence the urgency.

13. HAND SPINNING AND WEAVING

Hand made paper, Palm gur, oil ghanies, etc., have been prominently before the country and the Government for years, thanks to the efforts of Gandhiji and of the organizations created by him. I shall not, therefore, dilate upon them here.

14. PADDY-HUSK BRICKS AND SLABS

Huge quantities of paddy-husk are wasted in our Province. They are hardly used save as manure or as fuel for the potter's kiln in some parts. Bricks and slabs made out of an admixture of paddy-husk and cement solution have been devised during recent years and found to be useful and durable in house-building, mainly as material for inner walls, partitions, etc. Filtering charcoal also has been devised. These should be encouraged and set formulas for their manufacture, certified and published under Government Engineering Departments, should be broadcast and popularized.

15. PADDY-HUSKING, CORN-GRINDING, OIL-PRESSING

Mills and factories for these should be prohibited by law and tiny machinery which may enable villagers to do these at home like bread-baking, or on a cooperative basis, should be encouraged. Small machinery which can be worked by hand or by the help of animal or electric energy should be devised and made available to enable village households to pursue these processes at home both for home consumption and as home industries.

16. POTTERY AND EARTHPAINTS

Earth paints of various hues and combinations could be made by instructing village potters into a little scientific treatment of earth and a few synthetic processes. This is an untapped source, rich in potentialities and would be a flourishing village industry if our scientists and chemists devise simple formulas for the benefit of the village potters and if the Government encourage it by prohibiting foreign imports as well as their manufacture by indigenous factories. Similar formulas should be devised and popularized for enamelling earthen vessels such as jars, jugs, cooking pots, bowls, plates, etc. which are still made and used extensively in the villages. Cups, saucers, trays, etc., which are much in use now could be made also. The earthen vessels which are still quite common in the villages are very artistic and unbelievably cheap to this day, their only defect at present being want of enamelling which defect renders them unclean at the first use. Being porous they cannot be satisfactorily cleaned without much effort. This defect could be and should be easily removed.

Large-scale manufacture of tiles, bricks, etc., by factories in concentrated areas should be prohibited and village potters and brick-layers encouraged to produce standardized goods in villages to serve well-marked local areas.

17. CHARCOAL-MAKING

This is a purely village or forest industry in the hands of the aboriginal folk in our Province. These people are terribly exploited and treated as virtual slaves by most of the-jungle contractors and traders who monopolize this trade. The conditions have slightly improved during recent years through the efforts of social workers and the conditions created by war. This trade needs urgent and effective protection. It should be reorganized purely in the interests of the aboriginal tribes-folk under Government care on a cooperative basis with the help of social workers wherever the latter are available.

18. BANANA TRUNKS

In the Bassein and Khandesh areas banana plantations are perhaps the biggest in the Province. Millions of banana trunks are cut out after fruition and thrown away every year. They hardly yield anything to the owner beyond a little manure of small value. Yet excellent silky fibre could be made from these discarded banana trunks and utilized for making artificial silk cloth, hessian, ropes, etc. Other uses, too, could be devised by scientific experts.

19. GUNNY CLOTH

This is a big essential industry exclusively in the hands of the Bengal jute mills and the village jute grower does not earn much from it. Like the cotton textiles its decentralization should be desired and the possibilities explored. It may be remembered that like cloth all spinning and weaving of gunnies

(Continued on p. 59)

HARIJAN

March 9

1947

SWORDS INTO PLOUGHSHARES

For decades the Congress has been a fighting organization. Its one purpose has been to shake the foundations of the British Empire from all angles and bring it down and build up a State that will help the people. An army has not the time and thought necessary to produce consumption articles or plough the fields. But when it has fulfilled its purpose it has to return to civilian occupations; otherwise the erstwhile army of defence will turn into a band of brigands. This turning point is a difficult thing to determine. Often the war time chiefs, drunk with power, carry on with the help of the goodwill of a grateful population until the patriots are turned into self-seeking parasites.

The Interim Government, with national leaders functioning in it, has made its appearance at the centre and we must congratulate the Rashtrapati for turning his attention immediately to place the Congress on a peace footing. This change over is a much harder task than it would appear to be. It requires a reorientation of the whole life of the leaders and workers. Until now the Congress had left all such peace time occupations to special bodies which were carrying on their allotted duty without interfering or taking part in any belligerent activities. But now the Rashtrapati had called a conference of the provincial chiefs and has taken counsel as to how best to make the whole Congress organization into a constructive body. When the Congress takes upon itself the feeding, clothing and the providing of shelter to the masses it would be working towards the economic Swaraj of the people, having freed them from political bondage.

We have in the various provinces Congress ministries functioning. These have been floundering about not knowing which way to serve the people. They have been mostly manned by men who have been in the battlefield all their lives. After having wielded the sword so long they found it difficult to direct the plough. Hence it is a welcome change and a timely act on the part of the Rashtrapati to have called this conference to turn the attention of the foundation diggers to the building that is to be put up.

At Allahabad where the provincial Congress chiefs met and discussed with constructive workers the future programme of the Congress the earnestness that prevailed and the keen desire expressed to serve the people in all walks of life have given the country great expectations. We trust the blue print drawn out by them, which would be placed before the Working Committee for being implemented, will be carried through in every detail with the same earnestness and singleness of purpose.

We give elsewhere the resolutions that have been drafted by that conference. These will show a wide field covered by them in the short three days at their disposal. The despatch of business and the alertness to the situation promise well for the country. We hope when the time comes the executives of the various ministries will co-operate fully in the work of reconstruction that is before everyone of us.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

GANDHIJI'S WALKING TOUR DIARY

10-2-'47

In his post-prayer address at the outset Gandhiji referred to the fact that he was to go to Gopinathpur and was assured that it was no more than one and half miles. He began his trek but Gopinathpur seemed to be receding from view. When they had walked for fortyfive minutes he said he should go no further if he was not to collapse. He therefore retraced his steps. It took full one hour and twenty minutes which was too much for him. In future, those who invited him to walk to a place should measure the time taken by a leisurely walk. He tendered his apology to the Hindus and Muslims of Gopinathpur and they owed an apology to Noakhali for not having been accurate and precise in their speech. He incidentally mentioned that the people were found to have blown their noses on the path. This was dangerous and dirty, especially for a people who had the habit of walking barefoot.

A friend had told him that he found a Muslim trader who had proper scales and a Hindu who had improper scales and asked him whether it was not true that the Muslim traders were honest and the Hindu traders dishonest. He was sure that the inference was wrong. In this imperfect world no community was wholly honest or dishonest. All he could say was that a man who sported false scales for deceiving his customers was a criminal. But he could not take it upon himself to condemn the whole group or community.

He had many questions addressed to him by Muslim friends who had seen him yesterday. He had promised to answer them. They were:

Q. You have said that you will stay here as long as perfect peace and amity between the two communities was not established and that you will die here if necessary. Do you not think that such a long stay here will unnecessarily focuss Indian and world attention on Noakhali, leading people to think that excesses still continued to be committed here, whereas on the contrary no unseemly acts have been committed by Musalmans for sometime now?

A. No impartial observer could draw the mischievous inference from his presence. He was there as their friend and servant. His presence has certainly advertized Noakhali as a beautiful place which would be a paradise on earth if the Hindus and the Muslims lived in hearty friendship. It may be that at the end of the chapter he might be noted down as a failure who knew very little about ahimsa. Moreover, it was impossible for him to stay in Noakhali if the Hindus and the Muslims satisfied him that they had established hearty friendship between them. He was sorry to tell them that he had evidence to show that things were not quite as they should be.

Q. Don't you think that the Hindus are artificially keeping up the appearance of tension by staying away from their homes in spite of promises of good behaviour by the Musalmans which they have also made good in cases where they have been given an opportunity?

A. He did not think that many Hindus were wilfully staying away from their homes. No one would want to be away from his home without attractive inducements. He had heard nothing of such inducements. But he knew that fright and the absence of the wherewithal were keeping them back. Nevertheless, he was assured by the officials that the number returning was satisfactory. They could not cope with a greater number. When these obvious causes were present there was no occasion to draw far-fetched inferences which could not be proved. If, however, there were any instigators keeping them back, the law was there to punish them. The proof of the pudding was in the eating. If it was true that the general body of the Muslims really wanted the refugees back, he was quite sure they would gladly return. But the picture was not so rosy as was painted by the questioner.

Q. Don't you think that the dictates of non-violence and friendship to all demand withdrawal or dropping of cases against the Musalmans?

A. He did not know that there was much non-violence in the air. Even non-violent conduct could not arrest the course of law. And non-violent conduct on the part of the frightened injured party could not operate until the culprits declared themselves and were penitent. The fact was that not only was there no penitence on their part, but they were absconding. He was averse to mass arrests. And he was for severe punishment of those who were proved to have manufactured complaints.

Q. Is not the double-faced policy of the Cabinet Mission at the root of the present trouble between the League and the Congress and ultimately between the Muslims and the Hindus?

A. He would not accuse the Cabinet Mission of double dealing. They had honestly suggested a solution which in their opinion was fair. The beauty of the Paper was that it contained no compulsion. Naturally, after acceptance the clauses became obligatory for the accepting party. But any party could refuse acceptance. Thus if Assam in the east and Baluchistan in the west rejected the grouping, no power on earth could compel them under the Cabinet Mission Paper. Lastly, assuming that the Cabinet Mission Paper was a trap, why should the Congress and the League fall into it?

Q. Pakistan means complete independence for the Muslims in the Muslim majority provinces and for the Hindus in Hindu majority provinces. Why then does the Congress object to it?

A. The answer was simple. If Pakistan meant independence only to the Muslims in the Muslim majority provinces and vice versa, it was summarily rejected. Happily not one Muslim leader, certainly not the Quaid-e-Azam, had ever given that meaning.

Were the Hindus in Bihar to be independent and the Muslims helots? Or were the Hindus to be helots in Bengal? He hoped not.

Q. Can there be any hope of establishing Hindu-Muslim unity here in spite of the Congress-League differences which are at the root of all the troubles everywhere? Even if it is established, how long can it be expected to last?

A. He admitted that Hindu-Muslim unity could not be sustained in the face of Congress-League differences. He hoped, however, that apart from party politics, whilst there was time, the Hindus and the Muslims in Noakhali would act together as real friends. They should set an example to all India and especially to the League and the Congress. Any way, that was the mission that brought him to Noakhali. He wanted to pass his examination in pure ahimsa. If it was pure, it must result in establishing that friendship which he desired at heart. Therefore, if it was not established, the failure would be his. And as ahimsa knew no failure, he had said he would do or die in Noakhali. Let the questioner and those who thought like him help the fruition of the effort.

13-2-'47

After congratulating the audience on the manner in which they had kept time during the Ramadhun, Gandhiji dealt with the two questions which had been put to him in course of the day.

Q. We agree that intrinsically a movement for reducing the share of the owner from half to a third of the crop is justified. But could not the present Tebhaga Movement in Bengal be postponed until such time as when the affected persons can be smoothly absorbed in other occupations according to some long-term plan sponsored by the State?

We know you have said that the only way to effect such a radical transformation in society is through non-violence. But interested parties will sleep over that portion of your advice and parade your moral support to their demand and carry on the Movement in their own violent way. Hence is it not wrong for you to lend support to the Movement under the present circumstances when there is every chance of the entire middle class of Bengal being completely ruined as a result? The common villager will also suffer no less because he will also be deprived of the services now being rendered to the village economy by them.

A. In reply, Gandhiji uttered the warning that he only dealt with principles as he knew them. He had not studied the local question. Therefore, the questioner ran the risk of his ignorance causing injustice.

He felt that the question betrayed exaggeration on the part of the questioner. There was no ruin impending for the landlord. His land was not being confiscated. His portion, which he could take even if he was in Timbuctoo, was merely to be reduced from 50% to 33%. He could see no ruin in the proposal. He was afraid they were too much obsessed by the communal question. They should rise above it and examine every problem strictly on merits. Then they would never go wrong. Therefore they should accept the moral principle underlying the demand for reduction of the owner's share and work for solid amendments in which they were likely to succeed. Let them not face confiscation rather than moderate reduction. Let them remember that for years past India had lived through confiscation. Industry after industry had been ruined and both the artisans as well as the farmers of India had been progressively reduced to poverty.

If the desired change were brought about through non-violent means, the world would not be deprived of the talents of the classes, but then the latter would not exercise them at the expense of the labourers. In the non-violent order of the future, the land would belong to the State, for had it not been said 'sabhi bhumi Gopalaki'? Under such dispensation, there would be no waste of talents and labour. This would be impossible through violent means. It was therefore a truism to say that the utter ruin of the land-owners brought about through violence would also involve the ruin of the labourers in the end. If the landowners, therefore, acted wisely, no party would lose.

Q. Some women workers who earn part of their living by weaving mats were advised by you the other day to work on cooperative principles. Bengal's agriculture has been reduced to an uneconomic proposition through extreme fragmentation of holdings. Would you advise farmers also to adopt cooperative methods?

If so, how are they to effect this under the present system of land-ownership? Should the State make the necessary changes in the law? If the State is not ready, but the people so desire, how are they to work through their own organizations to this end?

A. Replying to the first part of the question, Gandhiji said that he had no doubt that the system of cooperation was far more necessary for the agriculturists than for the mat weavers. The land as he maintained belonged to the State; therefore, it yielded the largest return when it was worked cooperatively.

Let it be remembered that cooperation should be based on strict non-violence. There was no such thing as success of violent cooperation. Hitler was a forcible example of the latter. He also talked vainly of cooperation which was forced upon the people and everyone knew where Germany had been led as a result.

Gandhiji concluded by saying that it would be a sad thing if India also tried to build up the new society based on cooperation by means of violence. Good brought about through force destroyed individuality. Only when the change was effected through the persuasive power of non-violent non-cooperation, i. e. love, could the foundation of individuality be preserved and real, abiding progress be assured for the world.

14-2-'47

Gandhiji read two passages from Abdullah Suhrawardy's collections of the sayings of the Prophet. Three Muslim friends of the place had come to him and asked him to pray that God might make both live in peace and friendship. When these friends came he was reading the sayings which he proposed to read to them. They were as follows:

'Be in the world like a traveller, or like a passer on, and reckon yourself as of the dead.' He considered it as a gem of gems. They knew that death might overtake them any moment. What a fine preparation for the event if all became as dead. The very next question was who was the best man and who was the worst. The Prophet considered him to be the best who lived long and performed good acts and him the worst who did bad acts. It was a striking saying that man was to be judged by what he did, and not by what he said.

These sayings were for all men and women and not merely for those who called themselves Muslims. Was the Hindu part of the audience doing good acts? Was untouchability a good act? He had shouted from the house-top that it was a blot on Hinduism. So long as that blot remained, there was no peace and freedom for India. The British would go but their freedom would not come without the complete removal of untouchability.

15-2-'47

Gandhiji dealt with two questions left with him by Nirmal Babu who had gone on duty elsewhere.

The first question was: All over the district of Noakhali there is talk that the Muslim population should boycott the Hindus in every way. Some Muslims who have worked for the Hindus recently or helped them during the riots report that they are under threat of boycott. They ask: What should be the duty of those Muslims who genuinely desire peace in this connection.

Gandhiji replied that he had heard of the boycott before. But he entertained the hope that such was not the case on any extensive scale. He had one case brought to his notice three or four days ago by a Muslim traveller from Gujarat who had come to see him. He was rebuked for daring to want to see him. The traveller stood his ground and came out of the ordeal safely. Another poor Muslim who had come today was threatened with dire penalty if he dared to go to him. He did not know what truth there was in the description. The speaker then instanced printed leaflets that were pasted on the walls in the name of the Muslim Pituni Party. These instances gave colour to the question. He would say to the Muslim friends and others that these things should not frighten or disturb them. They should ignore these things if they were isolated instances. If they were on an extensive scale, probably the Government would deal with the situation. If unfortunately boycott became the policy of the Government, it would be a serious matter. He could only think non-violently. If they gave proper compensation he would probably advise acceptance. He could not think out there and then the pros and cons. If, on the other hand, they resorted to confiscation, he would advise people to stand their ground and refuse to leave their homesteads even on pain of death. This he would say of all provinces whether Muslim majority or Hindu majority. He however hoped that no Government would be mad enough to subscribe to the policy of boycott whether with or without compensation. Those who belonged to the land for ages could not be removed from their homesteads for the simple reason that they found themselves in a minority. That was no religion, Hindu, Muslim, Christian or any other. It was intolerance.

The second question was: At East Keroa you advised peasants to work cooperatively in their fields. Should they pool together their land and divide the crop in proportion to the area of the fields they held? Would you give us an outline of the idea of how exactly they are to work in a cooperative manner?

Gandhiji said that the question was good and admitted of a simple answer. His notion of co-operation was that the land would be held in co-operation by the owners and tilled and cultivated also in cooperation. This would cause a saving of labour, capital, tools, etc. The owners would work in cooperation and own capital, tools, animals, seeds etc. in cooperation. Cooperative farming of his conception would change the face of the land and banish poverty and idleness from their midst. All this was only possible if people became friends of one another and as one family. When that happy event took place there would be no ugly sore in the form of a communal problem.

16-2-'47

Gandhiji had a fairly busy Sunday at Raipura. There was a no-caste dinner provided by the Hindu merchants of Raipura where a meal for nearly 2000 visitors without distinction of caste or creed was provided. It was meant principally to signify abolition of caste distinctions among the Hindus. He was assured that Muslim or Christian friends were equally welcome at the dinner. He was desirous of visiting the Juma mosques of which there were two in Raipura. The Imam in charge at one showed eagerness to have him at his mosque. Maulvi Baharuddin Saheb, his friend, took him and his company round and showed everything including the underground cellar where Maulana Hussain Ahmad Madani had stayed when he was in Raipura. To the other mosque he could not go because the Maulvi in charge had not the time to see the trustees and obtain permission.

Gandhiji referred to the two visits and expressed his gratefulness for being able to pay them. He then referred briefly to the speech reported to have been made by the ex-Premier Maulvi Fazlul Haque Saheb. He was reported to have said that as a non-Muslim Gandhi should not preach the teachings of Islam. Instead of Hindu-Muslim unity he was creating bitterness between the two communities. Had he (Gandhiji) been to Barisal he would have driven him into the canal. He also wondered how the Muslims of Noakhali and Tipperah could tolerate Gandhi's presence so long.

Gandhiji said that he had grave doubts about the accuracy of the report. If it was the correct summary of the speech, he would consider it to be most unfortunate as coming from a man holding the responsible position that the Maulvi Saheb held and aspiring to be the President of the Muslim League. He was not aware of having done anything to create bitterness between the two communities. The speaker had never claimed to preach Islam. What he had undoubtedly done was to interpret the teachings of the Prophet and refer to them in his own speeches. His interpretation was submitted for acceptance or rejection.

In the same speech he (Fazlul Haque Saheb) had said that when he (Gandhiji) returned from South Africa he (Fazlul Haque Saheb) had asked him (Gandhiji) to embrace Islam, whereupon Gandhiji said that he was a Muslim in the true sense of the term. Mr. Haque requested him to proclaim it publicly, but Gandhiji refused to do so. He said that he had no recollection whatsoever of the conversation and he was never in the habit of suppressing from the public what he had said privately. The audience, however, knew that he had stated in various speeches in the district that he considered himself as good a Muslim as he was a Hindu and for that matter he regarded himself an equally good Christian or Parsi. That such a claim would be rejected and on some occasions was rejected, he knew. That, however, did not affect his fundamental position and if he had said what was attributed to him by Fazlul Haque Saheb, he (Gandhiji) would gladly declare his repentance if he would believe what was represented to him. Indeed he had put forth the claim in South Africa to be a good Musalman simultaneously with being a good member of the other religions of the world. He would repeat for the sake of the ex-Premier of Bengal that he was misreported and he would welcome the correct version from him.

PLANNING WITH VILLAGE BIAS

(Continued from p. 55)

required for packing and transporting of grains and other merchandise was done in olden times by the crew of big caravans who continually plied the inter-provincial and inter-national trade routes. Every one spun on the takli even while walking and wove or knitted gunny bags in their camps in the course of their long journeys.

20. MATS, BASKETS, ROPES, BROOMS, BRUSHES

These are mainly village industries and should be made such exclusively. In areas where date, cocoanut, pamyra palms, bamboos, hemp and other fibrous growths abound as nature's gift, cottage-dwelling villagers make these articles and many more of similar varieties. In fact these small industries have survived up to now as cottage industries in many parts of the country. They should be now protected against the factory who should not be allowed to make any inroad upon them. Besides cocoanut, ketki, -ghaypat, bhendi, ambadi and other fibres grow in abundance in many parts of our Province which make excellent raw material for rope-making in the villages. Small hand-worked machinery could be introduced in the villages in order to aid and ease human labour and to turn out standardized goods of given specifications.

21. CONSUMER GOODS

With the almost unlimited possibilities for generating electricity and of its universal use in the near future all over the country both in the urban as well as the rural areas, there would be an equally universal and unlimited demand for small accessories such as fitting materials, plugs, catches and such little things most of which could be made easily by the villagers in their cottages from waste materials just as they do in Japan and Switzerland. Nails, bolts and screws of all current sizes are another item which is essential even for the remotest villager in his house-building and other daily household use. Match-boxes and washing soap is the third item of daily household use.

Besides these, buttons, combs, wicks, tapes, twine, toys, bangles, fountain-pens, pencils, nibs, pens and pen-holders, gumpastes, envelopes, watches and clocks and their parts, shaving and toilet materials, celluloid and plastic goods, umbrellas and a vast variety of what is now being termed as "Consumer Goods" could and should be prohibited by Government to be imported or manufactured by Indian factories and their manufacture should be restricted to the villages as cottage handicrafts. Factories should manufacture only small machinery needed to aid the villager. Short-term and technical training courses, chemical formulas, processes and similar aids should be devised and made available to the villager by the State so as to enable him to turn out standardized production.

Since the termination of war over one crore rupees worth of consumer goods, I understand, are being dumped on us every week and all our sterling balances will vanish and evaporate in a few years if we fail to prohibit their import by stern measures.

22. SEED-OIL LAMPS

Lamps capable of burning any seed-oil have been devised before now under the efforts of the All India Village Industries Association. These should be perfected and popularized so as to enable the villager to consume his own farm products or even wild oil-seeds, which can be gathered from the forests.

23. BIDI (COUNTRY CIGARETTES)

Tembhurni or Timru leaves growing wild in the jungles are used all over the country in Bidi (country cigarettes) making. The villagers who collect these get very little return for their labour compared to tobacco-growers and others engaged in this trade. The jungle villagers should be protected, in this so long as the tobacco evil retains its hold on the country.

24. HIDES AND BONES

This industry is fast being snatched away from the villager by the factory, although most of the pre-tanning processes are still done by the village Harijan. For this labour he hardly gets an adequate share of the price fetched by the factory-made finished article. This position must be made a subject of careful investigation and their economic interest afe-guarded as against the shareholder, manufacturer and his agents or middlemen.

Large-scale foot-wear making by Bata and others should be prohibited so far as the use of leather goes and the village shoe-makers taught to make standardized patterns.

Bones, mostly of dead cattle, are collected for a song through village Harijans and transported to factories while factory-made goods made out of them—including bone-meal for garden manuring etc.—are sold at fabulous prices. This rank exploitation must stop and the village Harijan should be taught to make various consumer goods out of bones as a cottage craft.

Bone-meal too could be made like lime-stone grinding with the help of a stone-mill driven by bullocks or buffaloes while they are without farm-work in the villages. Government should help village Harijans by providing a site and a grinding stone free by way of encouragement for a time and by prohibiting factories or taxing them heavily.

25. RAW MATERIALS

Innumerable kinds of raw materials are available in our country which are drained away by the foreign manufacturer or his agents or his Indian prototype. The return to the villager on these is meagre and wholly inadequate. Various medicinal herbs, gum, lac, minerals, guts, sinews and other organic materials, sizing materials, etc. are only a few of them. All these sources should be explored and investigated in the interest of the villager as against his exploiting employer or manufacturer of finished factory products.

CONCLUSION

Any scheme of National Planning would indeed be a misnomer and defeat its purpose if it is not conceived in terms of and conducted with the sole object of benefitting mainly the bulk of the nation's population, viz. the masses, who inhabit the 7,00,000 villages of India (of which the 23,000 villages of our Province form part and parcel) and make them industrious, self-reliant and happy.

(Concluded)

Vapi, 21-1-'47

SWAMI ANAND

ECONOMY OF PERMANENCE

(A Quest for a Social Order based on Non-violence)

By J. C. Kumarappa

With a Foreword by Gandhiji

Price Rupees Two, Postage etc. Annas Five

ECONOMICS OF KHADDAR

(Second Revised Edition)

By Richard B. Gregg

Price Rupees Two, Postage etc. Annas Six

Available at:

Navajivan Karyalaya, — P. B. 105, Kalupur, Ahmedabad; — 130 Princess Street, Bombay 2; — 299 Sadashiv Peth, Poona 2; — Kanpith Bazar, Surat; — Lakhajiraj Road, Rajkot; — 641/11 Kucha Mahajani, Chandni Chowk, Delhi; — Bright View Building, Royal Park, McLeod Road, Lahore.

CONTENTS	PAGE
CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAMME ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	53
PLANNING WITH VILLAGE
BIAS—IV ... SWAMI ANAND	55
SWORDS INTO PLOUGHSHARES ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	56
GANDHIJI'S WALKING TOUR DIARY	56
NOTE:
SAUCE FOR THE GANDER	J. C. KUMARAPPA 54

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. XI, No. 10

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, APRIL 6, 1947

TWO ANNAS

CREATIVE FREEDOM

[The following is a summary of Acharya Kripalani's address at the Conference of the Presidents and Secretaries of the Provincial Congress Committees held at Allahabad. — J. C. K.]

Among us are those who in the past gave up our studies or our careers, courted imprisonment and suffered lathi blows. I hope the ideals of simplicity and sacrifice which inspired us then will continue to sustain us.

REWARDS

At that time we did not even dream of material rewards for our sacrifices. But today as the prospect of such rewards has gained actuality, we are exposed to dangerous temptations. Not all of us have been able to resist them. We are becoming soft and ease-loving. We hunt for offices and ministerial appointments and are jealous of those who secure them.

When in office, we often ape the ways of our British predecessors whom we are so fond of condemning. Our organization has been built on voluntary sacrifice and self-restraint, and if we give up these ideals so easily we shall fail to bring real Swaraj to our people.

SELF-RESTRAINT

In fact there can be no real freedom without self-restraint. If freedom meant the right of everyone to do as he pleased then we have more of such freedom in India than is found anywhere else in the world.

We can spit anywhere and commit nuisance wherever we like. Our house-wives regularly throw the daily rubbish on the street. We are free to keep our children illiterate and to infect our neighbours with whatever diseases we breed in our homes.

We have more freedom to pollute the Ganges which we worship than the Englishman has to pollute the Thames which he does not pretend to worship. To take another example, our young students, with little experience of life, presume to dictate to us, as no English student would have dared to dictate to Churchill how to prosecute the war against Germany.

During my recent tour in Bihar, young students freely boarded my train without ticket and several times pulled the chain with impunity and detained the train ostensibly to honour the Congress President. Such manifestations of freedom are unheard of in England and other free countries.

TRUE FREEDOM

True freedom is creative and not self-destructive. It grows with self-restraint. Gandhiji is not free to smoke, to drink or to frequent the cinema, though he is the freest individual we have. His freedom is the freedom of the dancer who has to step on the edge of a sword.

He is at once the most free and the most restrained of men. He taught us revolt as well as self-restraint. The former being easy was learnt well by us. The latter we have not cared to learn. A great task and a small mind go ill together.

We cannot win Swaraj until we have learnt to subordinate the smaller to the larger interest.

Let me cite an example from my recent experience in Bihar. We were late in arriving at a railway junction. I was worried, but the local Congress Secretary assured me that it did not matter as he had kept the train waiting for me. Was it a compliment or an insult to me?

If Congressmen begin to behave as if they were the rulers of the people and not their servants, then it is legitimate to say that what we have today are Congress Governments and not the people's Governments. Such a rule would be no better than the patterns of Pathan, Moghul, Rajput, Maratha or Sikh rule which India had formerly in her history.

Delhi has been the seat as well as the grave of empires. If anyone thinks that by capturing power at Delhi we can attain Swaraj, he is much mistaken. Our Swaraj can only be attained in the villages by the service of the people. To kick the ladder by which one ascends is suicidal.

DANGER FROM VIOLENCE

I have talked of the twin danger of succumbing to material temptations and of subordinating the larger national interest to the narrow interest of the party, caste or clique. Our third great danger and perhaps the greatest of all dangers is violence.

I have no desire to enter into a controversy on the merits or demerits of violence versus non-violence. All I wish to stress at the moment is that circumstanced as we are today, violence will be disastrous for us. If we resort to violence against the British, we shall sooner or later, and sooner rather than later, direct it against one another.

We lack the necessary self-discipline and the necessary conventions to limit its use as, for example, the British have learnt.

There are no less rivalries and animosities between the different political parties in Great Britain than there are amongst us. Nevertheless, no party thinks of resorting to violence to terrorize the other. Not only that. It would not have occurred to Churchill, however ruthless and unscrupulous he might be in his dealings with Germans or with Indians, to use his Governmental machinery to tamper with the ballot boxes in England even when he knew that the result of the poll would be his downfall.

POLITICAL MORALITY

We have so many divisions and unreasoning animosities in our political and religious life and so little of self-discipline and restraint that if we once take to violence to assert our will, we shall never know when or where to stop.

In fact, so bitter and vile tend to become our mutual jealousies and rivalries that we often forget who our real enemies are. Not only the communalists but even some Congressmen sometimes talk and behave as if their real enemies were those whom they regarded as their political rivals.

So low is our political morality that the episode of Prithviraj and Jaichand has never become obsolete. We find it easier to co-operate with the foreigner than with our own countrymen. If in our present state we take recourse to violence, we are in danger of annihilating ourselves.

SELF-DISCIPLINE

We shall only succeed in discrediting democracy and pave the way for a dictatorship. In political life, as in the spiritual, self-discipline is the foundation of all other virtues.

Do not think that I am free from the failings against which I have warned you.

I am one of you and no better and, let me hope, no worse than most of you. We are all equally prone to failings; and equally capable of rising above them, if we hold fast to the standards which Gandhiji has kept before us. Having been a Professor for many years I have never outgrown the habit of lecturing when I can. Moreover, having elected me as your President, you have left me no other choice.

SAVING CEREALS

In view of the present cereal shortage in the country, certain experiments on diet were tried in Maganvadi. The following results which have been tested at Maganvadi will be helpful to save cereal consumption to some extent.

Rationing authorities in certain places are distributing atta instead of cereals and as the cereals employed are of lower quality there is a suggestion of adding calcium salt to the atta to make it more nutritious. We would suggest an addition to the atta of 15% of cleaned groundnut cake. This will have many advantages:

1 There will be an outright saving of 15% in cereals.

2. The protein content of the atta will be practically doubled.

3. There will be no increase in the cost; if anything it may scale down the cost.

4. The groundnut cake is very rich in vitamin B complex particularly in vitamin B<sub>1</sub>.

There is no danger of the cake powder getting rancid as in the proportion in which it will be present in the atta, the anti-oxident property of the atta will be effective to check any hydrolysis.

Only good fresh seeds should be taken, cleaned by hand-picking and pressed in bullock-driven ghani presses. The extraction of oil being by cold process no nutritious ingredients of the groundnut are lost. The oil is pressed out leaving only about 10 to 11% in the cake. The cakes are broken into small pieces and dried in the sun. The cake so treated will remain quite fresh for at least one week and retain its flavour. They get bone hard and can be cracked to a fine meal in a pestle and mortar. This meal can be fed in the hand chakki to pulverize and bring it to atta consistency.

The 15% of its addition will mean in the normal diet a daily consumption of less than 1½ chhataks. There is no difficulty in making the preparations of the atta. It retains all the good points of the whole-cereal atta plus a special nutty flavour which makes food all the more tasty. This flavour may be very negligible when only 15% of groundnut-oilcake atta is added and only on a larger addition can the taste be fully appreciated.

The cake contains over 50 % of high grade protein.

Scientific experiments elsewhere have also established high grade digestibility coefficient of groundnut protein. It ranks with the microbial protein of yeast and closely approximates animal protein as found in milk, eggs and mutton.

After many experiments we have come to the conclusion that 1 to 2 chhataks of groundnut oilcake can be easily digested and taken along with cereals making the preparation more palatable. The cake bits are soaked in water and in two hours or so they disintegrate forming a uniform paste. This paste can be mixed with atta and made into chapatis. The proportion of 1:5 is quite good. The paste adds to the flavour of the dal or vegetable, if cooked along with these. It is very tasty when used in the preparation of dalia or porridge with cereals half and half or even without that.

Such use of groundnut cake will release some of the cereal needed and will be a very good health-giving food.

Sweet Potatoes: Sweet potatoes are rich in starch and can form a good substitute for cereals. These should be cooked over steam. If cooked with water, almost all the water should be allowed to evaporate, for, otherwise much of the mineral salts will get dissolved in the water and would have to be discarded with the water.

Sweet potatoes can be taken mixed with vegetables, milk, curds or in any other convenient form. If at any of the meals, cereals are to be totally substituted by this, a little more of sweet potatoes should be taken on the weight of the usual consumption quantity of cereal.

DEVENDRA KUMAR GUPTA (A. I. V. I. A.)

CLIVE TO KEYNES

(A Survey of the History of our Public Debts and Credits)

By J. C. Kumarappa

Price Annas Twelve, Postage etc. Anna One

NAVAJIVAN KARYALAYA
Post Box 105, AHMEDABAD

BIBI AMTUL SALAAM

Bibi Amtul Salaam has for years lived for Hindu-Muslim unity. She comes from a well-known family of Mussalmans in the Patiala State in the Punjab. But she put aside the comforts that her birth offered her and joined Gandhiji's Ashram in 1930. She has ever since endeavoured to shape her life according to the ideals propounded by Gandhiji. Having come under the influence of Theosophy in her early childhood, she has cultivated equal respect for all religions though she remains a staunch Muslim herself. In her zeal for unity she even edited an Urdu weekly called the Ittehad for sometime in 1942. But for various reasons she had to stop it.

During the Bengal famine she came to East Bengal and worked in Tipperah district rendering yeoman service to the afflicted people. But though she has a strong will, her body is very frail and she had to go to Sevagram for recuperation. Riots broke out in Bengal. Reports of the happenings in Noakhali made her restless and she came to Bengal and had started working in the affected areas a few days before Gandhiji's arrival at Chaumuhani.

What she saw oppressed her. She worked in Dasgharia at first. Being a highly religious woman, she could not bear to see people deprived of religious solace. Then she shifted to the village Shirandi. For reasons into which I need not go, she went on a fast there while she was running a temperature of 104° F.

On the ninth day of the fast she dictated a statement to me, explaining the idea behind her fast into which I must not go at present. I shall permit myself to say this much only that she fasted to evoke genuine repentance among her co-religionists. The fast dragged on and I became anxious about her life.

We were all in a fix. Bibi Amtul Salaam alone was at peace. She had resigned herself to God's will and was prepared to die. It was a test of faith. Towards the last week she would not let her temperature be taken. We wanted to test her urine. She protested. What was the good? It would simply cause more anxiety. Friends came from far and near to see her and were struck by her brave suffering. She had the Quran and the Gita recited to her every day and the recitation soothed her. A doctor friend pleaded with her, "Sister, your life is not your own. Won't you let me give you an injection of glucose? At least give me permission to do so if you become unconscious." She opened her eyes and spoke with an effort. Her voice was feeble but clear and steady. "My life I have surrendered to God. His will be done. If He wishes me to live, I cannot die. I must not take injections. The fast must continue until its object is fulfilled."

The Police and the local leaders were also worried. They tried their utmost. They all went to Gandhiji and wanted him somehow to put an end to the fast. He could not do so. She had embarked upon the fast on her own initiative and had taken his word that he won't compel her to break it.

He was scheduled to go to Shirandi on the 20th January, the 25th day of her fast, in the course of his tour. We were sceptical whether she would hold out so long and wanted him to go there earlier. We all felt that his presence at Shirandi might be able to achieve what nothing else had and the fast might come to a successful end. Gandhiji was disinclined to change the tour programme and she herself was not keen. "Let him come when I am near the end, so that I can die in his lap", she said. And so Gandhiji arrived at Shirandi on the 20th. Even in her terribly weak state from her sick bed she supervised all arrangements for his stay. Such has been her devotion to Gandhiji. And she sent me and Abha Gandhi to receive him as she could not walk herself.

A Muslim Deputation waited on Gandhiji at 3 p. m. They were extremely sorry for what had happened. Replying to their plea that he should intervene to end the fast, Gandhiji said that he had come as the friend of the Hindus and the Mussalmans. If they could tear open his heart they would find there nothing but love. Bibi Amtul Salaam was more than a daughter to him. He did not wish to lose her. He had taught the Muslim boys under his care to be firm in their faith and had seen to it that they said their namaz and observed Ramzan. She had embarked on the fast because she could not stand the religious intolerance of her Muslim brethren. She loved Islam, but she did not hate the Hindus. She had not taken his permission to go on fast. He was the last person to trifle with her faith. The object of the fast has to be fulfilled. It was to make the Muslims see the wrong that they had done and repent for it. If they were genuinely repentant and assured non-recurrence of such things in the future, he would plead with her to break the fast. After all God was one and the same by whatever name men called Him.

He had read in the Morning News that Quaid-e-Azam Jinnah had said that Pakistan could not be established through force. He had also said that in Pakistan there would be perfect freedom and safety for the minorities. He had not come to East Bengal on a political mission. His was a purely humanitarian mission. If they wanted the Hindus to leave East Bengal, they should say so plainly. If not, they should redress the wrong done and give assurances for the future. Then he would certainly persuade Bibi Amtul Salaam to break her fast. If they said one thing and meant another, if they broke their word afterwards, they would have to reckon with his fast instead of Amtul Salaam's. He could not hold them responsible for the whole district. But they should take up the responsibility for the peace of their area. By doing so they would be laying the foundation of peace for the whole of Noakhali, nay for the whole of East Bengal. After mutual consultation they evolved a formula expressing sorrow for what had happened and guaranteeing the religious freedom of the Hindus in future in the village of Shirandi and four adjoining villages.

It was signed by the leading members of the Muslim community representing the five villages mentioned. It was past 9 P. M. when the agreement was finally completed and Gandhiji handed over a cup of orange juice to Bibi Amtul Salaam after recitation of the Quran by the Muslim friends.

S. N.

HARIJAN

April 6

1947

BLINDNESS AT A PRICE

We had already written about the evil effects of vanaspati ghee. Sir S. S. Sokhey, Director of the Haffkine Institute, Bombay, states that experiments conducted in the Haffkine Institute on the nutritive values of hydrogenated oil show that

- (1) the consumption of hydrogenated oils resulted in inferior growth;
- (2) their consumption interfered with the absorption of calcium in the body; and
- (3) their consumption resulted in a change in the fat composition of the body.

Recently, in the Council of State, Dr. Rajendra Prasad stated that the Research Institute at Izzatnagar had reported that the use of vanaspati was bad for health and affected the eyesight. Experiments conducted on rats show that the third generation of them become blind. In the light of these scientific experiments one would have thought that any Government with the welfare of the people in their mind would have banned vanaspati out of the country and locked up the vanaspati manufacturers as anti-social beings. But India is tolerant even to the extent of hugging its evil-doers.

We understand that the Government is contemplating provision for the detection of adulteration of ghee with vanaspati by adding 5% basic oil and colouring it. We fear that this will be absolutely of no use. Vanaspati is generally made of groundnut oil cotton-seed or oil. The addition of these oils in a small proportion will be of no avail for detection. Scientists are of opinion that at least 10% of sesame oil (til oil) is the least amount that can be effective; and no other oils would be useful. Besides, the colouring can be removed at a very small cost. One wonders why there should be the need for all this circumventing of the issue.

It is clear that the expenditures incurred by these manufacturers are of no avail to the nation as a whole. They add nothing to the existing fat of the country. If anything, they decrease their assimilability by hydrogenation and to the extent they are destructive of the fat stock of the land. The fresh oils that are produced at comparatively low rates are acquired by these factories and at a cost which is often double the original cost; they destroy the natural food values and make the nation subject to various deficiency diseases, and for this disservice the nation has to pay in the utilization of its manpower, capital and human effort. We are amazed at our action when we sit down calmly and think over the pros and cons in regard to this question.

In so far as adulteration of dairy ghee is the main objective of this industry it is a direct hit on the dairy industry. In a country which is largely vegetarian, reduction of ghee consumption, however caused, will undermine the health of the people. The argument that Western nations use margarine will not hold in our country. Margarine is used like butter over slices of bread and in a temperate climate the hydrogenation needs to be carried out to a very little extent. In our country such a treatment will still leave the product in a liquid state. Besides Europeans obtain animal fats from various other sources as they are meat eaters and their cooking is done mainly with lard (animal fat). Hence, any comparison with other countries is fallacious.

India's is a cow-centered economy. We need cows for the plough, for transport, for carriage and for yielding milk. Hence, any measure that adversely affects the maintenance of the cow will also adversely affect our national economy. A correct view of the affairs in the proper perspective would make vanaspati production equivalent to cow slaughter, and we hope at least those who venerate the cow will look at this aspect of the question conscientiously and refrain from an industry which is based on pure avarice, ignoring all considerations of national welfare.

From the economic point of view the vanaspati mills in so far as they enter the market for vegetable oils tend to put up the prices of ordinary oils. So the poorer consumers of vegetable oil have to pay a higher price for the only source of fat that is available to them. The well-to-do classes who use this hydrogenated oil pay a still higher price for materials which may prove even harmful to them and perhaps obtaining nothing in return even by way of fat if the digestibility is impaired by hydrogenation. Apart from the raising of the price of oils even under controlled rates, because of the advent of capitalists in the market, the tendency is towards black-marketing, which again has an injurious effect on the budget of the poorer consumers.

We are amazed at the recommendation of the Advisory Planning Board which has suggested the raising of the target of production of this article from 82,000 tons in 1941 to 400,000 in 1950. Are we thinking of industries as a means of making wealth for a few, or should our industries be the means of supplying the needed articles to satisfy human needs? Are there no moral considerations to guide us in this matter? Is our industrial policy to be devoid of all humanity? If so, we are heading for the jungle. We trust that no time will be lost in calling a halt as far as this industry is concerned.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

GANDHIJI'S BIHAR TOUR DIARY

17-3-'47

The gathering at Masurhi was, according to official estimates, more than thirty thousand and, during the Ramadhan, a very large section of the men and women present participated in the recital. Gandhiji began by congratulating the audience on that account. Then he told them that his Bihar tour had not been undertaken for pleasure, but on account of serious and grave reasons. He would visit those places where Muslims had suffered. His appeal to the Hindus was to show repentance by means of worthy and suitable acts.

During the mad days of November, women and children were remorselessly murdered, while men had also been done to death in such numbers as to put Noakhali in the shade, although events there had been of a sufficiently serious character. He expected the Hindus of Bihar to show true repentance and not merely shout "Jai" or victory in his name. He not only expected them to contribute liberally towards the relief fund but what he expected them to do more was that they should come forward and confess at least to him the wrongs that they had done. This alone could bring him true peace of mind.

Gandhiji said that he had asked for reports of events from various sources. One of them stated that the initial aggression had been from the side of the Musalmans. He was not at all concerned how the trouble actually started: the problem was, as the Hindus were in such overwhelming majority, how could they stoop so low as to indulge in murdering the innocents? True repentance, with the consequent reparatory action, alone could restore abiding peace between the two sister communities.

The report also accused the Government of indifference to wrongs suffered by the Hindus at the hands of the Muslims. Similar reports had also been received from Muslim quarters complaining of indifference to Muslim complaints. Gandhiji continued that he was slow to believe either report. A popular Government that was so indifferent or partial one way or the other could not exist for any length of time. The Government had already declared that they would presently appoint an impartial Commission to hear all complaints, examine the causes of the terrible disturbances and discover ways and means for avoiding repetition of the tragedy. They would also advise as to the reparation to be made to the sufferers. Let those who had sent their letters to him, he continued, be ready with their evidence to be put before the Commission. His was not the way of a judge or of a prosecutor. His was the humble role of a reformer and humanitarian. He had, therefore, to deal with known facts and invite offenders to repent for their follies.

18-3-'47

Gandhiji referred to his visit to Masurhi and described with emotion the wreckage he had witnessed. He pointed out that he had read about the happenings in Masurhi in the Muslim League report which, he regretted to have to say, he had believed to be grossly exaggerated. But he had to confess now that much of the description about Masurhi seemed to him to be borne out. And what one read, however honest it might be, was wholly different in effect from the actual sight. He was told that the tragedy was largely due to the excitement caused by the observance of Noakhali Day. He was told, too, that the Muslims of Bihar were perturbed by the talk that was going about that the Punjab Day was to be observed on the 23rd. He hoped that it was a mere rumour which had no foundation in fact. Such an observance anywhere would mean a clear invitation for mutual slaughter between brother and brother. He had told the Muslim friends that if such a misfortune took place in Bihar he would want to perish in the flames. His incessant prayer to God was that he would not keep him alive to witness such an awful and disgraceful scene.

Gandhiji then read two letters which he had received on the way to Bir from the adjacent villages. One was from Sain and the other from Barni. He wished that the friendly spirit running through the letters which were described to be as from the Hindu and Muslim residents of the villages would become universal.

Collections were made after the speech. Gandhiji remained whilst the collections were made.

21-3-'47

Gandhiji commenced with a reference to his visit to Garahwan village where men, women and children had been brutally done to death and asked those assembled before him to sit in mournful silence in sympathy with the deceased. He asked them to consider for themselves why innocent women and children had been killed. Was it to save any religion? No religion, Gandhiji emphasized, taught anyone to kill his neighbours. What was done was nothing but wanton destruction—he did not stop to think whether it was done from motives of self interest or any other.

The houses which a few months ago were full of life, Gandhiji said, were now desolate and everyone knew about it. But then what was to be done next? People went to bathe in the Ganges, believing that their sins could thus be washed off. The ruins before them should remind them of the sin they had committed on helpless women and children and they should seek to expiate it by considering in what way they could redeem themselves. Gandhiji told them that they should clean the ruined houses and make them neat and habitable. They should also express to their Muslim brethren their repentance for the past occurrences and persuade them to return to their villages, telling them that then alone they would have peace of mind. It was possible that the Muslims might turn round and ask how they could go back and live in the houses where their kith and kin had been done to death. The Muslims, Gandhiji said, would be justified in saying so. But, if the guilty men or their relations could go to the Muslims with truly penitent hearts and assure them that what was past was past and would never be repeated, he was sure that even a stone heart would melt.

Amidst this mad upheaval, Gandhiji continued, there were men, like oasis in a desert, who risked the wrath of the violent mobs and saved many Muslim lives and Muslim property. Those people deserved congratulations, though they did not need any. If he did not go to them, Gandhiji said, it did not mean that he had not recognized their work. But he was in the nature of a doctor who went not to the well but to the suffering.

He had been told, Gandhiji proceeding said, that the Hindus had also suffered in the conflict. If there were any such, they too needed help and would be included in the relief.

Gandhiji mentioned that about fifty persons, who were wanted in connection with the riot cases, had surrendered the day after his arrival at Masurhi. He welcomed it and hoped that others who had taken part in the riots would surrender to the proper authorities, making a clean breast of the crimes they had committed and taking whatever punishment might be given to them. If people had not the courage to surrender to the authorities, Gandhiji said, they could come to him or Badshah Khan or Major General Shah Nawaz with their confessions.

Lastly, Gandhiji referred to the fear entertained by the Hindus of Noakhali about preparations that were being made by the Muslims to observe Pakistan Day on the 23rd inst. A friend from Khadi Pratishthan had also come to him and explained to him that the situation in Noakhali was deteriorating. Gandhiji said that he had told that friend that he would not be persuaded to leave his post in Bihar at the present moment, for he believed that his mission, if fully successful in Bihar, would cast its effect on Bengal and perhaps on the rest of India. The Muslims of Bihar and the Hindus of Bengal should accept him as security for the safety of their life and property from the hands of the communalists. He had come here, Gandhiji said, to do or die. Therefore, there was no question of abandoning his post of duty till the Hindus and the Muslims could assure him that they did not need his services.

22-3-'47

Gandhiji who returned to Patna this morning after a six days tour of the affected area in Masurhi Thana gave an account of his impressions to the gathering assembled at the evening prayer meeting at the Bankipore Maidan. Gandhiji expressed satisfaction with the attitude of the villagers who were not only genuinely penitent over the past happenings but were also willing to atone for the past in the manner he might suggest. Liberal contributions, as liberal as it could be in rural India, were made by them for the relief of the Muslims, and even when he drove in the car he was stopped and presented with purses. Besides purses, Gandhiji said, he had also received letters from them expressing their readiness and willingness to help in the rehabilitation of the Muslims.

In a number of places, Gandhiji proceeding said, due to the bravery of the local Hindus, no incidents had occurred. He was told by the Muslims themselves that in Dinapore Sub-division no trouble occurred though the Muslims were greatly nervous.

Gandhiji said that he had addressed the Muslim women refugees in the morning at Piplawan. He did not wish at present to enter into a description of the feelings of these women and their present condition. His heart was too full and he did not wish to shed tears. He only wanted to tell them how to repent. He tried as best as he could to console them and persuaded them to pick up courage and return to their villages, placing reliance on God. At this meeting he was told that Muslim women and men dreaded the approach of March 23rd, as it had been reported that Punjab Day would be observed in Bihar on that date. He had told them that the Bihar Government had banned the observance of any kind of day, be it Pakistan Day or Punjab Day. The Minister who was present also gave the assurance that no celebration of any kind would be permitted and that the ban would be strictly enforced throughout the Province. The Bihar Government, Gandhiji said, had banned the Kisan Rally also. In his opinion, that was rightly done. The present atmosphere in the country was such that any kind of rally or procession led to one kind of trouble or other. In the language of the Bhagavad Gita, very often action lay in inaction and inaction in action. Gandhiji illustrated this truth by giving striking modern instances. Thus in modern warfare, very often inactivity was obligatory and could therefore be described as real activity, and at such a time any activity, so-called, would savour of criminality. He would, therefore, urge both the Hindus and the Muslims to refrain from celebrating these days. A true satyagrahi should implicitly obey the directions of those he had himself put in power. What he said did not refer only to March 23rd. It applied to the future also and at no time should these celebrations be indulged in, so long as the atmosphere remained as it was that day.

Continuing Gandhiji said that if the Hindus realized the error of their past conduct, then he would expect the Hindus in the affected areas to contribute physical labour for the renovation of damaged houses. That act performed voluntarily, freely and sincerely would inspire lost confidence as nothing else could.

Gandhiji mentioned that after his arrival at Masurhi about fifty persons who were wanted in connection with the riots had surrendered to the authorities. By this time the number had probably gone up and he hoped many more would come forward to acknowledge their guilt. Confession of their guilt, Gandhiji concluded, not only evoked respect for their courage but would ultimately enhance the prestige of the province as a whole.

23-3-'47

Gandhiji's weekly silence having commenced, his written message in Hindustani was read out to the congregation after the prayers. It was his earnest prayer that those who were present and those others whom his voice could reach should understand the aim of life. The aim of life was that they should serve the Power that had created them, and on Whose mercy or consent depended their very breath, by heartily serving Its creation. That meant love, not hate which one saw everywhere. They had forgotten that aim and were either actually fighting each other or preparing for that fight. If they could not escape that calamity, they should regard India's independence as an impossible dream. If they thought that they would get independence by the simple fact of the British power quitting the land, they were sadly mistaken. The British were leaving India. But if they continued fighting one another, some other power or powers would step in. If they thought they could fight the whole world with its weapons, it was a folly.

A friend had written, continued Gandhiji, that a sort of peace seemed to have been established in the Punjab through military occupation. That peace was the peace of the grave. The people were silently preparing for an open and deadlier fight. Weapons were being collected. After that even the military would find it impossible to control the people. It was his firm conviction that the peace established with the aid of the military or the police would be no peace. True peace would only come when at least one side, if not both, adopted the true bravery that non-violence gave.

Bihar had realized, said Gandhiji, that there was no bravery in killing women and children. It was sheer cowardice. It would be a grand thing if Bihar could manifest the true bravery of silent strength, and show thereby the true path of life to the whole world.

At the end Gandhiji informed the audience that the prayer meeting on Monday would be held near Poonpoo.

24-3-'47

The prayer meeting at Rajghat was very noisy. There was a very large number of women not used to meetings. They set up an incessant chatter. The usual prayer was nevertheless conducted amid the din. When the time for Gandhiji's speech came, he said that he was not anxious to hear his own voice. He would not speak to them if the chatter continued. His remarks were, therefore, addressed to the volunteers who, he said, ought to prepare especially new audiences such as that day's by word of mouth or otherwise telling them the rules that govern public meetings. He advised preparation of short leaflets for distribution among such people.

He then said he had visited Behrawan where Hindu houses had been damaged. He said that for him the Hindus and the Muslims were like two eyes, as Sir Syed Ahmed had said. Such isolated instances ought not to diminish the heinousness of the Hindus' crime against the Muslims.

25-3-'47

At today's prayer meeting perfect silence was observed by the audience to the end. Gandhiji congratulated them for it. He told them that he had heard that the Hindus were boycotting the Muslims. If that was so, it was a bad omen. True repentance demanded true friendship in which there could be no room for boycott. Hence, if they were truly repentant, they ought not to boycott the Muslims. He then referred to a visit of Muslim League friends who were prepared to co-operate in every way in rehabilitation and he added that without the co-operation of the League friends in Bihar there could be no friendship which depended not on the bayonet but on mutual goodwill.

Gandhiji had a visit from a friend from Noakhali who had come to report that things had worsened there after his departure. He had replied that the work he was doing in Bihar could not but affect the Noakhali work for the better. He advised the Noakhali friend to report every misdeed to the proper authorities. Whatever came to his notice he would gladly pass on to the authorities with confidence. In any case he would advise them to be calm, courageous and to have faith in God as the true and only Helper.

Lastly, he referred to a visit from Dome friends, whom it was the duty of every Hindu to befriend. They, he was told, were under a double disability. They were treated as outcastes by the caste Hindus and as the lowest in the hierarchy of untouchables. This was a shame which the Hindus were bound to wipe out at the earliest moment, if Hinduism was not to perish.

'LEARN FROM THE EXPERIENCE OF OTHERS'

[The Chinese have a proverb: 'A wise man learns from his experience; a wiser man learns from the experience of others'. The following article by Louis Bromfield appears in the Reader's Digest of October last and teaches us the lesson that we in India at any rate cannot afford to trifle with the soil, but must deal with it gently and reverentially. — V. G. D.]

On a clear, beautiful day last spring I flew from Austin, Texas, to Chicago. Unrolled like a map beneath our plane lay a good part of the vast Mississippi Basin, once the richest and most productive agricultural area of its size in the world.

It is still rich in spots, but most of it now is an area of steadily waning productivity. Most of its forests have been cut down, and much of its agricultural land has been ruined. All this has happened in less than 100 years and in some parts in little more than a generation.

Halfway through Iowa my companion looking down, said, 'My, that's a pretty sight! There's an awful lot of food being raised down there.'

From an aesthetic point of view it was a pretty sight. . . .

It was pretty all right, but my companion, a city fellow, saw only the surface. He did not see the ugly, frightening things which were taking money out of his pockets, and perhaps even the calcium out of his bones and the phosphorus out of his brain. Presently I began telling him what lay beneath the pretty picture, beginning with the moment we had taken off in the Black Lands in Texas.

The Black Lands, as virgin soil, were wonderfully deep and heavy with decayed organic material lying over a limestone or marl base. Such soil exists in few parts of the earth, notably in Texas, Alabama, Mississippi and Russia's Ukraine. As the plane rose, however, it became evident that in the Texas Black Lands great streaks and circular areas had turned grey or white. The grey meant that the rich topsoil was almost gone; the white, where the limestone showed, meant that the topsoil was gone altogether. Many years and a vast expenditure of money will be needed to make that eroded marl grey base once more productive. When the white limestone shows through, there will be no more production for a million years.

How had this rich soil gone? It had been washed or blown away, because it had been ploughed year after year and left bare to the ravages of rain and wind.

Presently we passed into the red land of Northern Texas and Southern Oklahoma, once as fine grazing land as there was in the world. Here millions of buffaloes fed on the succulent bluestem and buffalo grasses, and the streams ran clear. But now the land, over-grazed, by cattle and burnt over each year, grow only a thin weedy cover or coarse Johnson grass which most ranchmen regard as a pest. The dilapidated ranch houses were few and far between, and only a few skinny cattle grazed the once-rich land.

Worst of all, except where a few wise farmers had terraced their fields, the red soil was gashed by great gullies that were growing constantly into the land, devouring billions of tons of soil every year. The streams and rivers, swollen by spring rains ran red as blood. . . .

Government figures show an increase during the past few years in the average yield per acre of our major crops. . . . When analyzed, however, this statistical increase is not what it appears to be. No account was taken of the thousands of acres that have been abandoned because they can no longer produce, and of the fact that the yield on land still used is boosted by improved (hybrid) seed which 'artificially' increases production . . . and which has nothing to do with soil.

It is well-known that the yield of virgin corn-belt lands (prior to 1850) was often 120 bushels per acre and upward without fertilizers. The current yield in Mc Lean County, Illinois, one of the best producing corn areas in the country, is only about 55 bushels per acre. That is the measure of our soil's decline.

What we saw on the flight was the record of rich land worn out or destroyed. It hadn't occurred to my companion that this tragedy was costing him money in higher food prices, in the higher taxes that are required to pay subsidies, and perhaps to pay for future relief and made-work projects. He didn't realize that depleted land, which lacks minerals vital to the health of human beings, inevitably produces crops and livestock that are also deficient in these elements, and that people who eat the products of depleted soils gradually become physically and mentally deficient.

Many persons believe that all lettuce, for example, has the same vitamin and mineral content. This is not true. One head of lettuce can be high in mineral and vitamin content and another may have little more nutritional value than a glass of water. This is because the mineral, and to a large extent the vitamin, content of any vegetable is determined by the mineral content of the soil on which it is grown. Healthy citizens cannot be produced from eroded and depleted soils.

My companion had never realized that as the natural fertility of the soil goes down the cost of production mounts; hence the price goes up for consumers and the farmer's profit declines.

What the 'pretty' landscape actually showed was an appalling record of the destruction of natural resources upon which the strength, wealth and power of this nation are founded. If the steady destruction of agricultural land continues, the price of food may increase until only the rich can afford steak, butter and cream. . . .

It would be wrong to ignore the progress being made in soil and water conservation and in soil restoration in various parts of the United States. Soil conservation laws have been an immense step forward. They are administered by farmers themselves, but the U. S. Soil Conservation Service stands ready to give engineering aid and advice.

The State as well as some of our great industrial corporations and societies such as the Friends of the Land and the Friends of the Soil are all doing important work. . . .

Over large parts of our country the great task of anchoring our soil and keeping our rain water where it falls still remains to be done. The ultimate responsibility for this job lies with the farmer. But in certain areas the soil has been so depleted that food raised on it wholly lacks essential minerals, and this has so weakened the rural population that they are unable to help themselves. Here some measure of Government aid is necessary. Money appropriated for the battle against erosion and floods will pay large dividends to the nation.

You can read the truth of the whole story in the passing landscape from the window of a train or an automobile. Try it some time. Bear in mind that every eroded field, silt-clogged river and burned-over forest, every ruined and abandoned farm, is costing you money—in higher prices, in more taxes, in more subsidies, in strikes for higher pay because the higher cost of food has eaten deeper into the purchasing power of the dollar. Remember that when our soil and forests and other natural resources are gone it will not matter if we have all the gold in the world buried at Fort Knox or if the Treasury Department turns out truckloads of banknotes, for we shall be finished as a nation.

CONTENTS		PAGE
CREATIVE FREEDOM	J. B. KRIPALANI	93
SAVING CEREALS	DEVENDRA KUMAR GUPTA	94
BIBI AMTUL SALAAM	S. N.	95
BLINDNESS AT A PRICE	J. C. KUMARAPPA	96
GANDHIJIS BIHAR TOUR DIARY		97
'LEARN FROM THE EXPERIENCE OF OTHERS'	V. G. D.	99

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad.

Subscription Rates — INLAND : One year, Rs. 6; Six months, Rs. 3; FOREIGN : One year, Rs. 8 or 14 sh. or. $ 3.

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. XI, No. 12

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, APRIL 20, 1947

TWO ANNAS

STRIVE FOR ONE WORLD

[Gandhiji attended the Inter-Asian Relations Conference twice during his stay at Delhi. On Tuesday, 1-4-47, when he attended the Conference for the first time, he did not deliver any speech but answered some questions that were addressed to him by some of the delegates. The questions and answers are reproduced below.]

The speech which he delivered before the closing session of the Conference is given elsewhere in this number.

—Ed.]

The Azerbaijan delegate, Mr. Yousotoff, who was presiding at the Plenary Session, requested Gandhiji to say a few words.

Gandhiji replied that he would be attending the closing session of the Conference on April 2 and would speak then. For the present, he would answer any questions that members might like to put to him.

"I will not like to live in this world if it is not to be one. Certainly I should like to see this dream realized in my lifetime," declared Gandhiji in answer to a question whether he believed in the theory of one world and whether it would succeed under the present conditions.

He added: "I hope that all the representatives who have come here from the different Asian countries will strive their level best to have only one world. They will have to think out ways and means for achieving this goal.

"If you work with fixed determination, there is no doubt that in our own generation we will certainly realize this dream."

Dr. Han Liwu from China asked him his views on the proposal to set up an Asian Institute.

Gandhiji replying said: "The question is certainly very nice. Let me confess my ignorance. I have really to apologize to you. Pandit Nehru had asked me long before this Conference was scheduled to take place whether it would at all be possible for me to attend it. It has proved to be a much more important conference than it was expected to be. I was obliged to say at that time that I was very sorry and would not be able to come. When Lord Mountbatten, the new Viceroy, invited me to meet him, however, I could not say 'No.' It would have been foreign to my nature to do so. The Viceroy had already told me that the credit for bringing me to Delhi during the Asian Conference was really his. And I told the Viceroy: 'I am your prisoner. But I am also Pandit Nehru's prisoner, for, after all, he is your Vice-President.'

"Through correspondence I know almost all parts of the world and naturally, therefore, of Asia, though I know very few of you personally — perhaps none of you. I am doubtful whether I can say anything useful but the question is one after my heart. Some portions of the question put to me now were discussed by Pandit Nehru yesterday. It is a great event that for the first time in our history such a conference takes place on the Indian soil. I am sorry that I have to refer to the conditions that we see today. We do not know how to keep peace between ourselves. We have so many differences which we cannot settle between ourselves in a humane and friendly manner. We think we must resort to the law of the jungle. It is an experience which I would not like you to carry to your respective countries. I would instead like you to bury it here.

"India is now on the eve of her full independence. India wants to be independent of everybody who wants to own this country. We do not want a change of masters. We want to be masters on our own soil, though I am not quite sure how it will come about. All that we know is that we should do our duty and leave the results in the hands of God and not in the hands of man. Man is supposed to be the maker of his own destiny. It is partly true. He can make his destiny only in so far as he is allowed by the Great Power which overrides all our intentions, all our plans and carries out His own plans.

"I call that Great Power not by the name of Allah, not by the name of Khuda or God but by the name of Truth. For me, Truth is God and Truth overrides all our plans. The whole truth is only embodied within the heart of that Great Power — Truth. I was taught from my early days to regard Truth as unapproachable — something that you cannot reach. A great Englishman taught me to believe that God is unknowable. He is knowable but knowable only to the extent that our limited intellect allows.

"You, gentlemen, have come here from different parts of Asia, and having come with eagerness and zest you should all have yearly meetings or two-yearly or three-yearly conferences. You should carry away sweet memories of the meetings and make every effort to build the great edifice of Truth.

"All the Asian representatives have come together. Is it in order to wage a war against Europe, against America or against non-Asiatics? I say most emphatically 'No.' This is not India's mission. I am free to confess that I will feel extremely sorry if India, having won independence through essentially and predominantly non-violent means, was going to use that independence for the suppression of the other parts of the world. Europeans had exploited different races inhabiting this vast continent called Asia.

"It will be a sorry thing if we go away from this Conference without a fixed determination that Asia shall live and live as free as every other Western nation. I just wanted to say that conferences like the present should meet regularly, and if you ask me where, India is the place."

FIRST THINGS FIRST

The Bombay Committee for the Promotion of Village Industries under the chairmanship of Shri Manu Subedar has, with commendable promptitude, published its report. It seems to have been launched out with a wrong twist from its inception. The resolution of Government forming this Committee started by wagging the dog in the preamble itself. Or is it a case of letting the cat out of the bag to begin with? It runs:

"Revival and promotion of cottage industries are essential for bringing about a state of balanced economy in the country and for saving the enormous waste of raw materials, transport facilities and human energy, inherent in locating factories at certain centres to which raw materials and labour have to be brought from the countryside and from which the finished product has again to be sent to rural consuming centres. It is also desirable to make villages self-sufficient in respect of their essential requirements as far as possible. . . ."

From this the main object would appear to be to distribute the constituent elements of the organization of centralized factory production to rural areas; the purpose being the saving of "enormous waste" or in other words, reduction of cost. The interest in the welfare of the villages has become an "also".

The whole report is vitiated by this ideology, lacking a true perspective and a sense of proportion. Button-making absorbs attention in a starving country rather than industries connected with food processing. The burning questions of the day, such as the rice mills, production of vanaspati ghee or sugar mills and distilleries do not find even a passing mention. Coming from the Province of Bombay, with all its vested interests, one is led to wonder if this is all deliberately undertaken to divert and side-track public attention rather than being an accidental blunder.

Of course, there is much crocodile tears shed over the deterioration of life in rural areas and very ennobling sentiments expressed in the true text book style for their betterment. But the whole report rings false, may be, due to the wrong directive given in the terms of reference.

The Committee's belief in "self-sufficiency" is skin-deep. Their avowed aim is "to give increased purchasing power to large masses of people, so that they can afford to buy things, which hitherto they were not in a position to acquire." The Committee does not seem to be conscious of the fact that much of the distress in rural areas is traceable to the enormous expansion of money economy. Villages should be encouraged to produce for their use rather than for exchange. The Committee seems to have been carried off its feet by glowing pictures of production in Switzerland and Japan, not realizing that in those small countries conditions are not the same as in our country nor are their traditions of life identical with ours.

Under the proposed scheme, villages should undertake mass production of a single selected article at each village industry centre. "At least three skilled artisans, who are adept in making such an article, should be imported from cities where necessary and established at such a centre on the guarantee of a full wage such as they are now realizing plus free residence." "All the adult men and women, who could give their full time, would be free to come and join this activity. From the first day of their attendance, they would receive not less than four annas a day but when their skill is reported upon, the scale should rise gradually from four annas to eight annas, which should be the maximum," for an eight hour day. Is this an improvement of the "Poor House" institution in the West?

With an eye to modernity, and perhaps as a concession to those who clamour for Basic Education, the Committee "recommend the examination of the problem, whether children could not join in with advantage to themselves for half a day" on a wage of one anna per day rising to a maximum of four annas. They think such industrial centres "would provide for the training of the eye, the touch, the sense of measurement, the sense of weight and other useful faculties."

They have, in all earnestness, proceeded to work out the cost of a village centre for the production of coat-buttons! Such a centre will employ three skilled men at Rs. 4 a day, 40 children at As. 2 a day, 40 women at As. 6 a day and 40 men at As. 6 a day. At all events we should congratulate the Committee on establishing the equality of men and women, though on paper! They are also dispelling "the drawing room illusions of amateurs that one can have a choice and one should do what one pleases." They declare ex cathedra that man is by nature condemned to get through the same personal routine in life every day and with regard to work, "most men do what opportunity or chance had made available to them." In this particular case, the God-sent opportunity of coat-button-making! From this high philosophy of life they suddenly make a forced landing on hedonistic consideration when they come out with the observation: "The limitation of the work to a single task increases the scope for acquiring skill in the shortest period, for minimizing mistakes and waste and is the foundation of mass production of simple articles under rural conditions at a cost which will probably be lower than the factory cost of similar articles."

Sweat labour theories could not have been expressed better!

Then they proceed to refute emphatically that the simple process in mass-scale manufacture is monotonous. We should invite the Chairman and the Committee to go to a shoe-making factory where the moving belt carries hundreds of lasts on which the various operations incidental to the making of a shoe are performed by the attendant at each spot. We shall place the Chairman first. As the naked last moves up in front of him he will have by his side a pot of sticky paste and he will be equipped with a brush. He will dip the brush in the paste and dab it on the last as it passes him. He will repeat this operation on hundreds of lasts that will whirl past before him from eight in the morning till five in the evening with one hour in the middle for lunch! This will be done every day for three hundred days in the year and he will be paid eight annas per day for his co-operation with the Almighty who provided our Chairman with this opportunity of dabbing paste on shoe lasts. It may not now be necessary for us to watch the other Committee members at their simple processes which, they tell us, are not monotonous. They frankly state: "the Utopian Heaven when a man can do what he pleases, as he pleases, is an entirely irrelevant idea with reference to the plan suggested herein." If the Chairman was not pleased to dab the paste on the last as it passed him the cloth put on the last by the next man will not stick to it and God's purposes will be frustrated. It is impossible to allow the Chairman to please himself.

Q. E. D.

As to the choice of products they confess that they "have not been troubled with the antithesis, which it is usual to put forward between village industries, which cater for the wants of the villagers themselves, and those which produce goods useful to the urban population."

They claim that their scheme is the product of Indian genius applied to Indian conditions. There is surely no question about the genius but there is room for difference in the appreciation of the conditions. They are obsessed by the fear that the villages cannot provide for the increased population unless their scheme is put into operation.

There is much special pleading in all their theorizing which makes interesting and amusing reading but space forbids our inclination to quote these for the benefit of the reader. There is no sense of false modesty about the Committee which naively desire that the basic notions put forward by them should be useful not merely for Bombay, but for other provinces too. Is this a warning?

Village Industries for mass production seem in keeping with wolves in sheep's clothing. We trust the Government and the people concerned will evaluate this report carefully and the skillfully sugar-coated pill will not be swallowed.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

ABOUT NOAKHALI

Gandhiji received the following wires about the Noakhali situation to which he has sent the following replies:

Shri Satish Chandra Dasgupta in his wire dated Ramganj, April 2 says:

"This is a quick post information. I have sent the following telegram to the District Magistrate, Police Superintendent and Chief Minister.

"There have been five cases of arson between March 23 and yesterday. Yesterday's case happened at Mohammadpur in Ramganj Thana. It was an attempt to burn alive three families consisting of twenty-one persons male, female, children of the house who for safety slept all in one room. This room was fastened from outside and this thatched hut and other huts of the house simultaneously set on fire. The inmates escaped by breaking through mat wall."

In another telegram dated Ramganj, April 5, Shri Dasgupta says:

"I have sent the following telegram to the Chief Minister and local authorities:

'Have to bring your notice another case of arson last night April 4, at Changirgaon near Ramganj Thana where also like the last case the inmate Haralal Bhowmik found himself locked from outside in his sleeping room while all structures including sleeping room were burning. Thank God Haralal could escape by cutting open corner of stout reed wall of his corrugated sheds. Request you think over these gruesome attempts of burning alive the Hindus and shape Government policy by shaking off inactivity.'

Gandhiji's reply to the above wires:

"All your precise but painful wires also from Haranbabu. Case seems to be for exodus or perishing in flames of fanaticism. Hope you will not advise my coming to advise on choice. Hold council with workers and act promptly."

Shri Haranchandra Ghosh Choudhury, M. L. A. (Bengal) in his wire dated Chaumuhani (Noakhali), April 6 says:

"Rehabilitation in Noakhali is becoming increasingly difficult. Lawlessness, theft, burglary, house-breaking, night raids, burning of houses, hay-stacks, becoming common.

"Ploughing of fields in some areas obstructed. In about five hundred cases involving loot, arson, murder, final reports submitted on pleas non-availability sufficient evidence which under present circumstances can be had from riot victims alone. Absconders and culprits moving freely reported holding meeting now. People suspect foul play in original cases as all Hindu officers in charge of affected Thanas transferred. Those officers who have timely submitted charge sheets against good number of offenders also transferred. Proceedings drawn against officers who attempted quell riots or arrested large number of culprits of whom ninety per cent now bailed out. More than hundred counter cases against workers. Hindu police and army staff are seriously enquired into and in some cases summoned or otherwise harassed."

Gandhiji's reply to the above wire:

"If what you say is true, clear case for exodus or perishing in the flames of madness and fanaticism. Consult Satish Babu and act unitedly."

Gandhiji has sent the following wire to the Chief Minister, Bengal, Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy:

"I continue receive doleful wires about increasing lawlessness Noakhali. I suggest prompt attention wires of Satish Chandra Dasgupta and prompt action. Am publishing wires."

HARIJAN

April 20

1947

THE MESSAGE OF ASIA

Addressing the concluding session of the Inter-Asian Relations Conference on Wednesday the 2nd of April, 1947, in the Purana Quila at Delhi, Gandhiji said:

I do not think that I should apologize to you for having to speak in a foreign tongue. I wonder if this loud-speaker carries my voice to the farthest end of this vast audience. If some of those who are far away are unable to listen to what I may say, it will be the fault of the loud-speaker.

I was going to tell you that I do not wish to apologize. I dare not. You cannot understand the provincial language which is my mother tongue. I do not want to insult you by speaking in my own language (Gujarati). Our national speech is Hindustani. I know that it will be a long time before it can be made into an international speech. For international commerce, undoubtedly, English occupies the first place. I used to hear that French was the language of diplomacy. I was told when I was young that if I wanted to go from one end of Europe to the other, I must try to pick up French. I tried to learn French in order that I may be able to make myself understood. There is a rivalry between the French and the English. Having been taught English I have naturally to resort to that language.

I was wondering as to what I was to speak to you. I wanted to collect my thoughts but, let me confess to you, I had no time. Yet I had promised yesterday that I would try to say a few words. While I was coming with Badshah Khan I asked for a little piece of paper and pencil. I got a pen instead of a pencil. I tried to scribble a few words. You will be sorry to hear from me that that that piece of paper is not by my side though I remember what I wanted to say.

You, friends, have not seen the real India and you are not meeting in conference in the midst of real India. Delhi, Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, Lahore—all these are big cities and are, therefore, influenced by the West.

I then thought of a story. It was in French and was translated for me by an Anglo-French philosopher. He was an unselfish man. He befriended me without having known me because he always sided with the minorities. I was not then in my own country. I was not only in a hopeless minority but in a despised minority if the Europeans in South Africa will forgive me for saying so. I was a coolie lawyer. At that time we had no coolie doctors, we had no coolie lawyers. I was the first in the field. You know perhaps what is meant by the word coolie.

This friend—his mother was a French woman and his father an Englishman—said: "I want to translate for you a French story. There were three scientists who went out from France in search of truth. They went to different parts of Asia. One of them found his way to India. He began to search. He went to the so-called cities of those times—naturally this was before British occupation, before even the Moghul period. He saw the so-called high caste people, men and women, till he felt at a loss. Finally, he went to a humble cottage in a humble village. That cottage was a bhangi cottage and there he found the truth that he was in search of."

If you really want to see India at its best, you have to find it in the humble bhangi homes of such villages. There are 7,00,000 of such villages and 38 crores of people inhabit them.

If some of you see the villages, you will not be fascinated by the sight. You will have to scratch below the dung heap. I do not pretend to say that they were ever places of paradise. Today they are really dung heaps. They were not like that before. What I speak is not from history but from what I have seen myself. I have travelled from one end of India to the other and have seen the miserable specimens of humanity with lustreless eyes. They are India. In these humble cottages, in the midst of these dung heaps, are to be found the humble bhangis in whom you find the concentrated essence of wisdom.

Again, I have learnt from books—books written by English historians. We read books written in English by English historians but we do not write in our own mother tongue or in the national language Hindustani. We study our history through English books rather than through the originals. That is the cultural conquest which India has undergone.

Stating that wisdom had come to the West from the East, Gandhiji said: The first of these wise men was Zoroaster. He belonged to the East. He was followed by Buddha who belonged to the East—India. Who followed Buddha? Jesus, who came from the East. Before Jesus was Moses who belonged to Palestine though he was born in Egypt. After Jesus came Mohammed. I omit my reference to Krishna and Rama and other lights. I do not call them lesser lights but they are less known to the literary world. All the same I do not know a single person in the world to match these men of Asia. And then what happened? Christianity became disfigured when it went to the West. I am sorry to have to say that. I would not talk any further.

I have told you the story in order to make you understand that what you see in the big cities is not the real India. Certainly, the carnage that is going on before our very eyes is a shameful thing. As I said yesterday, do not carry the memory of that carnage beyond the confines of India.

What I want you to understand is the message of Asia. It is not to be learnt through the Western spectacles or by imitating the atom bomb. If you want to give a message to the West, it must be the message of love and the message of truth. I do not want merely to appeal to your head. I want to capture your heart.

In this age of democracy, in this age of awakening of the poorest of the poor, you can redeliver this message with the greatest emphasis. You will complete the conquest of the West not through vengeance because you have been exploited, but with real understanding. I am sanguine if all of you put your hearts together—not merely heads—to understand the secret of the message these wise men of the East have left to us, and if we really become worthy of that great message, the conquest of the West will be completed. This conquest will be loved by the West itself.

The West is today pining for wisdom. It is despairing of a multiplication of the atom bombs, because atom bombs mean utter destruction not merely of the West but of the whole world, as if the prophesy of the Bible is going to be fulfilled and there is to be a perfect deluge. It is up to you to tell the world of its wickedness and sin—that is the heritage your teachers and my teachers have taught Asia.

Moral Defects of Victory

Apart from moral considerations there is something repulsive in filching the belongings of the dead and dying. Leaving alone chivalry, there is a degradation in depriving the weak when they are down and out and are not in a position to protect their possessions.

A few weeks ago we drew attention to the moral aspect of dismantling the equipment of German industries by the "Victors"—the British and the Americans,—and selling them off, and also to the greed involved in snatching away their patent rights.

Now comes the corresponding news that the United States Government has decided to allow 30% of all removable Japanese equipment to the British.

Is there no limit to the extent to which avarice will lower human dignity and self-respect?

All this in the name of "reparations"! These are some of the moral defects of victory.

J. C. K.

CLIVE TO KENYES

(A Survey of the History of our Public Debts and Credits)

By J. C. Kumarappa

Price Annas Twelve, Postage etc. Anna One

NAVAJIVAN KARYALAYA
Post Box 105, AHMEDABAD

THE DELHI INTERLUDE

1-4-'47

There was a slight disturbance at the prayer meeting in Delhi this evening when an excited Hindu youth took exception to the recitation from the Quran in the course of the prayer. Gandhiji stopped the prayer for some time, while the boy was removed from the prayer ground.

Though with the removal of the youth there was no occasion, Gandhiji said, to make any variation in the recital of the whole prayer including the Zoroastrian verses, the bhajan and the Ramadhun, he wanted to waive the recital and bring home to the youth that his supposed victory was really the loss of the entire audience, who wanted the whole prayer. His act was not only un-Hindu but it was a discourteous breach of the ordinary laws governing meetings. Thoughtless action, such as the youth had indulged in, really promoted ill will resulting in the inhumanities they had witnessed on a progressive scale in Noakhali, Bihar and in the Punjab. It was time, therefore, that the people made a fixed determination to shed all savagery.

Gandhiji went on to say how he had to hang his head in shame in Noakhali when he was told of the cruelties perpetrated on the Muslims in Bihar. And now, as if in answer to Bihar, comes the tragedy of the Punjab. Death, Gandhiji said, was a companion and friend. It was well with those who had died bravely. Whether any died as cowards was immaterial now. They too were gone. But it was the guilty living who were responsible and they were responsible to God. He alone knows the hearts of men.

Gandhiji exhorted the people to shed violence and the law of the jungle. He was in Bihar trying to restore confidence in the Muslims and love in the hearts of the Hindus. He felt that he was succeeding and, if he did, then, all would be well elsewhere too. It was a tragedy that in the India that had fought with the weapons of truth and ahimsa for its freedom, there should today be the law of the brute. They were belying all that the Congress had stood for.

Never in history, Gandhiji went on to say, had a ruling power left any dominion of its own free will. This was what the British were trying to do today. It was right to believe that they were honest whatever their past record here had been. But were Indians going to demean themselves by internal warfare? Such action might even lead to the consequence of their asking British troops to remain on Indian soil in order to maintain order. He hoped they would not resort to such madness.

Gandhiji then referred to the Asian Conference then being held. It was a big thing and their jewel, Jawaharlal, was very beloved of the delegates because of his love for them and his dream of a United Asia. Only, however, if India was true to her traditions could she be worthy of the role she ought to play. It would be cruel to spoil Jawaharlal's dream of a United Asia by internal strife in this land.

Gandhiji concluded his address by saying that there could be no end to strife until and unless they made over their hearts to God. Today he felt that he himself had no following. If he had, then these tragedies would not have happened; but even if all deserted him, he knew God would not and He would direct him in his duty. Only when God reigned in men's hearts would they be able to shed their anger.

2-4-'47

Gandhiji did not hold his prayer meeting this evening also because two or three persons objected to the recitation from the Quran.

When Gandhiji was about to start the prayer, he asked the audience if there was anyone present who intended objecting to the recitation from the Quran, as a person had objected to it the day before. Two or three persons from among the gathering objected to it and asked him on what authority he could recite verses from the Quran in a Hindu temple.

Gandhiji said that the temple belonged to the bhangi community who did not object to the manner in which he conducted the prayer; and as a bhangi he had a right to pray in the temple as he wished. Those who objected to the recitation from the Quran were neither bhangis nor would they like to become bhangis.

Although most of the people assured him of their willingness to hear the prayer, Gandhiji refused to conduct the prayer and said that he would again concede victory to the few objectors. But this certainly was not a victory for the Hindu religion. Gandhiji added that the next day he would again ask the same question and await a reply.

When one man referred to the sufferings of the Hindus in the Punjab, Gandhiji said that hot words could not wipe the tears of the Punjab and added that whatever power he had was dedicated to the service of sufferers in the Punjab, Bihar and Noakhali.

3-4-'47

Gandhiji abandoned his prayer this evening also when a few members of the audience objected to the recitation from the Quran. He advised the audience to disperse peacefully after observing a few minutes' silence and said that prayer was for remembering God and for purifying the heart and could be offered even when observing silence.

Before starting the prayers Gandhiji stated that he had received a letter asking him either to discontinue recitations from the Quran or leave the Valmiki Temple (where he is staying). He asked the people present if there was any one among them who objected to the recitation of verses from the Quran. When a number of people raised their hands and said that they would not allow him to pray if verses from the Quran were recited, Gandhiji decided not to hold the prayers.

In the course of his speech, Gandhiji asked the audience if they had understood the beauty and truth of what had been said the previous day. He said that he was not one to refrain from doing what he held to be his duty, but his non-violence dictated that even if a boy objected to his holding the prayer meeting, he should refrain from doing so. But this should in no way be interpreted as cowardice. He did not hold the prayers in order to prevent argument and violence. Violence, he said, was the work of the devil and all his life he had fought against it.

Gandhiji added that he would ask those who were against his holding the prayer meeting not to come or if they did, they should come by themselves and kill him if they wanted to. Even if he was killed, Gandhiji said, he would not give up repeating the names of Rama and Rahim, which meant to him the same God. With these names on his lips he would die cheerfully.

If he refrained from repeating the names of Rama and Rahim how could he, Gandhiji asked, face the Hindus of Noakhali and the Muslims of Bihar?

He asked those who wanted the prayer to be held not to entertain anger or malice towards the obstructionists but to pity them. Anger and desire for revenge were no service to Hinduism, he said.

When the two sections of the audience began to quarrel among themselves as he was about to go away, Gandhiji addressed the crowd for about fifteen minutes standing. He said that anger would lead them nowhere. They should think how best they could heal the wounds of the Punjab, and not abuse anybody, as this was against their religion.

4-4-'47

Gandhiji commenced by asking whether there were any objectors today on the prayer ground. A member of the Hindu Mahasabha asked to be allowed to say a few words of apology for the occurrences of the last three days. He wished to dissociate himself and fellow members from this behaviour. The prayer ground was not the place for disagreement. If they had to fight any issue with Gandhiji, they should do so outside. He appealed to the audience to be quiet and let the prayer proceed without let or hindrance.

There was only one person who objected to the prayers with the verse from the Quran Sharif being held in a Hindu temple. Gandhiji said that that was an objection which only the Harijans of that place could raise. The objectionist then withdrew his objection. The Harijans of the place, Gandhiji proceeding said, were sad at the happenings of the last three days. They were his younger brothers. He was a bhangi and it was the duty of a true bhangi and therefore a true Hindu to cleanse not only the dirt of the body but also all the pollution of the mind and the spirit. The true Hindu saw Truth in every religion. The essence of the Quran verse was found in every religion.

Gandhiji told them how friends from Rawalpindi had today come and narrated all the atrocities that had been perpetrated there. They wanted his service and his help and guidance. They could not understand the objection raised here to the recital of the Quran verse. Even Muslims had never stopped the holding of prayers even though some of them objected to the recital of the verse in question.

The Vedas, Gandhiji said, were from time immemorial. So were the Upanishads. But they were imperfectly known. Any impurities that had crept in any of the scriptures were due to the fact that they were written many years later. The Hindu religion was a great religion and had infinite toleration in it and powers of absorption. God was everywhere as the Harijan woman saint told her young questioner. He was the ruler of men's hearts. He only wanted single-minded worship in whatsoever form it be and whatsoever language. It was, therefore, wholly un-Hindu and irreligious to object to the great verse from the Quran Sharif being recited.

The full prayer was then held. After the prayer Gandhiji addressed the gathering again.

He said that it had hurt him much to think that on three days they had not been able to hold the prayer and hundreds had been disappointed because of the unenlightened objection of a few. But, if prayer had been in their hearts, they really had not missed the worship. He himself was grateful to the objectors because they had given him ample opportunity for heart searching. He had asked himself whether, because he had not been able to calm them, there was anything against them in his heart. If they had understood the inner meaning of the bhajan sung that day, they should have understood that it was right for them to take everything that came from God as a gift. Gandhiji felt glad that he had gone through the test. Even if three or four had said that they would kill him for saying Rama and Rahim in the same breath, he hoped he would die smiling with those very names on his lips.

Gandhiji went on to say how in Noakhali it was difficult to have the Ramadhun but there too he was able to continue his customary worship. All would be well if there was no anger or malice in their hearts. How could it be a sin to chant God's name in Arabic? Gandhiji implored them not to degrade Hinduism by not understanding their immortal scriptures. Everyone should be at liberty to pray as he liked.

Some people imagined that he was engaged in big tasks here and had forgotten the suffering areas. God alone knew how his heart wept and what agony he suffered at the madness the people had indulged in in Noakhali, Bihar and now in the Punjab. He assured them that he was working for those areas wherever he was, even in his talks with the Viceroy. There was no bigger task for him than to strive for Hindu-Muslim unity. He could not serve India if he forgot Noakhali, Bihar or the Punjab. He claimed to be a servant of God. He neither ate nor drank nor did anything else except at God's bidding. They would, perhaps, understand his work better in the fullness of time. Meantime he must continue his duty wherever God took him.

5-1-'47

Before commencing the prayer, Gandhiji again asked whether there was anyone amongst the gathering who would rather that he did not conduct the customary prayer. There were no objectors and Gandhiji was glad. He reminded them once again of the folly of looking upon one religion as better than another. The recent happenings were due, he was sure, to the atmosphere of hate that pervaded the land today. If they remained calm in the midst of the storm, then only would they grow in strength. He reminded them of how Maulana Mohammed Ali, in the good old days of the Khilafat movement when the Hindu and the Muslim fought side by side, had said that their mightiest weapon was the charkha and their most potent bullets the cones of yarn which they span. Gandhiji had pointed out that the Congress could only join the Khilafat movement if they would fight non-violently and the condition had been gladly accepted in the name of Allah. It was the result of that non-violent fight that India was today on the threshold of independence.

Gandhiji went on to remind the audience that the next day was the beginning of the National Week. He related how the thought of a 24 hours' fast had come to him one night in a dream, how he had consulted Rajaji whose guest he then was in Madras, how the idea had appealed to the latter, how notices had been issued at once and what a widespread and hearty response there had been to the call. He had never dreamt that the country had been so awakened, and by the country he meant not the few cities of India but the seven lakhs of villages where the vast mass of Indian humanity lived. Gandhiji appealed to the audience to respond to the call once again but only if they understood its implications. The fast was undertaken in those days for the sake of vindicating Swaraj through Hindu-Muslim unity, and the charkha, etc. Today alas! all that the Congress tricolour stood for, viz. Hindu-Muslim-Sikh unity and the charkha were nowhere to be found except in his humble hut. He, however, asked the assemblage, in any event, to contemplate on what internal strife meant, to forgive and forget what had happened and to bear no malice in their hearts for all the tragic and bestial happenings of Noakhali, Bihar and the Punjab. He still believed more strongly than ever that the spinning wheel was the truest symbol of non-violence. It was the one thing that never failed through its music to give solace to the mind and soothe the troubled heart. If, therefore, they truly desired to extinguish the volcano of hatred that was that day pouring out its poisonous lava, he hoped they would join him in fasting in the true spirit. The fast signified much more than processions and flag-hoisting ceremonies.

The whole of India, Gandhiji said, could be a Pakistan if they looked upon every fellow Indian as a brother. If Hindustan meant a land only for the Hindus and Pakistan only for the Muslims, Pakistan and Hindustan would then be lands flowing with poison. The land of his dreams, he said, was a land watered by rivers of love.

Gandhiji then made a moving reference to Deenabandhu Andrews whose death anniversary fell on April 5th. Such a friend of India needed no special reference from him for his memory was ever green. He was an Indian at heart and nevertheless a true Englishman.

In conclusion, Gandhiji said that he had received a letter, which he would release to the press, from the Rashtriya Seva Sangha, that they had had nothing to do with the raising of objections to the prayer on the three previous days. He was glad to hear that and believed it. No organization could protect life or religion if it did not work absolutely in the open.

6-4-'47

Addressing the prayer gathering, Gandhiji drew their attention to the lovely Bengali bhajan to which they had been treated that evening as also to the Ramadhun which included the names of both Rama and Rahim, Krishna and Karim. As these were being sung, he said, the vistas of Noakhali came before his eyes. That bhajan was often sung there. Sometimes it was sung and the Ramadhun chanted as they walked from village to village.

The day was the first day of the National Week—a day of fasting and prayer. There was sacrificial spinning also from 3 p. m. to 4 p. m. in which the Congress President and his wife and Jawaharlalji and other leaders took part. The fast would soon be broken but how good it would be, said Gandhiji, if the names of Rama and Rahim and the message of the bhajan were engraved in their hearts for all time as a result of that day's rededication. He went on to say how some abused him, how some thought he had grown too big even to reply to their letters and how others accused him of enjoying himself in Delhi while the Punjab was in flames. How could these persons understand that he was working day and night for them wherever he was? He could not dry their tears. God alone could do that, but he would go at once to the Punjab when the call came. It grieved him to sense the existing hatred and spirit of revenge and warned them that unless they calmed and purified their hearts, they would light such a fire throughout the land as would consume them all. He reminded them of the story of the Mahabharata which was not a history of India but of man. It was the story of the fight between the worshippers of Rama, the embodiment of good and Ravana, the embodiment of evil. They fought—the Pandavas and the Kauravas—blood-brothers, and what was the result? While evil was certainly defeated only seven of the victors remained to tell the tale. This, said Gandhiji, was the state of the country today.

He made a touching reference to the brave old Nationalist Muslim Khwaja Abdul Majid, who had come to see him that day. Would that those good old days when heart-unity between the Hindus and the Muslims existed returned! Today in Bihar Nationalist Muslims had been killed by the Hindus and Hindu friends of Islam had been done to death by Muslims.

Gandhiji exhorted the audience to pause and think where they were drifting. He begged of the Hindus not to harbour anger in their hearts against the Muslims even if the latter wanted to destroy them. None should fear death. Death was inevitable for every human being. But if they died smiling, they would enter into a new life—they would create a new Hindustan. The second chapter of the Gita described in its ending shlokas how the God-fearing man should live and move and have his being. He wanted them to read, mark, learn and inwardly digest the meaning of every one of those shlokas. They would then realize what their ideals were and how far short of them they had fallen today. On the eve of independence it was their duty to ask themselves whether they were fit to have it and sustain it.

NOTES

Harijan Bastis

A correspondent informs us that a friend, who attended a dinner in the Harijan quarters in honour of a worker among Harijans, was not allowed to enter his rented house in the caste locality by some neighbours—Vaishyas and Brahmans. The friend had to find asylum in the house of a Congress worker elsewhere.

It is suggested that the provincial governments should now allocate sites within the caste village for Harijans for residential purposes and should not continue the present system of segregating Harijans to a special locality.

We quite agree with the sentiments. In matters of this kind public opinion should influence Government action. The case cited should impel every one who has the cause of the Harijans at heart to develop the necessary outlook.

Living Soil Associations

While India is building fertilizer factories Australia is forming Living Soil Associations to restore the fertility of soils that have been drained of humus and to educate the public to appreciate the value of humus in soil conservation.

Plants grown with compost manure are said to be more disease resistant and animals fed on them show considerable immunity to common ills, and human food drawn from such sources is conducive to health and confer immunity to sickness.

J. C. K.

CONTENTS	PAGE
STRIVE FOR ONE WORLD ... M. K. GANDHI	113
FIRST THINGS FIRST ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	114
ABOUT NOAKHALI	115
THE MESSAGE OF ASIA ... M. K. GANDHI	116
THE DELHI INTERLUDE	117
NOTES:
MORAL DEFECTS OF VICTORY ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	117
HARIJAN BASTIS ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	120
LIVING SOIL ASSOCIATIONS ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	120

HARIJAN

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. XI, No. 14

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, MAY 4, 1947

TWO ANNAS

GANDHIJI'S BIHAR TOUR DIARY

14-4-'47

In the course of his post-prayer speech at Bankipur maidan this evening Gandhiji said that he had heard disquieting news from Noakhali. Satis Babu and also Haran Babu had both informed him about the rapidly deteriorating situation, giving facts and figures. If what he had heard proved to be true, he might have to fast, since by going to Bihar while his work in Noakhali was still unfinished he had earned the right of fasting against misdeeds in Noakhali. That did not, however, mean that fasting was a certainty. He, however, felt bound to hint at the possibility.

Gandhiji also referred to his talks with the Viceroy at Delhi and said that both in public and private conversations the Viceroy declared that he was going to be the last Viceroy of India, and that also only up to June 30, 1948.

Gandhiji felt that the Viceroy was honest in his profession. The British were already preparing for transfer of power. Gandhiji felt that he realized that the transfer of power must be peaceful if Britain was to escape the charge that, during her reign of more than a century she had brought up nothing but fight among ourselves. It was a sad sight that while freedom was almost within their grasp they were fighting among themselves. All the important members of the Congress, whether in the Interim Government or outside it, were trying their best to grasp freedom and to establish peace in the country, freeing it from at least the major portion of the evils of the old order.

15-4-'47

After the prayer Gandhiji said that while he was in Delhi he received letters from Bihar, some couched in thoughtless language, some in the language of praise and a few expressing doubt if he was ever returning to Bihar to finish his work. The last needed no reply. Praise was wholly unnecessary for one doing one's duty as he was doing his. He, however, singled out one letter which he thought was based on pure ignorance. It doubted the wisdom of the speaker leaving his work in Noakhali and coming to Bihar at the instance of Dr. Syed Mahmud and daring to accept his hospitality.

The critic forgot that Dr. Mahmud was Gandhiji's friend and that he had known Dr. Mahmud's father-in-law before he knew the late Brij Kishore Prasad of revered memory or Dr. Rajendra Prasad. In his opinion Dr. Mahmud had rendered a service to the Hindus and the Muslims of Bihar by bringing him to Bihar. For, if Bihar remained sane in the midst of possible madness throughout India, Bihar would raise India in the estimation of the world and leave to the world a singular example of sanity in the midst of surrounding insanity. This he had a right to expect by right of service and more so because the Bihar Hindus, however illiterate they might be, were votaries of Rama, the incarnation of all the good in the world. Although evil seemed at times to rule the world, the eternal truth was that the world lived so long as goodness resided even in one person. Evil was naught. If Bihar remained good in the midst of temptation, it was well with it, and well with the whole of India.

The insinuation that there was a sinister motive behind drawing him away from Noakhali, namely that the Noakhali Muslims might be free from his (Gandhiji's) restraining influence, was so flimsy to bear examination. For, if he succeeded wholly in Bihar, it was as impossible for very shame that the Noakhali Muslims should go mad.

At the end Gandhiji announced that the heat was too great for him to stand the strain of motoring extensively and working the whole day. He found it necessary to have frequent intervals of rest if he was to go through a fair amount of work. And he had ample to do in Patna. Incidentally he mentioned that he would try each evening to cover important points of interest to the public.

16-4-'47

Gandhiji referred to a statement which he had signed at the suggestion of the Viceroy while he was in Delhi. The act had the consent of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and other members of the Working Committee. Qaid-e-Azam Jinnah had also signed it. The terms of the document were:

"We deeply deplore the recent acts of lawlessness and violence that have brought the utmost disgrace on the fair name of India and greatest misery to innocent people, irrespective of who were the aggressors and who were the victims.

"We denounce for all time the use of force to achieve political ends, and we call upon all the communities of India, to whatever persuasion they may belong, not only to refrain from all acts of violence and disorder, but also to avoid both in speech and writing, any word which might be construed as an incitement to such acts."

So far as his signature was concerned it had no value for he had never believed in violence. But it was significant that Qaid-e-Azam Jinnah had signed it. If the spirit of the appeal was adhered to by the signatories, and there was no reason why it should not be, they could hope that all the trouble and bloodshed would cease. It might be that they would now enable him to leave Bihar and do other work.

They might well ask why his signature was taken and not of the members of the Working Committee or of the Congress President. He could not go into the matter. He confessed that he represented nobody but himself. Nevertheless, the signatures laid a heavy responsibility on both of them. He had not signed the appeal only on behalf of any one community. It meant assuming responsibility for all communities. He claimed that all religions were equal. A similar claim could be advanced on the Qaid-e-Azam's behalf since the appeal was issued not only to one community but to all the communities. And there was a time when Jinnah Sahab had a high position in the Congress.

The Viceroy should be congratulated on bringing about the unique document. No doubt it would have been better if such a document had been signed as between the Congress and the League without any outsider's intervention. He hoped, however, that there would now be cooperation between the two bodies.

17-4-'47

At the prayer meeting today Gandhiji drew attention to the fact that for the sake of the Muslim friends who wished to join the prayers—and the day had grown longer—the prayer time was advanced by fifteen minutes. He also warned those who were inclined to laugh at the selections from the Quran and other scriptures against the practice. They ought to cultivate the same regard for other religions that they had for their own. Not to do so was to belittle one's own faith and expose it to attacks from without.

After the prayer he referred to the visits he had from Muslim friends who complained to him that in and about Bihar Sharif and Monghyr things were not quite favourable to the return of the refugees. If the information was correct, he was very sorry. The heat was so oppressive that he had not the heart to undertake arduous travelling during the hot weather but he would have no other recourse if the Hindus in those places had not the spirit of repentance and did not resume their friendliness towards their Muslim neighbours, no matter how few they were. It was suggested to him that arms should be issued to the Muslims who were in fear of their Hindu neighbours. Those who made such suggestions did not know him. He would not issue any license to the Muslims or to the Hindus for the purpose of self-defence. It was a sign of barbarity. He would even take away the arms from those who had them already. Their arms were a living faith in God and a stout heart born of that faith.

He had also a visit from the zamindars who, among other things, had complained of growing lawlessness among the peasantry and labour. He deplored the fact. It was a blot on the fair name of Bihar. Such lawlessness was criminal and was bound to involve the very peasantry and labour in ruin, let alone the zamindars who were after all a mere handful. He fervently hoped that the lesson of the past thirty years in the virtue of non-violence would not be lost upon the people of Bihar. He was quite prepared to say for the sake of argument that the zamindars were guilty of many crimes and of omissions and commissions. But that was no reason for the peasant and the labourer who were the salt of the earth to copy crime. If salt lost its savour wherewith could it be salted?

18-4-'47

Gandhiji said in his post-prayer speech that he was told that he had done an injustice to the peasants and the labourers in his remarks of the previous evening. He was further told that it was the zamindars who continued the old coercive policy. Wherever the truth lay, his remarks were based on the assumption that what he was told was true. The kisans had a rich experience of non-violent satyagraha when their amazing restraint brought about the end of a century-old wrong in the shape of the indigo grievance and planters' raj in Champaran. He hoped they would not forget the lesson of that rich experience.

To the landlords he said that if what was said against them was true, he would warn them that their days were numbered. They could no longer continue as lords and masters. They had a bright future if they became the trustees of the poor kisans. He had in mind not trustees in name but in reality. Such trustees would take nothing for themselves that their labour and care did not entitle them to. Then they would find that no law would be able to touch them. The kisans would be their friends.

He next referred to the complaint he had received about a punitive tax that was levied. He felt that the State had no other alternative if the people would not give up the criminals. Nor could the State carry out mass arrests where hundreds and thousands were involved in shameful crimes. Punitive tax was then the only remedy. The only way by which the people could render the punitive tax unnecessary was to repent and undo the wrong done by voluntary labour and contributions. They should also approach the injured Muslims and request them to go back to their homes. They should assure them that they would regard them as their dear ones.

19-4-'47

After the usual prayers Gandhiji in his remarks referred to two letters he had received: one from the Punjab from a lady known to him and the other a very well written letter from a Bihari who had chosen not to give his address and probably had given an assumed name. Both were friendly letters but written in anger. They had lost faith in ahimsa and practically advised retirement and save the speaker's good name which he had earned by his service. These friends did not know the virtue of ahimsa. His dream was not that some persons, the soldiers and the police, should save their honour, but every man and woman should be the custodian of his or her own honour. This was possible only under the rule of ahimsa and no other. He was never tired of repeating that the highest form of bravery was to be expressed through ahimsa. The people of Bihar had before them the example of the ahimsa of the indigo-growing peasants of Champaran who were able to bring to an end a century old wrong.

Gandhiji then dealt with khadi. He said that during the next four or five days he would be having meetings of the All India Spinners' Association and the Hindustani Talimi Sangh. He was not, therefore, going to see local people in connection with the Bihar disturbances. He would have to talk to them of khadi which above all was responsible for an India-wide activity in the villages of India. He made bold to say that without the constructive activity of which khadi or the charkha was the centre, the awakening of the villages would not have been possible. He reminded the audience how under the late Jinnah's inspiration an All India Khadi Board was established during his incarceration and how it was turned into the All India Spinners' Association with an autonomous charter from the Congress and how it had distributed several crores of rupees among men and women of India's numerous villages. Khadi had easily become the symbol of non-violence. The truth of khadi had been so firmly fixed in their minds that the spinning wheel had found a place on the much-prized tri-colour flag. Khadi had been happily described by Pandit Nehru as the livery of India's freedom. Though as an article of clothing it belonged as well to the harlot as to the chaste woman, for the nation its association was undoubtedly with the pure and the non-violent. If therefore khadi had not found an abiding place in all the villages of India, as the President of the Association he had no hesitation in accepting the blame on behalf of himself and his fellow trustees. Their devotion to the cause was not as full as it should have been, their knowledge of the science of khadi, its technique, was not as deep as it should have been, nor were the tapashcharya and sacrifice adequate to the occasion. Therefore, whilst much was done much more was still to be done before khadi could take its supreme place in the foundation of Swaraj to be.

20-4-47

After the prayers Gandhiji reverted to the subject of khadi and announced that the Charkha Sangh had acceded to the proposal of Shri Laxmi Babu and his colleagues that they should be wholly independent of the material support of the Sangh while keeping its purely moral authority. Gandhiji said that if he was the Prime Minister of Bihar and had to select the members of his Government, the latter would stop all new mills and would expect those already established in Bihar to sell all their manufactures at controlled rates outside India and thus gain for Bihar the estimation of the world for generosity. For, there was shortage of cloth everywhere in the world. He would prevent with the consent of people the sale of mill-cloth in Bihar. Fortunately or unfortunately for Bihar he was not its Prime Minister. Nevertheless, such was the ambition of the Charkha Sangh in acceding to Laxmi Babu's proposal. The expectation was that Laxmi Babu and his colleagues by reason of their independence of the Sangh could be better able to push forth their khadi programme and make it so popular that Bihar would become wholly independent of mill-cloth. He held that this was quite possible if the people of Bihar gave their whole-hearted cooperation. The villages of Bihar would hum with the soothing music of the charkha and the loom. They would bring vitality to the villages of Bihar. Khadi would cease to be an article of commerce. The cities like Patna would also be manufacturing their own khadi. The children of the schools and the students of the colleges would gladly and religiously set apart a certain portion of their time daily for this very necessary constructive work. The city women would equally be expected to do no less. With diligence and will, they would become self-supporting in the matter of khadi. Then and then only would khadi find its natural place in the economy of the nation. The drudgery of the mill would give place to the joy of creation in their homes and schools. Gandhiji drew attention to the fact that whereas the mills needed to import machinery and even skill, to an extent, from outside, all the parts required for the charkha and the loom and the required skill were to be found in their villages. He wished, therefore, that the new experiment would find favour with the people of Bihar. It was in that hope that Laxmi Babu and his co-workers had approached their labour of love.

STORY HOUR

(Continued from Vol XI, No. 9, Page 103)

[The following is from Samuel Smiles' Character (John Murray). — V. G. D.]

XII

"In those days the lands were tilled by the hands even of generals, the soil exulting beneath a plough-share crowned with laurels, and guided by a husbandman graced with triumphs."

Pliny's Natural History

XIII

In the course of a conversation with Madame Campan, Napoleon remarked: "The old systems of instruction seem to be worth nothing; what is yet wanting in order that the people should be properly educated?" "MOTHERS", replied Madame Campan. The reply struck the Emperor, "Yes," said he, "here is a system of education in one word. Be it your care, then, to train up mothers who shall know how to educate their children."

AIME' MARTIN

XIV

Once at St. Helena, when walking with Mrs. Balcombe, some servants came along carrying a load. The lady in an angry tone ordered them out of the way, on which Napoleon interposed, saying, "Respect the burden, madame".

HARIJAN

May 4

1947

INCREASING PRODUCTION

The keynote of the Presidential speech of Seth B. L. Jalan at the Marwari Chamber of Commerce, Calcutta, is 'increasing production' and 'improving the standard of living of the masses in the country'. These two phrases are being bandied about at every convenient occasion. They were largely in evidence in Pandit Jawaharlal's speech also at the Manufacturers' Association meeting recently. But what these phrases mean is hardly ever defined. These words are, therefore, little more than slogans to capture the imagination of the unwary and to convince the unthinking public which is generally carried away by much talking.

In a country where people are starving and where there is not enough cloth to go round, these phrases should carry the meaning of providing at least the mere necessities of the people—food and clothing. Our effort should, therefore, be directed towards giving two meals a day where one cannot be obtained today. And our effort should be to enable the people to be clad at least against the weather if not to satisfy their aesthetic sense.

Seth Jalan appears to be more concerned with developing his industries than with the needs of the people, for he goes on to say, 'if India is to develop her industries on a permanent footing, the Government must follow a policy of export drive even though we might have to suffer some privation for some time,' and he states that his firm conviction is that the industrial development of India cannot be put on a sound footing unless the products of Indian industries are exported abroad. He recommends our Government to base their 'proposals on the principles of an expansionist policy of production advocated by Lord Keynes,—'the more you eat of the cake the larger it becomes.' He believes that the social objectives of the Finance Member can be fulfilled only by such a policy. We are glad that he has confessed openly Lord Keynes to be his guru. And the hope that 'the more you eat of the cake the larger it becomes' however absurd it may seem to the common sense of us ordinary mortals, it can easily be made feasible by these demigods who eat the cake no doubt, but the cake is not theirs but others'. Herein lies the secret of this apparent miracle. Of course if they merely ate other people's cake, their own cake ought to remain constant. But the method of doing this is generally to bite off from the other people's cake a larger piece than you can eat. That of course makes their cake grow larger.

PRODUCTION OR DESTRUCTION?

In a previous article we had pointed out that the methods adopted by the recent types of large-scale industries have been anything but progressive. And also we had shown instances to indicate how they were using Science to destroy rather than create. This being so, it would be well to examine the proposition: how to increase production? When we, with the help of rice mills, produce unwholesome polished rice, can we call it increasing production? Is it not destruction of the production of the paddy by the farmer? Similarly, when sugar mills produce white sugar from sugar-cane juice and thus provide a less nutritive product, and perhaps, devitalize the wholesome juice of the sugar-cane, again would we be using the term 'increasing production' correctly? Is this also not an instance of destruction of nature's gifts? There can be an increase in production over what is found in nature if man's efforts result in an increase not only quantitatively but also qualitatively. When a farmer sows a seed and reaps a hundredfold because of his effort, we are justified in saying that the farmer has increased production. But when we look around at most of the efforts of the mill owners and measure their output and compare it with nature's generous gifts we can only say that the machines have been utilized by man for destruction rather than production, much less for increased production.

SHIFTING CROPS

In Bihar and in large sections of the U. P. thousands of acres have been brought under cultivation of sugar-cane. Formerly these lands were not waste lands. If they had been waste lands and the sugar-cane was an addition to the general production, we would be justified in calling it an increase of production. Before the advent of sugar-cane cultivation Biharis used their lands for rice cultivation and consumed hand pounded wholesome rice; but now the crops have been shifted with the result that they cultivate sugar-cane and are dependent on Burma for their rice. And Burmese rice comes polished—that means all the nutrition is removed as in pure starch. However much the sugar-cane crop may have been increasing the bank balances of the mill owners, can we, by any stretch of imagination, lay claim to having increased production when we drive the masses of people from the nutritive rice of their own cultivation to devitalized polished rice imported from outside? This shifting of crops from food to raw materials for mills is not only a disservice to the country but is injurious to the health of the people. It is not "increasing production" when we are shifting the crops from food to long staple cotton for the mills and tobacco and groundnut for export. At best it can be said to be pilfering and not production. This is the kind of increase that has been taking place in the country and which has led to considerable distress to the people in meeting their primary needs.

In the same way, in Malabar the former rice lands have been converted into cocoanut groves and these cocoanut groves are producing cocoanuts not for human consumption but for oil for soap mills. Is producing Lux soap in however large a quantity, an increase of production when this is done at the cost of the people's staple food? The people who were formerly cultivating rice are at present being given polished rice imported from Brazil. Hence in the final analysis the mill owners' efforts have resulted in the provision of Brazilian polished rice to the people who were once eating wholesome unpolished rice of their own production and converted those rice lands into producing raw material for soap-making. Is this increased production? And is this striving to raise the standard of living of the masses? We can well see that the mill owners have eaten some cake and at the same time the stock of the cake has increased. But what is the state of the common people?

When crops have been shifted deliberately from the production of staple food to raw materials for luxury goods is it any wonder that the country is facing famine after famine? If we really strive for greater production, our endeavours should have by now brought us to a more satisfactory supply of our primary needs. But when we look around we find confirmation of the observation of Seth Jalan that "the country today is suffering from the acutest shortage of food. It is an irony of fate that India which is primarily an agricultural country is now dependent upon imports of food stuffs to feed her population." Should we wonder at this stage? Seth Jalan has unconsciously confessed the truth. The fact cannot be belied and the deduction that our efforts, such as they have been, have resulted in decreased production cannot be missed.

STANDARD OF LIVING

In a country suffering from unemployment and underemployment even the method of production should be such as to solve this great problem. Methods we have adopted so far of "increasing production" have invariably led to increased unemployment. What is known in Western countries as labour-saving devices can be better expressed as labour-displacing devices, or in other words, devices for creating unemployment. In resorting to these large-scale methods of production, the millowners have adversely affected the standard of living of the masses. Our famines are becoming perennial even at times when nature's contributions have been generous. Is this not an indication that with all this much talk of increasing the standard of living, we are really lowering the standard of existence?

Pandit Jawaharlal expresses the hope that the "industrial progress and the prosperity of the 400 million people are inter-related, that he does not want any industrial development if the 400 million people are going to be in a bad way, and that progress must bring progress to all the people and not to a few chosen ones." "We have to think of it in terms of the masses of this country." We invite the attention of Panditji to the facts of the case for increased production that have been stated above, and we would like him to consider whether we can increase production of the type he envisages by centralized methods of production in consumption goods. Let him take stock of the increased distress that has come to our land in the wake of our efforts put out in that direction in the past.

We are all one with Panditji when he wants to advance the cause of the masses and strives for the progress of the country. But we would submit to him that this must be done scientifically, not merely to satisfy the greed for acquisition of wealth for a few. So far as we have seen, science has been harnessed not for production but for destruction. In the Interim Government the Finance Member the Hon'ble Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan has enunciated a sound proposition of social objectives and he has indicated to his colleagues how courage may be taken in both hands and how the cause of the masses of the people could be advanced. We trust this leadership will have its effect on the whole Government.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

JETTISONING OF THE BALLAST

The Madras Government dropped their pilot-Prakasam not so long ago. Now comes the news that the items on his programme are being abandoned one by one. We are sorry to note that the Minister for Agriculture is throwing overboard certain of the schemes to procure and distribute food stuffs under the plea that these schemes have not the full consent and willing cooperation of the people and it is also decided not to proceed with the Estates and Revenue Bill which declared that the ryot was the owner of the soil and not the zamindar. Again under some plea or the other the programme for the introduction of producer-cum-consumer cooperative societies for dealing in food grains and other essential village articles are being abandoned in favour of the middleman. All these steps appear to us as definitely retrogressive. It looks as though the vested interests are asserting themselves. Has the Madras Ministry no social objective but that of drifting before the vocally strong?

While the Madras Ministry is giving reasons why it should abandon multi-purpose cooperative societies, their colleague Dr. K. N. Katju of the U. P. Government is giving strong reasons why he should push on with the same scheme on a much wider scale in every village so as to concentrate attention on better farming, dairying, spinning of yarn, and marketing of the articles produced. It is a strange sight that the so-called Congress Governments should be pulling in different directions in the different provinces. Naturally we are justified in our conclusion that the branches are not receiving sap from the same trunk and whims and fancies and local influence seem to carry the day.

If we are to serve the masses, such service can only be in one direction and requires the cooperative efforts of all concerned. Hence, we hope that the newly formed Constructive Programme Committee of the A. I. C. C. will provide the needed coordination unit for all the different provincial ministries. We have difficult oceans to cross and storms to weather. The ship of State with the Congress at its helm cannot afford to lose its ballast at the very commencement if we do mean to weather the storm that seems to be lowering heavily over us from all directions. Let us, therefore, read the signs of the times and prepare ourselves as a team to work for the people of the land. In such a programme alone lies the strength and safety of the Congress.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

ONE WORLD, ONE PROBLEM

Suffering unites the world in a queer way. It often tars the globe with one brush. Leprosy affords an illustration of this truth. All over the world there is the same neglect of the human needs of the leprosy patient and a superstitious dread of the disease. It is worth pondering why in a world of enlightenment and boasted progress, people should regard leprosy as they did thousands of years ago when the only surgeon known was the crude barber. Ignorance and prejudice perhaps account a great deal for the situation; but there is a deeper reason: man's failure in fellowship. The appeal of leprosy is essentially an appeal to the conscience of Man.

Below are given extracts from letters by correspondents living in countries where leprosy is a serious problem.

From Rizal, Philippines, writes Josephine Guerrero who, a patient herself, lives in the Novaliches Leprosarium "under the triple inspiration of great faith, great courage and great patriotism" trying to cheer up her less brave companions:

"The inside story of the life of the leper in the poor and sadly abandoned leper colony is too full of heartaches, misery and want. First, I want you to know that I am happy to suffer in God's love, for what joy can be greater? It would not be human, however, to tell you that I am never otherwise; nor would it be true. There are moments of unspeakable loneliness, of unexplained longings and yearnings in which one's heart is tried to the core. But I feel that our Lord desires this strange hidden life for me for reasons I shall never know until He calls me Home. So I have made no oblation and only ask that He may give grace and strength enough to follow His will. But my companions are not so easily led like children; I fear many are grown bitter or despairing, futile, helpless, depraved and hateful. The rest are simply apathetic or cynically indifferent. I desire so much to alleviate all this human misery, and wish to be able at least to instil once more the feeling of hope, and to make their lives once more wholesome and bright."

After describing the miserable want prevailing in the colony, this brave heroine writes:

"Medicine: even that is not adequate. We have no laboratories here; we have no sufficient medical help; in short, this is not a hospital, it is a prison and the patients are classed not better than the criminals. They say the government is poor, yet it has funds for everything else. Why? Is it because the world has conspired against the leper? Because once a leper, always a leper? But I am being furious for nothing perhaps. I suppose the lot of the leper is simply like this. Or is it? Or should it be? I want to do something about it. The administration thinks the leper is cursed, that he is hopeless. Is the leper utterly to be blamed if he has learned to take the law in his own hands, has become rebellious, covetous and even repulsive? Living here I have learned that perhaps the blame does not lie wholly on the leper himself. Most of us are completely abandoned even by our families; the rest of us have no family."

Beryl A. Clarke writes from Virgin Islands U. S. A.:

"Out here leprosy seems to be taken for granted. A few people are put in the colony and not much done. On that account I am afraid there is little to tell about the work done here."

Louis A. Moreno from Cuba writes:

"It is only in recent years that our problem has been seriously taken into consideration and the Government at present is attending to it. There are plans to build new dispensaries in other cities and large colonies in the central section of the Island. All this depends upon our Congress granting a special budget."

Joseph L. Hislop writes from Chacachare, Trinidad:

"What I abhor most bitterly is the attitude adopted by the public towards the poor afflicted. Take a case in point where a young man was hounded down by a limb of the law and a doctor, as though he had committed some great crime and sent to the Leprosarium. He rallied with the disease and took treatment. He finally got paroled in three years. I say, this young man with a clean discharge certificate, duly signed by the leprologist as fit, was no danger to the public. He went in search for work and got a job as an oiler on one of the Government-run trains. He did his work well and promotion came his way as fireman, until some one who knew that he was at one time a patient at the Leprosarium reported his case to the General Manager who in turn gave him a laid off ticket for an indefinite period. "Fired in smart"! He got another job and the same fate attended him. He again sought another, this time as a chauffeur to the manager of a theatre. He was doing well until some one again reported to the manager that he was at the leper settlement. When the boss heard that, he flew out of his car and asked the man to get out and paid him off on the spot, and in the haste of paying off this man two twenty dollar bills were mixed in the money. The man not wanting to be dishonest returned the overchange to the manager who refused it on the ground that he was a leper. The young man in his thirties could have stood the torture of the stigma no longer; he committed suicide by hanging himself in his room."

A. H. Pipe of Southern Rhodesia, Africa, writing of the resignation of Dr. B. Moiser O. B. E., writes:

"He left us in mid-April last, after having served here for seventeen years as the sole medical officer, and for most of that time without any European nursing staff and assistance; it was only in his last year that he had the help of a trained nursing sister and also of a welfare sister. This shortage of staff, and lack of response to his continued requests for assistance, together with more adequate accommodation and equipment, were the main reasons for his tendering his resignation." "Dr. Moiser practised the idea of voluntary treatment, with as much freedom, as possible, and was opposed to any form of force or coercion, believing that compulsion always defeated its own object by driving the disease underground. He holds that nowhere in the world can the compulsory system be shown to have stamped out or even appreciably decreased the incidence of the disease, whereas where voluntary segregation and treatment are encouraged many more cases will and do come forward. In his practice here, the Doctor actually kept the law in the background, having agreed on this point with the Medical Director of that time when he was appointed. In actual fact, there is an Ordinance for "Leprosy Suppression" which is still on the Statute Books of S. Rhodesia, and which, of course, was in force all the time the Doctor was here. But like many another law in this and most other countries, it was administered "benevolently", and was only there if required in exceptional circumstances. Unfortunately, since the Doctor's departure, it has been decided, apparently, to apply the principles of compulsory segregation to Southern Rhodesia, and the position here is now that patients are compelled to come here and to remain here if they are residents or citizens of the Colony. In this respect, the practice now conforms to that of the neighbouring Union.

"It must, however, be admitted that general living conditions here are still considerably better than those at Westfort Institution, near Pretoria. The few Europeans here still have each a separate house or cottage with their own garden, and each is self-contained, whilst the six hundred odd African patients are not herded within barbed-wire, prison-like compounds, as is the case at Pretoria. Admittedly, the native compounds here are old and have served their time and purpose, and require to be replaced by more modern dwellings, but this is a question of a long-term development policy for the Health Department to tackle, when material and labour can be found. The present native quarters consist of six compounds, or large villages, comprising "kimberly" (unburnt) brick and thatched huts, nominally for two patients, but actually, in many cases, owing to present lack of accommodation, having to house as many as four, and in one or two extreme cases, five."

Letters from abroad also speak of new sulphone drugs which promise to give better results than chaulmoogra oil. They write enthusiastically of "Hope for the almost hopeless", "Hope reborn" etc. But even a specific cannot alleviate the human misery caused by leprosy if ignorance and fear were not abolished, and if neglect of the leprosy patient was not replaced by intelligent human care. At present it is estimated that only less than five per cent of the world's leprosy patients get any reasonable care and medical treatment. If 95% of the patients do not yet get even the chaulmoogra oil, new drugs which are costly and demand administration under controlled conditions will continue for long to be of academic rather than of practical interest, especially in a country like India where the dumb millions of villagers are left without any medical care. Why talk of drugs and treatment if you can't take them to the poor man? And as Perry Burgess, the President of the American Leprosy Foundation asks, "Why cure a man of his disease if he is never permitted during the rest of his life, to leave the prison of public abhorrence because of ignorance?" Let the clinician find a therapeutic agent. Let the bacteriologist culture the organism of leprosy. Let the investigator and field worker study leprosy in its environment. Let the welfare officer relieve the overburdened psychology and repair the damaged bodies and souls of the patient and restore him to something like a working life. But let each worker, whatever his particular field, be an energetic champion of the truth—the truth about leprosy which alone can release millions of patients from the age-old tyranny of ignorance, fear and prejudice. For leprosy speaks to us with an ancestral voice demanding from the enlightened today the redress of ancient wrongs.

Kasturba Leprosy Work Centre,
Kandachipuram
13-4-'47

T. N. JAGADISAN

A PROHIBITION ANTHOLOGY

[Continued from Vol. X, No. 43, Page 427]

(The author of 19 is the famous discoverer of vitamins, Sir Gowland Hopkins, O. M., ex-President of the Royal Society, Professor of Bio-chemistry, University of Cambridge. I take it from Alcohol-drinking by Dr. R. F. Rattray (Cambridge United Temperance Council). — V. G. D.]

19

"Alcohol is not a food. The argument that it has any food value at all is due to the fact that it is oxidized in the body. But citric and tartaric acids are also oxidized in the body, yet nobody would suggest that they are foods. The fact is that the oxidization of alcohol in the body is the result of the body's attempt to get rid of a poison. Alcohol is not a food capable of affording protection from the effects of cold.... One often meets with the implication that.... alcoholic beverages have a nutritional value apart from that supposed to belong to the alcohol they contain. Whisky and other spirits, of course, have none. The lighter wines contain mere traces of sugar, together with very small amounts of gum and glycerine, of negligible nutritive value. In order to obtain, at most, half an ounce of sugar, an intoxicating amount of most wines is required. Coming now to beer, I have, to say the truth, hardly patience to deal with the often suggested and sometimes vaunted nutritional value of that beverage. The claim, when not wholly insincere, is ridiculous. A pint of beer mostly sold today contains some carbohydrate material with a food value equal only to that of about one ounce of bread, but even this material is so much altered by fermentation that we do not know whether it has real value as food. In any case, the cost of an ounce of bread is a very small fraction of a penny, while that of a pint of beer is anything from five pence to eight pence. It is unfair, and even cruel that propaganda, subtle, suggestive and intensive, should endeavour to persuade the worker that his beer makes him more robust and increases the power of his muscles: thus tempting him to increased consumption and helping to salve his conscience when he knows that his expenditure is beyond his means." (National Temperance Quarterly)

SIR GOWLAND HOPKINS

REDDIAR MINISTRY AND KHADI

A recent press report from Madras states that the Reddiar Ministry has set apart certain funds for the improvement of the charkha. To be frank, this announcement is not at all encouraging. Whatever may have been the other drawbacks of the Prakasam Ministry, it had certainly given a very bold lead to the country in regard to the Gandhian type of economic planning. There may also have been a few gaps in the details of Mr. Prakasam's textile policy. But he sincerely believed in the potentialities of khadi and in the type of socio-economic organization which khadi symbolizes. The whole capitalist-controlled press stormed his textile policy continuously, but he stood firm like a rock. I am not concerned with the political aspect of the Madras ministerial crisis. Let me hope that the Prakasam Ministry was not overthrown on account of the textile policy, although several friends from the South inform me that it was Mr. Prakasam's khadi scheme which led to the political dust storm. Be that as it may, we expect that Mr. Reddiar will not betray khadi under the pressure of vested interests. The days of setting apart funds and announcing rewards for the improvement of the charkha are gone. If the Reddiar Ministry really believes in khadi and decentralized economic development, it should pursue a bold policy of rural industrialization. If, on the other hand, the new Ministry has no faith in Gandhian Economy, it should not waste a single pie on the charkha. The policy of paying lip-service to khadi to please Gandhiji really amounts to public dishonesty.

It has also been extremely painful to find that the attitude of the Interim Government has been most unhelpful in this connection. A few months back Gandhiji had strongly advised the Provincial Ministries to refuse the quota of spindles allotted to them by the Central Government. But the Interim Government announced that the Madras Government had no right to cancel the quota allotted to the Province. Whatever may be the constitutional difficulties involved in this question, the type of bureaucratic replies given by the Interim Government on the Madras textile policy were indeed very surprising and even shocking. The Congress can no longer follow a policy of 'drift' in regard to National Planning. It must announce a definite policy about India's economic development. The Provincial Congress Ministries should be given a clear-cut programme by the Congress Working Committee; each Province should not be left free to follow the ideas and 'whims' of individual Ministers in charge of Industrial Development.

Let me repeat that Gandhiji is not against all large-scale industries; he desires that the heavy or key industries should be nationalized. The consumers' goods industries should be decentralized on the widest scale. In place of mass production of the Western variety, there should be production by the masses in millions of cottage factories amid healthy surroundings. I need not go into the details here. The inquisitive reader can refer to my brochure on The Gandhian Plan of Economic Development. I would only fervently appeal to the national leaders once again to give a fair trial to the Gandhian Economy before finalizing schemes of economic development. I have no manner of doubt that nationalization of key industries and decentralization of most of the consumers' goods industries alone will be able to remedy the numerous economic ills that plague the modern world.

S. N. AGARWAL

A NOBLE LEAD

In a big jungle of date palms covering an area of about 6 sq. miles in Morvi State, the All India Village Industries Association has been carrying on some demonstration work in preparing gur from palm juice. The production of sugar from palm juice releases fertile land for the cultivation of other primary needs, specially cereals. Our experiments have been successful to the extent of convincing the Maharaja Saheb of Morvi of this programme of producing wealth out of waste lands. Now comes the news that the Maharaja Saheb has launched out on a programme of growing date palm trees in his State and he has inaugurated the scheme by planting palm trees himself. We congratulate the Maharaja Saheb on his venture and we hope that many more will follow the noble lead given by him.

We understand that the Maharaja Saheb is very keen to make every village self-sufficient in respect of jaggery and sugar by utilizing date palm juice. Apart from the fact that these palms supply energy-producing nutrition from waste lands, the palm tree itself supplies various other by-products which meet the other needs of the villages. It supplies timber, fibrous matter, leaves for mat-making, coir-making materials and other various useful articles can be made out of materials obtained from this tree. Hence, we are glad that a beginning has been made at least in a corner of India whereby the people are being taught to help themselves by being self-sufficient in their primary needs.

We may here mention that in one other direction also the Maharaja has been giving the lead and that is in cattle-breeding. India has been running short of good milk-yielding varieties and even her draft cattle have been steadily deteriorating owing to neglect of selective cattle-breeding. Hence, to revive rural life it is necessary to start well-laid out cattle-breeding farms all over the country. Such a progress is beyond the capacity of the ordinary citizen both because of the amount of capital involved and the time element needed. Hence we trust that other men of wealth and influence will also take to this noble occupation and hobby which will bring in health and well-being to the people of our land.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

CONTENTS	PAGE
GANDHIJI'S BIHAR TOUR DIARY	133
STORY HOUR ... V. G. D.	135
INCREASING PRODUCTION ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	136
JETTISONING OF THE BALLAST J. C. KUMARAPPA	137
ONE WORLD, ONE PROBLEM ... T. N. JAGADISAN	138
A PROHIBITION ANTHOLOGY V. G. D.	139
REDDIAR MINISTRY AND KHADI ... S. N. AGARWAL	140
A NOBLE LEAD ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	140

HARIJAN

12 Pages

Editor: PYARELAL

VOL. XI, No. 15

AHMEDABAD — SUNDAY, MAY 11, 1947

TWO ANNAS

RYOTS OR TENANTS

Many of the popular ministries have been attempting to regulate the relationship of the zamindar and the cultivator. Generally speaking, the zamindars are merely rentiers or absentee landlords. They have no immediate contact with the land, neither do they concern themselves with the actual cultivation of crops. The methods suggested to habilitate the cultivating farmer on his own land has often taken the form of either the government buying the land, compensating the zamindar and giving it to the cultivating ryot, or confiscation to the State of large estates and splitting them up into small private holdings.

It seems to us that it is not necessary in the first instance to confiscate the land nor would it seem essential to compensate the zamindar. The course that should be adopted would seem to be to place the cultivable lands in the villages to whomsoever they may belong under a system of balanced cultivation by which the requirements of the village for a balanced diet and other primary necessities will be produced in the required quantities. Under this scheme the land will be licensed for growing the products that are necessary to ensure the needs of a group of villages with a population of about 50,000. Such lands when licensed should be cultivated by the actual owner. If any of the lands so licensed remain uncultivated for a period of 2 or 3 years without adequate reason, such lands should revert to the State and the State can then redistribute those lands amongst the villagers who are willing to utilize the land to produce commodities according to plan for balanced cultivation.

This method would ensure that no land lies idle and at the same time it would also, in the course of a few years, bring back the holdings from absentee landlords to the cultivating peasants and ensure that commodities are forthcoming to meet the needs of the people and that land is not allowed to lie uncultivated merely because of absentee landlordism.

Legislation in regard to this might not meet with much opposition as attempts to confiscate lands might. The latter savours of violence, while the former is ahimsa. We commend this suggestion to those provinces which are seriously thinking of meeting the shortage in commodities by increased production.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

BLOWING HOT AND COLD

The present ministry at Madras is dropping one by one the progressive items on the programme of the Prakasam Ministry. The following communique has been issued on their present textile policy:

"In April 1946, the Government of India allotted 352,000 (200,000 coarse and 152,000 fine) spindles to this province under the post-war Development Plan. These spindles were allotted on the recommendations of this Government to nine existing mills and 25 new mills to be started in this province. The Government of India also sanctioned the issue of capital and granted import licences in all these cases. The promoters of the several mills have proceeded with the construction of the necessary buildings, invited and collected share capital and placed orders for the machinery. These mills are at present in various stages of development.

"When subsequently the Government of Madras launched a scheme for encouraging hand-spinning and hand-weaving in the province, they considered that the expansion of the mill industry might impede the progress of the Khadi Scheme. They, therefore, revised their policy in regard to the textile mill industry and surrendered to the Government of India the spindles already allotted to this province. The managements of the mills who had secured allotments of spindles were informed accordingly.

"The Government of India, however, did not agree to the cancellation of the allotments already made on the ground that it would amount to a breach of faith on their part and involve them in litigation. This Government urged the Government of India to reconsider their decision; but the Government of India only reiterated the view that they had taken. In view of this attitude of the Government of India, this Government have anxiously studied the whole question and feel that both for moral and legal reasons they should not insist on the surrender of the spindles allotted to this province. They have accordingly decided to withdraw the surrender of spindles already offered by the Government of India.

"The Government wish to make it perfectly clear in this context that the acceptance of the quota of spindles allotted to this province does not mean any departure from their Khadi Scheme, the intensive part of which has already been introduced in 7 selected firkas and the extensive part of which is proposed to be introduced shortly in 27 firkas. The scheme which has been formulated in consultation with the All-India Spinners' Association will be pursued vigorously and it will give effect to the resolutions passed by that body at Delhi, on 9th October, 1946."

One would like to know what are the moral and legal reasons which have compelled them to take a step advantageous to the vested interests. An appeal to higher values is always commendable but the validity of such an appeal should be made clear.

In this particular instance presumably the moral reason is the sanctity of a promise made by a Government to a citizen. If the fulfilment of such a promise would militate against the welfare of the public, it should be the duty of the State to retract its hasty word and if needed compensate the loss the citizen concerned might have been put to. After all, the considerations in these cases are purely material and financial at that. No millowner is running a mill for his spiritual uplift or for the purity of his soul! Hence his loss can easily be made good. Such a course should also satisfy any legal requirements. Even if there be other legal obstacles, such, not arising out of the immutable laws of the Medes and the Persians, nor being written on tablets brought down from heaven, but being only man-made regulations, are to be changed to suit the varying needs of everyday life.

Besides, the Government of India Act of 1935, under which it is claimed, that the regulation of Textile Mills comes under the purview of the Central Government, will be a dead letter next year when the British quit India. The Textile Policy is a long term consideration. An Act that is to be effaced from the statute book in a few months ought not to be allowed to influence our future plans.

The reasons given in the communique, therefore, are not convincing. It blows hot and cold in the same breath in advocating the khadi programme while at the same time promoting new mills and enlarging the existing ones. These two schemes cannot flourish side by side. If the Ministry wishes to toe the mill-owners' line, they should do so openly and whole-heartedly and not resort to subterfuges.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

BOOKS

By J. C. Kumarappa

	Price	Postage etc.
PUBLIC FINANCE & OUR POVERTY	1-8-0	0-5-0
A SURVEY OF MATAR TALUKA	2-0-0	0-9-0
PRACTICE & PRECEPTS OF JESUS	1-8-0	0-6-0
CHRISTIAN ECONOMY & WAY OF LIFE	1-8-0	0-6-0
WHY THE VILLAGE MOVEMENT?	3-0-0	0-7-0
ECONOMY OF PERMANENCE	2-0-0	0-5-0
CLIVE TO KEYNES	0-12-0	0-1-0

NAVAJIVAN KARYALAYA
Post Box 105, AHMEDABAD

NOTES

More "Progress"

We had pointed out in an earlier issue that destruction of nature's supply of food values in our country is an unpardonable crime. In America they destroy potatoes, coffee, etc. to keep up prices. We condemn that and yet we plump for sugar mills which do just the same. White sugar is pure energy like charcoal. This is obtained after removing all nutritive elements from the cane-juice to provide profits to the sugar millowners.

We understand the Central Government has agreed to the setting up of five new sugar mills in Bengal, each mill to have a daily crushing capacity of 600 tons.

When shall we learn to look at things with human interests instead of seeking financial gains?

Will it Bring Peace?

With 7000 tons of high explosives the fortifications of Heligoland were blown up. When the Great Fire of London destroyed its congested, dingy streets, London emerged as a healthier and finer city. Will this blowing up of old fortifications not be an opportunity for the unsuppressible Germans to build better and more up-to-date defences and use them for the future offensive?

This method of approach to ensure peace is short-sighted and treats the symptom rather than the disease. The cause lies deeper in the economic organization based on greed. If we are to assure the world freedom from periodic upheavals, we ought to set right our daily mode of life. Unless we attack the problem at this end it will never be solved.

Nai Talim Teacher Training

Training centres for Basic Education Teachers have been running in several places. The report of the Mysore State centre located at the Gurukula Ashram, under the Principalship of Sri Rajasekharan Gundappa has been received. Twentyone, including six women, underwent the ten months' course. There was a practising school of 24 children.

The successful teachers will be distributed in about ten Basic Schools to be established in the State.

Swami Vishwanandaji of the Gurukula Ashram had been a source of help and counsel to this centre.

In this transitional stage, many such camps are needed to equip the existing teachers of ordinary schools with the requirements of Basic Schools.

J. C. K.

A JAIN MERCHANT'S SENSE OF SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

There was a fine city in Kachchha (Cutch) called Bhadreshvar.

अस्तीह भद्रेश्वरनामधेयं पुरं वरं कच्छकृतैकशोभनम् ॥

सर्वानन्दसूरि-जगद्भरित ॥ २-१ ॥

Her temple bells rung by pious pilgrims day and night were a thorn in the side of the devil (Kali).

नक्तं दिवं दैवतमन्दिरेषु घण्टारवादतिरमुष्य चासीत् ॥ २-३ ॥

Her young men were so robust and handsome that it seemed as if Kama (Cupid) had assumed thousands of forms in order to achieve a final victory over Shiva.

महेश्वरस्यैकजयाय कामश्चकार रूपाणि सहस्रशोऽपि ।

यत्राद्भुताकारविशेषभाजां दम्भेन रजस्तृणव्रजानाम् ॥ २-६ ॥

Her young women sang the sweetest of songs on moon-lit nights so that the moon had great difficulty in preventing his music-intoxicated deer from lingering over her sky-scraping mansions.

निशासु सौधोपरिसंस्थितानां मृगीदृशां यत्र च चादृशानाम् ।

आकर्णयन्तं स्वमृगं सुधांशुयाताय कृच्छ्रात्स्वरयावभूव ॥ २-८ ॥

In Bhadreshvar there lived a number of Shrimali Vaniks (Banias) who claimed their origin from the garland (mala) of the mother of the Universe (Shri). Their leader was a merchant named Jagadu (= Jagat-deva?) who amassed immense wealth by trading with foreign countries. He visited the sacred places of Jainism such as Shatrunjaya and Girnar at the head of a large body of fellow-pilgrims (sangha).

असङ्ख्यसङ्गलोकेन समं यात्रां विधाय सः ।

शत्रुञ्जयं रैवतकं प्राप चात्यपुरं वरम् ॥ ६-३१ ॥

The dust raised by the Sanghapati's horses, elephants and chariots reached the sky and the bank of the celestial Ganges was converted into mud, through which the horses of the sun could hardly drag his chariot.

तथा च शुनदीतीरे सङ्घं पङ्क्तां रजः ।

यथात्र मग्नमर्काश्वा रथमूहुः कथञ्चन ॥ ६-३८ ॥

He erected temples of course but he also erected a mosque, as he owed his wealth to Muslims as well as to others.

मसीति कारयामास धीमलीसंज्ञितामसौ ।

भद्रेश्वरपुरे म्लेच्छलक्ष्मीकारणतः खलु ॥ ६-६४ ॥

Jagadu had fresh water wells sunk in every town or village that he visited.

शतशः कारयामास ग्रामे ग्रामे पुरे पुरे ।

सुधास्वादुजला वापीर्जगद्भः क्षितिभूषणम् ॥ ६-६५ ॥

One day in Samvat 1312 Paramadevasuri, the Jain monk, said to Jagadu, "Beloved of the gods, possession of the wealth implies social responsibility and difficult times are ahead of us, when you will have a splendid opportunity of discharging that responsibility and of serving all living beings out of love for whom Mahavir Swami renounced everything that men hold dear. After 1312 the current year has expired, there will be a famine for a period of three years.

द्वीन्द्रामिचन्द्रवर्षेषु व्यतीतेष्वथ विक्रमात् ।

दुर्मिक्षं सर्वदेशेषु भावि वर्षत्रयावधि ॥ ६-६८ ॥

"You therefore please send your agents into every nook and corner of the land, and through them store every grain of corn that is available in the markets of the country.

प्रेष्याखिलेषु देशेषु विदग्धानात्मपूषणम् ।

सर्वेषामपि बान्यानां त्वं तैः कारय संग्रहम् ॥ ६-६९ ॥

"And when famine comes you place these stores at the people's feet and thus earn fame white as the waves of the sea of milk."

क्षारोदवीचिविमलं त्वमर्जय यशोभरम् ।

समग्रजगतीलोकसंजीवननिदानतः ॥ ६-७० ॥

Jagadu thus collected large stocks of grain, and when famine occurred, he distributed them among the needy and the distressed.

प्रचक्रमे कणान्दातुमयं सोलतनूभवः ।

दुर्मिक्षपीष्यमानायै जनतायै कृपानिधिः ॥ ६-७४ ॥

After two years of famine, even the Chalukya Raja Visaldeva of Gujarat felt the pinch, invited Jagadu to his court and asked him for food grains, as he had heard that Jagadu still had 700 godowns full of corn.

सप्तात्र कणकोष्ठैकः शतानि तव निश्चितम् ।

भुत्वा मया त्वमाहृतः साम्प्रतं कणकाङ्क्षिणा ॥ ६-८४ ॥

Jagadu said, "My lord, I do not own a single grain of corn anywhere.

यूचे नाथ न सन्त्यत्र मम क्वापि कणाः खलु ॥ ६-८५ ॥

"If you doubt my word, have a look at the copper-plates inscribed and preserved in bricks in the store-rooms".

मद्वाक्ये यदि सन्देहः कणकोष्ठेषु तेष्वापि ।

अिष्टकान्तःस्थ सप्ताम्रपत्रवर्णान् विलोकय ॥ ६-८६ ॥

Visaldeva inspected the plates which carried the following inscription:

जगद्भः कल्पयामास रक्षार्थं हि कणानमूर् ॥ ६-८८ ॥

"Jagadu dedicated these food grains to the service of the poor".

"So my lord," said Jagadu to Visaldeva, "if any person dies of starvation, I would be guilty of having murdered him."

तन्मे पापं प्रियन्ते चेज्जना दुर्मिक्षपीडिताः ॥ ६-८९ ॥

He then gave 8000 bags of grain to Visaldeva for distribution to the poor.

ददावष्टसहस्राणि स तस्मै कणमूटकान् ।

श्रीमालान्वयकोटीरक्षिणा वीरत्वमाश्रितः ॥ ६-९० ॥

He similarly assisted the Rajas of Sindh, Ujjain, Delhi, Benares and Skandhila (?). He organized 112 danashalas (food-distribution centres).

द्वादशाभ्यधिकं दानशालाशतमुदारधीः ।

जगद्भः सुकृताधारो जगज्जीवातुरातनोद् ॥ ६-९३ ॥

He also placed gold coins inside sweet balls (ladus) and sent them at night to respectable people who would rather starve to death than beg.

स्वर्णवीनारसंयुक्तान् लज्जापिण्डान् स कोटिशः ।

निशायामर्पयामास कुलीनाय जनाय च ॥ ६-९३ ॥

He thus distributed 9,99,000 bags of grain and spent 18 crores of rupees during the famine.

नवनवति सहस्रयुताश्व लक्षान् धान्यमूटकानां सः ।

अष्टादशरौकोटीरर्थिन्योऽदत्त दुःसमये ॥ ६-९३ ॥

V. G. D.

HARIJAN

May 11

1947

CONTROLS

Speaking at the Convocation of the Tata Institute of Social Sciences, the Hon'ble Shri C. Rajagopalachari stated: "Life is now so developed and so complicated that I am fairly convinced that almost all controls will continue to exist in this world." He added that "controls will not be a temporary but a permanent affair." To an ordinary mortal this seems a paradox.

Though the war has been inactive for nearly two years, yet war conditions still prevail in the country in regard to articles of prime necessities. No doubt the scarcity in commodities has called for regulations of some kind to ensure a certain measure of social justice. Rationing is still with us. Black marketing is running rampant. Profiteering seems to be flourishing and the Government is busy with controls. To an onlooker there seems to be something "wrong in the State of Denmark." What that is, many people are not able to tell.

The mechanism of price has as its main spring the law of supply and demand. Therefore, any control of commodities and their prices must take the form of regulating the supply and demand. Rationing attempts to regulate the demand but there is a complete absence of any attempt to regulate supply. The present method adopted by the Government to control the prices is like setting the clock going by constantly turning the minute hand. What we want is to set the mechanism in order and the clock ought to work on its own. This artificial regulation of prices has been largely responsible for black marketing. The prices have to be regulated automatically, not by a fiat of the Government. The Government has been playing King Canute trying to stop the rising tide of black markets and profiteering; but the method adopted has been a total failure. In fact, great many of the dealers in commodities desire to have the controls on a permanent basis because it provides them the opportunity for black marketing. Corruption in high places has also been interested in perpetuating controls. It is high time that these matters are set right by the popular ministries now functioning.

If we wish to avoid black marketing and control the supply and demand in the natural way, rationing will take care of the demand but the supply side has to be regulated in the normal way not by merely setting up the prices artificially but by controlling the supply. The Government can do this by stocking a fair amount of articles that are sought to be controlled and holding them in reserve to be sold at fixed, regulated prices, in case the stockists are in the market attempting to sell their articles at a higher price. Of course, Government will not enter into the market as a seller until the merchants themselves by their actions invite the Government to take drastic steps. The Government stocks will be held in godowns merely as a stand-by, watching to see that the merchants do not advance the price unduly. The moment the market prices tend to go up, the Government godowns will be opened and the stock dumped on the market to bring down the prices. The Government holdings need not be more than 10 to 15 per cent of the stock required to be able to effectively affect the market.

This is not a novel measure. It has been tried out successfully in the working of the Bihar Central Relief Committee under private agencies without the aid of law or other government powers — basing our appeal purely on persuasion. Again, in finance, this is the method adopted by the central banks to regulate interest rates which are but market prices for money. For some unknown reason the Government has not followed this well-tried path but have taken to the King Canute method of fixing prices arbitrarily and by so doing driving the commodities underground. It is not too late even now for the governments to change over and gradually decontrol the commodities as the market assumes normal conditions. We trust our governments will take immediate steps to relieve the distress the people are suffering from because of the present methods of control.

J. C. KUMARAPPA

GANDHIJI'S BIHAR TOUR DIARY

21-4-'47

This is the translation of Gandhiji's written speech, it being his silence even at the time of the prayer speech.

This evening, too, I must speak to you about khadi. The secret lies in hand-spun yarn. From days of yore, spinning had been woman's speciality. Poor soul, she was the slave and man the master who was to pay her the wage that was her due. During the middle ages she had to spin perforce for a mere pittance.

Except for Assam, weaving was considered man's occupation. Hence there is life left in hand-weaving. But there is no room for doubt that it is doomed to extinction if hand-spinning is not revived in all the glory that by right belongs to it. Thus if men and women will not take to hand-spinning as a sacred duty, that is, the same person will not do carding, slivering and spinning, there is little hope for khadi. I am not thinking of khadi-wear as a fashion. Khadi of my conception is that hand-spun which takes the place entirely in India of mill-cloth. It is beyond my power to give an adequate description of the power that this khadi would give to the whole of India.

Such khadi must remain a dream if the men of India in their millions will not spin if only by way of penance, for the sin they have committed against the women and the women will not do so as a sacred duty. That yarn which may have to be spun for wages will have to bear the same rate per hour that is paid to men for labour. There can be no inequality in wages between the sexes. Lordship of men over women must cease. The days of this lordship are over. That we do not make this admission is a different thing. It cannot arrest the march of events. God has made of man and woman one complete whole. In the scheme of nature both are equal. It has been the object of khadi to verify this maxim of sex equality. The Spinners' Association has not yet succeeded, but the effort is in that direction. Time is coming when a millowner's wife will become a true devotee of khadi. Then khadi will be supreme to the exclusion of mill cloth in India. May you, women of Bihar, make the mighty effort to bring to an early fruition that happy day.

22-4-'47

After the prayer Gandhiji dealt with the work of the Hindustani Talimi Sangh which was having its sittings for two days. He reminded the audience that the Congress had issued a charter to the Sangh and therefore one would expect that in matters of education the Congress would fall back upon its experts and be guided by them. He could not go into the reasons for the anomaly. He merely pointed it out. Dr. Zakir Hussain was its President. He was a great educationist and was the soul of the Jamia Milia. He was assisted by Shri Aryanayakam and his devoted wife Asha Devi, both of them educationists. It had entered upon its eighth year of existence. It was called the new method of education for it was not a foreign importation or imposition but was consistent with the environment in India which was predominantly made up of villages. It believed in establishing an equilibrium between the body, the mind and the spirit of which man was made. It was unlike the Western type which was predominantly militarist in which the mind and the body were the primary care of education to the subordination of the spirit. This was best done when education was given through handicrafts. The other speciality was that it was designed to be wholly self-supporting. It did not, therefore, demand an expenditure of millions on education. He hoped next evening to expand the idea underlying self-supporting education.

Expressing himself strongly in favour of the use of Hindustani by Indians as against English, in the course of his speech Gandhiji stated that he had deliberately signed his name in the joint appeal (recently issued over the signatures of Qaid-e-Azam Jinnah and Gandhiji) in Hindi and Urdu.

Lord Louis Mountbatten, he added, did not mind this departure from the usual practice on his (Gandhiji's) part because the Viceroy knew that the Britishers would have to quit India shortly.

23-4-'47

According to his promise given the previous evening, Gandhiji dealt again with Nai Talim, which, he said, was life-giving, whereas education given by the foreign Government was necessarily life-destroying. The latter drained India's wealth, it impoverished its languages and made of us practically slaves. Nai Talim covered the whole life. Experience had shown that it had great possibilities and began with the embryo and ended with life itself. It gave new life to all men and women of India. Except for capital expenditure it cost nothing. The teachers earned what they took. It stood for the art of living. Therefore, both the teacher and the pupil had to produce in the very act of teaching and learning. It enriched life from the commencement. It made the nation independent of search for employment. Whereas the annual income per head was only rupees sixty Nai Talim progressively increased the income.

The villagers would then not be satisfied with mere sattu and dirty salt for food and rags for clothing. They would have balanced food including milk, fruit and vegetables which they would produce themselves and wear spotless khadi which they would spin and weave themselves. Such was the promise of Nai Talim. Its fulfilment depended upon the will and exertion of every citizen of Free India. Without willing support from the citizens, the governments could do nothing and the governments which did not produce the simple facilities required for the whole task were not worth the salt they ate.

24-4-'47

Gandhiji referred to the meetings he had with Harijan sevaks and sevikas and khadi workers. With reference to the former he said that mere touch by the so-called savarna Hindus did not mean the removal of untouchability. Society had made very considerable progress since 1920 both among the touchables and the untouchables. There would be no rest until all distinctions between touchables and untouchables were abolished. It would not do for women to be horrified when they saw Harijan girls moving among them on terms of perfect equality. The popular ministers owed it to society that they undertook all ameliorative measures and brought in legislation without delay. Seeing that the meetings of the Charkha Sangh Trustees and the Talimi Sangh were held, he hoped that Bihar would lead the way by being first in restoration of her previous relations between the Hindus and the Muslims, giving khadi its rightful place and establishing Nai Talim in the manner he had suggested.

25-4-'47

Gandhiji having heard that some Hindus were whispering to one another that Muslims being beef-eaters were the natural enemies of Hinduism and were, therefore, fit to be destroyed. Gandhiji, therefore, devoted his remarks to the topic of cow-protection. He said that nearly forty years ago he wrote about it in Hind Swaraj in South Africa. He was from his childhood a devotee of the cow. He believed her to be the natural mother of prosperity. But he had expressed the opinion in Hind Swaraj that cow-protection societies were destroyers of the cow and not her protectors. To this view he adhered even today. True devotion to the cow required broad-mindedness and an accurate knowledge of the art and science concerning the protection of the cow. In no country on the earth were the cow and her progeny so ill-treated as in India which, strangely enough, was the only country where the cow was venerated. Their veneration, however, consisted of mere words and deadly quarrel with the Muslims over cow-killing. The very Hindus who quarrelled with the Muslims because they slaughtered the cow for the beef she gave were not ashamed to accept the mastery of the English who were known to be beef-eaters in a sense in which the Muslims never were. He had no quarrel with the Englishmen because they ate beef and as such he had none with the Muslims either. He was concerned with showing the great inconsistency of the Hindus who for the sake of money gladly served their English masters and quarrelled with the Muslims. Then they forgot that there were Hindus who gladly partook of beef. He had known orthodox vaishnavas who ate beef-extract when it was prescribed by their doctors. He reminded the audience of the fact that during the Khilafat days thousands of cows were saved from the Muslim knife. The late Maulana Abdul Bari used to say that if the Hindus helped the Muslims to save the Khilafat, the Muslims were bound to save the cow for the sake of the Hindus. From every point of view, therefore, he held that it was insensate on the part of the Hindus to be angry with their Muslim brethren because they ate beef and slaughtered cows. He quoted numerous instances to show the utterly inconsistent behaviour of the Hindus in this matter. He therefore, asked the Hindus to put their own house in order before it tottered to its ruin.

26-4-'47

There was no prayer speech on this day as Gandhiji had to attend the meeting of the Jamiat-e-Islam.

27-4-'47

Addressing the gathering after prayer, Gandhiji referred to his visit the previous evening to the meeting of the Jamiat-e-Islam. He was told that its members were truly servants of God, austere and simple in their habits, with a message of self-purification and self-realization for the Musalmans. Religion was sustained never by the sword but always by men of God. But they should be so not merely in name but by their conduct. The audience had gladly allowed him to go to these friends. If, however, there were some who thought that he was uselessly pandering to the Muslims by giving them undue importance, he would say that it was pride that dictated such foolishness. Such pride ill-became the votaries of Rama about whom the evening's bhajan had been sung.

The Muslims formed only 14 per cent of the population. It became his duty, therefore, as a member of the majority community to go to them in all humility whenever they invited him.

The song that had been sung at the prayer taught that only Rama (God, Allah or by whatever name one might call Him) was the true object of worship. He was not won over by offerings, except the offering of noble conduct.

Universal love became incumbent on Rama's devotees. That was the only way in which Hinduism or for that matter any religion could survive. Hinduism or any religion that departed from this straight path was doomed to destruction.

28-4-'47

The following is the English version of the written speech of Gandhiji, read before the prayer gathering it being his day of silence.

I am sorry to let you know that I shall have to go to Delhi again, by the morning train on the 30th. There is a call from Pandit Nehru. Rastrapati Kripalaniji has also sent a telegram from Rajputana that I should be in Delhi by the first May, as the Congress Working Committee meets on that day. It pains me to leave you at this stage. I do not relish the idea of leaving Bihar unless the Musalmans have completely shed their fear and both the communities allow me to leave with a clear conscience. I felt the same when I left Noakhali. For both these places I have the same motto before me, Do or Die. My non-violence bids me dedicate myself to the service of the minorities. It would be like a new birth and give me additional strength if the Hindus and the Musalmans of both these places began to live at peace with each other and shed their animosity. God knows what will come out of this travail. Man can only try and perish in the attempt. God is all in all. We are only zeroes. The same mission takes me to Delhi. I hope to return within a short time and resume duty.

You may be astonished to learn that I continue to receive letters charging me that I have compromised the interests of the Hindus by acting as a friend of the Muslims. How can I convince people by mere words if the sixty years of my public life have failed to demonstrate that by trying to befriend the Muslims I have only proved myself a true Hindu and have rightly served the Hindus and Hinduism? The essence of true religious teaching is that one should serve and befriend all. I learnt this in my mother's lap. You may refuse to call me a Hindu. I know no defence except to quote a line from Iqbal's famous song: Majhab nahin sikhata apasmen ber rakhna (मजहब नहीं सिखाता आपसमें बैर रखना) meaning religion does not teach us to bear ill-will towards one another. It is easy enough to be friendly to one's friends. But to befriend the one who regards himself as your enemy, is the quintessence of true religion. The other is mere business.

29-4-'47

Referring to his brief visit to Delhi for which he would leave the next morning, Gandhiji requested the people not to crowd at the station. It would be a true mark of affection if they abstained from interrupting his rest or work by their shouts which he could ill bear at his age.

Before departing, continued the speaker, he would like to share with them the letter of Major General Shah Nawaz who was helping the Bihar Government in its rehabilitation work in Masaurhi.

"Rehabilitation work is making a steady and satisfactory progress. I feel that a very definite change is coming about in the outlook of the Hindu population of the area. As instances I will give three cases:

"1. In village Atarpura, we had a meeting and appointed a village Panchayat; two days afterwards the head of the Panchayat came to Patna, met all the refugees in various camps and assured them that they would welcome them back to their village and that they would guard them even with their lives.

"As a result of this nearly fifty Muslim families have returned to the village and are living there very happily. There is no police force stationed there, nor have they asked for any.

"When I sent rations there, the Hindus refused to accept them, saying that the Muslims were their guests and that they would make suitable arrangements for their feeding, harvesting of their crops etc.

"2. In the second case one Muslim of village Bir came to me and informed me that he wished to go back to his village. This was his first chance to go back after the riots. He was crying and was very much frightened to go alone. I gave him my car and sent two I. N. A. soldiers to accompany him. On the way he met a Hindu member of the Bir village Panchayat who stopped the car and talked to this Muslim and asked him why he was taking soldiers with him. The Muslim informed him that he was frightened. The Hindu friend then told him that it would be a matter of shame for the whole village if after Gandhiji's assurances it was still necessary to take an escort with him; he also assured the Muslim that he would get killed before any harm came to him (the Muslim).

"The Muslim gentleman, thereupon, returned to me saying that now he no longer required an escort as he was feeling quite safe.

"3. In Masaurhi most of I. N. A. soldiers are Hindus or Sikhs and are doing excellent work. Outstanding among them is one Lieutenant Kartar Singh who himself carries the beddings of the refugees from the station to their homes; and at night he patrols round their houses. Every morning he takes buckets full of milk to the mosque where he personally distributes it to all the children and sick persons.

"About three days ago when a Muslim refugee died Lieutenant Kartar Singh himself dug the grave for his body. All the Muslims are now very fond of him. They invite him to attend their meetings in the mosque."

General Shah Nawaz's report made Gandhiji feel that if the Hindus were true and really befriended the Musalmans the present all-enveloping fire would be extinguished. When it was burning all round they did not attempt to extinguish it at all places. They made a determined attack on the spot immediately before them, and the whole fire came under control. Bihar was not a small province and if the Hindus and the Muslims of Bihar became true to themselves and the latter shed all fear, the speaker had no doubt that what he heard was going on in Calcutta or elsewhere would dissolve.

ANOTHER DELHI INTERLUDE

1-5-'47

There was complete silence during the prayer meeting today evening and Gandhiji congratulated the audience on the exemplary attitude displayed by them.

Speaking after the prayer, Gandhiji referred to the absence of noise at the railway stations when he went back from Delhi to Patna and felt that the effect of the quiet attitude of the crowds at the prayer meetings in Delhi was reflected throughout his journey back to Patna except when he approached Bihar. This time, however, the lesson was forgotten and he had to suffer loud acclamations of the crowd who evidently forgot that the speaker was ill able to bear great noises. He hoped, however, that Congress workers throughout would instil the lesson of discipline into the crowds.

Gandhiji then referred to the violence that was taking place in the Frontier Province, in the Punjab and in other places. The audience might well ask, he said, why in spite of the joint appeal by Qaid-e-Azam Jinnah and himself for peace in the country and the declaration in the appeal that use of force should be eschewed for all time for gaining political ends, the appeal seemed to have been entirely defeated in practice.

In his opinion, the honour, both of the Viceroy who was instrumental in bringing about the joint appeal and of Qaid-e-Azam Jinnah was involved in the failure of the appeal. He held that it was not open to Jinnah Saheb to plead that his followers did not listen to his (Jinnah Saheb's) appeal. That would be cutting the whole ground from under his feet because he was the undisputed President of the All India Muslim League which claimed to represent the vast bulk of the Muslim population of India. Where was the authority of the League, if the Muslims resorted to violence for gaining the political aim which was summed up in the word Pakistan? Was the British Government to yield to the force of arms rather than the force of reason?

The speaker had expressed his doubts as to the wisdom of issuing the joint appeal unless it was certain that it meant for both the signatories all that the words thereof conveyed.

2-5-'47

The prayer meeting began today as usual. When the verses from the Quran were being recited a member of the audience objected to the recitation. He was arrested by the policeman but Gandhiji immediately stopped the prayer, and requested the policeman who had arrested him to set him free.

He would be ashamed to pray he said, where a man had been arrested for doing what he had done. He would leave the place, he said only if he were requested to do so by the mehtars. He would not wait even to consult the trustees as they were after all the trustees of the mehtars.

Shri L. G. Thatte, General Secretary of the Anti-Pakistan Front was arrested today outside the Valmiki Temple just before Gandhiji came out for the evening prayers.

Earlier in the day Shri Thatte had sent a letter to Gandhiji informing him of his intention to object to the recitation of the verses from the Quran at the prayer.

Another person was arrested a little later when he took exception to the recitation of Quranic verses during the prayers and shouted Hindu Dharmaki Jai. Gandhiji then discontinued the prayers.

Gandhiji requested the police to set the man free as it put him (Gandhiji) to shame if anybody was arrested for objecting to what he did.

Gandhiji deplored such narrow-mindedness on the part of the people. Mere shouting of slogans would not carry Hinduism anywhere, he said. He was at a loss to understand why some Hindus objected to his reading the Quran verses in his prayer. If at places the Muslims had not behaved as they should, then it did not mean that the Hindus should retaliate by opposing the reading of the Quran.

The verse from the Quran that was being recited, Gandhiji said, was a mighty prayer in praise of God. How did it harm the Hindu religion if the prayer was recited in the Arabic language? He who said so knew neither his religion nor his duty. That prayer could also be recited in a temple.

He had been told by a friend that a prayer with the same meaning was also found in the Yajurveda. Those who had studied the Hindu scriptures knew that among the 108 Upanishads there was one called the Allopanishad. Did not the man who wrote it know his religion? It was said that Guru Nanak himself went to Arabia in search of truth during his religious wanderings.

No religion in the world, Gandhiji continued, could live without self-suffering. A faith gained in strength only when people were willing to lay down their lives for it. The tree of life had to be watered with the blood of martyrs, who laid down their lives without killing their opponents or intending any harm to them. That was the root of Hinduism and of all other religions.

The scene that they witnessed, Gandhiji went on to say, was a symptom of the disease that had got hold of India. Intolerance, impatience and retaliation were in the air. They were thinking even of universal conscription. God forbid that India should ever become a military nation, which would be a menace to the peace of the world and yet if things went on as they were doing what hope was there for India and, therefore, for the world? Was Pakistan to be seized by terrorism such as they seemed to be witnessing in the Frontier Province, in the Punjab, in Sindh and elsewhere?

People had suggested that every thing would be alright and non-Muslims in the Muslim majority provinces would be put on absolute equality with the Muslims if not specially favoured as against them. He suggested that it was an impossible dream. If the Muslims were taught otherwise while Pakistan was not established they could not be expected to behave better after Pakistan had become a settled fact. It was up to the Qaid-e-Azam and his lieutenants to inspire trust in the minds of the minorities in the provinces or parts, which were designed for Pakistan. Then there would no longer be fear of Pakistan-cum-partition.

3-5-47

Addressing today's prayer meeting Gandhiji said that it was wholly wrong to distrust or attribute dishonest motives to the Viceroy unless he was proved to be unworthy of their confidence and appealed to all journalists to play the game at this delicate stage.

Gandhiji again reminded the audience of the woeful state of India today. All eyes were turned on her — in particular those of Asia and Africa. He had sensed that at the Asian Conference. Japan had failed to give the right lead by following the path of imperialism and where was she today? he asked. India had won a moral victory over Britain because she had fought non-violently and that was why the Asian countries hoped for proper guidance from her. It was the duty of every Indian not to belie these hopes.

If Asia and Africa had the right lead given to them by India, it would, Gandhiji said, change the face of the world. Just as water became muddy on the surface when the flood here in the shape of liberty came, but flowed clear and peaceful after the flood, so he hoped would the present communal strife cease and all the scum fade away.

He then complained of the attempted disclosures today in a leading newspaper of Delhi purporting to disclose the decisions of the Viceroy and the decisions of the Congress Working Committee. He said that to act in such a manner was to lower the standards of journalism. Having been himself a journalist of many years' standing, he could speak with authority on what the traditions of good journalism should be. Whatever was in the Viceroy's heart was his business to disclose. Whatever decisions were taken by the Congress Working Committee were for its President or Secretary to give to the press. It was hitting below the belt for newspapers to take such tit-bits as they picked up from here, there and everywhere and dish them up for the purpose of creating sensation. That misled the public and harmed the cause. It was wrong to follow the bad example of some foreign newspapers. Indian journalists should not imitate bad manners for the sake of increasing sale or getting notoriety for scoops.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
RYOTS OR TENANTS ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	141
BLOWING HOT AND COLD ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	141
A JAIN MERCHANT'S SENSE OF SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY ... V. G. D.	143
CONTROLS ... J. C. KUMARAPPA	144
GANDHIJI'S BIHAR TOUR DIARY	144
ANOTHER DELHI INTERLUDE	147
ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI — INSTALMENT — XIX	149
NOTES :
MORE "PROGRESS" ... J. C. K.	142
WILL IT BRING PEACE? ... J. C. K.	142
NAITALIM TEACHER TRAINING J. C. K.	142

Printed and Published by Jivanji Dahyabhai Desai, Navajivan Press, Kalupur, Ahmedabad.
Subscription Rates — INLAND : One year, Rs. 6; Six months, Rs. 3; FOREIGN : One year, Rs. 8 or 14 sh. or. $ 3.

ENGLISH INTO HINDUSTANI

INSTALMENT—XII

ENGLISH

HINDUSTANI

- Cartage n. दुलाजीका किराया या खर्च । हलाने का खर्च या खर्च ।
 Cart load n. छकवाभर, गाड़ीभर, बहुत-सा ।
 Cart before horse, put v. बोबेकी दुममें लगाम लगाना; बोबेके आगे गाड़ी लगाना; खुलटी गंगा बहाना ।
 कौड़े के दम में लगाम लगाना; कौड़े के आगे गाड़ी लगाना;
 Cart, bullock- n. बैलगाड़ी, गगा । कडा ।
 Cart, dog- n. टमटम ।
 Cart, mail- n. डाक लाने और ले जानेकी गाड़ी ।
 Cart, spring- n. कमानदार गाड़ी । कान्नी दार गाड़ी ।
 Cartwright n. छकवा बनानेवाला ।
 Carte blanche कोरा चेक, खुली छुट्टी, सियाह-सफेदका अधिकार या अख्तियार ।
 Cartell (Kartell) n. भाव-सभा, चीबोंकी कीमतें तय करनेके लिये कारखानादारोंकी अंजुमन ।
 Cartilage n. कुरकुरी या मुरमुरी हड्डी ।
 Cartography n. नक्शा बनाना ।
 Cartomancy n. ताश ज्योतिष ।
 Cartoon n. हँसीकी तस्वीर (अक्सर सियासी), कार्टून ।
 हँसी की तस्वीर (अक्सर सियासी) । कार्टून ।
 Cartridge n. कारतूस ।
 Cartridge, blank n. खाली कारतूस ।
 Carve v. काटना, तराशना, खोदना, गढ़ना, सूरत बनाना ।
 काना, तराशना, कौटना, गढ़ना, सूरत बनाना ।
 Carve one's way v. अपने-लिये रास्ता बनाना, अपनी ताकतसे बढ़ना ।
 Cascade n. झरना; पानीकी चादर ।
 Case n. खोल, पेटी, खाना, डिब्बा; पिलाफ; हालत, दशा; सूरत; बात, मामला, नालिशा, दावा, मुकदमा; विमर्श ।
 कौल, पिली, घाना, दावा, मुकदमा; विमर्श ।
 معامل, नालिश, दावा, मुकदमा, विमर्श ।
 Case, in any हर हालतमें, हर सूरतमें, जो भी हो, कुछ भी हो ।
 हर हालत में, हर सूरत में, जो भी हो, कुछ भी हो ।
 Case, in अगर, ऐसी हालतमें, अथ सूरतमें ।
 अगर, ऐसी हालत में, अथ सूरत में ।
 Case of, in ऐसा होने पर ।
 Case of, in the बारेमें, मामले में ।
 Case, in evil बुरे हाल में ।
 Case, in good अच्छी हालतमें ।
 Case, is the सच है ।
 Case, is not the गलत है ।
 Case-harden v. बाहरकी तरफसे सख्त करना ।
 बाहरकी तरफसे सख्त करना ।
 Casement n. झरोखा, झींझोली खिड़की ।
 झरोखा, झींझोली खिड़की ।
 Cash n. रोकड़, रुपया, नकद ।
 रोकड़, रुपया, नकद ।
 Cash v. रुपया खुजाना, रुपया खुजाना ।
 रुपया खुजाना, रुपया खुजाना ।

Cash account n. रोकड़खाता, रोकड़का हिसाब ।Cash and carry or Cash payment 'नकद दो, माल लो' ।
नकद दो, माल लो ।Cash book n. रोकड़ बही ।Cash price n. नकद कीमत या दाम ।Cash sale n. नकद या रोकड़ बिक्री ।Cashew (nut) n. काजू ।Cashier n. खजानची ।Cashier v. नाम काटना, हटा देना, अलग कर देना ।Casino n. आम नाच और जुआ घर ।Cask n. पीपा (लकड़ीका) ।Casket n. सन्दूकची ।Casserole n. मिट्टीकी हॉबी ।Cassia n. तेजपात ।Cassock n. पादरियोंका लम्बा चोला ।Cast n. फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

फेंक, डाल, ढँव; जाल डालना; नटोंकी या नाटकियोंकी

डुकड़ी; शकल, सूरत; सौचा; झुकाव; ढंग, ढब, बनावट; भेंगापन ।

Cast light on v. रोशनी डालना। روشنی ڈالنا
 Cast loose v. अलग करना। الگ کرنا
 Cast net or hook or fly etc. v. जाल डालना या फेंकना, फाँटा डालना, बंसी डालना।
 جال ڈالना یا پھینکا, کھला ڈالना, بंسی ڈالنا
 Cast off v. झुतारना, छोड़ना, अलग करना।
 اتارنا, झुतारना, الگ کرنا
 Cast pearls before swine v. गधोंको अंगूरी बाण, अन्धके आगे रोना।
 گدھوں کو انگूरी बाغ, اندھے کے आगे रोना
 Cast out v. निकाल देना, निकाल बाहर करना।
 نکال دینا, نکال बाहर کرنا
 Cast to the winds or to the dogs v. अलग करना, फेंक देना, रद्द कर देना।
 الگ کرنا, फेंक देना, रद्द कर देना
 Cast the die v. पौषा फेंकना, दाँव लगाना।
 दाँव फेंकना, दाँव लगाना
 Cast iron n. ठोला लोहा। ڈھला लोहा
 Cast of features n. चेहरेका नक्शा। چہرے کا نقشہ
 Castanet n. खटताल। कड़ताल
 Caste n. जात, जाति-पात, वर्ग, जाति। जाति, वर्ग
 Caste, to lose v. जात बाहर होना, जात खोना, नजरोंसे गिरना।
 जात बाहर होना, जात खोना, नजरोंसे गिरना
 Caste, put out of v. जातसे बाहर करना, हुक्का-पानी बन्द करना।
 जातसे बाहर करना, हुक्का-पानी बन्द करना
 Castigate v. दण्ड या सजा देना, झाड़ना, काँड़े मारना।
 दण्ड या सजा देना, झाड़ना, काँड़े मारना
 Castle n. किला, गढ़, कोट; रत्न। किला, गढ़, कोट
 Castles in the air, to build v. मनके लड्डू फाड़ना, खयाली पुलव पकाना।
 मनके लड्डू फाड़ना, खयाली पुलव पकाना
 Castor n. नमक या मिर्चदाना; फिरकी, मेख या कुरसीका पहिया।
 नमक या मिर्चदाना; फिरकी, मेख या कुरसीका पहिया
 Castor oil n. रेंडीका तेल। रेंडी का तेल
 Castrate v. खस्सी या बधिया करना, खोजा बनाना।
 खस्सी या बधिया करना, खोजा बनाना
 Casual adj. आकस्मिक, अचानक; बे-परवाह।
 आकस्मिक, अचानक; बे-परवाह
 Casualty n. घटना, हादसा, वारदात। घटना, हादसा, वारदात
 Casualties n. मरे हुए और घायल। मरे हुए और घायल
 Cat n. बिल्ली; कड़ुआ मिजासकी औरत। बिल्ली; कड़ुआ मिजासकी औरत
 Cat and dog life, to live a v. बिल्ली-कुत्तेकी तरह रहना।
 बिल्ली-कुत्तेकी तरह रहना
 Cat call n. सीटी, शोर, हुल्लाह। सीटी, शोर, हुल्लाह
 Cat may look at a king, a v. एक गदा (कन्नौर) भी बादशाहको झिड़क सकता है।
 एक गदा (कन्नौर) भी बादशाहको झिड़क सकता है
 Cathead n. लंगर-सहतीर। लंगर-सहतीर
 Cat o'-nine-tails n. कैत, गौठकोषा। कैत, गौठकोषा
 Cat's eye n. एक क्रीमती पत्थर। एक क्रीमती पत्थर
 Cat's paw n. हलकी हवा; धोका-खाधू। हलकी हवा; धोका-खाधू
 Cat, to bell the v. मुसीबत या विपत्तिका सामना करना।
 मुसीबत या विपत्तिका सामना करना
 Cat, care killed the v. चिन्ता या फिर हवाकी भी चिन्ता या फिर हवाकी भी
 चिन्ता या फिर हवाकी भी
 Cats, fight like kilkenny v. लड़ते-लड़ते जान दे देना या मिट जाना।
 लड़ते-लड़ते जान दे देना या मिट जाना

Cat out of the bag, to let the v. मण्डा फोड़ना, मेद खोलना।
 मण्डा फोड़ना, मेद खोलना
 Cat, not room to swing a v. तंग जगह। तंग जगह
 Cats and dogs, to rain v. झमाझम पानी बरसना, जोरसे बरसना।
 झमाझम पानी बरसना, जोरसे बरसना
 Cat, tom n. बिल्ला। बिल्ला
 Cat in pan, to turn दो रंग होना, दो मेसिया।
 दो रंग होना, दो मेसिया
 Cat jumps, see which way the v. देखो झूट किस करवट
 Cat to jump, wait for the v. देखो झूट किस करवट
 बैठता है।
 Cat v. झुलटी या कै करना। झुलटी या कै करना
 Cataclasm n. जोरसे फट पड़ना। जोरसे फट पड़ना
 Cataclysm n. पानीकी बाढ़, संलाव; तूफान; कान्ति, भिन्निलाव; पानी की बाढ़, संलाव; तूफान; कान्ति, भिन्निलाव;
 सुथल-पुथल।
 Catacomb n. कब्रिस्तान; जमीनके नीचे। कब्रिस्तान; जमीनके नीचे
 Catalepsy n. बेहोशी, मूर्च्छा। बेहोशी, मूर्च्छा
 Catalogue n. नामावली, सूची, फेहरिस्त। नामावली, सूची, फेहरिस्त
 Catapult n. गोफन, गोपिया, गुदेल। गोफन, गोपिया, गुदेल
 Cataract n. झरना (बड़ा); पानीकी चादर; मोतिया।
 झरना (बड़ा); पानीकी चादर; मोतिया
 Catarrh n. जुकाम, सर्दी, नाक बहना। जुकाम, सर्दी, नाक बहना
 Catastrophe n. आफत, विपत्ति; बरबादी। आफत, विपत्ति; बरबादी
 Catch n. पकड़; शिकार; सोनेकी चिड़िया; धोका; बिल्ली; चिटकनी; पकड़; शिकार; सोनेकी चिड़िया; धोका; बिल्ली; चिटकनी;
 लपक।
 Catch, no n. बुरा या निकम्मा सोदा। बुरा या निकम्मा सोदा
 Catch v. पकड़ना, पकड़ लेना; फाँसना; सुनना; समझ लेना; मारना; लगाना, लगा जाना।
 पकड़ना, पकड़ लेना; फाँसना; सुनना; समझ लेना; मारना; लगाना, लगा जाना
 Catch a cold or a fever v. सर्दी लग जाना; बुखार हो जाना।
 सर्दी लग जाना; बुखार हो जाना
 Catch at v. हाथ मारना, झपटना, लपकना।
 हाथ मारना, झपटना, लपकना
 Catch a Tarter v. अपनेसे जबरदस्ते जा मिड़ना।
 अपनेसे जबरदस्ते जा मिड़ना
 Catch fire v. आग लगना या पकड़ना। आग लगना या पकड़ना
 Catch it v. सजा पाना, बुरा-मला सुनना, शिवकी खाना।
 सजा पाना, बुरा-मला सुनना, शिवकी खाना
 Catch on v. चल पड़ना या निकलना, फैलना।
 चल पड़ना या निकलना, फैलना
 Catch one's breath v. साँस रोक लेना। साँस रोक लेना
 Catch out v. भूल करते पकड़ लेना। भूल करते पकड़ लेना
 Catchpenny n. निकम्मी या दिखानेकी चीज — खासकर निकम्मी पुस्तक जो सिर्फ रुपया कमानेके लिये बनायी जाती है।
 निकम्मी या दिखानेकी चीज — खासकर निकम्मी पुस्तक जो सिर्फ रुपया कमानेके लिये बनायी जाती है
 Catch up v. पकड़ लेना, जा केना, बराबर हो जाना।
 पकड़ लेना, जा केना, बराबर हो जाना
 Catch time by the forelock v. समय या वक़्तको हाथसे जने न देना।
 समय या वक़्तको हाथसे जने न देना
 Catchword n. चलता फ़िकरा, चलती बात; बिचारा; खास बोल।
 चलता फ़िकरा, चलती बात; बिचारा; खास बोल
 Catechise v. सवाल-जवाबसे सीखना, पूछ-परछ करना, बिम्बहान या परीक्षा लेना।
 सवाल-जवाबसे सीखना, पूछ-परछ करना, बिम्बहान या परीक्षा लेना

AUTHOR INDEX

AUTHOR INDEX

Agrawal, S. N.
Hindustani Prachar Sabha	260	Friends' Ambulance Unit in India	214
Medium of Instruction	147	Go-seva Sangh	33, 40
Tragedy of the English Medium	106	Government must take Responsibility?	253
Yarn Currency	86	Harijans and Savarnas	178, 227, 239
Amrit Kaur, Rajkumari (A. K.)		How to be Worthy of our Heritage	109
A Sister's Tribute	63	If Japanese Come?	248
Barter in Bezwada	94	Ireland - A Comparison and Contrast	258
Bhils and Harijans in Rajputana	93	Jamnallalji	45
Constructive Work in Sindh	80	'Khadi Jagat'	252
Four Years' Work	51, 70	Life or Death?	153
Gleanings From A. I. V. I. A. minutes	64	Medium of Instruction	250
Improved Diet	114	Negation of Democracy	148
In. Memoriam	68	Non-violence in Evolution	170
Interesting Figures	145	No Real Scarcity	251
Jamnallalji and Women	80	Note	161
Maganwadi Convocation	154	Now Is the Moment	212
'Nai Talim'	53	Now or Never	269
Need of Scientific Knowledge	163	Only if They Withdraw	198
Planned Economy	122	On the Path of Ahimsa	6
Sad Contrast	76	Price Control Anarchy	63
Simple Treatment for Cholera	132	Price Control Muddle	133
Spinning in Midnapore	108	Reputation	247
Tarred with the Same Brush	92	Shankerlal Pattarai and Jamnallal Vidyalaya	72
The Merits of Amla	114	The Bombay Interview	166
The Sixth Year of the Work	74, 91	The Challenge of Today and Friends	81
Vinoba on Khadi	90	"The Communal Triangle"	206
Yarn Currency in Action	142	The Mill Stone	243
Anonymous and Unsigned		The Month in Bardoli	1, 23
Basic Training Centre at Sevagram	216	The Pressure of Love	202
Draft Resolutions	262	The Wardha Interview	233
Government Control or Public Control?	113	Throw away the Carcass	193
Mahatmaj's Arrest	273	To Resist Slave Drivers	183
Training in Cottage Industries	145	Towards Destruction	182
Aryanayakam, E. W.		Triumph of Non-violence	14
Handicraft and Education	126	Two Australian Visitors	141
Bharatanand		Unfair to America?	181
Basic Currency	78	Unworthy Propaganda	265
Buck, Pearl		Vansittarts Let Loose	269
"For Whites Only"	223	War Against Destruction	7
Desai, Mahadev (M. D.)		Ways of Non-violent Non-cooperation	267
A Complete Vindication	101	What after the Final Adieu?	87
A Correction	114, 216	With Foreign Correspondents	120
A Glimpse of Rishikesh	138	With Khadi Workers	210
A Historic Meeting	57	With Three Press Correspondents	241
American Racial Discrimination	199	Desai, Valji Govindji (V. G. D.)
A Muslim Marriage in Sevagram	250	A Rural Anthology	146, 182, 190, 198
An Appeal	157	Elwin, Verrier
An Important Interview	185	An Englishman's Tribute	96
Anti-British Feeling	179	Gandhi, M. K. (M. K. G.)
An Unexpected Experience	17	A Challenge	201
A Peep into British History	66	Acharya Anandshanker Dhruva	117
A Poser	103	A Correction	93
A Reminiscence of C. F. A.	178	A Deplorable Incident	20
A Two Minutes' Interview	234	Adibasi	5
Begging for Harijans	127	Adibasis	38
Benares Notes	18, 29	A Harijan Colony in Bihar	88
Bombay Responds Generously	162	A. I. S. A. and Kindred Institutions	217
British and American Nazism	43	Alchemy of Producing Food	181
Casual Notes 189, 202, 225, 235, 245, 271		A Legitimate Grievance	61
Cry for Wheat	45	An Appeal to the Qaid-e-Azam	68
Draconian Orders	140	An Appropriate Question	261
Evidently a Long War	85	A Plea for Reason	252
Face the Facts	176	A Poser	204
'Fire Raging in Me'	257	A Triple Tragedy	177
For "Common Folk"	150	A Young Canadian's Question	104
Free India - A Military Necessity	255	Badshah Khan's Popularity	215
Free India Can Help Best	183	Caveeshar	104
		Charkha Jayanti	263
		Communal Unity	13
		Confusion	161
		Congress and War Contracts	230
		Constructive Programme	28
		Constructive Programme and Government	13
		Criminal Assaults	60
		Curious Non-violence	113
		Deenbandhu Andrews Memorial	128
		Deenbandhu Memorial	161
		Defending the Indefensible	88
		Deliberate Distortion	203
		Demands of Marwar Lok-Parishad	270
		Desirability of Exodus	76
		Differences Very Real	180
		Disgraceful	65
		Distress in Bengal	117
		Don't Divide the House	9
		Dr. Tarachand and Hindustani	191
		Economy in Travelling	117
		Education through Handicrafts	197
		Evacuees from Burma	132
		Eyes to the Blind	53
		Fasting in Non-violent Action	248
		Fierly Ordeal	53
		Foreign Soldiers in India	128
		For Middlemen	217
		For Muslim Friends	237
		For Rajaji	172
		For the Princes	249
		For the Sikh Friends	209
		Friendly Advice	172
		From Unofficial Notes	107
		Gopalan Nambiar	84
		Gram Panchayats in Aundh	84
		Guru Govind Singh	219
		'Handspun as Measure of Value	5
		Harijan Collections	161
		'Harijan' in Marathi	63
		'Harijan' in Urdu	139
		'Harijan' Sevak Sangh	151
		Hindi+Urdu=Hindustani	35
		Hindustani	21, 95, 268
		Hissar Famine and Spinning	118
		Hooliganism	216
		How to Crush National Movements	281
		Hyderabad State	37
		If 'Harijan' is Suppressed	229
		Implications of Withdrawal	160
		Important Questions	188
		In Case of Illness	229
		Independence Ensures Speedy Victory	203
		Indian Soldiers Run Amuck?	173
		Indira Nehru's Engagement	65
		Individual or Collective?	39
		Inhuman, if True	96
		Jodhpur	117, 216
		Jodhpur Tragedy	196
		Kashi Vishwavidyalaya Address	25
		Khadi and Village Industries	169
		Khadi Students	63
		Lala Shankerlal	117
		Lawlessness in Sindh	164
		Limbdi Exodus Anniversary	54
		Linguistic Basis	117
		Literary v. Craft work	105
		Magan Dipa	272

Mean and Vindictive	53	The Curse	93	Mashruwala K. G.
Misbehaviour of Troops	37	The First Victim	253	A Fifth Columnist Government	274
Model Schools for Harijans	55	The Late Dr. Datta	208	Death as a Force of Life	256
No Guarantees Contemplated	260	The Married Estate	88	Deceitful Nomenclature	152
Non-violent Resistance	112	The National Week	93	Disapproved	279
No Salvation without Sacrifice	188	The Next Phase	3	Dislocation of the Traffic	284
Not Necessarily Impure	49	Three Essentials	50	English Masters & Domestic
Not Quite	49	Timely Action	229	Servants	273
Oasis in a Desert	53	To American Friends	264	Gandhiji's Birthday	274
Oh! The Troops!	212	To Correspondents	36	Humiliating Indeed	281
One Thing Needful	148	To Every Briton	156	Mahadev Desai	277
On Its Trial	73	To Every Japanese	240	My Mouth is Gagged	280
Opium Addicts	145	To Gujaratis	24	Permissible Items	280
Pandit Kachru Externed	247	Tolerance According to		Personal	275
Passing of the First Stage		Some Muslim Writers	86	Question Box	280
of the A. I. V. I. A.	50	To Muslim Correspondents	220	Quislingism	275
Peace Organizations	4	To My Critics	237	Rules of Conduct	273
Pertinent Questions	232	To the Subscribers	5	Some Danger Spots of Yarn
Plain Living and High Thinking	27	Travancore	144	Currency	118
Plea for Calmness	42	Two Actions	205	The National War Front	279
Plea for More Fruits	77	Unseemly, if True	261	The Right of Self-defence	97
Praja Mandals and Congress	105	Untouchability and Indore	84	To Police and Prison Officers
Price Control	32	Urdu Examinations	250	and Magistrates	276
Question Box	16, 27, 38, 48, 64, 67,	Urdu Made Easy	65	Village Swaraj	279
89, 94, 108, 116, 119, 137, 152,		Vacation Work	107
157, 173, 177, 189, 195, 205, 210,		"Violence is Disastrous"	5	Mira
228, 238, 251		What Could Have Been Done?	161	Our Ordered Anarchy	221
Rajaji	192	Why?	4	Nag, Har Dayal
Real War Effort	12	Why the Difference?	109	From the Oldest Congressman	56
Reply to Sir Stafford Cripps	208	Katju, K. N.		Nehru, Rameshwari
Sardar Prithvisingh	177	Creed v. Policy of Non-violence	129	Hell in Ajmer	54
Scorched Earth	88, 104, 109	Kumarappa J. C.		Pyarelal
Scorched Earth Policy Again	140	Exchange and Human Values	143	Basic Education at Work	275
Seth Jamnalal Bajaj	37	Imperialism within Us	135	Santra, Dr.
Sir Akbar Hyderi	5	National Wealth	115	Cow's Milk for Lepers	98
States and Their People	145	Non-slaughter Leather	114	Shukla, Chandrashanker (C. S.)
Stopping Animal Sacrifices	105	Purposeful Politics	155, 163	Hand Weaving in New Mexico,
Stud Bulls	84	Some False Assumptions	89	U. S. A.	115
"Suppose Germany Wins"	40	The Ground Work for		In Resurgent China	157
Ten Questions re:		Independence	218	Khadi Forges Ahead	71, 78
The National Language	125	What Cost Violence?	169	Labourers as Co-partners	175
Terrible, if True	169	When Machine Power?	75	Love of One's Own Language	99
That Ill-fated Proposal	120	Lohia, Rammanohar		Thakkar A. V.
The Andhras	97	Treacherous Japanese or		Spinning by Sweepers	77
The Ashram Prayer	44	Complacent British?	124	Vinoba
		With Jamnalalji	134	Three Clues	273

SUBJECT INDEX

Adibasis

Adibasi	M. K. G.	38
Adibasis	"	5

Agriculture

Alchemy of Producing Food	"	181
From Unofficial Notes	"	107

Communal Problem

A Distinctive Feature
Suggested	M. K. G.	26
An Appeal to Qaid-e-Azam	"	68
Communal Unity	"	13
Congress and League	"	158
Defending the Indefensible	"	88
Disgraceful	"	65
For Muslim Friends	"	237
For Rajaji	"	172
Hindu-Muslim Puzzle	"	38
Not an Incitement	"	137
Only if They Withdraw	"	198
Rotatory Government	"	152
The Bombay Interview	"	166
"The Communal Triangle"	M. D.	206
To Muslim Correspondents	M.K.G.
Why not in Hindu	"	220
Majority Provinces?	"	38
Why not in Universities?	"	119

Congress

Badshah Khan's Popularity	M.K.G.	215
Congress and War Contracts	"	230
Don't Divide the House	"	9
Draft Resolution	"	262
Future Programme	"	30
Limits of Cooperation	"	31
Plain Living and High
Thinking	"	26
Principles and Objectives	"	30
Strengthen the Organization	"	16
Test of Honesty?	"	64
The Andhras	"	97
The National Week	"	93
The Next Phase	"	4
To My Critics	"	237
Unitary Method	"	23
Why Did You not Divide
the House?	"	31
Working Committee's Instructions	11
Working Committee's
Resolutions	21, 230
Constructive Programme
A. I. S. A. and Kindred
Institutions	M. K. G.	217
Constructive Programme	"	28

Constructive Programme

and Government	M. K. G.	13
Constructive Work in Sindh	A.K.	80

Cow-preservation

An Omission	M. K. G.	228
Barren Cows	"	152
Go-seva Sangh	M. D.	33, 40
Go-seva Sangh Resolutions	"	51
How to Serve with
the Body	M. K. G.	64
Individual or Collective?	"	39
Individual v. Collective
Cow-keeping	"	67
Stud Bulls	"	84

Economics

Barter in Bezvada	A. K.	94
Basic Currency	Bhartanand	78
Economic Equality	M. K. G.	16
Exchange and Human
Values	A. K.	143
Handspun as Measure
of Value	M. K. G.	5
Labourers as Co-partners	C. S.	175
National Wealth	J. C. K.	115
Not Necessarily Impure	M. K. G.	49

INDEX-VOLUME X (1946-7)

AUTHOR INDEX

- Agrawal S. N.
Hindustani Pracharak School, Wardha 147
Programme for the Congress Ministers 163
- Amrit Kaur, Rajkumari (A. K.)
A Dismal Picture 215
After Nearly Four Years 86
A Good Way 343
A. I. V. I. A. News 62
A Lighter Interlude 303
A Silver Lining 293
A Word to Punjab 348
Cattle Improvement 360
Commendable 32
Criminal Waste 336
Cruel 115
For Women 115
Further Suggestions for Combating Food Scarcity 46
Gleanings from Correspondents 86
Gurudev's Agony 222
Homage 4
Inspiring for Women 88
Revealing Figures 302
Rikshaw-pullers 241
Still Worse 151
Superfluous Rations 334
The Dairy Industry of India 362
The Drink Evil 228
The Ideal Woman 175
The Lesson of the Cross 101
The Utility of the Groundnut 207
Wasteful 23
Ways and Means 38
Women's Corner 16
Wrong 367
- Alexander, Horace
An Indian Village Fights Against Famine 415
- Anonymous
A Challenge to Faith 404
A. I. C. C. Resolution 221
A Negro Sage 451
A-Timely Interview 238
Bhangi Problem in New Delhi 193
Congress Resolutions 449
English into Hindustani 295
325, 351, 371, 397, 287, 435, 417, 461, 501
Examinations in Hindustani 40
Gandhiji's Present Routine 474
Hindustani and the Government 450
Peace Plan in Noakhali 472
Kasturba Gandhi National Memorial Trust 258
Kasturba Work in Assam 179
Resolutions Passed by the A. I. S. A. on 10-10-46 371
Shrirampur Diary 471, 493, 517
South Africa Deputation's Submission 54
Suggestions for Jails 318
What a Fast Can Save 267
Working Committee Resolutions 50, 158, 190
Working Committee's Statement 465
- Azad, Abul Kalam
National Language of India 149
- Brailsford H. N.
Gandhiji on New Spirit 90
- Chadray, Dr. M. G.
Useful Suggestions 223
- C. R.
In memoriam 261
- C. S.
Armaments at What Cost? 238
What Can Poor Nations Do? 355
- Datarsingh
Development of Dual Purpose Cattle in India 190
- Desai, Khandubhai
Indian Textile Industry 497
- Desai, Mahadev (M. D.)
His Last Article 268
- Desai, Valji Govindji (V. G. D.)
An American Friend's Warning 506
A Prohibition Anthology 303, 427
A Wife Spinning for Her Husband 411
A Wise Tanner and a Wise King 211
Beware of Bureaucratic Plans 84
Brotherhood Day Programme in American Schools 513
Harijan Service in Central India 1944-45 390
Khadi in Tamil Nad, 1944-45 99
New Education in England 356
On Tractors and Chemical Fertilizers 467
Prohibit Horse-racing and Football Pools 415
Proverbs on Drink Evil 256
Shelley's Prophetic Vision 98
Story Hour 302, 411, 444, 487, 507
The Case of Bullock 91
Twenty Rules of Dairy Farms 30
- Frydman, Maurice
Food Rationing 330
Mud-huts 359
- Gandhi, Kanu
Charkha Mandal 376
How to Make the Wheel Go 363
- Gandhi, Krishnadas
Economics of Khadi 294
- Gandhi, M. K. (M. K. G.)
Abducted girls 381
About Khadi Bhandars 334
About Rajaji 17
Acknowledgment 321
Addresses and Floral Tributes (Q. B.) 171
A Deed of Mercy 344
A Dirty Habit 232
A Fair Hit 156
A Good Reminder 139
A Harijan's Letter 125
A Khadi Lover's Complaint 266
A Letter from Gandhiji 476
All about Bhandars 217
Alternative to Industrialism 285
A Minister's Woe 97
An Appeal to Correspondents 324
Animal Sacrifice 200
An Englishman's Difficulty 60
An Analysis 152
Antidote 296
Are We Going Down? 3
- A Sign of Progress 445
A Sure Aid 132
"A Temple to Gandhiji" 52
Atom Bomb and Ahimsa 212
A Tragic Phenomenon 237
A Useful Pamphlet 33
A Wise Step 384
Ayurved and Nature Cure 148
Bhangi Strikes 189
Blank Minute Books 344
Butchery in Ahmedabad 244
Capitalism and Strikes 60
Caste Corrosion 124
Certain Questions 128
Charkha Jayanti 320
Cloth Shortage 245
Cochin 286
Cocktail Parties 133
Coercive Fast 29
Collective Prayer 319
Compensation for Murder 276
Conflict of Ideas 36
Confusion about Ramanama 286
Congressmen Apathetic 66
Congress Ministries and Non-violence 309
Congress Ministers not Sahib Log 333
Convenience v. Necessity 56
Co-operatives in Kerala 344
Criminals and Non-violence 124
Cruelty to the Dumb Creation 392
Curious 1
Deadly Embrace 368
Decentralization 258
Decimal Coinage and Its Cost 53
Deplorable 112
Disloyalty to Khadi 280
Distinction Between Hindi and Urdu 221
Doctors Criticized 259
Dr. Lohia's Challenge 208
Dr. Lohia again 361
Dr. Mehta's Institute 165
Dola Palki 348, 396
Do not Eliminate Truth and Non-violence 333
During Mussoori Sojourn 184
Eating with Harijans 92
Eleven Days' Charkha Class 329
Eloquent Figures 373
Enforced Marriage 311
English Hindustani Dictionary 367
English into Hindustani 287, 331
English Notices 286
Excessive Praise 168
Faith Cure v. Ramanama 171
Famine Notes 161, 187
Famine of Grains and Cloth 12
Fasting in the Air 93
Fire Works During Diwali Days 370
Flags and Schools 15
Flags and Uniforms 168
Food Shortage 332
For Readers 296
Gandhiji's Advice to Assam 471
Gandhiji's Press Statements 11, 30, 43, 55, 123, 127, 235, 421
Gandhiji's Speech at the A. I. C. C. 226
Goa 276, 279, 286, 305
Goshalas and Panjrapoles 117

Green Cross Society	403	Khadi Workers	252	Sindh Bans 'Satyarth Prakash'	383
Guruvayur	344	Left-handed Compliment	224	Slighting Swaraj	141
Hallucination	197	Leprosy and Contamination	319	Some Labour Questions	9
Hand Spinning v. Mill Spinning	340	Let Us Pray	80	South Africa	257, 276, 308
Handspun v. Mill Cloth	372	Letter to the Governor General of Portuguese India	260	Sovereign Remedy	106
Hand Weaving and Hand Spinning	59	Living Upto 125	19	Stop it	320
Harijans and Wells	311	Looting	189	Strikes	256
Harijan Collections	205	Mango Seed Kernel	153	Sugar and Sweetmeats	105
Harijan Cooks	133	March of Civilization	121	Swaraj through Spinning (Q. B.)	121, 265
'Harijan' in Urdu Script	106	Marriages Between Harijans and Non-Harijans	212	Sweepers' Strike	96
'Harijan' Revived	8	Meaning of God	24	The Central Point Missed (Q. B.)	265
Harijan Work in Bhusawal Taluka	175	Mercy v. Ruthlessness	106	The Charity of the Rich	130
Harijan Work in Kistna District	314	Mindfulness the Remedy	178	The Coming Congress Session	370
He Lives	100	Ministerial Salaries	92, 176	The Curse of Dowry	369
Heal Thyself	248	Minister's Duty	104	The Danger of 'Vanaspati'	348
Helpful Suggestions	33	More Suggestions	173	The Devdasi System	310
High Handedness Exposed	41	Move on	286	The European Vote	188
Hindu and Mussalman Tea Etc.	48	Much in Little	189	The Late Bhulabhai Desai	125
Hindu Pani and Muslim Pani	361	My Confession and Cure	44	The Lesson of Madura	5
Hindustani	5, 70	Nature Cure a Panacea	311	The Limit of Insanitation	275
Hindustani Criticized	181	Nature Cure and Modern Treatment	260	The Lowly Cow	310
Hindustani Prachar Examinations	287	Nature Cure Clinic	8	The Lure of Legislatures	13
Hindustani v. Urdu and Hindi	297	Nature Cure for the Poor	165	The Meaning of Nature Cure	257
His Greatest Character	268	Nature Cure in Kanchangan	153	The Monkey Nuisance	123
Horse Racing	275	Nature Cure Treatment	32	The New Team	220
How?	341	9th August	248	The Place of Medicine in Nai Talim	285
How can Violence Be Stopped	140	Non-violence and Khadi	133	The Purpose of the Tour	508
How to Canalize Hatred	20	Non-violent Volunteer Corps	113	The Real Danger	220
How to Combat Unholy Boycott	369	No Publicity Required	181	The Revolutionary Charkha	237
How to Remove Untouchability	357	Not Lonely	28	The Smoking Evil	368
How to Think of God	265	Not Sentiment but Reason	333	The Unknown	180
How Villagers Can Manufacture Their Cloth	408	Oh! for Our English	21	Thou too Bihar!	337
Hypnotism of English	149	Oneness of Costume a Cure? (Q. B.)	368	Thoughtlessness	49
If I Were the Minister	288	Peaceful Strikes	158	Tired of Satyagraha?	321
Ignorant Waste	23	Persecution of Harijans	48	To Bihar	392
Independence	116, 236	Petrol and The Black Market	181	To Correspondents	133
Independence Celebrations	311	Please Note	20	To Patients	44
Indians in South Africa	52, 157	Plucky Stand	385	Total Prohibition	140
Indian Pressmen v. European	97	Prayer (Q. B.)	229	True but not New	181
Instructive Conversation on Khadi	176	Preaching to Emptiness	304	Two Requests	28
Introspection	130	Preservation of Cattle	304	Uncertified Khadi v. Mill Cloth	317
Imitation	205	Prohibition	313	Un-Islamic	385
Immortal Malviyaji	429	Proud or Insane?	317	Unlawful Peep Beyond (Q. B.)	190
Implications of Quit India	70	Purses for Public Men	23	Untouchability and the Flush System	310
Is God a Person or Force?	267	Question Box 12, 21, 32, 45, 53, 61, 67, 80, 93, 148, 170, 229, 233, 249		Urdu the Language of Both	171
Is It Genuine?	104	Rama, the Son of Dasharatha	323	Uruli-Kanchan	173
Is It not Cowardice?	324	Ramanam	92	Utilization of Available Power	33
Is Khadi Tottering?	129	Ramnam again	266	Valmiki's of Simla	133
Is Lying ever Justifiable? (Q. B.)	171	Ramnam Infallible Remedy	56	Vanaspati and Ghee	75
Is Netaji Alive?	70	Ramnavami Celebrations	126	Village Industries	393
Is not Service Worship? (Q. B.)	357	Real India	364	Vital Defects	160
Is Ramanama Another Name for Charm?	357	Regarding Hindustani	313	Wastefulness	62
Its Implications	4	Religion v. No Religion	172	Ways of Violence	36
Its Language	180	"Remember the Harijan"	279	What about Dakore?	370
Jews and Palestine	229	Ridiculing Ramanam	160	What about Women?	96
Kanu Gandhi's Camp	122	Riding Two Horses	344	What a Child Can Teach Us?	267
Karachi Khadi Bhandar	324	Roman Urdu	100	What after Finishing Studies?	38
Kasturba Leprosy Work	81	Rowdyism in Elections	105	What Can Violence Do?	280
Kasturba Memorial Trust	225	Rowdyism Run Riot	347	What Has the Congress Done?	200
Kasturba Smarak Trust	76	Salaries of M. L. A.'s.	157	What Is in a Name?	77
Khaddar	310	Sales Tax	293	What Is the Law?	89
Khadi in Towns	228	Satyagraha in Face of Hooli- ganism	45	What Ought to Be Done?	19
Khadi Mad	209	Scavenger's Lot	340	What to Do?	312
Khadi Science School at Bombay	151	"Scheduled Castes"	238	What Use Ahimsa? (Q. B.)	332
		Self-restraint in Marriage	213	What Will South Africa Do?	468
		Self-sufficiency v. Commercial Khadi	89	White Bread and Brown	105
		Shocking, if True	49	Whited Sepulchers	124
		'Silk Khadi'	103	Whiteman's Burden	204
				Why Bhangi Quarters?	57
				Why Doctors?	158
				Why For Harijans?	49

Why Go Abroad?	308	The Mother's Distress	441	A Venture in Faith	412
Why in Want of Food? (Q. B.)	265	Question Box	445	A Wail from Goa	295
Why Kill?	213	The So-called Decimal Coinage	126	Brake upon Progress?	198
Why Not?	112	Tiruvavur	485	Brijkishore Babu	369
Why One More Burden?	57	To Gandhiji's Correspondents	520	Communion of Silence	109
Why Only Yarn?	103	To Nature Cure Seekers	585	Congress Ministries and Basic Education	264
Why These Tears?	370	Triumph of Valmiki	449	Congress Ministries and Rural Uplift	281
Why This Antipathy?	205	Unequal Marriages	474	Constructive Non-violence	72
Why This Secrecy?	3-8	Uruli-Kanchan Report	450	Cultural Conquest and Roman Script	123
Who Can Be a Trustee?	381	Village Industries and the State	456	Deccan Chiefs in Conference	250
Who Is Rama?	158	Who Should Do It?	473	"Do or Die" at Work	489
Wholesale Releases	172	Mirabehn		Fifth Freedom	364
Whose Need?	40	All Is not Gold that Glitters	470	For Shame!	74
Yarn Exchange	205	Cattle Wealth	331	Gandhiji's Communism	63
George, S. K.		Cultural Conquest	371	Gandhiji's Ideal of a Private Secretary	681
The Path of Redemptive Suffering	515	From Rubbish to Gold	35	Gurudev's Birthday	136
Gopalswami, L. N.		Paradise Lost	331	Heart Searchings	137
The Textile Policy of the Madras Government	491	Stepping off the Last Rung	30	Harijansevak Sangh Under Fire	233
Jagdishan, T. N.		Tractors V. Bullocks	331	How to Make It Dynamic	58
Leprosy Day by Day	214	True Non-violence	258	If I Were a Dictator	199
Leprosy in Poona	51	Naidu, Sarojini		Ideals for the I. N. A.	65
The Leprosy Problem	22	He Lives	261	Initiated	485
Kalelkar, Kaka		Naik, Gajanan		Inspiring for Gramsevakas	240
A Note On Hindustani	480	Grow More Palms	349	I. N. A. Men's Dilemma	174
Assam	476	Palm Gur Industry	196	Introspection	130
Hindustani	406	Nanavati, Amritlal		Khadi on Trial	277
Line Clear in Public Interest	434	Hindustani Prachar Examinations	417	Lest We Forget	137
The Message of Khadi	427	Nayyar, Dev Prakash		Lighter Interludes	17
The Official Attitude	452	The Coffin at the Feast	210	Love of Truth	197
Kini, K. N.		Work as Education	299	Mahadeve Desai—Last Phase	273
Ruralizing University Education	357	Nayyar, Sushila (S. N.)		Man's Inhumanity to Man	208
Kripalani, Acharya		A Visit to Naghat	192	More Legal Opinions	202
Acharya Kripalani's Address	429	Constructive Work and Samagra Gramseva	42	Non-violent Technique and Parallel Government	13
Acharya Kripalani's Concluding Address	449	'Harijan' without M. D.	15	Not Enough	179
Kumarappa, J. C.		Ideal for Woman	118	Over Population or Under Production	323
Another Rising Menace	507	Ignorant Legislation	107	Over Proof Is Admission	413
Christians and Politics	83	Non-violence and Molestation of Women	7	Prayer Discourses	110
Controls and Controls	227	Scientific Research and Food Shortage	119	Prohibition in C. P.	390
Double Negatives	516	The Disciple and His Master	239	Race Prejudice in South Africa and India	71
For Sale—A Pacifier!	505	Wells Thrown Open	348	Satyagraha—the Art of Living and Dying	73
Nationalization	475	Nehru, Jawaharlal		Seeking Blessings	132
Non-violent India as World Power	35	Mahadev Desai	268	Sending Students to England	199
Our Economic Policy	510	Pandit Nehru's Statement	321	Signs of the Time	99
Useful Hints	127, 138	Parikh, Narahari (N. P.)		Some Posers	337
When a Bullock-ghani Is Furniture	227	Adivasi Problem in Bombay	500	Spinning as Occupational Therapy	195
Managing Editor		Commendable	454	The Discipline of Prayer	29
To the Reader	444	Congratulations	491	The "Do or Die" Mission	432
Mashruwala K. G. (K. G. M.)		To Gandhiji's Correspondents	520	The First Lesson	424
A Commendable Leaflet	512	Patel, Sardar Vallabhbhai		The Loss	108
Decimal Coinage	181	Medium of Instruction	455	The Mother of Khaddar	318
Decimalization of Weights and Measures	349	Pyarelal (P.)		The Message of the I. N. A.	78
Destruction of Monkeys	459	A Commendable Example	1-5	The National Week	96
For Peace and Harmony	470	A Friendly Overture	389	The Nightmare	197
'Gandhi Vihar Dohan'	339	After Four Years	245	The Sacred Week	94
Good and Bad News	512	A Light in Darkness	120	The Spinning Wheel and the Atom Bomb	404
India Vindicated	458	A Medical Witness	222	The Travail	372
Indian Mills	496	An Australian Experiment	311	Things of the Spirit	136
Labels of Caste and Religion	459	And so It Came out	10	Three Fs	405
Medical Men's Statement on Leprosy	486	An Exaction and Oppression	141	True Philanthropy	164
Personal	458	An Experiment in National Diet	151	Truth or Ahimsa	199
Power Politics in Religion	448	A Pointer for the Future	1	Two Remarkable Experiments	47
Rediscovering Faith	468	An Appeal to Conscience	428	Undoing the Wrong	198
Return to Primitive Civilization!	475	Artificial Practices in Agriculture	391
Scripture for Devilry	435	A Simla Diary	135
		At Shirampur	488
		Attractive Picture	376
		A Touchstone and a Challenge	201

Weekly Letter 24,25,36,67,75,77,95, 101,114,130,154,166,169,182,185, 205,215,217,230,243,273,262,287, 305,314,321,334,341,345,365,374, 387,394,401,409,422,442.
With the South African Delegation	131
Young at Eightyfive	110
Raghavachari, G. S. Textile Mills and Madras Government Policy	514

Raval, Ramsingh Communal Unity and Non- untouchability in the I. N. A.	64
Shivnarayan Legal Opinion on the European Vote	188
Shri Rang Bihari Lal In Praise of Halves	198
Shyam Lal Kasturba Gandhi National Memorial Trust	287

Swami Anand Planning with Village Bins	506
Thakkar, A. V. (A. V. T.) Among the Savaras of Orissa	414
A Moral	7
Example to Follow	339
Excise Department in C. P.	407
Harijan Titbits	3
Kasturba Memorial Trust Agents	32
Vinoba A Neglected Service	513

SUBJECT INDEX

Adivasis
Adivasi Problem in Bombay	N. P.	500
Among the Savaras of Orissa	A. V. T.	414
A Visit to Nagthat	S. N.	192
How?	M. K. G.	341
Agriculture
Agriculture and Our Food Problem	Kripalani	431
An American Friend's Warning	V. G. D.	506
A Helpful Pamphlet	M. K. G.	33
An Australian Experiment		311
A Negro Sage		451
Artificial Practices in Agriculture	Pyarelal	391
Beware of Bureaucratic Plans	V. G. D.	84
From Rubbish to Gold Mirabeau		35
Green Cross Society	M. K. G.	403
On Tractors and Chemical Fertilizers	V. G. D.	467
Over Population or Under Production?	Pyarelal	323
Revealing Figures	A. K.	302
Tractors v. Bullocks	Mirabeau	331
Useful Hints	J. C. K.	127, 138
Communal Question
A Dark Diwali	P.	388
A Friendly Overture	P.	389
An Appeal to Conscience	P.	428
Antidote	M. K. G.	296
Appeal for Unity	Kripalani	446
A Silver Lining	A. K.	293
A Venture in Faith	P.	412
A Word to the Muslim League (W. L.)	P.	374
Bombay's Shame (W. L.)	P.	315
Brotherhood Day Programme in American Schools	V. G. D.	513
Butchery in Ahmedabad	M. K. G.	244
Come Thou in a Shower of Mercy (W. L.)	P.	345
Communal Differences	Kripalani	435
Communal Strife (W. L.)	P.	315
Communal Unity and Non- untouchability in the I. N. A.	Ramsingh Raval	64
Communalism in Modes of Address (Q. B.)	K. G. M.	415
Congress Resolution on Communal Strife		447
Deadly Embrace	M. K. G.	368
"Do or Die" at Work	P.	489
East Bengal		382
Fallen from Grace (W. L.)	P.	216
For Peace and Harmony	K. G. M.	470
Forcible Marriages and Conversions (W. L.)	P.	387
Gandhiji's Press Statement		421
Heal Thyself	M. K. G.	248
Hindu and Mussalman Tea etc.	M. K. G.	48
Hindu Pani and Muslim Pani	M. K. G.	361
Mutual Toleration	Kripalani	440
Not Straight (W. L.)	P.	374
Oneness of Costume a Cure? (Q. B.)	M. K. G.	368
Overproof Is Admission	P.	413
Peace Plan in Noakhali		472
Power Politics in Religion	K. G. M.	448
Prayer Discourses (W. L.)	P.	110
Retallation and Reprisals	Kripalani	440
Return to Primitive Civilization!	K. G. M.	475
Some Posers	P.	337
Shrirampur Diary		477, 493, 517
The Darkening Shadow (W. L.)	P.	342
The "Do or Die" Mission	P.	432
The First Lesson	P.	424
The Lengthening Shadow (W. L.)	P.	169
The Lurid Background (W. L.)	P.	101
The Mother's Distress	K. G. M.	441
The Orgy of Madness (W. L.)	P.	374
The Purpose of the Tour	M. K. G.	508
The Sacred Week	P.	94
The Third Party	Kripalani	439
The Travail	P.	372
To Bhar	M. K. G.	392
Un-Islamic	M. K. G.	385
Weekly Letter	P.	144, 243, 394, 401, 409, 422, 442
What Can Violence Do?	M. K. G.	280
What to Do?	M. K. G.	312
Why This Secrecy	M. K. G.	368
Congress and Politics
About Rajaji	M. K. G.	17
Acknowledgment	M. K. G.	321
A Foolish Waste of Money (W. L.)	P.	315
After Four Years	P.	245
A. I. C. C. Resolution		221
All Eyes on Ministers (W. L.)	P.	314
An American Interlude (W. L.)	P.	341
An Analysis	M. K. G.	152
An Assortment (W. L.)	P.	341
An Exaction and Oppression	P.	141
Are We Going Down?	M. K. G.	3
A Simla Diary	P.	135
Assam	K. K.	476
At Last?	P.	347
A Tragic Phenomenon	M. K. G.	237
A Wail from Goa	P.	295
Bank Minute Books	M. K. G.	324
British Troops an Obstacle	P.	389
Campaign of Vilification (W. L.)	P.	206
Caste Corrosion	M. K. G.	124
Christians and Politics	J. C. K.	83
Conclusion	Kripalani	441
Conflict of Ideas	M. K. G.	36
Congress Ministries and Non-violence	M. K. G.	309
Congress Ministers, not Sahib Log	M. K. G.	333
Congress Resolutions		446
Congressmen Apathetic	M. K. G.	66
Constituent Assembly	Kripalani	440
Criminal if True	M. K. G.	15
Curious	M. K. G.	1
Decentralization	M. K. G.	258
Delhi Municipality (W. L.)	P.	315
Democracy and Non-violence	Kripalani	430
Deplorable	M. K. G.	112
Double Negatives	J. C. K.	516
Dr. Lohia Again	M. K. G.	361
Dr. Lohia's Challenge	M. K. G.	208
Do not Eliminate Truth and Non-violence	M. K. G.	333
"Ekla Chalo" (W. L.)	P.	388
Excessive Praise	M. K. G.	168
Fifth Freedom	P.	364
Flags and Uniforms	M. K. G.	168
Foundations of Freedom	P.	263
Future of British Civilian		382
Gandhiji on New Spirit	H. N. Brailsford	90
Gandhiji's Press Statements		30, 43, 235
Gandhiji's Advice to Assam		471
Gandhiji's Speech at the A. I. C. C.		226
Give Them Time (W. L.)	P.	316
Goa	M. K. G.	276, 279, 286, 305
Goa	P.	346
Heart-searching	P.	137
High-handedness Exposed	M. K. G.	41
Ideals for the I. N. A.	P.	65
"If I Were a Dictator"	P.	199
" " (W. L.)	P.	321
Implications of Quit India	M. K. G.	70
Independence	M. K. G.	116, 236
Independence Celebrations	M. K. G.	311
I. N. A. Again (W. L.)	P.	253
Introspection	P.	130
Its Own Seal and Sanction (W. L.)	P.	102
Land Without Suffering (W. L.)	P.	314
Legal Opinion on the European Vote	Shivnarayan	188
Letter to the Governor- General of Portuguese India	M. K. G.	260

Looting M. K. G. 189	Question Box M. K. G. 45	Famine of Grain and Cloth M. K. G. 12
Ministerial Salaries M.K.G. 92, 176	The Constructive Programme Kripalani 429	Food Rationing Maurice Frydman 330
More Legal Opinions P. 202	The National Week P. 96	Food Shortage, M. K. G. 332
National Unity 431	• Daridranarayan	Further Suggestions for Combating Food Scarcity A.K. 46
9th August M. K. G. 248	A Dedication (W. L.) P. 253	Gandhiji's Press Statements 11, 43, 123
Non-violence and Khadi M. K. G. 133	All Is not Gold that Glitters Mirabehtn 470	Gleanings from Correspondents A. K. 46
No Time for Jubilation (W. L.) P. 306	A Sanctuary for the Poor P. 170	Gurudev's Agony A. K. 222
Not Sentiment but Reason M. K. G. 333	A Sermon on Fakiri (W. L.) P. 387	Helpful Suggestions M. K. G. 33
Oh! for Our English M. K. G. 21	During Mussoori Sojourn M. K. G. 184	Ignorant Waste M. K. G. 23
On the Eve P. 102	His Lavatory (W. L.) P. 182	Oh! for Our English M. K. G. 21
Press Summary of Mr. Churchill's Speech 116	Panchgani at Last (W.L.) P. 232	Question Box M. K. G. 21 45, 53
Programme for the Congress Ministers S. N. Agrawal 163	Rikshaw-pullers A. K. 241	Revealing Figures A. K. 302
P. S. (W. L.) P. 207	Skeletons in the Cupboard (W. L.) P. 182	Scientific Research and Food Shortage S. N. 119
Question Box M. K. G. 53, 61, 93, 148, 170, 249	The Coffin at the Feast Dev Prakash 210	Servants or Masters (W.L.) P. 26
Real India M. K. G. 364	The Spinning Wheel (W. L.) P. 345	Shed Inertia and Prejudice (W. L.) P. 26
Reconstructing the Interim Government 382	Economics	Stepping off the Last Rung Mirabehtn 30
Redeem Old Pledges (W. L.) P. 307	Alternative to Industrialism M. K. G. 285	Sugar and Sweetmeats M. K. G. 105
Rowdyism in Elections (Q. B.) 105	Decentralization of Industry Kripalani 430	Superfluous Rations A. K. 334
Salaries of M.L.A.'s M.K.G. 157	Decimal Coinage K. G. M. 181	The Grim Spectre (W. L.) P. 25
Sales Tax M. K. G. 293	Decimal Coinage and Its Cost M. K. G. 53	The Seventieighth Birthday (W. L.) P. 335
Satyagraha the Art of Living and Dying P. 73	Decimalization of Weights and Measures K. G. M. 349	Three Fs P. 405
"Scheduled Castes" M. K. G. 238	Gandhiji's Communism P. 63	Warning Signals (W. L.) P. 27
Shrirampur Diary 493, 517	Indian Textile Industry Khandubhai Desai 497	Wastefulness M. K. G. 62
Signs of the Time P. 99	In Praise of Halves Shri Rang Biharilal 198	Ways and Means A. K. 38
Sindh Bans Satyarth Prakash M. K. G. 383	National Planning Kripalani 403	What a Fast Can Save 267
Straws in the Wind (W.L.) P. 37	Nationalization J. C. K. 475	What Ought to Be Done M.K.G. 19
Suggestions for Jails 318	No Exploitation Kripalani 431	White Bread and Brown M.K.G. 105
Testing Time (W.L.) P. 345	Our Economic Policy J. C. K. 510	Foreign Affairs
The Central Point Missed (Q. B.) M. K. G. 265	Pandit Nehru at Sevagram (W. L.) P. 289	A Message to America 382
The Coming Congress Session M. K. G. 370	State Ownership v. Control (W. L.) P. 365	Jews and Palestine M. K. G. 229
The Day (W. L.) P. 306	The Scope of Electricity Kripalani 431	Lighter Interludes P. 17
The European Vote M. K. G. 188	The So-called Decimal Coinage K. G. M. 126	Goseva
The Lure of Legislatures M.K.G. 13	Yarn Exchange M. K. G. 205	A Word to Punjab A. K. 348
The Message of the I.N.A. P. 78	Education	Cattle Improvement A. K. 360
The New Team M. K. G. 220	A Crucial Decision (W. L.) P. 263	Cattle Wealth Mirabehtn 331
The Official Attitude K. K. 462	A Lighter Interlude A. K. 303	Development of Double Purpose Cattle in India (Sir) Datar Singh 190
The Purpose of the Tour M. K. G. 508	Congress Ministries and Basic Education P. 283	Goshalas and Panjrapoles M. K. G. 117
The Real Danger M. K. G. 220	Flags and Schools M. K. G. 15	Handling Milk in England V. G. D. 264
The Sacred Week P. 94	Foundations of Freedom (W. L.) P. 264	March of Civilization M.K.G. 121
The Strike Fever (W. L.) P. 262	Medium of Instruction Sardar Patel 455	Oh! for Our English M.K.G. 21
Thou too Bihar! M. K. G. 337	New Education in England V.G.D. 350	Preservation of Cattle M.K.G. 11
To Suspect Is Unmanly P. 74	Ruralizing University Education K. N. Kini 357	The Case of the Bullock V.G.D. 91
Vital Defects M. K. G. 160	Teachers of Tomorrow (W. L.) P. 305	The Dairy Industry in India A.K. 362
Weekly Letter P. 75, 95, 154, 185, 205, 262	The Place of Medicine in Nai Talim M. K. G. 285	The Lowly Cow M. K. G. 310
Whited Sepulchers M. K. G. 124	Why Go Abroad? M. K. G. 308	Twenty Rules for Dairy Farms V. G. D. 301
Who Should Do It? K. G. M. 473	Work as Education Dev Prakash Nayyar 299	Health
Whole Sale Releases M. K. G. 172	Famine	A Dedication (W. L.) P. 253
Why Not? M. K. G. 112	A Dismal Picture P. 215	A Dirty Habit M. K. G. 232
With an English Journalist (W.L.) P. 339	A Minister's Woe M. K. G. 97	A Hard Case (W. L.) P. 291
Working Committee Resolutions 50, 158, 190	An Indian Village Fights against Famine Horace Alexander 415	Ahimsa and Cleanliness (W.L.) P. 291
Working Committee's Statement 465	Coffin at the Feast (W. L.) P. 170	Alchemy of Detachment (W. L.) P. 72
Zero Hour (W. L.) P. 78	Criminal Waste A. K. 336	A Medical Witness P. 222
Constructive Work	Famine Notes P. 161, 187	An Experiment in National Diet P. 151
After Nearly Four Years A. K. 86		At Uruli-Kanchan (W. L.) P. 68
An Attractive Picture P. 376		Ayurved and Nature Cure M. K. G. 148
Building while Destroying Kripalani 429		Confusion about Ramanama M. K. G. 286
'Line Clear' in Public Interest K. K. 434		Dr. Mehta's Institute M. K. G. 165
Programme for the Congress Ministers S. N. Agrawal 163		Doctors Criticized M. K. G. 259

- First Patients (W. L.) P. 69
 For Sale—A Pacifier J. C. K. 505
 Handicap of Funds (W. L.) P. 254
 In the Evening of His Life (W. L.) P. 67
 Is Ramanama Another
 Name for Charms? M. K. G. 357
 Its Use and Limitations (W. L.) P. 68
 Life as Sacrament (W. L.) P. 72
 Living upto 125 M. K. G. 19
 Living upto 125
 Years (W. L.) P. 71
 Mango Seed Kernal M. K. G. 153
 My Confession and Cure M.K.G. 44
 Nature Cure a Panacea
 (Q. B.) M. K. G. 311
 Nature Cure and Modern
 Treatment M. K. G. 260
 Nature Cure Clinic M. K. G. 8
 Nature Cure Expounded
 (W. L.) P. 69
 Nature Cure for the Poor M.K.G. 165
 Nature Cure in Kanchan
 Gaon M. K. G. 153
 Nature Cure Treatment M.K.G. 32
 Nature Curing Thieves (W.L.) P. 255
 Problems in Village
 Sanitation (W. L.) P. 291
 Question Box M. K. G. 249
 Raminam, the Infallible
 Remedy M. K. G. 56
 Scavenging as a Fine
 Art (W. L.) P. 254
 Sovereign Remedy M. K. G. 105
 Spinning as Occupational Therapy P. 195
 The Danger of 'Vanaspati'
 M. K. G. 348
 The Limit of Insanitation
 M. K. G. 275
 The Meaning of Nature
 Cure M. K. G. 257
 The Most Potent Weapon
 (W. L.) P. 68
 The Utility of the Groundnut
 A. K. 207
 This Is My India (W. L.) P. 69
 To Nature-Cure Seekers
 K. G. M. 485
 To Patients M. K. G. 44
 Two Remarkable Experiments P. 47
 Uruli-Kanchan M. K. G. 173
 Uruli-Kanchan Report K. G. M. 450
 Useful Suggestions
 M. A. Chadray 223
 Vanaspati and Ghee M.K.G. 75
 What Is Nature Cure? (W. L.) P. 68
 Why One More Burden? M.K.G. 57
 Why Doctors? M. K. G. 158
- Hindustani
 A Momentous Step (W. L.) P. 67
 A Note on Hindustani K. K. 480
 Cultrual Conquest and Roman Script P. 123
 Distinction between Hindi and Urdu M. K. G. 221
 English Hindustani
 Dictionary M. K. G. 367
 English into Hindustani
 287
 295, 325, 377, 381, 397, 417, 435,
 461, 481, 501
 English Notices M. K. G. 286
 Examinations in Hindustani 40
 'Harijan' in Urdu Script M.K.G. 106
 Hindustani M. K. G. 570
- Hindustani K. K. 406
 Hindustani and the Government 460
 Hindustani Criticized M.K.G. 184
 Hindustani Dictionary M.K.G. 351
 Hindustani Prachar
 Examinations M. K. G. 187
 Hindustani Prachar
 Examinations A. Nanavati 447
 Hindustani Pracharak School,
 Wardha S. N. Agrawal 147
 Hindustani v. Urdu and
 Hindi M. K. G. 297
 Hypnotism of English M. K. G. 149
 Its Language M. K. G. 180
 National Language of India
 A. K. Azad 149
 Oh! for Our English M. K. G. 21
 Regarding Hindustani M. K. G. 313
 Roman Urdu M. K. G. 100
 Stop It M. K. G. 320
 True but not New M. K. G. 181
 Urdu the Language
 of Both? M. K. G. 177
- Indian States
 Cochin M. K. G. 285
 Deccan Chiefs in Conference P. 250
- Indians Abroad
 A Portent (W. L.) P. 217
 Ceylon the Golden (W. L.) P. 231
 Congress Resolutions
 447
 Field Marshal Smut's
 Apologia (W. L.) P. 230
 Indians in South
 Africa M. K. G. 52, 157
 India Vindicated K. G. M. 453
 Pandit Nehru's Statement
 321
 Plucky Stand M. K. G. 385
 Some High Lights (W. L.) P. 218
 South Africa M. K. G. 257, 276, 308
 South Africa (W. L.) P. 206
 South African Deputation's
 Submission 54
 The South African Struggle
 (W. L.) P. 230
 Tired of Satyagraha? M. K. G. 321
 What Will South
 Africa Do? M. K. G. 408
 White Man's Burden M. K. G. 204
 With South African Delegation 134
- Khadi
 About Khadi Bhandars M. K. G. 334
 A Khadi Lover's
 Complaint M. K. G. 266
 All About Bhandars M. K. G. 217
 A Sign (W. L.) P. 322
 A Test of Faith (W. L.) P. 343
 A Wife Spinning for Her
 Husband V. G. D. 411
 Brake upon Progress? P. 198
 Charkha Jayanti M. K. G. 320
 Charkha Mandal Kanu Gandhi 376
 Cloth Shortage M. K. G. 245
 Decentralization of Khadi
 Organization (W. L.) P. 375
 Disloyalty to Khadi M. K. G. 280
 Economics of Khadi
 Krishnadas Gandhi 294
 Eleven Days' Charkha Class
 M. K. G. 329
 Eloquent Figures M. K. G. 373
 Hand Spinning v. Mill Spinning
 M. K. G. 340
 Hand-spun v. Mill Cloth M.K.G. 372
 Hand Weaving and
 Hand Spinning M. K. G. 59
- Heart Searching (W. L.) P. 336
 How to Make it Dynamic P. 58
 How to Make the Wheel Go
 Kanu Gandhi 363
 How Villages Can Manufacture
 Their Cloth M. K. G. 408
 Indian Mills K. G. M. 496
 If I Were the Minister M. K. G. 288
 Instructive Conversation on Khadi M. K. G. 176
 Is It Genuine? M. K. G. 104
 Is Khadi Tottering M. K. G. 129
 Kanu Gandhi's Camp M.K.G. 122
 Karachi Khadi Bhandar M.K.G. 324
 Khaddar M. K. G. 310
 Khadi at the Cross Roads
 (W. L.) P. 230
 Khadi in Tamilnad 1944-45
 V. G. D. 99
 Khadi in Towns M. K. G. 228
 Khadi Mad M. K. G. 209
 Khadi on Trial P. 277
 Khadi Science School
 at Bombay M. K. G. 151
 Khadi Workers M. K. G. 252
 Lest We Forget P. 137
 Madras Khadi Plan
 382
 Minister's Duty M. K. G. 104
 No Compulsion (W. L.) P. 365
 Our Neighbours the
 Afghans (W. L.) P. 346
 Plentiful Harvest (W. L.) P. 367
 Question of Subsidy (W. L.) P. 365
 Resolutions Passed by the
 A. I. S. A. on 10-10-46 371
 Self-sufficiency v.
 Commercial Khadi M.K.G. 89
 Silk Khadi M. K. G. 103
 Slighting Swaraj M. K. G. 141
 Snails Pace? (W. L.) P. 366
 State Ownership v.
 Control (W. L.) P. 365
 Swaraj through Spinning M.K.G. 121
 Swaraj through
 Spinning (Q. B.) M. K. G. 265
 Textile Mills and Madras
 Government Policy
 G. S. Raghavachari 514
 The Message of Khadi K. K. 427
 The Mother of Khadi P. 318
 The Revolutionary
 Charkha M. K. G. 237
 The Spinning Wheel (W. L.) P. 345
 The Spinning Wheel and the Atom Bomb P. 401
 The Textile Policy of the Madras Government
 L. N. Gopalswami 491
 Uncertified Khadi v.
 Mill Cloth M. K. G. 317
 Uncertified Khadi v.
 Mill Cloth (W. L.) P. 366
 Undoing the Wrong P. 198
 Who Can Be a Trustee? M.K.G. 381
 Why Only Yarn? M. K. G. 103
 Will They Do It? (W. L.) P. 342
- Labour
 A Harijan's Letter M. K. G. 125
 A Touchstone and a Challenge P. 201
 Bhangis' Strikes M. K. G. 189
 Capitalism and Strikes M.K.G. 60
 Peaceful Strikes M. K. G. 158
 Some Labour Questions M.K.G. 9
 Strikes M. K. G. 256

Sweepers' Strike			M. K. G.	96	Commendable			N. P.	454	Thoughtlessness			M. K. G.	49
Whose Need?			M. K. G.	40	Compensation for Murder			M. K. G.	276	To End War			P.	389
Leprosy					Congress Ministries and			M. K. G.	309	Triumph of Valmiki			K. G. M.	449
A Neglected Service			Vinoba	513	Non-violence			M. K. G.	72	True Non-violence			Mirabehtn	258
Ignorant Legislation			S. N.	118	Constructive Non-violence			P.	56	Truth or Ahimsa			P.	159
Kasturba Leprosy Work			M. K. G.	81	Convenience V. Necessity			M. K. G.	124	Unto This Last			P.	292
Leprosy and Contamination			M. K. G.	319	Criminals and Non-violence			M. K. G.	392	What Can Poor Nations Do?			C. S.	355
Leprosy Day by Day			T. N. Jagdisan	214	Cruelty to the Dumb Creation			M. K. G.	430	What Can Violence Do?			M. K. G.	280
Leprosy in Poona			"	51	Democracy and Non-violence			Kripalani	454	What Is the Law?			M. K. G.	89
Medical Men's Statement on			K. G. M.	486	Destruction of Monkeys			K. G. M.	333	What Use Ahimsa?			M. K. G.	332
Leprosy			M. K. G.	22	Do not Eliminate Truth and			M. K. G.	489	Way of Violence			M. K. G.	369
The Leprosy Problem			M. K. G.	67	Non-violence			P.	93	Weekly Letter			P.	24
Literature and Art					"Do or Die" at Work			M. K. G.	74	Why Kill?			M. K. G.	213
What Is Beautiful (W. L.)			P.	171	Fasting in the Air			M. K. G.	56	Obituaries
Miscellaneous					For Shame!			P.	36	Brijkishore Babu			P.	369
Addresses and Floral Tributes			M. K. G.	60	From the Oldest Congressman			Hardayal Nag	30	Gandhiji's Ideal of a Private			Secretary	P. 681
(Q. B.)			M. K. G.	156	Fruits of Violence (W. L.)			P.	36	'Harijan' without M. D.			S. N.	15
An Englishman's Difficulty			M. K. G.	334	Gandhiji's Press Statements			M. K. G.	8	He Lives			M. K. G.	100
A Fair Hit			M. K. G.	10	'Harijan' Revived			M. K. G.	140	He Lives			Sarojini Naidu	261
An Appeal to Correspondents			M. K. G.	183	How Can Violence			M. K. G.	20	His Greatest Character			M. K. G.	268
And so It Came out			(W. L.)	P. 133	be Stopped			M. K. G.	174	Homage			A. K.	4
Another Lesson			M. K. G.	32	How to Canalize Hatred			M. K. G.	485	Immortal Malaviyaji			M. K. G.	429
Cocktail Parties			A. K.	115	I. N. A. Men's Dilemma			P.	324	In Memoriam			C. R.	261
Commendable			A. K.	371	Initiated			M. K. G.	71	Mahadev Desai			Jawaharlal	268
Cruel			A. K.	296	Is It not Cowardice?			M. K. G.	80	Mahadev Desai Day (W. L.)			P.	289
Cultural Conquest			Mirabehtn	370	Is Lying ever Justifiable			(Q. B.)	M. K. G.	125	Mahadev Desai—Last Phase			P.	273
Fireworks During Diwali Days			M. K. G.	370	Is the World Going			Back? (W. L.)	P.	109	The Disciple and His Master			S. N.	269
For Readers			M. K. G.	296	Let Us Pray			M. K. G.	197	The Late Bhulabhai Desai			M. K. G.	125
'Gandhi Vichar Dohan'			K. G. M.	393	Love of Truth			P.	121	The Loss			P.	109
Gurudev's Birthday			P.	136	March of Civilization			M. K. G.	106	Personal
Imitation			M. K. G.	205	Mercy V. Ruthlessness			M. K. G.	106	A Sign			(W. L.)	P. 216
Indian Pressmen V.					Non-violence and			Molestation of Women	S. N.	7	"A Temple to Gandhiji"			M. K. G.	52
European			M. K. G.	97	Non-violence the Only			Way	Kripalani	446	Birthday Greetings (W. L.)			P.	347
Is Netaji Alive?			M. K. G.	70	Non-violent India as			World Power	J. C. K.	35	Gandhiji's Present Routine			474
Lokmanya Tilak's Anniversary			(W. L.)	P. 255	Non-violent Technique			and Parallel Government	P.	13	Gandhiji's Press Statement			127
Meeting Sastriar			S. N.	107	Non-violent Volunteer			Corps	M. K. G.	113	His Library (W. L.)			P.	182
Paradise Lost			Mirabehtn	330	Not Lonely			M. K. G.	28	His Spiritual Laboratory			(W. L.)	P. 290
Personal			K. G. M.	458	Petrol and Black Market			M. K. G.	181	In Harijan Quarters (W. L.)			P.	75
Please Note			M. K. G.	20	Question Box			M. K. G.	53, 233, 249	The Path of Redemptive			Suffering	S. K. George	515
Purses for Public Men			M. K. G.	23	Rowdyism Run Riot			M. K. G.	347	To Gandhiji's Correspondents			K. G. M. & N. P.	520
Question Box			M. K. G.	45	Satyagraha in Face of			Hooliganism	M. K. G.	45	Two Requests			M. K. G.	28
Seeking Blessings			P.	132	Shelly's Prophetic Vision			V. G. D.	98	Weekly Letter			P.	169
The Lesson of Madura			M. K. G.	5	Shrirampur Diary			477, 493, 517		Why Bhangi Quarters?			M. K. G.	57
To Correspondents			M. K. G.	133	Superior Method			Kripalani	446	Why One More Burden?			M. K. G.	57
To the Reader			Mg. Editor	444	The Better Way (W. L.)			P.	37	Prohibition
True Philanthropy			P.	164	The Central Point			Missed (Q. B.)	M. K. G.	265	Another Rising Menace			J. C. K.	507
Wasteful			A. K.	23	The Lesson of the Cross			A. K.	101	Excise Department			in C. P.	A. V. T.	407
Why These Tears?			M. K. G.	370	The Lurid Glare (W. L.)			P.	305	Horse Racing			M. K. G.	275
Why This Antipathy?			M. K. G.	205	The Monkey Nuisance			M. K. G.	123	Prohibit Horse Racing and Foot-			ball Pools	V. G. D.	415
Wrong			A. K.	367	The Nightmare			P.	197	Prohibition			M. K. G.	313
Young at Eightyfive			P.	110	The Path of Redemptive			Suffering	S. K. George	515	Prohibition Anthology			V. G. D.	303, 427
Non-violence					The Purpose of the Tour			M. K. G.	508	Prohibition in C. P.			P.	390
A Challenge to Faith			A. K.	343	Two Requests			M. K. G.	28	Proverbs on Drink Evil			V. G. D.	256
A Good Way			(W. L.)	P. 334	The Spectre of Violence (W. L.)			P.	71	Question Box			M. K. G.	67
A Heavy Broadside			(W. L.)	P. 291	The Spinning Wheel and			the Atom Bomb	P.	404	Smoking Evil			M. K. G.	368
Ahimsa and Cleanliness (W. L.)			P. 476	The Stark Reality (W. L.)			P.	36	The Drink Evil			M. K. G.	140
A Letter from Gandhiji					The Way of Ahimsa (W. L.)			P.	215	Total Prohibition			M. K. G.	228
An Error and Confession			(W. L.)	P. 183	The Way of Satyagraha			(W. L.)	P. 255	Relations of the Sexes
Animal Sacrifice			M. K. G.	200						Self-Restraint in			Marriage	M. K. G.	213
A Plea for Clear Thinking			(W. L.)	P. 26						Religion and Ethics
A Pointer for the Future			P.	1						A Commendable			Leaflet	K. G. M.	512
Armament at What Cost?			C. S.	294
Atom Bomb and Ahimsa			M. K. G.	212
At Shrirampur			P.	488
A Venture in Faith			P.	412
Certain Questions			M. K. G.	128
Coercive Fast			M. K. G.	29

A Deed of Mercy M. K. G. 344	What a Child Can Teach Us M. K. G. 207	Social
A Good Reminder M. K. G. 139	Who Is Rama ? M. K. G. 158	How to Combat Unholy Boycott M. K. G. 369
A Hard Testing Ground (W. L.) P. 366	Removal of Untouchability	Unequal Marriages K. G. M. 474
An Assortment (W. L.) P. 341	A Case for Satyagraha (W. L.) P. 219	Students
An Incident and Its Moral (W. L.) P. 322	A Harijan's Letter M. K. G. 125	A Pilgrimage (W. L.) P. 103
A New Superstition (W. L.) P. 217	A Light in Darkness P. 120	Hindustan Boy Scouts' Association (W. L.) P. 342
A New Years Message (W. L.) P. 388	A Sign of Progress M. K. G. 445	Sending Students to England P. 199
A Sure Aid M. K. G. 132	A Wise Step M. K. G. 384	Some High Lights (W. L.) P. 343
At Rungta House (W. L.) P. 25	Bhangi Problem in New Delhi 193	What after Finishing Studies M. K. G. 38
A Wise Tanner and a Wise King V. G. D. 211	Communal Unity and Non-untouchability in the I. N. A. Ramsingh Raval 64	Why Go Abroad? M. K. G. 308
Collective Prayer M. K. G. 319	Congratulations N. P. 491	Village Industries and Village Uplift
"Come Thou in a Shower of Mercy" (W. L.) P. 345	Dola Palki M. K. G. 348, 396	A Commendable Example P. 195
Communion of Silence P. 109	Eating With Harijans M. K. G. 95	A. I. V. I. A. News A. K. 62
Death-bed Repentance (W. L.) P. 367	Example to Follow A. V. T. 339	A Model A. V. T. 7
Faith Cure V. Ramanam M. K. G. 171	First Step not the Last (W. L.) P. 77	Congress Ministries and Rural Uplift P. 281
His Last Article M. D. 268	Gandhiji's Press Statement 55	Constructive Work and Samagra Gramseva S. N. 42
His Silent Prayer (W. L.) P. 367	Good and Bad News K. G. M. 512	Controls and Controls J. C. K. 227
How to Think of God M. K. G. 265	Guruvayur M. K. G. 344	Cooperatives in Kerala M. K. G. 344
Implications of Faith (W. L.) P. 216	Hallucination M. K. G. 197	Grow More Palms Gajanan Naik 349
Importance of Confession (W. L.) P. 366	Harijans and Wells M. K. G. 311	Inspiring for Gram Sevakas P. 240
Inner Meaning of Dusserah (W. L.) P. 346	Harijan Collections M. K. G. 205	Mud Huts Maurice Frydman 359
Introspection M. K. G. 130	Harijan Cooks M. K. G. 133	Oh! for Some Respite (W. L.) P. 263
Is God a Person or Force? M. K. G. 267	Harijan Service in Central India 1944-45 V. G. D. 390	Palm Gur Industry Gajanan Naik 196
Is not Service Worship? (Q. B.) M. K. G. 357	Harijan Sevek Sangh Under Fire P. 233	Planning with Village Bias Swami Anand 520
Is Ramanam Another Name for Charms? M. K. G. 357	Harijan Tit-bits A. V. T. 3	Utilization of Available Power M. K. G. 33
Labels of Caste and Religion K. G. M. 459	Harijan Work in Bhusawal Taluka M. K. G. 175	Village Industries M. K. G. 393
Meaning of God M. K. G. 24	Harijan Work in Kistna District M. K. G. 314	When A Bullock-ghani is Furniture J. C. K. 227
Meaning of Prayer (W. L.) P. 155	How to Remove Untouchability M. K. G. 357	Why in Want of Food (Q. B.) M. K. G. 265
Mindfulness the Remedy M. K. G. 178	In Harijan Quarters (W. L.) P. 75
Move on M. K. G. 286	Its Implications M. K. G. 4	Women
Much in Little M. K. G. 189	Left-handed Compliment M. K. G. 224	Abducted Girls M. K. G. 381
Power Politics in Religion K. G. M. 448	Lest We Forget P. 137	A Hysterical Demonstration (W. L.) P. 381
Prayer (Q. B.) M. K. G. 229	Man's Inhumanity to Man P. 208	Death before Dishonour (W. L.) P. 375
Prayer Discourses P. 110	Marriages Between Harijans and Non-Harijans M. K. G. 212	Enforced Marriage M. K. G. 311
Preaching to Emptiness M. K. G. 304	No Publicity Required M. K. G. 181	Forcible Marriages and Conversions (W. L.) P. 387
Question Box M. K. G. 12, 80, 233, 249	Not Enough P. 179	For Women A. K. 115
Rama, the Son of Dasharatha M. K. G. 323	Persecution of Harijans M. K. G. 48	Ideal for Women S. N. 118
Ramanam M. K. G. 12	Proud or Insane? M. K. G. 317	Inspiring for Women A. K. 88
Ramanam again M. K. G. 266	Question Box M. K. G. 32	Kasturba Gandhi National Memorial Trust 258
Ramanavami Celebrations M. K. G. 126	Race Prejudice in South Africa and India P. 71	Kasturba Gandhi National Memorial Trust Shyamlal 287
Rediscovering Faith K. G. M. 468	"Remember the Harijan" M. K. G. 279	Kasturba Memorial Trust M. K. G. 225
Religion v. No-religion M. K. G. 172	Riding Two Horses M. K. G. 340	Kasturba Memorial Trust Agents A. V. T. 32
Ridiculing Faith M. K. G. 160	Scavengers' Lot M. K. G. 340	Kasturba Smarak Trust M. K. G. 76
Scripture for Devilry K. G. M. 453	"Scheduled Castes" M. K. G. 238	Kasturba Trust (W. L.) P. 231
Shrirampur Diary 493, 517	Shocking if True M. K. G. 49	Kasturba Work in Assam 179
Some High Lights (W. L.) P. 343	Still Worse A. K. 151	Non-violence and Molestation of Women S. N. 7
Story Hour V. G. D. 302, 411, 449, 487, 507	The Bar Sinister (W. L.) P. 115	Question Box M. K. G. 87
The Charity of the Rich M. K. G. 130	The Mote and the Beam (W. L.) P. 218	The Curse of Dowry M. K. G. 368
The Darkening Shadow (W. L.) P. 341	Tiruvarur K. G. M. 485	The Devadasi System M. K. G. 310
The Discipline of Prayer P. 29	Untouchability and the Flush System M. K. G. 310	The Ideal Woman A. K. 175
The Gadfly (W. L.) P. 182	Valmiki's of Simla M. K. G. 133	What About Women? M. K. G. 96
The Unknown M. K. G. 180	Wells Thrown Open S. N. 348	Women's Corner A. K. 16
Thieving (Q. B.) M. K. G. 229	What about Dakore? M. K. G. 370	Women's Ordeal (W. L.) P. 375
Things of the Spirit P. 136	What Is in a Name? M. K. G. 77
Unlawful Peep beyond (Q. B.) M. K. G. 190	What Has the Congress Done? M. K. G. 200
Weekly Letter P. 130, 166, 243	Why Bhangi Quarters? M. K. G. 57
	Why for Harijans? M. K. G. 49

Planned Economics	A. K. 122
Riches v. Poverty	M. K. G. 67
Some Danger Spots of
Yarn Currency	K. G. M. 118
Some False Assumptions	J. C. K. 89
The Theory of
Trusteeship	M. K. G. 116
Yarn Currency	S. N. Agrawal 86
Yarn Currency in Action	A. K. 42

Education

A Correction	M. D. 216
Another Untruth	M. K. G. 28
Basic Education at Work	Pyarelal 275
Basic Training Centre at
Sevagram	216
Benares Notes	M. D. 19
Education Through
Handicrafts	M. K. G. 197
Four Years' Work	A. K. 51, 70
Handicraft and Education
E. W. Aryanayakam	126
Literary v. Craft Work	M. K. G. 105
Love of One's Own
Language	C. S. 97
Medium of Instruction	S. N. Agrawal 147
Medium of Instruction	M. D. 250
'Nai Talim'	A. K. 54
Need for Scientific
Knowledge	" 163
Oasis in a Desert	M. K. G. 53
Sad Contrast	A. K. 76
Tragedy of the English
Medium	S. N. Agrawal 106
Untruth	M. K. G. 28
War against Destruction	M. D. 7

Foreign Affairs

A Historic Meeting	M. D. 57
American Racial
Discrimination	" 199
A Peep into British History	" 66
British and American Nazism	" 43
Casual Notes	" 212
Evidently a Long War	" 85
"For Whites Only" Pearl Buck	223
In Resurgent China	C. S. 159
Negation of Democracy	M. D. 198
Tarred with the Same
Brush	A. K. 92
Two Australian Visitors	M. D. 141
Unfair to America?	M. K. G. 181

Health

Cow's Milk for Lepers	Dr. Santra 98
Eyes to the Blind	M. K. G. 53
Improved Diets	A. K. 114
Plea for More Food	M. K. G. 77
Simple Treatment for
Cholera	A. K. 132
The Merits of Amla	" 114

Hindustani

Dr. Tarachand and Hindu-
stani	M. K. G. 191
Hindi-Urdu=Hindustani	" 35
Hindustani	" 21,
	64, 95, 268
Hindustani Prachar Sabha
S. N. Agrawal	260
Ingenious Method	M. K. G. 155
Kashi Vishwavidyalaya
Address	" 25

Ten Questions re: The
National Language	M. K. G. 125
The Roman Script	" 116
Urdu Examinations	" 250
Urdu Made Easy	" 65

Khadi

Charkha Jayanti	M. K. G. 268
For "Common Folk"	M. D. 150
Gandhiji's Birthday	K. G. M. 274
Hand-weaving in New
Mexico, U. S. A.	C. S. 115
Hissar Famine and
Spinning	M. K. G. 118
Interesting Figures	A. K. 145
Khadi and Village
Industry	M. K. G. 169
Khadi Forges Ahead	C. S. 71, 78
"Khadi Jagat"	M. D. 252
Khadi Students	M. K. G. 63
Shankarlal Pattarai and
Jamnalal Vidyalaya	M. D. 72
Spinning in Midnapore	A. K. 108
The Month in Bardoli	M. D. 2
Three Essentials	M. K. G. 50
To Gujaratis	" 24
Vinoba on Khadi	A. K. 90
With Khadi Workers
	M. D. 23, 210

Labour

Labourers as Co-partners	C. S. 175
The Duty of a Manager	M. K. G. 67

Miscellaneous

A Correction	M. D. 114
A Glimpse of Rishikesh	" 138
An Appeal	" 157
Bombay Responds
Generously	" 162
Deenbandhu Memorial	M. K. G. 161
Deenbandhu Andrews
Memorial	" 128
For Middlemen	" 217
'Harijan' in Marathi	" 63
'Harijan' in Urdu	" 139
Honourable Means of Dying	" 238
Hooliganism	" 216
Humiliating Indeed	K. G. M. 281
If 'Harijan' is Suppressed
	M. K. G. 229
In Case of Illness	" 229
No Narrow Provincialism	" 137
No Real Scarcity	M. D. 251
Other Organizations	M. K. G. 28
Personal	K. G. M. 275
Price Control	M. K. G. 32
Price Control Anarchy	M. D. 63
Prithvisingh, Sardar	" 177
Rajaji	M. K. G. 27, 192
To Correspondents	" 36
To the Subscribers	" 5
Vacation Work	" 107
What Editors Can Do?	" 265
Why?	" 4

Non-Violence

A Challenge	M. K. G. 201
A Deplorable Incident	" 20
A Poser	M. D. 103
Bewildering Conflict	M. K. G. 108
Congress and A. R. P.	" 16
Creed v. Policy of
Non-violence	K. N. Katju 129
Curious Non-violence	M. K. G. 113

Death as a Force of Life

Expedience	K. G. M. 266
Fasting in Non-violent	M. K. G. 116
Action
For the Sikh Friends	" 248
Full Faith in	" 209
Non-violence
Guru Govind Singh	" 108
How to Be Worthy of	" 219
Our Heritage	M. D. 109
Inhuman, if True	M. K. G. 96
Intellectual Conviction	" 158
Non-violence in Evolution
	M. D. 170
Non-violent Non-
co-operation	M. K. G. 167
Non-violent Resistance	" 112
Not Quite	" 49
On its Trial	" 73
On the Path of Ahimsa	M. D. 6
Peace Organizations	M. K. G. 4
Real War Effort	" 12
The Challenge of Today
and Friends	M. D. 81
The Eternal Problem	M. K. G. 48
The Month in Bardoli	M. D. 1
The Right of Self-
defence	K. G. M. 97
Triumph of Non-violence	M. D. 14
Two Australian Visitors	" 141
"Violence Is Disastrous"	M. K. G. 5
Weakening Non-violence	" 108
What about Non-violence	" 197
What Cost Violence?	J. C. K. 169

Obituaries

Acharya Anandshanker
Dhruva	M. K. G. 117
An Englishman's Tribute
Verrier Elwin	95
A Reminiscence of C. F. A. M. D.	178
A Sister's Tribute	A. K. 63
Fiery Ordeal	M. K. G. 53
In Memoriam	A. K. 63
Jamnalalji	M. D. 45
Mahadev Desai	K. G. M. 277
Seth Jamnalal Bajaj	M. K. G. 37
Sir Akbar Hyderi	" 5
The Late Dr. Dutta	" 208
With Jamnalalji	R. Lohia 134

Politics

A Fallacy	M. K. G. 210
A Fifth Columnist
Government	K. G. M. 274
A Legitimate Grievance	M. K. G. 61
An Appropriate Question	" 261
Andhra Separation	" 228
An Important Interview	M. D. 185
Anti-British Feeling	" 179
A Plea for Reason	M. K. G. 252
A Poser	" 204
Arbitration on Indo-British
Question	" 168
A Two Minutes' Interview	M. D. 234
A Young Canadian's
Question	M. K. G. 104
Causal Notes	M. D. 235, 245, 271
Caveeshar	M. K. G. 104
Confusion	" 161
Deceitful Nomenclature	K. G. M. 152
Deliberate Distortion	M. K. G. 203
Differences very Real	" 180
Disapproved	K. G. M. 273
Dislocation of the Traffic	" 284

English Masters and Domestic Servants	K. G. M. 273	Village Swaraj	K. G. M. 279	Village Industries and Village Reconstruction
Face the Facts	M. D. 257	Ways of Non-violent Non-cooperation	M. D. 267	A Rural Anthology	V. G. D. 146, 182, 190, 198
'Fire Raging in Me'	" 257	What about Nepal?	M. K. G. 265	Gleanings from A. I. V. I. A. Minutes	A. K. 64
Foreign Soldiers in India	M. K. G. 128	What about Radio Messages?	" 191	Khadi and Village Industry	M. K. G. 169
Free India—A Military Necessity	M. D. 255	What after the Final Adieu?	M. D. 87	Maganwadi Convocation	A. K. 154
Free India Can Help Best	" 183	What Could Have Been Done?	M. K. G. 161	Non-slaughter Leather	J. C. K. 114
Friendly Advice	M. K. G. 172	With Three Press-Correspondents	M. D. 241	Passing of the First Stage of the A. I. V. I. A.	M. K. G. 50
Gopalan Nambiar	" 84	World Federation	M. K. G. 265	The Ground Work for Independence	J. C. K. 218
How to Crush National Movements	" 281			The Sixth Year of the Work	A. K. 74, 91
If 'Harijan' is Prohibited	" 157	Prohibition		Training in Cottage Industries	146
If Japanese Come?	M. D. 248	A Complete Vindication	M. D. 150	When Machine Power?	J. C. K. 75
If They Come?	M. K. G. 189	Opium Addicts	M. K. G. 145
Imperialism Within Us	J. C. K. 135			Religion
Implications of the Withdrawal	M. K. G. 166	Conversion without Conviction	M. K. G. 94	The Ashram Prayer	" 44
Important Questions	" 188			Social Reform
Ineffective Sympathy	" 239	About Children	M. K. G. 94	A Muslim Marriage in Sevagram	M. D. 250
Ireland—A Comparison and Contrast	M. D. 197	Indira Nehru's Engagement	M. K. G. 65	Stopping Animal Sacrifices	" 105
Its Meaning	M. K. G. 197	The Married Estate	" 88	The Pressure of Love	M. D. 202
Lala Shankerlal	" 177			States
Lawlessness in Sindh	" 164	Demands of Marwar Lok-Parishad	M. K. G. 270	For the Princes	" 249
Linguistic Basis	" 117	Gram Panchayats in Aundh	" 84	Hyderabad State	" 37
Mean and Vindictive	" 53	Jodhpur	" 177, 216	Jodhpur Tragedy	" 196
Misbehaviour of Troops	" 37	Limbdi Exodus Anniversary	" 54	Pandit Kachru Externed	" 247
My Mouth is Gagged	K. G. M. 280	Praja Mandals and the Congress	" 67, 105	States and Their People	" 145
No Guarantees Contemplated	M. K. G. 260	The Princes' Determination	" 189	Travancore	" 144
Now Is the Moment	M. D. 213	Why the Difference?	" 169	Untouchables
Now or Never	" 269	A Harijan Colony in Bihar	M. K. G. 88	An Unexpected Experience	M. D. 17
One thing Needful	M. K. G. 148	Begging for Harijans	" 127	Bhils and Harijans in Rajputana	A. K. 93
Out of Touch	" 175	Five Questions by a Harijan M. L. A.	M. K. G. 251	Freedom for All	K. G. M. 281
Permissible Items	K. G. M. 280	Harijan Collections	M. K. G. 161	Harijan Sevak Sangha	" 151
Personal	" 275	Harijans and Savarnas	M. D. 178, 227, 239	Hell in Ajmer	Rameshwari Nehru 54
Pertinent Questions	M. K. G. 232	Model Schools for Harijans	M. K. G. 55	Spinning by Sweepers	A. V. Thakkar 77
Purposeful Politics	J. C. K. 155, 163	The Cure	M. K. G. 93	The Month in Bardoli	M. D. 23
Question Box	M. K. G. 177	Untouchability and Indore	M. K. G. 85
Quislingism	K. G. M. 275			Women
Reply to Sir Stafford Cripps	M. K. G. 208			Criminal Assaults	M. K. G. 60
Repudiation	M. D. 247			Jamnalalji and Women	A. K. 80
Rules of Conduct	K. G. M. 273			Women	M. K. G. 67
"Suppose Germany Wins"	M. K. G. 40
Terrible, if True	" 169
That Ill-fated Proposal	" 120
The Conflagration	" 228
The First Victim	" 253
The Mill Stone	M. D. 243
The National War Front	K. G. M. 276
The Wardha Interview	M. D. 233
Three Clues	Vinoba 273
Throw Away the Carcass	M. D. 193
To Every Briton	M. K. G. 156
To Every Japanese	" 240
To Police and Prison Officers and Magistrates	K. G. M. 276
To Resist Slave Drivers	M. D. 183
Torturing the Language	M. K. G. 58
Treacherous Japan or Complacent Britain?	Lohia 124
Triple Tragedy	M. K. G. 177
Two Actions	" 205
Unseemly, if True	" 261
Unworthy Propaganda	M. D. 265
Vansittarts Let Loose	" 269
Village Swaraj	M. K. G. 238

- Catechu n. کتھا | کتھا
- Categorical adj. صاف، سیدھا؛ بالکل | صاف، سیدھا؛ بالکل
- Category n. صنف، درجہ | صنف، درجہ
- Cater v. جانے-پہننے کے لئے ضرورتیں پوری کرنا
- Caterpillar n. تیتلی یا پتلیوں کا پہلا रूप؛ کرم | تیتلی یا پتلیوں کا پہلا रूप؛ کرم
- Caterwaul v. بیللی کی طرح چیلانا، میو-میو کرنا | بیللی کی طرح چیلانا، میو-میو کرنا
- Catgut n. تانت | تانت
- Cathay n. چین (دیش) کا پرانا نام | چین (دیش) کا پرانا نام
- Cathedral n. بڑا گرجا | بڑا گرجا
- Catherine wheel n. سورج مندر کی چرخہ؛ ایتھنیا کی چرخہ | سورج مندر کی چرخہ؛ ایتھنیا کی چرخہ
- Catherine wheels, turn v. کلاوا جی جانا | کلاوا جی جانا
- Catheter n. سون-نیکاس-نالی، پेशاب نیکالنے کی نالی | سون-نیکاس-نالی، پेशاب نیکالنے کی نالی
- Catholic adj. عام، ہر ایک کے کام یا متعلقہ؛ دنیا | عام، ہر ایک کے کام یا متعلقہ؛ دنیا
- Catholic Church n. پورے زمانے کے سب عیسائی | پورے زمانے کے سب عیسائی
- Catholic, Roman n. عیسائیوں کا ایک مشہور فرقہ | عیسائیوں کا ایک مشہور فرقہ
- Cattle n. بھینس، بکریاں، مویشی، گائے | بھینس، بکریاں، مویشی، گائے
- Cattle leader n. بھینس یا بکریوں کی ناک کی رسی، نکیل، تھم | بھینس یا بکریوں کی ناک کی رسی، نکیل، تھم
- Cattle lifter n. گائے یا بکریوں کو اٹھانے والا | گائے یا بکریوں کو اٹھانے والا
- Cattle show n. بھینس یا بکریوں کی نمائندگی | بھینس یا بکریوں کی نمائندگی
- Caucus n. امریکی سیاست کی ایک مجلس | امریکی سیاست کی ایک مجلس
- Caudal adj. دم کا، دم سے | دم کا، دم سے
- Cauldron n. دھن، کھانسی | دھن، کھانسی
- Cauliflower n. پھول-گوبی | پھول-گوبی
- Caulk v. جہازوں کی دراڑیں بند کرنا | جہازوں کی دراڑیں بند کرنا
- Cause n. کارण، وجہ، سبب؛ کشتی، بانی؛ مکتبہ، دھڑ، پارٹی، مکتبہ؛ بات، تفرقہ، پक्ष؛ دوا، نالیخ | کارण، وجہ، سبب؛ کشتی، بانی؛ مکتبہ، دھڑ، پارٹی، مکتبہ؛ بات، تفرقہ، پक्ष؛ دوا، نالیخ
- Cause and effect n. کار و کارण، سبب و مسبب | کار و کارण، سبب و مسبب
- Cause, espouse a v. مدد یا حمایت دینا، سہاوت کرنا | مدد یا حمایت دینا، سہاوت کرنا
- Cause, make common v. میل جانا، ساتھ ہو جانا، شریک ہونا | میل جانا، ساتھ ہو جانا، شریک ہونا
- Cause, owing to this v. اس کارن، وجہ یا سبب سے | اس کارن، وجہ یا سبب سے
- Cause, to show v. وجہ یا کارن بتانا | وجہ یا کارن بتانا
- Cause v. وجہ یا کارن ہونا؛ پیدا یا شروع کرنا، کرنا؛ بنانا؛ بڑھانا؛ مہمان | وجہ یا کارن ہونا؛ پیدا یا شروع کرنا، کرنا؛ بنانا؛ بڑھانا؛ مہمان
- Cause celebre n. مشہور شخصیت | مشہور شخصیت
- Causeway n. سڑکی سبک؛ گلی بڑھانے والا | سڑکی سبک؛ گلی بڑھانے والا
- Caustic adj. جلانے والا؛ تیز، تیز، کٹور | جلانے والا؛ تیز، تیز، کٹور
- Cauterize v. گرم لہو یا تیز سے داغنا | گرم لہو یا تیز سے داغنا
- Caution v. چوکنا کرنا، چھوڑنا، ہوشیار رہنا | چوکنا کرنا، چھوڑنا، ہوشیار رہنا
- Cautious adj. چوکنا، چھوڑنا، ہوشیار | چوکنا، چھوڑنا، ہوشیار
- Cavalcade n. سواروں کا دستہ | سواروں کا دستہ
- Cavalier n. گھڑ سوار، بہادر، شہسوار | گھڑ سوار، بہادر، شہسوار
- Cavalry n. رینگا، گھڑ سوار | رینگا، گھڑ سوار
- Cave n. گھا، گھا، گھا | گھا، گھا، گھا
- Cave v. چھوڑنا | چھوڑنا
- Cave in v. دھ جانا؛ گرنا؛ ٹوٹنا | دھ جانا؛ گرنا؛ ٹوٹنا
- Cave int. v. چھوڑنا | چھوڑنا
- Caveat n. مسدود شدہ رستہ کے حکم | مسدود شدہ رستہ کے حکم
- Cavern n. بڑی گھا | بڑی گھا
- Caviare to the General n. اچھی چیز، جس کو جملہ پسند نہیں کر سکتے | اچھی چیز، جس کو جملہ پسند نہیں کر سکتے
- Cavil v. بے جا شک، بے جا شک | بے جا شک، بے جا شک
- Cavity n. گھا، گھا، گھا | گھا، گھا، گھا
- Caw n. کھانسی، کھانسی | کھانسی، کھانسی
- Cayenne pepper n. پیسی لہو کا لال | پیسی لہو کا لال
- Cease v. چھوڑنا، بند ہونا، بند کرنا، بند کرنا | چھوڑنا، بند ہونا، بند کرنا، بند کرنا
- Ceaseless adj. لگاتار، برابر | لگاتار، برابر
- Cede v. دے دینا، دے دینا، دے دینا | دے دینا، دے دینا، دے دینا
- Ceiling n. چھتری، چھتری | چھتری، چھتری
- Ceiling price n. سب سے زیادہ قیمت | سب سے زیادہ قیمت
- Celebrate v. منانا، منانا؛ شادی یا شادی کرنا | منانا، منانا؛ شادی یا شادی کرنا
- Celebrated or Celebrity adj. مشہور، مشہور | مشہور، مشہور
- Celebration n. شادی، شادی | شادی، شادی
- Celerity n. تیزی، تیزی | تیزی، تیزی
- Celery n. سیلری، (ایک قسم کی سبزی) | سیلری، (ایک قسم کی سبزی)
- Celestial adj. آسمانی، آسمانی | آسمانی، آسمانی
- Celibacy n. بچہ پن، بچہ پن | بچہ پن، بچہ پن

- Cell n. کوٹری، خانہ | خانه
- Cellar n. تھکانا، گودام | گودام
- Cellular adj. خانہ دار | خانه دار
- Cement n. سیمنٹ (پتھر یا آئٹ جو بننے کا مصالحہ) | سیمنٹ (پتھر یا آئٹ جو بننے کا مصالحہ)
- Cement v. جوڑنا، میلانا، باندھنا؛ پککا کرنا، مضبوط کرنا | جوڑنا، ملانا، باندھنا، پکا کرنا، مضبوط کرنا
- Cemetery n. قبرستان | قبرستان
- Cenotaph n. یادگار، छतरी، समाधि | یادگار، छतरी، سماधि
- Censor n. دھوپ دان، अगरदान | अगरदान
- Censor n. सेंसर | सेंसर
- Censor v. सेंसर करना, काट-छांट करना; निकाल देना (पत्र वपौरमें) | सेंसर करना, काट-छांट करना; निकाल देना (पत्र वपौरमें)
- Censorious adj. चुस्स पकड़नेवाला, हद से ज्यादा चुस्सता | चुस्स पकड़नेवाला, हद से ज्यादा चुस्सता
- Censure n. दोष या खिलवाव लगाना, झिड़कना | दोष या खिलवाव लगाना, झिड़कना
- Censure, vote of n. कसूरवार या अपराधी ठहराना | कसूरवार या अपराधी ठहराना
- Census n. जन-गणना, मर्दमशुमारी, मनुष्य-गिनती | जन-गणना, मर्दमशुमारी, मनुष्य-गिनती
- Cent n. सैकड़ा, सौ; पैसा (कम कीमत का सिक्का) | सैकड़ा, सौ; पैसा (कम कीमत का सिक्का)
- Cent, per फ्रीसवी, प्रतिशत, सैकड़ा | फ्रीसवी, प्रतिशत, सैकड़ा
- Centaur n. नरघोड़ा (एक खयाली जानवर, जिसका सिर आदमी का और धड़ घोड़े का होता है) | नरघोड़ा (एक खयाली जानवर, जिसका सिर आदमी का और धड़ घोड़े का होता है)
- Centenarian n. सौ बरस का आदमी | सौ बरस का आदमी
- Centenary n. सौ बरस | सौ बरस
- Centennial adj. सौ साला; सौ बरस में एकबार होनेवाला | सौ साला; सौ बरस में एकबार होनेवाला
- Centipede n. कनखजुरा, सौ पांववाला कीड़ा | कनखजुरा, सौ पांववाला कीड़ा
- Central adj. बड़ा, बुनियादी; बीच का, केन्द्रीय, मरकबी | बड़ा, बुनियादी; बीच का, केन्द्रीय, मरकबी
- Centralize v. एक जगह करना, एक-तुकते पर लाना, केन्द्र या मरकब पर लाना | एक जगह करना, एक-तुकते पर लाना, केन्द्र या मरकब पर लाना
- Centre n. बीच, बीचोंबीच; केन्द्र, मरकब | बीच, बीचोंबीच; केन्द्र, मरकब
- Centre v. एक जगह करना, जमाना, जमाना, घूमना | एक जगह करना, जमाना, जमाना, घूमना
- Centrifugal adj. जो मरकब या केन्द्र से भागे | जो मरकब या केन्द्र से भागे
- Centripetal adj. जो मरकब या केन्द्र की तरफ आये | जो मरकब या केन्द्र की तरफ आये
- Century n. सदी, सौ बरस; क्रिकेट में 'सौ रन' | सदी, सौ बरस; क्रिकेट में 'सौ रन'
- Cephalic adj. सिर का, सिर सम्बन्धी या सिर के मुतअल्लिक | सिर का, सिर सम्बन्धी या सिर के मुतअल्लिक
- Ceramics n. कुम्हारी सम्बन्धी, कुम्हारकी कला | कुम्हारी सम्बन्धी, कुम्हारकी कला
- Cereal n. अनाज | अनाज
- Cerebral adj. मष्ठी, दिमागी | मष्ठी, दिमागी
- Ceremonial adj., n. रस्मी, रीत का; रस्म, रीत, दस्तूर | रस्मी, रीत का; रस्म, रीत, दस्तूर
- Ceremonious adj. रस्म-परस्त | रस्म-परस्त
- Ceremony n. रीत, रस्म; दिखावा, तकल्लुक | रीत, रस्म; दिखावा, तकल्लुक
- Certain adj. पक्का, अचूक, ठीक, अटल, पत्थर की लकीर, जरूरी; यक़ीनी; कोअी, किसी ओक, कुछ | पक्का, अचूक, ठीक, अटल, पत्थर की लकीर, जरूरी; यक़ीनी; कोअी, किसी ओक, कुछ
- Certainly adv. जरूर, बेशक, निस्सन्देह | जरूर, बेशक, निस्सन्देह
- Certainty n. पक्की बात, यक़ीनी बात | पक्की बात, यक़ीनी बात
- Certificate n. सनद, प्रमाणपत्र; नेकनामी की चिट्ठी | सनद, प्रमाणपत्र; नेकनामी की चिट्ठी
- Certify v. प्रमाणपत्र या सनद देना; चिट्ठी देना; गवाही देना, यमान पत्र या सनद देना; चिट्ठी देना; गवाही देना, तसदीक करना | प्रमाणपत्र या सनद देना; चिट्ठी देना; गवाही देना, यमान पत्र या सनद देना; चिट्ठी देना; गवाही देना, तसदीक करना
- Cerulean adj. आसमानी या आकाशी नीला (रंग) | आसमानी या आकाशी नीला (रंग)
- Cervical adj. गरदन का | गरदन का
- Cess n. चुंगी, महसूल, कर | चुंगी, महसूल, कर
- Cessation n. रुकना, बन्द होना, खतम होना, थमना, ठहरना | रुकना, बन्द होना, खतम होना, थमना, ठहरना
- Cession n. सौंपना, हवाले करना; त्यागना | सौंपना, हवाले करना; त्यागना
- Cesspool n. कुआँ या चौबच्चा, जिसमें पाजाने का पानी जाता या गिरता हो | कुआँ या चौबच्चा, जिसमें पाजाने का पानी जाता या गिरता हो
- Chafe v. तिलमिलाना; लाल-पीला होना; खिझाना; मलकर गरमी पहुँचाना, रगड़ लगाना, घिसना | तिलमिलाना; लाल-पीला होना; खिझाना; मलकर गरमी पहुँचाना, रगड़ लगाना, घिसना
- Chaff v. चिढ़ाना, ठट्ठा करना, नोक-झोंक करना | चिढ़ाना, ठट्ठा करना, नोक-झोंक करना
- Chaff n. भूसी, छिलका, छँटन; बास-फूस, कूड़ा | भूसी, छिलका, छँटन; बास-फूस, कूड़ा
- Chagrin n. मायूसी, निराशा | मायूसी, निराशा
- Chain n. जंजीर, साँकल, हथकड़ी, लड़ी, कतार | जंजीर, साँकल, हथकड़ी, लड़ी, कतार
- Chain v. बाँधना, जंजीर से बाँधना, जकड़ना | बाँधना, जंजीर से बाँधना, जकड़ना
- Chair n. कुर्सी, चौकी, गद्दी; आचार्य का पद | कुर्सी, चौकी, गद्दी; आचार्य का पद
- Chair, arm n. बाजूवाली कुर्सी | बाजूवाली कुर्सी
- Chair, bath n. बीमार की कुर्सी | बीमार की कुर्सी
- Chair, deck n. जहाजी कुर्सी | जहाजी कुर्सी
- Chair, easy n. आराम कुर्सी | आराम कुर्सी
- Chair, to take the v. सभापति या सदर की कुर्सी पर बैठना | सभापति या सदर की कुर्सी पर बैठना
- Chairman n. सभापति, सदर | सभापति, सदर
- Chalet n. पहाड़ी कुटिया (स्विट्जरलैण्ड में) | पहाड़ी कुटिया (स्विट्जरलैण्ड में)
- Chalice n. प्याला, कटोरा | प्याला, कटोरा
- Chalk n. खडिया मिट्टी | खडिया मिट्टी
- Chalk out v. नक़्शा बनाना, रास्ता निकालना | नक़्शा बनाना, रास्ता निकालना

88